Attorney for Petitioner

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the Court of Appeals misapplied this Court's holding in McDonough in finding that juror J.B. was an unbiased juror.
2. Whether the Court of Appeals erred in holding that juror J.B. was not presumptively biased where he made multiple false statements during voir dire and at a subsequent hearing and admitted to lying during voir to concealing his felony convictions.
3. Whether McDonough requires a showing of actual juror bias before a new trial may be granted, or alternatively, whether a showing of implied or inferred juror bias is sufficient to demonstrate a valid basis for a challenge for cause to warrant a new trial.
4. Whether the multiple interpretations of McDonough's two prong test requires this Court to grant certiorari to provide clarity and avoid disparate results in cases throughout the circuits.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioner Earl McCoy respectfully petitions for a Writ of Certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

This is a successive Writ of Certiorari which follows this Court's judgment granting the previous Writ herein (21-6490), vacating the previous judgment of the Court of Appeals and remanding to that court for reconsideration in light of United States v. Taylor, 596 U.S., (2022)

The remand was focused solely on the issue regarding whether Attempted Hobb's Act Robbery is a crime of violence but was silent regarding the other issue raised in the original Writ as to whether Petitioner's conviction should be vacated and remanded for a new trial because of juror bias.

The Court of Appeals decision below did vacate two of Petitioner's §924 (c) convictions in light of Taylor but did not vacate the entire verdict on the basis of juror bias. In this successive petition, Petitioner requests that the Court grant a Writ of Certiorari which addresses the juror bias issue. The Court of Appeals decision below following remand is reproduced in the Appendix (1a-7a) and is published at United State v. McCoy, 58 F.4th 72 (2d cir 2023). The Second Circuit’s original opinion (United States v. McCoy, No. 17-3515 (2nd Cir. 2021) (Docket Nos. 17-3515L, 17-3516, 18-619, 18-625) is published at 995 F. 3d 32 and reproduced in the appendix(9a-88a). The district court’s judgment is published at United States v. Nix, 275 F. Supp. 3d 420, (W.D.N.Y. 2017) and is reproduced in the appendix(89a-153a).

JURISDICTION

The Second Circuit entered its decision on January 23, 2023. Petitioner did not file a motion for rehearing, or in the alternative for en banc review. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTORY AND CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

There are no statutory provisions involved. The Sixth Amendment provides “In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.”

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Originally, Earl McCoy and his co-defendant, Matthew Nix, were convicted on all eleven (11) counts of third Superseding Indictment No. 14-6181 after a jury trial held in the Western District of New York on March 17, 2017. The counts of conviction consisted of one count of Conspiracy to Commit a Hobbs Act Robbery, five (5) counts of Possession of a Firearm in relation to a Crime of Violence, two (2) counts of Attempted Hobbs Act robbery, one count of Hobbs Act Robbery, one count of Conspiracy with Intent to Possess and Distribute Marijuana and Heroin, and one count of being a Felon in Possession of a Weapon. (See Court of Appeals Special Appendix, hereafter “SPA”). (SPA-11).

Upon his conviction, he was ultimately sentenced to an aggregate term of 1,620 Months, or 135 years’ incarceration. (SPA 9-10). At the trial in this matter prospective juror number 3, (hereafter “J.B.”), filled out his juror questionnaire falsely stating that he had never been convicted of a felony. (33a) As the record would later show, he had been convicted of two (2) felonies. (34a) During the day long voir dire, J.B. continued to give false answers on multiple matters, stating that he had never been to a prison or jail, had never been involved in a court proceeding, had never sat on a jury, had never committed a burglary, had never been the victim of a burglary, and that there was nothing about his background which in all fairness the parties should know about before deciding whether to select him as a juror in this case. (see Court of Appeals Confidential Appendix hereafter “CCA”) (CCA 229-242). Since none of his false answers could be described as being motivated by a desire to be excluded from the panel, one can only surmise that J. B.’s falsehoods were motivated by a desire on his part to be selected to the jury. It is indisputable that honest answers to these questions would have lessened his chances of being selected and could very well be the basis for a challenge for cause.

Since the jurors had been told that Defendants were charged in several counts with committing burglaries and home invasions which were for the purpose of obtaining drugs, guns, cash and jewelry, J.B.’s nondisclosure was especially notable when it was discovered after sentencing that J.B. had been arrested for a Burglary 2nd Degree charge in Rochester, New York wherein it was alleged that he and others had shot out the back window of an apartment. After going inside, he allegedly stole two (2) handguns and some gold according to his co-defendant. J.B. admitted to police that they stole a pouch containing heroin.

He also withheld that he had been the victim of a burglary years later when his home was entered and several items, including jewelry, checks and thousands of dollars in merchandise were stolen. One of the items stolen was a personal ring with his initials on it. (See Court of Appeals Appendix, hereafter “CA”). (CA-3499-3500). In the trial, one of the victims, Marc Agostinelli, also had a personal ring stolen from his home at 44 Polo Place. A detailed account of the voir dire is related in the Appellant’s main brief. (Pgs. 6-18).

After the verdict, Petitioner and his co- defendant, Nix, made motions for a new trial when it was discovered that J.B. had a felony conviction and further details concerning his additional false statements followed. The Court ordered a hearing at which J.B. testified with a promise of immunity from the Government for his truthful testimony.

Despite this, J.B. continued to lie at the hearing. In describing his first conviction for burglary, in which he acted as a get-away driver, Mr. Bradford claimed that he was not aware that his co-defendants were committing a burglary and he was “railroaded” into taking a plea. (CA 3409). After being confronted with a signed confession and police reports indicating property from the burglary was found at his home, J.B. admitted that he was lying. (CA 35-13) He went on throughout the hearing to give, at times false, and at other times incoherent, contradictory, and confusing responses. A more complete description of the hearing is set forth in Appellant's brief. (Pgs. 18-33).

After sentencing, and during the pendency of the Appeal, records concerning the Burglary, 2nd Degree charge committed by J.B. were delivered to counsel for Mr. Nix on November 24, 2017. These records had been the subject of a subpoena and Freedom of Information request prior to the juror hearing which had been held the previous June. (CA 3989).

Despite efforts made to obtain these police reports prior to the hearing, none of them were produced until after the Appellants were sentenced and efforts to obtain them continued. The court's denial of the second Rule 33 motion was the subject of a second appeal which was consolidated with the first appeal.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

A. The Court defined Petitioner's Sixth Amendment rights by only employing the McDonough two prong standard, contrary to the law of other circuits.

The Court of Appeals evaluated Petitioner's Sixth Amendment right to trial by a fair and impartial jury by employing the two-prong test set forth in McDonough Power Equipment, Inc. v. Greenwood, 464 U.S. 548

(1984). Because of the similarity of J. B.’s life experiences with the subject matter of the trial, his false answers should have raised a presumption of bias which other circuits have used in evaluating the right to a fair and impartial jury. (see McCoy v. Goldstone, 652 F.2d 654 (6th Cir. 1981)). Employing that presumption, the Court could have only concluded that it would apply, and Petitioner would have been entitled to a new trial.

In McDonough, this Court espoused a two-part test to determine whether a juror’s false statements during voir dire implicate his/her impartiality and thus necessitates a new trial. The Court held that “to obtain a new trial . . . a party must first demonstrate that a juror failed to honestly answer a material question on voir dire, and then further show that a correct response would have provided a valid basis for a challenge for cause”. Id. at 556.

McDonough’s two prong test, promulgated for a civil case, went on to be employed in criminal cases but was never intended by this court to be used in defining a defendant’s Sixth Amendment rights. In his concurring opinion, Justice Blackmun noted “the Court’s holding (did) not . . . foreclose the normal avenue of relief available to a party who is asserting that he did not have the benefit of an impartial jury”. Id. at 556.

Thus, it has been widely recognized that while McDonough can be applied to criminal cases, it is not the exclusive test for determining whether a new trial is warranted. A showing that a juror was biased either consciously or by inference or implication by his background and prior life experiences can also be the basis for granting a defendant a new trial because his right to a fair and impartial jury has been violated under the Sixth Amendment, without resort to a two-prong test. Such was held by the First and Fourth Circuits in Fitzgerald v. Greene, 150 F. 3d 357, 362-363 (4th Cir. 1998); Jones v. Cooper, 311 F. 3d 306 (4th Cir. 2002) (cert. den. 539 U.S. 980 (2003)); and United States v. Sampson, 820 F. Supp. 151, 171 (D.C. Ma. 2011), aff'd Sampson v. United States, 744 F. 3d 150 (1st Cir. 2013).

The district court opinion conflated the McDonough and Sixth Amendment standards concluding that neither prong of the McDonough test had been met because although it was undisputed that J.B. had been deliberately deceitful, he was not motivated by a desire to secure a seat on the jury.

Although McDonough opinion obviously does not mention the Sixth Amendment, the District Court opinion and Court of Appeals applied McDonough as if it defined the Defendant's/Appellant's Sixth Amendment rights. This is best exemplified in the following passage from the opinion below in which the Court of Appeals approved the district Court's decision claiming that "the Court correctly laid out the relevant Sixth Amendment principles, describing standards indicated by the Supreme Court in McDonough and applied in past cases in this Court . . . "(APP. 114a). The Court of Appeals apparent belief that McDonough, a civil case, lays out Sixth Amendment principles is obviously incorrect and ignores the entire body of case law which has found juror bias where information is withheld, and bias is presumed because of the life experiences of the juror which can result in actual, inferred or implied bias.

No other Court of Appeals requires that bias has to be proved to such an extent that it requires a defendant to show that a juror lied for the specific purpose of obtaining a seat on the jury. Simply showing that the bias violates the defendant's right to a fair and impartial jury is the standard.

In United States v. Eubanks, 591 F. 2d 513 (9th Cir. 1979) the defendants were convicted of conspiracy to distribute cocaine. After the trial, Defendants learned that one of the jurors had two (2) sons who were serving long prison terms for murder and robbery. Both of the juror's sons were heroin users and their crimes had been committed in an effort to acquire additional heroin. The juror had stated in his juror questionnaire that he was married with no children. During voir dire, the juror did not respond when asked if any family member had been involved in the “defense of a criminal case”.

After discovery of the facts about the juror and his sons’ experiences, defense counsel moved for a new trial, which was denied without a hearing. The Appellate Court reversed and remanded for a new trial. In so doing, the Court noted that had the trial judge known about the juror’s son’s experience with heroin, he would have excused the juror for cause. The “son’s” tragic involvement with heroin bars the inference that (the juror) served as an impartial juror”, Id at 517. The Ninth Circuit did not imply motive to the juror’s false statement or even suggest the statement was a lie, much less that it was motivated by a desire to be seated on the jury.

As the Eighth Circuit has held, bias is implied where the relationship between the juror and some aspect of the litigation is such that it is highly unlikely that the average person could remain impartial . . .”. Sanders v. Norris, 529 F. 3d 787, 792 (8th Cir. 2008). The Seventh Circuit has held that in some circumstances, bias is also implied “when there are similarities, between the personal experiences of the juror and the issues being litigated, the bias is implied”; Hunley v. Godinez, 975 F. 2d 316 (7th Cir. 1992). The Tenth Circuit provides another example of implied or presumed bias occurring in Burton v. Johnson, 948 F. 2d 1150, 1157 (10th Cir. 1981), where the prospective juror had been the victim of a crime or had experienced a situation similar to the one issue at a trial. There, the juror had been a domestic abuse victim in a murder trial where the defense was battered wife syndrome. Such was also the case in the D.C. Circuit, Jackson v. United States, 395 F. 2d 615, 617-618 (D.C. Cir. 1968). (Court considered juror presumptively biased because he had been a participant in a “love triangle” analogous to the one at issue in trial). This also occurred in the Third Circuit, United States ex rel. DeVita v. McCorkie, 248 F. 2d 1, 8 (3rd Cir. 1957) (en banc). Court imputed bias to juror in a robbery case because juror had been a robbery victim prior to trial.

Here, the Court of Appeals did not even follow its own precedent in United States v. Parse, 789 F. 3d 83 (2nd Cir. 2015), where the Court stated, “where the juror deliberately concealed information, ‘bias’ is to be presumed” Id at 111. Instead, it modified Parse, holding it is only presumed when a juror “lies for the purpose of securing a seat on the jury”. (40a) This caveat is unique among the Circuit Courts. It differs from the Sixth Circuit which has held that such presumption of bias applies, regardless of motive. McCoy v. Goldstone, 652 F. 2d 654, 659 (6th Cir 1981).

There were multiple instances of similar behavior engaged in by J.B.

which were similar to the charges for which Petitioner was being tried. Petitioner was accused of breaking into homes to steal money, jewelry and drugs. J.B. had been arrested for doing the exact same thing. (CA-3966) More recently, J.B. had been the victim of a burglary where thousands of dollars were stolen along with jewelry and a ring. (CA-3500) Like J.B., one of the victims, Marc Agostenilli, had a personal ring stolen. Nowhere does the district court or Court of Appeals even discuss these facts in the context of Petitioner's Sixth Amendment right to an impartial jury. Instead, the Court simply defines the Sixth Amendment rights of Petitioner as being defined by two prong tests enunciated in McDonough. These similar experiences to aspects of the litigation, are precisely what lead 7th, 9th and 10th circuits in Hunley, Burton and Eubanks respectively to order new trials based upon implied bias.

This Court has held in Irvin v. Doud, 266 U.S. 717, 722 (1961) and Turner v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 466 (1965) that the Sixth Amendment guarantees the criminally accused a fair trial. Virtually every circuit dealing with the issue has not imposed a burden upon a Petitioner that he looks into the mind of the juror and prove a specific intent on the part of the juror, who tells multiple lies, that his intent was to secure a seat on the jury. Honest answers to the questions would have revealed bias so great that bias would have been implied or imputed to the juror.

B. The Courts of Appeals are divided in their interpretation of McDonough, resulting in disparate outcomes amongst the Circuits.

The first prong of McDonough asks whether the juror failed to “honestly” answer a question on voir dire. The First, Fourth and Sixth circuits have held that a new trial may be granted even where the juror’s false statement was inadvertent. (See United States v. Solorio, 337 F. 3d 580, 596 Cn. 12 (6th Cir. 2003), cert. den., 540 U.S. 1063 (2003); Cooper at 311 F. 3d 310 (4th Cir. 2002) ; Amirault v. Fair, 968 F. 2d 1404, 1405-1406 (1st Cir. 1992) (cert den., 506 U.S. 1000 (1992)).

The Eight, Eleventh and D.C. Circuits require a new trial only where the juror’s dishonesty was intentional, (See United States v. Hawkins, 796 F. 3d 843, 863-864 (8th Cir. 2015) cert. den. 136 S. Ct. 2030 (2016); United States v. Carpa, 271 F. 3d 962, 967 (11th Cir. 2001) cert. den. 537 U.S. 889, (2002); United States v. White, 116 F. 3d 903, 930 (D.C. Cir. 1997) cert. den. 522 U.S. 960 (1997)).

Unlike any other Circuit, the Second Circuit requires that not only must the juror’s dishonesty be intentional, but Petitioner must have proved that it was for the specific purpose of obtaining a seat on the jury. This position fails to take into account the McDonough Court’s teachings and actually precludes a finding of bias in situations where a juror is not consciously aware of his bias toward a litigant, (see McDonough at 556.)

The second prong of McDonough requires that the dishonest statement of the juror must be of such magnitude that it would “create a valid basis for a challenge for cause”. Each of the circuits has employed different criteria in employing this prong. For example, the Fourth and Eighth circuits hold that a valid basis for a challenge for cause exists where disqualification would be mandatory, Hawkins, 796 F. 3d at 863-864; Conaway v. Polk, 453 F. 3d 567, 588 (4th Cir. 2006). This is not required in the First and Second Circuits, Parse, 789 F. 3d at 111; Sampson v. United States, 724 F. 3d 150, 165-166 (1st Cir. 2013). The Third, Sixth and Eleventh Circuits hold that a valid basis for a challenge for cause exists where disqualification would have been mandatory because of actual or implied bias. See United States v. Claxton, 766 F. 3d 280, 301 (3rd Cir. 2014); Johnson v. Luoma, 425 F. 3d 318, 326 (6th Cir. 2005); Carpa, 271 F. 3d at 967. The absence of “a valid basis for challenge for cause” provides an unjustifiable risk of unequal outcomes and sentences.

C. The Court misapplied McDonough.

The Second Circuit's interpretation of McDonough which prescribes that a juror must have a motive of obtaining a seat on the jury for providing a dishonest answer in the first prong of the analyses is not followed by any other court and was incorrectly applied in this case. In fact, if this Court in McDonough had required that a juror's dishonest answer be accompanied with such a dishonest intent to sneak or smuggle one's way on to the jury, there would not be a need for a second prong.

Any lie told by the juror to obtain a seat on the jury would have to be of such materiality and of such magnitude that it would betray an intense bias requiring a challenge for cause. In the words of Justice Cardozo, such juror would "not be a juror at all" and "his presence on the jury would be a pretense and a sham", Clark v. United States, 289 U.S.1, 13 (1933).

The Second Circuit's standard set forth herein requires that a juror's false statement must be made with intent to obtain a seat on the jury. McDonough holds that "[t]he motives for concealing information may vary, but only those reasons that affect a juror's impartiality can truly be said to affect the fairness of a trial." McDonough, 464 U.S. at 556. However, to hold that juror impartiality is only implicated where a juror deliberately attempts to secure a seat on a jury is to ignore the well-established principles of implied and inferred bias. Justice Blackmun's concurring opinion in McDonough, joined by Justices Stevens and O'Connor, makes clear that the only relevant inquiry is juror bias, regardless of intentional juror dishonesty or related motive, and that such bias may be actual, implied or inferred. See McDonough, 464 U.S. at 556-67 (“I understand the Court’s holding not to foreclose the normal avenue of relief available to a party who is asserting that he did not have the benefit of an impartial jury. Thus, regardless of whether a juror’s answer is honest or dishonest, it remains within a trial court’s option, in determining whether a juror was biased, to order a post-trial hearing at which the movant has the opportunity to demonstrate actual bias or, in exceptional circumstances, that the facts are such that bias is to be inferred.”) (Blackmun, J., concurring, joined by Stevens and O’Connor, JJ.) (citations omitted). Notably, the Blackmun concurrence provided the swing fifth, sixth, and seventh votes to form the McDonough majority. See, e.g., Dyer v. Calderon, 151 F.3d 970, 985 (9th Cir. 1998). Justice Brennan’s concurring opinion in McDonough, joined by Justice Marshall, similarly holds that “the proper focus when ruling on a motion for new trial in this situation should be on the bias of the juror and the resulting prejudice to the litigant. . . . Because the bias of a juror will rarely be admitted by the juror himself, ‘partly because the juror may have an interest in concealing his own bias and partly because the juror may be unaware of it,’ it necessarily must be inferred from surrounding facts and circumstances. . . . Whether the juror answered a particular question on voir dire honestly or dishonestly, or whether an inaccurate answer was inadvertent or intentional, are simply factors to be considered in this latter determination of actual bias.” (Brennan, J., concurring, joined by Marshall, J.) (quoting, Smith v. Phillips, 455 U.S. 209, 221-22 (1982)). As discussed, supra, several other circuits disagree with the Second Circuit’s interpretation of McDonough as providing a motive requirement, holding that a new trial may be granted even upon a finding of inadvertent juror dishonesty. See, e.g., Solorio, 337 F.3d at 596 n.12; Cooper, 311 F.3d at 310; Fair, 968 F.2d at 1405-1406. The McDonough standard was satisfied.

Regardless, even assuming, arguendo, that McDonough’s first prong does require intentional juror dishonesty motivated by a desire to sit on the jury, McDonough’s first prong was satisfied here. “When asked whether he had wanted to serve as a juror in this case, J.B. three times responded ‘Yes’ (H.Tr. 93, 96).” McCoy, Docket No. 17-3515(L) *29. App. 102a. It was an abuse of discretion for the district court and Second Circuit to instead rely upon J.B.’s contradictory fourth response, “no,” “when later again asked whether he had wanted to serve as a juror in this case . . . ([H. Tr.] 97, 235, 242, 243).” Id. App. 102a. This is especially true as J.B. witnessed how numerous prospective jurors were excused during jury selection for cause and knew that a truthful response during voir dire as to his criminal background could have similarly excused him from serving on the jury.

D. The Second Circuit Misapplied McDonough's Second Prong

McDonough provides that;

(1) the defendant must first demonstrate that the juror failed to answer honestly a material question on voir dire; and

(2) the defendant then must also demonstrate that “a correct response would have provided a valid basis for a challenge for cause[,]” as aptly observed by the District Court below, “a bright line does not divide the two prongs of the test, and there is some blurring of the factors to be considered under each prong.” Nix, 275 F. Supp. at 438. App. 38a.

A three-way split amongst the Circuits remains extant in interpreting the blurred line expressed above. The First and Second Circuits hold that the standard is satisfied so long as a reasonable judge, made aware of the withheld information, would have excused the juror for cause, even if disqualification was not mandatory. Parse, 789 F.3d at 83; Sampson, 724 F.3d at 165-166. The Third, Sixth, and Eleventh Circuits have imposed a more stringent standard, opining “a valid basis for a challenge for cause” exists only where disqualification would be mandatory, either because of actual or implied bias. See Claxton, 766 F.3d at 301; Luoma, 425 F.3d at 326 (6th Cir. 2005); Carpa, 271 F.3d at 967. The D.C. Circuit holds that only actual bias—and not implied bias—can constitute a “valid basis.” United States v. North, 910 F.2d 843, 904 (D.C. Cir. 1990).

The court found that J.B. continued to lie about his criminal history at the evidentiary Hearing after having been granted immunity for non-perjurious Hearing testimony, until such time as he was presented with documentary evidence exposing his lies. J.B.’s concealment was, in fact, perjurious testimony. In applying Parse, supra, the District Court looked to the nature of the dishonesty as “a mission apparently ‘so powerful as to cause the juror to commit a serious crime’ –it ‘reflect[s] an impermissible partiality on the juror’s part.’” Nix, 275 F. Supp. 3d at 440. J.B. below did the exact same thing. There is no utility in parsing the definition as to whether the juror was motivated to commit a crime to obtain a seat on the jury or otherwise. The correct analysis is whether the commission of the crime, “bespeaks a risk of partiality sufficiently significant to warrant granting the trial judge discretion to excuse the juror for cause.” Id at 441.

J. B.’s implied bias prevented the Petitioner from being tried by an unbiased jury. Petitioner’s appeal was denied despite it being clear that the Petitioner’s rights were usurped. J.B.’s dishonesty and flavor of deceitfulness enhances the bias finding. The Judge in the matter in fact made a finding of fact as to J.B.'s dishonesty.

There were a number of instances where J.B. was intentionally misleading. Prior to voir dire, the court mailed a questionnaire to all prospective jurors. Question 6 specifically asked "Have you ever been convicted, either by your guilty or nolo contendere plea or by a court or jury trial, of a state or federal crime for which punishment could have been more than one year in prison?" J.B. answered this question by checking "No." Nix, 275 F. Supp.3d at 425 n.4., 445. App. 4a-5a, 55a-56a.

Additionally, during the oral voir dire, while under oath, J.B. failed to provide accurate responses to the following material questions:

- (1) "Has anyone ever been the victim of a home robbery?"
- (2) "Has anyone ever served on a jury before?"
- (3) "Has anyone ever been a defendant in a criminal case?"
- (4) "Has anyone ever visited a jail or correctional facility other than in connection with.. your educational curriculum"

(5) “Has anyone had anyone close to them, other than what we already discussed, . . . anyone close to them convicted of a crime?”

Nix, 275 F. Supp. 3d at 426.

J.B. failed to respond truthfully to any of the above questions, id. at 425-26, or respond to the Court’s question when asked whether there was “anything in fairness to both sides that you think we should know that we haven’t covered already” or “is there anything that you think we should know that we haven’t covered up to this point?” Id.

The Court went on to note that where such concealment is in furtherance of a scheme to smuggle oneself onto a jury, that, “certainly when possible non-objectivity is secreted and compounded by the deliberate untruthfulness of a potential juror’s answer on voir dire, the result is deprivation of the defendant’s rights to a fair trial.” Nix, 275 F. Supp. 3d at 440. Where the juror has deliberately concealed information, “bias” is to be “presume[d].” Id. Whether the prospective juror lies to obtain a seat on the jury, as an anarchist, or simply a pathological liar speaks to risk. The question of whether a potential juror would lie while under oath and subject to penalties of perjury sufficiently establishes the risk of impartiality as to nullify any inquiry as to that juror’s intentions. Many prospective jurors will lie on voir dire about their work schedules or family responsibilities to get themselves excused. Some jurors may lie to obtain a seat on a jury because they want to be selected. Listening to what they lie about will give you a strong clue about their motives. Some may do so because they wish to sway the jury determination. Although liars who get themselves excused is an annoyance which reduces the available jury pool, liars who do so for the purpose of getting themselves selected to the jury are presumed to be biased and this creates a grave danger to our system of justice.

There is a great need amongst the Circuits for uniform guidance on the application of the Sixth Amendment to cases where juror bias occurs. Further, no Supreme Court cases has ever explained how McDonough should be applied to criminal cases, or if it should be applied. Clarification is also required as to how it should be applied so that uniformity and clarification can be achieved in this increasingly vexing area of the law.

CONCLUSION

For any and all of the foregoing reasons it is respectfully requested that the Court grant the Petition herein.

EARL MCCOY, AKA P, MATHEW NIX, AKA

Defendants-Appellants.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of New York
No. 14-cr-6181, Elizabeth A. Wolford, Judge.

Before: KEARSE, PARKER, and SULLIVAN, Circuit Judges.

In 2021, this Court affirmed in part and reversed in part Defendants' convictions after trial in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Elizabeth A. Wolford, Judge). Among other things, we affirmed Defendants' convictions under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) for brandishing firearms during and in relation to attempted Hobbs Act robberies. See generally United States v. McCoy, 995 F.3d 32 (2d Cir. 2021). The Supreme Court has now vacated our judgment and remanded to us for further consideration in light of its decision in United States v. Taylor, 142 S. Ct. 2015 (2022). See McCoy v. United States, 142 S. Ct. 2863 (2022); Nix v. United States, 142 S. Ct. 2860 (2022). Having given due consideration to Taylor, we now reverse Defendants' section 924(c) convictions for brandishing firearms during and in relation to attempted Hobbs Act robberies. We leave all other aspects of our prior decision intact.

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED.

Tiffany H. Lee, Assistant United States Attorney, for Trini E. Ross, United States Attorney for the Western District of New York, Rochester, NY, for Appellee.

Robert W. Wood, Law Office of Robert W. Wood, Rochester, NY, for Defendant-Appellant Earl McCoy.

Michael Jos. Witmer, Law Office of Michael Witmer, Rochester, NY, for Defendant-Appellant Mathew Nix.

PER CURIAM:

In 2021, this Court issued an opinion affirming in part and reversing in part the convictions of Defendants Earl McCoy and Mathew Nix after trial in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Elizabeth A. Wolford, Judge). Among other things, we affirmed Defendants' convictions under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) for brandishing firearms during and in relation to attempted Hobbs Act robberies. See generally United States v. McCoy, 995 F.3d 32 (2d Cir. 2021). The Supreme Court has now vacated our judgment and remanded to us for further consideration in light of its decision in United States v. Taylor, 142 S. Ct. 2015 (2022). See McCoy v. United States, 142 S. Ct. 2863 (2022); Nix v. United States, 142 S. Ct. 2860 (2022). We assume familiarity with our earlier opinion and order.

Having given due consideration to Taylor, we now reverse Defendants' section 924(c) convictions on Counts 4 and 6 for brandishing firearms during and in relation to attempted Hobbs Act robberies. As the prosecution and the defense now agree, after Taylor, attempted Hobbs Act robbery no longer qualifies as a crime of violence under section 924(c)(3)(A). More specifically, the Supreme Court explained that attempted Hobbs Act robbery is not a crime of violence pursuant to section 924(c)(3)(A)'s elements clause because an attempt does not categorically require the government to prove that the defendant used, attempted to use, or threatened to use force against the person or property of another. Taylor, 142 S. Ct. at 2020–21. Rather, the government need only prove that the defendant intended to take property by force or threat and then took a substantial step to achieve that end – which hypothetically could fall short of the use, attempted use, or threatened use of force against another person or his property. Id.; see also, e.g., Alvarado-Linares v. United States, 44 F.4th 1334, 1346 (11th Cir. 2022) (describing the holding of Taylor).

We nevertheless reject Defendants' contention that we should also reverse their section 924(c) convictions on Count 12 for brandishing firearms during and in relation to a completed Hobbs Act robbery. Defendants make much of Taylor's offhand statement that "[w]hatever one might say about completed Hobbs Act robbery, attempted Hobbs Act robbery does not satisfy the elements clause." Id. at 2020 (emphasis in original). According to Defendants, this turn of phrase casts doubt on whether a completed Hobbs Act robbery is itself a crime of violence. But we see nothing in Taylor's language or reasoning that undermines this Court's settled understanding that completed Hobbs Act robberies are categorically crimes of violence pursuant to section 924(c)(3)(A). See, e.g., United States v. Hill, 890 F.3d 51, 56–60 (2d Cir. 2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 844 (2019); McCoy, 995 F.3d at 53–55. Indeed, unlike in Taylor, Defendants here have presented no hypothetical case in which a Hobbs Act robbery could be committed without the use, attempted use, or threatened use of force against another person or his property. See Hill, 890 F.3d at 59–60 (holding that even "placing a victim in fear of injury by threatening the indirect application of physical force" does constitute the threatened use of physical force and thus does not "demonstrate that a Hobbs Act robbery is not categorically a crime of violence for the purpose of § 924(c)(3)(A)"); see also United States v. Taylor, 979 F.3d 203, 207–08 (4th Cir. 2020) (explaining how its holding that attempted Hobbs Act robbery does not categorically qualify as a crime of violence under section 924(c)(3)(A) was consistent with its holding in United States v. Mathis, 932 F.3d 242 (4th Cir. 2019), that substantive Hobbs Act robbery does categorically qualify as such a crime), aff'd, 142 S. Ct. 2015.

In addition to their Taylor-based theory, Defendants also ask us to reverse their section 924(c) convictions for brandishing firearms during and in relation to a Hobbs Act robbery based on United States v. Chappelle, 41 F.4th 102 (2d Cir. 2022). We decline to do so. Even if we were to consider this argument despite the Supreme Court’s limited remand instruction to reconsider our decision in light of Taylor, see, e.g., Escalera v. Coombe, 852 F.2d 45, 47 (2d Cir. 1988); United States v. Duarte-Juarez, 441 F.3d 336, 340 (5th Cir. 2006), we as a panel do not have the ability to effectively overrule prior panel decisions like Hill based on the panel decision in Chappelle, see, e.g., Lotes Co. v. Hon Hai Precision Indus. Co., 753 F.3d 395, 405 (2d Cir. 2014). In any event, we do not read Chappelle to be inconsistent with Hill. In Chappelle, we held that Hobbs Act robbery is not a crime of violence under the elements clause of the United States Sentencing Guidelines’ career offender provision because Hobbs Act robbery “broadly . . . include[s] crimes that can be based on threats against either people or property,” 41 F.4th at 109, whereas the Sentencing Guidelines define crimes of violence as offenses that have “as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another,” id. (quoting U.S.S.G. § 4B1.2(a)(1)) (emphasis in original). The same is not true for section 924(c)(3)(A). See, e.g., United States v. O’Connor, 874 F.3d 1147, 1158 (10th Cir. 2017) (“There is nothing incongruous about holding that Hobbs Act robbery is a crime of violence for purposes of 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A), which includes force against a person or property, but not for purposes of U.S.S.G. 4B1.2(a)(1), which is limited to force against a person.” (emphasis in original)).¹

We also reject Defendants’ contention that, having previously reversed Defendants’ Count 2 convictions, see McCoy, 995 F.3d at 53, and having now reversed Defendants’ Count 4 and 6 convictions, we must reverse all the other counts and remand the case for a new trial based on prejudicial spillover from the reversed counts. “When an appellate court reverses some but not all counts of a multicount conviction, the court must determine if prejudicial spillover from evidence introduced in support of the reversed count requires the remaining convictions to be upset.” United States v. Rooney, 37 F.3d 847, 855 (2d Cir. 1994). In weighing a claim of prejudicial spillover, courts look at several factors, one being the “similarities and differences” between the evidence on the reversed counts and the remaining counts. Id. “[W]here the reversed and the remaining counts arise out of similar facts, and the evidence introduced would have been admissible as to both,” courts have typically concluded that the defendant has suffered no prejudice. Id. at 855–56. Here, primarily because the evidence for the reversed section 924(c) counts flows from the same facts and circumstances as the remaining counts, we likewise conclude that the Defendants have not suffered prejudicial spillover as a result of the now dismissed counts.

Accordingly, for the reasons stated herein, we REVERSE Defendants’ convictions on Counts 4 and 6, and, for the reasons stated in our earlier opinion, we REVERSE Defendants’ convictions on Count 2. Also for the reasons stated in our earlier opinion, we AFFIRM Defendants’ convictions in all other respects and REMAND this matter to the district court for dismissal of Counts 2, 4, and 6 and for resentencing, including consideration of the First Step Act in the first instance.

18 Appeals in Nos. 17-3515 and 17-3516 from judgments of the United States

19 District Court for the Western District of New York, Elizabeth A. Wolford, Judge, convicting each defendant of Hobbs Act conspiracy, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1951(a); Hobbs Act robbery and attempted robbery, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1951(a) and 2; brandishing firearms during and in relation to crimes of violence, to wit, the Hobbs Act conspiracy, Hobbs Act robbery, and Hobbs Act attempted robbery counts, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 924(c)(1)(C)(i) and 2; conspiracy to distribute and to possess with intent to distribute marijuana and heroin, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 846, 841(a)(1), and 841(b)(1)(D); and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g)(1) and 924(a)(2); convicting defendant McCoy of possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug trafficking crime, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 924(c)(1)(A)(i) and 2; convicting defendant Nix of possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug trafficking crime, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 924(c)(1)(C)(i) and 2; and sentencing defendants McCoy and Nix principally to imprisonment for 135 years and 155 years, respectively.

* The Clerk of Court is instructed to amend the official caption to conform with the above.

In Nos. 18-619 and 18-625, defendants appeal from an order of the district court denying their postjudgment motions for reconsideration of the denial of their postverdict motions seeking a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors had given false responses to voir dire questions with regard to whether he had previously been

1 convicted of a felony. See United States v. Nix, No. 6:14-CR-06181, 2018 WL 1009282
2 (W.D.N.Y. Feb. 20, 2018); United States v. Nix, 275 F.Supp.3d 420 (W.D.N.Y. 2017).

3 On appeal, defendants contend principally (a) that they were entitled to 4 a new trial on the ground that the juror's false voir dire responses violated their rights
5 to be tried before a fair and impartial jury; (b) that their firearm-brandishing
6 convictions should be reversed on the ground that none of their Hobbs Act offenses
7 are predicate crimes of violence under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c); (c) that in light of Rehaif v.
8 United States, 139 S. Ct. 2191 (2019), the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury 9 on an essential element of the § 922(g)(1) charges of being felons in possession of 10 firearms; and (d) that they are entitled to reduction of their sentences under the First 11 Step Act of 2018, Pub. L. No. 115-391, 132 Stat. 5194.

12 Finding merit in the contention that Hobbs Act conspiracy is not a 13 § 924(c) crime of violence, see United States v. Barrett, 937 F.3d 126 (2d Cir. 2019), we 14 reverse defendants' § 924(c) convictions on Count 2 for brandishing firearms
15 predicated on Hobbs Act conspiracy. Defendants' convictions on all other counts, as 16 well as the denial of their motions for a new trial, are affirmed. The matter is 17 remanded for resentencing, and for consideration by the district court of what relief, 18 if any, may be appropriate under the First Step Act.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded for further proceedings with regard to sentencing.

Appellant Earl McCoy*.

MICHAEL JOS. WITMER, Rochester, New York, for Defendant-Appellant Matthew Nix.

KEARSE, Circuit Judge:

Defendants Earl McCoy and Matthew Nix appeal in Nos. 17-3515 and 17-3516, respectively, from judgments entered in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York following a jury trial before Elizabeth A. Wolford, Judge, convicting each defendant on one count of Hobbs Act conspiracy, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1951(a); one count of Hobbs Act robbery and two counts of Hobbs Act attempted robbery, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1951(a) and 2; four counts of brandishing firearms during and in relation to crimes of violence, to wit, the Hobbs Act conspiracy, Hobbs Act robbery, and Hobbs Act attempted robbery counts, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 924(c)(1)(C)(i) and 2; one count of conspiracy to distribute

1 and to possess with intent to distribute marijuana and heroin, in violation of 18 U.S.C.
2 §§ 846, 841(a)(1), and 841(b)(1)(D); and one count of possession of a firearm by a
3 convicted felon, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g)(1) and 924(a)(2); convicting McCoy
4 on one count of possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug trafficking crime, in 5 violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 924(c)(1)(A)(i) and 2; and convicting Nix on one count of 6 possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug trafficking crime, in violation of 7 18 U.S.C. §§ 924(c)(1)(C)(i) and 2. McCoy and Nix were sentenced principally to 8 imprisonment for 135 years and 155 years, respectively.

9 In Nos. 18-619 and 18-625, respectively, McCoy and Nix appeal from an 10 order of the district court denying their postjudgment motions for reconsideration of 11 the denial of their postverdict motions seeking a new trial on the ground that one of 12 the jurors had given false responses to voir dire questions with regard to whether he 13 had previously been convicted of a felony.

14 On appeal, defendants contend principally (a) that they are entitled to 15 a new trial on the ground that the juror's false voir dire responses violated their rights
16 to be tried before a fair and impartial jury (see Part II.A. below); (b) that their firearm 17 brandishing convictions should be reversed, and those counts dismissed, on the 18 ground that none of their Hobbs Act offenses are predicate crimes of violence under

1 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) (see Part II.B. below); (c) that in light of Rehaif v. United States, 139
2 S. Ct. 2191 (2019), the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury on an essential
3 element of the § 922(g)(1) charges of being felons in possession of firearms (see Part 4 II.C.1. below); and (d) that they are entitled to reduction of their sentences under the 5 First Step Act of 2018, Pub. L. No. 115-391, 132 Stat. 5194 ("First Step Act") (see Part 6 II.D. below). Nix also makes brief sufficiency and instructional challenges.

7 Finding merit in the contention that Hobbs Act conspiracy is not a
8 § 924(c) crime of violence, see, e.g., United States v. Barrett, 937 F.3d 126 (2d Cir. 2019),
9 we reverse defendants' § 924(c) convictions on Count 2 for brandishing firearms
10 predicated on Hobbs Act conspiracy. Defendants' convictions on all other counts, as 11 well as the denial of their motions for a new trial, are affirmed. The matter is 12 remanded for defendants' resentencing, and for consideration by the district court of 13 what relief, if any, may be appropriate under the First Step Act.

I. BACKGROUND

The present prosecution focused on a series of home invasions in the Rochester, New York area in September and October 2014. The operative superseding indictment ("Indictment") alleged that McCoy and Nix, along with others including Clarence Lambert, Jecovious Barnes, Jessica Moscicki, and Gary Lambert, unlawfully conspired and attempted to rob other persons of commodities that had been shipped and transported in interstate and foreign commerce, such as diamonds, watches, United States currency, and narcotics, and conspired to traffic in the stolen narcotics. Clarence Lambert (or "Clarence") and Gary Lambert (or "Gary") are McCoy's younger brothers.

The government's evidence at the five-week trial of McCoy and Nix principally included testimony by Barnes, Moscicki, and Gary Lambert, who had entered into plea agreements with the government; testimony by victims of four home invasions; and cellular telephone records indicating that McCoy and Nix were in the immediate vicinity of the invasions, corroborating victim testimony about phone calls made during the robberies. Taken in the light most favorable to the government, the evidence included the following.

1 A. Coconspirator Testimony as to Planning and Implementation

2 Gary Lambert testified that in early 2014 he relocated from Brooklyn to 3 Rochester to be with his brothers. He had known that McCoy and Clarence were 4 engaged in the business of prostitution; when he arrived in Rochester, McCoy and 5 Clarence also told him that "they was doing home invasion robberies, robbing people
6 and selling drugs," and they recruited him to join their operation. (Trial Transcript
7 ("Tr.") 2797.)

8 Gary testified that the robbery operation was led by McCoy and Nix and 9 principally targeted persons who were believed to be drug dealers. McCoy, who was 10 generally called "P," and Nix, who was generally called "Meech," had members of 11 their crew, including Clarence, place tracking devices on vehicles driven by the 12 persons targeted. McCoy and Nix were then able to use their phones to track the 13 prospective victims' whereabouts (see id. at 2867) and tell Gary, Clarence, and the 14 others whether the homes they were about to invade were unoccupied. Nix "was the 15 one to tell us who had what, where to get it and how to get it." (Id. at 2853.)

16 Barnes, who was also known as "Bubbs" (see Tr. 1256-58), testified that 17 he had committed some 10-20 "home invasion missions" with Nix (Tr. 1240) and that 18 their targets generally were suspected drug dealers, victims unlikely to report the

1 robberies to the police. Nix would drive Barnes to the locations for the invasions; and 2 although Nix never went inside the homes, he provided weapons and would
3 communicate with Barnes by phone during the robberies. (See, e.g., id. at 1227 (Nix
4 and McCoy supplied their crew with guns).) Nix would determine how the proceeds
5 were distributed. (See id. at 1225-39.)

6 Moscicki testified that in the summer of 2014 she worked as a prostitute
7 for McCoy, with whom she had a close, but non-romantic relationship; she was the 8 girlfriend of McCoy's brother Clarence. Moscicki testified that, except for a 60-day
9 period when she was in jail for shoplifting, she saw Clarence every day; she also saw 10 McCoy about every two days. Much of the time she was living either with McCoy
11 and his girlfriend "Anness" or with Clarence.

12 She assisted in the robbery operation by receiving on her cellphone 13 messages from Nix to be relayed to Clarence, who did not have a working phone. On 14 at least two occasions, she assisted more directly in invasions, either by knocking at 15 the door of the targeted home to determine whether anyone was there or by driving
16 a getaway car. She testified that she had been aware of the robbery operations
17 conducted by McCoy and Nix, in which Clarence participated, because "Clarence 18 would come back" to where they were staying "with a whole bunch of stuff, money,

1 drugs, electronics" (Tr. 514). Clarence told her he was participating in home invasions
2 with McCoy, Nix, Barnes, and Gary (see id. at 515) and described the tracking devices
3 they used on the cars of their prospective victims. Clarence said Nix told the crew
4 which places to rob. Moscicki also heard Clarence discussing such invasions with 5 Gary, Barnes, McCoy, and Nix.

6 Gary described the first home invasion in which he participated, a 7 burglary where no one was at home; Nix told McCoy, Clarence, and Gary that the 8 occupants had a lot of money and marijuana in the house; Nix and McCoy provided 9 information from a tracking device. Gary and Clarence broke in; Gary then let 10 McCoy in; and the three of them searched the house. (See Tr. 2868-71.) They found-- 11 as Nix had predicted--substantial amounts of cash (totaling some $64,000) and 12 marijuana (some 24 pounds). All of the proceeds of the robbery were handed over 13 to McCoy and Nix, who divided most of it between themselves and gave the 14 remainder--a total of $6,000 and one-and-a-half pounds of marijuana--to Gary and 15 Clarence. (See id. at 2871-76.) Gary assisted in the sales of McCoy's share of the 16 marijuana. (See id. at 2873-79.)

1 B. Victims' Testimony and Results of the Invasions

2 Victims of four home invasions described their losses and/or their 3 treatment by the intruders. In an attempted robbery on September 15, two men with 4 guns broke into a home on Hayward Avenue, demanding drugs and assaulting the 5 adult occupants. No drugs were found. One of the would-be robbers was identified
6 at trial as McCoy. Upon realizing that the residents were not drug dealers as 7 defendants had believed, McCoy had made a phone call stating that "there was 8 nothing in the house, that . . . there was just a woman and a man and a little kid."
9 (Tr. 1082.)

10 In another attempted robbery, men broke into a home on Garson Avenue
11 on September 18. They knocked one of the residents down and tied her up, 12 brandished a gun at her mother, and asked "'Where the money, where the money, and 13 the pills at'" (Tr. 1710). One of the victims identified Barnes as one of the intruders.
14 Barnes testified that he had been driven to the Garson Avenue location by Nix and 15 had participated in that attempted robbery with Clarence and McCoy. When no
16 money or pills were found there, Barnes called Nix to report that they had found 17 nothing of value.

1 On September 23, there was a burglary of a house on Maple Street where 2 no one was at home. The victim testified that in 2014 he was a seller of marijuana and 3 cocaine and kept a number of guns in the house. He described returning home at the 4 end of his work day and finding that his drugs, money, and guns were gone. (See
5 Tr. 1803, 1816.)

6 Moscicki testified that that Maple Street burglary was the first of 7 defendants' invasions in which she had a direct role, ordered by McCoy to 8 accompany him and Clarence. McCoy drove them to a spot near Maple Street, where 9 they met up with Nix, who had brought Barnes. McCoy conferred with Nix, who 10 said he had been monitoring the house to determine the owner's pattern of comings
11 and goings. (See Tr. 519-26, 686.) McCoy instructed Moscicki to knock on the door 12 of the targeted house to learn whether anyone was there. After Moscicki found the 13 right house and no one answered her knock, she returned to McCoy's car; Nix then 14 drove Barnes and Clarence into the driveway of the house. Later, Clarence told 15 Moscicki they had found large quantities of marijuana and guns. (See id. at 597-98.)

16 Barnes testified that on that day, Nix had brought him to Maple Street;
17 that McCoy and Clarence had arrived separately; and that McCoy and Nix told 18 Barnes that the targeted home had heroin and cocaine hidden in the walls. Barnes

1 and Clarence, armed, broke into the house and found 10-12 large ziplock bags of 2 marijuana, $7-10,000 in cash, and a half dozen guns. Barnes telephoned Nix and said,
3 "We hit the jackpot" (Tr. 1321). Barnes and Clarence delivered everything they found
4 to Nix. McCoy and Barnes subsequently "bought capsules to package the" marijuana
5 for sale. (Tr. 1332.)

6 On October 7, there was an invasion of a house on Polo Place in the 7 Rochester suburb of Greece, New York, occupied by a jewelry wholesaler and his 8 wife, who were at home. The jeweler testified that he ran his business from his home.
9 He testified that after the men broke into his house, he and his wife were threatened
10 and repeatedly pistol-whipped. He estimated that the men stole $20,000 in cash, 11 along with jewelry whose wholesale value was approximately $200,000. (See
12 Tr. 1926-27.)

13 Barnes and Gary testified that they and Clarence were the ones who had 14 conducted that robbery. Moscicki testified that several days earlier, she had gone to 15 Polo Place with McCoy, Nix, Barnes, and Clarence, and had knocked at the jeweler's 16 door to see whether anyone was at home. After the jeweler answered the knock (and 17 tried his best to help Moscicki find the person or place she claimed to be seeking), the

1 crew regrouped and considered whether to do the robbery that day. Nix said no,
2 which ended the discussion.

3 Barnes testified that they returned on October 7 to rob the house on Polo
4 Place. Moscicki, driving a car belonging to McCoy's girlfriend, waited in the 5 driveway; McCoy and Nix were parked nearby. Barnes and Clarence, along with 6 Gary who had not been on the previous trip, broke into the house. Barnes and Gary
7 testified that they threatened the couple with guns (and BB guns), and pistol-whipped
8 the jeweler to get him to reveal the location of his money and open his safe. When 9 they had collected all the cash, gold coins, watches, and jewelry they could find, they 10 left and sped off in the car driven by Moscicki. They soon met up with McCoy and 11 Nix, and Nix demanded that all of the loot be transferred to his vehicle.

12 As usual, McCoy and Nix were "the ones that did the splitting and 13 division of" the loot (Tr. 2912). They divided most of it between themselves; they 14 gave Barnes, Clarence, and Gary $3,300 each and allowed each to take a watch. (See 15 id. at 2911-15.)

16 Defendants' operation began to unravel shortly thereafter when 17 Clarence--despite admonitions by McCoy and Nix not to try to sell the watches in or 18 near Rochester--tried a week later to pawn his chosen watch in Rochester.

1 C. The Defense Case

2 Neither McCoy nor Nix testified at trial. They called two witnesses from 3 law enforcement who described possible inconsistencies between various witnesses'
4 trial testimony and their respective prior statements. A Special Agent of the Bureau
5 of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives testified that Gary Lambert, in 6 response to postarrest questioning about the Polo Place robbery, did not mention
7 McCoy except to say that McCoy did not enter the building; and that Gary did not
8 mention Nix at all. (See Tr. 3300-02.) And a Rochester police investigator testified 9 that the Hayward Avenue victim who identified McCoy at trial as one of the 10 intruders had given the Rochester police descriptions of the two intruders that did not 11 match either Barnes or McCoy, and he had not picked McCoy's picture out of a photo
12 array. (See id. at 3349-68.) However, on cross-examination, the investigator testified 13 that, from a different photo array, the victim picked out McCoy as the intruder who 14 had hit him in the face with a gun. (See id. at 3373-74).

1 D. Jury Instructions and the Verdicts

2 In charging the jury, the district judge segmented its deliberations, giving
3 instructions first on Counts 1-8 and 11-12, leaving Counts 9 and 10, which charged
4 Nix and McCoy, respectively, with firearm possession as a convicted felon, for later 5 consideration.

6 As to the first group of counts to be considered, the court described the 7 subject of each count of the Indictment, to wit: Count 1, conspiracy to commit Hobbs
8 Act robbery; Count 2, brandishing firearms during and in relation to that conspiracy;
9 Counts 3 and 5, the Hobbs Act attempted robberies at Hayward Avenue and Garson
10 Avenue, respectively; Counts 4 and 6, brandishing firearms during and in relation to 11 the Hobbs Act robbery attempts charged in Counts 3 and 5, respectively; Count 7, the 12 narcotics possession-and-distribution conspiracy; Count 8, possession of firearms in 13 furtherance of the Count 7 narcotics conspiracy; Count 11, the Hobbs Act robbery at 14 Polo Place; and Count 12, brandishing firearms during and in relation to the Polo
15 Place robbery.

16 With respect to Count 1, the court explained that conspiracy to commit 17 a crime is itself a crime separate from and independent of the crime that is the 18 objective of the conspiracy; that the government was required to prove beyond a

1 reasonable doubt that "the minds of at least two alleged conspirators met in an 2 understanding way to meet the objectives of the conspiracy" (Tr. 3767); and that the 3 objectives alleged in this case were

4 the robbery of diamonds, watches and United States currency
5 from a person engaged in the business of buying and selling
6 diamonds, watches and other items shipped and transported in 7 interstate and foreign commerce; and the robbery of controlled
8 substances and United States currency from persons engaged in 9 or believed to be engaged in the unlawful possession and 10 distribution of controlled substances,

11 (id. at 3768-69). The court reiterated that in order to find a defendant guilty on 12 Count 1, the jury must find that "the defendant under consideration knowingly and 13 willfully became a participant in or member of the conspiracy." (Tr. 3769.)

14 With respect to Counts 2, 4, 6, and 12, charging defendants with 15 brandishing firearms during a crime of violence (the "brandishing counts"), the court 16 instructed that the government was required to prove that each defendant committed 17 the predicate crime of violence, i.e., the Hobbs Act offenses alleged in Counts 1, 3, 5, 18 and 11, respectively; and it instructed that "Hobbs Act conspiracy, attempted Hobbs
19 Act robbery and Hobbs Act robbery all constitute crimes of violence." (Tr. 3787.)
20 However, the court instructed that if the jury found a given defendant not guilty on

1 a particular Hobbs Act count, the jury was not to consider against that defendant the 2 brandishing count for which that Hobbs Act count was a predicate.

3 The court also instructed that, except with respect to the counts charging 4 defendants with conspiracy or with firearm possession as a convicted felon, the 5 Indictment charged each defendant both as a principal and as an aider and abettor,
6 and that it was not necessary for the government to show that a defendant himself
7 personally committed the crime with which he is charged in order for him to be found 8 guilty. The court explained that a person who willfully causes another person to 9 perform an act that is a crime against the United States is punishable as a principal;
10 and that an aider and abettor, i.e., "a person who did not commit the crime, but in 11 some . . . way counseled, advised or in some way assisted the commission of the 12 crime," "is just as guilty of that offense as if they had committed it themselves."
13 (Tr. 3815.)

14 In addition, with respect to the substantive crimes alleged in Counts 2-6, 15 8, and 11-12, the court--over defendants' objections--gave a Pinkerton charge, see 16 Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640 (1946), instructing the jury that, as to 17 "reasonabl[y] foreseeable acts" of any member of the conspiracy (Tr. 3804),

1 [i]f you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant whose
2 guilt you are considering was a member of the conspiracy charged
3 in the indictment, then any acts done or statements made in 4 furtherance of the conspiracy by persons also found by you to 5 have been members of the conspiracy may be considered against 6 that defendant. This is so even if such acts were done and 7 statements were made in a defendant's absence and without his 8 knowledge

9 (id. at 3804-05).

10 The jury after deliberating for less than three hours, found McCoy and 11 Nix guilty on Counts 1-8 and 11-12.

12 The court then turned to Counts 9 and 10, which charged Nix and 13 McCoy, respectively, with being a felon in possession of firearms on September 23, 14 2014. It informed the jury that defendants and the government had "stipulated that 15 prior to September 23, 2014," Nix and McCoy had each "been convicted of a crime
16 punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year." (Tr. 3873.) The court 17 instructed that "[i]t is not necessary that the government prove that a defendant knew 18 that the crime was punishable by imprisonment for more than one year." (Id. at 3874.)
19 After brief deliberations, the jury returned verdicts of guilty on both counts.

20 Defendants thereafter moved for, inter alia, a new trial on the ground that 21 they had recently discovered that one of the jurors was a previously convicted felon

1 and had failed to disclose his criminal history during jury selection. As discussed in 2 Part II.A. below, the district court, following an evidentiary hearing at which the juror
3 testified, denied the motion, see United States v. Nix, 275 F.Supp.3d 420 (W.D.N.Y.
4 2017) ("Nix I").

5 E. Sentencing

6 Defendants were sentenced in October 2017 under the advisory
7 Sentencing Guidelines ("Guidelines"), pursuant to calculations they do not challenge
8 on appeal. Each was sentenced principally to imprisonment totaling 30 years for 9 Counts 1, 3, 5, 7, 11, and the felon-in-possession counts (Count 9 for Nix, Count 10 for 10 McCoy), to be followed by 25-year terms for each of Counts 2, 4, 6, and 12. Nix,
11 whose prior record included a § 924(c) conviction, also received a mandatory
12 minimum consecutive sentence of 25 years on Count 8; McCoy, whose record did not 13 include a prior § 924(c) conviction, received a mandatory minimum consecutive 14 sentence of 5 years on Count 8. Thus, Nix's total term of imprisonment was 155 years;
15 McCoy's was 135 years.

1 F. The Present Appeals

2 Defendants promptly appealed the judgments of conviction. Thereafter
3 they moved in the district court for reconsideration of the denial of their motions for 4 a new trial on the ground of juror misconduct. Following the denial of 5 reconsideration, see United States v. Nix, No. 6:14-CR-06181, 2018 WL 1009282
6 (W.D.N.Y. Feb. 20, 2018) ("Nix II"), each defendant appealed that denial, and their four 7 appeals were consolidated. Defendants filed their opening briefs, principally 8 pursuing the contention that they are entitled to a new trial because of juror 9 misconduct, and contending that their convictions on the brandishing counts should 10 be reversed on the ground that the Hobbs Act conspiracy and robbery offenses of 11 which they were convicted are not crimes of violence.

12 Thereafter, prior to the oral argument of their appeals, defendants sought 13 and received permission to file supplemental briefs to contend that, in light of the 14 Supreme Court's decision in United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019), Hobbs Act
15 conspiracy is not a crime of violence within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 924(c), and to 16 contend that they are entitled to reduction of their sentences under the First Step Act.
17 Following oral argument of the appeals, defendants sought and received permission
18 to file additional supplemental briefs in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Rehaif

1 v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 2191 (2019), contending that the district court erred in 2 failing to instruct the jury that, in order to establish their guilt under § 922(g)(1) as 3 felons in possession of firearms, the government was required to prove that, when 4 they possessed the firearms, they knew they were convicted felons.

5 II. DISCUSSION

6 On these appeals, defendants contend principally (1) that the juror's
7 misconduct violated their Sixth Amendment rights to an impartial jury and entitled 8 them to a new trial on all viable counts; (2) that none of the Hobbs Act offenses of 9 which they are convicted qualifies as a crime of violence under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c), and 10 thus the § 924(c) firearm-brandishing counts (Counts 2, 4, 6, and 12) predicated on 11 Hobbs Act offenses are not viable and should be dismissed; and (3) that their 12 respective Counts 9 and 10 felon-in-possession-of-firearm convictions should be 13 vacated in light of Rehaif because the government did not prove that, when they 14 possessed the firearms, they knew they were convicted felons. They also argue,
15 alternatively, that they are entitled to a reduction of their sentences under the First

1 Step Act; and they make cursory challenges to various aspects of the trial 2 proceedings.

3 Several of defendants' contentions are raised for the first time on these 4 appeals. An error that has not been preserved by timely objection in the district court
5 may be reviewed on appeal if it is "[a] plain error that affects substantial rights." Fed.

6 R. Crim. P. 52(b). Under plain-error review,

7 "before an appellate court can correct an error not raised [in the 8 district court], there must be (1) 'error,' (2) that is 'plain,' and (3)
9 that 'affect[s] substantial rights.' If all three conditions are met, an 10 appellate court may then exercise its discretion to notice a 11 forfeited error, but only if (4) the error 'seriously affect[s] the 12 fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings.'"

13 United States v. Groysman, 766 F.3d 147, 155 (2d Cir. 2014) ("Groysman") (quoting 14 Johnson v. United States, 520 U.S. 461, 466-67 (1997) (which was quoting United States 15 v. Olano, 507 U.S. 725, 732 (1993))).

16 The burden is on the appellant to meet all four criteria. See, e.g., United 17 States v. Dominguez Benitez, 542 U.S. 74, 82 (2004); Groysman, 766 F.3d at 155; United 18 States v. Dussard, 967 F.3d 149, 156 (2d Cir. 2020). If all four are met, we have 19 discretion to grant relief despite the defendants' failure to preserve the issue in the

1 district court for normal appellate review. See, e.g., Johnson, 520 U.S. at 467; Olano, 507
2 U.S. at 732.

3 For the reasons that follow, we find merit only in defendants' contention
4 that Hobbs Act conspiracy is not a crime of violence within the meaning of § 924(c)
5 and that their convictions on Count 2 must therefore be reversed and the case
6 remanded for resentencing.

7 A. The Motion for a New Trial Based on Juror Misconduct

8 About a month after the jury's final verdicts were returned, and prior to 9 the imposition of sentences, McCoy and Nix moved pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 33
10 for a new trial, stating that defense counsel had learned that one of the jurors had 11 been convicted of two felonies and had failed to disclose his criminal history during 12 jury selection. The juror was eventually correctly identified as Juror Number 3, and 13 was referred to by the district court--as he will be here--as either "J.B." or "Juror No. 3" 14 in light of general court "rule[s] that the names and personal information concerning 15 jurors and prospective jurors should not be publicly disclosed," Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d 16 at 424 n.2.

1 1. The Juror Questionnaire and Voir Dire Proceedings

2 Prior to any oral voir dire at defendants' trial, a questionnaire had been 3 mailed by the court to prospective jurors. Question 6 asked: "Have you ever been 4 convicted, either by your guilty or nolo contendere plea or by a court or jury trial, of 5 a state or federal crime for which punishment could have been more than one year
6 in prison?" J.B. answered this question by checking "No." Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 445
7 & n.4.

8 In addition, during the oral voir dire--to the extent "relevant to these 9 post-verdict motions," id. at 426 n.6--the court addressed the following questions to 10 a panel of 36 prospective jurors who had been placed under oath, including J.B.:

11 (1) "Has anyone ever been the victim of a home robbery?"
12 ([Tr.] 97);

13 (2) "Has anyone ever served on a jury before?" (id. at 205);

14 (3) "Has anyone ever been a defendant in a criminal case?"
15 (id. at 214);

16 (4) "Has anyone ever visited a jail or correctional facility
17 other than in connection with . . . your educational curriculum"
18 (id. at 229);

19 (5) "Has anyone had anyone close to them, other than what 20 we already discussed, . . . anyone close to them convicted of a 21 crime?" (id. at 239).

1 Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 426. Juror No. 3 "did not respond" to any of these questions.
2 Id. at 425-26.

3 Similarly, Juror No. 3 did not offer any information in 4 response to the Court's "catch-all" questions asked toward the end
5 of voir dire: whether there was "anything in fairness to both sides 6 that you think we should know that we haven't covered already"
7 ([Tr.] 221), and "[i]s there anything that you think we should know
8 that we haven't covered up to this point?" (id. at 257).

9 Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 426.

10 In support of their new-trial motion, defendants produced public records
11 showing, inter alia, that Juror No. 3 had previously pleaded guilty and been convicted 12 of two felonies, i.e., possession of stolen property in 1988 and burglary in 1989; that 13 his son had been convicted of a crime; and that Juror No. 3 had been the victim of a 14 home burglary. Defendants contended that they were entitled to a new trial even 15 absent a showing of bias, because convicted felons are statutorily ineligible to serve 16 as jurors in federal court, see 28 U.S.C. § 1865(b)(5), and, in any event, that 17 Juror No. 3's nondisclosures demonstrated bias.

18 The district court ordered an evidentiary hearing ("Hearing") at which 19 Juror No. 3 testified, represented by appointed counsel. (See New Trial Hearing

1 Transcript, June 12 and 14, 2017 ("H.Tr.").) The government granted Juror No. 3
2 immunity with regard to any nonperjurious testimony he would give at the Hearing.

3 2. The Hearing

4 In response to questioning by the court at the Hearing, Juror No. 3
5 acknowledged that he had answered Question 6 on the preliminary questionnaire
6 incorrectly. He testified that he had not been aware that his answer was incorrect.
7 Age 46 when defendants' trial proceedings began, Juror No. 3 testified that he had 8 responded that he had no prior felony convictions because he assumed that the 9 question referred only to crimes committed after the age of 21; that he was 17 or 18 10 at the time he was convicted; and that he believed convictions entered when he was 11 younger than 21 had been expunged from his record. He also testified that he had not 12 believed that his 1989 conviction for burglary required an affirmative answer because,
13 although the sentence was two-to-four years, he "was offered six months in shock
14 camp" and that is how he satisfied the sentence (H.Tr. 72-75); he testified that he did 15 not "know that [he] actually had a felony" (id. at 83).

16 In addition, while conceding that the district court had not stated that its 17 voir dire questions applied only to one's experiences over the age of 21, Juror No. 3

1 testified that he had also believed the five questions quoted above did not apply to 2 crimes, convictions, or experiences prior to the age of 21. Juror No. 3 also testified 3 that at the time of trial, he did not know his son had been convicted of a crime; he had 4 not spoken to his son for several years prior to that time and learned of the conviction
5 only a month before the Hearing. Juror No. 3 conceded that his failure to respond to 6 the above five questions posed to the panel as whole was incorrect. (See id. at 83-85, 7 89-92, 168-69, 172-75; see also id. at 97-98 (stating that he had answered questions on 8 previous calls for jury duty in the same way, on the assumption that they concerned
9 events and experiences after the age of 21).)

10 When questioned further about his own prior record, Juror No. 3 also 11 initially claimed that he had been falsely accused of both of the felonies of which he 12 was convicted, and he claimed to have at best a hazy memory of events that had 13 occurred 28 years earlier, when he was 17 or 18. He said he did not remember how 14 many times he had been convicted of crimes punishable by more than one year in 15 prison. And while he recalled being convicted of breaking into a clothing store when 16 he was 17 or 18, and serving six months in "shock camp" for that crime, he did not 17 remember such aspects as the location of the shock camp, the names of all of his 18 codefendants, whether the prosecution was state or federal, or whether he had

1 pleaded guilty or gone through a trial. (See id. at 72-76.) However, on the second day
2 of the Hearing, Juror No. 3 was confronted with his signed confessions in both the 3 burglary case and the stolen property case, and he admitted that he had been 4 involved in both. (See id. at 179-84, 222-25, 231.)

5 When asked whether he had wanted to serve as a juror in this case,
6 Juror No. 3 three times responded "Yes" (H.Tr. 93, 96); when asked why, he stated it 7 was because he was picked, and he believed it was his right and his duty (see id.
8 at 93). He stated that he is able to vote, and he did not know that having a prior 9 felony conviction disqualified him from serving as a juror. (See id. at 82.) However,
10 when later again asked whether he had wanted to serve as a juror in this case,
11 Juror No. 3 answered "No" (id. at 97, 235, 242, 243). He testified he had answered yes 12 to that question previously because he was "confused about the question" (id. at 242).
13 He said that he had not been happy to receive a summons for jury duty; that his false 14 or inaccurate answers to the voir dire questions were not given out of any desire to 15 serve on the jury (see id. at 94, 233-34); and that if he had known that by telling the 16 court about his past experiences with the law he would have been excused, he would 17 have done so (see id. at 97, 240, 243).

1 Juror No. 3 answered "No" to all questions as to whether his prior
2 experiences with the law had caused him to be biased for or against the defendants 3 or for or against the government, or had given him reason to credit the testimony of 4 cooperating witnesses against the defendants.

5 3. The District Court's Ruling

6 In a thorough opinion, Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d 420, the district court denied 7 defendants' motion for a new trial based on juror misconduct. It rejected their 8 contention that Juror No. 3's felony conviction, absent any showing of bias, 9 automatically warranted the granting of a new trial based on the statutory 10 disqualification of convicted felons from serving on federal juries, see 28 U.S.C.
11 § 1865(b)(5). The court noted that "[t]his argument has been rejected by every circuit 12 court to have considered the issue." Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 436 n.17; see, e.g., United 13 States v. Boney, 977 F.2d 624, 633 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (the "Sixth Amendment right to an 14 impartial jury . . . does not require an absolute bar on felon-jurors"); see also United 15 States v. Langford, 990 F.2d 65, 69 (2d Cir. 1993) ("Langford") (rejecting the argument 16 that a juror's intentionally false response during voir dire is an automatic ground for 17 a new trial).

1 Rather, pointing to "the Sixth Amendment's guarantee to a trial by an
 2 impartial jury," and noting that "[a]n impartial jury is one in which all of its members,
 3 not just most of them, are free of interest and bias," Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 424
 4 (quoting United States v. Parse, 789 F.3d 83, 111 (2d Cir. 2015) ("Parse"))--but that a
 5 defendant is "entitled to a fair trial but not a perfect one, for there are no perfect
 6 trials," Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 424 (quoting McDonough Power Equipment, Inc. v.
 7 Greenwood, 464 U.S. 548, 553 (1984) ("McDonough"))--the district court noted that

8 the Second Circuit has adopted a two-part test that a defendant
 9 must establish in order to justify granting a new trial based upon 10 incorrect responses by a juror during voir dire: (1) the defendant 11 must first demonstrate that the juror "failed to answer honestly a 12 material question on voir dire"; and (2) the defendant then must also 13 demonstrate that "a correct response would have provided a valid 14 basis for a challenge for cause"--in other words, the juror would 15 have been excused for bias based on the correct voir dire response.
 16 Langford, 990 F.2d at 68-69 (quoting McDonough, 464 U.S. at 556-58 17 . . .).

18 Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 437 (emphases ours). The district court stated that under the 19 first part of this test

20 the Court must assess whether Juror No. 3 deliberately lied or 21 consciously deceived the Court, as opposed to providing 22 inaccurate responses as a result of a mistake, misunderstanding
 23 or embarrassment. See McDonough, 464 U.S. at 555, 104 S.Ct. 845;
 24 Langford, 990 F.2d at 69-70 (finding where a juror's intentionally false
 25 statements at voir dire were caused by embarrassment, and there was no

1 evidence "that she gave false answers because of any desire to sit on the 2 jury," it was proper for the district court to deny the defendant's
3 motion for a new trial

4 Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 437-38 (emphasis ours).

5 The court here found that Juror No. 3 had made some intentionally false
6 statements at voir dire; but it found that they were in no way motivated by a desire 7 to sit on the jury:

8 The Court does not doubt that Juror No. 3's inaccurate
9 testimony regarding his criminal record was due, in part, to the 10 age of the convictions. However, given Juror No. 3's false testimony
11 during the evidentiary hearing about his culpability for the two felony 12 convictions, the Court does not credit Juror No. 3's explanation that he 13 was confused by the voir dire questions or thought that the questions
14 applied to criminal convictions only after the age of 21. Based on Juror
15 No. 3's continued refusal to disclose the full extent of his criminal 16 history during the evidentiary hearing--until faced with 17 documentary evidence of the same--the Court concludes that 18 Juror No. 3 failed to respond truthfully to the juror questionnaire
19 and the Court's voir dire questions as they pertained to both his 20 criminal convictions and his exposure to a jail.

21 However, this finding does not mean that the Court concludes 22 that Juror No. 3 provided false information about his criminal record in 23 an effort to intentionally deceive the Court so as to be selected to serve on 24 the jury. Here, Juror No. 3 did not lie "for the purpose of securing a 25 seat on the jury," Parse, 789 F.3d at 111, nor can his lies be 26 characterized as "premeditated and deliberate" so as to hide his 27 true identity and ensure his selection on the jury, id. at 92-93.

28 Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 447-48 (emphases ours).

1 The court found that the very fact that Juror No. 3 continued to lie about
2 his criminal history at the evidentiary Hearing, after having been granted immunity 3 for nonperjurious Hearing testimony, indicated he had a persisting motive for 4 refusing to be honest about his criminal past at the Hearing until confronted with 5 documentary evidence. The court was persuaded that "his motives had nothing to 6 do with securing a seat on this jury." Id. at 448. While the court was "not persuaded 7 that Juror No. 3 misunderstood the scope of the questions as only applying to 8 convictions at the age of 21 and older, when responding to either this Court or other 9 courts in the past," id., it found that Juror No. 3's motivation for the inaccurate 10 responses was not nefarious, but

11 rather, . . . more likely originates from the simple fact that, at 47
12 years old, Juror No. 3 would prefer to shut out any recollection of 13 his criminal history--the most recent of which (if [a] domestic 14 violence incident from 1999 is included) was about 20 years ago,
15 and most of which occurred when he was a teenager.

16 Id. Thus, although the court found "that Juror No. 3 testified falsely about certain 17 information during the Hearing that was conducted on June 12 and 14, 2017," it

18 reject[ed] the notion that Juror No. 3 intentionally deceived the Court
19 during voir dire as to his criminal history so as to gain a seat on the jury.
20 Although Juror No. 3's voir dire answers regarding his criminal 21 history were inaccurate, the Court cannot conclude that they rise to

1 the level of intentional falsehood necessary to satisfy the first prong of the 2 McDonough test.

3 Id. (emphases added).

4 The court further saw no evidence from which to find or infer that 5 Juror No. 3 had had any bias, whether actual, implied, or inferred. As to actual bias,
 6 i.e., "the existence of a state of mind that leads to an inference that the person will not 7 act with entire impartiality," Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 449 (quoting United States v.
 8 Torres, 128 F.3d 38, 43 (2d Cir. 1997) ("Torres"), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1065 (1998)), the 9 court found that

10 [t]his was plainly not a case of Juror No. 3 wanting to hide
 11 information about his past to make himself more marketable as a juror,
 12 like the juror in Parse. Early in the voir dire, Juror No. 3 expressed 13 reservations about serving because of his job responsibilities.
 14 (Dkt. 328 at 41). During the jury selection, Juror No. 3 was 15 frustrated with the Court about the length of the proceedings (see 16 Dkt. 359 at 238-39), and in fact, once selected to serve, he left the 17 courtroom as the Court was still informing the jurors about some 18 housekeeping matters (see Dkt. 327 at 32).

19 Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 450 (emphasis added). Further, there was 20 no evidence that Juror No. 3 knew that disclosure of his criminal record

 21 would have disqualified him from jury service. The Court believes that 22 if Juror No. 3 had known this information, his reluctance to be 23 honest about his criminal history would have likely been 24 overcome by a desire to avoid jury service. In sum, the Court finds
 25 that there is no evidence of actual bias on the part of Juror No. 3, in favor

1 of or against either the Government or Defendants. Even evaluating
2 the facts in the light most favorable to Defendants (which is not 3 the standard), no actual bias has been shown in this case. There is 4 just no proof that Juror No. 3 intentionally lied to smuggle his way onto 5 the jury.

6 Id. at 451 (emphases added).

7 Nor did the court find any basis to find "implied bias"--a concept that is 8 "reserved for 'extreme situations'" warranting a conclusive presumption of bias as a
9 matter of law. Id. (quoting United States v. Greer, 285 F.3d 158, 172 (2d Cir. 2002)
10 ("Greer")); see, e.g., Torres, 128 F.3d at 45. Implied bias generally "'deals mainly with 11 jurors who are related to the parties or who were victims of the alleged crime itself."
12 Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 451 (quoting Greer, 285 F.3d at 172 (other internal quotation 13 marks omitted)). The court found that Juror No. 3 had no relationships with any of 14 the parties, victims, witnesses, or attorneys; and it saw "no [other] fact in the record
15 which, had it been elicited during jury selection, would have required the Court to 16 automatically assume bias on the part of Juror No. 3 or that Juror No. 3 was 17 prejudiced against Defendants or in favor of the Government." Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d
18 at 451.

19 Finally, the district court found no evidence from which it should "infer"
20 bias. It noted that

1 "[b]ias may be inferred when a juror discloses a fact that
2 bespeaks a risk of partiality sufficiently significant to warrant 3 granting the trial judge discretion to excuse the juror for cause, but 4 not so great as to make mandatory a presumption of bias."

5 Id. at 453 (quoting Torres, 128 F.3d at 47 (emphases ours)); see, e.g., Greer, 285 F.3d
6 at 172 (findings as to inferred bias lie "within the discretion of the trial court"). After 7 reviewing all of the evidence and defense contentions before it, the court concluded
8 that there was no evidence to support defendants' contention that Juror No. 3 had 9 "had bad experiences with law enforcement" or that his experiences would cause him
10 to be biased against defendants; and it found no evidence to support their contention
11 that because Juror No. 3 had pleaded guilty in a case in which he had codefendants, 12 he would be predisposed to credit the views of cooperating witnesses and thus be 13 biased against defendants. Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). The court also 14 deemed the mere existence of Juror No. 3's criminal history--nearly three decades
15 old--too remote to warrant inferring bias.

16 The district court further found that defendants' own jury selection
17 strategy strongly suggested the absence of reason to infer that Juror No. 3 was biased
18 against defendants based on his criminal record: When the government moved,
19 during jury selection, to dismiss a prospective juror ("T.P.") for cause upon learning

1 that T.P. had prior felony convictions that he had not disclosed, defendants
 2 vigorously objected to T.P.'s dismissal. Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 426-27, 429; see also id.
 3 at 453 ("McCoy even admits that it would have been the Government who challenged
 4 Juror No. 3 for cause if his criminal history had been revealed.").

5 In sum, the court concluded that defendants also failed to meet the 6 second prong of the McDonough test because it concluded that

7 [t]here is no actual bias because there is no finding of partiality
 8 based upon either the juror's own admission or the judge's
 9 evaluation of the juror's demeanor and credibility following voir
 10 dire questioning as to bias,

11 id. at 453 (internal quotation marks and emphasis omitted); that

12 there is no implied bias because the disclosed fact does not 13 establish the kind of relationship between the juror and the parties
 14 or issues in the case that mandates the juror's excusal for cause,

15 id. (internal quotation marks and emphasis omitted); and that

16 the record does not provide a basis to infer bias. Even if the first 17 prong of the McDonough test was satisfied, there is no evidence of 18 extreme deceit (such as in Parse) that would support the showing 19 required under McDonough's second prong. Put simply, the Court
 20 does not believe that the deliberateness of [Juror No. 3's]
 21 particular lies evidenced partiality . . . ; and even if Juror No. 3 did 22 intentionally attempt to deceive the Court, the deliberateness of his 23 lies is not sufficiently intentional or premeditated so as to, in and 24 of themselves, establish bias under the second prong,

1 Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 454 (internal quotation marks omitted (emphases added)).

2 4. Abuse-of-Discretion Review

3 A district court's denial of a Rule 33 motion for a new trial is reviewable
 4 for abuse of discretion. See, e.g., Parse, 789 F.3d at 110. A court abuses its discretion
 5 if (1) it takes an erroneous view of the law, (2) its decision rests on a clearly erroneous
 6 finding of fact, or (3) its decision "cannot be located within the range of permissible
 7 decisions." Id. We see no such flaws in the denial at issue here.

8 First, we see no error in the district court's ruling that the statutory 9 disqualification of felons from serving on the jury, raised for the first time after trial, 10 did not provide an automatic basis for a new trial. Under the Jury Selection and 11 Service Act of 1968 ("Jury Selection Act"), 28 U.S.C. § 1861 et seq., the court, in 12 determining "whether a person is unqualified for . . . jury service" in federal court, id.
 13 § 1865(a), shall deem ineligible a person who "has been convicted in a State or Federal 14 court of record of[] a crime punishable by imprisonment for more than one year and 15 his civil rights have not been restored," id. § 1865(b)(5). In a criminal case, a defendant
 16 who contends that there has been a substantial failure to comply with the Jury
 17 Selection Act's provisions may move to stay or dismiss the proceedings "before the voir

1 dire examination begins, or within seven days after the defendant discovered or could 2 have discovered, by the exercise of diligence, the grounds therefor, whichever is 3 earlier." Id. § 1867(a) (emphases added). Without precluding such other remedies as 4 may be available for challenges based on prohibited discrimination, the statute 5 provides that "[t]he procedures described by this section shall be the exclusive means by 6 which a person accused of a Federal crime . . . may challenge any jury on the ground
 7 that such jury was not selected in conformity with the provisions of this title." Id.
 8 § 1867(e) (emphasis added).

9 In light of the procedural limitations imposed by §§ 1867(a) and (e), this 10 Circuit and most others have concluded that the mere fact that the jury included a 11 person whom § 1865 made ineligible to serve as a juror is not a ground for a new trial
 12 when the objection is not raised until after voir dire has begun. See, e.g., United States
 13 v. Silverman, 449 F.2d 1341, 1343-44 (2d Cir. 1971) ("Silverman") ("the statute clearly 14 requires that a challenge on this ground be made at or before the v[oi]r dire"), cert.
 15 denied, 405 U.S. 918 (1972); United States v. Paradies, 98 F.3d 1266, 1277-78 (11th Cir.
 16 1996), as amended (Nov. 6, 1996) ("once voir dire begins, Jury Selection Act challenges 17 are barred, even where the grounds for the challenge are discovered only later"), cert.
 18 denied, 522 U.S. 1014 (1997); United States v. Candelaria-Silva, 166 F.3d 19, 31-32 (1st Cir.

1 1999) (same), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1055 (2000); United States v. Jasper, 523 F.2d 395, 398
2 (10th Cir. 1975) ("a motion" under § 1865 must "be filed prior to the beginning of the 3 voir dire examination"); Dawson v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 978 F.2d 205, 209 (5th Cir.
4 1992) ("section 1867 precludes any statutory challenges to irregularities in jury
5 selection that are not made before voir dire"); but see United States v. Webster, 639 F.2d
6 174, 180 (4th Cir. 1981), modified, 669 F.2d 185 (4th Cir. 1982) ("Any objection to the 7 composition of the jury was waived, however, because defendants first sought to 8 raise it at a time subsequent both to the beginning of the voir dire examination and to 9 a point seven days after they could have discovered the grounds for the challenge by 10 the exercise of due diligence." (emphasis added)), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 935 (1982).

11 In Silverman, which concerned a juror who was disqualified under 12 § 1865(b)(2) because she was unable to read or write the English language, we 13 concluded that "[s]ince defendant failed to raise any objection to [the disqualified
14 juror's] serving on the jury until after his conviction, his attack on that conviction 15 cannot be founded on [her] disqualification under the statute." 449 F.2d at 1344. We 16 ruled that after trial, "[t]he inclusion in the panel of a disqualified juror does not 17 require reversal of a conviction unless there is a showing of actual prejudice." Id.

1 Defendants have proffered no basis for deviating from this principle or 2 from our view of the timing restrictions imposed by the statute. Accordingly, their 3 contention that, because Juror No. 3 would have been excluded from the jury if his 4 statutorily disqualifying prior conviction had been known, they are entitled to a new 5 trial without consideration of whether Juror No. 3 was biased or whether his being 6 on the jury caused them actual prejudice, was correctly rejected by the district court.

7 The district court instead properly turned to the question of whether the 8 presence of Juror No. 3 on the jury violated defendants' rights under the Sixth 9 Amendment to trial before a jury that was unbiased. The court correctly laid out the 10 relevant Sixth Amendment principles, describing standards indicated by the Supreme 11 Court in McDonough and applied in past cases in this Court, see, e.g., Parse, 789 F.3d
12 83; Greer, 285 F.3d 158; Torres, 128 F.3d 38; Langford, 990 F.2d 65. As reflected in the 13 above description of the district court's decision, the court properly recognized that 14 the initial question to be explored is whether the juror's nondisclosure was deliberate
15 or inadvertent; and it recognized that the ensuing determination as to the existence 16 of bias--whether actual, or implied as a matter of law, or permissibly inferred--may 17 well be affected both by whether the nondisclosure was deliberate and, if it was, by

1 the juror's motivation to conceal the truth. Such determinations required assessments
2 of the juror's credibility.

3 As was well within its prerogative as finder of fact, the court found
4 Juror No. 3 to have been truthful in some parts of his testimony while not in others.
5 The court here relied on, inter alia, its observation of Juror No. 3's "facial expressions,
6 demeanor, and intonation"; it noted that Juror No. 3 appeared to be unsophisticated 7 and had demonstrable "problems understanding the questions and expressing 8 himself clearly," Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 440; and it drew permissible inferences both 9 with respect to the likely truthfulness of Juror No. 3's explanations for his inaccuracy
10 about, for example, the life experiences of his relatives, and with respect to the likely 11 motivation for Juror No. 3's false statements at the Hearing and on voir dire about his 12 own criminal history. Although defendants view Juror No. 3's statements as 13 "dubious" or "not ring[ing] true" (McCoy brief on appeal at 69, 70), the court explored
14 the possible sources of bias on the part of Juror No. 3 and found none. The record
15 does not support a conclusion that the court erred in its assessments of Juror No. 3's 16 credibility or in its ultimate conclusion that his false statements as to his criminal 17 history were not motivated by any desire to serve as a juror in the present case.

1 Accordingly, we see no error of law or clearly erroneous finding of fact,
2 and no other basis for overturning the district court's ruling that the record does not 3 suggest that Juror No. 3 had any bias against defendants or in favor of the 4 government, and its consequent denial of defendants' juror-misconduct-based motion
5 for a new trial.

6 5. Defendants' Postjudgment Motion for Reconsideration

7 Nor is there merit in defendants' appeals from the denial of their 8 postjudgment motion for reconsideration of the denial of their Rule 33 new-trial
9 motion. A motion for reargument, while proper for calling to the court's attention 10 controlling decisions or data the court has overlooked, is inappropriate for the 11 presentation of new facts or contentions, or for an attempt to reargue old ones. See,
12 e.g., Shrader v. CSX Transportation, Inc., 70 F.3d 255, 257 (2d Cir. 1995). The denial of 13 a motion for reconsideration is reviewable only for abuse of discretion. See, e.g.,
14 United States v. Bayless, 201 F.3d 116, 131 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 120 S. Ct. 1571 (2000).

15 The district court denied defendants' motion for reargument in part 16 because it was based on supposedly new evidence that was not new; and it was 17 unaccompanied by a showing of diligence as to why the evidence had not been

1 sought or discovered earlier. See Nix II, 2018 WL 1009282, at *3-*4. The court also 2 found that what defendants proffered was not sufficiently significant to influence the 3 decision of the Rule 33 motion.

4 What defendants sought to introduce as new evidence was "actual 5 evidence" that Juror No. 3 had been "arrested" for burglary in 1989. Nix II, 2018
6 WL 1009282, at *5. The record is clear, however, that "[i]n rendering its decision [in 7 Nix I], the Court was already aware that there was some evidence that Juror No. 3
8 was arrested for a home burglary in May of 1989," Nix II, 2018 WL 1009282, at *5; see,
9 e.g., Nix I, 275 F.Supp.3d at 453 n.30 ("There is some evidence in the record that Juror No. 3
10 may have been arrested for burglarizing a home in May of 1989 (when he was 19 11 years old). . . . Juror No. 3 had no recollection of this alleged incident, and there is no 12 evidence that he was convicted of this crime." (emphasis added)).

13 Thus, defendants' "new" evidence concerned an arrest that had in fact 14 been discussed at the Hearing. And defendants' desire to renew a challenge to 15 Juror No. 3's claimed lack of memory--of an arrest not shown to have led to a 16 conviction--hardly seems likely to shed light on the material issue of whether 17 Juror No. 3's failure to disclose any part of his criminal history was motivated by a 18 desire to be seated as a juror for the trial in this case.

As to that material issue, the court reaffirmed its Nix I assessment of Juror No. 3's credibility and motivation:

Having observed Juror No. 3 firsthand during the course of the trial and the two-day evidentiary hearing, this Court rejects the notion that Juror No. 3 lied during voir dire so as to secure a spot on the jury.

Nix II, 2018 WL 1009282, at *5. The district court correctly stated that "Defendants are not entitled to reconsideration merely because they disagree with the outcome of the Rule 33 Denial Order and the Court's determination as to Juror No. 3's alleged bias" Id.

We see nothing in the record to suggest that the denial of defendants' request for reconsideration of their juror-misconduct-based motion for a new trial constituted an abuse of the district court's discretion.

B. Which Hobbs Act Offenses Are Crimes of Violence Within the Meaning of § 924(c)

Section 924(c), as pertinent to defendants' convictions on the brandishing counts (Counts 2, 4, 6, and 12), prescribes enhanced punishment for any person who brandished a firearm "during and in relation to any crime of violence." 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(1)(A). Although prior to the Supreme Court's decision in Davis, 139 S. Ct.

2319, § 924(c) also contained an alternative definition of crime of violence in subpart (c)(3)(B) (see Part II.B.1. below), for purposes of § 924(c) a "crime of violence" is now defined only as a felony that "has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another," id. § 924(c)(3)(A) (emphases added).

The crimes on which defendants' brandishing-count convictions are predicated are offenses proscribed by the Hobbs Act (or "Act"), 18 U.S.C. § 1951. The Act in pertinent part, prohibits a person from affect[ing] commerce . . . by robbery . . . or attempt[ing] or conspir[ing] to do so, or commit[ting] or threaten[ing] physical violence to any person or property in furtherance of a plan or purpose to do anything in violation of this section.

18 U.S.C. § 1951(a) (emphases added). Hobbs Act "robbery" is defined to mean[] the unlawful taking or obtaining of personal property from the person or in the presence of another, against his will, by means of actual or threatened force, or violence, or fear of injury, immediate or future, to his person or property, or property in his custody or possession, or the person or property of a relative or member of his family or of anyone in his company at the time of the taking or obtaining.

Id. § 1951(b)(1) (emphases added).

McCoy and Nix, convicted of three types of Hobbs Act offenses--robbery (Count 11), conspiracy to commit robbery (Count 1), and attempted robbery (Counts 3

1 and 5)--contend that none of the Hobbs Act crimes are crime of violence. We agree
2 only with respect to Hobbs Act conspiracy.

3 1. Hobbs Act Conspiracy

4 Defendants' convictions on the brandishing charge in Count 2 of the 5 Indictment were predicated on their convictions of the Hobbs Act conspiracy alleged 6 in Count 1. It is now established that Hobbs Act conspiracy is not a crime of violence
7 within the meaning of § 924(c). See United States v. Barrett, 937 F.3d 126 (2d Cir. 2019)
8 ("Barrett II").

9 In United States v. Barrett, 903 F.3d 166 (2d Cir. 2018) ("Barrett I"), vacated
10 and remanded for further consideration, 139 S. Ct. 2274 (2019), we had affirmed the 11 defendant's convictions on several § 924(c) counts that were predicated on Hobbs Act
12 robbery (see Part II.B.3 below), and had affirmed one § 924(c) conviction that was 13 predicated on Hobbs Act conspiracy. We had affirmed the latter § 924(c) conviction 14 based in part on § 924(c)(3)(B) because Hobbs Act conspiracy (an offense that is 15 complete without performance of any overt act see, e.g., United States v. Maldonado-
16 Rivera, 922 F.2d 934, 983 (2d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1211 (1991); United States

1 v. Persico, 832 F.2d 705, 713 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1022 (1988)), poses a 2 risk of the use of force, see Barrett I, 903 F.3d at 175-77.

3 While the present appeals were pending, the Supreme Court decided 4 United States v. Davis, --- U.S. ----, 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019), ruling that § 924(c)(3)(B), in 5 defining crime of violence in terms of a "risk" that physical force would be used, was 6 unconstitutionally vague, see 139 S. Ct. at 2323-24. As "a vague law is no law at all,"
 7 id. at 2323, we concluded in Barrett II that Davis "precludes" a conclusion "that [a]
 8 Hobbs Act robbery conspiracy crime qualifies as a § 924(c) crime of violence," 937 F.3d
 9 at 127.

10 Accordingly, we conclude, and the government agrees, that defendants'
 11 convictions on Count 2 must be reversed, and the case remanded for resentencing.

12 2. Hobbs Act Robbery

13 Defendants' contention that Hobbs Act robbery is also not a crime of 14 violence within the meaning of § 924(c), however, is contrary to the law of this 15 Circuit. See Barrett II, 937 F.3d at 128; United States v. Hill, 890 F.3d 51 (2d Cir. 2018)
 16 ("Hill"), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 844 (2019). In Hill, we employed the "categorical
 17 approach" prescribed by Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575 (1990), which requires

1 that where Congress has defined a violent felony as a crime that has the use or threat
2 of force "as an element," the courts must determine whether a given offense is a crime
3 of violence by focusing categorically on the offense's statutory definition, i.e., the 4 intrinsic elements of the offense, rather than on the defendant's particular underlying 5 conduct, id. at 600-01. We stated that

6 [a]s relevant here, the categorical approach requires us to consider 7 the minimum conduct necessary for a conviction of the predicate
8 offense (in this case, a Hobbs Act robbery), and then to consider 9 whether such conduct amounts to a crime of violence under 10 § 924(c)(3)(A).

11 Hill, 890 F.3d at 56.

12 We noted that subpart (3)(A) of § 924(c) defines crime of violence as a 13 felony that "'has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical 14 force against the person or property of another.'" Hill, 890 F.3d at 54 (quoting 15 § 924(c)(3)(A)). And we noted that the Hobbs Act penalizes a person who affects 16 commerce "'by robbery . . . or attempts or conspires so to do, or commits or threatens 17 physical violence to any person or property in furtherance of a plan or purpose to do 18 anything in violation of this section,'" and that the Act defines robbery in part as "'the 19 unlawful taking or obtaining of personal property from the person or in the presence 20 of another, against his will, by means of actual or threatened force, or violence, or fear of

1 injury, immediate or future, to his person or property," id. 890 F.3d at 54-55 (quoting
2 19 U.S.C. §§ 1951(a) and (b)(1) (emphases ours)). Comparing these statutes, we 3 concluded that "Hobbs Act robbery 'has as an element the use, attempted use, or 4 threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another,' 18 U.S.C.
5 § 924(c)(3)(A)," and thus is a crime of violence within the meaning of that provision.
6 Hill, 890 F.3d at 60; see also id. at 60 & n.7 (noting that "all of the circuits to have
7 addressed the issue" have "h[e]ld that Hobbs Act robbery 'has as an element the use,
8 attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of 9 another'" (citing cases)).

10 Hill's conclusion that Hobbs Act robbery is a crime of violence within the 11 meaning of § 924(c)(3)(A) was not eroded by the Supreme Court's subsequent ruling 12 in Davis that the alternative crime-of-violence definition in § 924(c)(3)(B) was 13 unconstitutionally vague. Rather, after Davis, a § 924(c) conviction based on a crime
14 of violence is valid only under § 924(c)(3)(A). See, e.g., Barrett II, 937 F.3d at 128
15 (noting that Hobbs Act robbery is "a crime of violence under § 924(c)(3)(A) applying 16 the traditional, elements only, categorical approach not at issue in Davis").
17 Accordingly, we "affirm[ed] Barrett's convictions on" the § 924(c) counts for which the

1 predicate crime of violence was "substantive Hobbs Act robbery." Id. (emphasis in 2 original).

3 Although McCoy and Nix contend that Hobbs Act robbery is not
4 categorically a crime of violence even under § 924(c)(3)(A), arguing that property
5 could be obtained by threatening to withhold care from a person in need or to 6 "poison" a person, and that such means do not constitute physical force (e.g., McCoy
7 brief on appeal at 82), we expressly rejected just such an argument in Hill. We noted 8 that such hypothetical possibilities as the withholding of vital care, which have never 9 been the basis of a Hobbs Act charge, are ineffective to deflect the stated thrust of the 10 statute; and that "physical force 'encompasses even its indirect application,' as when 11 a battery is committed by administering a poison." Hill, 890 F.3d at 59 (quoting United 12 States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 170 (2014)).

13 In sum, defendants' contention that Hobbs Act robbery is not a crime of 14 violence within the meaning of § 924(c)(3)(A) is foreclosed by Hill and Barrett II.

15 3. Hobbs Act Attempted Robbery

16 Defendants' contention that their firearm-brandishing convictions on 17 Counts 4 and 6 should be reversed on the ground that the offense of Hobbs Act

1 attempted robbery (Counts 3 and 5) does not constitute a crime of violence--a 2 contention not raised in the district court, and thus reviewable only under plain-error
3 analysis--is also unpersuasive. We address this issue as to the nature of the Act's
4 prohibition of attempted robbery, which is one of first impression in this Circuit,
5 again using the categorical approach.

6 As set out above, the surviving § 924(c) definition of "crime of violence"
7 expressly includes a felony that "has as an element the . . . attempted use . . . of physical 8 force against the person or property of another." 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A) (emphasis 9 added). It is a fundamental principle of statutory interpretation that, "absent other 10 indication, Congress intends to incorporate the well-settled meaning of the 11 common-law terms it uses." Sekhar v. United States, 570 U.S. 729, 732 (2013) (internal 12 quotation marks omitted). The definition of "attempt" both in federal law and in the 13 Model Penal Code had long been settled by 1986, when the operative language of 14 § 924(c)(3)(A) was adopted. See Firearms Owners' Protection Act, Pub. L. No. 99-308, 15 § 104(a)(2), 100 Stat. 449, 456-57 (1986) (first defining "crime of violence" to include
16 "attempted use . . . of physical force"); United States v. Farhane, 634 F.3d 127, 146 (2d 17 Cir.) ("Farhane") ("This court effectively adopted the Model Code's formulation of 18 attempt in United States v. Stallworth, 543 F.2d 1038, 1040-41 (2d Cir. 1976)."), cert.

1 denied, 565 U.S. 1088 (2011). Accordingly, when Congress used "attempted use" in 2 § 924(c) without providing a different definition for the phrase, it adopted the concept
3 of "attempt" existing under federal law.

4 "Under federal law, '[a] person is guilty of an attempt to commit a crime
5 if he or she (1) had the intent to commit the crime, and (2) engaged in conduct
6 amounting to a "substantial step" towards the commission of the crime.'" United States
7 v. Thrower, 914 F.3d 770, 776 (2d Cir.) ("Thrower") (quoting United States v. Martinez, 8 775 F.2d 31, 35 (2d Cir. 1985)), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 305 (2019). This means that, for 9 substantive crimes of violence that include the use of physical force as an element, 10 defendants also commit crimes of violence when commission of those crimes is 11 attempted--because such attempts necessarily require (a) an intent to complete the 12 substantive crime (including an intent to use physical force) and (b) a substantial step 13 towards completing the crime (which logically means a substantial step towards 14 completion of all of that crime's elements, including the use of physical force). See 15 United States v. Taylor, 979 F.3d 203, 209 (4th Cir. 2020) ("Taylor"). Because we held in 16 Hill that Hobbs Act robbery categorically constitutes a crime of violence, see 890 F.3d
17 at 53, it follows as a matter of logic that an "attempt[]" to commit Hobbs Act

1 robbery--which the statute also expressly prohibits, see 18 U.S.C.
2 § 1951(a)--categorically qualifies as a crime of violence.

3 McCoy and Nix raise two principal arguments for why this should not
4 be so. First, they contend that Hobbs Act attempted robbery is not a crime of violence
5 because it is possible for a defendant to "take a substantial step towards commission
6 of an offense without engaging in a violent act." (McCoy first supplemental brief on 7 appeal at 16). But while it is true that a substantial step towards a completed Hobbs
8 Act robbery need not itself involve the "use . . . of physical force" within the meaning
9 of § 924(c)(3)(A), see, e.g., United States v. Jackson, 560 F.2d 112, 120 (2d Cir.) ("Jackson") 10 ("reconnoiter[ing] the place contemplated for the commission of the crime and 11 possess[ing] the paraphernalia to be employed in the commission of the crime"
12 constituted substantial steps towards a bank robbery in violation of 18 U.S.C.
13 § 2113(a)), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 914 (1977); United States v. Gonzalez, 441 F. App'x 31,
14 36 (2d Cir. 2011) (applying Jackson to Hobbs Act attempted robbery), cert. denied, 565
15 U.S. 1218 (2012), that is of no moment, since the substantive Hobbs Act robbery 16 towards which that substantial step leads necessarily would involve the "use of 17 physical force," if completed. To be guilty of Hobbs Act attempted robbery, a 18 defendant must necessarily (1) intend to commit all of the elements of a substantive

1 robbery, including the use of physical force, and (2) take a substantial step towards
2 committing the substantive robbery, which logically includes taking a substantial step 3 towards completing all of its elements, including the use of force. Accordingly, even 4 if a defendant's substantial step does not itself involve the use of physical force, a 5 defendant must necessarily intend to use physical force and take a substantial step 6 towards using physical force, which constitutes "attempted . . . use of physical force"
7 within the meaning of § 924(c)(3)(A). Accord United States v. Walker, 990 F.3d 316, 325
8 (3d Cir. 2021); United States v. Dominguez, 954 F.3d 1251, 1262 (9th Cir. 2020), petition
9 for cert. filed, No. 20-1000 (U.S. Jan. 26, 2021); United States v. Ingram, 947 F.3d 1021,
10 1026 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 323 (2020); United States v. St. Hubert, 909 F.3d
11 335, 351-52 (11th Cir. 2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 1394 (2019). Cf. United States v.
12 Hendricks, 921 F.3d 320, 328-29 & n.40 (2d Cir. 2019) (holding that attempted bank 13 robbery by intimidation in violation of § 2113(a) is a crime of violence because 14 intimidation "means that the defendant did or said something that would make an 15 ordinary reasonable person fear bodily harm" (internal quotation marks omitted)), 16 cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 870 (2020).

17 McCoy and Nix next argue that Hobbs Act attempted robbery does not 18 categorically constitute a crime of violence because substantive Hobbs Act robbery

1 need not always involve the actual use of force; rather, the statute defines "robbery"
2 as "the unlawful taking . . . of personal property . . . by means of actual or threatened
3 force." 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b)(1) (emphasis added). Based on this definition of "robbery," 4 as the Fourth Circuit recently observed, Hobbs Act attempted robbery could also 5 theoretically include "attempt[s] to threaten force," which would appear not to 6 constitute an "attempt to use force" as required by § 924(c)(3)(A). Taylor, 979 F.3d
7 at 209 (emphases in original).

8 However, even though it is theoretically possible that a defendant could 9 be charged with Hobbs Act attempted robbery under such an attempt-to-threaten 10 theory, we have made clear that "to show a predicate conviction is not a crime of 11 violence 'requires more than the application of legal imagination to [the] . . . statute's
12 language'; rather 'there must be 'a realistic probability, not a theoretical possibility,'
13 that the statute at issue could be applied to conduct that does not constitute a crime
14 of violence.'" Hill, 890 F.3d at 56 (quoting Gonzales v. Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. 183, 193 15 (2007)). To show such a "realistic probability," a defendant "'must at least point to his 16 own case or other cases in which the . . . courts did in fact apply the statute in the . . .
17 manner for which he argues.'" Hill, 890 F.3d at 56 (quoting Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S.
18 at 193).

1 McCoy and Nix have failed to make such a showing here. They point to 2 no case in which a defendant has been convicted of Hobbs Act attempted robbery
3 premised on an attempted "threat[]" to use force, and we are aware of none. And for 4 good reason: For purposes of the federal crime of attempt, a "substantial step" means
5 conduct (a) that is "planned to culminate in the commission of the substantive crime
6 being attempted," Farhane, 634 F.3d at 147 (internal quotation marks omitted 7 (emphasis ours)), and (b) that "is strongly corroborative of the criminal intent of the 8 accused," United States v. Davis, 8 F.3d 923, 927 (2d Cir. 1993). It is difficult even to 9 imagine a scenario in which a defendant could be engaged in conduct that would 10 "culminate" in a robbery and that would be "strongly corroborative of" his intent to 11 commit that robbery, but where it would also be clear that he only "attempt[ed]" to 12 "threaten[]," and neither used nor even actually "threatened" the use of force.

13 Indeed, in Thrower we made a similar observation when considering 14 whether the New York crime of attempted third-degree robbery involves the 15 "attempted use . . . of physical force" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B), 16 since New York law defines robbery similarly to Hobbs Act robbery, see N.Y.Penal 17 Law § 160.0 (defining "[r]obbery" as "us[ing] or threaten[ing] the immediate use of 18 physical force" "in the course of committing a larceny"). We observed that "[t]hough

1 Thrower posits that a defendant might be convicted of attempted robbery in New 2 York for an attempt to threaten to use physical force--as distinct from an attempt to use
 3 physical force or a threat to use physical force--he fails to 'at least point to his own case
 4 or other cases in which the state courts did in fact apply the statute in the . . . manner
 5 for which he argues.'" Thrower, 914 F.3d at 777 (quoting Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S.
 6 at 193 (emphases ours)).

7 In sum, we hold that Hobbs Act attempted robbery qualifies as a crime
 8 of violence under § 924(c) because an attempt to commit Hobbs Act robbery using 9 force necessarily involves the "attempted use . . . of force" under § 924(c)(3)(A), and 10 because, even though a conviction for an inchoate attempt to threaten is theoretically 11 possible, McCoy and Nix have not shown that there is a "realistic probability" that the 12 statute will be applied in such a manner, Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. at 193.

13 4. Liability for Aiding-and-Abetting

14 Finally, McCoy and Nix contend--for the first time on these appeals--that 15 their § 924(c) firearm-brandishing convictions on Counts 4, 6, and 12 should be 16 reversed for lack of a proper predicate because their convictions of the corresponding 17 substantive Hobbs Act offenses (Counts 3 and 5 (attempted robbery) and Count 11

1 (robbery)) were based on an aiding-and-abetting theory of liability. Given evidence
2 that they normally sat in nearby cars while their brothers and/or friends entered the 3 targeted homes, threatened the victims, and stole or attempted to steal the victims'
4 property, McCoy and Nix contend that aiding-and-abetting a substantive Hobbs Act
5 offense is not a crime of violence. This contention need not detain us long.

6 Section 2 of Title 18 provides in part that "[w]hoever commits an offense
7 against the United States or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its 8 commission, is punishable as a principal." 18 U.S.C. § 2(a). For the aiding-and-9 abetting theory of liability to apply, the underlying federal crime must have been 10 committed by someone other than the defendant; and the defendant himself must 11 either have acted, or have failed to act, with the specific intent of aiding the 12 commission of that underlying crime. See, e.g., Rosemond v. United States, 572 U.S. 65, 13 77 (2014); United States v. Smith, 198 F.3d 377, 382-83 (2d Cir. 1999) ("Smith"), cert.
14 denied, 531 U.S. 864 (2000). Section 2(a) makes an aider and abetter as guilty of the 15 underlying crime as the person who committed it.

16 There is no culpable aiding and abetting without an underlying crime
17 committed by some other person; and aiding and abetting itself is not the predicate
18 crime for firearm brandishing under § 924(c). The aiding-and-abetting concept

1 describes the role of the defendant that makes him liable for the underlying offense.
2 "[W]hen a person is charged with aiding and abetting the commission of a substantive
3 offense, the 'crime charged' is . . . the substantive offense itself." Smith, 198 F.3d at 383
4 (other internal quotation marks omitted); see, e.g., United States v. Richardson, 906 F.3d
5 417, 426 (6th Cir. 2018) ("Richardson I") ("There is no distinction between aiding and 6 abetting the commission of a crime and committing the principal offense. Aiding and 7 abetting is simply an alternative theory of liability; it is not a distinct substantive crime."
8 (internal quotation marks omitted) (emphasis ours)), vacated and remanded on other 9 grounds, Richardson v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 2713 (2019) ("Richardson II").

10 The crime charged in a prosecution for aiding and abetting a Hobbs Act 11 robbery is thus Hobbs Act robbery. Accord In re Colon, 826 F.3d 1301, 1305 (11th Cir.
12 2016) ("Because an aider and abettor is responsible for the acts of the principal as a 13 matter of law, an aider and abettor of a Hobbs Act robbery necessarily commits all the 14 elements of a principal Hobbs Act robbery."); United States v. Deiter, 890 F.3d 1203, 15 1215-16 (10th Cir.) (courts should look to "the underlying statute of conviction, rather 16 than § 2, to decide whether [§ 924(c)(3)(A)] is satisfied"), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 647
17 (2018).

1 If the underlying offense is a crime of violence, it is a predicate for 2 § 924(c) liability; if the defendant aided and abetted that underlying offense, he is 3 guilty of the underlying offense. As we have concluded above, Hobbs Act robbery
4 and Hobbs Act attempted robbery are crimes of violence within the meaning of 5 § 924(c). As McCoy and Nix--either directly or as aiders and abettors--were found 6 guilty of those crimes of violence, they were convicted of crimes that are proper 7 predicates for § 924(c) liability. Their § 924(c) convictions, based on their guilt as 8 aiders and abettors of the violent crimes of Hobbs Act robbery and attempted 9 robbery, are not error, much less plain error.

10 C. Instructional and Sufficiency Challenges

11 Defendants also make several other challenges to their convictions, 12 principally contending that, in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Rehaif, their 13 § 922(g)(1) convictions as felons in possession of firearms should be vacated because 14 the district court failed to instruct the jury that the government was required to prove 15 that when they possessed the firearms, they knew their status as felons. Nix also 16 contends that the evidence was insufficient to support his convictions on Counts 3,

1 4, and 7, and that the court erred in giving the jury a Pinkerton instruction. We reject
2 all of these challenges.

3 1. The Rehaif Challenges

4 On Counts 9 and 10, respectively, Nix and McCoy were convicted of 5 having been in possession of firearms on September 23, 2014, in violation of 18 U.S.C.
6 § 922(g), which makes firearm possession unlawful by "any person . . . who has been 7 convicted in any court of[] a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding 8 one year." 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) (the "felon-in-possession" subparagraph). Anyone 9 who "knowingly violates" any of the nine subparagraphs of § 922(g), including 10 subparagraph (g)(1), is subject to imprisonment for up to 10 years. Id. § 924(a)(2).

11 While the present appeals were pending, the Supreme Court in Rehaif, 12 which involved a defendant convicted under a different § 922(g) subparagraph, ruled 13 that "in prosecutions under § 922(g) and § 924(a)(2), the Government must prove that 14 a defendant knows of his status as a person barred from possessing a firearm," 139 S.
15 Ct. at 2195; see id. at 2194 (the government must show not only that "the defendant 16 knew he possessed a firearm" but "also that he knew he had the relevant status when 17 he possessed it").

1 In charging the jury in the present case, the district court instructed that 2 each defendant had "stipulated" with the government "that prior to September 23,
3 2014," he had in fact "been convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a 4 term exceeding one year" (Tr. 3873); but it did not instruct that the jury must find that,
5 when they possessed firearms on that date defendants knew they had been convicted
6 of a crime that was punishable by imprisonment for more than one year. Defendants
7 contend that they are thus entitled to have their convictions on Counts 9 and 10 8 vacated and the matter remanded for further proceedings. We disagree. As 9 defendants neither requested an instruction as to their knowledge of their felony
10 status nor objected to the instructions that were given, we review these challenges 11 only for plain error, and we conclude that defendants do not meet that standard.

12 In light of Rehaif, it was error not to instruct that the government was 13 required to prove defendants' knowledge of their status as convicted felons at the 14 time of their firearm possession; and that error is plain, see, e.g., Henderson v. United 15 States, 568 U.S. 266, 279 (2013) ("it is enough that an error be 'plain' at the time of 16 appellate consideration for [t]he second part of the [four-part] Olano test [to be] 17 satisfied" (other internal quotation marks omitted)); United States v. Balde, 943 F.3d 73, 18 97 (2d Cir. 2019). Thus, the first two prongs of plain-error analysis have been met.

1 It is also arguable that the third prong of the plain-error test--an error
2 affecting substantial rights--may have been met. The Supreme Court in Rehaif, while 3 noting that, as to the relevant status element of § 922(g), the requisite "knowledge can 4 be inferred from circumstantial evidence," 139 S. Ct. at 2198 (internal quotation marks
5 omitted), also suggested that an inference of knowledge as to felony status with 6 respect to the felon-in-possession subparagraph of § 922(g) might not be available if 7 the "person . . . was convicted of a prior crime but sentenced only to probation," and 8 "d[id] not know that the crime [wa]s punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding 9 one year," id. (emphasis in original).

10 In the present case, while McCoy and Nix stipulated that they had 11 previously been convicted of crimes punishable by imprisonment for a term 12 exceeding one year, their stipulations neither included acknowledgement that they 13 knew those crimes were punishable to that extent nor specified the length of the 14 sentences actually imposed on them. And the government has not called to our 15 attention any trial evidence from which the jury, if properly instructed, could have 16 found beyond a reasonable doubt that they had such knowledge.

17 In a case raising post-Rehaif issues similar to those here, we "decline[d]
18 to decide whether a properly-instructed jury would have found that [the defendant]

1 was aware of his membership in § 922(g)(1)'s class," United States v. Miller, 954 F.3d
2 551, 559 (2d Cir. 2020) ("Miller"), and we instead proceeded directly to "the fourth
3 prong of plain-error review, which examines whether not reversing would seriously 4 affect[] the fairness, integrity or public reputation of judicial proceedings and which 5 does not necessarily confine us to the trial record," id. (internal quotation marks and 6 footnote omitted) (emphasis ours). In Miller we found reliable information in the 7 presentence report ("PSR") prepared on the defendant, which, inter alia, described his 8 criminal record. As a defendant's criminal history is an essential factor in the district
9 court's required calculation of the sentence recommended for him by the Guidelines, 10 the contents of the PSR will have been subjected to close scrutiny by both sides. The 11 PSR for the defendant at issue in Miller showed that he had prior felony convictions 12 for which he received "a total effective sentence of ten years' imprisonment, with 13 execution suspended after three years, which remove[d] any doubt that [he] was 14 aware of his membership in § 922(g)(1)'s class." Id. at 560.

15 Accordingly, we concluded that the Miller trial court's failure to instruct 16 the jury on the element of whether the defendant knew he was a convicted felon "did 17 not rise to the level of reversible plain error" because it does no disservice to the 18 judicial system to hold that a person who was sentenced to and served a prison term

1 of more than one year must have been aware of both the extent of his sentence and 2 the length of time he spent in prison. Id. We have reached the same result in other
3 post-Rehaif cases in which the district court records revealed that the defendant had 4 received, and had served, a prison sentence exceeding one year. See, e.g., United States
5 v. Sandford, 814 F. App'x 649, 652-53 (2d Cir. 2020); United States v. Smith, 814 F. App'x
6 634, 635-36 (2d Cir. 2020); United States v. Goolsby, 820 F. App'x 47, 50 (2d Cir. 2020);
7 United States v. Johnson, 816 F. App'x 604, 607-08 (2d Cir. 2020); United States v. Frye,
8 826 F. App'x 19, 23-24 (2d Cir. 2020); United States v. Feaster, 833 F. App'x 494, 497 (2d 9 Cir. 2020).

10 The district court record in the present case includes PSRs with similar 11 details--unobjected to by McCoy or Nix--as to the sentences actually imposed on them 12 for their prior felony convictions and the amounts of prison time they served for those 13 convictions. McCoy, in 2001, was convicted in New York State court, following his 14 plea of guilty, on two felony counts of criminal possession of controlled substances 15 and was sentenced to a prison term of 54 months to nine years; as a result he was 16 imprisoned for nearly six years. Nix, in 2008, was convicted in federal court, 17 following his plea of guilty, of possession of narcotics with intent to distribute and 18 possession of a firearm in furtherance of the drug offense; he was sentenced to 24

1 months' imprisonment for each offense, to be served consecutively. As a result, Nix
2 spent some four years in prison.

3 On this record, we conclude that there can be no reasonable doubt that 4 each of these defendants knew he had been convicted of a crime punishable by 5 imprisonment for a term exceeding one year. McCoy and Nix thus have not shown 6 that the trial court's failure to instruct the jury that it must find that a defendant had 7 such knowledge seriously affected the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of 8 judicial proceedings. The unobjected-to error provides no basis for vacating the 9 convictions on Counts 9 and 10.

10 2. Nix's Sufficiency Challenges

11 Nix contends that the evidence at trial was insufficient to convict him on 12 Count 7 of the Indictment, which charged the narcotics distribution conspiracy, and 13 on Counts 3 and 4, which concerned the attempted robbery and use of firearms at 14 Hayward Avenue. In considering a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence to 15 support a conviction, we view the evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, in the 16 light most favorable to the government, crediting every inference that could have 17 been drawn in the government's favor, and deferring to the jury's assessments of

1 witness credibility and the weight of the evidence. See, e.g., United States v. Lyle, 919
2 F.3d 716, 737 (2d Cir. 2019), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 846 (2020); United States v. O'Brien,
3 926 F.3d 57, 79 (2d Cir. 2019); United States v. Praddy, 725 F.3d 147, 152 (2d Cir. 2013).
4 With the evidence at trial viewed in that light, and considered as a whole rather than 5 piecemeal, see, e.g., United States v. Podlog, 35 F.3d 699, 705 (2d Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 6 513 U.S. 1135 (1995); United States v. Brown, 776 F.2d 397, 403 (2d Cir. 1985), cert.
7 denied, 475 U.S. 1141 (1986), a conviction will be upheld so long as, "any rational trier
8 of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable 9 doubt." Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 319 (1979) (emphasis in original).

10 In a prosecution for conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute a 11 prohibited substance, the element of intent to distribute--as contrasted with an intent 12 to possess only for personal use--"may be inferred from the volume of drugs with 13 which defendant was associated or that was in his actual or constructive possession."
14 United States v. Anderson, 747 F.3d 51, 62 n.8 (2d Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 574 U.S. 850
15 (2014); see, e.g., United States v. Brockman, 924 F.3d 988, 993 (8th Cir. 2019) (finding that 16 the district court did not clearly err in determining that "eight ounces [of marijuana]
17 exceeded a user quantity"); United States v. Martinez, 964 F.3d 1329, 1334 (11th Cir.
18 2020) ("A pound, whether it's cocaine, heroin, marijuana, or methamphetamine, is

1 more than personal users typically buy."). And we have noted quantity is not always
2 dispositive: "[A]ny amount of drugs, however small, will support a conviction when 3 there is additional evidence of intent to distribute." United States v. Martinez, 54 F.3d
4 1040, 1043 (2d Cir. 1995).

5 Nix, in challenging the sufficiency of the evidence to support his Count 7 6 conviction of conspiracy to distribute narcotics, argues that there was no direct 7 testimony that he engaged in narcotics distribution, and that Barnes testified that he 8 never observed Nix engaging in such distribution. (See Nix brief on appeal at 55-56.)
9 Given the record before us, and the fact that Count 7 charged conspiracy, rather than 10 actual distribution, this challenge is meritless.

11 First, there was abundant proof of the existence of a robbery conspiracy 12 whose principal members were McCoy, Barnes, Clarence and Gary Lambert, and 13 Nix--who was called "Meech" (Tr. 1223). The evidence included, as described in Part 14 I.A. above, the testimony of Barnes who admitted having engaged in 10-20 home
15 invasions with Nix; and through Nix, Barnes met, and participated in home invasions
16 with, Clarence, Gary, and McCoy. (See Tr. 1240, 1230-31.) Although Nix himself did 17 not enter the invaded homes, he selected the persons to be robbed, conducted 18 preliminary surveillance of targeted premises, planned the invasions, provided guns,

1 and gave the men who would enter information as to what to expect and where to
2 search (see, e.g., id. at 1239 (Barnes: "Meech would tell me the location and take me
3 there and I would go in the house with somebody else")). And while his associates
4 were inside, Nix would wait for them in the car "either down the street or around the 5 corner" (id. at 1236); the men who had entered would phone Nix to report whether 6 they were finding the expected trove of money and/or drugs (see id. at 1236-37).
7 When the men who had entered emerged with stolen property, they turned it over 8 to Nix who, with McCoy, decided how it would be divided. (See, e.g., id. at 1237-40, 9 2912.)

10 Second, there was ample evidence that a principal goal of the conspiracy 11 was to rob drug dealers. Barnes testified that in all but one instance, the residents of 12 the invaded homes were persons Nix believed to be drug dealers. (See Tr. 1228.) And 13 it was understood among the coconspirators that Nix and McCoy intended to sell the 14 narcotics obtained in those robberies. (See, e.g., id. at 1238 (as to drugs obtained in 15 such a robbery, "Meech would take it and sell it and give me what he felt like I should 16 get off those"); id. ("[Meech] would sell the drugs and give me money, bring me
17 money back off the drugs").) Barnes testified that drug dealers were targeted

1 precisely because they would have "[m]oney, drugs, drugs that we could sell." (Id.
2 at 1228.)

3 For example, Barnes testified that for the September 23 burglary, Nix
4 drove him to Maple Street and identified the intended house; Nix then phoned
5 McCoy and Clarence. After McCoy and Clarence arrived and got into Nix's car, Nix
6 and McCoy told Barnes and Clarence what kind of drugs they would find in the 7 house and said that drugs could be found hidden in the walls. (See Tr. 1312-15.)
8 Barnes testified that the "plan . . . if [they] got drugs from inside that house," was that 9 "Meech and P was going to sell" the drugs and give Barnes and Clarence some of the 10 proceeds. (Id. at 1316.)

11 According to plan, Barnes and Clarence, armed with guns, entered the 12 Maple Street house and, as predicted by Nix, found cash and drugs. Barnes phoned 13 Nix from the house and said, "We hit the jackpot"; Nix told him to "Get everything
14 and I'll be there . . . I'm coming." (Tr. 1321.) What they found in the Maple Street 15 house included 10-12 "large" ziplock bags--an estimated eight inches by six or eight 16 inches--"full of weed." (Id. 1322-33.) Nix, McCoy, Barnes, and Clarence then went to 17 Barnes's then-house, and Nix--who had taken possession of the $7-10,000 in cash that 18 Barnes and Clarence had found--gave Barnes and Clarence each $1,000. "[Nix] took

1 all of the drugs" (Tr. 1332); and McCoy and Barnes subsequently "bought capsules to 2 package the" marijuana "[s]o we could sell it" (id.).

3 The jury could also infer that the amounts of narcotics stolen by the 4 conspirators and appropriated by Nix as his share--especially given the large number 5 of home invasions done by defendants and their crew seeking to obtain drugs, see,
6 e.g., id. at 2871-76 (Gary describing an earlier burglary that yielded 24 pounds of 7 marijuana, of which Nix's share was more than 11 pounds)--were inconsistent with 8 possession merely for Nix's personal use.

9 In sum, the evidence was ample to allow the jury to find that Nix was 10 part of a conspiracy whose express goal was to rob drug dealers of narcotics in 11 quantities sufficient to allow members of the conspiracy to be drug dealers 12 themselves.

13 In challenging his conviction on Counts 3 and 4 with respect to the 14 Hayward Avenue attempted robbery, Nix argues that the cellphone evidence that he 15 was near that location at the time of that event was "dispute[d]," and that "mere 16 presence at the scene of a crime, even when coupled with knowledge that at that 17 moment a crime is being committed is insufficient to establish the defendant's

1 participation in criminal activity." (Nix brief on appeal at 56, 55 (internal quotation
2 marks omitted).) This argument is meritless as well.

3 As discussed above, coconspirators at trial described the usual operations
4 of the conspiracy, in which Nix organized and planned the home invasions and 5 remained nearby while they took place, and the men who actually entered the homes
6 would telephone Nix after entering and inform him of what they found. One of the 7 armed men who broke into the Hayward Avenue home, expecting to find drugs, was 8 identified at trial as McCoy. After he and the other invader failed to find any drugs, 9 McCoy made a telephone call in which one of the victims heard him report that "there
10 was nothing in the house" (Tr. 1082). Evidence of telephone and cellphone tower 11 records identified calls between phones of McCoy and Nix, both of which were in the 12 immediate vicinity of the Hayward Avenue residence during the time of this robbery
13 attempt; and both defendants' phones were tracked to the house of Nix's mother
14 immediately thereafter. (See, e.g., Tr. 3133-39.)

15 Thus, although Nix did not himself enter the home, the evidence was 16 plainly sufficient to permit the jury to find him guilty of the Counts 3 and 4
17 substantive offenses of attempted robbery and firearm use on Hayward Avenue,

1 either by aiding and abetting the attempted robbery (see generally Part II.B.4. above)
2 or on the Pinkerton theory of conspiratorial vicarious liability, to which we now turn.

3 3. Nix's Pinkerton Challenge

4 Nix contends that it was error for the district court to give the jury a
5 Pinkerton charge, which informs the jury that it may find a defendant guilty of a 6 substantive offense that he did not personally commit if it was committed by a 7 coconspirator in furtherance of the conspiracy, and if commission of that offense was 8 a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the conspiratorial agreement, see Pinkerton, 9 328 U.S. at 646-48. Nix argues that such an instruction was improper here, claiming 10 that the evidence of conspiracy was "sufficiently thin that the charge invite[d] the 11 jury" to "infer[] the conspiracy from the substantive offense." (Nix brief on appeal 12 at 60.) This argument lacks any foundation in the evidentiary record or in the 13 instructions as given.

14 To begin with, the court expressly instructed the jury that, in order to 15 find a defendant guilty of a substantive offense committed by another person on this 16 theory of conspiratorial vicarious liability, it must first find beyond a reasonable 17 doubt that both the defendant and the person who actually committed the substantive

1 offense were members of the charged conspiracy at the time the substantive offense
2 was committed, that the substantive offense was committed pursuant to the common 3 plan of the coconspirators, and that the commission of the substantive offense was 4 reasonably foreseeable to the defendant. (See Tr. 3819-21.) The court then reiterated
5 that the jury could not find a defendant guilty on this theory of liability if it had not
6 made all of the described preliminary findings. (See id. at 3821-22.) The court in no
7 way invited the jury to infer the existence of a conspiracy from the performance of the 8 substantive acts.

9 Further, the evidence supporting the charges of conspiracy was anything
10 but "thin." As discussed above, the testimony of Gary, Moscicki, and Barnes, who 11 were coconspirators of McCoy and Nix--which plainly was credited by the jury--
12 abundantly established the existence of a conspiracy, i.e., an agreement among Nix, 13 McCoy, Gary and Clarence Lambert, Barnes, and others to act together to commit
14 home invasions, principally against persons thought to be drug dealers, and indeed
15 established that Nix was the conspiracy's principal leader. We see no Pinkerton error.

1 D. Resentencing

2 When the district court sentenced McCoy and Nix in 2017, § 924(c)(1)(C)
3 had been interpreted to require that a defendant convicted of multiple § 924(c)
4 violations in a single prosecution be sentenced to consecutive 25-year minimum
5 prison terms for the second violation and each subsequent violation. See Deal v.
6 United States, 508 U.S. 129, 132-37 (1993). In 2018, however, Congress adopted the 7 First Step Act (or "FSA"), amending § 924(c)(1)(C) "to provide that only a second 8 section 924(c) conviction 'that occurs after a prior conviction under [section 924(c)] has 9 become final' requires the consecutive minimum 25-year sentence provided by 10 subsection 924(c)(1)(C)(i)." United States v. Brown, 935 F.3d 43, 45 n.1 (2d Cir. 2019)
11 ("Brown") (quoting First Step Act, Pub L. No. 115-391, § 403(a), 132 Stat. 5194, 5221-22).

12 In supplemental briefing, defendants argue--in the event that their 13 requests for a new trial and their challenges to the viability of any of their § 924(c) 14 convictions are unsuccessful--that we should remand to the district court for 15 reduction of their sentences on the surviving § 924(c) counts in light of § 403 of the 16 First Step Act. McCoy and Nix argue that they are eligible for such relief because 17 their convictions will not become final until appellate review rights have been 18 exhausted.

While defendants' concept of finality is generally correct, its applicability here is unclear. With respect to the temporal applicability of its provisions, the First Step Act provides that its amendments to § 924(c) "shall apply to any offense that was committed before the date of enactment of this Act, if a sentence for the offense has not been imposed as of such date of enactment," FSA § 403(b) (emphases added). When an FSA reduction in sentence has been sought by a defendant who was sentenced before the FSA's date of enactment and who was not otherwise entitled to appellate relief on his § 924(c) convictions, courts have concluded that FSA relief was not available. See, e.g., United States v. Cruz-Rivera, 954 F.3d 410, 413 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 2020 141 S. Ct. 601 (2020) (interpreting Congress's focus on the time at which a sentence was "imposed" as intending to deny eligibility for FSA relief to any defendant originally sentenced prior to the FSA's enactment, reflecting the customary understanding that a sentence is "imposed either when it is pronounced or entered in the trial court, regardless of subsequent appeals" (internal quotation marks omitted)); United States v. Jordan, 952 F.3d 160, 174 (4th Cir. 2020) ("Congress decided to extend the more lenient terms of § 403(a) of the First Step Act to some but not all pre-Act offenders, with the date of sentencing in the district court drawing the line between those who are covered and those who are not." (internal quotation marks omitted)), cert. denied,

1 141 S. Ct. 1051 (2021); United States v. Gomez, 960 F.3d 173, 177 (5th Cir. 2020) ("A
 2 sentence is 'imposed' when the district court pronounces it, not when the defendant
 3 exhausts his appeals."). However, at least one court has held that as to a defendant
 4 who was originally sentenced prior to the FSA's date of enactment and whose 5 "sentences were remanded prior to the First Step Act's enactment but who were not
 6 . . . resentenced" until after enactment, "both the text of the statute and Congress's
 7 purpose in enacting the legislation make clear that § 403 applies." United States v.
 8 Henry, 983 F.3d 214, 219 (6th Cir. 2020).

9 In Davis, the Supreme Court itself described Congress in the First Step
 10 Act as having "changed the law . . . going forward." 139 S. Ct. at 2324 n.1 (emphasis 11 added). However, a week before Davis was filed, the Supreme Court in Richardson II
 12 had granted certiorari and remanded, stating, without other substantive comment, 13 "[j]udgment vacated, and case remanded to the United States Court of Appeals for the 14 Sixth Circuit for the court to consider the First Step Act of 2018, Pub. L. No. 115-391
 15 (2018)," 139 S. Ct. at 2713-14--in a case that had been the subject of appellate review
 16 in the court of appeals and the Supreme Court for several years with respect to a 17 sentence originally imposed on the defendant in 2013 and reimposed in 2017, see
 18 Richardson I, 906 F.3d at 421-22. Nonetheless, the Supreme Court denied further

1 review after the Sixth Circuit, following the Richardson II remand, concluded that 2 retroactive FSA relief was unavailable to Richardson because "[i]n the general context
3 of criminal sentencing, a sentence is 'imposed' when the trial court announces it, not 4 when the defendant has exhausted his appeals from the trial court's judgment," United 5 States v. Richardson, 948 F.3d 733, 748 (6th Cir.) ("Richardson III"), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct.
6 344 (2020) ("Richardson IV").

7 In Brown, we quoted the Davis Court's "'changed the law . . . going 8 forward'" language, but we also stated that "at the resentencing, which will occur as 9 a result of our remand, Brown will have the opportunity to argue that he is 10 nevertheless entitled to benefit from section 403(b) of the [FSA]." 935 F.3d at 45 n.1.

11 Here too, as we have reversed defendants' convictions on Count 2 and 12 are remanding for resentencing, we leave it to the district court in the first instance 13 to consider the applicability of the First Step Act to McCoy and Nix in light of the 14 possible temporal limitation on retroactivity dictated by Congress's reference to the 15 time when a sentence was "imposed." We also note that although Nix adopts without 16 elaboration the arguments made by McCoy for First Step Act relief, the results might 17 not be the same for both defendants because, leaving aside common questions as to

1 the FSA's temporal applicability, differences in the criminal records of McCoy and 2 Nix (see Part I.E. above) may dictate different outcomes.

3 CONCLUSION

4 We have considered all of defendants' arguments on these appeals and,
5 except as indicated above, have found them to be without merit. Defendants'
6 convictions on Count 2 are reversed; their convictions on all other counts are 7 affirmed. The matter is remanded for dismissal of Count 2 and for resentencing, 8 including consideration by the district court of the First Step Act.

9 Should any appeal ensue after resentencing, either party may restore our 10 jurisdiction pursuant to the procedure outlined in United States v. Jacobson, 15 F.3d 19, 11 22 (2d Cir. 1994), in which event the appeal will be referred to this panel.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

DECISION AND ORDER

v.

6:14-CR-06181 EAW

MATTHEW NIX and EARL McCOY,

Defendants.

I. INTRODUCTION

Defendants Matthew Nix (“Nix”) and Earl McCoy (“McCoy”) (collectively, “Defendants”) were charged in a Third Superseding Indictment returned on January 5, 2017, with 12 counts alleging violations of the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951(a), and related firearms and narcotics charges, all in connection with a spree of violent home invasions during 2014. (Dkt. 165). Trial commenced on February 13, 2017, and concluded on March 17, 2017, with the jury convicting Defendants on all 12 counts. (Dkt. 229; Dkt. 266; Dkt. 267). Sentencing is presently scheduled for September 8, 2017. (Dkt. 350).

Nix and McCoy aggressively defended the case before and during trial, and the intensity of that defense only continued after the jury returned its verdict.¹ Defendants’ post-verdict activities spawned further hearings, appearances, and motion practice, with

Defendants attacking various aspects of the trial, from the jury selection to the jury instructions. Among the issues raised by Defendants was that one of the jurors in this case—“Juror No. 3”²—was a convicted felon who failed to disclose his criminal history during jury selection. Juror No. 3’s felon status was not discovered until, post-verdict, counsel for Nix uncovered this information based on a “hunch.” (Dkt. 327 at 6-9). Arguing that Juror No. 3’s felon status tainted the impartiality of the jury, Defendants have filed motions pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 33 seeking a new trial. (Dkt. 286; Dkt. 289).

Defendants had a fundamental constitutional right to a fair trial, and this Court is responsible for ensuring that they were afforded that right. Central to that right is the Sixth Amendment’s guarantee to a trial by an impartial jury. See also United States v. Nelson, 277 F.3d 164, 206 (2d Cir. 2002) (“[Q]uite apart from offending the Sixth Amendment, trying an accused before a jury that is actually biased violates even the most minimal standards of due process.”). “An impartial jury is one in which all of its members, not just most of them, are free of interest and bias.” United States v. Parse, 789 F.3d 83, 111 (2d Cir. 2015).

However, in the words of the Supreme Court, Defendants were “entitled to a fair trial but not a perfect one, for there are no perfect trials.” McDonough Power Equipment, Inc. v. Greenwood, 464 U.S. 548, 553 (1984) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). In other words, although Defendants were unquestionably entitled to an impartial jury, they may not, post-verdict, challenge the selection of jurors who, in hindsight and with additional information, Defendants wished had not been selected. After a thorough consideration of the evidence and the parties’ arguments, the Court concludes that the presence of Juror No. 3 did not destroy the impartiality of the jury in this case. Juror No. 3, a convicted felon who was not qualified to serve, admittedly blundered his way onto the jury—but he did not smuggle his way onto the jury through intentional deceit. As a result, Defendants are not entitled to a new trial, and, for the reasons discussed below, the motions pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 33 (Dkt. 286; Dkt. 289) based upon Juror No. 3’s alleged bias are denied.³

II. BACKGROUND

A. Jury Selection—February 13, 2017

Jury selection occurred on February 13, 2017. (See Dkt. 328). From a venire of 83, the Court sat a panel of 36 prospective jurors for the proposed 16-member jury (12 jurors and 4 alternates). Prospective jurors were excused for cause and replaced from the venire as the Court questioned the panel of prospective jurors. Each prospective juror had completed a questionnaire mailed to him or her in advance by the Clerk's Office. The questionnaire asked, among other things, for information about prior felony convictions.⁴

³ Defendants’ post-verdict motions also raise a number of other issues in an effort to obtain an acquittal or new trial pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 29(c) or 33. (See Dkt. 286; Dkt. 289). The Court will address those issues in a separate Decision and Order.

Juror No. 3, an African American male, was the sixth prospective juror called by the Court's deputy clerk, and he was seated in the sixth seat of the panel of 36. (Id. at 29). After all prospective jurors were placed under oath (id. at 30), the Court proceeded to ask questions of the panel.

Juror No. 3 responded to the Court's questions shortly after the questioning began, when the Court questioned the prospective jurors about their availability to sit for the trial that was estimated to last five weeks:

JUROR NO. 3: Hello, my name is [J.B.]. I'm self employed.

THE COURT: What do you do [J.B.]?

JUROR NO. 3: I have my own cleaning business. Right now it's covered because I'm working at night. I don't know if I can do that for five weeks.

THE COURT: You tell me what you would be able to do.

JUROR NO. 3: I don't know. I have contracted and these people rely on me to clean the businesses.

⁴ The questionnaire asked each prospective juror: "Have you ever been convicted, either by your guilty or nolo contendere plea or by a court or jury trial, of a state or federal crime for which punishment could have been more than one year in prison?" (See Court Ex. 15 at 7). If that question was answered in the affirmative, the individual was prompted to answer additional questions.

THE COURT: Do you typically clean during the day[?]

JUROR NO. 3: No, at nighttime. And I have a couple of contracts during the daytime, too.

THE COURT: Only you know whether or not you can manage it. We're going to be in session typically from 9 to 1. You would have the afternoons, typically, would be free and there would be some days where we'll be going full days. Obviously we're not meeting on the weekends. You tell me whether or not you think you could do it.

JUROR NO. 3: I have a contract that gets Tuesday and Friday morning. I don't know if she will allow me not to do it for five weeks.

THE COURT: During the break, would you be able to contact the person.

JUROR NO. 3: Not really, I don't have my phone. It's in the car.

THE COURT: If during the lunch break –

JUROR NO. 3: Yes.

THE COURT: We'll have about an hour lunch break, would you be able to make a call to see if it would work.

(Id. at 40-42).⁵

⁵ The transcript filed at Docket 328, as well as other transcripts referenced in this Decision and Order, were filed under seal in order to protect the identity and personal information of jurors and prospective jurors, including Juror No. 3, from public disclosure consistent with the Court's Jury Plan. See note 2, supra. The portions that are quoted in this Decision and Order have been redacted, where necessary, to avoid public disclosure of the identity of jurors and prospective jurors.

After the first break, Juror No. 3 revealed that he had been able to “switch everything around” and, therefore, he would be able to serve if selected. (Id. at 86-87). Juror No. 3 did not speak for the rest of the day in response to the Court’s voir dire questions, until the Court asked for biographical information from each juror at the end of the voir dire. (See id. at 245). As a result, Juror No. 3 did not respond to any of the following questions that were asked of the entire panel:⁶

- (1) “Has anyone ever been the victim of a home robbery?” (id. at 97);
- (2) “Has anyone ever served on a jury before?” (id. at 205);
- (3) “Has anyone ever been a defendant in a criminal case?” (id. at 214);
- (4) “Has anyone ever visited a jail or correctional facility other than in connection with . . . your educational curriculum” (id. at 229);
- (5) “Has anyone had anyone close to them, other than what we already discussed, I know we covered this, anyone close to them convicted of a crime?” (id. at 239).

Similarly, Juror No. 3 did not offer any information in response to the Court’s “catch-all” questions asked toward the end of voir dire: whether there was “anything in fairness to both sides that you think we should know that we haven't covered already" (id. at 221), and "[i]s there anything that you think we should know that we haven't covered up to this point?" (id. at 257).

Juror No. 3 was one of two African American males seated in the panel of 36 prospective jurors.⁷ Like Juror No. 3, prospective juror "T.P." was also called by the Court's deputy clerk during the initial seating. (Id. at 30). T.P. was seated in seat 26 of the panel of 36. (Id.). And like Juror No. 3, T.P. remained quiet throughout much of the voir dire until the Court asked each prospective juror at the end of jury selection to provide biographical information.⁸ (See id. at 252). Also like Juror No. 3, T.P. was a convicted felon and failed to disclose that information either when completing the questionnaire mailed by the Clerk's Office or in response to the Court's voir dire questions. (See Court Ex. 3A). However, unlike Juror No. 3, T.P.'s felon status was discovered during jury selection when, prior to exercising peremptory challenges, the Government disclosed that it had run a background check on T.P. and discovered his undisclosed criminal history. (Dkt. 328 at 269-75; see also Court Ex. 3B; Court Ex. 3C).

When the Government brought to the attention of the Court and defense counsel its discovery of T.P.'s criminal history, counsel for McCoy accused the Government of targeting the racial minorities on the jury. (Dkt. 328 at 270 ("I'm concerned if an African American comes in and the FBI is running record checks on him, they probably did that with the other one, too.”)). The Government denied defense counsel’s accusations, and ultimately the issue was resolved with the Government agreeing to use one of its peremptory challenges to strike T.P. (Id. at 270-75).

⁷ Both Defendants are African American males.

⁸ The only time that T.P. spoke before providing biographical information was when another prospective juror, A.B., an African American female who was ultimately seated on the jury as Juror No. 6, indicated in response to the Court's questions that she knew T.P. as the son of her former pastor. T.P. denied knowing Juror No. 6. (See id. at 218-19).

As it turns out, the Government had not run a background check on any other prospective juror, including Juror No. 3 (Dkt. 308 at ¶ 3(A)), and Juror No. 3’s criminal history was not discovered until after the return of the verdict. One of the issues Nix raises in his post-verdict motion is the Government’s background check on T.P. (Dkt. 289 at ¶¶ 83-84).⁹ Thus, Defendants seek a new trial both because an African American prospective juror who failed to disclose his criminal history was excused from the jury, and because an African American prospective juror who failed to disclose his criminal history was not excused from the jury.

B. Discovery of Juror No. 3’s Felon Status

Post-verdict, Defendants filed motions pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 29(c) and 33 raising a number of issues, including the discovery that Juror No. 3 may be a convicted felon. (Dkt. 286-1 at ¶¶ 8-22; Dkt. 289 at ¶¶ 36-50).¹⁰ The Government filed papers in opposition to the motions, and, among other things, indicated that it was unaware of Juror

⁹ Again, the Court will address the issue involving T.P., along with the other issues Defendants raise in their motions filed pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 29(c) and 33, in a separate Decision and Order.

¹⁰ Juror No. 3 was mistakenly referenced as Juror No. 4 in some of the earlier post-verdict filings and transcripts, including by the Court. At the appearance on May 15, 2017, it was clarified that the juror in question is Juror No. 3. (See Dkt. 327 at 23; see also Dkt. 344 at 2 n.1).

No. 3's felon status until the issue was raised in Defendants' post-trial filings. (Dkt. 296 at 5-11). Defendants filed reply papers (Dkt. 299; Dkt. 300), and, due to the competing allegations about the background checks on the jurors in the case, the Court directed each counsel to disclose, by affidavit, information about any background checks conducted on jurors or prospective jurors. (Dkt. 302). Counsel for each party filed affidavits (Dkt. 306; Dkt. 308; Dkt. 309), and a hearing was conducted on May 15, 2017 (see Dkt. 327).

At the appearance on May 15, 2017, counsel for Nix indicated that he performed the criminal background check post-verdict on Juror No. 3 based on "a hunch." (Id. at 6-9). The Court determined that it would hold an evidentiary hearing concerning Juror No. 3 (id. at 25-27), and the Court scheduled a further appearance for May 25, 2017 (id. at 28-29). At the Court's direction, the United States Marshals Service served Juror No. 3 with an Order directing his appearance on May 25, 2017. (Dkt. 315; Dkt. 317).

On May 25, 2017, Juror No. 3 appeared in Court, was advised of his rights, and, at his request, counsel was appointed to represent him. (Dkt. 329 at 5-7). The Court set a date to conduct an evidentiary hearing: June 12, 2017. (Id. at 11). The Court also heard argument from counsel on the scope of the hearing, and it reserved decision on whether it would allow counsel to question Juror No. 3, indicating that the Court was going to initiate the questions and any questions that the parties wanted asked needed to be submitted to the Court in advance. (Id. at 37-41; see, e.g., Dkt. 312).¹¹ On June 9, 2017, the U.S. Attorney's Office provided an immunity letter to Juror No. 3. (See Dkt. 358 at 70¹²).

C. The Evidentiary Hearing

The evidentiary hearing commenced on June 12, 2017, and continued on June 14, 2017 (Dkt. 358; Dkt. 359). Only the Court asked questions on the first day of the hearing, but counsel were permitted to ask questions during the second day of the hearing. (See Dkt. 358; Dkt. 359).

Juror No. 3, a 47-year-old African American male (see Dkt. 358 at 76; see, e.g., Court Ex. 14), testified that he did not have a high school diploma or G.E.D., but had been educated up until the 11th grade (Dkt. 358 at 71). He has five children (id. at 71-72) and is self-employed as a cleaner (id. at 71; see, e.g., Court Ex. 14). He described his marital status as single (Dkt. 358 at 72), although when questioned further about his marital status, it was revealed that he is separated but not legally divorced (id. at 94-95).

Juror No. 3 acknowledged that he completed the Court's juror questionnaire online (id. at 73), and he inaccurately answered "No" in response to Question No. 6, which asked: "Have you ever been convicted either by your guilty or nolo contendere plea or by a court or jury trial, of a state or federal crime for which punishment could have been more than one year in prison?" (id. at 74; see Court Ex. 14; Court Ex. 15).

Juror No. 3 explained his reasoning for answering inaccurately as follows: “At the time, I thought that it meant 21 and over.” (Dkt. 358 at 74). Juror No. 3 offered a similar explanation as to why he had not offered this information during the Court’s questions during voir dire (id. at 86-88), but he acknowledged that his answers were not accurate:

Q But I never said 21 and up, did I?

A No, you did not.

Q And the questionnaire didn’t say 21 and up, did it?

A No, it did not.

Q And as you sit here now, would you agree with me that you did not answer those questions truthfully?

A Yes.

(Id. at 89).

While admitting that he had been convicted of at least one felony, Juror No. 3 displayed a hazy memory concerning the number of prior felony convictions and arrests.

Q Can you tell me how many crimes punishable by more than one year in prison or felonies have you been convicted of?

A Truthfully, I don’t remember, your Honor.

(Id. at 75). Juror No. 3 did offer that he could recall being convicted of a felony where he “was accused of breaking into a clothing store” when he was 17 or 18 years old. (Id. at 76). He testified that he was sentenced to two to four years in prison, but that sentence was satisfied by serving six months in “shock camp.” (Id. at 78). However, Juror No. 3 did not recall several facts surrounding this conviction, such as: if the charge was resolved through a plea or trial (id. at 76); where the shock camp was located (id. at 78); the name of one of his co-defendants (id. at 77); if he was prosecuted in federal or state court (id. at 79); and the name of the judge who sentenced him (id.).

Initially, Juror No. 3 testified that he did not know if he had been convicted of any other felonies other than the one involving the clothing store:

Q Other than that felony conviction [involving the burglary of the clothing store], do you know if you were convicted of any other prior felonies?

A No, I don't.

(Id. at 80). He testified that he had been arrested, although the only arrest that he was initially able to recall involved a stolen car when he was 17 or 18 years old, and he testified that he could not recall how it was resolved. (Id.). However, later during the first day of the hearing, Juror No. 3 testified that he was convicted of the incident involving the stolen car:

Q How did the—I may have asked you this, I'm not sure—how did the stolen motor vehicle charge get resolved?

A I'm not sure.

Q In other words, do you know if you were convicted or not?

A Yes.

Q You were convicted?

A Yes.

Q But you don't know if you were convicted by a plea or by a trial?

A No, I don't.

Q And as you sit here now, you don't know if you served—you don't recall serving any time for that conviction—

A No, I—

Q —is that fair to state?

A Yes, your Honor.

(Id. at 87-88).

Juror No. 3 testified that he was falsely accused of both the clothing store burglary and the stolen car crime:

Q So, you were falsely accused of this crime [involving the clothing store burglary]?

A Yes.

(Id. at 79).

Q And if I understand correctly, you did not actually engage in the burglary of the clothing store, correct?

A Yes.

Q What about the stolen vehicle, did you actually steal a vehicle?

A No.

(Id. at 84-85). However, during the second day of the hearing, when confronted with his signed confession about the burglary of the clothing store, Juror No. 3 ultimately admitted his involvement and that he provided the Court false testimony on the subject. (Dkt. 359 at 181-84). When the Court confronted him about why he failed to testify accurately, Juror No. 3 had no explanation:

Q So, why did you not answer my question accurately when I first asked it of you?

A Don't know.

Q You don't know?

A No.

Q Isn't it fair to state that you'd prefer not to be honest about your prior criminal history?

A Truthfully, I don't think about my prior history, to tell you the truth. I don't think about it.

Q Well, we're here on it right now.

A Yes, we are.

Q So we're talking about it right now.
Isn't it fair to state that you'd prefer not to be honest about your prior criminal history?

A No.

(Id. at 183; see id. at 231 (admitting that Juror No. 3 provided false testimony during first day of the hearing about his involvement in the clothing store burglary)). In response to Nix's counsel's questions, Juror No. 3 also admitted that he remembered stealing a car and switching the license plates. (Id. at 225).

A number of additional arrests were reflected in the records obtained by the parties in preparation for the evidentiary hearing. Juror No. 3 appeared to have no memory of those arrests:

Q Do you recall being arrested in 1986 for assault in the second degree?

A No, I don't.

Q Do you recall being arrested in March of 1987 for petit larceny?

A No.

Q And in connection with that arrest, do you recall you were convicted and were sentenced to two work Saturdays; do you have any recollection of that?

A No.

Q What about a conviction in November 1987 for petit larceny where you served 14 days in the Monroe County Jail; does that sound familiar to you?

A Truthfully, your Honor, I don't remember none of this stuff. That was 28 years ago.

(Dkt. 358 at 81-82).

A No, I do not.

A No, I do not.

(Id. at 84). In addition, during the second day of the hearing, Juror No. 3 was questioned by the Court about reports concerning two separate alleged domestic violence incidents (one in 1993 and the other in 1999)—one of which he recalled but for which he denied being arrested, and the other of which he had no recollection. (Dkt. 359 at 176-77). During questioning by Nix's counsel, Juror No. 3 appeared to have some recollection of a petit larceny conviction on March 10, 1987 (id. at 215-16), and possibly an assault charge when he was 16 (id. at 214-15), although it was impossible to distinguish at that point whether Juror No. 3 was testifying based on his memory or his review of records.

In addition, other than his six-month stint at shock camp for the clothing store burglary, Juror No. 3 indicated he had no memory of being incarcerated for any other period of time, other than possibly overnight for the stolen vehicle charge:

Q Do you recall ever serving any time in the Monroe County Jail?

A Not at all, no, I don't.

Q I mean, as you sit here right now, can you tell me whether or not you've been to the Monroe County Jail?

A Yes, I've been there.

Q And tell me in connection with why you've been there.

A For the stolen car.

Q Okay. And, so, tell me about the time—I mean, were you kept overnight for the stolen car?

A Yes.

Q So, how long were you kept overnight for the stolen car, do you recall?

A I don't remember how long. I think I got out the next day on my own recognizance, I think. I'm not sure.

Q Do you recall being sentenced for that case [the stolen car case] in April of 1988, does that sound as though it may be correct?

A It sounds like it's correct, the year, yes.

Q If records indicated that you served six months in the Monroe County Jail for that, would those be accurate?

A All I remember is shock camp, six months in shock camp. I don't remember doing six months in jail.

Q So if I understand correctly, you recall possibly spending a night in jail in connection the stolen car arrest, correct?

A Yes.

Q And you recall six months in shock camp correct?

A Yes.

Q But is there any other time that you recall of serving time either in prison or jail in any capacity?

A Don't remember.

Q Is there anything that would refresh your recollection?

A Not really.

(Dkt. 358 at 82-83). When confronted during the second day of the hearing with the certified copy of his conviction involving the stolen vehicle, which indicated that he served six months in the Monroe County Jail in 1988, Juror No. 3 continued to insist that he had no recollection of serving that time. (Dkt. 359 at 185-86). In response to questioning by McCoy's counsel, Juror No. 3 indicated that he did not share information about his prior sentences because "[s]he [referencing the Court] said visited a jail. I assume she meant visiting somebody else, not me actually going to jail. That's why I didn't tell her." (Id. at 197). Juror No. 3 also responded to the Court's questions during the first day of the hearing that with respect to his actual time in jail, as with the convictions, he assumed the questions applied to incidents only when he was 21 or older. (Dkt. 358 at 88-89).

In response to the Court's questions, Juror No. 3 expressed his belief that his civil rights had been restored because of the age of his criminal convictions, and he also denied knowing that his criminal history would have disqualified him from jury service:

Q As far as you know, were your civil rights ever restored?

A I thought they were.

Q And why did you think they were?

A Because it happened 20 years ago. I assumed that they were.

Q Are you able to vote?

A Yes.

Q Did you know that a prior felony conviction, without having your civil rights restored, would have disqualified you from jury service in this case?

A No, I did not.

Q Would you agree with me, as you sit here now, that you did not answer this questionnaire correctly, this question number six?

A Yes.

Q And can you tell me, at the time that you answered it, did you know that you were answering that question inaccurately?

A No, I did not.

Q And what was your understanding of what the question was seeking, what information?

A Like I said, I thought it meant from 21 and up. I assumed that. That's what I assumed.

Q Why did you assume that?

A Because I thought everything that I did back then was expunged or whatever. I didn't know that it was a felony still on there.

Q And you thought it was expunged because of your age?

A Yes.

(Id. at 85-86).

Juror No. 3 denied that his prior criminal history impacted his ability to be fair and impartial, and he denied being biased in favor of either Defendants or the Government. (Id. at 90; see also id. at 93; Dkt. 359 at 170). He also denied sympathizing or identifying with the cooperating witnesses in this case because of his criminal history. (Dkt. 358 at 91-92; Dkt. 359 at 170-71). Similarly, he denied working with law enforcement or prosecuting agencies as a cooperating witness and he had no recollection of cooperating against his co-defendants in the clothing store burglary case. (Dkt. 358 at 95).¹³

¹³ When questioned by Nix's counsel during the second day of the hearing, Juror No. 3 was asked whether he cooperated with law enforcement when he confessed to crimes and named his co-defendants, to which Juror No. 3 responded "I guess so." (Dkt. 359 at 222). The Court did not find this line of questioning particularly illuminating given counsel's tone and the leading nature of the questions. Indeed, at the conclusion of the first day of the hearing, the Court indicated to counsel that it would allow them to ask questions and not prohibit them from asking leading questions. However, the Court also gave fair warning that due to perceived comprehension issues on the part of Juror No. 3, eliciting admissions from Juror No. 3 with leading questions was not going to be particularly helpful in aiding the Court's credibility assessment. (Dkt. 358 at 138). Thus, although the Court overruled various objections by the Government during this line of questioning by Nix's counsel because the Court believed that counsel generally should have been permitted to pursue their questioning in the manner that they deemed appropriate, the Court did not find that means of questioning—leading questions in a confrontational tone—helpful in reaching a credibility assessment of Juror No. 3. Moreover, and in any event, there is no evidence that Juror No. 3 received a benefit in exchange for his confession or naming of co-defendants, nor is there any evidence that he testified at a trial against any co-defendant, like the cooperating witnesses in this case.

Juror No. 3 testified that he was aware at the time of the hearing of the fact that his son had been convicted of a crime (id. at 93), but at the time of jury selection he had not spoken to his son in three or four years, and, as a result, he was not aware of his son's conviction during jury selection. (Id. at 93-94; Dkt. 359 at 167). Juror No. 3 denied knowing of anyone else who was close to him who had been convicted of a crime (Dkt. 358 at 94-95; Dkt. 359 at 212-13), and he similarly denied visiting any family member or close friend in jail (Dkt. 358 at 95).

Juror No. 3 testified that he had been previously called for two other juries, and in one of those cases he was selected, but the jury never reached a verdict because the defendant pleaded guilty.¹⁴ (Dkt. 358 at 100-01; Dkt. 359 at 169). Juror No. 3 testified that he answered other juror questionnaires the same way he did in this case because he assumed the convictions were not part of his record if they occurred before the age of 21. (Dkt. 358 at 101). In response to questioning by McCoy's counsel, Juror No. 3 denied any recollection of being asked during voir dire about his prior jury service, but then appeared to recall the question but could not recall if he had answered it:

Q And do you recall being asked if you'd ever sat on a jury before?

A No, I don't. It was a long day.

¹⁴ Counsel for Nix makes reference in his post-hearing submission to Juror No. 3's prior jury service occurring on July 6, 2015 (Dkt. 369 at 14), although nothing in the record supports that information. It appears as though counsel for Nix may have spoken to "counsel for OCA" about Juror No. 3's state court jury service (id.), although, again, nothing in the record supports this conclusion other than this passing reference in Nix's post-hearing memorandum.

Q And do you recall her [referencing the Court] asking if anybody had ever sat on a jury before?

A Yes.

Q And do you recall whether or not you answered that question?

A No, I don't.

Q Did you tell her that you had sat on a jury before?

A I don't know if I told her yes or no.

(Dkt. 359 at 193-94).

During the second day of the hearing, Juror No. 3 was questioned about an incident in October 1999, in which his home was broken into and various items were stolen, including jewelry and his wife's checkbook. (Id. at 172). The records regarding this incident were produced on June 13, 2017, in response to a subpoena served by counsel for Nix (and, thus, were not available on the first day of the hearing). Juror No. 3 testified that he did not share this information in response to the Court's questions during voir dire because "truthfully, it slipped my mind, forgot all about it." (Id. at 173). Juror No. 3 testified that he had remembered the burglary only when the documents were produced in response to the subpoena. (Id.). Juror No. 3 denied having any recollection of the event at voir dire or during the trial, and testified that he recalled the incident only after being presented with the subpoenaed documents:

Q When did you remember it?

A When I saw the documents.

Q So within the last 24 hours?

A Yes.

Q On Monday, before you had seen those documents, did you have any memory of this incident?

A No, I did not.

Q . . . Were there any other occasions where you were living in a home and it was burglarized or robbed?

A Nope.

Q Is this the only time?

A It's the only time.

Q Well, wasn't it a pretty significant event in your life?

A Not really because we weren't there. Just came home and the house was broken into.

Q . . . [D]id your memory at all get refreshed about that sitting through a five-week trial dealing with home invasion?

A No, it did not.

Q I mean, that never once occurred to you?

A No, it did not.

Q And it wasn't until you saw the actual police report in this case that I provided to counsel yesterday that this – that you remember this?

A Yes.

(Id. at 173-74). The records from this incident indicate that Juror No. 3's wife was the primary point of contact with law enforcement after the incident (Court Ex. 17), which was consistent with Juror No. 3's testimony that his wife handled the matter. (Dkt. 359 at 201).

D. Certified Certificates of Conviction

Based on the certified certificates of conviction procured by McCoy's counsel and introduced at the evidentiary hearing as Court Exhibits 21 and 22, the fact of the prior felony convictions is plainly established.

On March 9, 1988, Juror No. 3 pleaded guilty to criminal possession of stolen property in the fourth degree (a class E felony). (Court Ex. 21). The certificate of conviction reflected the imposition of a sentence on April 6, 1988, of six months in the Monroe County Jail. (Id.). This conviction involved the stolen car. Juror No. 3 was 18 years old at the time of this conviction and sentence.

On September 26, 1989, Juror No. 3 pleaded guilty to burglary in the third degree (a class D felony), and he was sentenced to two to four years in the New York State Department of Corrections on January 11, 1990. (Court Ex. 22). Juror No. 3 testified that in lieu of serving two to four years in prison, he spent six months in shock camp. (Dkt. 358 at 78). This conviction involved the clothing store burglary. Juror No. 3 was 19 years old at the time of this conviction and sentence.

E. Post-Hearing Submissions

In accordance with the schedule set by the Court, McCoy filed his post-hearing memorandum on July 7, 2017. (Dkt. 363). In that submission, McCoy argues that Juror No. 3's felony conviction alone warrants the granting of a new trial, without any showing of bias. (Id. at 8-10). Alternatively, McCoy argues that both prongs of the McDonough test¹⁵ have been satisfied (id. at 10-17), contending that Juror No. 3 was involved in conduct similar to the conduct at issue in this case so as “raise the possibility that an inferred bias exists” and the “potential for substantial emotional involvement” (id. at 15), and as a result, Juror No. 3 would have been excused for cause if he gave honest answers during voir dire. McCoy concedes in his submission that it “is unknown . . . why [Juror No. 3] lied during voir dire” (id. at 17; see also id. at 19), but contends that the material and repeated lies by Juror No. 3 make his presence on the jury “incompatible with our truth-seeking process. . . .” (Id. at 18). McCoy does not specify any actual bias that has been demonstrated on the part of Juror No. 3, but rather contends that the Court should infer bias and order a new trial as a result. (See id. at 17-23).

On July 8, 2017, counsel for Nix emailed his post-hearing submission to the Court and counsel, and then filed that submission on July 19, 2017. (Dkt. 369). In that submission, among other things, Nix refers to alleged prior drug convictions related to alleged siblings of Juror No. 3. (Id. at 11).¹⁶ Nix also argues that one of the Government’s potential law enforcement witnesses in this case was involved in the investigation of Juror No. 3’s clothing store burglary, and since Juror No. 3 was convicted based on that law enforcement witness' efforts, "[h]e would remember him." (Id. at 13). He also argues that another Government witness was involved in the investigation related to Juror No. 3's son. (Id.). Indeed, Nix contends that Juror No. 3 has "had bad experiences with law enforcement." (Id. at 12). However, the thrust of Nix's post-hearing submission is that Juror No. 3 necessarily identified with the cooperating witnesses in this case, and, therefore, he must have been biased against Defendants. (See id. at 22).

¹⁶ Nix’s post-hearing submission refers to various exhibits, such as Exhibits 5 and 6 allegedly pertaining to Juror No. 3’s siblings’ criminal history—but there are no exhibits attached to the post-hearing submission. (See Dkt. 369). Nix may be referencing the documents filed at Docket 366, which was mistakenly filed as a “motion” but consisted of only exhibits and, thus, was terminated as a motion by the Court. (See Dkt. 367).

In accordance with the schedule set by the Court, the Government filed its post-hearing memorandum of law on July 21, 2017. (Dkt. 370). The Government argued that Juror No. 3's non-responsive answers and demeanor during the hearing demonstrated that he had difficulty understanding questions put to him by the Court and counsel. (Id. at 2 ("He appeared nervous and uncomfortable and, at times, defensive, which is understandable (in additional to his lack of comprehension) considering he was ordered to appear in court, read his rights in open court as if he were under arrest, assigned an attorney, and publicly questioned under oath by a federal judge, two criminal defense lawyers, and a federal prosecutor.")). The Government argues that the evidentiary hearing did not reflect a "'searching inquiry' by the defense to vindicate a constitutional right" but rather it reflected "an all-out attack with the singular focus of trying to make the juror look like a liar at every turn, for the sole purpose of getting out from under the consequences of the constitutionally valid guilty verdicts after a full, fair and impartial trial by a jury they chose." (Id. at 2-3). The Government challenges the nature of the questioning by defense counsel, contending that it was "done in a sarcastic, condescending and goading manner” and that before the hearing, those same counsel “had already publicly vilified [Juror No. 3] as a liar and unfairly blamed him for the plight of their clients.” (Id. at 4). The Government contends that Defendants have failed to establish that Juror No. 3 intentionally lied during jury selection, nor have they demonstrated that honest answers would have required the Court to excuse Juror No. 3 because of actual or implied bias, or justified his excusal due to inferred bias against Defendants or in favor of the Government. (Id. at 4-5). In short, the Government submits that Defendants have failed to meet their burden under the McDonough test.

Defendants filed their post-hearing reply memoranda on July 28, 2017. (Dkt. 371; Dkt. 372). Nix argues that the “prosecution is very tolerable of perjury in a federal courtroom when it suits them” and that, contrary to the Government’s arguments, every response from Juror No. 3 at the hearing “was more deceitful and mendacious than the next.” (Dkt. 371 at 2). McCoy challenges the Government’s description of the hearing as “pure invention” and “especially outlandish” given the plans that the Court put in place with respect to the conduct of the hearing. (Dkt. 372 at 2). McCoy continues that “lying at voir dire because of embarrassment or some other benign reason might be understandable, [but] multiple lying at the hearing and indeed committing perjury is another thing altogether.” (Id. at 4). McCoy submits that “perhaps Juror #3’s inability to accept his past led to the same pattern of false answers.” (Id. at 8). McCoy argues that a challenge for cause by the Government would have been granted if Juror No. 3 had disclosed his criminal history. (Id. at 9). McCoy also argues that Defendants would have raised a successful cause challenge if they had known about the burglary involving Juror No. 3's home. (Id.).

III. LEGAL STANDARD

Pursuant to the Jury Selection and Service Act of 1968, 28 U.S.C. §§ 1861 et seq. ("JSSA"), Juror No. 3's prior felony convictions made him statutorily ineligible to serve on the jury in this case. See 28 U.S.C. § 1865(b)(5) (disqualifying from jury service any person who "has a charge pending against him for the commission of, or has been convicted in a State or Federal court of record of, a crime punishable by imprisonment for more than one year and his civil rights have not been restored"). However, this information was never disclosed during voir dire, and it is too late for any statute-based challenge to Juror No. 3's service. See id. § 1867(a), (e) (providing that the procedures under the JSSA are exclusive means to challenge jury not selected in conformity with the provisions of the JSSA, and setting final deadline to challenge as before the voir dire examination begins); Dkt. 381 at 3-6 (discussing the untimeliness of any challenge by Defendants to jury under JSSA); see also United States v. Silverman, 449 F.2d 1341, 1344 (2d Cir. 1971) (finding where there was a substantial failure to comply with § 1865(b)(2), but the challenge was not raised until after the return of the verdict, the defendant's "attack on that conviction cannot be founded on [the juror's] disqualification under the statute"); United States v. Harmon, 21 F. Supp. 3d 1042, 1049 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (finding § 1865(b)(5) "is a statutory bar as applied to prospective jurors, not a constitutional requirement required under due process principles"); cf. United States v. Boney, 977 F.2d 624, 633 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (finding that the provisions set forth in § 1865(b)(5) apply to the procedures utilized by a district court to administer the jury selection process—not to a situation where a juror fails to disclose his felon status on the jury qualification form).

As a result, Defendants base their challenge to Juror No. 3’s selection for this jury on the Sixth Amendment’s guarantee of the right to an impartial jury. However, the “Sixth Amendment right to an impartial jury . . . does not require an absolute bar on felon-jurors.” Boney, 977 F.2d at 633. As explained by the D.C. Circuit in Boney:

A per se rule would be appropriate . . . only if one could reasonably conclude that felons are always biased against one party or another. But felon status, alone, does not necessarily imply bias. In fact, as the dissent suggests, Congress’ purpose in restricting felons’ jury service may stem from considerations other than a concern for biased jurors. More important, a per se rule requiring a new trial whenever it turns out that a felon served on a jury seems inconsistent with McDonough’s hostility to unnecessary new trials, and the oft-repeated axiom that “a defendant is entitled to a fair trial but not a perfect one.” We think, therefore, that the Sixth Amendment guarantee of an impartial trial does not mandate a per se invalidation of every conviction reached by a jury that included a felon.

Id. at 633 (citations omitted); see also United States v. Langford, 990 F.2d 65, 69 (2d Cir. 1993) (rejecting the argument that a juror’s intentionally false response during voir dire is automatic grounds for a new trial).¹⁷

¹⁷ McCoy argues that because a convicted felon such as Juror No. 3 is per se disqualified pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1865(b)(5), the verdict must be set aside without any inquiry into Juror No. 3’s reasons for not disclosing his criminal record and without any finding of bias. (Dkt. 363 at 8-10). This argument has been rejected by every circuit court to have considered the issue. See Hanna v. Ishee, 694 F.3d 596, 616 (6th Cir. 2012) (“[I]t is inappropriate to invalidate, as a matter of law, any conviction simply because it was reached by a jury that mistakenly included a convicted felon.”); United States v. Bishop, 264 F.3d 535, 554 (5th Cir. 2001) (“[O]nce the trial is complete, a felon’s serving as a juror is not an automatic basis for a new trial.”); Coughlin v. Tailhook Ass’n, 112 F.3d 1052, 1059 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that the participation of a felon-juror who is

Thus, the question as to whether Defendants' Sixth Amendment rights were violated by virtue of Juror No. 3's selection to the jury necessarily centers on whether his presence destroyed the impartiality of the jury; in other words, was Juror No. 3 biased? Based upon the Supreme Court's decision in McDonough Power Equipment, Inc. v. Greenwood, 464 U.S. 548 (1984), the Second Circuit has adopted a two-part test that a defendant must establish in order to justify granting a new trial based upon incorrect responses by a juror during voir dire: (1) the defendant must first demonstrate that the statutorily disqualified from serving "is not an automatic basis for a new trial" and the defendant must still show that the juror's participation resulted in "actual bias" to one of the parties); United States v. Humphreys, 982 F.2d 254, 261 (8th Cir. 1992) (holding that the participation of felon juror, who mistakenly believed that civil rights had been restored, did not justify new trial, and finding that "[i]n an effort to obtain a new trial, it is incumbent upon the defendant to clearly demonstrate that the juror's lack of qualifications presented actual bias or prejudice, affecting the juror's impartiality and impacting the fairness of the trial. A challenge after the verdict without such a showing comes too late."); United States v. Boney, 977 F.2d 624, 633 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (holding that felon status alone does not imply bias); United States v. Uribe, 890 F.2d 554, 562 (1st Cir. 1989) (holding that the fact that a felon juror technically should have been disqualified under statute does not automatically require a new trial).

McCoy contends that he is relying on the dissenting opinion in Boney (Dkt. 363 at 9), but a per se rule was rejected by the Boney dissent. See Boney, 977 F.2d at 639 (Randolph, J., dissenting) ("I would therefore reject the defendants' argument that the Sixth Amendment itself bars felons from serving on juries and requires reversal per se where one slips through."). McCoy also contends that he is relying on the Eleventh Circuit's decision in Jackson v. Alabama State Tenure Commission, 405 F.3d 1276 (11th Cir. 2005), (Dkt. 363 at 9), but Jackson did not adopt a per se rule as advocated by McCoy. Rather, Jackson determined that the first prong of the McDonough test must be satisfied—in other words, there must be a finding that the juror intentionally failed to disclose the prior felony conviction. 405 F.3d at 1288-89 (finding no reasonable possibility that juror could have forgotten three years spent in prison for murder). Moreover, to the extent Jackson dispensed with the second prong of the McDonough test, this Court finds that reasoning unpersuasive, especially in view of the other circuit courts that have rejected the per se rule, and because satisfaction of the second prong of the McDonough test was apparently undisputed in Jackson. See id. at 1288 ("It is undisputed that a question about prior felony convictions is material to jury service and that an honest answer from this juror would have provided a basis to challenge her for cause.").

juror “failed to answer honestly a material question on voir dire”; and (2) the defendant then must also demonstrate that “a correct response would have provided a valid basis for a challenge for cause”—in other words, the juror would have been excused for bias based on the correct voir dire response. Langford, 990 F.2d at 68-69 (quoting McDonough, 464 U.S. at 556-58); see also United States v. Stewart, 433 F.3d 273, 303 (2d Cir. 2006) (“[A] party alleging unfairness based on undisclosed juror bias must demonstrate first, that the juror’s voir dire response was false and second, that the correct response would have provided a valid basis for a challenge for cause.”); United States v. Shaoul, 41 F.3d 811, 816 (2d Cir. 1994) (“We reiterate that, in order to obtain a new trial, a defendant must show both that a juror gave a dishonest answer, and that the correct answer would have provided a basis for the defendant to challenge the juror for cause.”).

The first part of the test entails a threshold requirement to show juror dishonesty. Shaoul, 41 F.3d at 815. In other words, the Court must assess whether Juror No. 3 deliberately lied or consciously deceived the Court, as opposed to providing inaccurate responses as a result of a mistake, misunderstanding or embarrassment. See McDonough, 464 U.S. at 555; Langford, 990 F.2d at 69-70 (finding where a juror’s intentionally false statements at voir dire were caused by embarrassment, and there was no evidence “that she gave false answers because of any desire to sit on the jury,” it was proper for the district court to deny the defendant’s motion for a new trial (emphasis added)); see, e.g., United States v. Escalera, 536 F. App’x 27, 35 (2d Cir. 2013) (“[The defendant] points to no record evidence that the juror intentionally failed to disclose [material information during voir dire], much less that the reason for the non-disclosure was to avoid excusal

(as opposed to embarrassment) or to conceal some bias that could have prejudiced the trial.”); Dyer v. Calderon, 151 F.3d 970, 984 (9th Cir. 1998) (“Not all jurors may walk a perfectly straight line. A distracted juror might fail to mention a magazine he subscribes to. An embarrassed juror might exaggerate the importance of his job. Few voir dires are impeccable, and most irregularities can be shrugged off as immaterial to the fairness of the trial.”).

With respect to the second part of the test, the Court must determine if it would have granted a hypothetical cause challenge if Juror No. 3 had responded accurately to the Court’s questions. Stewart, 433 F.3d at 304 (citing United States v. Greer, 285 F.3d 158, 171 (2d Cir. 2002)); see United States v. Blackwell, 436 F. App’x 192, 196 (4th Cir. 2011) (“[A] ‘McDonough claim necessarily fails unless the court would have committed reversible error—that is, abused its discretion—in failing to dismiss a juror.’” (citation omitted)).

This second part of the test is really the most crucial. Stewart, 433 F.3d at 305 (“The significant factor, however, is that the District Court found that even if it were established that [the juror’s] responses were false as alleged, none of the correct answers would have supported an inference that he was biased or prejudiced against [the defendants] or had prejudged the evidence.”). The critical determination is not simply whether the lies in question are deliberate, but rather whether “the deliberateness of the particular lies evidenced partiality.” Id. (quoting Greer, 285 F.3d at 172-73); see also Greer, 285 F.3d at 170-71 (finding it unnecessary to determine whether juror dishonestly answered questions at voir dire because “the District Court did not exceed its allowable discretion in finding that those omissions and misstatements did not satisfy McDonough's prong two").

A juror's dishonesty under the first part of the test "is among the 'factors to be considered' in the ultimate determination of bias . . . [but] an analysis of bias is required even if the juror's erroneous response was deliberate." Greer, 285 F.3d at 173. It is important to consider the dishonesty in the second part of the test because it can show "a personal interest in this particular case that was so powerful as to cause the juror to commit a serious crime [by lying during voir dire]." United States v. Colombo, 869 F.2d 149, 151 (2d Cir. 1989). In other words, a bright line does not divide the two prongs of the test, and there is some blurring of the factors to be considered under each prong.

"Challenges for cause are generally based on actual bias, implied bias, or inferable bias." Greer, 285 F.3d at 171 (citing United States v. Torres, 128 F.3d 38, 43 (2d Cir. 1997)). As explained by the Second Circuit:

Actual bias is bias in fact. Implied bias, by contrast, is bias presumed as a matter of law. Finally, inferred bias is available when actual or implied bias does not apply. "Bias may be inferred when a juror discloses a fact that bespeaks a risk of partiality sufficiently significant to warrant granting the trial judge discretion to excuse the juror for cause, but not so great as to make mandatory a presumption of bias."

Id. (citations omitted). At least in the Second Circuit, it is unsettled whether either implied or inferred bias may serve as the basis for a post-trial allegation of jury partiality.

See id. at 172.

There is only one instance where the Second Circuit¹⁸ has found a reason to overturn a verdict on the basis of juror nondisclosure under McDonough—in the case of United States v. Parse, 789 F.3d 83 (2d Cir. 2015). Cf. Stewart, 433 F.3d at 303 (observing, pre-Parse, that this “Court has never found reason to overturn a verdict on the basis of juror nondisclosure under McDonough and only once, . . . has remanded for an evidentiary hearing on the matter”); United States v. Colombo, 909 F.2d 711 (2d Cir. 1993) (having previously remanded to the district court to conduct post-trial hearing regarding allegations that juror deliberately lied during voir dire, finding upon appeal after remand that district court’s finding that juror had not intentionally withheld information was not clearly erroneous).

Parse involved a situation where, after a verdict was returned in favor of the Government, a juror sent a letter to the Government praising its performance but lamenting the acquittals on some of the counts as to one of the defendants (Parse). 789 F.3d at 90. That letter prompted further investigation by defense counsel and a revelation that the juror had lied extensively during voir dire about her criminal history, her background, and a host of other information, including the fact that she was an attorney facing disciplinary action. Id. at 91. The district court ordered an evidentiary hearing to go forward, and the juror initially refused to appear, prompting an arrest warrant to be issued. Id. The hearing ultimately went forward, and the juror admitted lying during voir dire “to make herself more ‘marketable’ as a juror. . . .” Id. In other words, the juror admitted that she created a fictional profile to make herself more attractive as a juror. Id. at 91-92. The district court concluded that the juror’s false answers “were attributable neither to a desire to avoid embarrassment nor to honest mistakes,” id. at 92, but rather were “premeditated and deliberate,” id. at 93 (quoting United States v. Daugerdas, 867 F. Supp. 2d 445, 469 (S.D.N.Y. 2012)). The district court further concluded that the juror “was ‘a pathological liar and utterly untrustworthy,’” describing the lies as “breathtaking” and “calculated to prevent the Court and the parties from learning her true identity, which would have prevented her from serving on the jury.” Id. at 92 (quoting Daugerdas, 867 F. Supp. 2d at 468-70). The juror lied in response to clear and unambiguous voir dire questions, and the district court rejected any contention that the juror was somehow confused by the questions, particularly given her status as an attorney. Id. Moreover, the events about which the juror lied were “recent, personally significant, and directly affected her qualifications to serve as a juror.” Id. (quoting Daugerdas, 867 F. Supp. 2d at 469).

¹⁸ Defendants have relied heavily on the case of United States v. Eubanks, 591 F.2d 513 (9th Cir. 1979). (See Dkt. 363 at 15-16). Not only is Eubanks from outside the Second Circuit, but it was decided prior to McDonough and does not employ the two-part test. While the Court has reviewed Eubanks, as well as other cases outside the Circuit dealing with this issue, the Court has relied, as it must, on the decisions from the Second Circuit Court of Appeals addressing the issue post-McDonough.

Her arrests and suspensions from the practice of law were not the result of youthful indiscretions or errors on the part of police or courts. . . . There is no dispute that [the juror] was aware of her prior convictions, her attorney disciplinary problems, and her personal injury suit at the time she answered the Court’s questions under oath. There is also no question that she made a conscious decision to hide them from the Court.

Id. at 92 (quoting Daugerdas, 867 F. Supp. 2d at 469). As a result, the district court concluded that the juror was actually biased against the defendants, but with respect to the defendant Parse, the district court concluded that his counsel was aware of these issues during the trial and failed to raise the issue until after the verdict, thus waiving any claim. Id. at 93, 101-02.

On appeal, the Second Circuit explained that a new trial was required where “the juror’s false responses ‘obstructed the voir dire and indicated an impermissible partiality on the juror’s part.’” Id. at 110 (quoting Colombo, 869 F.2d at 151).

Where the juror has lied for the purpose of securing a seat on the jury—a mission apparently “so powerful as to cause the juror to commit a serious crime”—it “reflect[s] an impermissible partiality on the juror’s part.” Such conduct not only suggests a view on the merits and/or knowledge of evidentiary facts but is also quite inconsistent with an expectation that a prospective juror will give truthful answers concerning her or his ability to weigh the evidence fairly and obey the instructions of the court. . . . [C]ertainly when possible non-objectivity is secreted and compounded by the deliberate untruthfulness of a potential juror’s answer on voir dire, the result is deprivation of the defendant’s rights to a fair trial. Where the juror has deliberately concealed information, “bias” is to be “presume[d].”

Id. at 111 (citations omitted). The Second Circuit concluded that the district court appropriately determined that the juror’s presence caused the jury not to be impartial, and furthermore, that the record did not support the conclusion that Parse had waived his challenge.

In these circumstances—in which a juror aligned herself with the government, lied pervasively in voir dire for the purpose of avoiding dismissal for cause, believed prior to the presentation of any evidence that the defendants were “‘crooks’” and expressly mentioned [the defendant] as a target of her efforts to persuade the other jurors to convict—a refusal to order a new trial for Parse would seriously affect the fairness, integrity, and public reputation of judicial proceedings.

Id. at 120. Thus, the Second Circuit reversed the district court’s denial of the motion for a new trial as to Parse. Id.

IV. FIRST PRONG OF McDONOUGH—FAILURE TO ANSWER HONESTLY MATERIAL QUESTION ON VOIR DIRE

A. General Assessment of Juror No. 3

Defendants contend that, like the juror in Parse, Juror No. 3 deliberately lied during voir dire and continued his lies during the evidentiary hearing before this Court. (See, e.g., Dkt. 363 at 17; Dkt. 369 at 53). The Government contends that Juror No. 3 was tricked and attacked by defense counsel, and, at most, displayed a lack of recall and comprehension that resulted in the inaccurate answers during voir dire and confusion during the evidentiary hearing. (Dkt. 370 at 1-2).

An analysis of Juror No. 3's credibility under the first prong of the McDonough test is a more nuanced inquiry than posited by either the Government or Defendants. Having observed Juror No. 3's facial expressions, demeanor, and intonation while he testified during the two-day evidentiary hearing, including when he responded to the Court's questions, it was apparent that Juror No. 3 had problems understanding the questions and expressing himself clearly. In part, this appeared attributable to nervousness. Juror No. 3 was questioned in open court before Defendants and their counsel, Government counsel, and a large number of spectators. The courtroom was significantly more crowded during the evidentiary hearing involving Juror No. 3 than it had been at any point during the five-week trial.¹⁹

¹⁹ Of course, a way to avoid this would have been for the Court to examine Juror No. 3 in chambers outside the presence of the public and without the parties being present. The Second Circuit appears to have approved this process in United States v. Shakur, 888 F.2d 234 (2d Cir. 1989), aff'g 723 F. Supp. 925 (S.D.N.Y. 1988). Here, the Court ultimately adopted a process that attempted to balance the various competing interests at

The testimony must also be viewed through the lens of one with Juror No. 3's educational background. Juror No. 3 appeared neither sophisticated nor bright. He exhibited poor comprehension during the evidentiary hearing and difficulties providing understandable and clear answers. As an example, the following answers were elicited during the Court's questions:

Q Do you recall being asked by me during jury selection whether you had ever been a defendant in a criminal case?

A Yes.

Q And you didn't respond to that question, correct?

A No.

Q And can you tell me why you didn't respond to that question?

A Because I didn't think it responded to me at the time.

Q What?

A I didn't think it responded to me at the time.

Q But my question was had you ever been a defendant in a criminal case. You had been a defendant in a criminal case, correct?

A I don't understand what you mean, your Honor.

Q So you don't know what I mean when I'm saying defendant—

A Yes.

play, including Defendants' very real and legitimate interests in being present during any questioning of Juror No. 3 and the public's critically important right to access court proceedings. However, a downside to the process employed in this case is that, in the Court's view, it ultimately impacted Juror No. 3's testimony because of his nervousness and discomfort.

(Dkt. 358 at 86-87 (emphasis added)).

The above exchange plainly depicts Juror No. 3's vocabulary challenges. He repeatedly utilizes the Court's reference to "respond" in its questions to provide his answers, even though answering the question with reference to that word is plainly an incorrect use of the word "respond." Similarly, he exhibits difficulty understanding the meaning of the word "defendant." The Court did not view this testimony as intentionally deceptive. Juror No. 3 did not display attributes of cleverness. Rather, Juror No. 3 displayed vocabulary and comprehension issues that the Court interpreted as impacting the substance of his testimony. In the Court's view, Juror No. 3 was what he seemed: a relatively simple individual with a lack of education and sophistication who had difficulty comprehending certain areas of inquiry.²⁰

Thus, in assessing Juror No. 3's credibility, the Court must exercise caution against viewing Juror No. 3's testimony from the Court's own educational or socio-economic background. As recognized by the Supreme Court, "jurors are not necessarily experts in English usage. Called as they are from all walks of life, many may be uncertain as to the meaning of terms which are relatively easily understood by lawyers and judges." McDonough, 464 U.S. at 555.

²⁰ The Court's impression of Juror No. 3 in this regard is supported by numerous exchanges that occurred throughout the two-day hearing, including, for example, the exchange concerning Juror No. 3's name and the naming of Juror No. 3's son that occurred during a sidebar discussion during the second day of the hearing. (See Dkt. 359 at 202-05)

In addition, as discussed below, the Court finds that Juror No. 3 provided false testimony at the evidentiary hearing concerning his criminal record. However, based upon the Court's observations of Juror No. 3 during the evidentiary hearing, including his demeanor, tone, and facial expressions, along with the substance of his testimony, the Court does not discredit the entirety of his testimony even though some parts of it were plainly false. See Van Buren v. Cargill, Inc., 10-CV-701S, 2016 WL 231399, at *7 & n.5 (W.D.N.Y. Jan. 19, 2016) (“[F]alsus in uno merely permits, but does not require, a finder of fact to disregard the entirety of the testimony.” (citing United States v. Weinstein, 452 F.2d 704, 713 (2d Cir. 1971) (“The maxim ‘Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus’ has been well said to be itself ‘absolutely false as a maxim of life.’” (citation omitted))).

B. Deliberate Lies

Against this backdrop, the Court must assess whether Juror No. 3 intentionally gave false answers during voir dire. The Court will first address the information supplied that was unrelated to the criminal background of Juror No. 3.²¹

²¹ Defendant Nix contends that Juror No. 3 intentionally misstated his marital status as “single” during voir dire, when in fact he is still legally married. (Dkt. 369 at 15). The Court disagrees. At the evidentiary hearing, Juror No. 3 also testified that he was “single,” but then when asked follow-up questions, he revealed that he is separated but not legally divorced. (Dkt. 358 at 72, 94-95). It was also revealed at the evidentiary hearing that although Juror No. 3 saw his wife at his daughter's graduation in the prior month, before that time, he had not seen her for about three or four years. (Dkt. 359 at 213). At the voir dire, follow-up questions about the marital status of Juror No. 3 were not asked.

Defendant Nix also contends that Juror No. 3 failed to reveal that his brother “Derrick” was murdered in a stabbing and the accused was acquitted at trial (Dkt. 369 at 15), but no questions during voir dire would have elicited this information, and furthermore, Juror No. 3 was not asked questions about this at the evidentiary hearing. (See Dkt. 359 at 157-58).

1. Answers Unrelated to Juror No. 3's Criminal Background

a. Burglary of Juror No. 3's Home

It was revealed at the evidentiary hearing that Juror No. 3 had his home burglarized in October 1999, but he never shared that information in response to the Court's question: "Has anyone ever been the victim of a home robbery?" (Dkt. 328 at 97). The Government argues that Juror No. 3 was the victim of a home "burglary," not a "robbery," and he was never asked during voir dire about being the victim of a burglary. (Dkt. 370 at 16). Although technically correct, the Court does not find the Government's argument persuasive, particularly in view of the burglaries described by other prospective jurors in response to the Court's question about a "home robbery." (See Dkt. 328 at 97-101).

However, based on Juror No. 3's demeanor, tone, and appearance when questioned at the evidentiary hearing about the home burglary—which occurred almost 20 years ago—the Court is convinced that the incident had completely slipped his mind. Moreover, the Court agrees with the Government's argument that no correlation exists between the violent home invasions described during the trial and the burglary of Juror No. 3's home, such that the trial testimony should have been expected to trigger Juror No. 3's recollection about the burglary. When he was questioned about the home burglary and his failure to disclose the information, Juror No. 3 appeared genuinely surprised that he had not earlier recalled the burglary. Moreover, the documentary evidence involving the burglary suggests that Juror No. 3's wife was the primary point of contact with law enforcement following the incident. Thus, the Court easily concludes that Juror No. 3 did not intentionally fail to disclose information about this burglary from 1999. See, e.g., Harmon, 21 F. Supp. 3d at 1052 (“[C]ourts ‘must be tolerant, as jurors may forget incidents long buried in their minds, misunderstand a question or bend the truth a bit to avoid embarrassment. The Supreme Court has held that an honest yet mistaken answer to a voir dire question rarely amounts to a constitutional violation.’” (quoting Dyer, 151 F.3d at 973)).

b. Criminal Convictions of Individuals “Close” to Juror No. 3

Defendants also contend that Juror No. 3 failed to disclose the criminal convictions related to his brother “Gary,” his sister “Cynthia,” his son, and his wife “Tracey.” (Dkt. 369 at 15). The Court asked during voir dire whether “anyone close to” the prospective jurors had been convicted of a crime. (Dkt. 328 at 239). Juror No. 3 did not reveal any information in response to this question.

At the evidentiary hearing, in response to Nix’s counsel’s questions, Juror No. 3 testified that he had not seen his brother “Gary” in three or four years, and he was unaware of his brother’s criminal convictions for multiple drug offenses. (Dkt. 359 at 212). Similarly, Juror No. 3 testified that he was unaware of his son’s criminal convictions at the time of jury selection, and he had not seen him in about three or four years. (Dkt. 358 at 93-94; Dkt. 359 at 167, 212). Juror No. 3 also was unaware of any arrests of his wife from whom he is separated (but not legally divorced). (Dkt. 359 at 213). Juror No. 3 was not asked any questions about his knowledge of the criminal record of his sister “Cynthia,” or when he last saw her.

Thus, there is no basis for the Court to conclude that Juror No. 3 failed to provide material information on this subject during voir dire because the record indicates that Juror No. 3 was not aware of the convictions and Juror No. 3 did not view himself as close to the individuals in question. See, e.g., United States v. Stewart, 317 F. Supp. 2d 432, 438 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (recognizing ambiguity in questions as to whether somebody “close” to juror had been victim of crime, and finding that defendants could not “demand a new trial because a juror failed to place the broadest possible construction on those questions”), aff’d, 433 F.3d 273 (2d Cir. 2006).

c. Prior Jury Service

During voir dire, the Court questioned the prospective jurors about their prior jury service by asking: “Has anyone ever served on a jury before?” (Dkt. 328 at 205 (emphasis added)). In the Court’s view, the question was straightforward, and in response a number of prospective jurors provided information regarding their prior jury experience. (Id. at 205-13). In addition to providing the parties with information that may be utilized during peremptory challenges, the primary purpose of the Court’s questions on this topic was to ensure that nothing about that prior jury service would impact a prospective juror’s ability to be fair and impartial. In other words, prior jury service does not, in and of itself, normally constitute a basis for a cause challenge.

Juror No. 3 did not respond to the question during voir dire. This topic was addressed during both days of the evidentiary hearing. During the first day of the hearing, the Court elicited the following testimony:

Q Have you ever served on any other juries?

A I was called for two but they took the plea, so I didn't have to.
(Dkt. 358 at 100-01 (emphasis added)). In other words, Juror No. 3 suggested that he "didn't have to" serve on any prior juries because the cases were resolved through pleas.
No follow-up questions were asked during the first day of the hearing.

During the second day of the hearing, the Court again addressed the topic during its questioning:

Q Now, you had mentioned, I believe, that there were other occasions where you were summoned for jury duty?

A Yes.

Q And this was in state court, not federal court—

A Yes.

Q —correct? Did you ever, like, actually get selected or did you get put in the box?

A I was selected.

...

Q On how many occasions were you selected?

A Once.

Q And do you remember the type of case?

A No, I don't.

Q Was it civil or criminal?

A I believe it was criminal.

Q But the case, the jury did not ultimately deliberate in that case?

A No, the person took the plea.

Q How long ago was this where you were selected to serve on a jury?

A A few years ago.

Q And is that the only other time that you've been called for jury service, other than this incident?

A There was one other time before that, too.

Q And were you selected in that case?

A Nope.

Q Did you ever get put into the box and asked questions?

A No.

Q And this was before the other time that you just mentioned?

A Yes.

Q Do you know how long ago that was? •

A Probably about a year before that.

(Dkt. 359 at 168-70 (emphasis added)).

When questioned by counsel for McCoy, Juror No. 3 initially denied any recollection of being asked about prior jury service during voir dire, responding “[i]t was a long day.” (Id. at 193). Counsel for McCoy then asked the questions again:

Q And do you recall her [the Court] asking if anybody had ever sat on a jury before?

A Yes.

Q And do you recall whether or not you answered that question?

A No, I don't.

Q Did you tell her that you sat on a jury before?

A I don't know if I told her yes or no.

The Court believes the questions about prior jury service were straightforward, particularly in light of the responses of the other prospective jurors, including one prospective juror who indicated that, like Juror No. 3, he had been selected for a jury but “about halfway through the case the defendant copped a plea.” (See Dkt. 328 at 211). As a result, Juror No. 3 should have disclosed his prior selection to serve on a jury in response to the Court’s voir dire questions, even though that jury ultimately did not deliberate.

However, the Court is hard-pressed to conclude that Juror No. 3 intentionally withheld this information in response to the Court’s questions, or somehow tried to deliberately mislead the Court and the parties by not revealing this information. There is no conceivable reason for Juror No. 3 not wanting to disclose this information. The explanation for Juror No. 3’s non-disclosure could be his misunderstanding of the scope of the question—equating prior “service” as requiring actual deliberation—and again, the Court must assess Juror No. 3’s responses in view of his educational background and perceived comprehension issues as noted above. Alternatively, the explanation could simply be attributed to Juror No. 3 being distracted and not paying close enough attention to the questions that were being asked at that point during voir dire (which was later in the day). Under any scenario, the Court does not believe that Juror No. 3 intentionally withheld this information or intentionally lied about this topic during voir dire. Moreover, even if Juror No. 3 intentionally lied about his prior jury service, the Court has difficulty concluding that the subject dealt with a “material” issue as required under the McDonough test.

d. Summary of Findings

For the reasons set forth above, the Court concludes that Juror No. 3 did not deliberately fail to honestly answer the voir dire questions related to the home burglary in 1999 and the criminal history of anyone “close” to him. The Court’s assessment of Juror No. 3’s answers (or lack thereof) concerning prior jury service is a closer call, but on balance, the Court concludes that Juror No. 3 did not intentionally fail to reveal information during voir dire about that prior jury service, and even if he had, the information about Juror No. 3’s prior jury service would not, in and of itself, rise to the level of materiality required under the first prong of the McDonough test.

2. Answers Related to Juror No. 3’s Criminal Background

Whether Juror No. 3 deliberately lied about his criminal background during voir dire is a more difficult question. The questions related to Juror No. 3’s criminal background were included in the questionnaire mailed in advance to prospective jurors, which asked:

“Have you ever been convicted, either by your guilty or nolo contendere plea or by a court or jury trial, of a state or federal crime for which punishment could have been more than one year in prison?”

(Court Ex. 15). Juror No. 3 incorrectly answered this question by checking “No.” (Id.). In addition, Juror No. 3 did not respond to the following voir dire questions asked of the panel as whole: “Has anyone ever been a defendant in a criminal case?” (Dkt. 328 at 214) and, “Has anyone ever visited a jail or correctional facility other than in connection with . . . your educational curriculum?” (id. at 229).

In assessing whether Juror No. 3 deliberately lied in responding to these questions (or in not responding), the Court must recognize that two jurors (Juror No. 3 and T.P.) failed to accurately respond to the Court’s questions on these topics. Certainly, the Court could justifiably conclude that these two individuals intentionally attempted to mislead the Court and the parties about their criminal background. However, it is at least arguable that more direct questioning during voir dire on this topic may have elicited the information. In other words, the information may have been disclosed if the Court had directly asked each juror whether he or she had been “arrested” (a question that was not asked), “convicted” of “any crime” (again, a question that was not asked), or ever “been to a jail” (as opposed to a “visit” to a jail, as was asked).

Although the Court accepts full responsibility for the framing of the questions, Defendants never requested any follow-up on these issues during voir dire. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 24(a)(2)(B) (“If the court examines the jurors, it must permit the attorneys for the parties to submit further questions that the court may ask if it considers them proper.”). In fact, it was the Government that wanted these issues explored further during the voir dire. (See Dkt. 328 at 227 (asking that the Court ask whether “anyone close to you” had been a defendant in a criminal case, and whether any prospective juror had “visited a jail”). Moreover, neither Defendant proposed questions regarding the prospective jurors’ criminal background as part of their requested voir dire questions. (See Dkt. 173 (McCoy proposed voir dire); Dkt. 178 (Nix proposed voir dire)). Again, it was the Government that requested questions on this topic as part of its proposed voir dire questions. (See Dkt. 170 at 6).

Juror No. 3 unquestionably failed to reveal his criminal record in response to the juror questionnaire and the Court’s voir dire questions. By all accounts, the convictions at issue occurred before Juror No. 3 reached the age of 21, and that was the explanation offered by Juror No. 3 as to why he did not reveal the convictions: he did not believe that they counted because of their age (approximately 30 years old). (See Dkt. 358 at 74, 85-87).²² Juror No. 3 also told the Court that that was the reason he did not respond affirmatively to the question about visiting a jail (id. at 88-89), and he also told McCoy’s counsel that he assumed the question was directed at “visiting” another individual as opposed to serving time in jail himself (Dkt. 359 at 197).

²² Although there was evidence of two domestic violence incidents after Juror No. 3 reached the age of 21 (see Court Ex. 16 (incident from 1999) and Court Ex. 18 (incident from 1993)), Juror No. 3 could not recall one of the incidents, and he denied being arrested in connection with the incident that he did recall. (Dkt. 359 at 176-177). The documents reflecting these incidents do not plainly indicate that an arrest was made (see Court Ex. 18 (indicating that a “warrant” is “advised”), nor is there any information in the record about the disposition with respect to these incidents (see Gov’t Ex. 900 (criminal history printout run on the NYSID database for Juror No. 3, which does not contain any reference to arrests for these domestic violence incidents))). Thus, based on the record before the Court, it does not appear that Juror No. 3 would have needed to disclose this information in response to either the questionnaire or the voir dire questions.

The problem with accepting Juror No. 3's explanation is that he plainly provided false testimony at the evidentiary hearing regarding his criminal record. In other words, although it is at least debatable whether Juror No. 3 lied about his criminal history during voir dire, there is no question that he lied about his criminal history during the evidentiary hearing. Juror No. 3 initially denied any recollection of a felony conviction other than the one related to the clothing store burglary, but then, upon further questioning, he did admit to the felony conviction involving the stolen vehicle. (Dkt. 358 at 75-76, 80, 87-88).

Juror No. 3 exhibited a hazy recollection of his criminal record, including the two felony convictions. Although Juror No. 3's poor recollection is understandable in view of the convictions' temporal remoteness, the age of the convictions cannot explain Juror No. 3's false testimony that he was wrongly accused of both the clothing store burglary and stolen vehicle incident. (Id. at 79, 84-85). Juror No. 3 first claimed that he did not actually burglarize the clothing store or know the criminal purpose of the visit to the clothing store. (Id. at 84-85; Dkt. 359 at 180). Similarly, Juror No. 3 denied stealing a vehicle. (Dkt. 358 at 85).

However, during the second day of the hearing, when confronted with his signed confessions regarding these two incidents, Juror No. 3 admitted that he was involved in the clothing store burglary and that he had earlier testified falsely regarding the event. (Dkt. 359 at 179-84, 231). Juror No. 3 also admitted, in response to Nix's counsel's questions, to stealing a vehicle and switching the license plates. (Id. at 225).

Additionally, although Juror No. 3 denied any recollection of spending time in jail other than the six months spent in shock camp, the documentary evidence in this case suggests that Juror No. 3 spent six months in the Monroe County Jail for the stolen vehicle conviction in 1988. (Court Ex. 21). In addition, although the Court agrees with the Government that, to some extent, the so-called admissions that defense counsel—particularly Nix’s counsel—procured during the evidentiary hearing are not particularly helpful to any credibility assessment given the tone and nature of the questioning,²⁴ the

Q How many times have you been to jail?

A I don’t know. I don’t think about how many time I been to jail. I don’t know. I don’t look at my record. I don’t think about it so I don’t know.

Q Does seven sound right?

A I don’t know. . . . I don’t know. You tell me. I don’t know.

Q So you would need someone to tell you how many times you’ve been to jail?

A Like I said, I don’t think about it. It’s not something I get up in the morning and think about. I don’t think about that stuff.

Q Do you think you’ve been to jail more than five times?

A Probably.

(Dkt. 359 at 217-18). Although the Court allowed this line of questioning and overruled the Government’s objections, it was apparent to the Court that Juror No. 3 was extremely frustrated at this point, and the exchange quoted above is not helpful to the Court in assessing Juror No. 3’s credibility or discovering the truth about his times in jail. In other fact is that Juror No. 3 lied during the evidentiary hearing in response to the Court's questions. Juror No. 3 was not tricked—he deliberately offered false testimony at the evidentiary hearing regarding his criminal history.

The Court does not doubt that Juror No. 3's inaccurate testimony regarding his criminal record was due, in part, to the age of the convictions. However, given Juror No. 3's false testimony during the evidentiary hearing about his culpability for the two felony convictions, the Court does not credit Juror No. 3's explanation that he was confused by the voir dire questions or thought that the questions applied to criminal convictions only after the age of 21. Based on Juror No. 3's continued refusal to disclose the full extent of his criminal history during the evidentiary hearing—until faced with documentary evidence of the same—the Court concludes that Juror No. 3 failed to respond truthfully to the juror questionnaire and the Court's voir dire questions as they pertained to both his criminal convictions and his exposure to a jail.

However, this finding does not mean that the Court concludes that Juror No. 3 provided false information about his criminal record in an effort to intentionally deceive the Court so as to be selected to serve on the jury. Here, Juror No. 3 did not lie “for the purpose of securing a seat on the jury,” Parse, 789 F.3d at 111, nor can his lies be characterized as “premeditated and deliberate” so as to hide his true identity and ensure his selection on the jury, id. at 92-93. Rather, as revealed by Juror No. 3's continued lies words, although Juror No. 3 likely was incarcerated for more than just the six months in shock camp, and although the documentary evidence in the form of the certified certificate of conviction marked as Court Exhibit 21 at least suggests that he also spent six months in the Monroe County Jail, the reality is that the record is unclear as to the exact amount of incarceration served by Juror No. 3.

at the evidentiary hearing, his motives had nothing to do with securing a seat on this jury. The Government granted Juror No. 3 immunity for his testimony at the evidentiary hearing except for any perjured testimony, and yet Juror No. 3 refused to be honest about his criminal past at the hearing until confronted with documentary evidence. Juror No. 3 repeatedly testified at the evidentiary hearing that he does think about or focus on his criminal record. A more sophisticated witness may have been able to articulate a reason for his refusal to be honest about his criminal past—whether it be embarrassment, concern that the criminal record could impact his job as a cleaner, or a desire to simply block that part of his distant past. Instead, Juror No. 3 testified that he did not believe the convictions counted because they occurred before he was 21 years old. Juror No. 3 has applied a similar interpretation when answering juror questionnaires in the past.

The Court is not persuaded that Juror No. 3 misunderstood the scope of the questions as only applying to convictions at the age of 21 and older, when responding to either this Court or other courts in the past. However, the Court is convinced that the reason for Juror No. 3's inaccurate responses is not some nefarious motive; rather, the reason more likely originates from the simple fact that, at 47 years old, Juror No. 3 would prefer to shut out any recollection of his criminal history—the most recent of which (if the domestic violence incident from 1999 is included) was about 20 years ago, and most of which occurred when he was a teenager. Cf. Parse, 789 F.3d at 111 (“Where the juror has lied for the purpose of securing a seat on the jury—a mission apparently ‘so powerful as to cause the juror to commit a serious crime’—it ‘reflect[s] an impermissible partiality on the juror’s part. . . .’ In the present case, the record amply supports the findings of the district court that [the juror] repeatedly lied during voir dire . . . and that she did so in order to be chosen as a juror.” (quoting Colombo, 869 F.2d at 151) (emphasis added)); Langford, 990 F.2d at 69 (“[A] juror who . . . has deliberately responded falsely to a material question on voir dire precisely because she wanted to sit on the case, should be presumed not to be impartial.” (emphasis added)).

Thus, although the Court finds that Juror No. 3 testified falsely about certain information during the hearing that was conducted on June 12 and 14, 2017, it rejects the notion that Juror No. 3 testified falsely about all matters that were covered during that hearing, and it further rejects the notion that Juror No. 3 intentionally deceived the Court during voir dire as to his criminal history so as to gain a seat on the jury. Although Juror No. 3’s voir dire answers regarding his criminal history were inaccurate, the Court cannot conclude that they rise to the level of intentional falsehood necessary to satisfy the first prong of the McDonough test.

V. SECOND PRONG OF McDONOUGH—BIAS

The Court concedes that the issues at play concerning the inaccuracy of Juror No. 3’s disclosed criminal history with respect to the first prong of the McDonough test present a close question. Moreover, as noted above, the second prong of the McDonough test is the most critical. Thus, the Court will proceed to consider whether a correct response to the Court’s voir dire questions would have required excusing Juror No. 3 for cause—in other words, whether the Court would have granted a hypothetical challenge if Juror No. 3 had responded accurately to the Court’s questions. Unlike the first prong, resolution of the second prong is not a close question. The Court concludes that Juror

No. 3's lies, even if deliberate, did not evidence partiality so as to violate the Sixth Amendment.

As an initial matter, with the exception of Juror No. 3's prior criminal record, none of the other alleged inaccurate voir dire responses from Juror No. 3 would have even triggered a challenge for cause. Other jurors responded by disclosing prior jury service, being close to those who had been convicted of a crime, and being the victims of home burglaries (including suffering the theft of jewelry and other items of value (see Dkt. 328 at 97-101)). Yet none of those prospective jurors were challenged for cause, nor could they have been appropriately challenged for cause.

In addition, in many respects, the Court does not need to analyze how it would have handled a hypothetical challenge for cause due to Juror No. 3's criminal record, because, in the Court's view, based on Defendants' reaction to the disclosure of T.P.'s criminal history, Defendants would not have made a cause challenge. The Court is hard-pressed to credit Defendants' newfound aversion to jury service by a convicted felon given their reaction to the disclosure that T.P. was a convicted felon, and particularly when (at least Nix) continues to press the issue related to T.P. in post-verdict motion practice. Defendants would not have challenged Juror No. 3 for cause if he had revealed the full extent of his criminal history during voir dire—rather, the Government would have likely claimed bias and sought to excuse Juror No. 3.²⁶

²⁶ Of course, if Juror No. 3's criminal history was revealed during voir dire, he would have been statutorily disqualified pursuant to the JSSA, as opposed to any common-law based cause challenge. However, as discussed above, given the procedural posture of this case, it is too late to launch a challenge pursuant to the JSSA.

Notwithstanding the above, the Court will examine whether actual bias, implied bias or inferred bias is properly attributable to Juror No. 3.

A. Actual Bias

The Second Circuit has described actual bias as follows:

Actual bias is “bias in fact”—the existence of a state of mind that leads to an inference that the person will not act with entire impartiality. A juror is found by the judge to be partial either because the juror admits partiality, or the judge finds actual partiality based upon the juror’s voir dire answers.

Torres, 128 F.3d at 43 (citations omitted). “[A] finding of actual bias ‘is based upon determinations of demeanor and credibility that are peculiarly within a trial judge’s province.’” Id. at 44 (quoting Wainwright v. Witt, 469 U.S. 412, 428 (1985)).

The record in this case is barren of any evidence of actual bias on the part of Juror No. 3 against Defendants. Indeed, although Defendants argue in a conclusory manner that the convictions should be set aside because of actual bias, they make no real attempt to demonstrate actual bias. (See, e.g., Dkt. 363 at 17 (merely listing that “[t]he testimony of Juror #3 demonstrated actual, implied or inferred bias”)).

This was plainly not a case of Juror No. 3 wanting to hide information about his past to make himself more marketable as a juror, like the juror in Parse. Early in the voir dire, Juror No. 3 expressed reservations about serving because of his job responsibilities. (Dkt. 328 at 41). During the jury selection, Juror No. 3 was frustrated with the Court about the length of the proceedings (see Dkt. 359 at 238-39), and in fact, once selected to serve, he left the courtroom as the Court was still informing the jurors about some housekeeping matters (see Dkt. 327 at 32).

Moreover, the Court's observations of Juror No. 3—both during voir dire and throughout the trial—led to the inescapable conclusion that Juror No. 3 was by no means an overzealous or enthusiastic juror. Juror No. 3 had expressive features that the Court interpreted as reflecting his displeasure with being selected to sit on a 5-week trial. Juror No. 3 did his duty, but his body language did not depict somebody who was relishing the experience.

McCoy contends that Juror No. 3's expressed displeasure with the lateness of the proceedings on the day of jury selection should not be taken to infer that he was not enthusiastic about serving on the jury. (Dkt. 363 at 19). However, that is not the only basis for the Court's conclusion that Juror No. 3 was not pleased about being selected to serve on the jury. His facial expressions and body language throughout the trial caused the Court to conclude that, if he had a choice, Juror No. 3 would have elected not to sit on the jury. This included rolling his eyes at the Court when the jury had to be repeatedly excused from the courtroom during the defense presentation of the case, and appearing displeased when the court was in session for full days.

Given the fact that Juror No. 3 was working at nights to keep up with his cleaning business (Dkt. 358 at 98 (Juror No. 3 testifying that he worked until 1:00 AM after serving on the jury)), it is certainly understandable that he was not savoring the experience of sitting on this case. Indeed, it was a long trial, and perhaps each of the jurors would have elected to be someplace else if given the choice. Regardless, this Court had the definite and firm impression that Juror No. 3 was less than pleased when selected to serve on the jury.

As a result, the Court was quite surprised when, during the hearing, Juror No. 3 initially testified that, in fact, he wanted to serve “[b]ecause I was picked. It’s my right, I’m assuming.” (Dkt. 358 at 44). Ultimately, Juror No. 3 gave varying responses about his interest in serving, and the Court believes that Juror No. 3 was initially confused by the Court’s questioning. (See id. at 96-100). Yet, given Juror No. 3’s varying statements about his interest in serving on the jury, the Court cannot rely on the substance of Juror No. 3’s testimony in assessing this issue—what Juror No. 3 said on this topic is of little or no value. However, the Court has considered its observations of Juror No. 3 throughout the trial. It also believes Juror No. 3’s reaction in the form of tone, facial expression, and demeanor, to a particular line of questioning by the Government at the hearing, was revealing:

Q . . . did you have in your mind, I’m not going to say anything about my 27-year-old felony conviction because that way I can wind up on this jury?

A (Laughing.)

Q Is that what happened?

A No, it’s not.

Q You laughed when I said that. Does that seem ridiculous in your mind?

A Yes, it does.

Q Why is that ridiculous to you?

A Because I have better things to do than to sit here for five weeks. If I knew that, I would have told her then and I wouldn’t have been on the jury at all.

(Dkt. 359 at 236-37).

There is no evidence that Juror No. 3 knew that disclosure of his criminal record would have disqualified him from jury service. The Court believes that if Juror No. 3 had known this information, his reluctance to be honest about his criminal history would have likely been overcome by a desire to avoid jury service. In sum, the Court finds that there is no evidence of actual bias on the part of Juror No. 3, in favor of or against either the Government or Defendants. Even evaluating the facts in the light most favorable to Defendants (which is not the standard), no actual bias has been shown in this case. There is just no proof that Juror No. 3 intentionally lied to smuggle his way onto the jury.

B. Implied Bias

Implied bias is reserved for “extreme situations,” Greer, 285 F.3d at 172 (quoting Smith v. Phillips, 455 U.S. 209, 222 (1982)), and “deals mainly with jurors who are related to the parties or who were victims of the alleged crime itself,” id. (quoting Torres, 128 F.3d at 45). As explained by the Second Circuit:

Implied or presumed bias is “bias conclusively presumed as a matter of law.” It is attributed to a prospective juror regardless of actual partiality. In contrast to the inquiry for actual bias, which focuses on whether the record at voir dire supports a finding that the juror was in fact partial, the issue for implied bias is whether an average person in the position of the juror in controversy would be prejudiced. And in determining whether a prospective juror is impliedly biased, “his statements upon voir dire [about his ability to be impartial] are totally irrelevant.”

Torres, 128 F.3d at 45 (citations omitted). It is unsettled in the Second Circuit whether implied bias may serve as the basis for a post-trial allegation of jury partiality. See Greer, 285 F.3d at 172.

This is not a case of implied bias. There is no fact in the record which, had it been elicited during jury selection, would have required the Court to automatically assume bias on the part of Juror No. 3 or that Juror No. 3 was prejudiced against Defendants or in favor of the Government. Juror No. 3 is not related to any of the parties, victims, witnesses, attorneys, and he was not a victim of the charged crimes. Moreover, as discussed above, Juror No. 3's felon status does not justify a per se finding of bias as a matter of law. At best, Defendants cite to Juror No. 3's potential knowledge of one of the identified law enforcement witnesses in the case (who never ultimately testified) because he is the same individual who investigated Juror No. 3's clothing store burglary. Yet, even if Juror No. 3 recalled the name of the investigator (and there is no evidence that he did), this would not support a finding of implied bias against Defendants.

C. Inferred Bias

From a review of Defendants' submissions, it is apparent that the central focus of their argument is that it should be inferred, from Juror No. 3's inaccurate answers and undisclosed information, that he was biased against Defendants. "[A] finding of inferred bias is, by definition, within the discretion of the trial court." Id. As explained by the Second Circuit in Torres:

Bias may be inferred when a juror discloses a fact that bespeaks a risk of partiality sufficiently significant to warrant granting the trial judge discretion to excuse the juror for cause, but not so great as to make mandatory a presumption of bias. There is no actual bias because there is no finding of partiality based upon either the juror's own admission or the judge's evaluation of the juror's demeanor and credibility following voir dire questioning as to bias. And there is no implied bias because the disclosed fact does not establish the kind of relationship between the juror and the parties or issues in the case that mandates the juror's excusal for cause.

Nonetheless, inferable bias is closely linked to both of these traditional categories. Just as the trial court's finding of actual bias must derive from voir dire questioning, so the court is allowed to dismiss a juror on the ground of inferable bias only after having received responses from the juror that permit an inference that the juror in question would not be able to decide the matter objectively. . . . [O]nce facts are elicited that permit a finding of inferable bias, then, just as in the situation of implied bias, the juror's statements as to his or her ability to be impartial become irrelevant. . . .

[C]ases in which a juror has engaged in activities that closely approximate those of the defendant on trial are particularly apt [for an inference of bias].

128 F.3d at 47.²⁷ Like implied bias, it is unsettled in the Second Circuit whether inferred bias may serve as the basis for a post-trial challenge based on jury partiality. See Greer, 285 F.3d at 172.

As an initial matter, the Court must assess any claim of inferred bias in light of Defendants' attitude about Juror No. 3 before they were convicted. Defendants wanted Juror No. 3—the only African American male remaining after the removal of T.P.—on the jury. During the first day of the trial, the Court raised an issue after opening statements as to whether Juror No. 3 had dozed off during the Government's opening statement.²⁹ The Court observed that Juror No. 3 had made a noise that could have been a snore, and the Government observed that his eyes were closed and then opened after making the noise. In response, defense counsel denied that Juror No. 3 had his eyes closed or was sleeping, and objected to the Court making any further inquiry. The Court indicated that it would continue to observe Juror No. 3 (as well as the rest of the jurors), and, ultimately, no further inquiry was required. However, defense counsels' objections demonstrate that they perceived Juror No. 3 as an individual who was potentially in their corner, not the opposite. Indeed, Defendants' attitude in this regard is only further reinforced by their reaction to the removal of the other African American male (T.P.) because of his undisclosed felony convictions. See Stewart, 317 F. Supp. 2d at 439 (rejecting defendants' argument that nondisclosures by juror would have provided sufficient basis for a challenge for cause, citing to defendants' "vigorous[]" argument against the Government's challenge to another prospective juror who failed to disclose similar information).

Additionally, the information disclosed about Juror No. 3's criminal history does not support an inference of bias against Defendants. The fact that Juror No. 3 has been previously arrested and convicted of two prior felonies—including convicted for burglarizing a clothing store and possibly arrested for burglarizing a home³⁰—does not justify a finding of bias against Defendants, and Defendants cannot articulate any reasonable basis for concluding otherwise. The fact that neither Defendant requested that any issue about prospective jurors' criminal histories be explored during voir dire, necessarily reflects Defendants' lack of concern with having criminals serve on the jury. Rather, this was the Government's concern, and in fact, McCoy even admits that it would have been the Government who challenged Juror No. 3 for cause if his criminal history had been revealed. (Dkt. 372 at 9). See Stewart, 317 F. Supp. 2d at 442 (“[D]efendants have still failed to demonstrate how that information would have supported a for-cause challenge of [the juror]. It is difficult to see how information concerning [the juror’s] son’s conviction for an attempted robbery—a crime unrelated to the crimes charged in this case—could justify an inference that [the juror] would be biased against these defendants. If anything, a prospective juror with a family member who had been convicted of a crime would more likely be considered biased in favor of criminal defendants.”).

²⁹ The Court's recitation of this part of the trial is based upon its notes, since a transcript has not yet been prepared for this part of the trial.

³⁰ There is some evidence in the record that Juror No. 3 may have been arrested for burglarizing a home in May of 1989 (when he was 19 years old). However, Juror No. 3

Similarly, Nix contends that Juror No. 3 is biased because he “had bad experiences with law enforcement.” (Dkt. 369 at 12). Not only is there no evidence of this in the record, but even if that was correct, any potential bias would be more likely directed at the Government, not Defendants. Again, to support this point, one need only review the focus of Defendants’ and the Government’s requested voir dire. (See Dkt. 170 at 5; Dkt. 173 at 2-3; Dkt. 178 at 2-5).

had no recollection of this alleged incident, and there is no evidence that he was convicted of this crime. (See Dkt. 358 at 84).

The primary thrust of Defendants' claimed inferred bias is the contention that Juror No. 3 must have been biased against Defendants because he would have necessarily identified with the cooperators in this case. However, just because Juror No. 3 was a defendant in the criminal justice system with co-defendants does not mean that he actively cooperated with law enforcement. There is no evidence that Juror No. 3 was offered some benefit in exchange for cooperation against any co-defendant or that he testified against co-defendants. At best, there is evidence that Juror No. 3 confessed to his crimes and implicated his co-defendants. There is just no evidence in the record to support the inference that, because of his criminal past, Juror No. 3 sympathized with the cooperating witnesses in this case, and thus was biased against Defendants.

More to the point, Juror No. 3's criminal history is from some 30 years ago. That criminal history is just too remote to support a finding of inferred bias. There is nothing in the record to suggest that Juror No. 3's criminal past reflected bias against Defendants, let alone that it even came into his thought processes when sitting on this jury. In fact, by all accounts, Juror No. 3 went to great lengths to avoid any thoughts about his criminal past.

Moreover, this Court genuinely believes that Juror No. 3 had no recollection of being the victim of a home burglary, but, even if he did recall that incident, the remoteness and lack of similarity to the crimes at issue in this case again negates any finding of inferred bias. In other words, the Court has necessarily taken into account not just its findings about Juror No. 3's failure to respond accurately during voir dire concerning his criminal history, but also the other claims made by Defendants as to Juror

No. 3's alleged false answers, including the fact that Juror No. 3 was a victim of a home burglary about 20 years ago and his various family members' alleged criminal records. Even crediting Defendants' allegations about Juror No. 3's false answers, the Court cannot conclude that this supports an inference of bias against Defendants on the part of Juror No. 3. The incidents are just too remote and, on balance, do not support a finding of bias against Defendants.

In sum, the record does not provide a basis to infer bias. Even if the first prong of the McDonough test was satisfied, there is no evidence of extreme deceit (such as in Parse) that would support the showing required under McDonough's second prong. Put simply, the Court does not believe that the "deliberateness of [Juror No. 3's] particular lies evidenced partiality," Stewart, 433 F.3d at 305 (citation omitted); and even if Juror No. 3 did intentionally attempt to deceive the Court, the deliberateness of his lies is not sufficiently intentional or premeditated so as to, in and of themselves, establish bias under the second prong. Cf. Colombo, 869 F.2d at 151 (if juror deliberately provided false information by not disclosing that brother-in-law was a lawyer for the government so that she could sit on the case, then both prongs of McDonough would be satisfied).

VI. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court denies Defendants' motions pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 33 (Dkt. 286; Dkt. 289) to the extent the motions are based upon Juror No. 3's alleged bias.
