QUESTION PRESENTED

Mr. Mency contended Florida Statutes (2004) section 775.084(3)(a)6 was unconstitutional under Apprendi v. New Jersey and Blakey v. Washington as applied to his sentences because the statutory provision grants the trial judge the sole and exclusive authority to impose enhanced penalties beyond his offenses statutory maximum based on an additional findings of fact other than a prior conviction by a preponderance of the evidence instead of upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt by a jury that Mency posed a danger to the public. The Circuit Court denied relief relying on Almendarez-Torres which addressed the recidivist exception and the First District Court of Appeals relied upon that case to uphold the denial.

Did the First District err in deferring to the Circuit Court's finding that section 775.084 is not unconstitutional as applied to the facts of Mency's case and/or did the State courts properly address the merits of Mency's issue?

FLA. STAT. § 775.084 (2004)

(1)(a) "Habitual felony offender" means a defendant for whom the court

At any time when it appears to the court that the defendant is an habitual felony offender or an habitual misdemeanant the court shall make that determination as provided in subsection (3).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The State of Florida charged Corry Mency<sup>1</sup> via information instrument with committing two criminal offenses against a Mrs. Lambert in Duval County Florida: Unarm Carjacking, contrary to section 812.133(2)(b), Florida Statutes (2004), a first degree felony ordinarily punishable by a maximum term of 30 years in prison, s. 775.082(3)(b), Fla. Stat. (2004); and Battery on a Person 65 years old or older, contrary to s. 775.08(2)(b), Fla. Stat. (2004), a third degree felony, ordinarily punishable by a maximum term of 5 years in prison, s. 775.082(3)(e), Fla. Stat. (2004).

Mr. Mency, thru counsel, plead not guilty and subsequently, following a 2-day jury trial, he was found guilty as charged on January 11, 2006, for both offenses. 30a & 31a. Nearly 4 weeks later the State sought to enhance Mency's expected maximum penalty on both offenses pursuant to Florida's Habitual Felony Offender [HFO herein] sentencing enhancement scheme under s. 775.084, Fla. Stat. (2004). Hence the trial judge first determine that Mency met HFO criteria and then exercised his discretion to impose HFO sanctions, sentencing Mency to life in prison for the carjacking and a concurrent term of 10 years for the battery offense. The trial judge also found Mency to be a Prison Releasee Reoffender pursuant to s. 775.082(9), Fla. Stat. (2004) and imposed a concurrent mandatory minimum term of 30 years on the life sentence for the carjacking. 33a-38a.

In November of 2016 Mency filed a Petition For Writ of Habeas Corpus with his trial court, 2a-12a, challenging the constitutionality of the HFO Act as applied to his sentences. Mency specifically contended that's. 775.084(3)(a) 6. Fla. Stat. was unconstitutional in violation of his rights to trial by jury and due process of laws, relying on Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 US 466, 120 S. Ct. 2348, 148 L. Ed. 2d 435 (2000) and Blakely v. Washington, 542 US 296, 124 S. Ct. 2531, 159 L. Ed. 2d 403 (2004), 4a-11a, because Mency received enhanced sentences beyond his offense statutory maximum based on an additional finding of fact other than a prior conviction that was made solely by the trial judge rather than a jury.

In June of 2017 the trial court first explained the improper uses of a petitioner for writ of habeas corpus as well as a motion for postconviction relief. The court then held that Mency's claim was procedurally barred as a petition for writ of habeas corpus and that it would be untimely as a postconviction motion. The court alternately addressed the merits of Mency's claim stating that section 775.084, Florida Statutes, does not violate Apprendi, relying on West v. State, 82 So. 3d 987, 989 (Fla. 1st DCA 2011). 27a. The court thereby denied Mency's petition.

Mency then sought a timely appeal with the First District Court of Appeal from the trial court's decision denying his petition. On April 6, 2018 the First District upheld that decision without giving a written opinion. 41a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I. THE STATE COURT'S MISAPPLICATION OF THE ALMENDAREZ-TORRES RULE WARRANTS THIS COURT'S ATTENTION

The trial court under the Fourth Judicial Circuit by relying on West v. State, 82 So. 3d 987, 989 (Fla. 1st DCA 2011) misapplied the rule established in Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224, 228, 118 S. Ct. 1219, 140 L. Ed. 2d 350 (1998).

Accord, the First District upheld the trial Court's decision without giving a written opinion and thus it's presumed the First District relied solely on trial court's decision.

The first question before this court is whether the State courts were correct in its reliance on the holding in West, supra, in light of the issue presented in the State Court proceeding to rule that section 775.084 is not unconstitutional under Apprendi. Therefore, this Court's analysis must begin with West v. State.

In West, the appellant's first point on appeal was that section 775.084 under which his sentence was imposed was unconstitutional according to federal law as determined by the Supreme court of the United States in Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 120 S. Ct. 2348, 147 L. Ed. 2d 435 (2000) because it permits the sentencing court rather than a jury to determine whether a defendant "qualifies" as a Habitual Felony Offender [HFO herein] by a preponderance of the evidence and not by proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

The appellant in West specifically argued that the “recidivist exception” violated his Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights under the United States Constitution. Id. at 988-89. The district court there only confirmed the question on the recidivist issue having been rejected already by Almendarez-Torres in which the Supreme Court has never receded from nor overruled. Id. at 989.

The issue Mency presented in the State court proceeding is clearly distinguishable, whereas Mency did not contest the recidivist exception nor whether he qualified as a HFO under subsection 775.084(1)(a). Instead, in respect of federal law as interpreted by the Supreme Court in Apprendi and Blakely v. Washington, 542 US 296, 124 S. Ct. 2531, 154 L. Ed. 2d 403 (2004), Mency contested the constitutionality of subdivision 775.084(3)(a) 6. on whether under the facts of his case he should have received enhanced HFO sentences beyond his offenses statutory maximum because the statutory scheme vests the sentencing judge with the authority to impose a more onerous penalty based on a finding of fact by preponderance of the evidence that he posed a danger to the public and not based on proof found by a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

Therefore, the State courts erroneously relied on West because the district court there nor the Supreme Court in Almendarez-Torres had addressed the underlying issue Mency presented in the State Court proceeding on whether an offender's dangerousness to society which subjects him to enhanced sentences can be found by a judge upon a preponderance of the evidence and not by proof beyond a reasonable doubt from a jury.

In addition, since the trial court decided, alternately, the merits of Mency's issue rather than dismissing it on procedural grounds the State Court cannot now claim non-exhaustion based on a procedural flaw that it let pass earlier.

Before Apprendi and Blakely, Florida courts has consistently held that the trial court is charged with the duty under Florida Statutes, section 775.084 to make the necessary finding that a enhanced sentence is necessary to protect the public. See Eutsey v. State, 383 So. 2d 219, 226 (Fla. 1980); Wright v. State, 476 So. 2d 325, 327 (Fla. 2d DCA 1985); Rosemond v. State, 489 So. 2d 1185, 1186 (Fla. 1st DCA 1986); Brown v. State, 497 So. 2d 887 (Fla 5th DCA 1986); see generally section 775.084(4)(a) Fla. Stat. (1986).

In the early 90's the Florida legislature merely changed the written record requirement under subdivision 775.084(3)(a)6. Which require the trial court to make written record only when it determines such a sentence is not necessary for the protection of the public. But, it did not delete the fact that a finding must be made to respect legislative intent to authorize enhanced penalties to protect society from habitual criminals who persist in the commission of crime after having been therefore convicted and punished for crimes previously committed. See Joyner v.

State, 158 Fla. 806, 809, 30 So. 2d 304, 306 (1947).

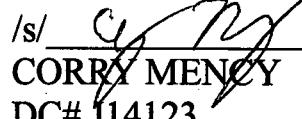

The First District in Adams v. State, 376 So. 2d 47 (Fla. 1st DCA 1979) explained that the finding that it is necessary to protect the public, although essentially a prediction, depends on certain identifiable discrete facts other than a prior conviction such as the offender's general course of behavior, his family, his education, vocation and so on. See also Woods v. State, 214 So. 3d 803, 809 (Fla. 1st DCA 2017).

WHEREFORE, as this Petitioner has demonstrated the State Court misapplied the Almendarez-Torres rule only to avoid addressing the merits of his issue that this court should grant certiorari to give the State Court one opportunity to address the merits of Mency's issue. O'Sullivan v. Boerekel, 526 US 838, 119 S. Ct. 1728 (1999) The Merits of the issue is not before this court because the State Court never addressed it.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons a Writ of Certiorari should issue to review the judgment and opinion of the State Courts.

Respectfully,
