CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

U.S.C.S. § 1291

§ 1291

The courts of appeals (other than the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit) shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the district courts of the United States, the United States District Court for the District of the Canal Zone, the District Court of Guam, and the District Court of the Virgin Islands, except where a direct review may be had in the Supreme Court. The jurisdiction of the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit shall be limited to the jurisdiction described in sections 1292(c) and (d) 1295 of this title.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case involves the District Courts ruling on petitioner's filing of a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(4) See Appendix (D) petition. The District Court ruled that petitioner's motion was untimely under 60(b)(6). However, the Court made no mention of the provision that petitioner's motion was filed under, Rule 60(b)(4). The Third Circuit exercised appellate jurisdiction and ruled petitioner's motion a successive habeas petition.

The Third Circuit's action causes confusion as to what is actually required by U.S.C.S. § 1291 to establish appellate jurisdiction. The Fourth, Fifth, and Ninth Circuits are a few of the the Circuit Courts that hold the view that such circumstance would not give them appellate jurisdiction. Expressly disagreeing with the Third Circuit's action. In fact the Fourth Circuit stated in a case, that it had an independent obligation to verify the existence of appellate jurisdiction.

It is critically important for courts and litigants to know whether the Third Circuit's decision is right or wrong. If the Third Circuit is wrong but its decision remains unreviewed, it may unjustifiably deter parties from seeking appellate review of a decision that the law does not seem to support. Also, it may tend to signal tacit approval of a court exercising appellate jurisdiction where none exist.

If the Third Circuit is right, then review is required bring clarity to a situation that the circuit courts seems to be unclear about.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

In light of the Third Circuit's actions, there is a square conflict among the courts of appeals regarding the question presented. That conflict is starkly illuminated by the contrast between the Fourth Circuit's decision in Porter v. Zook, 803 F.3d 649 (October 20, 2015). Both cases involve a district court issuing a final order without resolving all of the issues that were before it. While the Fourth Circuit has held they did not possess appellate jurisdictions in such instances, the Third Circuit however, exercised appellate jurisdiction and ruled on the merits of the appeal. Other courts of appeal have rejected this approach. What makes this case even more distinguishable than the others is that the district court did not address the only issue that was before it. This sharply different treatment of similarly-situated litigants creates an intolerable conflict-and severe unfairness-that this Court should resolve.

The Third Circuit's action conflicts with the decisions of other courts of appeal that addressed this issue.

The Fourth Circuit rejected the the Third Circuit's approach when it stated in Porter, "Before the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit considers the merits of an appeal, it has an independent obligation to verify the existence of appellate jurisdiction. And that jurisdiction generally is limited to appeals from final decisions of the district courts, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1291-decisions that end the litigation on the merits and leave nothing for the court to do but execute the order." Also, "Regardless of the label given a district court decision, if it appears from the record that the district court has not adjudicated all of the issues of a case then there is no final order."

The Fifth Circuit stated in Whitherspoon v. White, 232 F.3d 210 (5th Cir. Tex. 2000), "When a record clearly indicates that a district court failed to adjudicate the rights and liabilities of all parties, an order is not and cannot be presumed to be final, irrespective of a district court's intent."

The Ninth Circuit stated in Prellwitz v. Sisto, 657 F.3d 1035 (September 22, 2011), "Federal R. Civ. P. 54(b) provides that, unless a district court expressly determines that there is no reason for delay, any order or decision, however designated, that adjudicates less than all the claims or the rights and liabilities of fewer than all the parties does not end the action as to any of the claims or parties."

The third Circuit's actions appear to be inconsistent with the uniform decisions of the other courts of appeals. This approach is also inconsistent with the language, history and purpose of U.S.C.S. § 1291.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,
