A copy of the unpublished opinion of the court of appeals, United States v. Jimenez-Ramirez, No. 21-50822 (5th Cir. March 15, 2022) (per curiam), is reproduced at Pet. App. 1a–2a.

JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The opinion and judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit were entered on March 15, 2022. This petition is filed within 90 days after entry of judgment. See Sup. Ct. R. 13.1. The Court has jurisdiction to grant certiorari under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides, in pertinent part: “No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, ... nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law ....”

The Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides, in pertinent part: “In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to ... trial, by an impartial jury ....”

FEDERAL STATUTE INVOLVED

The text of 8 U.S.C. § 1326 is reproduced at Pet. App. 3a–5a.

STATEMENT

Rodrigo Jimenez-Ramirez was charged with illegally reentering the country after having been removed, in violation of 8 U.S.C. § 1326. Under § 1326(a), the maximum penalty for illegal reentry is two years' imprisonment. Under § 1326(b), the maximum increases to 10 years if the defendant was removed from the United States after having been convicted of a felony, and to 20 years if he was removed after having been convicted of an aggravated felony. Also, the maximum supervised release term increases from one year to three years. In Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998), this Court held that the enhancement-qualifying conviction under § 1326(b) is a sentencing factor, not an element of a separate offense.

Jimenez pleaded guilty to the indictment. A probation officer prepared a presentence report. The report stated that the statutory maximum penalty was 10 years' imprisonment and three years' supervised release, under 8 U.S.C. § 1326(b)(1). Jimenez did not object to the report.

The district court adopted the presentence report without change and sentenced Jimenez to 37 months' imprisonment, to be followed by three years' supervised release.

Jimenez appealed. He argued that, under the reasoning of this Court's decisions in Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000), and Alleyne v. United States, 570 U.S. 99 (2013), 8 U.S.C. § 1326(b) is unconstitutional, insofar as it permits a sentence above the otherwise-applicable statutory maximum based on facts that are neither alleged in the indictment nor found by a jury beyond a reasonable doubt. He acknowledged that the argument was foreclosed by Almendarez-Torres, but noted that recent decisions from this Court suggested that Almendarez-Torres may be reconsidered. Because the issue was foreclosed, Jimenez moved for summary affirmance. The court of appeals, finding itself bound by Almendarez-Torres, affirmed Jimenez’s sentence. Pet. App. 2a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The Court Should Grant Certiorari to Consider Whether to Overrule Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998).

Title 8 U.S.C. § 1326(a) punishes illegal reentry after removal with a maximum term of two years' imprisonment and one year's supervised release. The district court determined, however, that Jimenez was subject to an enhanced sentence under § 1326(b), which increases the maximum penalty if the removal occurred after a conviction for a felony or an aggravated felony. The court's decision accorded with this Court's decision in Almendarez-Torres v. United States, which held that § 1326(b)'s enhanced penalty is a sentencing factor, not a separate, aggravated offense. 523 U.S. 224, 235 (1998). The Court further ruled that this construction of § 1326(b) does not violate due process; a prior conviction need not be treated as an element of the offense, even if it increases the statutory maximum penalty. Id. at 239–47.

However, the continued validity of Almendarez-Torres is questionable. Just two years after it was decided, the Court appeared to cast doubt on it. See Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000). In Apprendi, the Court announced that facts that increase the maximum sentence must be proved to the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. Id. at 490. The Court acknowledged that this general principle conflicted with the specific holding in Almendarez-Torres that a prior conviction need not be treated as an element under § 1326(b). The Court found it “arguable that Almendarez-Torres was incorrectly decided, and that a logical application of our reasoning today should apply” to prior convictions as well. Id. at 489. But because Apprendi did not involve a prior conviction, the Court considered it unnecessary to revisit Almendarez-Torres. Id. at 490. Instead, the Court framed its holding to avoid expressly overruling the earlier case. Id. at 489.

Relying on Apprendi, and later indications from the Court and individual justices that Almendarez-Torres should be reversed, defendants preserved for possible review the contention that their reentry sentences exceeded the punishment permitted by statute and should be reversed. The Court did not grant certiorari on this issue and, in 2007, a panel of the Fifth Circuit opined, in dictum, that a challenge to Almendarez-Torres is “foreclosed from further debate.” United States v. Pineda-Arrellano, 492 F.3d 624, 625 (5th Cir. 2007). Recently, a panel of the Fifth Circuit reiterated that “arguments seeking reconsideration of Almendarez-Torres will be viewed with skepticism,” and cautioned that “appellants and their counsel [should] not damage their credibility with this court by asserting non-debatable arguments.” United States v. Contreras-Rojas, 16 F.4th 479, 480 (5th Cir. 2021) (quoting Pineda-Arrellano, 492 F.3d at 626).

But this Court has continued to question Almendarez-Torres’s reasoning and suggest that the Court would be willing to revisit the decision. See Alleyne v. United States, 570 U.S. 99, 111 n.1 (2013); see also Sessions v. Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. 1204, 1253 (2018) (Thomas, J., dissenting) (opining that Almendarez-Torres should be reconsidered); Mathis v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2243, 2258–59 (2016) (Thomas, J., concurring) (same); Descamps v. United States, 570 U.S. 254, 280–81 (2013) (Thomas, J., concurring) (same). These opinions reveal concern that the opinion is constitutionally flawed. See United States v. Garza-De La Cruz, 16 F.4th 1213, 1215 (5th Cir. 2021) (Costa & Ho, JJ., joined by King, J., concurring) (noting that members of the Supreme Court have criticized Almendarez-Torres as wrongly decided and that “it is well within reason for litigants to ask whether the Supreme Court would reconsider Almendarez-Torres today.”)

In Alleyne, the Court applied Apprendi’s rule to mandatory minimum sentences, holding that any fact that produces a higher sentencing range—not just a sentence above the statutory maximum—must be pleaded in the indictment and either admitted by the defendant or proved to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt. Alleyne, 570 U.S. at 115–16. In the opinion, the Court apparently recognized that Almendarez-Torres remains subject to Sixth Amendment attack. The Court characterized that decision as a “narrow exception to the general rule” that all facts that increase punishment must be alleged and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Id. at 111 n.1. But because the parties in that case did not challenge Almendarez-Torres, the Court said it would “not revisit it for purposes of our decision today.” Id.

Nonetheless, the Court’s reasoning in Alleyne strengthens the challenge to Almendarez-Torres’s recognition of a recidivism exception. Alleyne traced the treatment of the relationship between crime and punishment, beginning in the eighteenth century, repeatedly noting how “[the] linkage of facts with particular sentence ranges ... reflects the intimate connection between crime and punishment.” Id. at 109 (“[i]f a fact was by law essential to the penalty, it was an element of the offense”); see id. (historically, crimes were defined as “the whole of the wrong to which the law affixes punishment ... including any fact that annexes a higher degree of punishment”); id. at 111 (“the indictment must contain an allegation of every fact which is legally essential to the punishment to be inflicted”). Alleyne concluded that, because “the whole of the” crime and its punishment cannot be separated, the elements of a crime must include any facts that increase the penalty. The Court recognized no limitations or exceptions to this principle.

Alleyne’s emphasis that the elements of a crime include the “whole” of the facts for which a defendant is punished seriously undercuts the view, expressed in Almendarez-Torres, that recidivism is different from other sentencing facts. See Almendarez-Torres, 523 U.S. at 243–44; see also Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 490 (“Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt.”) The Apprendi Court later tried to explain this difference by pointing out that, unlike other facts, recidivism “does not relate to the commission of the offense itself.” Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 496. But the Court has since acknowledged that Almendarez-Torres might have been “incorrectly decided.” Id. at 489; see also Shepard v. United States, 544 U.S. 13, 26 n.5 (2005) (acknowledging that Court’s holding in that case undermined Almendarez-Torres); Cunningham v. California, 549 U.S. 270, 291 n.14 (2007) (rejecting invitation to distinguish between “facts concerning the offense, where Apprendi would apply, and facts [like recidivism] concerning the offender, where it would not,” because “Apprendi itself ... leaves no room for the bifurcated approach”).

Three concurring justices in Alleyne provide additional reasons for revisiting Almendarez-Torres. See Alleyne, 570 U.S. at 118 (Sotomayor, Ginsburg, Kagan, J.J., concurring). Those justices noted that the viability of the Sixth Amendment principle set forth in Apprendi was initially subject to some doubt, and some justices believed the Court “might retreat” from it. Id. at 120. Instead, Apprendi’s rule “has become even more firmly rooted in the Court’s Sixth Amendment jurisprudence.” Id. Reversal of even recent precedent is warranted when “the reasoning of [that precedent] has been thoroughly undermined by intervening decisions.” Id. at 121; see also Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. at 1253 (“The exception recognized in Almendarez-Torres for prior convictions is an aberration, has been seriously undermined by subsequent precedents, and should be reconsidered.”) (Thomas, J., dissenting); Mathis, 136 S. Ct. at 2259 (“I continue to believe that the exception in Apprendi was wrong, and I have urged that Almendarez-Torres be reconsidered.”) (Thomas, J., concurring).

The growing view among members of this Court that Almendarez-Torres was wrongly decided is good reason to clarify whether Almendarez-Torres is still the law. Stare decisis “is at its weakest” when the Court interprets the Constitution. Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 235 (1997); see also Seminole Tribe v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 63 (1996). When “there has been a significant change in, or subsequent development of, our constitutional law,” stare decisis “does not prevent ...overruling a previous decision.” Agostini, 521 U.S. at 236. Even if the Court were ultimately to reaffirm Almendarez-Torres, review is warranted. While lower court judges—as well as prosecutors, defense counsel, and criminal defendants—are forced to rely on the decision, they must speculate as to the ultimate validity of the Court’s holding. “There is no good reason to allow such a state of affairs to persist.” Rangel-Reyes v. United States, 547 U.S. 1200, 1201 (2006) (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari).

The question of Almendarez-Torres’s validity can be resolved only in this forum. Rangel-Reyes, 547 U.S. at 1201 (citing State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 20 (1997)). Almendarez-Torres is a decision of this country’s highest court on a question of constitutional dimension; no other court, and no other branch of government, can decide if it is wrong. Regarding the Constitution, it is ultimately this Court’s responsibility “to say what the law is.” Marbury v.

Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803). The Court should grant certiorari to say whether Almendarez-Torres is still the law.

CONCLUSION

FOR THESE REASONS, Jimenez asks this Honorable Court to grant a writ of certiorari.

Respectfully submitted.
