

No. 19-6773

In the Supreme Court of the United States

Edgar Ortega-Limones,

Petitioner,

v.

United States of America,

Respondent.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

REPLY TO BRIEF IN OPPOSITION

Christopher Curtis
Assistant Federal Public Defender

Federal Public Defender's Office
Northern District of Texas
819 Taylor Street, Room 9A10
Fort Worth, TX 76102
(817) 978-2753
Chris_Curtis@fd.org

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

- I. Whether all facts—including the fact of a prior conviction—that increase a defendant’s statutory maximum must be pleaded in the indictment and either admitted by the defendant or proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt?

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

Petitioner is Edgar Ortega-Limones, who was the Defendant-Appellant in the court below. Respondent, the United States of America, was the Plaintiff-Appellee in the court below.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

QUESTION PRESENTED	i
PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING	ii
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iv
REASONS FOR GRANTING THIS PETITION.....	1
I. This Court should reconsider Almendarez-Torres	1
CONCLUSION.....	11

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page(s)
Cases
Alleyne v. United States , 570 U.S. 99 (2013)	1, 2, 6
Almendarez-Torres v. United States , 523 U.S. 224 (1998)	passim
Apprendi v. New Jersey , 530 U.S. 466 (2000)	passim
Blakely v. Washington , 542 U.S. 296 (2004)	1, 3
Descamps v. United States , 133 S. Ct. 2276 (Thomas, J., concurring)	2
Dretke v. Haley , 541 U.S. 386 (2004)	3, 8
Henderson v. United States , 568 U.S. 266 (2013)	10
James v. United States , 550 U.S. 192 (2007) (Thomas, J., dissenting)	3
Johnson v. United States , 520 U.S. 461 (1997)	10
Moore v. State , 227 S.W. 2d 219 (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas, February 22, 1950)	4
Nijhawan v. Holder , 129 S. Ct. 2294 (2009)	7
Old Chief v. United States , 519 U.S. 172 (1997)	9
Rangel-Reyes v. United States , 547 U.S. 1200 (Stevens, J., concurring in denial of certiorari)	3
Shepard v. United States , 544 U.S. 13 (2005) (Souter, J., controlling plurality opinion)	3, 7
United States v. Cotton , 555 U.S. 625 (2002).	10
United States v. Haymond , __ U.S. __, 139 S.Ct. 2369 (2019)	4, 5, 6
United States v. Olana , 507 U.S. 725 (1993)	9
United States v. Rojas-Luna , 522 F.3d 502 (5th Cir. 2008)	10
United States v. Vera , 542 F.3d 457 (5th Cir. 2008)	9

Statutes

8 U.S.C. § 1101 (43)	8
8 U.S.C. §§ 1101(43)(A)-(U)	8
8 U.S.C. § 1326.....	2, 4
8 U.S.C. §1326(b)	6, 7, 8
8 U.S.C. § 1326(b)(1)	2, 7, 8
8 U.S.C. § 1326(b)(2)	7, 8
18 U.S.C. § 924(e).....	3
18 U.S.C. § 3559.....	7
18 U.S.C. § 3583(k)	5
Arkansas Code, § 16-97-101	9
Missouri Rev. Stat § 510.263.....	9
Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, Art. 37.07	9
Virginia Code of Criminal Procedure § 19.2-295.1	9

Other Authorities

1 J. Bishop, New Criminal Procedure § 84, p. 49 (4th ed. 1895).....	1
1 J. Bishop, New Criminal Procedure § 87, p. 55 (2nd ed. 1872).....	3
Government’s Petition for Certiorari in United States v. Haymond , No. 17-1672, 2018 WL 3032900, at *29-30 (Filed June 15, 2018)	4-5
J. Archbold, Pleading and Evidence in Criminal Cases 128 (5th Am. ed. 1846)	1
J. Archbold, Pleading and Evidence in Criminal Cases 44 (15th ed. 1862)	3-4
W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 343 (1769).....	3

REASONS FOR GRANTING THIS PETITION

I. This Court should reconsider Almendarez-Torres v. United States.

The rule of Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998), deprives criminal defendants of three rights of “surpassing importance,” Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 476 (2000), indictment, jury trial and proof beyond a reasonable doubt. It is contrary to the understanding of the constitution at founding, as the sources embraced by Alleyne v. United States, 570 U.S. 99 (2013), Blakely v. Washington, 542 U.S. 296, 301-302 (2004), and Apprendi, attest. See Alleyne, 570 U.S. at 109 (noting that in historical sources a “crime’ ... consist[ed] of every fact which ‘is in law essential to the punishment sought to be inflicted...’”) (citing 1 J. Bishop, New Criminal Procedure § 84, p. 49 (4th ed. 1895) for the proposition that crime was defined as “that wrongful aggregation [of elements] out of which the punishment proceeds”); id. (citing J. Archbold, Pleading and Evidence in Criminal Cases 128 (5th Am. ed. 1846) for the proposition that a crime was defined “to include any fact that ‘annexes a higher degree of punishment’”).

Almendarez-Torres has been undermined both by open questioning of its validity in this Court, and by decisions that interpret the prior opinion so narrowly as to call for a different result in Almendarez-Torres. As such, it would be a strong candidate for a second look even if it did not resolve a constitutional issue against the recognition of individual rights. But as the “[t]he force of stare decisis is at its nadir in cases concerning procedural rules that implicate fundamental constitutional protections,” Alleyne 570 U.S. at 116, n.5, the case for review is all the more compelling Petitioner was sentenced to 60 months imprisonment and a three-year term of supervised release. He was subjected to the enhanced statutory maximum under 8 U.S.C. §1326(b)(1) because the removal charged in the indictment followed a prior felony conviction. Petitioner’s sentence of 60 months imprisonment and three years supervised release thus depends on the judge’s ability to find the existence and date of a prior conviction, and to use that date to increase the statutory maximum. This power was affirmed in Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998), which held that the enhanced maximums of 8 U.S.C. § 1326 represent sentencing factors rather than elements of an offense, and that they may be constitutionally determined by judges rather than juries. See Almendarez-Torres, 523 U.S. at 244.

Ortega-Limones filed a petition for certiorari urging this Court to reconsider its decision in Almendarez-Torres. Upon directive of this Court, the government has filed a Brief in Opposition to Ortega-Limones’ petition on January 27, 2020.

Almendarez-Torres* was wrongly decided

A number of opinions, some authored by Justices among the Almendarez-Torres majority, have expressed doubt about whether the case was correctly decided. See Descamps v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2276, 2295 (Thomas, J., concurring) (noting the judicial fact finding that Almendarez-Torres allows for violates the Sixth Amendment); Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 489 ([I]t is arguable that Almendarez-Torres was incorrectly decided and that a logical application of our reasoning today should apply if the recidivist issue were revisited”); Dretke v. Haley, 541 U.S. 386, 395-396 (2004) (noting that the validity of Almendarez-Torres is a difficult constitutional question); Shepard v. United States, 544 U.S. 13, at 26 & n.5 (2005) (Souter, J., controlling plurality opinion) (discussing the possible extension of Apprendi to prior convictions); Shepard, 544 U.S. at 26-28 (Thomas, J., concurring) (calling again for the reconsideration of Almendarez-Torres); Rangel-Reyes v. United States, 547 U.S. 1200, 1201 (Stevens, J., concurring in denial of certiorari) (stating again that Almendarez-Torres was wrongly decided); Rangel-Reyes, 547 U.S. at 1202-1203 (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) (“Moreover it has long been clear that a majority of this Court now rejects that exception.”); James v. United States, 550 U.S. 192, 231-232 (2007) (Thomas, J., dissenting) (Stating the belief that 18 U.S.C. § 924(e) unconstitutionally allows for sentencing enhancements based upon judge made findings).

Those doubts are valid. The Almendarez-Torres decision contravenes the original meaning of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. The authorities cited by this Court as exemplary of the original meaning of the constitution do not recognize a distinction between prior convictions and facts about the instant offense. See Blakely v. Washington, 542 U.S. 296, 301-302 (2004) (quoting W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 343 (1769), 1 J. Bishop, Criminal Procedure § 87, p 55 (2d ed. 1872)) (“The ‘truth of every accusation’ against a defendant ‘should afterwards be confirmed by the unanimous suffrage of 12 of his equals and neighbors.’”); Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 478-479 (quoting J. Archbold, Pleading and Evidence in Criminal Cases 44 (15th ed. 1862) , 4 Blackstone 369-370) (“[T]he court must pronounce that judgement, which the law hath annexed to the crime.”). Moreover, sentencing enhancements based upon prior convictions proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt existed under state law long before Almendarez-Torres. See Moore v. State, 227 S.W. 2d 219, 221 (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas, February 22, 1950) (“The court was without authority to add to the jury verdict a finding that the appellant had been three times convicted of a felony, even though the indictment had alleged three prior convictions.”).

Collecting post-Almendarez-Torres authority that recognizes its holding, the government treats the prior conviction exception as an uncontroversial proposition in this Court. See Brief in Opposition at p. 6. However, as the above sources illustrate, while Almendarez-Torres’s bare holding is recognized as current law, the scope of the prior conviction exception has been so thoroughly constricted as to raise questions about whether it would even apply to 8 U.S.C. § 1326. Further, the theoretical underpinnings of the case have been steadily refuted by every case to discuss the historical foundations of the jury trial requirement.

Most recently, this Court’s decision in United States v. Haymond, ___U.S.___, 139 S.Ct. 2369 (2019), has recognized that bright-line, categorical exclusions from the rule of Apprendi may give way when a holistic assessment of a factual finding suggests similarity to a traditional element. Before Haymond, every federal court of appeals in the country exempted the findings that led to revocation of supervised release from the rule of Apprendi. See Government’s Petition for Certiorari in United States v. Haymond, No. 17-1672, 2018 WL 3032900, at *29-30 (Filed June 15, 2018) (“Every court of appeals to have addressed the question has concluded that the Sixth Amendment right under the Jury Trial Clause and the related due process right to factual findings beyond a reasonable doubt do not apply to revocations of supervised release and subsequent orders of reimprisonment.”) (collecting cases). Yet the Haymond court found that the findings supporting revocation – and a mandatory minimum -- under 18 U.S.C. 3583(k) must be proven to a jury rather than found by a judge. See Haymond, 139 S. Ct. at 2385. Subsection (k) provides for a mandatory term of five years when persons convicted of registerable sex offenses commit certain sex offenses on supervised release. See 18 U.S.C. 3583(k).

In Haymond, four members of the Court applied Apprendi in a straightforward way, observing that supervised release and subsequent imprisonment represent punishment for the initial offense, and that revocations under Subsection(k) therefore added time to the defendant’s minimum and maximum punishment See Haymond, 139 S.Ct. at 2379 (Gorsuch, J.)(plurality op). Justice Breyer, however, recognized the traditional authority for judges to revoke parole and probation by a preponderance of the evidence. See id. at 2385-2386 (Breyer, J., concurring). His concurring opinion extended that authority to supervised release revocation, but nonetheless concluded that the findings underlying Subsection (k) are “less like ordinary revocation and more like punishment for a new offense, to which the jury right would typically attach.” Id. at 2386. This conclusion flowed not merely from the finding’s impact on the sentencing range, but on a global assessment of its similarity to traditional elements: the fact that such findings related to a discrete federal offense, that they triggered mandatory imprisonment, and that they carried such a significant mandatory minimum. See id.

Accordingly, it will no longer do to say that some facts are simply exempt from jury trials, whatever impact they may have on their sentence, and however closely they may resemble traditional elements. And a global assessment of the prior conviction finding under 1326(b) may very well suggest that it functions as a disguised element. The finding raises a maximum sentence of two years to one of ten years, a radical 500% increase ordinarily reserved for elements of an aggravated offense.

The argument that Almendarez-Torres was wrongly decided is compelling. This Court should grant certiorari to reconsider that decision.

The statute in question, 18 U.S.C. § 1326(b) requires more of a factual determination than the mere fact of a prior conviction.

Almendarez-Torres, whether correctly or incorrectly decided, has consistently been recognized as a limited exception holding that the mere fact of prior conviction does not have to be presented to the grand jury and proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt. See Almendarez-Torres, 523 U.S. at 244; and Alleyne v. United States, 570 U.S. at 111, n.1 (2013) (characterizing Almendarez-Torres as a narrow exception to the general rule that all facts that increase punishment must be alleged in the indictment and proved to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt).

This Court has repeatedly recognized that this exception is limited very narrowly to only the fact of prior convictions. See Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 490

(stressing that Almendarez-Torres represented “a narrow exception” to the prohibition on judicial fact-finding to increase a defendant’s sentence); Shepard, 544 U.S. at 25-26 (2005) (Souter, J., controlling plurality opinion) (“While the disputed fact here can be described as a fact about a prior conviction, it is too far removed from the conclusive significance of a prior judicial record, and too much like the findings subject to Jones and Apprendi, to say that Almendarez-Torres clearly authorizes a judge to resolve the dispute.”); Haley, 541 U.S. at 395-396 (concluding that the application of Almendarez-Torres to the sequence of a defendant’s prior convictions represented a difficult constitutional question to be avoided if possible); Nijhawan v. Holder, 129 S. Ct. 2294, 2302 (2009) (agreeing with the Solicitor General that the loss amount of a prior offense would represent an element of an 8 U.S.C. §1326(b) offense, to the extent that it boosted the defendant’s statutory maximum).

However, the sentencing enhancement provisions of 8 U.S.C. § 1326(b)(1) and (b)(2) require more than proof of the mere fact of prior conviction. First, both provisions require that the prior conviction precede the removal from the United States. Accordingly, both enhancement provisions raise a fact issue: whether the removal or deportation preceded the felony or aggravated felony prior conviction.

Moreover, section 1326(b)(1) requires that the prior conviction be for a felony conviction. A “felony” is usually defined as an offense that carries a punishment of more than one year imprisonment. See 18 U.S.C. § 3559. Section 1326(b)(2) requires that the prior conviction be for an “aggravated felony”. The term “aggravated felony” as defined in 8 U.S.C. § 1101 (43) contains at a minimum more than 50 offenses that could qualify as “aggravated felonies.” See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1101(43)(A)-(U).

Accordingly, 8 U.S.C. §§ 1326(b)(1) and (b)(2) require litigation that exceeds the simple fact of a prior conviction. Members of this Court have recognized that the question of whether the sequence of prior convictions falls within the limited exception of Almendarez-Torres, as well as the validity of Almendarez-Torres itself, present “difficult constitutional questions.” Haley, 541 U.S. at 395-96.

Even under the flawed logic of Almendarez-Torres, the sentencing enhancements set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 1326(b) require more fact finding than the mere fact of a prior conviction. The narrow exception carved out by Almendarez-Torres for sentencing enhancements based upon the judge found facts of a mere fact of a prior conviction should not have been applied to the sentencing enhancements set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 1326(b). Indeed, the narrow construction given to Almendarez-Torres’s prior conviction exception by subsequent precedent of this Court would likely produce a different result in Almendarez-Torres itself. This irreconcilable tension between Almendarez-Torres and its progeny calls for guidance from this Court.

The concerns stated by the government about fairness and potential prejudice to the defendant are not realistic dangers.

On page 9 of the Brief in Opposition, the government argues “The rule the petitioner advocates could invite substantial ‘unfairness’.” (Brief in Opposition , p. 9). This simply has not occurred in jurisdictions where the jury decides the issue of punishment and must take into account prior convictions. Several states provide for a simple bifurcated proceeding where the jury only decides the issue of punishment after determining the issue of guilt/innocence. See Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, Art. 37.07; Arkansas Code, § 16-97-101; Missouri Rev. Stat § 510.263; Virginia Code of Criminal Procedure § 19.2-295.1. Nothing requires presentation of prior convictions to the jury before considering the punishment.

Moreover, this Court has long recognized that such prejudice can be alleviated through the use of a trial stipulation. See Old Chief v. United States, 519 U.S. 172, 179-180 (1997). The practical problems asserted by the government are hardly insurmountable. They are, in any case, not sufficient reason to disregard the Constitution, nor to leave in place constitutional error.

Plain error review does not prohibit the court from granting review in Petitioner's case.

As has been pointed out in the petition for certiorari and the government's brief in opposition, the Petitioner did not raise this issue in the trial court. Rather, the issue was raised for the first time on direct appeal. Accordingly, the Petitioner's claim of error must be reviewed by the plain error standard of review. See United States v. Olano, 507 U.S. 725, 732 (1993).

If this Court were to reconsider Almendarez-Torres, and decide the issue favorably to the Petitioner, then Petitioner's sentence of 60 months imprisonment and a three years supervised release would far exceed the statutory maximum term of 24 months imprisonment and one year of supervised release. A sentence that exceeds the statutory maximum is an illegal sentence, and necessarily constitutes plain error. See United States v. Vera, 542 F.3d 457, 459 (5th Cir. 2008).

In determining whether error is plain, “it is enough that the error be plain at the time of appellate consideration.” Henderson v. United States, 568 U.S. 266, 274 (2013) quoting Johnson v. United States, 520 U.S. 461, 468 (1997) (“We agree with petitioner on this point, and hold that in a case such as this – where the law at the time of trial was settled and clearly contrary to the law at the time of the appeal – it is enough that an error be ‘plain’ at the time of appellate consideration.”).

Should this Court overrule Almendarez-Torres and remand this case to the court below, that court is likely to find that the Petitioner suffered substantial prejudice by receiving a sentence that was almost three times in excess of the statutory maximum term of imprisonment and three times the maximum term of supervised release. The court below is likely to find that the error affected the fairness, integrity and public reputation of the judicial proceedings. See United States v. Rojas-Luna, 522 F.3d 502, 507 (5th Cir. 2008) (“Given that Rojas-Luna received a sentence of seventy-three months in prison when, absent constitutional error, his sentence would have been a maximum of two years, we have little difficulty in concluding that Rojas-Luna’s substantial rights were affect (sic).”).

In the context of a sentencing enhancement based upon a prior removal, the court in Rojas-Lunas also recognized that the fourth prong of plain error was satisfied because there had not been a jury trial where the facts of the prior removal had been presented in the evidence at trial, distinguishing United States v. Cotton, 555 U.S. 625, 627-29 (2002). See Rojas-Lunas at 507. That analysis is equally applicable to the facts of Ortega-Limones’ case.

CONCLUSION

Petitioner respectfully submits that this Court should grant certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Respectfully submitted this 10th day of February 2020.

JASON D. HAWKINS
Federal Public Defender
Northern District of Texas

/s/ Christopher A. Curtis
Christopher Curtis
Assistant Federal Public Defender
Federal Public Defender's Office
819 Taylor Street, Room 9A10
Fort Worth, Texas 76102
Telephone: (978) 767-2746
E-mail: Chris_Curtis@fd.org

Attorney for Petitioner