No.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

GLENHAVEN HEALTHCARE LLC, a California corporation; CARAVAN OPERATIONS CORP., a California corporation; MATTHEW KARP, an individual; BENJAMIN KARP, an individual,

Petitioners,

v.

JACKIE SALDANA; CELIA SALDANA; RICARDO SALDANA, JR.; MARIA SALDANA, as individuals and as successors and heirs to Ricardo Saldana, deceased, Respondents.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Lann G. McIntyre
Kathleen M. Walker
LEWIS BRISBOIS BISGAARD & SMITH LLP
550 West C Street
Suite 1700
San Diego, CA 92101

Lauren A. Weber
ORRICK, HERRINGTON & SUTCLIFFE LLP
1152 15th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20005

E. Joshua Rosenkranz
Counsel of Record
Andrew D. Silverman
Marc R. Shapiro
Alyssa Barnard-Yanni
ORRICK, HERRINGTON & SUTCLIFFE LLP
51 West 52nd Street
New York, NY 10019
(212) 506-5000
jrosenkranz@orrick.com

Counsel for Petitioners

QUESTION PRESENTED

"[W]hen a federal statute wholly displaces" a plaintiff's "state-law cause of action through complete pre-emption," the defendant may remove the case to federal court even though "the complaint does not" purport to "allege a federal claim." Beneficial Nat'l Bank v. Anderson, 539 U.S. 1, 6, 8 (2003).

In the face of a public health emergency, the Public Readiness and Emergency Preparedness (PREP) Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 247d-6d, 247d-6e, empowers the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to designate countermeasures to assist in the diagnosis, prevention, treatment, and containment of disease. § 247d-6d(b). The Act grants immunity from suit and liability for certain "covered person[s]" on the front lines responding to public health emergencies for claims relating to the administration or use of a covered countermeasure, § 247d-6d(a)(1); creates an exclusive federal cause of action for claims of willful misconduct, § 247d-6d(d); and establishes a no-fault victim compensation fund for serious injury or death, § 247d-6e. The Third and Ninth Circuits disagree on whether the Act completely preempts state-law claims for willful misconduct, but they and other circuits hold that the Act does not completely preempt other state-law claims, such as claims of negligence.

The question presented is:

Does the PREP Act completely preempt state-law claims against a covered person relating to the administration or use of a covered countermeasure, such that the claims may be removed to federal court?

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Petitioners Glenhaven Healthcare LLC and Caravan Operations Corp. have no parent company, and no publicly held corporation owns 10% or more of their stock.

RELATED PROCEEDINGS

Jackie Saldana et al. v. Glenhaven Healthcare LLC et al., No. 20-56194 (9th Cir. judgment entered Feb. 22, 2022)

Jackie Saldana et al. v. Glenhaven Healthcare LLC et al., No. 2:20-cv-05631-FMO-MAA (C.D. Cal. judgment entered Oct. 14, 2020)

Jackie Saldana et al. v. Glenhaven Healthcare LLC et al., No. 20STCV19417 (L.A. Cnty. Super. Ct.)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

QUESTION PRESENTED i

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT ii

RELATED PROCEEDINGS iii

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES vii

INTRODUCTION 1

OPINIONS AND ORDERS BELOW 2

JURISDICTION 3

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED 3

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 3

Public health scares demonstrate the need to prepare the country for a future pandemic 3

Congress aims to ensure an immediate and robust response to public health crises 5

COVID-19 devastates the United States 9

Mr. Saldana dies of COVID-19 10

The Ninth Circuit holds that the PREP Act does not completely preempt state law and remands COVID-19 litigation against Glenhaven to state court 11

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT 13

I. The Circuits Are Split On Whether The PREP Act Completely Preempts Willful-Misconduct Claims 13

A. The Third Circuit correctly recognized that the PREP Act completely preempts claims for willful misconduct...... 14

B. The Ninth Circuit, diverging from the Third Circuit, wrongly found no complete preemption for willful-misconduct claims. 17

II. The Courts Of Appeals' Errors Reveal A Need For Guidance On The Proper Test For Complete Preemption. 19

A. Under the proper standard, the PREP Act completely preempts state-law negligence claims... 19

1. The PREP Act creates exclusive federal remedies for all claims related to the administration or use of a covered countermeasure. 20

2. The PREP Act requires that claims related to the administration or use of covered countermeasures be adjudicated in federal court.................... 22

B. The courts of appeals have wrongly read Beneficial to require an exclusive cause of action and a merits inquiry into the viability of a plaintiff's claims....... 26

III. This Court's Review Of The PREP Act Is Urgently Needed As Front-Line Responders Face A Crippling Wave Of Litigation... 31

A. Front-line responders need the uniform guidance promised by the PREP Act to continue to serve their communities 31

B. This case—involving a rare appealable remand order—is a good vehicle for review 36

CONCLUSION 37

APPENDIX A	Opinion of the Ninth Circuit (Feb. 22, 2022)	1a
APPENDIX B	Order of the Central District of California Granting in Part and Denying in Part Motion to Remand (Oct. 14, 2020)	20a
APPENDIX C	Order of the Ninth Circuit Denying Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc (Apr. 18, 2022)	28a
APPENDIX D	Complaint and Demand for Jury Trial (May 21, 2020)	30a
APPENDIX E	42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d................	51a
APPENDIX F	42 U.S.C. § 247d-6e................	79a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page(s)

Cases

Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila,
542 U.S. 200 (2004) 28

Anderson v. H&R Block, Inc.,
132 F. Supp. 2d 948 (M.D. Ala. 2000) 18

Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp.,
546 U.S. 500 (2006) 29, 30

Bell v. Hood,
327 U.S. 678 (1946) 29

Beneficial Nat'l Bank v. Anderson,
539 U.S. 1 (2003) 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18,
19, 21, 25, 26, 27

BP P.L.C. v. Mayor of Balt., 141 S. Ct. 1532 (2021) 3, 36

Cannon v. Watermark Ret. Cmty., Inc.,
No. 21-7067, __ F.4th __, 2022 WL
3130653 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 5, 2022) 24

Casabianca v. Mount Sinai Med. Ctr.,
No. 112790/10, 2014 WL 10413521
(N.Y. Sup. Ct. Dec. 2, 2014) 31

*Cavallaro v. UMass Memorial
Healthcare, Inc.*,
678 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2012) 19

El Paso Nat. Gas Co. v. Neztsosie,
526 U.S. 473 (1999) 18, 23

Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp.,
544 U.S. 280 (2005) 24

Kehler v. Hood,
No. 4:11CV1416 FRB, 2012 WL 1945952 (E.D. Mo. May 30, 2012) 31

Maglioli v. Alliance HC Holdings LLC,
16 F.4th 393 (3d Cir. 2021) 14, 15, 16, 26, 28

Martin v. Petersen Health Ops., LLC,
37 F.4th 1210 (7th Cir. 2022)......................... 16, 26

Mata v. Lynch,
576 U.S. 143 (2015) 29

Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor,
481 U.S. 58 (1987) 14, 15

Mitchell v. Advanced HCS, L.L.C.,
28 F.4th 580 (5th Cir. 2022)..................... 16, 26, 28

Parker v. St. Lawrence Cnty. Pub. Health Dep't,
102 A.D.3d 140 (N.Y. App. Div. 2012)................ 31

Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc.,
552 U.S. 312 (2008) 20

Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't,
523 U.S. 83 (1998) 29

In re WTC Disaster Site,
414 F.3d 352 (2d Cir. 2005) 22, 23, 34

Statutes

28 U.S.C. § 1254(1) 3

28 U.S.C. § 1257 24

28 U.S.C. § 1367(a) 13, 19

28 U.S.C. § 1441(a) 18, 26

28 U.S.C. § 1441(b) (2002) 13

28 U.S.C. § 1442 .... 3, 11, 36

28 U.S.C. § 1447(d) 3, 36

42 U.S.C. § 239a et seq. 8

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d 1, 3, 8, 21

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(a)(1) 7, 20, 25, 30

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(a)(2)(B) 7

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(b)(1) 6

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(b)(2)(A) 6

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(b)(8) 8

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(b)(8)(A) 20

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(c)(1) 28, 30

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(c)(1)(A) 7

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(c)(1)(B) 7

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(d)................. 12, 18, 20, 22, 24, 25

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(d)(1) 7, 15, 21

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(e) 7, 29

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(e)(1) 7, 16, 22

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(e)(3) 8, 16, 30

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(e)(4) 8

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(e)(5) 8

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(e)(10) 23, 24

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(i)(1) 6

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(i)(2)(B)(iii)....................................6

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(i)(2)(B)(iv) 6

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(i)(6) 6

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(i)(7)(A)(i) 6

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(i)(8) 6

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6e... 1, 3

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6e(a) 8, 21

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6e(b)(4)...8

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6e(d)(1) 16

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6e(d)(4) 8, 21

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6e(e)(3)...8

Rules and Regulations

72 Fed. Reg. 4710 (Feb. 1, 2007) 31

80 Fed. Reg. 76514 (Dec. 9, 2015) 31

83 Fed. Reg. 38701 (Aug. 7, 2018)............................ 31

84 Fed. Reg. 764 (Jan. 31, 2019) 31

85 Fed. Reg. 15198 (Mar. 17, 2020) 9

85 Fed. Reg. 15337 (Mar. 18, 2020) 9

85 Fed. Reg. 79190 (Dec. 9, 2020) 7

87 Fed. Reg. 982 (Jan. 7, 2022) 9, 25

Other Authorities

151 Cong. Rec. 30725 (2005).............................. 4, 5, 34

151 Cong. Rec. 30735 (2005)..9

CDC, CDC Museum COVID-19 Timeline (Aug. 16, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/5ak8dvsw.............................. 33

CDC, COVID Data Tracker (July 29, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/34jku6sc........................9

CDC, COVID Data Tracker, Trends in Number of COVID-19 Cases and Deaths in The United States Reported to CDC, by State/Territory (Aug. 28, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/384k8xec 33

CDC, SARS Basics Fact Sheet (Dec. 16, 2017), https://tinyurl.com/yvps8v57.......................4

CDC, Weekly Updates by Select Demographic and Geographic Characteristics: Sex and Age (July 27, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/3eaave68.................... 10

Eric Bock, Nat'l Insts. of Health, NIH Record, 2001 Anthrax Attacks Revealed Need to Develop Countermeasures Against Biological Threats (May 13, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/4asm7fxr..................................3

George W. Bush, President, NIH Remarks (Nov. 1, 2005), https://tinyurl.com/2p9889f8.............................. 4, 5

Lincoln Mayer, Note, Immunity for Immunizations: Tort Liability, Biodefense, and Bioshield II, 59 Stan. L. Rev. 1753 (2007) 4

Matthew Mosk, ABC News, George W. Bush in 2005: 'If we wait for a pandemic to appear, it will be too late to prepare,' (April 5, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/4t3b2pma 4

Peter Whoriskey & Neena Satija, Wash. Post, How U.S. coronavirus testing stalled: Flawed tests, red tape and resistance to using the millions of tests produced by the WHO (Mar. 16, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/4me4e4sn.................. 32

Pien Huang, NPR, What We Know About The Silent Spreaders Of COVID-19 (April 13, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/34utujf4 32

Press Release, Am. Health Care Ass'n, COVID-19 Exacerbates Financial Challenges of Long Term Care Facilities (Feb. 17, 2021), https://tinyurl.com/ycktz64y 33

Press Release, HHS, Biden-Harris Administration Bolsters Monkeypox Response; HHS Secretary Becerra Declares Public Health Emergency (Aug. 4, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/ypbw6ppu 35

Press Release, NIH, NIH Clinical Trial of Remdesivir to Treat COVID-19 Begins (Feb. 25, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/5ykmw346 32

Sheri Fink, N.Y. Times, Treating Coronavirus in a Central Park 'Hot Zone' (Apr. 15, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/2p9eajb3 32

INTRODUCTION

This case presents critically important questions about the interpretation of a key weapon in this country's fight against pandemics and bioterrorism: the Public Readiness and Emergency Preparedness (PREP) Act of 2005, 42 U.S.C. §§ 247d-6d, 247d-6e. One primary feature of the Act is limiting liability for those on the front lines responding to public health emergencies. Specified responders enjoy absolute immunity from suit and liability related to certain actions taken to protect the public health. The only exception to immunity is for a claim for willful misconduct, which must be brought in a special three-judge federal district court. All other claims must be brought via a federally administered no-fault victim's compensation fund.

Before the COVID-19 pandemic, the PREP Act was largely untested. But the pandemic's death toll has yielded a tsunami of litigation with no end in sight. Throughout the country, plaintiffs are filing lawsuits in state courts, alleging mismanagement and misconduct in failing to stop the spread of COVID-19. Defendants—often hospitals, nursing homes, and other long-term-care facilities—have sought to remove these suits to federal court, explaining that the PREP Act is a complete-preemption statute that confers exclusive jurisdiction on federal courts. The courts of appeals have split on whether the PREP Act completely preempts claims for willful misconduct. And they have erroneously held that the PREP Act does not preempt other claims.

This Court's review is urgently needed to relieve front-line responders from the crushing burden of COVID-19-response litigation that the PREP Act was designed to prevent. The courts of appeals have frustrated Congress's carefully calibrated response to public health emergencies, designed to balance compensating victims of pandemics and bioterrorism against ensuring that front-line responders like doctors and nurses can deal with unprecedented crises without the threat of litigation and massive damages awards. The PREP Act sought to ensure consistent, uniform decisions on the scope of immunity—and liability. But that uniformity depends on claims against front-line responders being litigated in federal court—and specifically in the court that Congress designated.

If this Court does not intervene, 50 different state-court systems could adopt 50 different interpretations of the Act, depriving front-line responders of the uniform protections Congress promised them. The Court should grant review now to conclusively resolve the important question of complete preemption before front-line responders face ruinous liability in state court, impeding their ability to respond to public health emergencies.

OPINIONS AND ORDERS BELOW

The Ninth Circuit's opinion is reported at 27 F.4th 679 and reproduced at Pet. App. 1a-19a. The Ninth Circuit's denial of panel rehearing and rehearing en banc is unreported and reproduced at Pet. App. 28a-29a. The district court's decision is unreported and reproduced at Pet. App. 20a-27a.

JURISDICTION

The district court's remand order was appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1447(d), as the case was removed in part pursuant to the federal-officer removal statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1442. See BP P.L.C. v. Mayor of Balt., 141 S. Ct. 1532, 1538 (2021). The Ninth Circuit entered judgment on February 22, 2022, and denied panel rehearing and rehearing en banc on April 18, 2022. On July 12, 2022, this Court extended the time to petition for a writ of certiorari to August 29, 2022. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d is reproduced at Pet. App. 51a-78a, and § 247d-6e is reproduced at Pet. App. 79a-85a.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Public health scares demonstrate the need to prepare the country for a future pandemic

The early 2000s ushered in a wave of biological threats. In the wake of the September 11 attacks, anthrax-laced letters were mailed across the country, killing five people and injuring 17 more. The attacks stoked fears of bioterrorism—and whether the United States had the necessary public health tools to respond. Eric Bock, Nat'l Insts. of Health, NIH Record, 2001 Anthrax Attacks Revealed Need to Develop Countermeasures Against Biological Threats (May 13, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/4asm7fxr. In 2003, an outbreak of SARS (severe acute respiratory syndrome) spread to more than 20 countries, infecting thousands of people and killing hundreds. CDC, SARS Basics Fact Sheet (Dec. 16, 2017), https://tinyurl.com/yvps8v57. The spread of disease was contained within six months, but the episode provided a terrifying glimpse of the havoc a global pandemic could wreak. George W. Bush, President, NIH Remarks (Nov. 1, 2005), https://tinyurl.com/2p9889f8. In 2004, contamination in a British pharmaceutical factory caused a severe shortage of flu vaccines in the United States. American vaccine manufacturers could not increase production to cover the shortfall, which raised alarm about the country's ability to confront "a major epidemiological event." Lincoln Mayer, Note, Immunity for Immunizations: Tort Liability, Biodefense, and Bioshield II, 59 Stan. L. Rev. 1753, 1761 (2007). And in 2005, a new—and very deadly—strain of the avian flu virus emerged in Asia. Thankfully, the disease spread primarily through contact with infected animals rather than infected people. But epidemiologists worried about what would happen if the deadly virus mutated with improved person-to-person transmission. Bush, supra.

In summer 2005, on the heels of this series of unsettling events, President George W. Bush read John M. Barry's "The Great Influenza," which told the story of the 1918 flu pandemic. Matthew Mosk, ABC News, George W. Bush in 2005: 'If we wait for a pandemic to appear, it will be too late to prepare' (April 5, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/4t3b2pma. The book spurred President Bush to take action on the existential threat of pandemic disease. His interest in the topic coincided with ongoing congressional work on bioterrorism legislation. See 151 Cong. Rec. 30726 (2005) (remarks by Sen. Hatch). In the ensuing months, Congress, the President, and other stakeholders collaborated on a "legislative response to bioterrorism and pandemic threats." Id. The result: The PREP Act, signed into law on December 30, 2005.

Congress aims to ensure an immediate and robust response to public health crises

The PREP Act was designed to advance the "important national security priority" of "[p]rotecting the American public against acts of bioterrorism like the 2001 anthrax attacks and natural disease outbreaks such as … the avian flu." 151 Cong. Rec. at 30725. Its overarching goal was to ensure that, upon the emergence of a novel public health threat, the private sector could respond quickly to neutralize the threat. Id. The PREP Act assumed that governmental entities—federal, state, and local—would have to cooperate with each other and with private parties. Congress understood that saving lives in a pandemic or bioterror attack would require quick and decisive action in difficult circumstances, based on limited and ever-changing information. Id. at 30726.

It thus sought to ensure that the "climate of apprehension" regarding "litigation exposure" would not "chill[] the necessary private sector activity" to develop and administer much-needed countermeasures. Id. at 30727. Critical to achieving that goal was "liability[] and compensation reform," id. at 30726, to address "the growing burden of litigation" in the healthcare industry, which leaders feared would leave the country "vulnerable in the event of a pandemic," Bush, supra.

The PREP Act's liability-limiting provisions are inoperative until the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) declares "a public health emergency." 42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(b)(1). The declaration identifies the specific health threat and designates "covered countermeasures" recommended to respond to that threat. See § 247d-6d(b)(1), (2)(A). The statutory definition of "covered countermeasure" is broad. See § 247d-6d(i)(1). It includes not just measures "to diagnose, mitigate, prevent, treat, or cure a pandemic or epidemic" but also measures to "limit the harm such pandemic or epidemic might otherwise cause." § 247d-6d(i)(7)(A)(i).

Once the Secretary has declared a public health emergency and specified covered countermeasures, the PREP Act's four-pronged statutory scheme kicks in, providing: (1) immunity from suit and liability for those who administer covered countermeasures; (2) one "sole exception" to this immunity, which is an exclusive federal cause of action for willful misconduct; (3) a no-fault victim compensation fund; and (4) express preemption of all state laws inconsistent with the PREP Act.

Immunity. PREP Act immunity applies to any "covered person." That term is broadly defined to include anyone "authorized to prescribe, administer, or dispense … countermeasures." § 247d-6d(i)(2)(B)(iv), (i)(8). It also encompasses "program planners," meaning anyone "who supervised or administered a program with respect to the administration … or use of … a covered countermeasure," or "provides a facility to administer or use a covered countermeasure." § 247d-6d(i)(2)(B)(iii), (i)(6).

The immunity Congress granted is expansive: A covered person is "immune from suit and liability under Federal and State law with respect to all claims for loss caused by, arising out of, relating to, or resulting from the administration to or the use by an individual of a covered countermeasure." § 247d-6d(a)(1). And that immunity "applies to any claim for loss that has a causal relationship with the administration to or use by an individual of a covered countermeasure." § 247d-6d(a)(2)(B). Under this broad definition, not administering a covered countermeasure—for example, deciding which patients should have priority in receiving a scarce diagnostic test or mask—falls within the scope of PREP Act immunity. See 85 Fed. Reg. 79190, 79197 (Dec. 9, 2020).

Exclusive federal cause of action. The PREP Act's expansive immunity provision has just one exclusion: "[T]he sole exception to the immunity from suit and liability of covered persons … shall be for an exclusive Federal cause of action … for death or serious physical injury proximately caused by willful misconduct," as statutorily defined.[1] § 247d-6d(d)(1). The Act describes in detail how such a claim is to be adjudicated. See generally § 247d-6d(e). It must be brought in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, § 247d-6d(e)(1), and be heard by "a panel of three judges," § 247d-6d(e)(5). The complaint must be verified using a particular procedure, § 247d-6d(e)(4), and must plead enumerated elements "with particularity," § 247d-6d(e)(3).

[1] The statute defines "willful misconduct" as "an act or omission that is taken—(i) intentionally to achieve a wrongful purpose; (ii) knowingly without legal or factual justification; and (iii) in disregard of a known or obvious risk that is so great as to make it highly probable that the harm will outweigh the benefit." § 247d-6d(c)(1)(A). It specifies that willful misconduct is "a standard for liability that is more stringent than a standard of negligence in any form or recklessness." § 247d-6d(c)(1)(B).

No-fault victim compensation fund. The PREP Act provides a remedy for any individuals who cannot show willful misconduct. Congress created a victim compensation fund—the Covered Countermeasure Process Fund—"for purposes of providing timely, uniform, and adequate compensation … for covered injuries directly caused by the administration or use of a covered countermeasure." § 247d-6e(a); see § 247d-6e(e)(3) (defining "covered injury" as "serious physical injury or death"). The Fund's procedures, eligibility requirements, and compensation are drawn from those governing the pre-existing smallpox vaccine injury compensation fund. E.g., § 247d-6e(b)(4) (citing 42 U.S.C. § 239a et seq.). The fund is the "exclusive" remedy "for any claim or suit [the PREP Act] encompasses," other than "a proceeding under section 247d-6d of this title"—i.e., a federal claim for willful misconduct. § 247d-6e(d)(4).

Preemption. The PREP Act contains an express preemption provision that broadly preempts a "State or political subdivision of a State" from "establish[ing], enforc[ing], or continu[ing] in effect with respect to a covered countermeasure[,] any provision of law or legal requirement that … is different from, or is in conflict with, any requirement applicable under this section." § 247d-6d(b)(8). This means that no state can provide another cause of action beyond the exclusive federal remedy for willful misconduct, or a cause of action to supplement claims covered by the compensation fund.

That the foregoing scheme completely preempts state law was apparent at the time of the PREP Act's enactment. In fact, Dean Erwin Chemerinsky cited complete preemption as a reason he opposed the bill. See 151 Cong. Rec. at 30735 (citing Beneficial Nat'l Bank v. Anderson, 539 U.S. 1, 8 (2003)).

COVID-19 devastates the United States

When the President declared COVID-19 a national emergency in mid-March 2020, the virus had infected about 1,600 people across 47 states. 85 Fed. Reg. 15337, 15337 (Mar. 18, 2020). A few days later, the HHS Secretary issued his own declaration of a "public health emergency." 85 Fed. Reg. 15198, 15201 (Mar. 17, 2020). That declaration activated the PREP Act's immunity from suit and liability for covered persons administering or using covered countermeasures, including drugs, diagnostics, or "any other device … used to treat, diagnose, cure, prevent, or mitigate COVID-19, or [its] transmission." Id. at 15202. Secretaries of HHS across two administrations now have amended the declaration ten times since it first issued, each time reaffirming the necessity of the declaration, expanding its scope, and clarifying different aspects of the PREP Act's application as the pandemic evolved. See 87 Fed. Reg. 982, 983 (Jan. 7, 2022) (detailing prior amendments).

COVID-19 has now killed more than one million people in the United States. CDC, COVID Data Tracker (July 29, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/34jku6sc.

About 75% of the victims have been over the age of 65. CDC, Weekly Updates by Select Demographic and Geographic Characteristics: Sex and Age (July 27, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/3eaave68.

Mr. Saldana dies of COVID-19

When COVID-19 struck in March 2020, Ricardo Saldana, age 77, had been living at Glenhaven's nursing home near Los Angeles, California, for six years. Pet. App. 32a. As is discussed in more detail below, little was known at the time about how to treat or prevent COVID-19. See infra at 31-32. And there were severe shortages of masks, gowns, and other personal protective equipment, as well as diagnostic tests, in the earliest days of the pandemic. It is in this context that the complaint alleges that Glenhaven did not adopt certain countermeasures to prevent transmission of COVID-19 within the nursing home.

The allegations, which are taken as true at this juncture, are that Glenhaven did not provide sufficient personal protective equipment, such as masks, to its staff. Pet. App. 38a-39a. In particular, the complaint alleges that Glenhaven provided each staff member only a single surgical mask per shift and did not allow employees to wear homemade cloth masks. Pet. App. 39a-40a. And the complaint alleges that, despite "frequently r[unning] out of masks and gowns," Glenhaven did not buy additional protective equipment for its staff. Pet. App. 40a. When the local fire department delivered masks to the nursing home in mid-March, Glenhaven allegedly kept the masks "locked … in a cabinet." Pet. App. 39a.

The complaint further alleges that before April 2020, Glenhaven did not administer COVID-19 tests to staff and residents even when it suspected exposure to COVID-19. Pet. App. 40a-41a. Later, when Glenhaven started administering tests and someone tested positive, the complaint alleges that Glenhaven did not isolate them. Pet. App. 41a.

As to Mr. Saldana, the complaint alleges that Glenhaven transferred another resident to Mr. Saldana's room when that resident's roommate had tested positive for COVID-19. Id. The complaint alleges that Mr. Saldana then developed a fever and other COVID-19 symptoms. Id. Despite Glenhaven's efforts to treat Mr. Saldana, his health worsened, and he died of COVID-19 on April 13. Id.

The Ninth Circuit holds that the PREP Act does not completely preempt state law and remands COVID-19 litigation against Glenhaven to state court

In May 2020, Mr. Saldana's relatives filed a complaint in California state court. Pet. App. 49a. They pressed four state-law causes of action: elder abuse, willful misconduct, custodial negligence, and wrongful death. Pet. App. 5a. Glenhaven removed the action to federal court.

The Saldanas filed a motion to remand the case. Id. Opposing remand, Glenhaven cited multiple grounds for removal, including the federal-officer removal statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1442. Most relevant here, Glenhaven argued for removal under the doctrine of complete preemption. Pet. App. 6a. Although ordinary defensive preemption is not grounds for removal, "[w]hen [a] federal statute completely pre-empts the state-law cause of action, a claim which comes within the scope of that [federal] cause of action, even if pleaded in terms of state law, is in reality based on federal law" and the "claim is then removable." Beneficial, 539 U.S. at 8 (emphasis added). In a short, unpublished opinion, the district court rejected Glenhaven's arguments and remanded the case to state court. Pet. App. 20a-27a.

On appeal, the Ninth Circuit affirmed. Pet. App. 19a. The court first focused on whether "Congress provide[d] a substitute cause of action." Pet. App. 16a. The PREP Act does provide an exclusive federal cause of action. 42 U.S.C. § 247d-6d(d). But in the Ninth Circuit's view, that "specifically defined" federal cause of action was too limited to find complete preemption, because it is available only for claims of "willful misconduct." Pet. App. 16a. (Recall that other claims are barred entirely.) And the court concluded that the no-fault victim compensation fund for non-willful-misconduct claims arising under the Act was also insufficient to show complete preemption because it was not formally "an exclusive federal cause of action" to be litigated in court but rather an administrative fund. Id.

The Ninth Circuit then proceeded to consider Glenhaven's alternative argument that, at minimum, the PREP Act completely preempted the Saldanas' claim for willful misconduct. Pet. App. 16a-17a. This was a matter of significant importance because it would have established federal-question jurisdiction over some of the Saldanas' claims and triggered supplemental federal jurisdiction over the remaining claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a). Nevertheless, the Ninth Circuit refused to find complete preemption as to the willful-misconduct claim. Pet. App. 17a. Its stated reason: Determining whether the Saldanas' "cause of action under state law for willful misconduct" was completely preempted would require evaluating "[w]hether any of the conduct alleged in the complaint fits the statute's definitions" of willful misconduct. Pet. App. 16a-17a. According to the Ninth Circuit, the need to determine whether a particular claim is completely preempted somehow showed that the statute did not "entirely supplant[] state law causes of action" as to any claim. Pet. App. 17a. (emphasis omitted).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I. The Circuits Are Split On Whether The PREP Act Completely Preempts Willful-Misconduct Claims.

"A civil action filed in a state court may be removed to federal court if the claim is one 'arising under' federal law." Beneficial, 539 U.S. at 6 (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b) (2002)). "[A]bsent diversity jurisdiction," plaintiffs can generally keep their cases in state court by pleading only state-law claims. Id. But the complete-preemption doctrine puts a twist on the familiar well-pleaded complaint rule: If a federal statute "wholly displaces [a] state-law cause of action," then any "claim which comes within the scope of that cause of action, even if pleaded in terms of state law, is in reality based on federal law." Id. at 8. And the claim is therefore "removable" as "'aris[ing] under' federal law." Id. In other words, complete preemption "converts an ordinary state common law complaint into one stating a federal claim for purposes of the well-pleaded complaint rule." Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. 58, 65 (1987).

Here, the Ninth Circuit split from the Third Circuit when it held that the PREP Act does not completely preempt state-law claims for willful misconduct related to the use of covered countermeasures during a public health emergency. And the Ninth Circuit's decision is wrong. At a minimum, this Court should grant review to resolve the split and correct the Ninth Circuit's erroneous decision. See Beneficial, 539 U.S. at 5-6 (granting review to resolve a split between two circuits).

A. The Third Circuit correctly recognized that the PREP Act completely preempts claims for willful misconduct.

"[T]his Court has found complete pre-emption" when a federal statute "provide[s] the exclusive cause of action for the claim asserted and also set[s] forth procedures and remedies governing that cause of action." Id. at 8. In Maglioli v. Alliance HC Holdings LLC, the Third Circuit held that the PREP Act "easily satisfies the standard for complete preemption" with respect to willful-misconduct claims. 16 F.4th 393, 409 (3d Cir. 2021).

First, Maglioli recognized that "[t]he PREP Act unambiguously creates an exclusive federal cause of action" for such claims. Id. That conclusion flows directly from the Act's text, which says that the "sole exception to the immunity from suit and liability of covered persons … shall be for an exclusive Federal cause of action against a covered person for death or serious physical injury proximately caused by willful misconduct." § 247d-6d(d)(1). That statutory phrase—"exclusive federal cause of action"—in fact comes word-for-word from Beneficial. 539 U.S. at 10. No other statute in the entire United States Code uses it.

As the Third Circuit observed, the PREP Act makes an even stronger case for complete preemption than the other statutes this Court has held to completely preempt state law. Maglioli, 16 F.4th at 408. Those statutes—§ 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act, § 502(a) of ERISA, and § 86 of the National Bank Act—"unambiguously created causes of action" but "did not unambiguously make them exclusive." Id. at 409. Instead, this Court inferred exclusivity from congressional intent. Id. But the PREP Act's clear statutory language makes any inference unnecessary. Id. Indeed, it is hard to imagine a better indicator that "Congress has clearly manifested an intent to make causes of action … removable to federal court," Metro. Life, 481 U.S. at 66, than incorporating language in the statute's text drawn directly from this Court's complete-preemption jurisprudence.

Second, Maglioli explained that the PREP Act "also sets forth procedures and remedies governing that cause of action." 16 F.4th at 409 (brackets omitted) (quoting Beneficial, 539 U.S. at 8). To name just a few:

- "A plaintiff asserting a willful-misconduct claim must first exhaust administrative remedies," id. (citing § 247d-6e(d)(1));
- Then, a claim can be brought "only in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia," id. (citing § 247d-6d(e)(1)); and
- The federal complaint "must 'plead with particularity each element of [the] claim,'" id. (quoting § 247d-6d(e)(3)).

In short, Maglioli concluded that the complete-preemption "analysis is straightforward" for claims of willful misconduct. Id. at 410. "Congress said the cause of action for willful misconduct is exclusive" of state remedies, "so it is." Id.[2]

[2] Maglioli affirmed the district court's remand order because it concluded that the plaintiffs brought only negligence claims against the defendant nursing homes. 16 F.4th at 410-11. Similarly, in Mitchell v. Advanced HCS, L.L.C., the Fifth Circuit "[a]ssum[ed]—without deciding—that the willful-misconduct cause of action is completely preemptive," and then held that the plaintiff's negligence claims did not come within the scope of that cause of action. 28 F.4th 580, 586-87 (5th Cir. 2022). And in Martin v. Petersen Health Operations, LLC, the Seventh Circuit recognized in passing that willful-misconduct claims are completely preempted but ultimately held that the plaintiff's claims did not relate to any covered countermeasures. 37 F.4th 1210, 1213-14 (7th Cir. 2022).

B. The Ninth Circuit, diverging from the Third Circuit, wrongly found no complete preemption for willful-misconduct claims.

The Ninth Circuit, like the Third Circuit, recognized that, at a minimum, the "text of the [PREP Act] shows that Congress intended a federal claim … for willful misconduct claims." Pet. App. 16a. But the Ninth Circuit parted ways with the Third Circuit in holding without qualification that "the PREP Act is not a complete preemption statute." Id. Specifically, the Ninth Circuit held that the PREP Act did not completely preempt any state-law claims—including the claim the Saldanas explicitly captioned "willful misconduct"—because the PREP Act did not "entirely supplant[]" all state-law claims, such as "the Saldanas' other causes of action for elder abuse, custodial negligence, and wrongful death." Pet. App. 17a. (emphasis omitted). This deeply flawed holding cannot be reconciled with Maglioli, this Court's complete-preemption cases, or the PREP Act's language.

The Ninth Circuit offered almost no reasoning in support of its holding that the PREP Act would have to completely preempt all state-law claims in order to completely preempt claims alleging willful misconduct. Pet. App. 16a-17a. The court first opined that "[w]hether [a] claim is preempted by the PREP Act turns on whether any of the conduct alleged in the complaint fits the statute's definitions for such a claim." Pet. App. 17a. It then suggested that the most that could be said about the Saldanas' state-law willful-misconduct claim was that it "may be preempted" by the PREP Act. Id. (emphasis in original). The Ninth Circuit apparently viewed any individualized preemption analysis of a particular state-law cause of action as inconsistent with the complete-preemption inquiry; it therefore found no complete preemption of willful-misconduct claims on the ground that the PREP Act did not "entirely supplant[] … the Saldanas' other [state law] causes of action." Id.

That all-or-nothing approach makes no sense, and it is not how federal jurisdiction works. Beneficial could not be clearer on that point. There, this Court held that the defendant banks properly removed the case to federal court where the National Bank Act completely preempted only the plaintiffs' purported "state-law claim of usury," 539 U.S. at 11, and not their remaining claims for "intentional misrepresentation" and "breach of fiduciary duty," among other things, Anderson v. H&R Block, Inc., 132 F. Supp. 2d 948, 949 (M.D. Ala. 2000).

The Ninth Circuit's reasoning is flatly inconsistent with Beneficial. In mandating that a willful-misconduct claim is exclusively a federal cause of action—which is precisely what the PREP Act says, § 247d-6d(d)—Congress "transform[ed]" what might have otherwise been a state law claim "into a federal action." El Paso Nat. Gas Co. v. Neztsosie, 526 U.S. 473, 484 (1999) (discussing complete preemption). A defendant has a right to have a federal claim litigated in federal court, 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a), whether or not it is accompanied by other claims, Beneficial, 539 U.S. at 11. The Ninth Circuit erred in depriving Glenhaven of that right.

This right is especially important because when one "claim in the complaint is removable," the defendant can remove related state-law claims that would not be independently removable "through the use of the supplemental jurisdiction statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a)." Beneficial, 539 U.S. at 8 n.3. Here, that would have permitted Glenhaven to litigate in federal court all the claims against it. See Cavallaro v. UMass Memorial Healthcare, Inc., 678 F.3d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 2012) ("[O]n a minimum reading of the complete preemption cases, one or more of plaintiffs' claims are removable; any such claim makes the case removable, and even the claims not independently removable come within the supplemental jurisdiction of the district court." (citations omitted)).

The Ninth Circuit seriously erred in holding, contrary to the Third Circuit, that Glenhaven could not remove this case unless the PREP Act completely preempted every claim against Glenhaven. This Court should grant review to resolve the split in authority.

II. The Courts Of Appeals' Errors Reveal A Need For Guidance On The Proper Test For Complete Preemption.

A. Under the proper standard, the PREP Act completely preempts state-law negligence claims.

The Third Circuit got the complete-preemption answer right for state-law claims that sound in willful misconduct. But it proceeded to hold that the PREP Act does not completely preempt claims that fall short of the willful-misconduct standard in § 247d-6d(d)—particularly negligence claims. The Fifth Circuit reached the same conclusion, while the Ninth Circuit held that the PREP Act does not completely preempt any claims. However, the text and structure of the PREP Act, taken as a whole, reveal Congress's intent to funnel all claims relating to the use or administration of covered countermeasures to federal court or to the Act's compensation fund, leaving no role for state courts.

1. The PREP Act creates exclusive federal remedies for all claims related to the administration or use of a covered countermeasure.

The courts of appeals have thus far tripped over the lack of an explicit cause of action in the PREP Act for claims of negligence related to covered countermeasures. E.g., Pet. App. 16a. The PREP Act does not establish a federal cause of action for non-willful-misconduct claims, but it does establish an exclusive federal remedy sufficient to trigger complete preemption: It eliminates state-law claims and permits would-be-plaintiffs to vindicate their rights exclusively under federal law via the compensation fund.

The exclusivity of the federal remedies under the PREP Act begins with the Act's grant of immunity from suit, as well as liability, for covered persons. § 247d-6d(a)(1). The immunity provision is then buttressed by the express-preemption provision, § 247d-6d(b)(8)(A), which bars any state "law or legal requirement"—including a state common-law duty, Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc., 552 U.S. 312, 324 (2008)—that is "different from, or is in conflict with," the PREP Act. "[T]he sole exception to th[at] immunity" is the "exclusive Federal cause of action" for "willful misconduct." § 247d-6d(d)(1). "[T]here is, in short, no such thing as a state-law claim" for losses related to the use or administration of covered countermeasures: Any cause of action is either federal or barred by immunity. Beneficial, 539 U.S. at 11.

Nevertheless, Congress chose to create an exclusive remedy for non-willful-misconduct claims: the compensation fund. § 247d-6e(a). Congress expressly said that "[t]he remedy provided by [§ 247d-6e(a)] shall be exclusive of any other civil action or proceeding for any claim or suit this section encompasses, except for a [willful-misconduct claim] under section 247d-6d of this title." § 247d-6e(d)(4) (emphasis added). Thus, the PREP Act expressly designates the compensation fund as the exclusive remedy for non-willful-misconduct claims under the PREP Act.

The compensation fund aims to eliminate litigation and "provide[] timely, uniform, and adequate compensation to eligible individuals for covered injuries" without burdening the front-line responders with lawsuits and possible adverse damages awards. § 247d-6e(a). Allowing plaintiffs to pursue state-law claims for damages in state court would defeat the compensation fund's purpose.

2. The PREP Act requires that claims related to the administration or use of covered countermeasures be adjudicated in federal court.

The PREP Act's jurisdictional provisions reinforce the conclusion that the Act completely preempts state-law claims for negligence.

First, the Act gives the District Court for the District of Columbia "exclusive federal jurisdiction" over any claims arising under § 247d-6d(d), the willful-misconduct cause of action. § 247d-6d(e)(1); see also infra at 25 (explaining that a claim arises under § 247d-6d(d) if it relates to the administration of a covered countermeasure, regardless of whether it adequately alleges willful misconduct). The purpose of funneling all litigation to a single federal district court (with appeals heard by a single federal court of appeals) is "consistency." In re WTC Disaster Site, 414 F.3d 352, 377 (2d Cir. 2005) (internal quotation marks omitted). Requiring all litigation of the PREP Act's exclusive federal cause of action to occur in the District Court for the District of Columbia would make little sense if plaintiffs could file claims in state court. State courts evaluating whether the claims evaded the standard for willful misconduct (the only way they could move forward in litigation) "would inevitably produce" precisely the inconsistency Congress sought to avoid when it channeled all litigation to a single court. Id. at 378 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Where Congress vests exclusive jurisdiction in a particular district court, "giv[ing] effect to that intent" requires interpreting the jurisdictional provision "as authorizing the removal of the action to the federal court." In re WTC Disaster Site, 414 F.3d at 375. That is why the Second Circuit held that the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act of 2001, which vested exclusive jurisdiction in the Southern District of New York for suits for damages arising from the September 11 terrorist attacks, "clearly evinced [Congress's] intent that any actions on such claims initiated in state court would be removable to that federal court." Id. at 380. The same is true of the PREP Act.

Second, the PREP Act says that the D.C. Circuit "shall have jurisdiction of an interlocutory appeal by a covered person … of an order denying a motion to dismiss or a motion for summary judgment based on an assertion of" subsection (a)'s "immunity from suit." § 247d-6d(e)(10).

This provision contemplates that defendants will file motions to dismiss and motions for summary judgment asserting immunity, including by arguing that a plaintiff's claims do not meet the definition of willful misconduct set out in the PREP Act and so the exception to immunity does not apply. In other words, the PREP Act contemplates disputes about whether and how the Act applies. And importantly for complete-preemption purposes, this provision mandates that these disputes be litigated and appealed exclusively in federal court. Cf. Neztsosie, 526 U.S. at 484-85 (complete preemption provides "a federal forum … both for litigating a … claim on the merits and for determining whether a claim falls [within the federal cause of action] when removal is contested").

Consider what happens when a plaintiff is allowed to bring negligence claims in state court. Imagine the defendant moves to dismiss, arguing that the PREP Act's immunity provision bars the claims. The state court denies the motion to dismiss, finding that, while the question is close, the plaintiff's claims do not relate to the administration of a covered countermeasure and immunity therefore does not apply. Under the PREP Act, the defendant has the right to an interlocutory appeal to the D.C. Circuit from that "order denying a motion to dismiss … based on an assertion of the immunity from suit conferred by [the PREP Act]." § 247d-6d(e)(10).[3] The D.C. Circuit, however, would lack jurisdiction to hear that appeal: In the federal system, only this Court may review a state-court judgment. 28 U.S.C. § 1257. Congress has not "empowered" any other federal courts "to exercise appellate authority to reverse or modify a state-court judgment." Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 284 (2005) (internal quotation marks omitted).

In short, then, for there to be an immediate appeal to the D.C. Circuit from an adverse immunity decision, the case must already be in federal court, which is decisive evidence of congressional intent for complete preemption. All this confirms that the PREP

[3] The D.C. Circuit recently held that its jurisdiction under § 247d-6d(e)(10) is limited to willful-misconduct claims brought under § 247d-6d(d). Cannon v. Watermark Ret. Cmty., Inc., No. 21-7067, __ F.4th __, 2022 WL 3130653, at *5 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 5, 2022). In so holding, it assumed without deciding that the claims before it were not willful-misconduct claims, but it did not analyze whether any state-law claims not expressly labeled as "willful misconduct" could come within the PREP Act's scope.

Act displaces both state law and state courts, requiring any claim for redress to be brought in a federal forum—judicial for willful-misconduct claims and administrative for non-willful claims. Supra at 20-21. In doing so, Congress completely preempted state-law claims covered by the PREP Act.

Thus, the proper approach to determining whether a plaintiff's claim is completely preempted is to ask whether the plaintiff states a colorable claim that arises under—or "comes within the scope" of—the PREP Act's exclusive cause of action. Beneficial, 539 U.S. at 8. Here, that means deciding whether there is a non-frivolous argument that the PREP Act applies, i.e., that a plaintiff's claim is "for loss caused by, arising out of, relating to, or resulting from the administration to or the use by an individual of a covered countermeasure," § 247d-6d(a)(1)—not whether the claim sufficiently alleges the elements of willful misconduct. If a claim can colorably be said to be for loss relating to the administration of a covered countermeasure, it necessarily arises under § 247d-6d(d), because that is the exclusive cause of action allowed for such loss and the sole exception to immunity from suit. The courts of appeals' holdings to the contrary disrupt the congressional design of a "unified whole-of-nation response to the COVID-19 pandemic" that would give the country the best chance of defeating a national public health emergency. 87 Fed. Reg. at 983.

B. The courts of appeals have wrongly read Beneficial to require an exclusive cause of action and a merits inquiry into the viability of a plaintiff's claims.

The circuits' conclusions on complete preemption rest on two erroneous rationales.

1. The first error is misconstruing Beneficial to require an exclusive federal cause of action for complete preemption when, in fact, an exclusive cause of action is only one way to show that a claim arises under federal law. See Pet. App. 16a; Maglioli, 16 F.4th at 407-08; Mitchell, 28 F.4th at 586-87; Martin, 37 F.4th at 1213. This Court has never held that an exclusive federal cause of action is a necessary prerequisite to complete preemption. Beneficial observed only that it happened to be the fact pattern "[i]n the two categories of cases where this Court ha[d] found complete preemption." 539 U.S. at 8.

The key inquiry is instead whether the federal statute transforms the claim into one that "arises under" federal law, therefore permitting removal. Id. (discussing what is now 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a)). To be sure, creating an "exclusive [federal] cause of action," id., is one way Congress could signal that a claim arises under federal law. So too is enacting a statute saying "expressly" that "a state claim may be removed to federal court." Id. But the same goes for a federal statute that both "wholly displaces the state-law cause of action," id., and "create[s] a federal remedy … that is exclusive," id. at 11 (discussing the National Bank Act). The combination of displacing state law and providing a federal means of redress federalizes the claim, such that a request for relief is "purely a creature of federal law" and "necessarily arises under federal law." Id. at 7 (quotation marks omitted).

There is no doctrinal reason why Congress must create a federal cause of action rather than a non-litigation federal remedy—for example, granting broad immunity from suit to foreclose litigation and creating a federal compensation fund that provides the exclusive remedy for those claims. The administrative or judicial character of an exclusive federal remedy is immaterial so long as the claim can now be said to "arise[] under" federal law. Id. at 8. And a claim to an exclusive federal administrative remedy arises under federal law just as much as a claim pressed in court. In either situation, "there is, in short, no such thing as a state-law claim." Id. at 11. The fact that a plaintiff's suit, once removed, might be dismissed because federal law requires pressing that federal claim in a federal administrative proceeding rather than a federal lawsuit goes to the claim's merit, not to whether the claim has been transformed such that it is now federal in nature. See infra.

2. The courts have compounded the first error by interpreting the supposed "exclusive cause of action" inquiry to require a determination that the plaintiff has stated a meritorious claim for willful misconduct that mirrors the elements of the exclusive federal cause of action. By way of example, the decision below rejected complete preemption across the board because it concluded that the Saldanas' state-law claims for elder abuse, custodial negligence, and wrongful death did not match the PREP Act's standard for willful-misconduct claims.[4] Pet. App. 16a-17a; see also Maglioli, 16 F.4th at 410-11 (rejecting complete preemption for negligence claims because the plaintiffs did not plausibly allege wrongful intent); Mitchell, 28 F.4th at 586-87 (holding that the plaintiff's negligence claims "could not" satisfy the PREP Act's "stringent" standard). That is wrong for multiple reasons.

To start, that analysis contradicts Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila, where this Court expressly rejected the argument that an exclusive federal cause of action completely preempts "only strictly duplicative state causes of action[s]." 542 U.S. 200, 216 (2004). Davila explained that "Congress' intent to make the ERISA civil enforcement mechanism exclusive would be undermined if state causes of action that supplement the ERISA § 502(a) remedies were permitted, even if the elements of the state cause of action did not precisely duplicate the elements of an ERISA claim." Id. (emphasis added). In short, this Court has never required a one-to-one match of elements for there to be complete preemption.

Moreover, the opinions that take this approach read as though they are resolving a kind of reverse motion to dismiss. If the plaintiff's state-law claims would not be cognizable under the exclusive federal cause of action—here, if the plaintiff has not plausibly alleged with particularity all the elements of a claim for willful misconduct—then the plaintiff wins and gets a remand to state court. That rule creates perverse incentives for litigants, allowing a creative plaintiff to evade the exclusive federal cause of action simply by flouting the PREP Act's detailed pleading requirements. See § 247d-6d(e); supra at 8. That is, of course, not how federal jurisdiction works.

[4] That conclusion is especially puzzling for the elder-abuse claim, which alleges that Glenhaven engaged in "despicable conduct" "intended … to cause injury to plaintiffs" by intentionally exposing Mr. Saldana to COVID-19. Pet. App. 42a-43a; cf. § 247d-6d(c)(1) (defining "willful misconduct").

The circuits have fallen into a common trap, collapsing "two sometimes confused or conflated concepts: federal-court 'subject-matter' jurisdiction over a controversy; and the essential ingredients of a federal claim for relief." Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 503 (2006). Subject-matter jurisdiction exists whenever a plaintiff pleads a "colorable" federal claim, meaning one that is not '"wholly insubstantial and frivolous."' Id. at 513 & n.10 (quoting Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682-83 (1946)). Importantly, not every colorable claim will win on the merits—or even make it past the pleading stage. That is because "[t]he jurisdictional question"—"whether the court has power to decide" the claim—is "distinct from the merits question" of whether the claim will succeed. Mata v. Lynch, 576 U.S. 143, 150 (2015). It is settled law "that the absence of a valid (as opposed to arguable) cause of action does not implicate subject-matter jurisdiction." Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 89 (1998). "Jurisdiction, therefore, is not defeated … by the possibility that the averments might fail to state a cause of action on which [a plaintiff] could actually recover." Bell, 327 U.S. at 682.

In Arbaugh, for example, this Court rejected the defendant's argument that federal courts lacked subject-matter jurisdiction over the plaintiff employee's discrimination claim under Title VII because the defendant did not meet Title VII's definition of an "employer"—anyone who has at least 15 employees. 546 U.S. at 503. Because the numerical requirement "does not speak in jurisdictional terms or refer in any way to the jurisdiction of the district courts," the Court held that it was "an element of a plaintiff's claim for relief, not a jurisdictional issue." Id. at 515-16 (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, subject-matter jurisdiction existed even though the employee's discrimination claim could not have succeeded on the merits if the defendant had timely raised that it had fewer than 15 employees. Id. at 516.

Here too, the elements of the PREP Act's cause of action for willful misconduct do not use any jurisdictional language. See § 247d-6d(c)(1), (e)(3). Yet the courts of appeals have treated those elements as barriers to entry into federal court. That is wrong. As stated above, the jurisdictional question is limited to whether a plaintiff states a colorable or arguable claim arising under the PREP Act's exclusive cause of action—that is, whether there is a non-frivolous argument that the claim is for loss relating to use of a covered countermeasure. § 247d-6d(a)(1); supra at 25. This Court should grant review to clarify as much for the courts of appeals.

III. This Court's Review Of The PREP Act Is Urgently Needed As Front-Line Responders Face A Crippling Wave Of Litigation.

A. Front-line responders need the uniform guidance promised by the PREP Act to continue to serve their communities.

Prior to COVID-19, there were few opportunities to interpret the PREP Act. The HHS Secretary had declared public health emergencies only a handful of times. See, e.g., 72 Fed. Reg. 4710 (Feb. 1, 2007) (avian flu); 84 Fed. Reg. 764 (Jan. 31, 2019) (Ebola); 83 Fed. Reg. 38701 (Aug. 7, 2018) (Zika virus); 80 Fed. Reg. 76514 (Dec. 9, 2015) (anthrax). Thankfully, however, those public health emergencies were not on the scale of the COVID-19 pandemic and did not cause significant casualties—or litigation. Before COVID-19, only a single federal case and two state cases had occasion to apply the PREP Act. See Kehler v. Hood, No. 4:11CV1416 FRB, 2012 WL 1945952, at *1 (E.D. Mo. May 30, 2012) (addressing administration of H1N1 vaccine); Casabianca v. Mount Sinai Med. Ctr., No. 112790/10, 2014 WL 10413521 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Dec. 2, 2014) (same); Parker v. St. Lawrence Cnty. Pub. Health Dep't, 102 A.D.3d 140, 145 (N.Y. App. Div. 2012) (same). Whether the statute completely preempted state-law claims had never been litigated.

Then the COVID-19 pandemic struck and proved to be exactly the nightmare scenario contemplated by the PREP Act. The disease was brand-new, so there were no diagnostic tests, treatments, or prevention strategies when it first emerged. Healthcare providers, scientists, and others rushed to fill the void, but things did not always go smoothly. The CDC designed a diagnostic test in January 2020, but issues with the test's design and manufacturing made reliable COVID-19 testing a scarce resource in the critical early months of the pandemic. Peter Whoriskey & Neena Satija, Wash. Post, How U.S. coronavirus testing stalled: Flawed tests, red tape and resistance to using the millions of tests produced by the WHO (Mar. 16, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/4me4e4sn. In those same critical months, efforts to slow the spread of disease were complicated by the lack of clear data as to whether those with asymptomatic infection were contagious. Pien Huang, NPR, What We Know About The Silent Spreaders Of COVID-19 (April 13, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/34utujf4 (interviewing epidemiologist describing asymptomatic transmission as an "an open question"). When confronted with seriously ill patients, healthcare professionals had to analyze treatment options on the fly, before clinical trials could be completed—or even initiated. Press Release, NIH, NIH Clinical Trial of Remdesivir to Treat COVID-19 Begins (Feb. 25, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/5ykmw346 (noting that antiviral remdesivir had been administered to COVID-19 patients even before clinical trial). The situation was so grim in spring 2020 that an organization previously dedicated to setting up field hospitals in war zones opened a 68-bed field hospital in New York City's Central Park to treat overflow COVID-19 patients. Sheri Fink, N.Y. Times, Treating Coronavirus in a Central Park 'Hot Zone' (Apr. 15, 2020), https://tinyurl.com/2p9eajb3.

Confronting this dystopian reality required the expenditure of enormous resources. In 2020, nursing homes and other long-term-care facilities spent $30 billion on personal protective equipment and increasing staffing. See Press Release, Am. Health Care Ass'n, COVID-19 Exacerbates Financial Challenges of Long Term Care Facilities (Feb. 17, 2021), https://tinyurl.com/ycktz64y. It is unsurprising that long-term-care facilities lost over $90 billion between 2020 and 2021, given the magnitude of resources required to combat COVID-19. Id. This situation has played out across the healthcare industry, and it has placed many healthcare providers on the brink of closure.

Despite the heroic efforts of front-line responders, the human toll of the pandemic in the United States has been staggering. The CDC confirmed the first case of COVID-19 in the United States on January 20, 2020. CDC, CDC Museum COVID-19 Timeline (Aug. 16, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/5ak8dvsw. Just three months later—by April 20, 2020—more than 44,000 people had died. CDC, COVID Data Tracker, Trends in Number of COVID-19 Cases and Deaths in The United States Reported to CDC, by State/Territory (Aug. 28, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/384k8xec. Only one month later that number had more than doubled, with over 95,000 dead. Id. COVID-19 has now killed more than one million Americans.

One consequence of COVID-19's devastating death toll has been a torrent of litigation—just as the PREP Act anticipated. Those cases include suits alleging various forms of mismanagement by nursing homes and hospitals in the earliest days of the pandemic, when those institutions were on the front lines of a crisis, waging a life-or-death battle against a novel biological threat with little information and even fewer tools. This crushing wave of litigation is what the PREP Act was designed to avoid. Supra at 5. If anything, the onslaught of COVID-19 litigation has worsened the "climate of apprehension" regarding "litigation exposure" that the PREP Act sought to ameliorate. 151 Cong. Rec. at 30727.

It is critical for this Court to conclusively resolve the preemptive effect of the PREP Act now—before front-line responders barely surviving the financial difficulties caused by the pandemic collapse under the burden of litigation that is supposed to be barred by the PREP Act. This Court's review is necessary not only to settle the question of whether suits are properly filed in state or federal court, but also to ensure the development of a uniform body of law interpreting the PREP Act to limit liability and prevent the continued litigation of meritless claims.

As explained above, the purpose of the PREP Act funneling litigation into the District Court for the District of Columbia and the D.C. Circuit is "consistency." In re WTC Disaster Site, 414 F.3d at 377 (internal quotation marks omitted) (discussing consolidation of all September 11 litigation in the Southern District of New York). In adopting this system, previously used in the post-9/11 Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, id., the PREP Act aims to ensure the development of clear and—more importantly—uniform rules governing conduct and liability in a public health emergency.

If this Court declines to intervene and correct the errors of the courts of appeals, litigation will proceed in dozens of different state courts. Those courts could develop dozens of different rules governing the definition of "covered person," the breadth of "covered countermeasures," the boundaries of willful misconduct, and the many other interpretive questions raised by the Act—a far cry from the consistency that Congress sought.

Different standards in different states will undoubtedly result in different liability for front-line responders. A long-term-care facility in Georgia, for example, might face ruinous liability for conduct that a court just across the state border in Florida finds to fall squarely within the PREP Act's immunity provision. Even a small number of outlier verdicts can have a devastating impact, forcing healthcare facilities teetering at the financial brink out of business. That is precisely what the PREP Act is supposed to prevent.

Further, the burden of litigation—both its direct financial impact and the chilling effect caused by the fear of future litigation—may also impede the ability of front-line responders to rise to meet the next severe global health threat, which could emerge at any time. Indeed, the HHS Secretary recently announced that he will declare a public health emergency related to monkeypox. Press Release, HHS, Biden-Harris Administration Bolsters Monkeypox Response; HHS Secretary Becerra Declares Public Health Emergency (Aug. 4, 2022), https://tinyurl.com/ypbw6ppu. Healthcare providers and others on the front lines of public health emergencies deserve clear rules interpreting the PREP Act before crippling COVID-19 liability affects the response to the next public health crisis. That can only happen if the Court intervenes now.

B. This case—involving a rare appealable remand order—is a good vehicle for review.

An appeal from a district court's remand order offers the ideal vehicle for this Court to review the question presented. The issue was resolved at the outset of the case, so there are no adequate and independent state grounds that could impede this Court's review. And this is a rare case where a remand order is appealable. Usually, "[a]n order remanding a case to the State court from which it was removed is not reviewable on appeal or otherwise." 28 U.S.C. § 1447(d). Here, however, one of the original grounds for removal was the federal-officer removal statute, § 1442. Pet. App. 6a. When a case is "removed pursuant to section 1442," any "order remanding [the] case to the State court" is "reviewable by appeal." § 1447(d). And under § 1447(d), "the whole of [the] order"—not just the portion addressing federal-officer removal—is reviewable. BP, 141 S. Ct. at 1538. In sum, there may not be many opportunities for this Court to review the PREP Act going forward, so it should take the opportunity to address the critically important question presented here.

CONCLUSION

This Court should grant the petition for a writ of certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

Lann G. McIntyre
Kathleen M. Walker
550 West C Street
Suite 1700
San Diego, CA 92101

Lauren A. Weber
ORRICK, HERRINGTON & SUTCLIFFE LLP
1152 15th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20005

E. Joshua Rosenkranz
Counsel of Record
Andrew D. Silverman
Marc R. Shapiro
Alyssa Barnard-Yanni
ORRICK, HERRINGTON & SUTCLIFFE LLP
51 West 52nd Street
New York, NY 10019
(212) 506-5000
jrosenkranz@orrick.com

August 29, 2022