

on April 13, 2022.¹ On May 11, 2022, Martin filed a notice of appeal from the Superior Court's judgment.²

(2) While his case was still pending in the Superior Court, Martin filed this petition, seeking to invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court under Supreme Court Rule 43 to issue writs of mandamus and prohibition. Martin asks this Court to direct the Superior Court to "correct" its docket and the corresponding records and to enjoin the Superior Court from "interfering" with the docket and the record. Martin also indirectly asks the Court to compel the Superior Court to rule on the post-trial motions.

(3) A writ of mandamus will issue to a trial court only if the petitioner can show: (i) a clear right to the performance of a duty; (ii) that no other adequate remedy is available; and (iii) that the trial court has arbitrarily failed or refused to perform its duty.³ "[I]n the absence of a clear showing of an arbitrary refusal or failure to act, this Court will not issue a writ of mandamus to compel a trial court to perform a particular judicial function, to decide a matter in a particular way, or to dictate the control of its docket."⁴

(4) As noted above, the Superior Court issued a decision on Martin's post-trial motions on April 13, 2022. Thus, to the extent that Martin's petition for a writ of mandamus asks the Court to direct the Superior Court to rule on the motions, it is moot. And to the extent that the petition otherwise seeks to dictate control of the Superior Court's docket, it is improper and must be dismissed.

(5) A writ of prohibition is the legal equivalent of the equitable remedy of injunction and may be issued to prevent a trial court from (a) proceeding in a matter where it has no jurisdiction or (b) exceeding its jurisdiction in a matter that is properly before it.⁵ The jurisdictional defect alleged by the petitioner must be clear from the record.⁶ And a writ of prohibition will not issue "if the petitioner has another adequate and complete remedy at law to correct the act of the trial court [that] is alleged to be erroneous."⁷

(6) Martin does not claim that the Superior Court lacked jurisdiction over the underlying personal-injury action. Moreover, Martin has an adequate and complete remedy at law: he may challenge the Superior Court's rulings in his opening brief on direct appeal. Martin's petition for a writ of prohibition must therefore be dismissed.

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the State's motion to dismiss is GRANTED and the petition for the issuance of writs of mandamus and prohibition is DISMISSED.
