No. 17-2056

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan

Before: MERRITT, WHITE, and DONALD, Circuit Judges.

---

BERNICE BOUIE DONALD, Circuit Judge.

In 2011, Plaintiff-Appellant Marianne Guzall (“Guzall”) was laid off from her position as an administrative assistant in the Mayor’s office for Defendant-Appellee City of Romulus, Michigan (the “City”). At the time, the City was experiencing severe financial adversity and had twice failed to pass millages to increase its revenue. Guzall claimed that she was fired because of her stated refusal to lie to Michigan State Police regarding an investigation into the City's police force and Mayor's office, and for later allegedly reporting illegal activities to the City Council. Accordingly, she filed a lengthy complaint alleging at least six distinct claims against the City, the City's former mayor, Alan Lambert ("Mayor Lambert"), and Mayor Lambert's former chief of staff Betsey Krampitz ("Krampitz"). After protracted litigation, the district court granted summary judgment to Defendants on each count. For the reasons that follow, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court in full.

I

In November 2001, newly-elected Mayor Lambert hired Guzall as an administrative assistant. Guzall joined another administrative assistant, Krampitz, who had served in that capacity under a previous mayor. Guzall's employment was at-will and she served at the pleasure of Mayor Lambert. She was the lowest in command in the office. In 2006, Mayor Lambert promoted Krampitz to chief of staff. Guzall was not promoted to Krampitz's vacated position, and Julie Wojtylko ("Wojtylko") was hired to replace Krampitz.

In 2009, the City began experiencing numerous financial issues and shortfalls tied to the global economy and well-publicized issues with Michigan real estate and the state's financial health.<sup>1</sup> Entering 2010,

<sup>1</sup> On appeal, Guzall takes issue with this fact, asserting that the City was not in financial distress. (Appellant's Br. at 19-20.) However, the evidence supporting financial problems is overwhelming and Guzall's contentions that the City's financial distress was caused by greed and malfeasance are mere conjecture.

the City identified a five-year deficit of approximately $20 million. In response, the City created a task force to address the deficit: the Action in Challenging Times Committee (“ACT NOW Task Force”). The task force proposed cost-saving and revenue-enhancing measures.

Between June and August 2010, the City laid off twenty-eight full-time city employees, including policemen, firefighters, and Department of Public Works employees. The City also closed its public library and reduced hours at its Senior Center. No Mayor’s office employees were affected during that period. The City then proposed a millage in order to pay for public services. It failed.

In January 2011, each City department was asked to reduce its budget by five percent, including the Mayor’s office. The City also planned a special election the following month asking voters to approve a millage to pay for various public services. In the event the millage failed, the City planned to reduce its workforce further. In preparation for that eventuality, the City issued correspondence to twelve employees, including Guzall, stating, in pertinent part, that “due to budget cuts, your position will be eliminated and you will be laid off effective March 11, 2011 at the end of your work day. If the millage vote on February 22, 2011 is favorable, this notice will be rescinded.” RE 153-9, PageID #2517. The millage failed and Guzall was laid off. Though Guzall testified that the Mayor’s office told her not to clean her desk out because she would Indeed, her only citation regarding a lack of financial distress is a statement from her deposition that is untethered to any factual evidence that the City spent more after the millages failed.

be rehired within three months, and that Mayor Lambert advised her not to look for a job because they would find a way to retain her in some capacity, Guzall's employment never resumed. Nor was her position filled by another employee.

Prior to the layoffs, in 2009, the Michigan State Police ("MSP") began investigating the City's police department following allegations of corruption. In the course of the investigation, allegations of wrongdoing against Mayor Lambert and his office surfaced. In response, the MSP opened a separate investigation into the Mayor's office in April 2010.

In May 2012, more than a year after Guzall was laid off, the MSP interviewed her. The following year, MSP searched Mayor Lambert's home and City Council Chairman Leroy Burcroff ("Burcroff") requested that Mayor Lambert resign. Mayor Lambert did not resign, but declined to seek reelection, and Burcroff was later elected mayor.

In 2013, Guzall filed an amended Complaint, which was unsealed in 2014 when the United States declined to intervene, alleging: (1) retaliation and retaliatory discharge in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3730(h), public policy, and the First Amendment; (2) violation of the federal False Claims Act ("FCA") in qui tam form; (3) violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"); (4) promissory estoppel and fraud; (5) a due process violation; (6) hostile work environment; (7) intentional infliction of emotional distress; and (8) conspiracy.

As the district court summarized, Guzall identified several discussions that she believed informed the decision to lay her off. First, while Guzall was on vacation in May 2010, Wojtylko phoned Guzall regarding interviews of the Mayor's staff in connection with the MSP's investigation into the City's police department. Guzall testified that she told Wojtylko not to lie for anyone and that she would not lie for Mayor Lambert. Guzall stated that when she returned from vacation, she said that she would tell the truth in any interview. Krampitz responded that they were going to give Guzall a pink slip, handed her one, and stated that they would give Guzall a box to pack her belongings if she did not lie. Guzall testified this exchange occurred right before a meeting in which the City was deciding who would be laid off during the initial June 2010 reduction. However, Guzall was not laid off at that time.

Second, Guzall testified that she met with Leroy Burcroff, mayor pro tem and chairman of the City Council, and reported illegal and improper activities in the Mayor's office. Guzall stated that she believed Burcroff told Mayor Lambert about that conversation because Krampitz had warned her that "Burcroff's a politician and he talks." RE 154-4, PageID #2874.

In addition to these claims regarding protected speech and retaliation, Guzall's remaining claims were based on allegations of a vast criminal conspiracy within the Mayor's office, her refusal to either participate in that criminal venture or Defendants' threats against her when she declined to participate or cover up the illegal activities, and the Mayor's office defrauding the United States government. Guzall also alleged that her job was promised, statutorily guaranteed, and that she was assured she would be rehired.

During the course of litigation, several relevant motions were filed and rulings issued. First, during the initial eighteen months of litigation, Guzall was represented by her husband, attorney Raymond Guzall, III (“Mr. Guzall”). Eventually, Defendants filed a joint motion to disqualify Mr. Guzall, asserting that he acted as an Assistant City Attorney for the City during the relevant period of this action. After a hearing, the district court granted the motion, finding that an attorney-client relationship existed between Mr. Guzall and the City, and that Mr. Guzall acquired confidential information during that relationship. Moreover, the district court found that such information was substantially related to Mr. Guzall’s wife’s claims and would materially advance her action. Because Mr. Guzall did not have the City’s consent, the district court found that Mr. Guzall could no longer represent his wife.

Next, the City filed a motion to compel Guzall to produce the original “unedited surprise audio evidence,” i.e., Guzall’s conversation with Burcroff that Guzall testified at deposition she had taped, and which Guzall’s counsel played, from his own phone, at Burcroff’s deposition. RE 70/PageID #1005; RE 74/PageID #1019. The district court allowed forensic review of Guzall’s phone, despite Guzall’s objections that her husband—and former counsel—owned the phone, thereby implicating attorney-client privilege. When Guzall refused to produce the phone, the district court adopted the Magistrate Judge’s Report and Recommendation and fined her $500. In her motion for reconsideration, Guzall stated that she had requested forensic review of Defendants’ phones during a May 20, 2016 phone conference, which the district court never ordered.

Finally, the district court's Fourth Amended Scheduling Order set the deadline for dispositive motions at August 11, 2016. On January 5, 2017, Mayor Lambert moved the court to allow him to file a tardy motion for summary judgment, citing the existence of outstanding material issues regarding his deposition and production of tax documents. The district court granted Mayor Lambert's motion on January 11, 2017. Guzall subsequently moved to set aside that order, arguing that she should have been afforded time to respond to the motion under local rules and that Mayor Lambert was not entitled to the relief for various reasons. The district court denied Guzall's motion and considered Mayor Lambert's motion when ruling on the other Defendants' motions.

The district court granted summary judgment to Defendants on all counts, reasoning that: (1) Guzall failed to establish the causation element in her First Amendment claim, offering no probative evidence showing that Krampitz or Mayor Lambert were involved in her dismissal, or that anyone involved in that decision was aware of Guzall's alleged protected speech; (2) Guzall failed to provide evidence of fraud on the federal government with respect to claims for payment, as required by the FCA; (3) Guzall failed to identify an injury to her business or property, as required to sustain a RICO claim; (4) there was no evidence of a clear and definite promise that Guzall would keep her job or that she relied on such promise; (5) no due process claim could be made when it was undisputed that Guzall's position was at-will and that she served at the pleasure of Mayor Lambert; (6) none of Guzall's complaints were related to race, color, religion, sex, or national origin such that a Title VII hostile-work-environment claim could be made and that any First Amendment-based § 1983 claim failed for lack of causation; (7) Guzall failed to identify extreme or outrageous conduct—or any evidence of injury—to support her claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress; (8) Guzall’s civil fraud claim failed because she did not establish any of the requisite elements under Michigan law; and (9) Guzall’s conspiracy claim failed because she presented no evidence of fraud and, standing alone, her conspiracy claim is not actionable.

Guzall does not appeal the district court’s ruling on her FCA, RICO, or Due Process claims, thus we do not address them. See In re Anheuser-Busch Beer Labeling Marketing & Sales Practices Litig., 644 F. App’x 515, 529 (6th Cir. 2016) (“Where . . . a litigant has failed to clearly raise an argument in the district court, we have concluded that the argument is forfeited.”). However, Guzall does appeal the district court’s grant of summary judgment as to each of her other claims. She also challenges the disqualification of her attorney, the district court’s discovery management, and the sanction the district court levied. Additionally, Guzall has filed a Motion to Correct Error and Supplement and Correct the Complete Record to add Mayor Lambert’s deposition testimony—which Guzall intended to attach to her Response to Mayor Lambert’s Motion for Summary Judgment—that is not part of the appellate record.

II

The district court had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 28 U.S.C. § 1343, primarily due to Guzall's § 1983 claim. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and Fed. R. App. P. 4.

III

A. First Amendment

Guzall's brief appears to make three arguments allegedly demonstrating the district court's error in dealing with her First Amendment claim: (1) improperly excluding as hearsay, or discounting as speculative, testimony that would have precluded summary judgment; (2) failing to consider and address affidavits from Romulus Police Officers Landry, Ladach, and Droege; and (3) failing to apply facts and law in Guzall's favor.

Guzall's first argument—that the district improperly excluded portions of Virginia Williams' affidavit as hearsay—is without merit. We typically review the evidentiary rulings of the district court for abuse of discretion. General Electric Co. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 141 (1997). However, whether the proffered evidence is hearsay under the Federal Rules of Evidence is a question of law that we review de novo. See Jacklyn v. Schering Plough Healthcare Prods. Sales Corp., 176 F.3d 921, 927 (6th Cir. 1999) (also noting that “[h]earsay evidence may not be considered on summary judgment”). Hearsay is “a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted.” Fed. R. Evid. 801(c). The statements at issue are Mayor Lambert's allegedly telling Williams that Guzall was “going to be let go because she talks too much” and Krampitz's purportedly telling Williams that Mayor Lambert said “Guzall talks too much and that she had to be let go.” RE 175-4, PageID #4485. Both are hearsay. Even though Williams alleges that she personally heard Mayor Lambert state an alternative reason for Guzall's dismissal, Guzall cannot use that statement to prove the truth of the matter asserted—that she was let go because she talks too much. Moreover, statements allegedly made by Krampitz to Williams about what Mayor Lambert said elsewhere add an additional level of hearsay. See Fed. R. Evid. 805.

Despite arguing that Williams' affidavit contains no hearsay, Guzall also contends that any hearsay is admissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2)(A) because the relevant statements were made by party opponents. Under that rule, statements are nonhearsay if made by, and offered against, the opposing party. United States v. Cunningham, 679 F.3d 355, 383 (6th Cir. 2012) (explaining that the rule permits “a party's own statement to be offered as evidence against that party even where the statement would otherwise be inadmissible as hearsay”). Here, Mayor Lambert and Krampitz are both defendants and thus fall under the broad scope of the rule. However, for Rule 801(d)(2) to apply, such statements must be made within the scope of employment. See Carter v. Univ. of Toledo, 349 F.3d 269, 274-75 (6th Cir. 2003). Statements by employees are outside of the scope of employment, and therefore not subject to the party-admission rule, when they concern decision-making processes into which the employee has no input, or decisions to which the employee was not a party. Id. Guzall has not provided any evidence to establish that either Mayor Lambert or Krampitz were involved in the layoff decisions or that they could have influenced those decisions. The only evidence in the record, instead, shows the opposite: that the City Council has final policy-making authority. Nor does Guzall provide evidence that either party had authority to bind the City.<sup>2</sup> Thus, the district court properly excluded the content of Williams' affidavit.

Even were this purported evidence not hearsay, the district court found that Williams' statement that "Guzall was wrongfully fired/laid off" was mere speculation and conjecture. We agree. Williams' statement that Mayor Lambert thought that Guzall "talks too much" does not suggest that Guzall was engaged in protected speech or that any conduct was retaliatory; nor does it in any way implicate either party in the decision to lay off Guzall. Without such connections, the statements were insufficient to preclude summary judgment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e); Mitchell v. Toledo Hosp., 964 F.2d 577, 584-85 (6th Cir. 1992) (discounting "rumors, conclusory allegations and subjective beliefs" in affirming district court's grant of summary judgment).

Guzall's second argument regarding her First Amendment claim—that the district court improperly failed to consider and address the affidavits of former

<sup>2</sup> In her Reply, Guzall incorrectly argues that the City waived this argument by failing to raise it below. (Appellant's Reply at 7.) The City raised the hearsay issues in its their Reply in Support of Summary Judgment. Guzall made a cursory argument that "witness statements of employees are not hearsay as per FRE 801(d)(2)(A) and (D)" with no further explanation. RE 175, PageID #4421. The City, however, clearly noted that her hearsay arguments, among other things, failed to implicate the ultimate policy maker. Moreover, Guzall's only argument that Mayor Lambert or Krampitz actually had such authority is based on her own testimony, which itself contains hearsay. (Appellant's Br. at 12 n. 2.)

Romulus Police Officers Landry and Droege—is equally without merit. There is no evidence that the district court excluded these affidavits on evidentiary grounds, and we review the court’s ruling de novo. See Combs v. Int’l Ins. Co., 354 F.3d 568, 576 (6th Cir. 2004). The affidavits of former or current police officers make vague and general assertions that the City “retaliates against those people who would not do what [the City] wanted to be done,” and that the City “retaliates against those people who report illegal activity occurring in the City,” and even reference specific acts of retaliation against individual citizens on Mayor Lambert’s behalf. RE 175-1, PageID #4459, RE 175-3, PageID #4483. These statements do not speak whatsoever to the facts at issue in Guzall’s case. There are no allegations of similar retaliation against Guzall, or even any mention of her. Though Guzall is correct that the district court did not address these affidavits, the reason is clear: they were unrelated to Guzall’s case and wholly unnecessary to its disposition.

Finally, Guzall argues that the district court failed to view the evidence in the light most favorable to her as plaintiff and non-movant.<sup>3</sup> We review such assertions de novo. See Kouekassazo v. Intellisource, No. 16-4140, 2017 WL 4513404, at *2 (6th Cir. Aug. 10, 2017). Guzall fails to cogently indicate which facts and inferences were not viewed in the light most favorable to her. The district court's opinion does not, in any obvious way, draw inferences in favor of Defendants. Instead, Guzall appears to insist once more that irrelevant or improper evidence was ignored. Even were we to consider the speculative and conjectural statements, disregarding that they are hearsay, the district court explained in detail Guzall's inability to show causation. A prima facie case of First Amendment-based retaliation requires a showing that the employee "(1) engaged in constitutionally protected speech or conduct; (2) an adverse action was taken against [her] that would deter a person of ordinary firmness from continuing to engage in that conduct; (3) there is a causal connection between elements one and two—that is, the adverse action was motivated at least in part by [the employee's] protected conduct." Dye v. Office of the Racing Comm'n, 702 F.3d 286, 294 (6th Cir. 2012) (citation omitted) (alterations added). Guzall has been unable to show that any person aware of her alleged protected speech—even non-party Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff—effectuated her employment decision, or that their acts gave rise to the ultimate alleged harm. See King v. Zamiara, 680 F.3d 686, 695 (6th Cir. 2012). Moreover, the span of time between the alleged speech and the actual layoffs is too long to conclude that her speech motivated the decision. See Clark Cnty. Sch. Dist. v. Breeden, 532 U.S. 268, 273 (2001) (explaining that temporal proximity must be "very close" when used as the sole evidence to show causation). Guzall's actual involvement with the MSP investigation occurred well after her layoff.

<sup>3</sup> This assertion is only clear in the table of contents. The internal heading and argument state that the district court “failed to apply additional evidence which allowed for Plaintiff’s claims.” (Appellant’s Br. at 8.) This section of Guzall’s appellate brief simply reiterates much of her testimony regarding the specific illegal activities that she alleges occurred in the Mayor’s office and persists in the attempt to prove her First Amendment claim through speculation and hearsay.

Even were these deficiencies not enough to warrant defense summary judgment, there is ample evidence in the record to conclude that, given the City's dire financial straits, the adverse action "would have been the same absent the protected conduct." See Eckerman v. Tenn. Dep't of Safety, 636 F.3d 202, 208 (6th Cir. 2010) (citation omitted). Guzall's position was the most junior in the Mayor's office, and its elimination put the Mayor's office in line with a five-percent budget decrease. Guzall was not replaced and her position remained vacant. Had Defendants wished to fire her due to her reputation for and attestations of truthfulness, they had the opportunity to do so directly after those purported statements in June 2010. Tellingly, Guzall remained on staff for some time and survived the initial workforce reduction. Even more significantly, Guzall was told she would stay on if the millage passed, and it is uncontroverted that, had the measure passed, she would have stayed on.

In sum, the district court did not err in its analysis of the evidence, the inferences to be drawn from it, or the ultimate conclusion that Guzall cannot establish a First Amendment retaliation claim, with or without any excluded evidence.

B. Promissory Estoppel and Fraud

Guzall next claims that, in dismissing her promissory estoppel claim, the district court erred in several ways: (1) by finding no evidence of a promise that she would keep her job; (2) by determining that Guzall could only rely on a promise that she would not be laid off as it related to the first round of workforce reduction; (3) by failing to acknowledge that, even after she was laid off, Defendants promised Guzall that she would be promptly brought back to work; and, (4) when analyzing the alleged promises, by ignoring

City code requirements that the Mayor have administrative secretaries. Guzall also appeals judgment on her fraud claim, arguing that the same conduct makes an actionable case of fraud under Michigan law. Our review is de novo. Combs, 354 F.3d at 576.

As the district court correctly stated, a promissory estoppel claim under Michigan law requires “(1) a promise, (2), that the promisor should reasonably have expected to induce action of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promise, (3) which in fact produced reliance or forbearance of that nature, (4) in circumstances such that the promise must be enforced if injustice is to be avoided.” Gason v. Dow Corning Corp., 674 F. App’x 551, 558-59 (6th Cir. 2017) (quoting Leila Hosp. & Health Ctr. v. Xonics Med. Sys., Inc., 948 F.2d 271, 275 (6th Cir. 1991)). Michigan precedent emphasizes that the promise must be clear and definite and any subsequent reliance must be reasonable. DBI Investments, LLC v. Blavin, 617 F. App’x 374, 385 (6th Cir. 2015) (quoting State Bank of Standish v. Curry, 500 N.W.2d 104, 108 (Mich. 1993)). As to Guzall’s first three arguments, none of the alleged statements satisfy Michigan’s elements of promissory estoppel. Any promise made when she returned from vacation in March 2010 would reasonably be related to the first work-force reduction, and Guzall was not laid off during that time. Though Guzall claims that she could rely on that promise for the second round as well, that assertion does not comport with the law. Such a promise is not clear and definite, and reliance on a promise of employment that could conceivably continue indefinitely is patently unreasonable. As to the alleged promise that she would be rehired within months, that promise, too, was not particularly clear or definite. Indeed, it was unclear in what capacity, with what funds, or through what mechanism Guzall would be brought back into the fold, and the financial situation and termination notice were clear. Moreover, Guzall fails to identify any detrimental reliance on that promise. Instead, Guzall states the opposite—that she did not trust the assurance she was given that she would not be fired. Finally, as to the fact that City Code states that the Mayor’s office will have administrative secretaries, that does not constitute a promise that the mayor will have a certain number of administrative secretaries or that one of those secretaries will be Guzall. Even if Defendants used the code as further assurance that she would be brought back, those promises remain amorphous and do not ameliorate Guzall’s lack of detrimental reliance.

As to fraud, Michigan law requires similar elements: (1) a material representation, (2) that was knowingly false (or made with reckless disregard as to its truth) at the time, (3) with intention that plaintiff rely on the promise, (4) actual reliance, and (5) causal injury. See Hord v. Env’tl. Research Inst. of Michigan, 617 N.W.2d 543, 546 (Mich. 2000). In addition to the deficiencies identified in her promissory estoppel claim, Guzall failed to present evidence that any of the alleged statements were knowingly false at the time made, or evidence of any injury based on detrimental reliance. Accordingly, we find that the district court did not err in dismissing Guzall’s promissory estoppel and fraud claims.

C. Public Policy

Guzall asserts that each Defendant failed to address her public policy claim, waiving any challenge to that claim, and the district court thus “abused its discretion” in dismissing it. Despite Guzall’s argument, our review is de novo. Combs, 354 F.3d at 576. Under either standard, Guzall’s claim fails. First, the district court was skeptical that a separate public policy claim was pleaded at all. But any public policy claim, by Guzall’s own admission, was contained in Count I of her Complaint. (Appellant’s Br. at 29 (citing RE 4, PageID #132)). As the City noted in its summary judgment motion as well as on appeal, several Defendants addressed Count I extensively. While other briefs addressed the public policy claim together with the FCA and fraud claims, the confusion is understandable, given Guzall’s prolix and often convoluted pleading. Moreover, when Guzall asserted in her Response to Motions for Summary Judgment that Defendants had failed to address the public policy claim, the City and Lambert addressed the claim and identified the method by which they met the argument.

Second, the district court did not improperly address Guzall’s alleged public policy claim. Instead, it noted via footnote that Guzall’s responsive briefs asserted a separate violation of public policy based on retaliatory discharge but found that the claim failed for the same reason as her First Amendment claim—causation. Given that the public policy claim—if it was pleaded—is encompassed in and similar to the First Amendment claim, the district court was not required to expand on its analysis. We affirm the dismissal of this claim.

D. Hostile Work Environment

Guzall claims that the district court erred in dismissing her hostile-work-environment claim when it erroneously noted that she failed to allege any Title VII-based discrimination. However, the district court did not base its decision solely on that ground. Instead, it noted that it had already addressed her ability to survive summary judgment on her claim that Defendants laid her off in retaliation for her speech under the First Amendment. Only when faced with a confusing pleading, and in an effort to fulsomely address Guzall's claim, did the court explain the deficiencies in any potential Title VII-based § 1983 claim. In any event, Guzall has not attempted to clarify on appeal which protected group she belongs to, or how she was harassed or retaliated against based on membership in such a group. See Wasek v. Arrow Energy Servs., Inc., 682 F.3d 463, 469 (6th Cir. 2012). Nor did she participate in any EEOC proceeding. Reed v. ADM/ARTCO, 57 F. App'x 682, 683 (6th Cir. 2003) ("A plaintiff must typically file a timely discrimination charge with the EEOC in order to bring a Title VII lawsuit.") (citation omitted). No matter how the district court construed Guzall's hostile-work-environment claim, or how much leniency it granted, Guzall has not established a prima facie case of a hostile-work-environment Title VII claim. See e.g., Barrett v. Whirlpool Corp., 556 F.3d 502, 515 (6th Cir. 2009). The district court properly dismissed it.

Guzall also claims that Krampitz failed to address Guzall's hostile-work-environment claim, thus waiving any defense to that claim. Guzall asserts that by dismissing the claim, the district court "abused its discretion." (Appellant's Br. at 30.) Regardless of the appropriate standard of review, this claim fails for the preceding reasons.

E. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

Guzall also asserts that the district court erred in dismissing her intentional infliction of emotional distress claims. To establish an IIED claim under Michigan law, Guzall must show that Defendants intentionally or recklessly engaged in extreme or outrageous conduct that caused her severe emotional distress. Roberts v. Auto-Owners Ins. Co., 374 N.W.2d 905, 908 (Mich. 1985).

Assuming arguendo that Guzall satisfied the extreme or outrageous conduct prong, Guzall fails to proffer any evidence of emotional distress. The district court noted that “Guzall does not even respond to Defendants’ arguments, let alone identify where in the record there is proof of her severe emotional distress.” RE 179, PageID #4722. On appeal, Guzall offers the following, alone, as evidence of her emotional distress: that after she allegedly refused to lie, job duties were taken away from her and she asked to be let go when she had nothing to do. These facts do not evidence emotional distress. We affirm the district court’s grant of summary judgment as to IIED.

F. Conspiracy

The district court dismissed Guzall’s civil conspiracy claim because it is “not actionable standing alone; it is necessary to prove a separate actionable tort.” RE 179, PageID #4724. On appeal, Guzall claims that once this Court reinstates her remaining claims, that will no longer be the case. In affirming the district court in full, we decline to revive any of Guzall’s previous claims and her argument as to conspiracy fails.

G. Disqualification of Attorney

Guzall also appeals the district court's disqualification of her husband as her attorney. We review a district court's decision whether to disqualify an attorney for abuse of discretion. United States v. Brock, 501 F.3d 762, 771 (6th Cir. 2007), abrogated on other grounds, Ocasio v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1423, 1428–29 (2016). After an evidentiary hearing, the district court issued a detailed opinion addressing each of Guzall's arguments prior to disqualifying her counsel. In short, it found that a prior attorney-client relationship categorically existed between Mr. Guzall and the City. Mr. Guzall admitted as much. As part of that relationship, he obtained information protected by that privilege related to City wrongdoing. Revealingly, Mr. Guzall freely asserted his attorney-client privilege with the City when questioned by MSP investigators. Given the sprawling complaint and prolific allegations of wrongdoing, it was a near certainty that Mr. Guzall's prior representation of the City would overlap with the facts and theories at issue in Guzall's suit, even if not pertaining to the specific individual Defendants.

On appeal, Guzall cites several cases and propositions that effectively limit the attorney-client privilege in governmental situations due to the public interest inherent in an open and honest government. Guzall also cites to situations in which the content of governmental meetings is not confidential or privileged due to the attendant circumstances. Additionally, Guzall claims that the district court failed to identify any employee who sought legal advice from Mr. Guzall privately, thus negating any claim of privilege. Again, this misstates the district court's reasoning for disqualification. Guzall's cited precedent and propositions have no relation to her husband's disqualification, which was exhaustively explained by the district court. Accordingly, we find that the district court did not abuse its discretion in disqualifying Mr. Guzall.

H. Case Management

Guzall asserts several deficiencies in the district court's managing of the case during discovery, as well as in the magistrate judge's report and recommendations adopted by the district court. In particular, Guzall asserts that the district court: (1) permitted improper obstruction and delay of Mayor Lambert's deposition; (2) inequitably ordered forensic discovery of her cellular telephone but denied her the same discovery regarding Defendants' electronic devices; (3) improperly sanctioned Guzall after she failed to produce her phone for forensic review; and (4) improperly granted Mayor Lambert additional time to file his Motion for Summary Judgment in violation of the scheduling order. We address each issue in turn.

First, while there was undoubtedly delay in obtaining Mayor Lambert's deposition, Guzall admits that his deposition took place. Further, she cites to no precedent standing for the proposition that allowing deposition delays warrants any remedy. Nor can she cite to any court order that Mayor Lambert violated. In sum, it is unclear what remedy Guzall seeks regarding the deposition delay, what she believes she would be entitled to, what law would support such unknown remedies, or what harm was incurred by the delay.

Second, a review of the voluminous record and pleadings regarding the production of Guzall's telephone shows that there was no inequity. At the outset of this litigation, no party was ordered to produce a cellular phone for forensic review. However, after substantial discovery, during Burcroff's deposition, Guzall's counsel unexpectedly played a recording of a telephone conversation between Guzall and Burcroff. Due to its quality as well as the fact that it had not been previously produced, the recording—and in consequence, Guzall's phone itself—became the subject of a fervent discovery dispute. Only in response to Defendants' motion to compel her phone did Guzall seek inspection of Defendants' phones. Even then she failed to file a countering motion to compel or formally explain why review of their phones was necessary—other than because she had been ordered to turn her phone over. Though Guzall was required to produce her phone and Defendants were not, the reason is obvious. No Defendant had attempted to introduce any evidence from a phone that had not been previously produced. Moreover, Guzall does not point to any motion seeking the relief she now claims was an abuse of discretion to deny. Nor does she identify particular prejudice or what discovery or potential discovery she was improperly denied. In any event, no Defendant cited any evidence from Guzall's phone in their motions for summary judgment, and the evidence obtained is of no moment.

Third, the district court's sanction was not an abuse of discretion. Rentz v. Dynasty Apparel Indus., Inc., 556 F.3d 389, 395 (6th Cir. 2009). Guzall failed to respond to Defendants' motion to compel. After the motion was referred to a Magistrate Judge and granted in part, Guzall was to produce her cell phone by September 11, 2015. Guzall failed to comply with the order and her counsel conceded the Magistrate Judge's order was violated. Defendants then moved to dismiss Guzall's entire case. Two months after Guzall was to have produced the phone, the Magistrate Judge held an evidentiary hearing on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss and Guzall produced her telephone. For her violation of the original order, Guzall was fined $500. Such a sanction is not an abuse of discretion. The record shows that Defendants made multiple objections when the unproduced recording was introduced at deposition, made numerous attempts to obtain the recording post-deposition, and timely filed a motion to compel when those attempts failed. The record is also clear that when ordered to produce the phone, Guzall did not do so until another order followed and after Defendants were forced to move to dismiss her case. Though she argues that she did attempt to provide the phone, (Appellant's Br. at 45 (citing RE 79-7, PageID #1096)), the record below is to the contrary, RE 116. Thus, we find that the district court did not abuse its discretion in sanctioning Guzall.

Fourth, Guzall wholly mischaracterizes the district court's order allowing Mayor Lambert to file a motion for summary judgment after the operative scheduling-order deadline. As the district court explained in its order denying Guzall's motion to set aside its order allowing such a filing, Guzall had previously filed a motion to set aside the court's order extending the dispositive motion deadline. There, Guzall explained the efforts to take Mayor Lambert's deposition and obtain his tax records and sought other relief. Indeed, Mayor Lambert concedes that discovery disputes related to his deposition and tax-related discovery documents existed. The district court noted that the issues raised in Guzall's motion were irrelevant to the extension of the dispositive motion deadline. Given that outstanding discovery remained, and that Guzall was permitted to depose Mayor Lambert and was granted multiple extensions before responding to his motion, the district court did not abuse its discretion in granting Mayor Lambert additional time to file his motion after the dispositive motion deadline had passed. Dietz v. Bouldin, 136 S. Ct. 1885, 1892 (2016) (noting district courts' "inherent authority to manage their dockets"); Andretti v. Borla Performance Indus., Inc., 426 F.3d 824, 830 (6th Cir. 2005) (upholding district court's decision to allow summary judgment filing past dispositive motion deadline in scheduling order).

I. Motion to Correct, Supplement and Correct

Finally, there remains pending Guzall's "Motion to Correct Error and Supplement and Correct the Complete Record," which asserts that in her Response to Mayor Lambert's Motion for Summary Judgment she referred to numerous excerpts from Mayor Lambert's deposition, each time referring to "Exhibit 17," and that this court should supplement the record with that exhibit.

However, Exhibit 17 was not electronically filed. Although Guzall claims that it was included in the U.S. mail version provided to the district court, the district court's order denying Guzall's motion makes clear that it did not receive it. The district court denied Guzall's motion below to send a record to the appellate court including Exhibit 17 because the district court did not rely upon or refer to the unreceived exhibit in its opinion.

Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 10(e) allows for correction of the record and is meant “to allow the [district] court to correct omissions from or misstatements in the record for appeal, not to introduce new evidence in the court of appeals.” Inland Bulk Transfer Co. v. Cummins Engine Co., 332 F.3d 1007, 1012 (6th Cir. 2003) (quoting S & E Shipping Corp. v. Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co., 678 F.2d 636, 641 (6th Cir. 1982)). Generally, appellate courts consider the record that was before the district court. Id. Guzall explicitly seeks to introduce evidence that was not before the district court, which is not permitted by Rule 10(e). Id. For these reasons, we deny the motion.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons above, we DENY Plaintiff-Appellant Marianne Guzall’s “Motion to Correct Error and Supplement and Correct the Complete Record” and AFFIRM the district court’s opinion in full.

HELENE N. WHITE, Circuit Judge, (concurring in part, dissenting in part).

I agree with the majority's disposition except regarding Guzall's First Amendment retaliation claim against Defendant Alan Lambert.<sup>1</sup> I conclude that Guzall presented sufficient evidence of causation, i.e., that her speech was a substantial or motivating factor in Defendants' decision to lay her off, to survive summary judgment. See Taylor v. Keith, 338 F.3d 639, 643 (6th Cir. 2003).

Public-employee First Amendment retaliation claims are analyzed under a three-step test: Guzall must 1) establish that her speech is protected, that is, touches on a matter of public concern, and demonstrate that her interest in the speech outweighs the government's countervailing interest in promoting the efficiency of the public service it provides as an employer; 2) show that the employer's adverse action would chill an ordinary person in the exercise of her First Amendment rights; and 3) must present sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue as to whether her speech was a substantial or motivating factor in the employer's decision to lay her off. Taylor v. Keith, 338 F.3d 639, 643 (6th Cir. 2003); see also PID 4696.

Defendant Lambert challenges only the third element, causation. Lambert Br. 17-19; Krampitz Br. 20-24. The majority concludes that Guzall did not satisfy the causation element because she presented only assumptions, speculation, or hearsay that Lambert was involved in the decision to lay her off. PID 4698-99. I disagree with that determination for several reasons. First, Defendants did not identify the individual decision-makers behind the 2011 layoffs and the evidence they rely on leaves open the possibility that Lambert<sup>2</sup> made or influenced the determination of who in his department would be laid off. City Finance Director Debra Hoffman's affidavit states that a "team of persons representing the various departments" determined which positions would be eliminated, and that "Guzall's position was collectively agreed upon to be among those selected for elimination because it was determined to be the least critical to operation of the Mayor's office." PID 2442-43.

Second, the affidavit of Virginia Williams, on which Guzall relies, contains party admissions by Defendant Lambert:

Shortly before [] Guzall's employment was terminated in Romulus, Betsey Krampitz told me that Mayor Lambert told her that [] Guzall talks too much and that she had to be let go, and that [Mayor Pro Tem] Leroy Burcroff was complaining to Mayor Lambert about [] Guzall complaining to Burcroff about things going on in the Mayor's office. . . . Alan Lambert told me prior to the millage increase vote in Romulus that [] Guzall was going to be let go because she talks too much, so I know when Mayor Lambert and the City of Romulus later claimed that they had to lay off [] Guzall because of the millage not passing, that was a false statement and not the real reason they terminated her employment. Alan Lambert told me that [] Guzall was complaining about things that were going on in the Mayors [sic] office and was making those complaints to Leroy Burcroff, and Lambert said those things that [Guzall] was saying were not true. I told him Marianna is loyal and his best employee and that she should not be fired. He told me she had to go. I had all of those conversations with Mayor Lambert at the Romulus Athletic Club. . . .

PID 1803. Lambert's statements to Williams qualify as party admissions under Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(A), since they are statements offered against an opposing party and were made by the party. As the Mayor, these statements were within his authority.

I note that Lambert's statements to Williams regarding Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff coincide with Guzall's deposition testimony that several months before she was laid off in 2011, she told Burcroff about the illegal conduct in Lambert's office:

Prior to my layoff, [Burcroff] and I met for lunch . . . I told him everything that was going on, from the campaign finance report, . . . from the allegation that the Mayor was taking money from local businessmen for whatever reasons, like the Park and Fly, things of that nature, the landing strip.

I informed him that they were holding this pink slip over my head because they didn't believe that I hadn't spoken up to the Michigan State Police, and I had told them that I wouldn't lie to the Michigan State Police, and I asked him to help— . . . I said, you know . . . As Mayor Pro Tem, your job is to ask [him] to step down if he's doing something illegal or allegedly—to help or to intervene on behalf of myself, the other employees and the residents, because they deserve better than what they were getting.

PID 4663/Guzall dep.

Given Defendant Lambert's admissions, I also disagree with the majority that Guzall presented no evidence that any person aware of her alleged protected speech effectuated or influenced the decision to lay her off. Maj. Op. at 12.

For these reasons, I would reverse the district court's grant of summary judgment to Lambert on Guzall's First Amendment retaliation claim.

Civil Case No. 13-cv-11327

Before: Hon. Linda V. PARKER,
United States District Judge.

Marianne D. Guzall (“Ms. Guzall”), a former employee of Defendant City of Romulus (“City” or “Romulus”), filed this lawsuit against Defendants as a qui tam action alleging violations of the federal False Claims Act (“FCA”), and as an individual action alleging violations of her rights under federal and state law. Specifically, Ms. Guzall alleges the following counts in her four hundred and twelve paragraph Amended Complaint:

- (I) Retaliation and Retaliatory Discharge in Violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3730(h), public policy, and the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution;
- (II) Violation of Federal False Claims Act—Qui Tam and (RICO) Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act;
- (III) Promissory Estoppel;
- (IV) Due Process Violation and Hostile Work Environment Claim;
- (V) Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress;
- (VI) Fraud—Intentional and/or Constructive Fraud—Conspiracy and Concert of Actions.

(Pl.’s Am. Compl., ECF No. 4.) Defendants are the City, the City’s former mayor Alan R. Lambert (“Mayor Lambert”), and the City’s former chief of staff Betsey Krampitz (“Ms. Krampitz”). The matter presently is before the Court on separate motions for summary judgment filed by Defendants. (ECF Nos. 153, 154, 171.) The motions have been fully briefed. Finding the facts and the parties’ legal arguments sufficiently presented in their submissions, the Court is dispensing with oral argument with respect to the motions pursuant to Eastern District of Michigan Local Rule 7.1.

I. Summary Judgment Standard

Summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 is appropriate “if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The central inquiry is “whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law.” Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52 (1986). After adequate time for discovery and upon motion, Rule 56 mandates summary judgment against a party who fails to establish the existence of an element essential to that party’s case and on which that party bears the burden of proof at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986).

The movant has the initial burden of showing “the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.” Id. at 323. Once the movant meets this burden, the “non-moving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.” Matsushita Electric Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 (1986) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). To demonstrate a genuine issue, the nonmoving party must present sufficient evidence upon which a jury could reasonably find for that party; a “scintilla of evidence” is insufficient. See Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 252. The court must accept as true the non-movant’s evidence and draw “all justifiable inferences” in the non-movant’s favor. See Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 255.

“A party asserting that a fact cannot be or is genuinely disputed” must designate specifically the materials in the record supporting the assertion, “including depositions, documents, electronically stored information, affidavits or declarations, stipulations, admissions, interrogatory answers, or other materials.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1). Rule 56 provides that “[a]n affidavit or declaration used to support or oppose a motion must be made on personal knowledge, set out facts that would be admissible in evidence, and show that the affiant or declarant is competent to testify to the matters stated.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(4). “In order to survive a motion for summary judgment, the non-moving party must be able to show sufficient probative evidence that would permit a finding in his favor on more than mere speculation, conjecture, or fantasy.” Lewis v. Philip Morris, Inc., 355 F.3d 515, 533 (6th Cir. 2004) (internal quotations and brackets omitted).

Notably, the trial court is not required to construct a party’s argument from the record or search out facts from the record supporting those arguments. See, e.g., Street v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 886 F.2d 1472, 1479-80 (6th Cir. 1989) (“the trial court no longer has a duty to search the entire record to establish that it is bereft of a genuine issue of material fact”) (citing Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Willoughby, 863 F.2d 1029, 1034 (D.C. Cir. 1988)); see also InterRoyal Corp. v. Sponseller, 889 F.2d 108, 111 (6th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1091 (1990) (“A district court is not required to speculate on which portion of the record the nonmoving party relies, nor is it obligated to wade through and search the entire record for some specific facts that might support the nonmoving party’s claim.”). The parties are required to designate with specificity the portions of the record such that the court can “readily identify the facts upon which the . . . party relies[.]” InterRoyal Corp., 889 F.2d at 111.

II. Factual and Procedural Background

In 2001, Mayor Lambert was elected mayor of Romulus. Upon his election, Mayor Lambert hired Ms.

Krampitz to serve in an administrative position similar to the one she held under a previous mayor. In November 2001, Mayor Lambert hired Ms. Guzall to serve as his administrative assistant. This was the most junior position within the office. (Guzall 12/4/15 Dep. at 28, ECF No. 154-4.) Ms. Guzall had no prior experience working for the City.

The City of Romulus Charter provides that “[t]here shall be administrative secretaries for the Mayor, Clerk and Treasurer. They shall be hired by the official they serve. They will be non-union and non-civil service.” (Lambert’s Mot., Ex. B, ECF No. 171-3.) During her deposition in this matter, Ms. Guzall acknowledged that she served in an appointed position at the pleasure of the mayor and was not subject to union membership. (Guzall 12/4/15 Dep. at 30-31, ECF No. 154-4.) Relying on the language of the City of Romulus Charter, however, Ms. Guzall asserted that she was not an at-will employee and could be terminated only for cause. (Id. at 28.) Specifically, Ms. Guzall testified that the City’s finance director, Debra Hoffman, and its human resources director, Carol Mayerich, told her that her “job was protected by the city charter.” (Id.)

In 2006, Mayor Lambert promoted Ms. Krampitz to serve as his chief of staff, and he hired Julie Wojtylko (“Ms. Wojtylko”) to fill the position Ms. Krampitz previously occupied. (Wojtylko Dep. at 8, 13, ECF No. 154-3; Krampitz Dep. at 10-11, ECF No. 154-2.) Ms. Guzall was passed over for the promotion given to Ms. Wojtylko, which Ms. Guzall had expected to receive. (Guzall 12/4/15 Dep. at 57, ECF No. 154-4.) Ms. Wojtylko began working for Romulus through a co-op program at her high school in 1985, and she held various positions throughout the City before Mayor Lambert hired her. (Wojtylko Dep. at 11-13, ECF No. 154-3.)

In her Complaint and during her deposition, Ms. Guzall contends that Mayor Lambert, Ms. Krampitz, other City officials and employees, and several Romulus residents engaged in improper and/or illegal acts during Ms. Guzall's tenure with the City. For example, Ms. Guzall claims that Mayor Lambert and Ms. Krampitz listed, or directed other employees to list, individuals as donors on campaign finance reports when, according to Ms. Guzall, those individuals did not donate money to Mayor Lambert's campaign. Ms. Guzall also claims that Mayor Lambert and Ms. Krampitz failed to deposit and report cash donations and directed employees to use Romulus supplies and work on Mayor Lambert's campaign during city business hours. According to Ms. Guzall, she reported this misconduct to the City's Attorney, Barry Seifman, but he did nothing.

Beginning in 2009, Romulus, like many other Michigan municipalities, began experiencing a shortfall in revenue due to a decrease in funds received from the state and from property taxes.<sup>1</sup> (Hoffman Aff.

<sup>1</sup> During her deposition and in response to Defendants' motions, Ms. Guzall asserts that the City's claimed financial distress was a sham to secure higher salaries for its officials and to make the City's "residents . . . feel a crunch, so that they would vote the millage through." (6/28/16 Guzall Dep. at 63, 70.) Ms. Guzall presents no evidence to support her assertion, however. Moreover, in light of the record evidence and this Court's ability to take judicial notice of the financial crisis felt globally during this period, it finds Ms. Guzall's analysis of Romulus' financial condition unbelievable.

¶¶ 3-4, ECF No. 154-5; Audia Aff. ¶¶ 7-8, ECF No. 154-15.) By the end of 2009, Romulus faced a five-year financial deficit forecast of approximately $20 million. (Hoffman Aff. ¶ 5; Audia Aff. ¶ 9.) To address the shortfall, Romulus formed the Action in Changing Times Committee (“ACT NOW Task Force”) to propose cost-saving and revenue enhancing measures. (Hoffman Aff. ¶¶ 6-7; Audia Aff. ¶¶ 10-11; Krampitz Mot., Ex. E, ECF No. 154-6.) A facilitator from the consulting firm Plante Moran moderated the ACT NOW Task Force, which consisted of elected City officials, school officials, union representatives, city department heads, business leaders, and community representatives and religious leaders. (Krampitz Mot., Ex. E, ECF No. 154-6.)

Within this context, Romulus decided to lay off twenty-eight full-time city employees between June and August 2010. (Mayerich Aff. ¶ 5, ECF No. 154-7; Hoffman Aff. ¶ 8.) The record fails to reflect who decided which positions would be eliminated; however, the City’s finance director, Debra Hoffman, attests in her affidavit that these decisions “were made and ultimately agreed upon collectively and objectively by a team of persons representing the various departments.” (Hoffman Aff. ¶ 15.) Among the employees laid off between June and August 2010 were City police officers, firefighters, and department of public works employees. (Mayerich Aff. ¶ 6.) No one in the mayor’s office was impacted by the layoffs. (Id. ¶ 9.) The City further reduced its costs by reducing the hours of its senior center and closing the public library and recreation department between June and August 2010. (Id. ¶¶ 7-8.)

Seeking to avoid additional cuts to city personnel and services, in August 2010, Romulus voters were asked to approve a millage increase to pay for police and fire services. (Hoffman Aff. ¶ 9.) The voters rejected the increase. (Id. ¶ 10.) On November 8, 2010, the Romulus City Council voted to hold a special election on a 2.75 millage increase proposal for general operation services in February 2011. (Id. ¶ 12; 11/8/10 Romulus Council Meeting Minutes, ECF No. 154-8.) In the event the millage did not pass, the City prepared to implement a second reduction-in-force, laying off an additional nine full-time employees and three part-time employees. (Mayerich Aff. ¶ 10.) Notices to the targeted employees informed them that they were being laid off effective March 11, 2011 due to budget cuts, but that the notice would be rescinded if Romulus residents voted in favor of the millage on February 22, 2011. (Id. ¶ 14; Wojtylko Dep. at 185, ECF No. 154-3.)

Ms. Guzall was among the employees laid off during this second reduction-in-force. (Mayerich Aff. ¶ 11.) According to Carol Mayerich, the City's director of human resources from 2007-2013, she told Mayor Lambert that the March 2011 reduction-in-force needed to include one position in his office and thus an existing member of his staff. (Id. ¶ 12.) Ms. Guzall's position was selected for elimination because it would have the least impact on the continued operation of the mayor's office. (Id. ¶ 13.) The parties fail to identify who, specifically, made this determination or was part of the team making the layoff decisions.<sup>2</sup>

The Court was unable to glean this information through its independent review of the record evidence.

According to Ms. Guzall, “they” told her not to clean out her desk and that she would be brought back to work within three months of being laid off. (Guzall 6/28/16 Dep. at 53.) Ms. Guzall testified that Mayor Lambert told her not to look for another job because if they could not find a position for her in his office, they would let her float between the mayor’s office, clerk’s office, and human resources. (Id. at 80.) Romulus did not return Ms. Guzall to work, however. Over time, some laid off employees did regain employment. (Guzall 12/4/15 Dep. at 81.) However, no employee assumed Ms. Guzall’s former position.<sup>3</sup> (Mayerich Aff. ¶ 16, ECF No. 1543-4.)

Prior to her layoff, Ms. Guzall had several discussions that she believes were the cause of the layoff decision. First, in May 2010, while Ms. Guzall was on Burcroff, and that Mr. Burcroff “brought [Ms. Guzall’s] name up.” (Guzall 12/4/15 Dep. at 127.) This testimony constitutes inadmissible hearsay, however, as Ms. Guzall was not at the meeting and testified that she was told this by Ms. Wojtylko. (Id.) Further, even if Ms. Wojtylko told Ms. Guzall that Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff brought up Ms. Guzall’s name, it does not demonstrate that he did so to include her in the layoffs. Moreover, Ms. Guzall is not even certain when this meeting occurred. (Id. at 126.) As such, it may not have resulted in her layoff or may have occurred before Ms. Guzall reported the alleged misconduct to Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff.

<sup>3</sup> Ms. Guzall asserts that Jill Lambert, who also was laid off during the second reduction-in-force, assumed Ms. Guzall’s previous position in the mayor’s office. The evidence reflects, however, that Ms. Lambert was re-hired on a temporary basis to fill in for Ms. Wojtylko while Ms. Wojtylko was on medical leave. (Wojtylko Dep. at 160; ECF No. 154-3 at Pg ID 2736.)

vacation, she received a telephone call from Ms. Wojtylko who was upset because the Michigan State Police had contacted her for an interview in connection with its investigation of the Romulus Police Department. (Guzall 6/28/16 Dep. at 54-55, ECF No. 154-4.) According to Ms. Guzall, she told Ms. Wojtylko that Ms. Wojtylko should not lie for anyone and that she (Ms. Guzall) would not lie for the mayor. (Id. at 54-55, 59.)

Ms. Guzall further testified that on the day she returned from her vacation, she spoke to Ms. Wojtylko and Ms. Krampitz about the Michigan State Police investigation and again stated that, if interviewed, she would tell the truth. (Id. at 53-54, 59, 77.) According to Ms. Guzall, Ms. Krampitz responded, “we’re gonna give you a pink slip today” and then she gave Ms. Guzall a pink slip.<sup>4</sup> (Id.) Ms. Guzall testified, “They said they would give me a box to pack my stuff if I didn’t lie.” (Id. at 81.)

This last exchange apparently occurred when the City was deciding who would be laid off during the first reduction-in-force in June 2010. (Id. at 108.) In fact, Ms. Guzall testified that when Ms. Krampitz gave her the pink slip, they were headed into a meeting where other employees’ names would be called to receive a pink slip, but hers was “just for show.” (Id.

<sup>4</sup> When Ms. Guzall first testified about this exchange, she claimed that it occurred during a telephone conversation with Ms. Krampitz while Ms. Guzall was on vacation. (6/28/16 Guzall Dep. at 53-54, 59.) It makes more sense that it occurred after Ms. Guzall returned to work, as she also claims that, in response, Ms. Krampitz handed her a pink slip and that they were going into a departmental meeting. (Id. at 77-78.)

at 78.) Despite allegedly receiving this pink slip, Ms. Guzall was not laid off at this time.

According to Ms. Guzall, some time prior to when she in fact was laid off, she met with Leroy Burcroff, mayor pro tem and chairman of the city council (“Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff”), and told him about the illegal and/or improper activities in the mayor’s office.<sup>5</sup> (6/28/16 Guzall Dep. at 112-13, ECF No. 154-4.) Ms. Guzall believes Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff told Mayor Lambert about their conversation because the day after she met with Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff, Ms. Krampitz came to Ms. Guzall and said: “Just remember, Mr. Burcroff’s a politician and he talks.” (Id. at 118.) Plaintiff explained, “she [Ms. Krampitz] looked right at me, and it was—I just knew that she knew.” (Id.)

On May 3, 2012, three months after Ms. Guzall was laid off, the Michigan State Police interviewed her in connection with its investigation of wrongdoing within the City. (Lambert’s Mot., Ex. J, ECF No. 171-11.) Apparently, the initial investigation into misconduct within the Romulus Police Department uncovered suspected illegalities within the mayor’s office. (City’s Mot., Ex. 11, ECF No. 153-12.)

III. Applicable Law and Analysis

A. Retaliation in Violation of the First Amendment

1. Applicable Law

In Count I of her Amended Complaint, Ms. Guzall asserts that she was laid off in retaliation for her speech in violation of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

“A public employee has a constitutional right to comment on matters of public concern without fear of reprisal from the government as employer.” Taylor v. Keith, 338 F.3d 639, 643 (6th Cir. 2003) (citing Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 140, 145-46 (1983); Pickering v. Bd. of Educ., 391 U.S. 563, 574 (1986)). “Retaliation by a government employer against an individual who exercises h[er] First Amendment rights constitutes a First Amendment violation.” Id. (quoting Perry v. McGinnis, 209 F.3d 597, 604 (6th Cir. 2000)). The Sixth Circuit utilizes a three-step test for evaluating a public employee’s First Amendment retaliation claim:

First, the employee must establish that his speech is protected. To accomplish this, the employee must show that his speech touches on a matter of public concern, Connick, 461 U.S. at 147, 103 S. Ct. 1684, and demonstrate that his interest in the speech outweighs the government’s countervailing interest in promoting the efficiency of the public service it provides as an employer. Pickering, 391 U.S. at 574, 88 S. Ct. 1731. This determination is a question of law for the court to decide. Connick, 461 U.S. at 148 n. 10, 103 S. Ct. 1684. Second, the employee must show that the employer's adverse action would chill an ordinary person in the exercise of his First Amendment rights. Cockrel v. Shelby County Sch. Dist., 270 F.3d 1036, 1048 (6th Cir. 2001). Finally, the employee must present sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue as to whether his speech was a substantial or motivating factor in the employer's decision to discipline or dismiss. Mt. Healthy City Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ. v. Doyle, 429 U.S. 274, 287, 97 S. Ct. 568, 50 L.Ed.2d 471 (1977).

Taylor, 338 F.3d at 643.

With respect to the first prong, the plaintiff need not have spoken to the press or the public for her speech to be protected. Id. (citing Givhan v. W. Line Consol. Sch. Dist., 439 U.S. 410, 412 (1979)); see also, e.g., Perry v. McGinnis, 209 F.3d 597, 608 (6th Cir. 2000). Thus in Taylor, the Sixth Circuit held that the First Amendment protected reports and statements the plaintiffs, a police officer and police sergeant, made internally to other members of their police department. Id. Similarly, in Perry, the appellate court held that the plaintiff's complaints about a matter of public concern made in private conversations to his supervisors were protected. 209 F.3d at 608. As the Supreme Court reasoned in Givhan: "Neither the [First] Amendment itself nor our decisions indicate that [freedom of speech] is lost to the public employee who arranges to communicate with his employer rather than to spread his views before the public." 439 U.S. at 415-16.

Speech touches upon a matter of public concern if it can be "fairly considered as relating to any matter of political, social or other concern to the community."

Connick, 461 U.S. at 146. “[W]hen a public employee speaks not as a citizen upon matters of public concern, but instead as an employee upon matters only of a personal interest,” his or her speech is not entitled to constitutional protection. Id. at 147. “Whether an employee’s speech addresses a matter of public concern must be determined by the content, form, and context of a given statement, as revealed by the record as a whole.” Id. at 147-48. The Sixth Circuit has held that “speech disclosing public corruption is a matter of public interest.” Solomon v. Royal Oak Twp., 842 F.2d 862, 865 (6th Cir. 1998); see also Marohnic v. Walker, 800 F.2d 191 (6th Cir. 1986) (stating that “[p]ublic interest is near its zenith when ensuring that public organizations are being operated in accordance with the law”).

To satisfy the third prong of this three-part test, the plaintiff “cannot rely on the mere fact that an adverse employment action followed speech that the employer would have liked to prevent.” Taylor, 338 F.3d at 646 (quoting Cockrel, 270 F.3d at 1055). “Rather, to survive a motion for summary judgment, the employee must present sufficient evidence linking his [or her] speech to the employer’s adverse decision so that a reasonable factfinder could conclude, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the speech, at least in part, motivated the decision to discharge.” Id.

2. Analysis

Defendants uniformly argue that Ms. Guzall cannot establish the third element necessary to establish her First Amendment retaliation claim: causation. This Court agrees.

First, Ms. Guzall presents no probative evidence to show that Ms. Krampitz or Mayor Lambert were involved in the City's lay-off decisions or that anyone involved in the decision was aware of Ms. Guzall's alleged protected conduct.<sup>6</sup> Ms. Guzall professed during her deposition that the mayor had the final say as to who would be laid off. (6/28/16 Guzall Dep. at 70-71.) She presents no evidence to support this assertion, however, and her deposition testimony reflects that this is her subjective belief based on nothing more than speculation.

Ms. Guzall claims that Ms. Krampitz gave her a "pink slip" in May 2010, after Ms. Guzall stated that she would not lie if interviewed by the Michigan State Police. As an initial matter, Ms. Guzall's broad statement that she would tell the truth if interviewed, without any elaboration regarding what she would reveal, does not establish that she spoke on a matter of public concern entitling her to First Amendment protection. In any event, this "pink slip" did not result in Ms. Guzall suffering an adverse action. The span of time between this interaction and Ms. Guzall's actual layoff in early 2011 is too long to conclude, without more, that Ms. Guzall's statement

<sup>6</sup> Ms. Guzall argues that Ms. Krampitz had the ability to terminate her employment, relying on Ms. Guzall's deposition testimony as proof of this asserted fact. (Guzall 12/4/15 Dep. at 78-79.) Even if true, Ms. Guzall fails to present evidence to show that Ms. Krampitz in fact was involved in the layoff decisions. As stated in Section I, a trial court has no duty to search out facts from the record supporting a party's arguments. Street, 886 F.2d at 1479-80. Nevertheless, this Court independently scoured the record to determine if it contained such evidence, along with the other evidence Ms. Guzall failed to identify to prove her claims. It found the evidence lacking.

motivated the layoff decision. See Clark Cty. Sch. Distr. v. Breeden, 532 U.S. 268, 273 (2001) (explaining that “[t]he cases that accept mere temporal proximity between an employer’s knowledge of protected activity and an adverse employment action as sufficient evidence of causality to establish a prima facie case uniformly hold that the temporal proximity must be ‘very close,’” and citing cases finding three and four month gap insufficient); see also Clay v. United Parcel Serv., Inc., 501 F.3d 695 (6th Cir. 2007) (holding temporal proximity of six months between the filing of the plaintiff’s EEOC complaint and his termination insufficient to satisfy causation element); Nguyen v. City of Cleveland, 229 F.3d 559, 567 (6th Cir. 2000) (finding one-month gap, without more, insufficient to establish causation).

Even if there was evidence to support Ms. Guzall’s assertion that she was laid off a few months after reporting improper and/or illegal activities in the mayor’s office to Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff, Ms. Guzall’s assertion that Mr. Burcroff made the decision to include her in the layoff is based on hearsay and pure speculation and conjecture. See Mitchell v. Toledo Hosp., 964 F.2d 577, 584-85 (6th Cir. 1992) (providing that rumors, conclusory allegations, and subjective beliefs are insufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact).

During her deposition, when asked if she had any facts suggesting that Mr. Burcroff had any input into the decision to include her in the second round of layoffs, Ms. Guzall responded: “He was in the meeting where they determined who was going to be laid off.” (Guzall 12/4/15 Dep. at 124.) Ms. Guzall indicated that she was not at the meeting, but Ms. Wojtylko “told [Ms. Guzall].” (Id.) What precisely Ms. Wojtylko told Ms. Guzall is unclear from Ms. Guzall’s deposition testimony. Further, what Ms. Wojtylko told Ms. Guzall constitutes inadmissible hearsay and there is no indication from Ms. Wojtylko’s deposition that she would support Ms. Guzall’s assertion.

To demonstrate a connection between her speech and layoff, Ms. Guzall relies heavily on Virginia Williams’ affidavit, in which Ms. Williams states that she “had several conversations with Betsey Krampitz regarding the employment of Marianne Guzall.” (Williams Aff. ¶ 2, ECF No. 123-6.) There are multiple levels of inadmissible hearsay within Ms. Williams’ affidavit, and her conclusion that “[Ms.] Guzall was wrongfully fired/laid off” is mere speculation and conjecture. As such, her statements are insufficient to establish that Ms. Guzall was terminated because of her protected activity. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e); Mitchell, 964 F.2d at 584-85. Moreover, Ms. Williams’ affidavit does not establish that any individual who purportedly stated that Ms. Guzall “had to be let go” because she “talks too much” or because she complained to Mayor Pro Tem Burcroff was involved in the layoff decision.

Ms. Guzall is correct that a defendant may be liable under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 even if the defendant did not execute the adverse action, but if his or her acts gave rise to the ultimate harm. See, e.g., King v. Zamiara, 680 F.3d 686, 695 (6th Cir. 2012). Yet, Ms. Guzall lacks evidence to show that Ms. Krampitz or Mayor Lambert took any action that gave rise to the decision to lay her off. Her assumption or speculation that they influenced the decision is insufficient to survive summary judgment.

For these reasons, the Court concludes that Defendants are entitled to summary judgment with respect to Ms. Guzall's First Amendment retaliation claim.<sup>7</sup>

B. Retaliation in Violation of the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3730(h)

1. Applicable Law

“Under the FCA, it is illegal to present a false claim for payment to the [federal] government.”<sup>8</sup> United

<sup>7</sup> In response to Defendants' summary judgment motions, Ms. Guzall asserts that she alleged a separate violation of public policy claim based on her retaliatory discharge. Such a claim fails for the same reason as her First Amendment retaliation claim—that is, she cannot show that she was laid off because of her protected speech. See Hoven v. Walgreen Co., 751 F.3d 778, 784 (6th Cir. 2014) (setting forth the elements of a public policy claim under Michigan law).

- A) knowingly presents, or causes to be presented, a false or fraudulent claim for payment or approval;
- B) knowingly makes, uses, or causes to be made or used, a false record or statement material to a false or fraudulent claim;
- C) conspires to commit a violation of subparagraph (A), (B), (D), (E), (F), or (G);
- D) has possession, custody, or control of property or money used, or to be used, by the Government and knowingly delivers, or causes to be delivered, less than all of that money or property;
- E) is authorized to make or deliver a document certifying receipt of property used, or to be used, by the Government and, intending to defraud the Government,

States ex rel. Antoon v. Cleveland Clinic Found., 788 F.3d 605, 613 (6th Cir. 2015) (citing 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)) (brackets added and emphasis removed). The FCA also protects “whistleblowers” who expose such fraud against the United States government. See 31 U.S.C. §§ 3720-3730. Section 3730 of the FCA states, in pertinent part:

Any employee, contractor, or agent shall be entitled to all relief necessary to make that employee, contractor, or agent whole, if that employee, contractor, or agent is discharged, demoted, suspended, threatened, harassed, or in any other manner discriminated against in the terms and conditions of employment because of lawful acts done by the employee, contractor, agent or associated others in furtherance of an action under this section or other efforts to stop 1 or more violations of this subchapter.

makes or delivers the receipt without completely knowing that the information on the receipt is true;

- F) knowingly buys, or receives as a pledge of an obligation or debt, public property from an officer or employee of the Government, or a member of the Armed Forces, who lawfully may not sell or pledge property; or
- G) knowingly makes, uses, or causes to be made or used, a false record or statement material to an obligation to pay or transmit money or property to the Government, or knowingly conceals or knowingly and improperly avoids or decreases an obligation to pay or transmit money or property to the Government, 31 U.S.C. § 3729.

A retaliation claim brought under the FCA, 31 U.S.C. § 3730(h), overlaps a First Amendment retaliation claim in that the plaintiff must show that she engaged in protected activity known to her employer and that the employer took an adverse action against the plaintiff as a result of the protected activity. McKenzie v. BellSouth Telecomms., Inc., 219 F.3d 508, 514 (6th Cir. 2000) (citations omitted). Protected activity under the FCA is limited, however, to activity “done . . . in furtherance of an action under [31 U.S.C. § 3730] or other efforts to stop 1 or more violations of this subchapter.” 31 U.S.C. § 3730(h)(1). The Sixth Circuit has held that courts should “broadly construe the plaintiff’s protected activity[.]” McKenzie, 219 F.3d at 515. Nevertheless, the court also cautioned that this “does not eliminate the necessity that the actions be reasonably connected to the FCA” and “that they relate to exposing fraud or involvement with a false claims disclosure.” Id. at 515-16 (quotation marks and citations omitted).

2. Analysis

For the reasons discussed with respect to Ms. Guzall’s First Amendment retaliation claim, she fails to create a genuine issue of material fact with respect to whether Defendants took an adverse action against her because of protected activity. Moreover, Ms. Guzall fails to establish that she even engaged in activity protected under the FCA. Neither Ms. Guzall’s Amended Complaint nor her deposition testimony suggest that she disclosed evidence of fraud on the federal government with respect to claims for payment.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>9</sup> A review of Ms. Guzall’s Amended Complaint and her deposition testimony reflects that she believes Defendants violated the

(See Am. Compl. ¶¶ 237-244, 247-275, 285.) Merely reporting wrongdoing by supervisors is not protected activity. McKenzie, 219 F.3d at 516 Id. (citing cases). “[T]he internal reports must allege fraud on the [federal] government.” Id. Finally, the public disclosure bar precludes Ms. Guzall’s FCA retaliation claim.

The FCA places several restrictions on a relator’s ability to bring a qui tam action, one of which is the public-disclosure bar in 31 U.S.C. § 3730(e)(4)(A).<sup>10</sup> Section 3730(e)(4)(A) describes three types of disclosures that strip the courts of jurisdiction:

“No court shall have jurisdiction over an action under this section based upon the public disclosure of allegations or transactions [1] in a criminal, civil, or administrative hearing, [2] in a congressional, administrative, or Government Accounting Office [(GAO)]

FCA by making fraudulent statements on campaign finance reports and/or by failing to report income on tax returns. It is unclear how the former relates to claims for payments from the federal government. While a false statement on a tax return could result in a payment (i.e., a tax refund) from the federal government, the FCA expressly excludes from its applicability “claims, records, or statements made under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.” 31 U.S.C. § 3729(d).

<sup>10</sup> Congress amended the FCA in March 2010 and these amendments modified several aspects of the public disclosure bar. The 2010 FCA amendments do not apply to cases arising from conduct that predated the amendments, even if the qui tam relator files his or her complaint after their effective date. See Antoon, 786 F.3d at 615. Defendants rely on the earlier version of the statute and the Court concludes this is the appropriate version because the conduct on which Ms. Guzall bases her FCA claims occurred before March 2010. In any event, Ms. Guzall has not argued that the 2010 amendments apply.

report, hearing, audit, or investigation, or [3] from the news media, unless the action is brought by the Attorney General or the person bringing the action is an original source [4] of the information.”

Graham Cty. Soil & Water Conservation Dist. v. United States ex rel. Wilson, 559 U.S. 280, 286 (2010) (brackets in original) (quoting 31 U.S.C. § 3730(e)(4)(A) (1986) (footnote omitted)). Pursuant to this provision, “when the basis of the lawsuit has been publicly disclosed in advance, the person filing the action must be the original source of the information that a false claim has been presented.” Antoon, 788 F.3d at 614 (citing United States ex rel. Poteet v. Medtronic, Inc., 552 F.3d 503, 507 (6th Cir. 2009)). If the relator cannot establish that she is an original source of the information, the court (under the pre-2010 version of the statute) lacks subject matter jurisdiction and must dismiss the action.<sup>11</sup> 31 U.S.C. § 3730(e)(4)(A) (1986).

Defendants assert that the fraudulent conduct Ms. Guzall alleges in her Amended Complaint was publicly disclosed through the Michigan State Police investigation of the City, which was reported in the media. Ms. Guzall does not contradict Defendants’ assertion. Instead, she argues she is the original source of the information.

<sup>11</sup> The 2010 amendments to § 3730 removed the jurisdictional language of the public disclosure bar. Courts have interpreted the amendment as transforming the public disclosure bar from a jurisdictional bar to an affirmative defense. See, e.g., United States ex rel. Advocates for Basic Legality, Inc. v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 816 F.3d 428, 433 (6th Cir. 2016) (“The public disclosure bar is no longer jurisdictional, as every other circuit to address the question has concluded.”) (citing cases).

Congress has defined an “original source” as someone “who has direct and independent knowledge of the information on which the allegations are based and has voluntarily provided the information to the Government before filing an action under this section which is based on the information.” 31 U.S.C. § 3730 (e)(4)(B) (1986). The statute’s reference to “Government” means the “federal government.” See Antoon, 788 F.3d at 617 (citing United States ex rel. Jones v. Horizon Healthcare Corp., 160 F.3d 326, 334-35 (6th Cir. 1998)). Not only must the relator have provided information to the federal government prior to filing her FCA lawsuit, she “must also provide the government with the information upon which the allegations are based prior to any public disclosure.” Poteet, 552 F.3d at 515 (quoting Jones, 160 F.3d at 333-34) (brackets, ellipsis, and additional citation removed).

There is no requirement “that the qui tam relator possess direct and independent knowledge of all of the vital ingredients to a fraudulent transaction.” Antoon, 788 F.3d at 619 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted, emphasis in original). Nevertheless, the qui tam relator’s conclusion that fraud occurred cannot be “based on pure speculation or conjecture.” Id. at 620 (quoting United States ex rel. Aflatooni v. Kitsap Physicians Servs., 163 F.3d 516, 526 (9th Cir. 1998)). “Mere suspicion that there must be a false or fraudulent claim lurking around somewhere simply does not carry a relator’s burden of proving that he is entitled to original source status.” Id. (quoting United States ex rel. Vuyyura v. Jadhav, 555 F.3d 337, 353 (4th Cir. 2009)).

The evidence does not reflect that Ms. Guzall has direct and independent knowledge of a false claim made by Defendants to the federal government. Ms. Guzall only suspects that Defendants made false claims and, as mentioned earlier, it does not appear that any claims fall within the FCA's proscriptions. This is insufficient to qualify her as an original source. Moreover, there is no evidence that Ms. Guzall alerted the federal government to the alleged fraud before filing this lawsuit.

For the above reasons, the Court concludes that Ms. Guzall's retaliation claim under the FCA is subject to dismissal.

C. False Claims Act

In Count II of her Amended Complaint, Ms. Guzall alleges that Defendants violated the FCA. For the reasons discussed above, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment with respect to this claim.

D. RICO

In Count II, Ms. Guzall also asserts a RICO claim against Defendants. Specifically, Ms. Guzall alleges: "Defendants and other co-conspirators engaged in the illegal act of fraud against the United States Government in violation of 18 U.S.C.A. § 371 (RICO) Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, and 26 USCA [sic] 7201 . . ." (Am. Compl. ¶ 232, ECF No. 4 at Pg ID 142.)

RICO's civil enforcement scheme includes the following provision for private lawsuits:

Any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee[.]

18 U.S.C. § 1964(d). A plaintiff has standing to assert a RICO claim, and can only recover to the extent that, “he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the [RICO] violation.” Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496 (1985) (emphasis added). “[B]oth personal injuries and pecuniary losses flowing from those personal injuries fail to confer relief under § 1964(c).” Jackson v. Sedgwick Claims Mgmt. Servs., Inc., 731 F.3d 556, 565-66 (6th Cir. 2013) (citations omitted). Defendants seek summary judgment with respect to Ms. Guzall’s RICO claim, arguing, in part, that she fails to demonstrate an injury sufficient to grant her RICO standing.

In response to Defendants’ summary judgment motions, Ms. Guzall does not identify an injury to her business or property resulting from Defendants’ asserted RICO activity. Ms. Guzall responds only with a quotation from and citation to case law indicating that indirect injuries confer standing. (See, e.g., Pl.’s Resp. to City’s Mot. at 38-39, ECF No. 157 at Pg ID 3126-27, quoting Cty. of Oakland by Kuhn v. City of Detroit, 784 F. Supp. 1275, 1283-84 (E.D. Mich. 1992)); but see Anza v. Ideal Steel Supply Corp., 547 U.S. 451, 457 (2006) (holding that the injury required to confer RICO standing can be neither remote, purely contingent, nor indirect). Nevertheless, Ms. Guzall never identifies the indirect injury she suffered to her business or personal property.

To the extent Ms. Guzall is asserting an indirect injury due to Defendants' alleged "bilking the U.S. Federal Government out of tens of thousands of dollars" in tax revenue (see Am. Compl. ¶ 234), this is insufficient to confer standing. See Illinois ex rel. Ryan v. Brown, 227 F.3d 1042, 1045-46 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that the plaintiff, a taxpayer whose asserted injury was based upon the state's lost revenue following the misappropriation of government funds, lacked standing); Amsterdam Tobacco Inc. v. Philip Morris Inc., 107 F.Supp.2d 210, 219-20 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) ("Where, as here, the primary purpose of an alleged racketeering enterprise is to avoid paying taxes or otherwise defraud the government, indirectly injured parties do not have standing to bring RICO claims."); see also Anza, 547 U.S. at 458 (holding that the defendant's act of lowering prices was entirely distinct from its alleged RICO fraud of not charging sales tax, which defrauded the State of New York, not the plaintiff, a competitor company of defendant). While taxpayers and residents in general may be indirectly harmed by RICO conduct wasting a city's funds or depriving the government of tax revenue, these are not sufficiently direct injuries to sustain a RICO action. As the Supreme Court has held, standing cannot be premised upon such "generalized grievance[s]" that are "plainly undifferentiated and common to all members of the public." United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 176-77 (1974).

Because Ms. Guzall fails to establish that she has standing to bring her RICO claim, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment with respect to this claim.

E. Promissory Estoppel

In Count III of the Amended Complaint, Ms. Guzall asserts a promissory estoppel claim based on Defendants' alleged promises that she would not be laid off and, when she was, that she would be returned to work with the City.

Under Michigan law, a claim for promissory estoppel has four elements: “(1) a promise, (2) that the promisor should reasonably have expected to induce action of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee, (3) which in fact produced reliance or forbearance of that nature, (4) in circumstances such that the promise must be enforced if injustice is to be avoided.” Gason v. Dow Corning Corp., ___ F. App’x ___, 2017 WL 65564, at *5 (6th Cir. Jan. 6, 2017) (quoting Leila Hosp. & Health Ctr. v. Xonics Med. Sys., Inc., 948 F.2d 271, 275 (6th Cir. 1991)) (additional citations omitted). “The doctrine of promissory estoppel is cautiously applied[.]” Id. (quoting Marrero v. McDonnell Douglas Capital Corp., 505 N.W.2d 275, 278 (Mich. Ct. App. 1993) (per curiam)). To be actionable, the promise must be clear and definite. DBI Investments, LLC v. Blavin, 617 F. App’x 374, 385 (6th Cir. 2015) (citing State Bank of Standish v. Curry, 500 N.W.2d 104, 108 (Mich. 1993)). The Michigan Supreme Court has “emphasized that ‘the reliance interest protected by promissory estoppel is reasonable reliance.’” Id. (quoting Curry, 500 N.W.2d at 107) (emphasis in original and brackets removed). Defendants argue that Ms. Guzall cannot establish any of the elements necessary to prevail on her promissory estoppel claim.

In fact, the Court finds no evidence of a clear and definite promise by Defendants that Ms. Guzall would keep her job. Ms. Guzall relates Mayor Lambert's and Ms. Krampitz's promises that she would not be laid off; however, these promises were made when Ms. Guzall returned from vacation in March 2010, during the first round of layoffs when she in fact was not laid off. (12/4/15 Guzall Dep. at 83, 139.) With respect to any promise to bring her back to work, even if it was reasonable for Ms. Guzall to rely on those promises, she fails to explain how she detrimentally relied on Defendants' promises.

Defendants therefore are entitled to summary judgment with respect to Ms. Guzall's promissory estoppel claim.

F. Due Process Violation

In Count IV of her Amended Complaint, Ms. Guzall alleges that Defendants did not afford her due process consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution when she was laid off.

"The requirements of procedural due process apply only to the deprivation of interests encompassed by the Fourteenth Amendment's protection of liberty and property." Bd. of Regents of State Colleges v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 569 (1972). Property interests "are created and their dimensions are defined by existing rules or understandings that stem from an independent source such as state law—rules or understandings that secure certain benefits and that support claims of entitlement to those benefits." Id. at 577; Chilingirian v. Boris, 882 F.2d 200, 203 (6th Cir. 1989).

In Michigan, employment contracts for an indefinite term are presumed to be at-will and may be terminated by either party at any time for any reason. Rood v. Gen. Dynamics Corp., 507 N.W.2d 591, 597 (Mich. 1993) (citation omitted); see also Pucci v. Nineteenth Dist. Court, 628 F.3d 752, 766 (6th Cir. 2010) (citing Lytle v. Malady, 579 N.W.2d 906-910-11 (Mich. 1998) (“Michigan law generally presumes that employment relationships are ‘at-will’ arrangements; at-will employees, in turn, have no property interest in their continued employment.”)). The Sixth Circuit has concluded that “a public employee does not have a property interest in continued employment when his position is held at the will and pleasure of his superiors and when he has not been promised that he will only be terminated for good cause.” Chilingirian, 882 F.2d at 203 (citations omitted). Nevertheless, a party may overcome the presumption of at-will employment in one of three ways:

“(1) proof of a contractual provision for a definite term of employment or a provision forbidding discharge absent just cause; (2) an express agreement, either written or oral, regarding job security that is clear and unequivocal; or (3) a contractual provision, implied at law, where an employer’s policies and procedures instill a legitimate expectation of job security in the employee.”

Pucci, 628 F.3d at 766 (quoting Lytle, 579 N.W.2d at 911).

It is undisputed that Ms. Guzall held her position with the City at the pleasure of Mayor Lambert, who hired her for the position. (12/4/15 Guzall Dep. at 31.) Ms. Guzall nevertheless claims that she was a just-cause employee based on statements by Ms. Krampitz and the City’s finance and human resources directors, Ms. Hoffman and Ms. Mayerich, respectively. (12/4/15 Guzall Dep. at 28.) According to Ms. Guzall, these individuals told her that “[her] job was protected by the city charter[,]” specifically the provision stating that the mayor shall have a secretary. (Id. at 28-29.) These statements are not sufficient to overcome the presumption that Ms. Guzall’s position was at-will.

The city charter reads in pertinent part: “There shall be administrative secretaries for the Mayor . . .” (Lambert’s Mot., Ex. B, ECF No. 171-3.) This provision simply guarantees the mayor an administrative secretary. It does not promise the individual serving in that position job security, a definite term of employment, or forbid discharge absent cause. Ms. Guzall does not otherwise relate a clear and unequivocal express agreement concerning her job security, identify a contractual provision forbidding her discharge absent just cause or promising her employment for a definite period, or point to a City policy or procedure instilling a legitimate expectation of job security.

In short, Ms. Guzall fails to present evidence to establish that she had a constitutionally protected interest in her position with the City. Defendants, therefore, are entitled to summary judgment with respect to her due process claim.

G. Hostile Work Environment

Count IV of Ms. Guzall’s Amended Complaint includes “hostile work environment” in its title and she refers to a hostile work environment in two paragraphs within this count:

314. Defendants and their employees conduct and actions against Plaintiff as indicated within this Complaint and incorporated within this Count created a hostile work environment for Plaintiff, in violation of Federal law[,] the State of Michigan's Public Policy and other applicable law, substantially interfering with Plaintiff's employment, as the facts herein indicate.

315. Defendants intentionally sought to terminate Plaintiff in accord with the facts and allegations stated herein and created a hostile working environment for Plaintiff.

(Am. Compl. ¶¶ 314-315, ECF No. 4 at Pg ID 152.) As the remaining paragraphs of her Amended Complaint referring to a hostile work environment suggest (id. ¶¶ 21, 24, 98, 120), and as Ms. Guzall confirms in response to Defendants' motions, the essence of her hostile work environment claim is that she was subjected to a hostile work environment in retaliation for engaging in protected activity. (See, e.g., Pl.'s Resp. to City's Mot. at 31-35, ECF No. 157 at Pg ID 3119-23.)

The Court's first step in addressing Ms. Guzall's hostile work environment claim is determining the law on which she premises her claim. At first glance it appears that Ms. Guzall is relying on 42 U.S.C. § 1983. (See id. at 33, Pg ID 3121, quoting Sharpe v. Cureton, 319 F.3d 259, 267-68 (6th Cir. 2003).) Yet, § 1983 "is a remedial statute which does not create substantive rights." Day v. Wayne Cty. Bd. of Auditors, 749 F.2d 1199, 1202 (6th Cir. 1984) (citing Chapman v. Houston Welfare Rights Organization, 441 U.S. 600, 616-18 (1979)). Instead, "it provides a remedy for the violation of rights created elsewhere." Id. Thus in Sharpe, the plaintiffs were asserting a § 1983 claim based on the violation of their First Amendment rights. See Sharpe, 319 F.3d at 261.

This Court already evaluated Ms. Guzall's ability to survive summary judgment on her First Amendment and FCA retaliation claims. To the extent she is asserting a retaliatory harassment claim under Title VII, Ms. Guzall first must establish a prima facie case by showing: "that (1) she engaged in activity protected by Title VII"; (2) Defendants were aware of Ms. Guzall's "exercise of protected rights"; (3) Defendants subjected Ms. Guzall to "an adverse employment action" or "severe or pervasive retaliatory harassment"; and (4) "there was a causal connection between the protected activity and the adverse employment action or harassment." Morris v. Oldham Cty. Fiscal Court, 201 F.3d 784, 792 (6th Cir. 2000) (citation omitted).

With respect to the first prong, the Sixth Circuit has explained that "there are two types of protected activity: participation in a proceeding with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") and opposition to an apparent Title VII violation [i.e., discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin]." Wasek v. Arrow Energy Servs., Inc., 682 F.3d 463, 469 (6th Cir. 2012) (citing Booker v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co., 879 F.2d 1304, 1313 (6th Cir. 1989)); see also 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e–2; 2000e–3(a). Ms. Guzall does not provide evidence of activity protected under Title VII. None of her complaints related to race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Moreover, Ms. Guzall never filed an EEOC complaint.

Defendants, therefore, are entitled to summary judgment with respect to Ms. Guzall's hostile work environment claim.

H. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

In Count V of her Amended Complaint, Ms. Guzall asserts a claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress (“IIED”). Ms. Guzall indicates in response to Defendants’ motion that the claim is premised on Defendants’ alleged demand that she engage in criminal acts or risk discharge.<sup>12</sup>

To prove this claim, Ms. Guzall must show that Defendants intentionally or recklessly engaged in extreme and outrageous conduct that caused her severe emotional distress. Downing v. Life Time Fitness, 483 F. App’x 12, 18 (6th Cir. 2012) (citing Roberts v. Auto-Owners Ins. Co., 374 N.W.2d 905, 908 (Mich. 1985)). In Roberts, the Michigan Supreme Court described “extreme and outrageous conduct” as follows:

It has not been enough that the defendant has acted with an intent which is tortious or even criminal, or that he has intended to inflict emotional distress, or even that his

<sup>12</sup> In comparison, in her Amended Complaint, Ms. Guzall identifies the “extreme and outrageous conduct” as being “forced to go on unemployment for the first time in her life after her employment was terminated” and being “told to lie to the media by Defendants after Defendant Lambert set up an illegal blockade to stop a movie star [George Clooney] who was filming in the City” to allow Mayor Lambert to “meet that movie star.” (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 324, 332-33; ECF No. 4.) Ms. Guzall recites caselaw within this count holding that when an employer “gains a position of authority over an employee and forces the latter to cho[o]se between performing a criminal act or losing his job, it cannot be said as a matter of law that such conduct is not extreme and outrageous.” (Id. ¶¶ 326, 328, quoting Wilson v. Kiss, 751 F. Supp. 1249, 1254 (E.D. Mich. 1990).) Nowhere in this count, however, does Ms. Guzall allege that Defendants threatened to terminate her employment if she did not engage in a crime.

conduct has been characterized by “malice”, or a degree of aggravation which would entitle the plaintiff to punitive damages for another tort. Liability has been found only where the conduct has been so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized community. Generally, the case is one in which the recitation of the facts to an average member of the community would arouse his resentment against the actor, and lead him to exclaim, “Outrageous!”

374 N.W.2d at 908-09. Liability does not arise from “mere insults, indignities, threats, annoyances, petty oppressions, or other trivialities[.]” Id. at 908. Moreover, the Sixth Circuit has set a high bar as to what a plaintiff must show to satisfy the element of severe emotional distress:

“Emotional distress passes under various names, such as mental suffering, mental anguish, mental or nervous shock, or the like. It includes all highly unpleasant mental reactions, such as fright, horror, grief, shame, humiliation, embarrassment, anger, chagrin, disappointment, worry, and nausea. It is only where it is extreme that the liability arises. Complete emotional tranquility is seldom attainable in this world, and some degree of transient and trivial emotional distress is a part of the price of living among people. The law intervenes only where the distress inflicted is so severe that no reasonable man could be expected to endure it. The intensity and the duration of the distress are factors to be considered in determining its severity.”

Watkins v. City of Southfield, 221 F.3d 883, 893 (6th Cir. 2000) (emphasis in original) (quoting Pratt v. Brown Mach. Co., 855 F.2d 1225, 1240 (6th Cir. 1988)) (additional citations omitted).

The relationship between the parties is relevant in evaluating an IIED claim. See Wilson v. Kiss, 751 F. Supp. 1249, 1253 (E.D. Mich. 1990). “[T]he extreme and outrageous character of the conduct may arise from the position of the actor or a relationship to the distressed party.” Id. (citing Ledsinger v. Burmeister, 318 N.W.2d 558, 562 (Mich. Ct. App. 1982). “Such conduct may occur through the abuse of a relationship that puts the defendant in a position of actual or apparent authority over a plaintiff or gives a defendant power to affect a plaintiff’s interest.” Id. (citing Margita v. Diamond Mortg. Co., 406 N.W.2d 268, 272 (Mich. Ct. App. 1987)). Thus in Wilson, the court denied the defendant’s motion to dismiss the plaintiff’s IIED claim alleging that “defendant utilized his authoritative position as employer to demand that plaintiff engage in criminal acts or risk discharge.” Wilson, 751 F. Supp. at 1254.

Defendants seek summary judgment with respect to Ms. Guzall’s IIED claim, arguing in part that she fails to prove extreme and outrageous conduct or that the alleged conduct caused her severe emotional distress.<sup>13</sup> First, the Court agrees with Defendants that

<sup>13</sup> The City and Mayor Lambert also argue that they are immune from liability with respect to Ms. Guzall’s IIED claim under Michigan’s governmental immunity from tort liability

Ms. Guzall fails to identify a specific statement by Defendants threatening her job if she did not engage in criminal conduct; and, as discussed earlier, there is no evidence that she was laid off in retaliation for her refusal to commit a criminal act. Second, Ms. Guzall presents no evidence in response to Defendants' motions to show that she suffered emotional distress because of the alleged extreme and outrageous conduct. As set forth in Section I, to survive summary judgment, Ms. Guzall must set forth specific facts—that is, specifically designate in the record where the facts are established—to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact for trial. See, e.g., Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. at 587; Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 252. Ms. Guzall does not even respond to Defendants' arguments, let alone identify where in the record there is proof of her severe emotional dis-provision, Mich. Comp. Laws § 691.1407. This Court finds it unnecessary to address this defense. The Court notes, however, that Ms. Guzall is incorrect when she asserts that this immunity does not extend to these defendants' intentional torts or where they acted in bad faith or with malice. The law on which Ms. Guzall relies for this assertion—to the extent it remains good law—does not apply to the immunity afforded a governmental agency (i.e., the City) or the elective or highest appointive executive official (i.e., Mayor Lambert). See Am. Transmissions, Inc. v. Attorney General, 560 N.W.2d 52 (Mich. 1997) (citing Ross v. Consumers Power Co., 363 N.W.2d 641 (Mich. 1984)) (“[T]he highest executive officials of all levels of government are absolutely immune from all tort liability whenever they are acting within their executive authority.”) (emphasis added); Smith v. Dep’t of Pub. Health, 410 N.W.2d 749, 776 (Mich. 1987); see also Ross v. Consumers Power Co., 363 N.W.2d 641, 667-68 (Mich. 1984) (outlining the different tort immunity Michigan extends to “judges, legislators, and the highest executive officials of all level of government” as opposed to “[l]ower level official, employees, and agents”).

trepreneur. The issue, therefore, is deemed waived. See Williams v. WCI Steel Co., 170 F.3d 598, 607 (6th Cir. 1999) (finding, on appeal, that plaintiff waived state law claims in district court by failing to present any opposition to defendant's argument concerning the state law claims).

I. Fraud

Count VI of Ms. Guzall's Amended Complaint is titled "Fraud—Intentional and/or Constructive Fraud—Conspiracy and Concert of Actions." (Am. Compl. at 46, ECF No. 4 at Pg ID 156.) Nowhere within the allegations of this count does Ms. Guzall identify the fraud Defendants allegedly committed against her. (Id. ¶¶ 338-412.) Instead, she refers to fraud committed against the federal government—the merits of which the Court already addressed with respect to her FCA charge. In response to Defendants' summary judgment motions, Ms. Guzall asserts that this claim is premised on the same assurances about her job security as her promissory estoppel claim. (See, e.g., Pl.'s Resp. Krampitz Mot. at 39-40, ECF No. 158 at Pg ID 3370-71.)

To support a claim of fraud under Michigan law, Ms. Guzall must satisfy the following elements:

1. The defendant made a material representation.
2. The representation was false.
3. When the defendant made the representation, it knew that it was false, or the defendant made the representation recklessly, without any knowledge of its truth, and as a positive assertion.

4. The defendant made the representation with the intention that it should be acted on by the plaintiff.
5. The plaintiff acted in reliance on the representation.
6. The plaintiff suffered injury due to his reliance on the representation.

Hord v. Envtl. Research Inst. of Michigan, 617 N.W.2d 543, 546 (Mich. 2000). The plaintiff's reliance on the material misrepresentation must be reasonable. Foreman v. Foreman, 701 N.W.2d 167, 175 (Mich. Ct. App. 2005) (citations omitted). Ms. Guzall fails to establish the necessary elements of her fraud claim.

First, she fails to present evidence to demonstrate that any statement regarding her job security (i.e., that she would not be laid off and would be returned to work once she was) was false when made. Moreover, Ms. Guzall fails to explain how she acted in reliance on the representations. Finally, she fails to identify any injury she suffered because of this reliance.

As Ms. Guzall fails to show evidence of fraud, her related conspiracy claim also is subject to dismissal. This is because a civil conspiracy claim is not actionable standing alone; it is necessary to prove a separate actionable tort underlying the conspiracy. Advocacy Org. for Patients & Providers v. Auto Club Ins. Ass'n, 670 N.W.2d 569, 580 (Mich. Ct. App. 2003) (quoting Early Detection Ctr., PC v. New York Life Ins. Co., 403 N.W.2d 830 (1986)) (“[A] claim for civil conspiracy may not exist in the air; rather, it is necessary to prove a separate, actionable tort.”).

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, the Court holds that Defendants are entitled to summary judgment with respect to the claims Ms. Guzall asserts against them.

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that Defendants' motions for summary judgment (ECF Nos. 153, 154, and 171) are GRANTED.
