PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioner Terry Ray Carter seeks a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals is reported at United States v. Carter, 857 F. App'x 804 (5th Cir. 2021). The district court did not issue a written opinion.

JURISDICTION

The Fifth Circuit entered judgment on August 26, 2021. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

RULES AND GUIDELINES PROVISIONS

This case involves both the First Amendment and the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On September 16, 2020, Terry Ray Carter, Petitioner, pleaded guilty to one count of Sexual Exploitation of a Child, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2251(a) and one count of Transportation of Child Pornography, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2252A. (ROA.115). The charges stemmed from Appellant making an illegal video and then transporting it to an undercover officer. (ROA.33-35). Mr. Carter's guilty plea was pursuant to a plea agreement that contained an appeal waiver. (ROA.146-54).

The district court imposed a 600-month sentence of imprisonment, followed by 20 years of supervised release. Prior to imposition of the sentence and the conditions of supervised release, Mr. Carter objected to the Guidelines calculation as well as several terms of supervised release. (ROA.143). The district court modified the term dealing with gaming consoles but left untouched the term prohibiting possession of "any pornographic matter" as well as a condition prohibiting Mr. Carter from going to places where children may frequently congregate. (ROA.61-62). The Fifth Circuit affirmed.

This appeal follows to challenge the prohibition on possession of "any pornographic matter" as well has the prohibition on going to places where children may frequently congregate.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THIS PETITION

The district court's supervised release prohibition on "pornographic matter" is problematic for two reasons. First, a prohibition on all "pornography" violates due process because it does not put an ordinary person on notice of what conduct is prohibited. Second, the prohibition is overly broad in light of the First Amendment.

The district court's supervised release prohibition on going to places where children may frequently congregate is both overbroad and vague.

When Mr. Carter is released from prison, he will be on supervised release for the next twenty years. (ROA.59). Two conditions of supervised release that he must abide by, or face another term of incarceration, are as follows:

[T]he defendant shall ... neither possess nor have under his/her control any pornographic matter or any matter that sexually depicts minors under the age of 18 including, but not limited to, matter obtained through access to any computer and any matter linked to computer access or use.

(ROA.60,62).

The defendant shall not have access to or loiter near school grounds, parks, arcades, playgrounds, amusement parks or other places where children may frequently congregate, except as may be allowed upon advance approval by the probation officer.

(ROA.60-61).

I. The Prohibition on “Pornographic Matter”

Mr. Carter will return to prison if he ever possesses or controls “pornographic matter.” (ROA.60,62). Such a broad and vague condition of supervised release, both as written and as interpreted, violates due process and cannot stand in light of the First Amendment.

A. Due Process

The district court’s prohibition on “pornographic matter,” as currently written, violates due process because it fails to provide Mr. Carter with adequate notice of what he may and may not do. United States v. Loy, 237 F.3d 251, 267 (3d Cir. 2001). The condition “forbids … an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application.” Connally v. General Constr. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391 (1926). As this Court is aware, “pornography” has been a historically difficult term to define. In Farrell v. Burke, the Southern District of New York described a parole officer’s testimony that “pornography” includes Playboy Magazine as well as a photograph of Michelangelo’s David. No. 97 Civ. 5708, 1998 WL 751695, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16896, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 21, 1998). In American Booksellers Association v. Hudnut, the Seventh Circuit observed that “pornography” could extend to W.B. Yeats’s poem “Leda and the Swan.” 771 F.2d 323, 327 (7th Cir. 1985). What then could be said about Vladimir Nabokov’s Lolita, Henry Miller’s Tropic of Cancer, Robert Mapplethorpe’s photography, most R-rated movies, some PG-13-rated movies, or even advertisements by Calvin Klein? Reasonable minds could differ, which places Mr. Carter’s freedom under a cloud of uncertainty for the rest of his life. As both the Third Circuit and Ninth Circuit's have held, this violates due process. Loy, 237 F.3d at 262-67; United States v. Guagliardo, 278 F.3d 868, 872 (9th Cir. 2002).

1. “Pornographic” matter is qualitatively different from “sexually explicit” materials because Congress has provided no guidance on the meaning of “pornographic” matter when adults are depicted.

On at least two occasions, the Fifth Circuit has previously upheld conditions of supervised release prohibiting “sexually explicit” materials in the face of a due process challenge. United States v. Brigham, 569 F.3d 220, 232-33 (5th Cir. 2009); United States v. Phipps, 319 F.3d 177, 193-94 (5th Cir. 2003). It has done so on two grounds. First, a “sexually explicit” prohibition is not vague when read in a “commonsense way.” See Phipps, 319 F.3d at 193 (“Such a construction compels us to disagree with defendants’ suggestion that the condition could apply to newspapers and magazines that contain lingerie advertisements or even to the “Song of Solomon.”). Second, Congress has provided statutory guidance on what “sexually explicit” means. Brigham, 569 F.3d at 233 (“Even so, the definitions of ‘child pornography’ and ‘sexually explicit conduct’ set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 2256(2) & (8) offer some practical insight into the meaning of these terms.”). Even though the special condition in Brigham included the term “pornographic,” it—unlike here—listed “sexually oriented or sexually stimulating materials” in the same condition, which focused the meaning of “pornographic” in light of the broader context. See Brigham, 569 F.3d at 233.

In Loy, the Third Circuit observed the precise distinction that Mr. Carter advances here. The court explained at length that “sexually explicit materials” do not present the same due process, vagueness concerns over enforcement as “pornography.” Just as the court struck down a condition prohibiting possession of pornography, it explained:

To be sure, we are dealing here with an unusually broad condition. We in no way mean to imply that courts may not impose restrictions on the consumption of sexually explicit materials by persons convicted of sex crimes. ... [T]here is no question that the District Court could, perfectly consonant with the Constitution, restrict Loy’s access to sexually oriented materials, so long as that restriction was set forth with sufficient clarity and with a nexus to the goals of supervised release. Further, the Constitution would not forbid a more tightly defined restriction on legal, adult pornography, perhaps one that clarified whether it extended non-visual materials, or that borrowed applicable language from the federal statutory definition of child pornography located at 18 U.S.C. S 2256(8).

Loy, 237 F.3d at 266-267. Thus, a prohibition on “pornography” should be treated differently from a prohibition on “sexually explicit” materials.

B. The First Amendment

A special supervised release condition that bans sexually explicit material involving adults has “First Amendment implications.” United States v. Thielemann, 575 F.3d 265, 272 (3d Cir. 2009). The district court imposed an anti-pornography condition this case that is so broad it forbids him to have legal adult pornography—and has been interpreted to include much less—which impinges his First Amendment rights. As the Fifth Circuit has repeatedly observed, the question of whether a pornography prohibition violates the First Amendment is “unsettled.” See United States v. Prieto, 801 F.3d 547, 555 (5th Cir. 2015) (“Because our law is unsettled, and the law of our sister circuits is not uniformly in the defendant's favor, plain error is not demonstrated.”).

“When a ban restricts access to material protected by the First Amendment, courts must balance the § 3553(a) considerations ‘against the serious First Amendment concerns endemic in such a restriction.’” Thielemann, 575 F.3d at 272–73 (internal citation omitted). In so doing, the courts must ensure that restrictions on a defendant’s “pornographic matter” have “a clear nexus to the goals of supervised release.” Id. at 272 (quoting Loy, 237 F.3d at 267). No such nexus existed here. While the record reveals that Mr. Carter viewed child pornography in the past, nothing shows that pornographic material involving only adults contributed in any way to his offence. United States v. Voelker, 489 F.3d 139, 151 (3d Cir. 2007) (vacating ban on legal adult pornography); Thielemann, 575 F.3d at 274 (narrow ban on adult pornography upheld where record showed defendant’s experience with adult pornography inextricably linked to his sexual interest in children).

Neither was there any reason to believe that viewing adult pornography would cause Mr. Carter to reoffend. Voelker, 489 F.3d at 151; Thielemann, 575 F.3d at 274 (record showed defendant’s exposure to adult pornography will contribute to future offenses against children); Brigham, 569 F.3d at 234 (evidence that sexually stimulating adult images would contribute to defendant’s risk of recidivism supported ban on sexually stimulating material). Because this nexus was absent, the condition banning Mr. Carter from viewing, or even reading, “pornographic matter” was overly broad in light of the First Amendment.

II. The district court erred by ordering a special condition of supervision prohibiting Mr. Carter from “places where children may frequently congregate.”

Mr. Carter contends that prohibiting him, under penalty of imprisonment, from “places where children may frequently congregate” as a special condition of supervision is both overly broad and unconstitutionally vague. In candor to the Court, the defense recognizes that a similar arguments were rejected in United States v. Paul, 274 F.3d 155 (5th Cir. 2001) and, more recently, in United States v. Hilderbrand, 687 F. App’x 361 (5th Cir. 2017). Appellant raises the argument here to preserve it for further review.

Overbreadth arguments pertaining to special conditions of supervision are analyzed under the provisions of 18 U.S.C. § 3583(d)(2). Paul, 274 F.3d at 165 n.12. Section 3583(d)(2) states that special conditions of supervision should involve “no greater deprivation of liberty than is reasonably necessary” to achieve the goals of sentencing.

Mr. Carter argues that this condition makes it virtually impossible for him to go to places necessary to live his life if he is prohibited from going anywhere “where children may frequently congregate.” This could include grocery stores, gas stations, restaurants, and just about any other public place. As a result, Mr. Carter will be effectively imprisoned in his home if this special condition of supervision stands.

Under these facts, the subject condition of supervision is overly broad, as it is tantamount to being under house arrest.

The special condition of supervision is also unconstitutionally vague. “[T]he same principles of due process and notice that apply to criminal statutes apply to supervised release conditions.” Paul, 274 F.3d at 166 (citation omitted). As this Court held in Paul, “[r]estrictions on an offender’s ability to interact with particular groups of people, to hold certain types of employment, and to frequent certain places must provide ‘fair notice’ of the prohibited conduct.” Id. Upholding a similar provision in Paul, this Court held that “conditions of probation can be written – and must be read – in a common sense way.” 274 F.3d at 167 (citation omitted). Yet here, common sense and fair notice conflict with one another. As in the overbreadth argument, almost all places in America are “frequented by minors.” Given this undeniable reality, and given the reality that Mr. Carter must go to places like the grocery store in order to survive, the subject special condition of supervision does not give him “fair notice” of the places he can and cannot go. For this reason, the condition is unconstitutionally vague.

CONCLUSION

This Court should grant the Petition and request briefing on the merits. Ultimately, this Court should vacate or modify the conditions of supervised release that violate the U.S. Constitution.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas
USDC No. 4:20-CR-234-1

Before DAVIS, JONES, and ELROD, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:*

Terry Ray Carter was convicted of sexual exploitation of children and of transportation of child pornography, and he has appealed his sentence. The Government has moved for summary affirmance or, in the alternative, for an extension of time within which to file its brief.

* Pursuant to 5TH CIRCUIT RULE 47.5, the court has determined that this opinion should not be published and is not precedent except under the limited circumstances set forth in 5TH CIRCUIT RULE 47.5.4.

No. 21-10086

Carter asserts that the special condition of supervised release prohibiting him from possession or control of “any pornographic matter” violates due process as unconstitutionally vague because the term “pornographic” is undefined. He also asserts that this special condition violates his rights under the First Amendment because it is overbroad. Carter concedes that these questions are foreclosed by United States v. Abbate, 970 F.3d 601, 605-06 (5th Cir. 2020), cert. denied, 2021 WL 1951889 (U.S. May 17, 2021) (No. 20-6923). In light of Abbate, Carter cannot show that the district court abused its discretion in imposing this condition of supervised release. See 970 F.3d at 605-06.

Next, Carter contends that the special condition of supervised release prohibiting him from going to “places where children may frequently congregate” is overbroad and vague. He concedes that this question is foreclosed by United States v. Paul, 274 F.3d 155, 167 (5th Cir. 2001). In light of Paul, Carter cannot show that the district court abused its discretion in imposing this condition of supervised release. See 274 F.3d at 165-67.

Because the issues raised by Carter are foreclosed by circuit precedent, summary affirmance is appropriate. See Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. Davis, 406 F.2d 1158, 1162 (5th Cir. 1969). Accordingly, the Government’s motion for summary affirmance is GRANTED, the alternative motion for an extension of time within which to file a brief is DENIED as moot, and the district court’s judgment is AFFIRMED.
