OPINION OF THE COURT

NYGAARD, Circuit Judge.

In the run-up to a joint trial on a 77-count indictment that charged Appellants with operating a ticket-fixing scheme in the Philadelphia Traffic Court, the District Court denied a motion, under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 12(b)(3)(B)(v), to dismiss charges of conspiracy (18 U.S.C. § 1349), mail fraud (18 U.S.C. § 1341), and wire fraud (18 U.S.C. § 1343). Appellants Henry Alfano (private citizen) and William Hird (Traffic Court administrator) subsequently pleaded guilty to all counts against them. But now they appeal the District Court's decision on this motion, questioning whether the indictment properly alleged offenses of mail fraud and wire fraud.<sup>1</sup>

Appellants Michael Lowry, Robert Mulgrew, and Thomasine Tynes (Traffic Court judges) proceeded to a joint trial and were acquitted on the fraud and conspiracy counts, but they were convicted of perjury for statements they made before the Grand Jury. Lowry, Mulgrew, and Tynes dispute the sufficiency of the evidence on which they were convicted by arguing that the prosecutor's questions were vague, and that their answers were literally true. Lowry and Mulgrew contend alternatively that the jury was prejudiced by evidence presented at trial on the fraud and conspiracy counts. Mulgrew also complains that the District Court erred by ruling that certain evidence was inadmissible.

At the same trial, the jury convicted Willie Singletary (Traffic Court judge) of making false statements during the investigation. He claims the District Court made errors when it sentenced him.<sup>2</sup> The Government concurs with Singletary's challenge to his sentence.

We have consolidated these appeals for efficiency and have grouped the arguments—to the extent that it is possible—by common issues. We agree with Singletary and the Government that he should be resentenced. We will reverse the judgment and remand his cause to the District Court for this purpose. We are not persuaded by the rest of Appellants' arguments and will affirm their judgments of conviction.<sup>3</sup>

A.

We begin with a brief look at the indictment's description of the Traffic Court and its operations to contextualize the arguments made by Alfano and Hird. The Philadelphia Traffic Court was part of the First Judicial District of Pennsylvania. App. 186 (Indictment ¶ 2).<sup>6</sup> It adjudicated violations of the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Code occurring in the City of Philadelphia, no matter whether the Philadelphia Police or the Pennsylvania State Police issued the tickets. App. 187 (Indictment ¶5). When a person was cited for a violation he or she was required—within ten days—to enter a plea of guilty or not guilty. If the person failed to

<sup>3</sup> The District Court had jurisdiction pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3231. We have jurisdiction to review these claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and 18 U.S.C. § 3742(a).

<sup>4</sup> Appellant Alfano pleaded guilty to Conspiracy (Count 1), Wire Fraud (Counts 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7) and Mail Fraud (Counts 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56).

<sup>5</sup> Appellant Hird pleaded guilty to Conspiracy (Count 1), Wire Fraud (Counts 3, 4, 5, 6, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23) and Mail Fraud (Counts 58, 59, 60).

<sup>6</sup> Philadelphia Traffic Court was abolished and its jurisdiction was transferred to the Municipal Court in 2013 by an Act of the Pennsylvania General Assembly. 42 Pa.Con.Stat. §1121(a)(2) (2013). The court is now known as the Traffic Division of the Municipal Court.

App. 7

plead, the Traffic Court issued a notice that his or her license was being suspended. App. 189 (Indictment ¶ 12). A person who pleaded not guilty proceeded to a hearing with a Traffic Court judge presiding. App. 187 (Indictment ¶ 6).

A guilty plea, or a determination of guilt by a Traffic Court judge after a hearing, resulted in a judgment ordering payment of statutory fines and court costs. App. 188 (Indictment ¶ 8).<sup>7</sup> The Traffic Court was responsible for collecting these fines (sending them to the City and Commonwealth) and costs (which it distributed to several pre-designated funds). App. 188-89 (Indictment ¶ 9). Finally, it reported the disposition of each adjudication to the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT). App. 189 (Indictment ¶ 11).

B.

The indictment charged that, at the behest of Alfano (App. 193 (Indictment ¶ 25)) and others, the Traffic Court administrator and judges operated an “extra-judicial system, not sanctioned by the Pennsylvania court system” that ignored court procedure and gave preferential treatment (“consideration”) to select individuals with connections to the court who had been <sup>7</sup> Although other penalties are prescribed by the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Code (App. 188), this appeal is limited to the monetary fines and costs. App. 355.

App. 8

cited for motor vehicle violations. App. 196 (Indictment ¶ 31). The special treatment included:

- (1) dismissing tickets outright; (2) finding the ticketholder not guilty after a “show” hearing; (3) adjudicating the ticket in a manner to reduce fines and avoid assignment of points to a driver’s record; and (4) obtaining continuances of trial dates to “judge-shop,” that is find a Traffic Court judge who would accede to a request for preferential treatment.

App. 195-196 (Indictment ¶ 30). All of this was “not available to the rest of the citizenry.” App. 196 (Indictment ¶ 32). It also alleged that Appellants cooperated with each other to fulfill requests they and their staffs received. App. 194-95 (Indictment ¶ 27). Finally, it charged that “[i]n acceding to requests for ‘consideration,’ defendants were depriving the City of Philadelphia and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania of money which would have been properly due as fines and costs.” App. 197 (Indictment ¶ 38).<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> An example of the many allegations involving Alfano and Hird is: A.S. requested assistance from Appellant Alfano and Appellant Hird on Citation Number P1J0PK568L4 on or around February 17, 2010. The citation charged A.S. with driving a tractor-trailer from which snow and ice fell, striking vehicles on Interstate 95. The violation carried a $300 fine and costs of $142. Appellant Hird promised that he would “stop all action” on the citation and instructed A.S. to ignore the ticket. Although A.S. did not appear at the hearing, the Traffic Court judge (who is not an appellant here) ruled A.S. not guilty. App. 210-12 (Indictment ¶¶ 25-34).

App. 9

After extending consideration to favored individuals, Traffic Court judges would report the final adjudication to “various authorities, including PennDOT, as if there had been a fair and open review of the circumstances.” App. 197 (Indictment ¶ 34). Appellant Hird provided a printout to Appellant Alfano showing citations that had been “dismissed or otherwise disposed of.” App. 198-99 (Indictment ¶ 42). Such “receipts” were not routinely issued in cases.

C.

Hird and Alfano pleaded guilty to all the charges against them in the indictment. But, in their plea agreement they reserved the right to appeal “whether the Indictment sufficiently alleged that the defendants engaged in a scheme to defraud the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia of money in costs and fees.” App. 355 (Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b)(4)). So they now appeal the District Court’s order denying the motion to dismiss, asserting that the indictment failed to allege violations of mail fraud and wire fraud.

“To be sufficient, an indictment must allege that the defendant performed acts which, if proven, constitute a violation of the law that he is charged with violating.” United States v. Small, 793 F.3d 350, 352 (3d Cir. 2015). We assume in our review that the allegations in the indictment are true. United States v. Hedaithy, 392 F.3d 580, 583 (3d Cir. 2004). “The question of whether the . . . indictments alleged facts that are within the ambit of the mail fraud statute is a question of statutory interpretation subject to plenary review.” Id. at 590 n.10.

To indict on mail or wire fraud, the Government must allege that defendants “devised or intend[ed] to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises” and used mail or wire to effect the scheme. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343. Alfano and Hird claim the Government failed to allege that the scheme to commit wire and mail fraud had an objective of “obtaining money or property.”<sup>9</sup>

The District Court ruled that the indictment sufficiently alleged that the scheme “involved defrauding the Commonwealth and the City of money.” App. 20. It noted, among others, allegations that:

The conspirators used the Philadelphia Traffic Court (“Traffic Court”) to give preferential treatment to certain ticketholders, most commonly by “fixing” tickets for those with whom they were politically and socially connected. By doing so, the conspirators defrauded the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia of funds to which the Commonwealth and the City were entitled.

Id. at 18; see also id. at 185 (Indictment ¶ 1). Similarly, it referred to the following.

<sup>9</sup> In the context of mail fraud (§ 1341) and wire fraud (§1343) the term “money” has the same meaning. The same is true for the term “property.” Carpenter v. United States, 484 U.S. 19, 25 n. 6 (1987).

App. 11

In acceding to requests for “consideration,” defendants were depriving the City of Philadelphia and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania of money which would have been properly due as fines and costs.

Id. at 9; see also id. at 197 (quoting Indictment ¶ 38). Highlighting the references to “funds” and “money,” and that the monetary amounts of the fines are specifically pleaded, the District Court cited to a case from the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit which concluded succinctly that “[m]oney is money.” United States v. Sullivan, No. 2:13-cr-00039, 2013 WL 3305217, at *7 (E.D. Pa. July 1, 2013) (quoting United States v. Granberry, 908 F.2d 278, 280 (8th Cir. 1990)). The District Court was satisfied that the indictment alleged enough.

“Money, of course, is a form of property.” Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 338 (1979). But Alfano and Hird argue that the mere mention of money in an indictment is not enough. They point to a string of Supreme Court and Court of Appeals decisions analyzing Section 1341 and Section 1343 which reinforce the point that crimes of mail fraud and wire fraud are “limited in scope to the protection of property rights.” McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350, 360 (1987).<sup>10</sup> The Supreme Court said that “[a]ny benefit which the government derives from the [mail fraud] statute must be limited to the Government's interests as a property holder." Id. at 359 n.8 (emphasis added). Appellants are convinced that money in the form of traffic fines and costs cannot be regarded as the Government's "property" for purposes of mail or wire fraud, and they identify two decisions as particularly supportive of their position: Cleveland v. United States, 531 U.S. 12 (2000); and United States v. Henry, 29 F.3d 112 (3d Cir. 1994).

The Court in Cleveland examined the mail fraud convictions of individuals who received a state video poker license by submitting a license application that withheld important information. Cleveland, 531 U.S. 12.<sup>11</sup> The Court noted that the video poker licenses were part of a state program that was "purely regulatory." Id. at 22 (citation omitted).<sup>12</sup> It ruled that licenses are a "paradigmatic exercise[] of the States' traditional police powers." Id. at 23. The Court went on to say that the state's regulatory powers involving "intangible rights of allocation, exclusion, and control" (which are embodied in a license) are not interests that traditionally have been recognized as property. Id. Therefore, even though appellants may have obtained the license through deception, this was not mail fraud because the license—at least while still in the hands of the state—was not property. Id. at 26-27. It was a purely administrative tool used to achieve regulatory objectives. Id. at 21.

<sup>11</sup> The licenses were part of a regulatory scheme that had as its purpose to increase public confidence in the honesty of gaming activities that are free of criminal involvement. Cleveland, 531 U.S. at 20-21 (quoting La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 27:306(A)(1) (2000) (repealed 2012)).

<sup>12</sup> The Court rebuffed the Government's attempts to analogize licenses to other forms of property like patents and franchise rights. As for likening licenses to franchise rights, the Court observed that the Government did not enter the video poker business, but rather decided to "permit, regulate, and tax private operators of the games." Id. at 24.

The state responded to the Court’s concerns by agreeing that the licenses served a regulatory purpose, but it directed attention to the revenue it received from fees collected for license applications and renewals, as well as device fees. Id. at 21-22. It argued that this revenue is a property interest. Id. The Court was not convinced:

Tellingly, as to the character of Louisiana’s stake in its video poker licenses, the Government nowhere alleges that Cleveland defrauded the State of any money to which the State was entitled by law. Indeed, there is no dispute that TSG paid the State of Louisiana its proper share of revenue, which totaled more than $1.2 million, between 1993 and 1995. If Cleveland defrauded the State of “property,” the nature of that property cannot be economic.

Id. at 22 (emphasis added). It concluded that “[e]ven when tied to an expected stream of revenue, the State’s right of control does not create a property interest any more than a law licensing liquor sales in a State that levies a sales tax on liquor.” Id. at 23.<sup>13</sup> The money collected from application and processing fees was an integral part of the state regulatory program and it did not create any property interest. See id.

The purpose of the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Code is to “promote the safety of persons and property within the state.” Mauer v. Boardman, 7 A.2d 466, 472 (Pa. 1939). Moreover, issuing traffic tickets is a crucial element in the enforcement of the Motor Vehicle Code: it is a quintessential exercise of state police power. Alfano and Hird conclude, much like Cleveland, that no property interest could arise from revenue generated from the state’s exercise of its police power in the form of a traffic-ticket fine. They see nothing but a regulatory program here. But this ignores crucial aspects of the case before us that make it different.

Simply stated, fees charged to obtain a license cannot be equated with fines and costs that result from a traffic ticket. The license fee was imposed, adjusted, and collected solely by the state’s exercise of its regulatory authority. In contrast, here the state’s police power is exercised when a citation is issued, but this ticket merely establishes the summary violation with which the person is charged. Once a person has been charged, it is judicial power (not the state’s police power) that is exercised to determine whether the person is guilty and, if guilty, to impose the fine and costs.<sup>14</sup> These fines and costs, although specified by the Motor Vehicle Code, cannot be cabined as a product of the state’s regulatory authority. They are part and parcel of the judgment of the court. With this in mind, it is significant that the indictment does not focus on how the citations were issued (which would implicate police power), but rather alleges that the judicial process was rigged to produce only judgments that imposed lower fines—or most often—no fines and costs at all.<sup>15</sup>

But this raises a further question: can a criminal judgment held by the government ever be “property?” The Court in Cleveland offered a critique in its analysis of a different issue (whether licenses were analogous to patents) that is apropos to answering this question.

[W]hile a patent holder may sell her patent, see 35 U.S.C. § 261 . . . “patents shall have the

<sup>14</sup> The Traffic Court was not an administrative tribunal. Rather, it was part of the First Judicial District of Pennsylvania. App. 186 (Indictment ¶ 2). See also supra note 6 and accompanying text.

<sup>15</sup> On this point, it is noteworthy that the Supreme Court also said the following: “We resist . . . [any invitation] to approve a sweeping expansion of federal criminal jurisdiction in the absence of a clear statement by Congress. . . . ‘[U]nless Congress conveys its purpose clearly, it will not be deemed to have significantly changed the federal-state balance’ in the prosecution of crimes.” Cleveland, 531 U.S. at 24-25 (quoting Jones v. United States, 529 U.S. 848, 858 (2000)). As we discuss later, the legal tradition of understanding judgments as property is long-established. Consequently, the concern about expanding the reach of federal fraud statutes to new classes of property that was present in the deliberation of state licenses in Cleveland is not at issue here.

attributes of personal property” . . . the State may not sell its licensing authority. Instead of a patent holder’s interest in an unlicensed patent, the better analogy is to the Federal Government’s interest in an unissued patent. That interest, like the State’s interest in licensing video poker operations, surely implicates the Government’s role as sovereign, not as property holder.

Cleveland, 531 U.S. at 23-24. Fines imposed by judges are criminal penalties that “implicate[] the Government’s role as sovereign.” Id. at 24. Judgments ordering traffic fines and costs cannot be sold and, in the logic of Cleveland, would seem then to have no intrinsic economic value. Indeed, the penal (non-economic) nature of the fine is undeniable because the failure to pay a fine can result in the imposition of sentences of greater consequence, including imprisonment. See Pa. R. Crim. P. 706 cmt. But Cleveland is not the last word. As we will discuss below, a Supreme Court opinion issued five years later, Pasquantino v. United States, 544 U.S. 349 (2005), forecloses the defendants’ argument.

Finally, we note a dissimilarity between this case and Cleveland, highlighted by the District Court, on the significance of the monetary interest that the Government associates with the fraud. The Cleveland Court regarded the licensing fees as integral to the regulatory effort and collateral to the matter at hand. The indictment there centered on the scheme to obtain licenses, and did not even raise the licensing fees. See Cleveland, 531 U.S. at 22. Indeed, those charged with the fraud paid all the appropriate fees; there was no evidence that the government suffered any economic detriment. Id.

In contrast, the indictment here explicitly states that the scheme deprived the City and the Commonwealth of money, and it describes the object of the scheme as obviating judgments of guilt that imposed the fines and costs. Unlike Cleveland, the fines and costs play a central role in the scheme as alleged.

Alfano and Hird next focus on our decision in Henry to argue that the Government cannot claim to have a property right because the Government never had a legal claim to the fines and costs at any point in the scheme. In Henry, we examined convictions for wire fraud arising from a competitive bidding process among banks to receive deposits of a public agency's bridge tolls. Henry v. United States, 29 F.3d 112 (3d Cir. 1994). Appellants—public employees—were convicted of mail fraud for giving one bank confidential information about bids from other banks. Id. at 113. We identified several problems,<sup>16</sup> but Alfano and Hird highlight our observation in Henry that the object of the mail and wire fraud must be something to which the victim could claim a right of entitlement. Id. at 115 (“a grant of a right of exclusion”) (citing Carpenter, 484

<sup>16</sup> The Supreme Court had already made clear that “a government official’s breach of his or her obligations to the public or an employee’s breach of his or her obligations to an employer” did not fall within the scope of Section 1343. Henry, 29 F.3d at 114 (citing Carpenter, 484 U.S. at 25).

U.S. at 26-27)).<sup>17</sup> Indeed, we noted that a bank’s property right to the tolls would attach only after the funds were deposited. Id. at 114. So the banks that lost the bidding process never had a basis to claim any legally recognized entitlement to the toll deposits.<sup>18</sup> Id. at 115. A fraud claim cannot rest on the bidders being cheated out of an opportunity to receive the deposits. For these reasons, we concluded that the indictment did not allege a scheme to obtain fraudulently someone’s “property.” Id. at 116.

Here, the Government alleged that the defendants “were depriving . . . Philadelphia and . . . Pennsylvania of money which would have been properly due as fines and costs” by making it possible for certain well-connected individuals to avoid a judgment of guilt that imposed an obligation to pay appropriate statutory fines. App. 197 (Indictment ¶ 38). But Appellants stress that, like the deposits in Henry, the indictment here alleged an entitlement that does not yet exist because a person must be adjudicated (or plead) guilty before they must pay any fines or costs. None of the cases directly associated with Alfano and Hird resulted in a guilty judgment. As a result, they argue, the Government cannot claim here that it was cheated of an entitlement,

<sup>17</sup> To assess whether a particular claim is a legal entitlement, “we look to whether the law traditionally has recognized and enforced [the entitlement] as a property right.” Henry, 29 F.3d at 115.

<sup>18</sup> They were, no doubt, robbed of a fair process, but we could not identify any legal tradition that recognized this deprivation as a property right. Id. at 115.

because they were only fines and costs that the people might have owed if they had been found guilty.

The District Court said it well. Accepting this argument “would permit the alleged conspirators” to take advantage of their “unique position” in this case “to enter into a scheme to commit fraud and then hide behind the argument that the success of their fraud precludes prosecution under the ‘money or property interest’ requirement of the mail and wire fraud statutes.” Sullivan, 2013 WL 3305217, at *7. Appellants cannot rest on the very object of their scheme (to work on behalf of favored individuals to obviate judgments of guilt and the imposition of fines and costs) as the basis to claim that there is no fraud. Indeed, the not-guilty judgments that Alfano and Hird worked to obtain through the extrajudicial system were alleged in the indictment as evidence of the scheme itself.

Even if some of the cases in the extra-judicial system would have been judged not guilty in a real adjudication it is (as the District Court correctly noted) the intent of the scheme, not the successful execution of it, that is the basis for criminal liability. See Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 25 (1999) (In the criminal context, the court focuses on the objective of the scheme rather than its actual outcome; what operatives intended to do, not whether they were successful in doing it.); United States v. Rowe, 56 F.2d 747, 749 (2d Cir.) (“Civilly of course the [mail fraud statute] would fail without proof of damage, but that has no application to criminal liability.”), cert. denied 286 U.S. 554 (1932). The indictment generally alleges not just that Appellants operated a system that operated outside the bounds of Traffic Court procedures, but that it did so for the purpose of obviating judgments of guilt imposing fines and costs in those selected cases. See, e.g., supra note 8. Moreover, we note that in one case not directly involving either Alfano or Hird, the indictment alleged that fines and costs were not just obviated, but were actually erased by an alleged co-conspirator traffic court judge who ignored the conviction, backdated a continuance, and “adjudicated” the person not-guilty. App. 228-29 (Indictment ¶¶ 108-113). This episode serves to highlight that the entire scheme was centered on keeping (or taking) judgments out of the hands of the Government to prevent the imposition of fines and costs. As a result, Appellants’ reliance on our justice system’s presumption of innocence as a basis to argue against the existence of a governmental property interest is a red herring that is properly disregarded here.

Accordingly, we conclude that the indictment’s allegation that the scheme had an objective of depriving “Philadelphia and . . . Pennsylvania of money which would have been properly due as fines and costs” is not undermined by the lack of guilty verdicts. App. 197 (Indictment ¶38 (emphasis added)).

Alfano and Hird next highlight that, in Henry, our property interest analysis centered on “whether the law traditionally has recognized and enforced [the entitlement in question] as a property right.” 29 F.3d at 115. Appellants assert that traffic fines and costs typically have not been considered economic property and are unsupported by any legal tradition sufficient to ground charges of wire and mail fraud. As we have already noted we disagree with any conclusion that the fines and costs at issue have no intrinsic economic value. But we turn to another decision of the Supreme Court that came after Cleveland to address squarely whether jurisprudence supports our conclusion.

In 2005 the Supreme Court reviewed convictions arising from a scheme to smuggle large quantities of liquor from the United States into Canada, evading Canadian taxes. See Pasquantino v. United States, 544 U.S. 349, 353 (2005). The Court noted that the right to be paid has been routinely recognized as property, id. at 355-56,<sup>19</sup> observing that there is an equivalence between “money in hand and money legally due,” id. at 356. Affirming the conviction, the Court said: “Had petitioners complied with this legal obligation, they would have paid money to Canada. Petitioners’ tax evasion deprived Canada of that money, inflicting an economic injury no less than had they embezzled funds from the Canadian treasury.” Id. It concluded that: “[t]he object of petitioners’ scheme was to deprive Canada of money legally due, and their scheme thereby had as its object the deprivation of Canada’s ‘property.’” Id. Under Pasquantino, then, traffic tickets (or more precisely, judgments arising from them) are considered an “entitlement to collect money from individuals, the possession of which is ‘something of value.’”

544 U.S. at 355 (quoting McNally, 483 U.S. at 358).<sup>20</sup> We conclude that a scheme to obviate judgments imposing fines, effectively preventing the government from holding and collecting on such judgments imposes an economic injury that is the equivalent of unlawfully taking money from fines paid out of the Government's accounts. See id. at 358.

Alfano and Hird focus, finally, on the role that a judge's discretion plays in the adjudication of a case, asserting that the uncertainty this creates about outcomes in any given case undermines any argument that a judgment in a Traffic Court case can be claimed as an entitlement to property. To the extent that this merely rephrases the issue of guilt or innocence on particular charges, we have already addressed it above. To the degree that it refers to a judge's discretion in sentencing, as the District Court noted, there is no such

<sup>20</sup> We also note that Pennsylvania law permits the government to remedy the nonpayment of fines and costs as an unpaid debt through civil process, enabling the government to become a judgment creditor. Pa. R. Crim. P. 706 cmt. ("Nothing in this rule [concerning criminal fines] is intended to abridge any rights the Commonwealth may have in a civil proceeding to collect a fine or costs."). Because of this, a separate legal tradition is implicated that recognizes the judgment itself as property. See, e.g., Armada (Singapore) PTE Ltd. v. Amcol International Corp., 885 F.3d 1090, 1094 (7th Cir. 2018). This long, stable legal tradition of recognizing civil judgments for money as property supports the conclusion that the fines arising from judgments in traffic court cannot be regarded merely as implicating the act of a sovereign imposing a criminal penalty. They can be collected by civil process as a debt and are, thus, a property interest.

App. 23

discretion here.<sup>21</sup> The Motor Vehicle Code imposes fines and costs for each violation, eliminating any judicial discretion in this regard.

D.

All of this leads us to conclude that the District Court did not err by denying the motion to dismiss. We conclude that, as alleged, this scheme had the objective of preventing the City of Philadelphia and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania from possessing a lawful entitlement to collect money in the form of fines and costs—a property interest—from individuals who Alfano and Hird assisted. We will thus affirm the convictions of Appellants Alfano and Hird.

Appellants Tynes, Lowry, and Mulgrew

A.

In 2011, the United States Attorney presented to the Grand Jury evidence arising from the Federal Bureau of Investigation's inquiry into the Traffic Court. Appellants Lowry, Mulgrew, and Tynes testified and the Government brought perjury charges against them for statements they made to the Grand Jury. After Hird and Alfano pleaded guilty, the rest of the Appellants went to trial. The jury acquitted Lowry, Mulgrew, and Tynes of all counts against them on wire fraud, mail fraud, and conspiracy. But it found them guilty of perjury. Tynes, Lowry, and Mulgrew challenge their convictions by raising similar legal arguments about the sufficiency of the evidence.

<sup>21</sup> We question, in general, the relevance of an entity's authority to relinquish a just entitlement or to forbear an obligation that an entitlement imposes upon another, as a basis to call into doubt the legitimacy of, or the very existence of the entitlement. But see United States v. Mariani, 90 F. Supp. 2d 574, 583 (M.D. Pa. 2000) (Discretionary civil fines and penalties "may be too speculative to constitute a valid property interest.") (internal citation omitted).

As with all challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence, we use a highly deferential standard of review. See United States v. Caraballo-Rodriguez, 726 F.3d 418, 430 (3d Cir. 2013) (en banc). We examine the record in a light most favorable to the prosecution, and will not disturb the verdict if “any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt.” United States v. McGee, 763 F.3d 304, 316 (3d Cir. 2014) (emphasis in original) (quoting Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 319 (1979)). Tynes, Lowry, and Mulgrew argue that the questions asked of them at trial were fatally vague and/or that their answers were truthful. As a result, they contend that these questions and answers are an inadequate basis for a perjury conviction.

A conviction for perjury before a grand jury requires the Government to prove that the defendant took an oath before the grand jury and then knowingly made a “false material declaration.” 18 U.S.C. § 1623. But we recognized (in the context of a sentencing enhancement for perjury) that sometimes “confusion, mistake, or faulty memory” results in inaccuracies that cannot be categorized as a “willful attempt to obstruct justice” under perjury statutes. United States v. Miller, 527 F.3d 54, 75 (3d Cir. 2008) (quoting U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3C1.1 cmt. n.2 (U.S. Sentencing Comm’n 2003). So we do understand that “[p]recise questioning is imperative as a predicate for the offense of perjury.” Bronston v. United States, 409 U.S. 352, 362 (1973).

Precision, however, is assessed in context. An examiner’s line of questioning should, at a minimum, establish the factual basis grounding an accusation that an answer to a particular question is false. Miller, 527 F.3d at 78. So a perjury conviction is supported by the record “when the defendant’s testimony ‘can reasonably be inferred to be knowingly untruthful and intentionally misleading, even though the specific question to which the response is given may itself be imprecise.’” United States v. Serafini, 167 F.3d 812, 823 (3d Cir. 1999) (quoting United States v. DeZarn, 157 F.3d 1042, 1043 (6th Cir. 1998)).

Challenges to the clarity of a question are typically left to the jury, which has the responsibility of determining whether the defendant understood the question to be confusing or subject to many interpretations. United States v. Slawik, 548 F.2d 75, 86 (3d Cir. 1977). Moreover, consistent with our standard of review, we will not disturb a jury’s determination that a response under oath constitutes perjury unless “it is ‘entirely unreasonable to expect that the defendant understood the question posed to him.’” Serafini, 167 F.3d at 820 (quoting United States v. Ryan, 828 F.2d 1010, 1015 (3d Cir. 1987), abrogated on other grounds by United States v. Wells, 519 U.S. 482 (1997)).<sup>22</sup> On appeal, we review

<sup>22</sup> The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit underscored the high bar this establishes for appellants by noting that a fundamentally ambiguous question is “not a phrase with a meaning about which men of ordinary intellect could agree, nor one which every aspect of the record pertinent to both the question and answer to reach a conclusion about whether, in context, the witness understood the question well enough to give an answer that he or she knew to be false. See Miller, 527 F.3d at 78. Our review, however, is focused on glaring instances of vagueness or double-speak by the examiner at the time of questioning (rather than artful post-hoc interpretations of the questions) that—by the lights of any reasonable fact-finder—would mislead or confuse a witness into making a response that later becomes the basis of a perjury conviction. Questions that breach this threshold are “fundamentally ambiguous” and cannot legitimately ground a perjury conviction. Id. at 77.<sup>23</sup>

That is the law applicable to the claims raised by Tynes, Lowry and Mulgrew. But, because our review is fact-dependent, and because each raises some unique issues, we will address each of their claims individually.<sup>24</sup> could be used with mutual understanding by a questioner and answerer unless it were defined at the time it were sought and offered as testimony.” United States v. Lighte, 782 F.2d 367, 375 (2d Cir. 1986) (quoting United States v. Lattimore, 127 F. Supp. 405, 410 (D. D.C.), aff’d, 232 F.2d. 334 (D.C. Cir. 1955)).

<sup>23</sup> The rule of fundamental ambiguity is intended to “preclude convictions that are grounded on little more than surmise or conjecture, and . . . prevent witnesses . . . from unfairly bearing the risks associated with the inadequacies of their examiners.” Ryan, 828 F.2d at 1015.

<sup>24</sup> Adopting the arguments made by Alfano and Hird, Appellants Lowry, Mulgrew and Tynes assert that the Government improperly charged them with conspiracy, wire fraud, and mail fraud. Therefore, they assert, their joint trial on these counts of the indictment prejudiced the jury’s deliberation on the charges of perjury. They claim such evidence would have been excluded

Appellant Tynes<sup>25</sup>

Appellant Tynes claims her convictions for perjury at Count 71 and Count 72 lack sufficient evidence because she was responding to questions that were under Federal Rule of Evidence. 403. They also contend that, without a charge of conspiracy, the joinder of their cases would have been impermissible under Federal Rule of Criminal Evidence 8(b) or, at the very least, severance of their cases would have been warranted under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 14(a). Certainly, where there is evidence of prejudice resulting from “spillover” evidence from counts that should have been dismissed, reversal is warranted. See United States v. Wright, 665 F.3d 560, 575-577 (3d Cir. 2012). But we have concluded that the District Court did not err by denying the motion, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(3), to dismiss the conspiracy, wire fraud and mail fraud counts of the indictment. Thus, Appellants’ spillover argument has been nullified. Likewise, Appellants have no basis to claim that the Court unfairly prejudiced them by not granting separate trials.

<sup>25</sup> Tynes filed a separate motion to dismiss. App. 291-99. The record also contains Tynes’ proposed order to join Sullivan’s motion to dismiss. App. 290. However, Tynes’ motion contains no such request. Moreover, the Government’s response to the motions notes that Lowry and Mulgrew moved to join (without argument), and makes no mention of Tynes. The District Court’s ruling on Tynes’ motion to dismiss relates only to the arguments she made separately in her brief. As a result, we cannot consider Tynes’ arguments on appeal that relate to those raised in Sullivan’s motion. Moreover, since she failed to raise any of the arguments she made in her separate motion to dismiss, these arguments are waived. With that said, we will affirm the District Court’s ruling on the Motion raised by Sullivan and joined by the five Appellants. Therefore, we need not address Tynes’ assertion that the District Court mishandled her joinder motion because it does not prejudice the outcome of her appeal.

fundamentally ambiguous. The perjury charged at Count 71 arises from the following exchange.

Q. In all the years you've been [at Traffic Court] have you ever been asked to give favorable treatment on a case to anybody?

A. No, not favorable treatment. People basically know me. The lawyers know me. The court officers know me. I have been called a nonsense person because I'm just not that way. I take my position seriously, and the cards fall where they may.

App. 255, 5720.<sup>26</sup> Tynes contends that the Government pursued a novel theory here (applying federal fraud statutes to allegations of ticket fixing) and used the vague term “favorable treatment” to gloss over its uncertainty about what, ultimately, would constitute an illegal act. She points out that the term had not been used before in reference to this case and that the Government offered no explanation or definition of the term to alert Tynes to the intent of the question.

Also, from Tynes' perspective, every litigant appearing before a court seeks an outcome that is favorable, thus making “favorable treatment” a term that essentially referred to “how litigation works.” She claims that its use amounted to a fishing expedition designed to capture unfairly the entirety of her conduct in the courtroom. She warns that this is precisely the type of “open-ended construction” in questioning that we found unacceptable in Serafini. 167 F.3d at 822.

<sup>26</sup> We cite to the testimony quoted in the indictment and the Grand Jury that was used at trial. We note that there are some typographical inconsistencies between these sources and in those instances we have quoted the Grand Jury testimony.

Tynes makes a related argument against her perjury conviction for Count 72. That conviction is based on this exchange.

Q. You’ve never taken action on a request?

A. No.

App. 257, 5722. She maintains that the word “request” was presented to the jury as a follow-on to the question grounding Count 71, requiring a person to link the term “favorable treatment” and the word “request” to make sense of it. She argues that the Government took advantage of the ambiguity of “favorable treatment,” forcing the jury to speculate that Tynes interpreted “request” as “favorable treatment.” This reliance on “sequential referents” is, from her perspective, exactly what we criticized in Serafini. 167 F.3d at 821. But she misconstrues our holding.

In Serafini, the surrounding questions focused on a different topic. This bolstered appellant’s argument in that case that the question on which the perjury conviction rested was fundamentally ambiguous. Id. The appellant said the multiplicity of topics in surrounding questions caused the jury to speculate improperly on how he understood the question at issue. We said: “The meaning of individual questions and answers is not determined by ‘lifting a statement . . . out of its immediate context,' when it is that very context which fixes the meaning of the question." Serafini, 167 F.3d at 821 (quoting United States v. Tonelli, 577 F.3d 194, 198 (3d Cir. 1978)). In the case of Serafini, the context made the confusing nature of the question apparent. The various topics in surrounding questions created sufficient ambiguity to undermine the conviction. Id.

Here, however, even though the terms used by the examiner changed, we conclude that the line of questioning—including both questions that ground Count 71 and 72—have an obvious, consistent focus.

Q. In all the years you've been [at Traffic Court] have you ever been asked to give favorable treatment on a case to anybody?

A. No, not favorable treatment. People basically know me. The lawyers know me. The court officers know me. I have been called a nonsense person because I'm just not that way. I take my position seriously and the cards fall where they may. Most of the time . . . the people in my Court plea bargain. They know that most of the time, ninety percent of the time, say 90 percent, I go with the police officer's recommendation. . . .

Q. So, in all those years no one has ever asked you to find somebody not guilty—

A. No.

Q. —or to find a lesser violation; find a lesser fine; anything along those lines?

App. 31

A. No. I will say to people go to court, go to trial and see what happens. . . .

Q. Ward leaders, politicians has anyone called you and said I have Johnny Jones coming up next week and I would appreciate it if—if you would look favorably on him when he comes through? Has anything like that ever happened?

A. Throughout the years ward leaders and people have called all the time and asked me questions. The only thing I will say to them is they need to go to court. If you think it's a problem, they need to hire a lawyer, or make sure you bring all your evidence to court. If it's something like inspection, make sure you bring your—papers and things like that. That's what I would tell them to do. I give advice that way. I don't know if that's wrong or not, but I do.

Q. You've never taken action on a request?

A. No.

App. 528-29, 530; 5720-22. This broader context would give any reasonable fact-finder more than enough basis to conclude that the witness knew the point of reference for both the term “favorable treatment” and “request” was ticket fixing. In fact, Tynes is asking us to do precisely the thing we criticized in Serafini, to lift a phrase or statement out of its context. Serafini, 167 F.3d at 821. Tynes has not persuaded us that the question harbors any fatal ambiguity.

Tynes next contends that her responses to questions grounding Count 71 and Count 72 cannot support convictions for perjury because they were literally true. Of course, perjury arises only from making knowingly false material declarations. 18 U.S.C. § 1623. Therefore, a witness who answers an ambiguous question with a non-responsive answer that the witness believes is true—even if the answer is misleading—does not commit perjury. See Bronston, 409 U.S. at 361-62; see also United States v. Reilly, 33 F.3d 1396, 1416 (3d Cir. 1994).

Tynes argues that, because she regarded the question about favorable treatment as vague, she interpreted it as asking whether she accepted any bribes in exchange for a judgment of not guilty or a reduced punishment. Her response of “no” (grounding Count 71) is literally true—she says—because there is no evidence that she accepted any bribes in return for giving preferential outcomes in the adjudication of some individuals who were cited for breaking the law. Under this theory, the same argument can also negate the charges at Count 72 since she says she did not accept any “requests” (bribes) in exchange for preferential treatment.

Although the jury is permitted reasonable inferences drawn from the record about the witness’ understanding of the truth or falsity of the answer, it is not (as we noted above) permitted to reach conclusions based merely on speculation or conjecture. See Bronston, 409 U.S. at 359. Tynes’ assertion of literal truth is undermined because the trial record supports no reasonable inference that the Government was asking her about matters outside of the alleged bribes, nor does it provide any reason why Tynes would interpret the question in this way.

Finally, Tynes contends that the evidence was not sufficient to support her conviction. However, the jury heard Tynes' personal assistant, Medaglia "Dolly" Warren, testify that she received from personal assistants of other judges three to four cards per week requesting consideration. Each card had the name of a person who was appearing before Tynes on that day. She passed these to Tynes' court officer, who was present during the proceedings. App. 4593-95. Tynes also instructed Warren to give similar cards to the staff of other judges. App. 4598. Warren knew to act discreetly when she was transferring the cards. App. 4599. The jury also heard testimony from those who actually received consideration from Tynes. For example, Timothy Blong was cited for reckless driving and driving without a license. He admitted in testimony that he did not have a license when he was cited. App. 3150. He also testified that he requested consideration through a Traffic Court employee (Danielle Czerniakowski, who worked as a personal assistant to a Traffic Court judge) with whom he was acquainted. When he appeared in court, he was simply told that his case was dismissed. He did not have to say anything, App. 3159-60. Blong testified he was told his case was dismissed because the police officer did not appear (App. 3160-61), but the government produced evidence that an officer was present. App. 3193-96. The Government also showed that Tynes was the presiding judge in Blong's case. App. 3193. Richard Carrigan—who admitted in testimony that he drove through a red light—described a similar experience in which, after requesting favorable treatment through Judge Lowry's personal assistant, Kevin O'Donnell, his case was dismissed by Judge Tynes without ever having to say a word. App. 3178-82.

Tynes does not challenge any of this in her appeal. Instead she focuses on the weight of other evidence and perceived gaps in testimony. We conclude that all of this provides more than a sufficient basis to support a reasonable jury's conclusion that Tynes did "give favorable treatment on a case," and did "take[ ] action on a request." App. 528-30.

For all of these reasons, we will affirm the judgment of conviction on perjury as to Appellant Tynes.

C.

Appellant Lowry<sup>27</sup>

Like Tynes, Appellant Lowry advances arguments of fundamental ambiguity and literal truth. His perjury conviction centered on one question and answer.

Q. So if I understand your testimony, you're saying you don't give out special favors; is that right?

A. No, I treat everybody in that courtroom the same.

App. 489. Lowry attacks the Government's use of the term "special favors" as one with many potential meanings. However, as we noted above in our reference to Serafini, we reject arguments that lift individual questions or answers—or individual phrases embedded in either—from the context of surrounding questions that help fix their meaning. Serafini, 167 F.3d at 821. The larger context for the question asked of Lowry is as follows.

Q. So if I understand your testimony, you're saying you don't give out special favors; is that right?

A. Well, I know it appears that way; and it's hard for me to prove to you . . .

Q. I'm just asking, your testimony is you don't give out special favors, is that right?

A. No, I treat everybody in that courtroom the same.

Q. You treat everybody fairly?

A. I'm a lenient judge. I will admit to that.

Q. You treat everybody fairly?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And these notices that you get from your personal or from other people, they don't affect you in any way; is that right?

A. Virtually no effect at all.

App. 489-90.

Lowry's assertion that the phrase "special favors" is subject to many interpretations is unconvincing. We note two things. First, the line of questioning reasonably supports a conclusion that this inquiry referenced conduct associated with allegations of ticket fixing. Second, Lowry answered as if his understanding of the question was consistent with this interpretation. He said that he was aware it may "appear" that he gave special favors. He also defended himself by saying that such requests did not affect his conduct in the courtroom at all. If—as he says—he understood "special favors" to mean fair treatment, his answer makes no sense.

Lowry next claims that, since the question was structured to elicit a negative response, his answer cannot be used as the basis of a perjury charge. Relatedly, he contends that the question was merely a summation of an answer that he gave just before this question. In essence he argues that this was a leading question. We have concluded, in the context of a trial, that the propriety of leading questions in direct examinations is a matter left to the sound discretion of the trial judge. See United States v. Montgomery, 126 F.2d 151, 153 (3d Cir. 1942). We extend the same deference here to the District Court's decision to admit this portion of the Grand Jury transcript. We do not regard the question as fundamentally unfair or unclear, or something outside the norm of questions typically employed on direct examination. For these reasons, we conclude that the District Court did not abuse its discretion here.

Alternatively, Lowry argues that—if the term is understood to reference fixing tickets—there is no evidence to contradict his response that requests for special favors did not impact any of his adjudications. We do not agree. The record contains the following testimony.

Kevin O'Donnell, who was Lowry's personal assistant, testified about Lowry's involvement with requesting and giving consideration. He said that Lowry made four to five requests each month for consideration and that O'Donnell transmitted them to the personal assistants of other Traffic Court judges. App. 1854. Likewise, he said other judges transmitted requests for consideration to Lowry through their personal assistants. App. 1812-13. Appellant Hird and various politicians also made requests of Lowry for consideration. App. 1827-28, 1832-33. O'Donnell said he would give the requests to Lowry on the day scheduled for hearing on the citation. App. 1818-19. The requests were for preferential treatment in the adjudication of particular citations: typically the requests were for "removing points" and obtaining a "not guilty" judgment. App. 1819. O'Donnell said he sometimes had to signal Lowry in the courtroom to remind him that a particular case was supposed to receive consideration. App. 1822-23. He testified from his own observation that Lowry typically honored requests for consideration. App. 1829. He also declared if Lowry claimed he never gave consideration or asked it of others, this would not be truthful. App. 1813. The same assistant testified that if Lowry testified that he ignored requests for consideration, or that he never honored requests for consideration, that testimony would not be true. App. 1855. The Government also asked: “If [Lowry] claimed that . . . consideration requests had no impact when he disposed of cases, would that be true?” The assistant responded, “probably not.” Id.

Another witness, Walt Smaczylo, employed as a court officer in the Traffic Court, provided an example of how “consideration” worked in the courtroom.

When someone comes in, for example, for a reckless driving ticket and that judge normally comes down pretty hard and finds that defendant guilty and then the same type cases come in and you see a defendant walk out either not guilty or a significantly reduced charge.

App. 1912. The Government asked Smaczylo if he saw Lowry preside over such instances, and he answered: “That’s correct, yes.” Id. Smaczylo testified that requests for consideration were written on small note cards or “sticky” notes and that he saw Lowry in possession of these cards and notes. App. 1914. He also provided a generalized example of consideration, based on his observation and understanding, in which a reckless driving citation would be reduced to careless driving. In such instances, he indicated that a $300 to $400 fine would be cut in half. He said: “So, that money was not collected, obviously, by the state. If that ticket was fixed then I saw it as stealing.” App. 1919. Smaczylo was asked: “[I]f Judge Lowry testified at the [G]rand [J]ury he didn’t give consideration would that be a truth or would that be a lie?” He responded: “That would not be the truth.” App. 1921.

All of this testimony provides more than a sufficient basis to support a reasonable jury’s conclusion that Lowry was not truthful when he responded to the Government’s question about special favors.<sup>28</sup>

Finally, Lowry argues that the Government’s question sought a dispositive response from him on the charges of conspiracy and fraud. He says an affirmative answer to whether he gave “special favors” to certain individuals would have been enough to convict him of conspiracy and fraud. Thus, he maintains that his acquittal on charges of mail fraud, wire fraud, and conspiracy is res judicata as to the perjury charges that are based on his answer. He said he did not commit fraud and the jury agreed with him. Therefore, he says, he did not perjure himself. However, even if we accepted Lowry’s characterization of the question, we reject this argument.

First, a jury’s determination that Lowry’s ticket-fixing conduct did not constitute wire fraud, mail fraud, <sup>28</sup> Lowry points to the cross-examination of both witnesses in which they seem to equivocate on some of their observations and responses to the Government. For instance O’Donnell stated his view that giving consideration was no different from the leniency that Lowry extended to every other person who pleaded not guilty and appeared at the hearing. However, we do not weigh the credibility of evidence in the record. We only judge whether there is sufficient evidence in the record to support a reasonable factfinder’s determination that the record supported conviction of Lowry on a charge of perjury. See United States v. Richardson, 658 F.3d 333, 337 (3d Cir. 2011).

and conspiracy does not preclude its determination that he lied about this conduct before the Grand Jury. Moreover, as the Supreme Court has articulated, a verdict on one count that seems to be at odds with another “shows that either in the acquittal or the conviction the jury did not speak their real conclusions, but that does not show that they were not convinced of the defendant’s guilt.” United States v. Powell, 469 U.S. 57, 63 (1984) (quoting Dunn v. United States, 284 U.S. 390, 393 (1932)). It is impossible to know in such cases whether the verdicts were an exercise of lenity by the jury or outright error.

Nonetheless, as the Powell Court noted, any assessment of the jury’s rationale for its verdicts “would be based either on pure speculation or would require inquiries into the jury’s deliberations that courts generally will not undertake.” Id. at 58. So, even if Lowry was correct that the acquittal is relevant to his response to the question grounding his perjury conviction, we are not convinced that his perjury conviction is unfounded. Given the substantial body of evidence presented to the jury, nothing here demands that we abandon the deference we traditionally give to the collective judgment of the jury. For all these reasons, we will affirm the jury’s verdict as to Lowry.

D.

Appellant Mulgrew<sup>29</sup>

Mulgrew does not argue that the question asked at the Grand Jury was ambiguous, he simply maintains that his statement was truthful.<sup>30</sup> The questions and answers grounding his perjury conviction are as follows.

Q. How about your personal, has your personal received any calls like that from other judges, other ward leaders that she's conveyed to you, saying so-and-so has called about this case?

A. If she did, she didn't convey them to me.

App. 432-33 (emphasis added). Shortly after this, the following exchange occurred:

Q. Let me make sure as well that if I got your testimony correct [sic]. You're saying that if other people, whether they be political leaders, friends and family, anybody is approaching your personal and asking her specifically to look out for a case, see what she can do in a case, give preferential treatment, however you want to phrase it, that she is not relaying any of that information on to you; is that correct?

<sup>30</sup> Mulgrew's claims are reviewed for plain error because he did not make the same argument before the District Court. United States v. Syme, 276 F.3d 131, 148 (3d Cir. 2002).

A. No, she isn't.

App. 438. As to the first exchange, Mulgrew claims that the Government's use of the word "call" referred exclusively to telephone calls. This mattered to him, he says, because others had testified that personal assistants of other Traffic Court judges would give index cards to his personal assistant in his chambers or robing room containing names of some individuals whose tickets were listed for hearing. Mulgrew claims that there is no evidence that he ever received any phone calls asking that he act extrajudicially to give well-connected individuals preferential treatment. The implication is that, had the Government asked him about receiving index cards with such requests, his answer would have been completely different.

As with Tynes and Lowry, our review of claims of literal truth drives us to examine the context of the question.

Q. How about other judges, have other judges ever approached you or called to you or get a message to you either themselves or through their personals saying that someone is going to be on your list next week or next Monday and can you could some special way towards the case?

A. No, they haven't.

Q. Never?

A. No.

Q. How about your personal, has your personal received any calls like that from other judges, other ward leaders that she's conveyed to you saying so and so has called about this case?

A. If she did, she didn't convey them to me.

Q. And your personal is who?

A. Gloria McNasby.

Q. Have you ever seen on traffic court files— You actually get a file when someone's case is called?

A. Right.

Q. So the case is called and you get a file presented to you; is that right?

A. uh-huh.

Q. Have you ever seen any index cards or notations on the file indicating that a person has called or taken some special interest in this case?

A. Nope.

App. 432-33 (emphasis added). The transcript makes it obvious that Mulgrew's singular reliance on the reference to a "call" ignores the thrust of the Government's line of questions. The questions focus on the substance of the communications between Mulgrew's personal assistant and himself, rather than the mode of those communications.

Mulgrew also claims that he responded truthfully to the second question.

Q. Let me make sure as well that if I got your testimony correct [sic]. You're saying that if other people whether they be political leaders, friends and family, anybody is approaching your personal and asking her specifically to look out for a case, see what she can do in a case, give preferential treatment, however you want to phrase it, that she is not relaying any of that information on to you; is that correct?

A. No, she isn't.

Q. Wouldn't you want to know it?

A. No, I don't want to know. Then I never have to worry about what I do in the courtroom.

App. 437-38 (emphasis added). Apparently focusing on the words "see what she can do," he says that he answered truthfully by responding that his personal assistant did not tell him that people were approaching her and asking her to give them preferential treatment. But, as with the first question, Mulgrew cherry-picks a small part of the question out of context, distorting it. The full text and follow up question show that the thrust of the inquiry was whether Mulgrew's personal assistant was informing him of the names of those requesting preferential treatment from him. And Mulgrew's response to the follow-up question—saying that he did not want to know so that he did not have to worry about what he did in the courtroom—is consistent with one who understood this. App. 438.

We conclude that, ultimately, the evidence is sufficient for a reasonable jury to conclude Mulgrew understood that both of these questions were focused on whether his personal assistant informed him of requests for him to give preferential treatment, and that he answered in the negative to both.

Mulgrew alternatively asserts that the District Court erred by refusing to admit additional testimony from the Grand Jury that he claims is relevant to his perjury conviction.<sup>31</sup> After the Government introduced Mulgrew’s Grand Jury testimony, Mulgrew sought the admission of other portions of his testimony. But the District Court sustained the Government’s hearsay objection. The portion of the transcript supporting the perjury conviction is as follows:

Q. [W]hether you have ever been asked to provide, what I’ll call, favorable treatment for people in traffic court or however you define that, whether it would be special handling, keep an eye out for a ticket, do me a favor. Have you ever been asked to provide any type of treatment like that for people in traffic court?

A. People have asked me for consideration, but I give consideration to everybody that comes in my courtroom[,] so it doesn't make a difference to me.

App. 422-23. The basis for the Government's hearsay objection to this portion of the testimony was that it raised an out-of-court statement not offered by a party opponent.

Mulgrew first contends that the District Court erred by ruling that this was hearsay because it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. He says that the testimony was instead offered to show his state of mind later in his testimony. See United States v. Hoffecker, 530 F.3d 137, 191-92 (3d Cir. 2008). However, we conclude that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to sustain the Government's hearsay objection. It was reasonable for the District Court to conclude here that his response relied on out-of-court statements offered to assert his innocence since his response conveys a declaration that he treated no person different from another.

Mulgrew also argues that this portion of the transcript is admissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 106: "[i]f a party introduces all or part of a writing or recorded statement, an adverse party may require the introduction, at that time, of any other part—or any other writing or recorded statement—that in fairness ought to be considered at the same time." Mulgrew maintains that this question and answer provides context showing that he did not commit perjury. He also maintains that the "doctrine of completeness" applies here: fairness demanded the admission of the statements. See United States v. Soures, 736 F.2d 87, 91 (3d Cir. 1984).<sup>32</sup> We are not convinced.

The excerpt at issue occurs many pages before the testimony regarded as perjurious. It is unrelated in the overall sequence of questions and to the answers grounding his conviction. Moreover, as the intervening pages suggest, it was separated by the passage of time during questioning. We also fail to see how Mulgrew's equivocation over the term "consideration" gives helpful context to his later denial of receiving requests for consideration. For these reasons, we conclude the District Court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the Government's hearsay objection.

<sup>32</sup> "Under this doctrine of completeness, a second writing may be required to be read if it is necessary to (1) explain the admitted portion, (2) place the admitted portion in context, (3) avoid misleading the trier of fact, or (4) insure a fair and impartial understanding." Soures, 736 F.2d at 91.

Appellant Singletary<sup>33</sup>

During the investigation of the Traffic Court by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Appellant Singletary was among those interviewed. The jury acquitted Singletary of all counts of wire fraud, mail fraud, and conspiracy. It found him guilty of false statements made to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. At sentencing, over Singletary's objection, the District Court sentenced Singletary using the Guideline on obstruction.

The Government agrees that the single count on which he was convicted does not contain all of the elements of obstruction. U.S.S.G. § 2J1.2. For this reason, the Government agrees with Singletary that he is entitled to a remand for resentencing. Accordingly, we will vacate the judgment of sentence as to Singletary and remand to the District Court for resentencing.

<sup>33</sup> Appellant Singletary was charged with making false statements in Counts 73 and 74 of the indictment. He states in his brief that he 'joins all arguments on behalf of co-appellants pursuant to Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure 28(i).' Singletary Br. 19. To the extent that he joins the argument of prejudice resulting from the trial on the fraud and conspiracy charges, we already have determined that the indictment was proper and no prejudice resulted from bringing these charges to trial. As for the challenges to perjury in Counts 72 and 74, we note that Singletary was charged with a different crime: false statements in a federal investigation pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1001. In addition, the challenges to all of such charges are inherently fact-intensive. As he did not provide a factual basis for such a challenge, we regard the issue to be waived.

V.

For all of these reasons, we will vacate the judgment of sentence of the District Court with regard to Appellant Singletary and remand for resentencing. We will affirm the judgments of the District Court as to Appellants Alfano, Hird, Lowry, Mulgrew and Tynes.

MEMORANDUM

ROBERT F. KELLY, Sr. J.

JULY 1, 2013

Presently before the Court is Defendant, Michael J. Sullivan's ("Sullivan") Motion to Dismiss, which has been joined in by several of the Defendants, the Response in Opposition filed by the United States of America ("Government"), the Replies filed thereto, and the oral arguments presented during a hearing conducted on June 24, 2013. For the reasons set forth below, we deny the Motion to Dismiss.

I. INTRODUCTION

This case involves criminal charges resulting from the federal investigation into an alleged widespread ticket-fixing scheme by nine current or former Philadelphia Traffic Court (“Traffic Court”) judges. See Indictment. According to the Indictment, the Traffic Court was used by the alleged conspirators to give preferential treatment to certain ticketholders, most commonly by “fixing” tickets for those with whom they were politically and socially connected. Id. ¶ 1. The Indictment charges that Defendants:

achiev[ed] favorable outcomes on traffic citations for politically connected individuals, friends, family members, associates, and others with influential positions. This manipulation, or “ticket-fixing,” consisted of: (1) dismissing tickets outright; (2) finding the ticketholder not guilty after a ‘show’ hearing; (3) adjudicating the ticket in a manner to reduce fines and avoid the assignment of points to a driver’s record; and (4) obtaining continuances of trial dates to ‘judge-shop,’ this is to find a Traffic Court judge who would accede to a request for preferential treatment.

Id. ¶ 30. According to the Indictment, “Mil acceding to requests for ‘consideration,’ Defendants were depriving the City of Philadelphia and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania of money which would have been properly due as fines and costs.” Id. ¶ 38.

The Indictment charges each of the defendants with one count of conspiracy to commit wire and mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1349.<sup>1</sup> See id. Additionally, all of the Defendants are charged with multiple counts of wire fraud, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1343,<sup>2</sup> and mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341.<sup>3</sup> In addition, Defendants Michael Lowry (“Lowry”), Robert Mulgrew (“Mulgrew”), and Thomasine Tynes (“Tynes”) have been charged with perjury under 18 U.S.C. § 1623. Id. at p. 67-73. Defendants, Willie Singletary (“Singletary”) and William Hird have also been charged with making a False Statement to the FBI under 18 U.S.C. § 1001. Id. at p. 74-79. Former Traffic Court Judges Fortunato Perri, Sr. (“Perri”), H. Warren Hogeland (“Hogeland”), and Kenneth N. Miller (“Miller”) have pled guilty.

II. BACKGROUND

Sullivan’s Motion to Dismiss has been joined in by Defendants Mulgrew, Lowry, Alfano, Moy, Singletary, Bruno, and Hird. (See Doc. Nos. 73, 76, 77, 78, 85, 88, 91.) Defendant Mark A. Bruno (“Bruno”) has filed his own Motion to Dismiss, which includes, in part, the same argument set forth by Sullivan.<sup>4</sup> (See Doc. No.

18 U.S.C.A. § 1341.

<sup>4</sup> The Court notes that Bruno’s Motion to Dismiss will be addressed in accordance with the Scheduling Order dated March 28, 2013.

85.) Tynes has filed a First Motion to Dismiss Counts which is based upon a separate and distinct issue. (See Doc. No. 87.) We will consider other arguments for dismissal at a later time.

As previously stated, the Indictment charges each of the Defendants with conspiracy to commit wire and mail fraud under 18 U.S.C. § 1349, wire fraud under 18 U.S.C. § 1343, and mail fraud under 18 U.S.C. § 1341.<sup>5</sup> Defendants move to dismiss the Indictment based upon the argument that the money the Government alleges was lost in fees and costs is not “a property interest because the conduct charged is too inchoate; until a traffic violator has been adjudicated guilty, no fine or cost can be imposed and neither the City of Philadelphia nor the Commonwealth can claim any legal entitlement to any fines or costs arising from the violations.” (Sullivan’s Mot. to Dismiss at 1-22.) According to Defendant, “[s]imply put, through the Indictment the Government seeks to criminalize alleged violations of state judicial conduct rules; such an improper expansion of federal power should not be allowed.” (Id. at 2.)

<sup>5</sup> The same legal analysis applies to both the mail and wire fraud statutes because they share the same relevant language. See Carpenter v. United States, 484 U.S. 19, 25 n.6 (1987) (noting that “[t]he mail and wire fraud statutes share the same language in relevant part, and accordingly we apply the same analysis to both sets of offenses here”).

III. LEGAL STANDARD

“Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 7(c)(1) requires only that an indictment be a plain, concise, and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged.” United States v. Huet, 665 F.3d 588, 594 (3d Cir. 2012). “It is well-established that ‘[a]n indictment returned by a legally constituted and unbiased grand jury, . . . if valid on its face, is enough to call for trial of the charge on the merits.’” Id. at 594-95 (quoting United States v. Vitillo, 490 F.3d 314, 320 (3d Cir. 2007)). The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit (“Third Circuit”) has previously held that “an indictment is facially sufficient if it ‘(1) contains the elements of the offense intended to be charged, (2) sufficiently apprises the defendant of what he must be prepared to meet, and (3) allows the defendant to show with accuracy to what extent he may plead a former acquittal or conviction in the event of a subsequent prosecution.’” Id. at 595 (quoting Vitillo, 490 F.3d at 321). “[N]o greater specificity than the statutory language is required so long as there is sufficient factual orientation to permit a defendant to prepare his defense and invoke double jeopardy.” Id. (citing United States v. Kemp, 500 F.3d 257, 280 (3d Cir. 2007)). “In contrast, if an indictment fails to charge an essential element of the crime, it fails to state an offense.” Id. (citing United States v. Wander, 601 F.2d 1251, 1259 (3d Cir. 1979)).

“Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 12(b)(3)(B) allows a district court to review the sufficiency of the government’s pleadings to . . . ensur[e] that legally deficient charges do not go to a jury.’” Id. (quoting United States v. Bergrin, 650 F.3d 257, 268 (3d Cir. 2011)). “[T]he scope of a district court’s review at the Rule 12 stage is limited.” Id. “[A] pretrial motion to dismiss an indictment is not a permissible vehicle for addressing the sufficiency of the government’s evidence.’” Id. (quoting United States v. DeLaurentis, 230 F.3d 659, 660 (3d Cir. 2000)). In evaluating a Rule 12 motion to dismiss, the factual allegations set forth in the indictment must be accepted as true by the district court. Id. (citing United States v. Sampson, 371 U.S. 75, 78-79 (1962); United States v. Besmajian, 910 F.2d 1153, 1154 (3d Cir. 1990)). “‘Evidentiary questions – such as credibility determinations and the weighing of proof – should not be determined at this stage.’” Id. (quoting Bergrin, 650 F.3d at 265 (internal marks and citation omitted)). “Thus, a district court’s review of the facts set forth in the indictment is limited to determining whether, assuming all of those facts as true, a jury could find that the defendant committed the offense for which he was charged.” Id. at 595-96 (citations omitted).

IV. DISCUSSION

The mail and wire fraud statutes both require the existence of a “scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or a property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses.” See 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343. In this case, the question presented is whether the Indictment adequately alleges that Defendants engaged in a scheme to defraud the Commonwealth and the City of money in costs and fees.<sup>6</sup> Upon consideration of all of the arguments, and the extensive caselaw concerning this issue, we conclude that it does.

A. Supreme Court Cases

In order to come to this conclusion, a summary of the following four main Supreme Court cases interpreting the phrase “money or property interest” in the mail and wire fraud statutes is instructive: McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350 (1987), superseded by statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1346; Carpenter v. United States, 484 U.S. 19 (1987); Cleveland v. United States, 531 U.S. 12 (2000); and Pasquantino v. United States, 544 U.S. 349 (2005).

1. McNally v. United States

McNally involved a former public official of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and a private individual, who were involved in a self-dealing patronage scheme involving commissions and premiums paid on awarding insurance coverage for the State. 483 U.S. at 353-355. The defendants were charged with, and convicted of, violating Section 1341 by devising a scheme to defraud the citizens and government of Kentucky of their

<sup>6</sup> Originally, the Government argued that the ticket-pricing scheme deprived the Commonwealth of property in the form of its ability to regulate safe drivers on the roadways through licensing suspensions and revocations. See Indictment. The Government abandoned this theory in its Response to Sullivan’s Motion to Dismiss. (Govt.’s Response to Defs.’ Mot. to Dismiss at 18 n.12.)

“intangible right” to have the Commonwealth’s affairs conducted honestly. Id. at 352.

Notably, the McNally Court pointed out that “as the action comes to us, there was no charge and the jury was not required to find that the Commonwealth itself was defrauded of any money or property.” McNally, 483 U.S. at 360. Thus, the Supreme Court was asked to determine whether the deprivation of “honest services” fell within the scope of the mail fraud statute. The Supreme Court decided that Section 1341 must be read “as limited in scope to the protection of property rights.”<sup>7</sup> Id. at 360. Importantly, the McNally Court held that the mail fraud statute did not reach “the intangible right of the citizenry to good government.” Id. at 356. As such, the Court held that a scheme to deprive the Commonwealth of Kentucky of “honest services” was not within the scope of Section 1341 and, therefore, reversed the defendants’ convictions. Id. at 361.

<sup>7</sup> In response to the McNally decision, Congress enacted 18 U.S.C. § 1346, which defines “a scheme or artifice to defraud” to include not only a scheme that deprives the victim of money or property, but also “a scheme or artifice to deprive another of the intangible right to honest services.” See 18 U.S.C. 1346. In Skilling v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 2896, 2931 (2010), the Court held that such “honest services” fraud encompasses only bribery and kickback schemes. A violation of Section 1346 is not alleged in the Indictment.

2. Carpenter v. United States

In the same year as its McNally decision, the Supreme Court decided Carpenter v. United States. 484 U.S. 19. The Carpenter Court applied Section 1341 to intangible property rights. Id. at 25. In Carpenter, the defendant was alleged to have violated Section 1341 by defrauding the Wall Street Journal (the “Journal”) of “confidential business information.” Id. at 24. One Defendant was a reporter for the Journal and wrote a regular column discussing selected stocks and giving positive and negative information about those stocks. The Journal had a policy setting forth that before the publication of each column, the contents of the column were the Journal’s confidential information. Id. at 23. Against this policy, the defendant entered into a scheme by which he gave employees of a brokerage firm advance information as to the timing and contents of the column. Then, those brokers traded on the pre-publication information.

The reporter and the brokers were charged with violations of securities laws and the mail and wire fraud statutes. The specific issue addressed by the Supreme Court was whether the contents of the Journal column, which were fraudulently misappropriated by the reporter, constituted “money or property” under the mail and wire fraud statutes in light of McNally. Distinguishing the case from McNally, the Court held that as defendant’s employer, the Journal, “was defrauded of much more than its contractual right to [defendant’s] honest and faithful service, an interest too ethereal in itself to fall within the protection of the mail fraud statute, which ‘had its origin in the desire to protect individual property rights.’” Id. at 25 (citing McNally, 483 U.S. at 359 n.8). The Court focused on the fact that the object of the scheme was to take the Journal’s confidential business information, and determined that its intangible nature does not make it any less “property” protected by the mail and wire fraud statutes. Id. The Court stated that “McNally did not limit the scope of § 1341 to tangible as distinguished from intangible property rights.” Id. at 25. Reasoning that “confidential business information has long been recognized as property,” the Court concluded that the Journal “had a property right in keeping confidential and making exclusive use, prior to publication, of the schedule and contents of [its] column.” Id. at 26 (citations omitted).

In coming to its conclusion, the Court rejected the argument that a scheme to defraud required a monetary loss; instead, holding that “it is sufficient that the Journal has been deprived of its right to exclusive use of the information, for exclusivity is an important aspect of confidential business information and most private property for that matter.” Id. at 26-27. The Court also rejected the argument that defendant’s conduct amounted to no more than a violation of workplace rules and did not constitute fraudulent activity. Relying upon its prior opinion in McNally, the Court concluded that “the words ‘to defraud’ in the mail fraud statute have the ‘common understanding’ of ‘wronging one in his property rights by dishonest methods or schemes.’” Id. at 27.

3. Cleveland v. United States

In 2000, the Supreme Court decided Cleveland, which involved a defendant who was charged and convicted of violating the mail fraud statute by making false statements in applying to the Louisiana State Police for a license to operate video poker machines. 531 U.S. at 15. The Supreme Court specifically addressed the issue of whether the pre-issued Louisiana video poker license qualified as “property” within the scope of § 1341. Id. In deciding this issue, the Court held that “[i]t does not suffice . . . that the object of the fraud may become property in the recipient’s hands; for purposes of the mail fraud statute, the thing obtained must be property in the hands of the victim.” Id. at 15. Accordingly, the Supreme Court went on to consider “whether a government regulator parts with ‘property’ when it issues a license.” Id. at 20.

In analyzing this issue, the Court first noted that the “core concern” for Louisiana in issuing licenses was regulatory, and, as such, Louisiana law established a typical regulatory program for issuing video poker licenses. Id. at 20-21. Also, the Court noted that the pre-issued licenses sought “do not generate an ongoing stream of revenue” and “the Government nowhere alleges that Cleveland defrauded the State of any money to which the State was entitled by law.” Id. at 22. Regarding the government’s argument that the state had a right to choose to whom it would award a license, the Court responded that this was not a property right, but an intangible right; namely, the power to regulate. Id. at 23. Concluding that the video poker license at issue was not property in the hands of the State of Louisiana, the Court reversed defendant's conviction because the conduct did not fall within the scope of the mail fraud statute.

4. Pasquantino v. United States

In Pasquantino, defendants were convicted of wire fraud in connection with a scheme to evade Canadian liquor importation taxes by smuggling liquor from the United States into Canada. 544 U.S. at 355. The Supreme Court held that "an entitlement to collect money from [a party]" is money or property under the mail and wire fraud statutes. Id. The Court found that the defendants were attempting to "deprive Canada of money legally due," and that "Canada's right to uncollected excise taxes . . . is 'property' in its hands." Id. at 355-56.

B. Analysis of Case

Against this background, accepting as true the Government's factual allegations in the Indictment, we find that the Indictment tracks the express language of the statutes and unambiguously states the elements that constitute the offenses charged. Specifically, we find that the Indictment charges Defendants with committing acts which caused a monetary or property loss to the Commonwealth and the City. Therefore, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is denied.

Although Defendants argue that the alleged fraud by Defendants did not deprive the Commonwealth or the City of “money or property,” the Indictment specifically alleges that the ticket-fixing scheme defrauded the Commonwealth and the City of funds to which they were entitled. Regarding the “money or property” requirement of the mail and wire fraud statutes, the Indictment alleges, in relevant part, as follows:

1. The conspirators used the Philadelphia Traffic Court (“Traffic Court”) to give preferential treatment to certain ticketholders, most commonly by “fixing” tickets for those with whom they were politically and socially connected. By doing so, the conspirators defrauded the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia of funds to which the Commonwealth and the City were entitled.

5. The Traffic Court judges presided over and adjudicated moving violations, commonly referred to as traffic tickets or citations, occurring within Philadelphia, issued by the Philadelphia Police Department and the Pennsylvania State Police, and other police entities. Traffic Court was responsible for the collection of fines and court costs resulting from guilty pleas and findings of guilt for violations of the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Code.

6. On a daily basis, ticketholders appeared before the Traffic Court judges for their trials.

It was not uncommon for a Traffic Court judge to preside over dozens of trials in one session. The trials involved an appearance by the ticketholder contesting his or her guilt and either an officer from the Philadelphia Police Department, a State Trooper, or another law enforcement officer, who prosecuted the ticket.

7. Traffic Court judges had several options when disposing of citations, including finding the ticketholder guilty of a different offense, guilty, not guilty, not guilty in absentia, guilty in absentia, guilty with a reduction in speed, and dismissal. In addition, the ticketholder could engage in a plea bargain with the police officer or state trooper or other law enforcement officer.

8. Guilty adjudications subjected a violator to statutorily determined fines and costs of court.<sup>8</sup>

9. The moneys received from the fine portion of a guilty adjudication were equally divided between the City and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

<sup>8</sup> According to the Government, “the amount of the fine and the costs are statutorily mandated, and not within the discretion of the court.” (Govt.’s Response Defs.’ Mot. to Dismiss at 14.) The Government states “[i]n the instant case, there is no discretion as to the imposition of fines and costs once a finding of guilt is made.” (Id.)

10. Upon an adjudication of not guilty or dismissal, the ticketholder did not pay any fines or costs.

27. From in or about July 2008 to in or about September 2011 . . . Defendants . . . conspired and agreed . . . to commit offenses against the Unites State, that is

(a) to devise and intend to devise a scheme to defraud, and to obtain money and property by means of false and fraudulent pretenses, representations, and promises, and, for the purpose of executing the scheme and artifice and attempting to do so, place in a post office or authorized depository for mail matter, matter to be sent or delivered by the Postal Service.

(b) to devise and intend to devise a scheme to defraud, and to obtain money and property by means of false and fraudulent pretenses, representations, and promises, and, for the purpose of executing the scheme and artifice, transmit or cause to be transmitted by means of wire communication in interstate commerce, writings, signs, signals, and sounds.

30. In order to provide the requested preferential treatment, Defendants . . . used their positions at Traffic Court to manipulate Traffic Court cases outside of the judicial process, thereby achieving favorable outcomes for politically connected individuals, friends, family members, associates, and others with influential positions. This manipulation, or “ticket-fixing,” consisted of (1) dismissing tickets outright; (2) finding the ticketholder not guilty after a ‘show’ hearing; (3) adjudicating the ticket in a manner to reduce fines and avoid the assignment of points to a driver’s record; and (4) obtaining continuances of trial dates to ‘judge-shop,’ this is to find a Traffic Court judge who would accede to a request for preferential treatment.

34. When Traffic Court engaged in “ticket-fixing,” they nevertheless reported the final adjudication to the various authorities . . . as if there had been a fair and open review of the circumstances.

* * * * *

38. In acceding to requests for “consideration,” defendants were depriving the City of Philadelphia and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania of money which would have been properly due as fines and costs.

See Indictment.

Additionally, the Overt Acts section of the Indictment specifically names particular citations that were issued and adjudicated, according to the Government, extra-judicially in furtherance of the traffic-fixing conspiracy. Id. at p. 20-57. The Government includes the specific monetary amounts of the statutory fees and costs associated with the moving violations cited in the tickets, and the adjudications resulting in no fees or costs being assessed. Id. Taking the Government's factual allegations as true, we find that the Defendants' alleged conspiracy involved defrauding the Commonwealth and the City of money. See United States v. Granberry, 908 F.2d 278, 280 (8th Cir. 1990) ("Money is money, and 'money' is specifically mentioned in the statutory words [of Section 1341.]")

In his Reply Brief, Sullivan agrees that the right to statutorily required fees and costs is a property interest, but argues that this is not so in this case because the right to fines here is triggered only by a guilty adjudication. (Sullivan's Reply at 4.) Sullivan further asserts that "anything short of guilt results in no right to collect any fine or cost from the traffic defendant." (Id.) Sullivan argues that "until an assessment has been imposed any property interest is too attenuated to be the basis of a mail or wire fraud violation." (Id. at 5.) Sullivan's argument, however, fails under the specific facts of this case because the Indictment charges Defendants with the object of the alleged fraud as being the prevention of guilty adjudications; thereby, resulting in statutorily required fees and costs not being assessed or paid to the Commonwealth and the City. It is the fact that the specific tickets at issue did not result in guilty adjudications with fees and costs which is at the heart of the entire "ticket-fixing" scheme alleged in the Indictment. The crux of the Government's conspiracy claim is Defendants' unique ability to prevent guilty adjudications that allows them to give preferential treatment to certain ticketholders for those with whom they were politically and socially connected. In this case, Defendants are in the unique position of being Traffic Court judges who have the power and, according to the Indictment, used such power to not permit the adjudication of specific traffic citations as guilty with fees and costs. Finding in favor of Defendants' argument that the Commonwealth and the City have not suffered economic harm because the right to fees and costs here is only triggered by a guilty adjudication, an assessment or deficiency being imposed, is circular in the context of this case. To accept Defendants' argument would permit the alleged conspirators in this case to enter into a scheme to commit fraud and then hide behind the argument that the success of their fraud precludes prosecution under the "money or property interest" requirement of the mail and wire fraud statutes.

Additionally, we point out that the Indictment alleges that Defendants conspired and schemed to prevent the payment of actual fines, not merely potential fines. (Govt.'s Response Mot. to Dismiss at 8.) Defendants argue that, "[a]t most, the City and Commonwealth have a potential entitlement to collect a fine that might be assessed at a future point, but such a speculative property interest by definition is not 'property in the [government's] hands.'" (Sullivan's Mot. to Dismiss at 2.) Regarding the Indictment before us, Defendants' argument misses the mark because the Indictment does not address traffic citations awaiting adjudication, but addresses traffic citations that have been adjudicated. Adjudicated, argues the Government, pursuant to a conspiratorial scheme designed to prevent guilty rulings resulting in the payment of fines.

Defendants' argument implies that the Government has to prove that the Commonwealth and the City were actually deprived of money or property. This is not required. The relevant inquiry concerns what Defendants intended – not whether the Commonwealth and the City were actually deprived of money or property. See United States v. Tulio, 263 F. App'x. 258, 261 (3d Cir. 2008).

The Government asserts that “in this case, the Government has alleged and will prove . . . a scheme to prevent the entry of guilty verdicts which the Defendants believed would otherwise occur, and therefore an intent and scheme to deprive the City and Commonwealth of actual funds.” (Govt.'s Response Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss at 18.) The Government submits that the overwhelming evidence of ticket-fixing referenced in the Indictment, and which will be presented at trial, will prove that Defendants took part in a scheme to deprive the City and the Commonwealth of money which would have been properly due as fines and costs. Id. at 11. In light of the allegations in the Indictment, it is conceivable that the Government will be able to produce evidence that Defendants violated the mail and wire fraud statutes by devising a scheme to obtain money. Whether the Government will successfully prove its case is not at issue here. However, at this time, a review of the Indictment shows that the Government sufficiently alleged that Defendants intended to deprive the Commonwealth and the City of money or property.

There is some discussion by Defendants that the statutory fees and costs owed pursuant to a guilty adjudication are regulatory, as opposed to revenue-enhancing. In Cleveland, the Supreme Court balanced the regulatory against the revenue-collecting aspects of the video poker licensing scheme describing the State's "core concern" in pre-issued video poker licenses is "regulatory" despite the fact that the State argued that it "receives a substantial sum of money in exchange for each license and continues to receive payments from the licensee as long as the license remains in effect." 531 U.S. at 20-22. The Cleveland Court focused on the fact that licenses pre-issuance do not generate an on-going stream of revenue for Louisiana. Id. at 22. In so finding, the Court stated that:

Tellingly, as to the character of Louisiana's stake in its video poker licenses, the Government nowhere alleges that Cleveland defrauded the State of any money to which the State was entitled by law. Indeed, there is no dispute that [defendant's family limited liability partnership] paid the State of Louisiana its proper share of revenue, which totaled more than $1.2 million, between 1993 and 1995. If Cleveland defrauded the State of 'property,' the nature of that property cannot be economic.

Id. The Court found that Louisiana's interests in licensing video poker operations implicates the Government's role as sovereign, not as property holder. Id. at 24.

The Court concluded that "§ 1341 requires the object of the fraud to be 'property' in the victim's hands and that a Louisiana video poker license in the State's hands is not 'property' under § 1341." Id. at 26-27. The Government's argument that Louisiana had a property interest in its licenses simply due to the significant amounts of money it receives in exchange for each license, as well as from the licensee as long as the license remains in effect, was rejected by the Court. Id. Acknowledging that Louisiana had a substantial economic stake in the video poker industry, and that Louisiana does not run any video poker machinery, the Court noted that "[t]he State receives the lion's share of its expected revenue not while the licenses remain in its own hands, but only after they have been issued to licensees." Id. at 22. The Court pointed out that "[l]icenses pre-issuance do not generate an ongoing stream of revenue." Id. "At most, they entitle the State to collect a processing fee from applicants for new licenses." Id. The Court stated that "[w]ere an entitlement of this order sufficient to establish a state property right, one could scarcely avoid the conclusion that States have property rights in any license or permit requiring an upfront fee, including drivers' licenses, medical licenses, and fishing and hunting licenses." Id.

We note that monetary loss was not involved at all in the offense underlying the conviction in Cleveland. Significantly, monetary loss is alleged, and involved, in this case. The interest of the Commonwealth and the City in statutorily required fees and costs concerning traffic citations in this case implicates their role as property holders, not sovereigns. The fact that the Commonwealth and the City were prevented from receiving those fees and costs due to the alleged conspiracy does not result in a finding that they, therefore, were not property in the hands of the Commonwealth and the City.

Our finding that the Indictment advances theories of mail and wire fraud liability comport with the Supreme Court's decisions in McNally, Carpenter, Cleveland and Pasquantino. The Indictment alleges that the object of Defendants' fraud was money or a property right, not simply an intangible right unrelated to money or property. See McNally, 483 U.S. at 2879 ("The mail fraud statute clearly protects property rights, but does not refer to the intangible right of the citizenry to good government."); Carpenter, 484 U.S. at 26 ("Sections 1341 and 1343 reach any scheme to deprive another of money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises."); Cleveland, 531 U.S. at 26 ("§ 1341 requires the object of the fraud to be 'property' in the victim's hands."); Pasquantino, 544 U.S. at 355 ("The object of petitioner's scheme was to deprive Canada of money legally due, and their scheme thereby had as its object the deprivation of Canada's 'property.'")

Other than the Carpenter decision, which is distinguishable from our case because it addresses intangible property rights, McNally, Cleveland and Pasquantino all addressed whether or not the indictments at issue charged that the Government was defrauded of any money or property. See McNally, 483 U.S. at 360 (“We note that as the actions comes to us, there was no charge and the jury was not required to find that the Commonwealth itself was defrauded of any money or property.”); Cleveland, 531 U.S. at 2 (“[T]he Government nowhere alleges that Cleveland defrauded the State of any money.”); Pasquantino, 544 U.S. at 357 (differentiating Cleveland stating “[h]ere, by contrast, the Government alleged and proved that petitioners’ scheme aimed at depriving Canada of money to which it was entitled by law”). We make note of this because the Indictment at hand specifically charges that the alleged scheme under the mail and wire fraud statutes was designed to defraud the Commonwealth and the City of money. Given the unique circumstances of the kind involved here, which include allegations of corrupt Traffic Court judges preventing the adjudication of guilty verdicts resulting in fees and costs being owed and paid to the Commonwealth and the City, we conclude that the Government has sufficiently alleged that the object of Defendants’ scheme was to deprive the Commonwealth and the City of money or property.

V. CONCLUSION

Although the Third Circuit has not yet had an opportunity to consider the “money or property” theory in the Indictment, this Court is confident that if the issue was before it, it would reject the narrow and circular approach taken by Defendants in favor of an approach examining the Indictment as a whole, and affirm the validity of the indictment due to the legitimate property interests clearly at stake. As the Third Circuit explained in United States v. Asher, 854 F.2d 1483, 1494 (3d Cir. 1988), “[w]hile we recognize that cases may fall on either side of the McNally/Carpenter line, those cases that have sustained mail fraud convictions have done so where the ‘bottom line’ of the scheme or artifice had the inevitable result of effectuating monetary or property losses to the employer of or the state.” Accepting the factual allegations in the Indictment as true, we find that the Government has alleged the “bottom line” of the charged scheme as having the result of effectuating a monetary or property loss to the Commonwealth and the City. Accordingly, dismissal of the Indictment is not warranted.
