Here comes now, Petitioners Victor Vega-Encarnacion and Darwin Oscar Quinones-Pimentel, Sui Juris in Propria Persona, and on behalf of themselves, very respectfully jointly submits this request for petitioner of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals (Pet. App. 1a) is a published available at Quinones-Pimentel v. Cannon, 85 F.4th 63 (1st Cir. 2023). The district court's order of dismissal (Pet. App. 22a-2) Quinones -Pimentel v. Cannon, No. 20-cv-01443, 2022 WL 826344, (D.P.R. Mar. 17, 2022)

JURISDICTION

The First Circuit's judgment was entered on October 23, 2023. The denial for Panel Rehearing and Rehearing en Banc was entered on January 9, 2024. (Pet. App. 22a-1) This petition is timely filed. See Rule 13. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

RELEVANT PROVISIONS INVOLVED(see appendix)

STATEMENT

Darwin Quinones-Pimentel, a seasoned systems architect with extensive expertise in various computer science fields, spearheaded several companies from 2002 to 2012, including Naicom Corporation. Naicom specialized in distributing live television through innovative technology known as Dynamic Internet Semantic Multicast Environment (DISME). By 2016, DISME enabled highly efficient live TV distribution, reducing bandwidth compared to traditional cable systems. Industry experts had previously deemed such technology impossible.

In 2017, Dish Network, NagraStar, and several associated individuals allegedly conspired with the U.S. Attorney's Office for Puerto Rico and the FBI to misappropriate Naicom's intellectual property. It is claimed that they used false affidavits to obtain search warrants, which allowed them to unlawfully seize and download Naicom's proprietary data, including source codes and confidential information, for advancing their own technologies.

On August 27, 2019, the U.S. Attorney's Office, through the FBI, applied for search and seizure warrants for two premises in Puerto Rico. The affidavits supporting these warrants contained false statements, which led U.S. Magistrate Judge Silvia Carreño-Coll to authorize the searches. On the same day, FBI agents and Dish/Nagrastar investigators executed the search warrants, allegedly exceeding their authorized scope and involving unauthorized participants. Additionally, warrantless searches were reportedly conducted on August 27 and 29, 2019, during which the plaintiffs' private information and intellectual property were seized.

On September 6, 2019, the plaintiffs moved the District Court for the return of their property, arguing that the search warrants were based on false information. The District Court ordered the return of the property on November 5, 2019.

In August 2020, the plaintiffs aimed to prove a conspiracy among the defendants, contending that their actions violated the plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment rights. They filed a civil rights action seeking compensatory and punitive damages against the defendants in their personal and individual capacities, alleging conspiracy and gross unconstitutional misconduct, redressable under Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971). They cited G.M. Leasing Corp. v. United States, 429 U.S. 338 (1977), which recognizes that business entities also enjoy constitutional protections, and Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154 (1978), which establishes that using false statements to obtain a search warrant violates the Fourth Amendment. Additionally, they referenced Aponte Matos v. Toledo Dávila, 135 F.3d 182 (1st Cir. 1998), for the prohibition of warrantless searches and the exceeding of authorized warrant scopes.

The plaintiffs claimed the unconstitutional searches and seizures caused substantial damages, including loss of liberty, invasion of privacy, serious emotional distress, reputational harm, financial losses, and impediments to daily functioning. They sought compensatory and punitive damages, attorney fees, and other judicial relief to bar the defendants from using or disclosing any confidential information obtained during the illegal searches. They requested a jury trial for all issues in this action.

The DISH/NagraStar Defendants filed motions to dismiss, arguing that the plaintiffs' claims called for an impermissible expansion of Bivens remedies. They asserted that the context differentiated significantly from Bivens, involved various actors, and featured differing legal decisions. They also pointed out the availability of alternative remedies, like the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) and Rule 41(g). Similarly, the Government Defendants argued that the plaintiffs' claims did not align with the established scope of a Bivens action, emphasizing legal and procedural remedies in place and noting the qualified immunity of FBI defendants and AUSA Cannon.

The plaintiffs rebutted by arguing that their claims fell within the established scope of Bivens and did not represent a new context or category of defendants. They emphasized that their Fourth Amendment rights had been violated through alleged falsification of warrant affidavits and unlawful searches, demonstrating a direct link to their injuries. They contended that existing remedies under the FTCA and Rule 41(g) were insufficient as they did not provide for damages against private entities or punitive damages. Furthermore, they argued they had the right to file constitutional torts under the Seventh Amendment, and that federal court jurisdiction over such claims existed under the Federal Question Statute pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

The Court granted the defendants' motions to dismiss, concluding that the case presented a new context beyond previously recognized Bivens actions and involved separation of powers concerns. The court emphasized the Supreme Court's caution against expanding Bivens to new contexts and highlighted the adequacy of alternative remedies under the FTCA and Rule 41(g). Consequently, the plaintiffs' Bivens claims were dismissed without prejudice. The plaintiffs timely appealed.

Upon review, the Court of Appeals affirmed the district court's decision on narrower grounds. They distinguished this case from Bivens on several fronts, including the nature of the defendants (prosecutors and private parties), the type of alleged misconduct (execution of searches pursuant to warrants, exceeding warrant scopes), and the involvement of businesses rather than individuals. The court also determined that the availability of alternate remedies under Rule 41(g) weighed against extending a Bivens remedy. Therefore, the appellants' claims were dismissed.

The Court of Appeals upheld the lower court's adherence to the Supreme Court's directive to avoid extending Bivens to new contexts, emphasizing separation-of-powers principles and adequate existing remedies. They found that special factors precluded extending Bivens to the appellants' claims.

In a petition for panel rehearing and/or en banc determination (Darwin Quinones-Pimentel et al. v. Nicholas W. Cannon et al., No. 22-1307), the appellants requested a rehearing and/or en banc review following the panel's judgment on October 27, 2023. The panel, comprising Judges **Barron**, **Selya**, and **Thompson**, decision to affirm the District Court's decision to grant the defendants' Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim.

The appellants argued that the panel's decision overlooked material facts and legal authorities favoring their claims. They contended that the decision conflicted with Supreme Court precedents and opinions from other Circuit Courts, justifying the need for en banc review to maintain consistency in judicial precedents. The panel had affirmed the dismissal primarily because the claims arose in a new Biven context and Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(g) provided an alternative remedy.

The appellants insisted this was erroneous, stressing that Bivens claims based on Fourth Amendment violations remain valid, and that Rule 41(g) was inadequate.

The appellants cited references to several legal precedents and constitutional protections, such as Horton v. California, 496 U.S. 128 (1990); Maryland v. Garrison, 480 U.S. 79 (1987), and Franks v. Delaware, (Supra), which establish that searches exceeding lawful scope and based on false premises violate the Fourth Amendment. They contended that the panel misapplied the Supreme Court's decision in Ziglar v. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. 1843 (2017), by deeming the context of their case significantly different from prior Bivens actions.

Additionally, they argued that relying on Rule 41(g) as an alternative remedy overlooked their Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial and the right to seek compensatory and punitive damages for constitutional violations. They emphasized the necessity of monetary damages as recognized under common law and statutory provisions, such as 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

In advocating for en banc determination, the appellants underscored that the panel's ruling was inconsistent with Supreme Court rulings and other Circuit Courts' decisions. They highlighted the necessity for full court review to correct precedent-setting errors and ensure uniformity in the Court's rulings, supporting their position with numerous precedents.

Ultimately, the appellants sought the rehearing or reassessment of the case, requesting that the full court either restore the case for re-argument or re-examine the validity of their Bivens claims, consistent with constitutional protections and established legal precedents.

Introduction

The reversal of the dismissal of Bivens claims grounded on alleged Fourth Amendment violations, including those stemming from conduct tied to Franks violations<sup>1</sup> is justified under established legal principles. The Fourth Amendment shields individuals against unreasonable searches and seizures, mandating that searches be conducted with warrants supported by probable cause and limited in scope. Franks v. Delaware prohibits the use of false statements to obtain search warrants, constituting a violation of the Fourth Amendment. Unauthorized searches that surpass the warrant's boundaries are deemed unconstitutional under Fourth Amendment jurisprudence.

Additionally, it applies the findings derived from specific cases like Franks v. Delaware and Aponte Matos v. Toledo Dávila<sup>135 F.3d 182 (1st Cir. 1998)</sup> to underscore Fourth Amendment safeguards against unlawful searches and the liability of federal agents for misbehavior. It accentuates the viability of Biven remedies in cases rooted in constitutional violations. Conclusively, emphasizing the significance of maintaining Biven remedies in cases concerning federal official misconduct, the argument ascertains the repercussions of barring such remedies for the historical tradition of judicially generated tort remedies. It queries the constitutionality of limiting Biven remedies, especially when alternative redress avenues are scarce, as exemplified by the challenges posed by the Westfall Act in providing sufficient redress for constitutional transgressions. Franks v. Delaware and Aponte Matos v. Toledo Dávila, supra.

Similarly, the privacy interests attached to electronic storage devices, such as laptops, are protected under the Fourth Amendment. Corporations are also recognized as possessing Fourth Amendment rights and can litigate breaches of those rights. Lower federal courts are obligated to adhere to Supreme Court precedents through stare decisis, preventing the re-litigation of settled legal issues. Hence, the dismissal of Biven claims linked to alleged Fourth Amendment infractions, including Franks violations, should be overturned as the conduct alleged potentially contradicts Fourth Amendment requisites, permitting the plaintiffs to pursue their claims in federal court. Franks v. Delaware, supra, and Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967).

This argument delves into the historical foundation and legal framework surrounding the judiciary's authority to adjudicate cases involving constitutional violations and the protection of individual rights. It discusses the authority vested in the judiciary by the United States Constitution under Article III, Section 2, to handle cases arising under the Constitution and the laws of the country, as well as the right to a jury trial in criminal and civil cases deemed vital for a free government. The Federalist Papers 83 outline the crucial nature of the right to a jury trial in the American judicial system. Moreover, the importance of the Seventh Amendment in providing access to the Supreme Court for addressing grievances, especially in instances of constitutional rights violation, is emphasized.

Furthermore, the argument analyzes the utilization of statutory causes of actions, such as 42 U.S.C. § 1983, contending that the Federal Question Jurisdiction statute under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 empowers individuals to seek redress and compensation for constitutional infringements by federal officers. Reference to the Westfall Act of 1988 and the legal precedent set by Bivens, supra, demonstrates the progression of legal remedies for constitutional violations by federal officials. The argument critiques recent interpretations and legal challenges related to Biven claims, particularly following Ziglar v. Abbasi, supra, citing the Court's refusal to allow Biven claims against new defendant categories. It emphasizes sustaining a consistent federal remedy for enforcing constitutional rights, expresses opposition towards restrictions imposed by district courts on Biven remedies, and upholds fundamental principles of judicial review and constitutional rights protection. Bivens, supra, and Abbasi, supra.

It concludes by underscoring the necessity of allowing individuals to seek redress for constitutional violations through judicial remedies, notably in cases involving the violation of fundamental rights, federal official misconduct, and the absence of statutory deterrent mechanisms.

The argument stresses the importance of constitutional monetary damages adjudged by the jury as part of civil actions under Federal Question Jurisdiction statutes, emphasizing the court's obligation under Article III and their constitutional oath to dispense justice. It highlights the importance of safeguarding intellectual property rights and adhering to lawful investigative processes, emphasizing the impact of illicit searches on a business' reputation and the imperative of upholding constitutional rights during investigations.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. The Law of the Land

A. Fourth Amendment Applicability

The Fourth Amendment provides crucial protections against unreasonable searches and seizures by the government. The Reasonableness Clause within the Fourth Amendment prohibits all "unreasonable searches and seizures" and serves as a critical check on government investigations. Soldal v. Cook County, 506 U.S. 56, 63 (1992). The Warrant Clause of the Fourth Amendment establishes the process for obtaining a warrant to authorize a search. Maryland v. Garrison, 480 U.S. 79, 84–85 (1987).

The Supreme Court has emphasized the need for warrants to prevent unreasonable searches and seizures. It is well-established that obtaining a search warrant through false statements violates the Fourth Amendment - a principle recognized in Franks v. Delaware, supra. See also the First Circuit opinion in Aponte-Matos v. Toledo Davila, 135 F.3d 182, 190 (1st Cir. 1998) ("Frank violations are redressable for damages under Bivens and the Fourth Amendment against the offending federal defendants") and U.S. v. Owens, 917 F.3d 26, 38 (1st Cir. 2019).

The courts have also affirmed that searches must not exceed the scope of the warrant, as outlined in Horton v. California, 494 U.S. 128 (1990). See also Groh v. Ramirez, 540 U.S. 551, 557-58 (2004). Furthermore, the Fourth Amendment extends protections to businesses and corporations against unreasonable searches and seizures, as established in G.M. Leasing Corp. v. U.S., (Supra).

The Fourth Amendment establishes that a warrant typically authorizes only one search, and for a search to be considered reasonable, there must be probable cause throughout the entire search process. Probable cause can cease to exist due to new information or the passage of time before the search is conducted. Baranski v. Fifteen Unknown Agents of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms, 452 F.3d 433, 452 (6th Cir. 2006). Law enforcement officers are mandated to consider facts that could diminish probable cause throughout the search, and the continuation of a search is only permissible if probable cause continues to exist. This principle applies to the execution of the search warrant, emphasizing the necessity for probable cause at the time of the search. Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692, 705, 101 S.Ct. 2587, 69 L.Ed.2d 340 (1981). In summary, the Fourth Amendment safeguards against unreasonable government intrusion through stringent requirements for searches and seizures, and corporations are recognized as legal entities entitled to constitutional protections and legal remedies for violations.

B. Corporations as Persons Protected Under the Law

In G.M. Leasing Corp. v. U.S., (Supra), the Court established that the Fourth Amendment protects businesses and corporations from unreasonable searches and seizures. The Court held that corporations enjoy constitutional protections such as the Fourth Amendment. See Marshall v. Barlow's, Inc., 436 U.S. 307, 98 S.Ct. 1816, 56 L.Ed.2d 305 (1978) (Corporations are protected from unreasonable searches and seizures). The Supreme Court has also rejected a literal reading of the term, only "houses" referred to in the Fourth Amendment are "houses," and has held that the amendment's protections also extend to commercial premises. Mancusi v. DeForte, 392 U.S. 364, 367, 88 S.Ct. 2120, 2123, 20 L.Ed.2d 1154 (1968). The inquiry is whether, considering all the circumstances, a defendant had a legitimate expectation that the place would be free from "governmental intrusion." Id. at 368, 88 S.Ct. at 2124; see O'Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709, 107 S.Ct. 1492, 1498, 94 L.Ed.2d 714 (1987) (O'Connor, J., joined by three Justices); id. 107 S.Ct. at 1505 (Scalia, J., concurring in the judgment).

Corporations are considered "persons" in the eyes of the law and are entitled to certain rights and protections. See United States v. Brookman Co., 229 F.Supp. 862, 864 (N.D.Cal.1964) ("The wor[d] 'person' ... include[s] corporations, as well as individuals." See Title 1 U.S.C. § 1). Businesses, as persons, can bring suits for the deprivation of rights secured under the Constitution, including through federal civil rights statutes. U.S. v. Interstate Engineering Corp., 288 F.Supp. 402 (D.N.H. 1967). Thus, corporations have standing to bring claims for the violation of their constitutional rights, as illustrated in Pierce v. Soc'y of the Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, 268 U.S. 510 (1925). See also Des Vergnes v. Seekonk Water Dist., 601 F.2d 9, 16 (1st Cir. 1979) (citing cases); Levy v. Pappas, 510 F.3d 755, 762 (7th Cir. 2007) ("Generally speaking, a corporation may sue under § 1983.").

C. The Article III "Cases" and "Controversies" Reach

Under Article III of the U.S. Constitution, the requirement that federal courts adjudicate only "cases" and "controversies" reflects disputes suitable for resolution through the judicial process. This restriction limits judicial power to disputes traditionally resolved by courts, particularly those concerning the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States. A dispute becomes a "case" when it involves questions related to the Constitution or laws, capable of judicial action, that are actively contested by adverse parties. A "controversy" falls within federal jurisdiction and pertains to civil nature suits. See Harris v. United States, 447 F.Supp.2d 208 (D.Conn. 2010); Uzuegbunam v. Preczewski, 141 S.Ct. 792 (2021); In re Summers, 325 U.S. 561 (1945); Johnson v. Interstate Transit Lines, 163 F.2d 125 (10th Cir. 1947); Aetna Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227 (1937); Smith v. Blackwell, 115 F.2d 186 (C.C.A.S.C. 1940); Evangelical Lutheran Church in America v. I.N.S., 288 F.Supp.2d 32 (D.D.C. 2000)).

To satisfy the Article III "case or controversy" requirement, plaintiffs must demonstrate standing by showing they have suffered actual or threatened injury due to the defendant's actions, which is likely to be redressed through judicial relief. This injury must be directly traceable to the defendant's conduct, with a substantial chance that the requested relief will address the harm alleged. Allegations presented to the court should remain undisputed or proven. Legal Aid Soc. of Alameda County v. Brennan, 608 F.2d 1319 (9th Cir. 1979); Lucas v. Forty-Fourth General Assembly of State of Colo., 377 U.S. 713 (1964).

Evolving from common law, the law recognized damages as suitable relief in suits against government officials, enabling individuals to challenge governmental conduct by taking legal action against public officials for damages. Pfander & Hunt, 85 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1862 (2010); Little v. Barreme, 2 Cranch 170 (1804); Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. 137 (1836); Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 115 (1852); Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 334 (1866); Belknap v. Schild, 161 U.S. 10 (1896); Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U.S. 605 (1912)). There is no "case or controversy" for purposes of Article III if plaintiff's purported injuries cannot be redressed through a court action. Evangelical Lutheran Church in America v. I.N.S., 288 F.Supp.2d 32 (D.D.C. 200). Courts adjudicate controversies involving alleged denials of constitutional rights. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth General Assembly of State of Colo., (Supra).

In the context of suits against government officials, damages have long been awarded as appropriate relief. In the early Republic, "an array of writs ... allowed individuals to test the legality of government conduct by filing suit against government officials" for money damages "payable by the officer." Pfander & Hunt, supra. Public Wrongs and Private Bills: Indemnification and Gov't Accountability in the Early Republic, 85 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1862, 1871–1875 (2010); see id., at 1875, n. 52 (collecting cases).

These common-law causes of action remained available through the 19th century and into the 20th. See, e.g., Little v. Barreme, 2 Cranch 170 (1804); Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. 137 (1836); Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 115 (1852); Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 334 (1866); Belknap v. Schild, 161 U.S. 10 (1896); Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U.S. 605 (1912) ("The exemption of the United States from suit does not protect its officers from personal liability to persons whose rights of property they have wrongfully invaded”).

D. Federal Question Jurisdiction to Adjudicate Cases Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

Under the Constitution, Congress is granted the authority to confer the subordinate federal courts with original jurisdiction over cases arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, as highlighted in Bankers' Trust Co. v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 241 U.S. 295 (1916). Congressional intent is crucial in determining federal jurisdiction, discerned through legislative history analysis and consideration of different factors, such as the class benefitting from the statute and the legislative scheme. Federal jurisdiction exists when a federal question is raised on the face of a plaintiff's complaint, a principle known as the well-pleaded complaint rule, as well expounded in Franchise Tax Board v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1 (1983).

In establishing whether a federal claim exists, courts primarily rely on the well-pleaded complaint rule, as cited in Custer v. Sweeney, 89 F.3d 1154 (4th Cir. 1996), where examination of the complaint focuses on determining whether federal law creates the cause of action. The consideration of whether a private cause of action is implicit in a statute involves analyzing factors such as plaintiff being a direct beneficiary of the statute, legislative intent to create or deny a remedy, consistency with legislative scheme, and the delegation traditionally accorded to such claims under federal law, exemplified in Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677 (1979). See also Franchise Tax Board v.

Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 9–10 (1983).

For federal courts to hear cases based on federal statutes including civil or constitutional rights claims, it is essential to underscore the jurisdiction provided in Title 28 U.S.C. § 1343. Moreover, recognition of federal common law is exemplified in cases safeguarding federal interests where a federal rule of decision is mandated or where congressional authority permits substantive law development.

The constitutional judicial power of federal courts extends to cases arising under judge-made legal doctrines. Although the Supreme Court announced in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938) that "[t]here is no federal general common law," it is well settled that there are some areas where courts apply federal common law, and the Supreme Court has held that federal courts have the power to hear federal common law claims.

Under the Rules of Decision Act, there is a presumption against the creation of federal common law, and federal courts apply state common law when possible. 28 U.S.C. § 1652; see also Tex. Indus., Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., 451 U.S. 630, 640– 41 (1981) ("The vesting of jurisdiction in the federal courts does not in and of itself give rise to authority to formulate federal common law.").

Federal courts primarily create and apply federal common law in two circumstances: where a federal rule of decision is necessary to protect uniquely federal interests, or where Congress has given the courts the power to develop substantive law. Id. In determining whether to create federal common law, the Court's inquiry focuses on whether a judge-made rule would effectuate the intent of Congress. See, e.g.,

Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677 (1979). Congress can enact legislation to displace the judicially created law. City of Milwaukee v. Illinois, 451 U.S. 304 (1981).

A related example of judge-made law that raises constitutional issues subject to federal-question jurisdiction is the doctrine articulated in **Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents**. Bivens and its progeny allowed individuals to sue federal agents directly under the Constitution without a federal statute authorizing relief. See also Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228 (1979), and Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14 (1980). More recent Supreme Court cases have construed Bivens narrowly. See, e.g., Egbert v. Boule, 142 S.Ct. 1793 (2022).

E. The Common Law and Civil Law Tradition

The common-law system, originating in England and based on case law and precedent rather than codified laws, is known for providing a common set of rules and principles to solve legal issues, particularly recorded judicial decisions. Common law's development has been marked by judges' decisions being compiled annually for reference, contributing to the common-law tradition of fairness in courts and protection of individual rights and private property. However, in order to abrogate a common-law principle, a statute must directly address the issue referred to in the common law. Strong judicial restraint is required in creating new causes of action as it may disrupt the legislative balance of interests. Courts should refrain from creating private rights of action unless there is a strong reason to believe Congress would endorse the new remedy. This strict standard is applied particularly in contexts where a plaintiff seeks to establish a new cause of action. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Call Publishing Co., 181 U.S. 92 (1901); Mobil Oil Corp. v. Higginbotham; Milwaukee v. Illinois, 451 U.S. 304, 315 (1981); Nestle USA, Inc. v. Doe, 141 S.Ct. 1931, 1938-1939 (2021).

F. The Seventh Amendment Applicability to Common Law Torts.

The Supreme Court in City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., 526 U.S. 687 (1999), established a two-part test for determining Seventh Amendment jury trial rights in common-law causes of action or similar statutory claims. According to this test, a jury trial is warranted if the cause of action falls within the realm of common law or its statutory equivalent and if a trial by jury is essential to preserving the substance of the right as it existed in 1791. Even though certain statutory claims like § 1983 were not specifically recognized in common law in 1791, courts have extended the Seventh Amendment guarantee to such claims as long as they resemble tort actions seeking legal relief. In identifying whether a claim sounds in tort, courts have examined whether it provides redress for infringements on protected rights, similar to how tort actions address violations of personal or property interests. Therefore, it has been established those actions brought under § 1983, which aim to restore rights outlined in federal law, are essentially tort actions deserving of a jury trial under the Seventh Amendment. Moreover, the creation of a constitutional violation cause of action by the Supreme Court would also render it a common lawsuit under the Seventh Amendment, such as a Bivens action which allows parties to assert constitutional tort claims against federal officers in their individual capacities.

In conclusion, if the Supreme Court creates a constitutional right violation cause of action to sue individuals, it could be considered a common lawsuit under the Seventh Amendment. Del Monte Dunes, supra 526 U.S. at 687. A Bivens action is the federal analog to suits brought against state officials under Rev. Stat. § 1979, 42 U.S.C. § 1983, where the Supreme Court allows a party to maintain constitutional tort suits against federal officers in their individual capacities, even in the absence of an express congressionally created cause of action. See Wilson v. Layne, 526 U.S. 603, 609 (1999).

G. Monetary Damages Under Common Law.<sup>2</sup>

The historical precedent established by the Supreme Court regarding punitive damages in tort cases supports the principle that such issues should be determined by a jury. This principle has been upheld for more than a century, dating back to Day v. Woodworth, 54 U.S. (13 How.) 363, 14 L. Ed. 181 (1851), where the Court recognized the discretionary authority of the jury in awarding punitive damages. Furthermore, the courts have consistently affirmed that the traditional relief provided in law courts is in the form of money damages, as affirmed in Chauffeurs, 494 U.S. 570, where it is stated that an action for money damages is classic legal relief. The purpose of such damages in tort cases is to compensate plaintiffs for the losses incurred due to the wrongful actions of the defendant, as outlined in Brand Mktg. Grp. LLC v. Intertek Testing Servs., N.A., Inc., 801 F.3d 347, 357 (3d Cir. 2015). This principle was supported by "repeated judicial decisions for more than a century."<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The Federalist 83, J. Adams, the right to a jury trial in to adjudicate the facts in all criminal prosecutions and assess damages liabilities in civil cases are now entrusted in the constitution. Described as “the very palladium of free government” in The Federalist Papers 83, the right to a jury trial is a fundamental part of the American judicial system.

<sup>3</sup> The appellant submits that the historical development of punitive damages in Anglo-American law is deeply rooted in English legal history, tracing back to seminal cases in the 18th century, such as Wilkes v. Wood, 98 Eng. Rep. 489, 498--99 C.P. 1763 and Huckle v. Money, 95 Eng. Rep. 768 C.P. 1763 which established the doctrine of punitive damages. This concept, aimed at punishing wrongdoers beyond compensatory damages, evolved from earlier legal practices and was influenced by Roman law's concept of injuria, addressing non-economic harms like insults or affronts to dignity. The distinction between punitive and aggravated damages, as outlined by Lord Devlin in Rookes v. Barnard, highlights the punitive aspect as a means of punishment and deterrence, differing from aggravated damages that compensate for the aggravated nature of the defendant's conduct. The legal framework for awarding punitive damages has varied across common-law countries, with the UK, US, and Australia acknowledging the historical cases as foundational but differing in their application. In the UK, punitive damages are awarded under specific categories, whereas in the US and Australia, the approach is more flexible, guided by statute or case law. The philosophical foundations and distinctions from aggravated damages continue to be debated within the legal community. The influence of Roman law, particularly the concept of injuria, on the development of punitive damages and defamation law in English Common Law is significant. This ancient principle, which focused on personal injury and insult, shaped the legal remedies for non-economic harms and influenced the distinction between crime and tort in English law. The transition from a system of monetary compensations in Anglo-Saxon law to a more formalized legal system distinguishing between public wrongs (crimes) and private wrongs (torts) by the late 13th century reflects the evolution of legal thought and the influence of Roman law. Furthermore, the historical use of

Accordingly, the issue of punitive damages in cases sounding in tort was decided by a jury in suits at common law at the time the Seventh Amendment was adopted. See City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., (Supra).

H. The Federal Tort Claims Act and Westfall Act Amendment.

A Bivens claim falls within the exceptions of the Westfall Act for claims "brought for a violation of the Constitution of the United States" or "a statute of the United States under which such action against an individual is otherwise authorized," as provided under 28 U.S.C. § 2679(b)(2). The Supreme Court held in Osborn v. Haley, 549 U.S. 225 (2007), and United States v. Smith, 499 U.S. 160 (1991), that the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) is not the exclusive remedy for torts committed by Government employees when an injured plaintiff brings a Bivens action or an action multiple damages as a legislative tool in 13th-century English statutes under King Edward I's reign, aimed at penalizing and deterring wrongful acts, laid the groundwork for the development of exemplary damages in legal systems. This approach, emphasizing punishment and deterrence alongside compensation, has roots in ancient legal systems and Roman law, demonstrating a sophisticated early legal framework for penalizing wrongdoers beyond the direct harm caused. The concept of punitive damages in Anglo-American law has evolved from ancient legal principles and historical legal practices, influenced significantly by Roman law's concept of injuria and the development of English statutes in the 13th century. This evolution reflects a complex interplay between compensatory justice, punishment, and deterrence, shaping the modern legal framework for addressing both economic and non-economic harms.

under a federal statute that authorizes recovery against a government employee.

It is firmly established that constitutional tort claims may not be prosecuted under the FTCA, as seen in cases like Meyer, 510 U.S. 471 (1994), Villanueva v. United States, 662 F.3d 124 (1st Cir. 2011), and Aversa v. United States, 99 F.3d 1200 (1st Cir. 1996). Despite limitations imposed by the Westfall Act in 1988, which foreclosed common-law claims for damages against federal officers in their official capacities, it left open claims for constitutional violations and certain statutory violations, expressly acknowledging that a statute could authorize an action for damages against federal employees in their individual capacities.

I. Bivens Applicability

The Bivens doctrine permits individuals to sue federal officers in their personal capacity for constitutional violations, even in the absence of a statutorily created cause of action. As established in Bivens the right was recognized to bring forth a constitutional tort suit alleging violations such as unreasonable search and seizure. However, the judiciary should exercise caution in creating implied remedies and must consider various policy factors. In Egbert v. Boule, (Supra) (quoting Correctional Services Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 75, 122 S.Ct. 515, 151 L.Ed.2d 456 (2001)), the Supreme Court emphasized that crafting a cause of action is primarily a legislative task, and courts engaging in such activities must take into account a wide range of policy considerations comparable to those evaluated by a legislature.

Before recognizing new Bivens remedies, courts must undertake a two-step analysis to determine if the claim arises in a new context incomparable to previous cases, and if there are factors suggesting that Congress is better positioned to assess the ramifications of allowing a damages action. The Court noted that even a single hesitation could preclude the recognition of a Bivens remedy in a new context. Furthermore, a Bivens remedy may not be established if alternative remedial avenues already exist or if Congress has authorized the Executive to provide alternative redress. The pertinent query is whether the Judiciary or political branches are better equipped to determine if existing remedies warrant supplementation through a new judicial remedy. Such principles necessitate further examination to evaluate the constitutional and statutory grounds for granting the petition at hand.

J. Federal Actors Jurisprudence

In situations where a private individual conducts a search as "an instrument or agent of the Government," the constitutional limits imposed by the Fourth Amendment are applicable. This principle was established by the Supreme Court in Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Ass'n, 489 U.S. 602, 614 (1989), where it was held that government action through a private individual triggers Fourth Amendment scrutiny. Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit in United States v. Walther, 652 F.2d 788, 792 (9th Cir. 1981), emphasized that key considerations in determining whether a private person is acting as an instrument or agent of the Government include the government's knowledge and acquiescence as well as the intent of the party conducting the search. United States v. Miller, 688 F.2d 652, 657 (9th Cir. 1982), provides guidance on the analysis required to establish whether a private individual is acting on behalf of the Government. This analysis includes scrutinizing whether the Government was aware of and approved the searching conduct, as well as whether the party conducting the search intended to further law enforcement efforts or their personal agenda. Moreover, the First Circuit in United States v. Pervaz, 118 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1997) highlighted the complexity of determining government involvement in a private search and articulated that various factors may be relevant, such as the extent of the government's role in initiating or participating in the search, its intent, the level of control exerted over the search and the private party, as well as the private party's primary aim to assist the government or advance its own interests.

K. The Reach of Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

As per the Supreme Court's holding in United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 354 (1974), Rule 41(g) serves as a judicially created remedy intended to uphold Fourth Amendment rights generally and acts as a deterrence against unlawful searches and seizures, rather than establishing a personal constitutional right for the aggrieved party.

L. Prosecutors Are Not New Defendants nor Immune When Acting Beyond Traditional Roles.

In Kalina v. Fletcher, 522 U.S. 118, 129-30, 139 L. Ed. 2d 471, 118 S. Ct. 502 (1997), the Supreme Court established that prosecutors were liable under the Fourth Amendment for filing an affidavit containing false statements to establish probable cause. When prosecutors involve themselves in functions that have typically been performed by police officers or investigative agents, they are as much (or as little) subject to suit as such officers. For instance, investigations, searches, arrests, and giving advice as to the existence of probable cause for warrantless arrests have been held to be functions to which absolute immunity does not extend. See Northrop v. United States, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85540 (quoting Kalina v. Fletcher, (Supra) (holding prosecutor not entitled to absolute immunity for a sworn affidavit to establish probable cause for an arrest)).

In Lanuza v. Love, 899 F.3d 1019 (9th Cir. 2018), it was held that prosecutors who violate Franks rights could be held liable under Bivens, acknowledging that Bivens actions can be brought against such individuals. Furthermore, in Roberts v. Kling, 1997 U.S. LEXIS 7505, the Supreme Court granted a petition for a writ of certiorari and remanded the case back to the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in light of Kalina v. Fletcher, (Supra). This precedent underscores the principle that when prosecutors step outside their traditional roles and engage in investigative conduct akin to law enforcement officers, they are not shielded by absolute immunity and may be liable under Bivens.

Given the established jurisprudence and legal precedent, the petition offers compelling reasons that justify the granting of certiorari. It is essential to rigorously scrutinize and ensure the protection of constitutional rights against violations by federal actors and to provide appropriate avenues for redress pursuant to both statutory and constitutional grounds.

II. THE COURTS OF APPEALS ARE DIVIDED ON THE “NEW CONTEXT AND DEFENDANTS” INQUIRY.

The plaintiff's Bivens action did not set a new precedent in the context of the Franks violation cases. Claims filed against FBI agents and Dish/NagraStar federal actors should be considered valid within the Bivens framework.

Plaintiffs submit that the First Circuit ruling is incorrect. The recognition and consideration of Franks violations claims under the Bivens framework are supported by established legal principles and precedents. The Bivens framework, as articulated in cases like Hernández v. Mesa, 140 S. Ct. 735 (2020) and Ziglar v. Abbasi, supra, entails a thorough analysis of the specific facts and legal issues surrounding the implication of a cause of action. Circuit precedent acknowledges causes of action for damages under §1983 for falsification of material facts in obtaining a search warrant, as evident in cases such as Aponte-Matos v. Toledo Davila, supra, and United States v. Valerio, 48 F.3d 58 (1st Cir. 1995), aligning with the application of Bivens principles.

The argument against permitting extensions of a Bivens claim in the context of Franks claims is unfounded. Franks claims do not necessitate an inquiry into a complex causal chain, as all crucial information is typically contained within the affidavit submitted to the magistrate judge. This aligns with established legal principles for a Bivens cause of action, as exemplified by Hernandez-Cuevas v. Taylor, 723 F.3d 91 (1st Cir. 2013), which recognizes a cause of action when a defendant causes a seizure of the plaintiff pursuant to legal process lacking probable cause. The overarching concern of disruptive intrusion into the functioning of other branches under the separation of powers doctrine does not apply to Franks claims, as these claims do not pose a significant threat to Executive Branch policy, or statutory schemes enacted by Congress under Bivens.

Therefore, it is imperative for the Court to recognize and consider Franks claims under the Bivens framework due to their alignment with established legal principles and the absence of special factors counseling against their extension. The existing legal guidance on Franks claims underscores the importance of truthfulness in obtaining warrants and establishes a clear framework for addressing allegations of falsification or omission of material facts by law enforcement officials. Unlike cases involving high-level executive policies, Franks claims focus on individual actions of FBI Agents and Federal Actors, making them well-suited for analysis under the Bivens framework designed for individual wrongdoing. The absence of substantial rank differences between defendants in Franks claims and Bivens cases further supports their alignment within the same legal scope, given the shared emphasis on Fourth Amendment rights in both sets of claims.

In summary, the legal basis and precedent support the recognition of Franks claims under the Bivens framework, underscoring the need for their consideration within the existing legal framework without imposing undue burdens on government officials. The Court should uphold the alignment of Franks claims with established legal principles and precedents, ensuring that these claims are appropriately addressed and adjudicated in accordance with the law.

III. THE DEFENDANTS WERE THE SAME AS IN BIVENS AND THE LAW ALLOWS FOR NEW CATEGORIES OF DEFENDANTS, INCLUDING FEDERAL ACTORS AND PROSECUTORS.

The First Circuit erred in affirming the District Court's dismissal of the Bivens Actions against all defendants, including prosecutors and private employees of corporations, as new categories of defendants were involved. In Lanuza v. Love, supra, the Ninth Circuit held that prosecutors who violate Franks' rights could be held liable under Bivens, acknowledging that Bivens actions can be brought against such individuals. Treating AUSA Cannon and the Dish/NagraStar defendants as a "new category of defendants" is contrary to established precedent. Prosecutors can be held personally liable for their actions under Bivens when they engage in misconduct such as fabricating evidence or making false statements to obtain search warrants. Legal precedent, including cases like Kalina v. Fletcher, supra, and Nuñez González v. Vázquez Garced, 389 F.Supp.2d 214 (D.P.R. 2005), supports the liability of prosecutors in such circumstances. In cases involving federal line-level investigators like FBI Special Agents, it has been consistently held that they can be subject to Bivens actions due to their status as federal employees with the potential for violating constitutional rights.

Furthermore, precedent from Estades-Negróni v. CPC Hosp. San Juan Capestrano, 412 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2005), outlines three tests to determine if a private party can be characterized as a state actor: the state compulsion test, the nexus/joint action test, and the public function test. The nexus test emphasizes a close connection between the private party's actions and those of the government, as highlighted in Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345 (1974). The Plaintiffs assert that the Dish/NagraStar defendants meet all three tests for state actor characterization due to their joint criminal investigations with the FBI, obtaining search warrants based on false evidence, and conducting illicit searches and seizures. Legal guidance from cases like Max v. Republican Comm. of Lancaster County, 587 F.3d 198 (3d Cir. 2009), and Rodrigues v. Furtado, 950 F.2d 805 (1st Cir. 1991), supports the assertion that private parties can be deemed state actors through joint conspiracies and exercising government-like powers.

The assertion that a Bivens claim cannot be brought against private individuals is not universally applicable, as indicated by cases like Abbott v. Latshaw, 164 F.3d 141 (3d Cir. 1998). When private employees of corporations' act as federal actors, they can be individually liable under Bivens, essentially holding accountable individuals who, though not traditionally governmental actors, perform functions akin to such roles, potentially infringing constitutional rights. Consequently, reconsideration of the dismissal of the lawsuit against these defendants is necessary, particularly concerning their potential liability under Bivens.

IV. RULE 41 OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE IS NOT A SPECIAL FACTOR THAT COUNSELS HESITATION.

The Court of Appeals mistakenly determined that Rule 41(g) could serve as an alternative remedy for plaintiffs, cautioning against expanding the Bivens doctrine. Rule 41(g) permits individuals aggrieved by property deprivation to seek the return of property but does not allow for monetary damages. This interpretation aligns with decisions by various circuit courts, including Adeleke v. United States, 355 F.3d 144 (2d Cir. 2004), and United States v. Bein, 214 F.3d 408 (3d Cir. 2000).

The limitations of Rule 41(g) in providing comprehensive relief restrict victims from pursuing constitutional remedies for compensatory and punitive damages, impinging on their Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial.

Therefore, the proposed remedies under Rule 41(g) and the FTCA are inadequate for providing the plaintiffs with adequate relief for the constitutional violations they experienced.

V. CORPORATIONS HAVE THE RIGHT TO BRING CIVIL ACTIONS IN FEDERAL COURTS EITHER STATUTORY, CONSTITUTIONAL, OR UNDER BIVENS.

The Court of Appeals erred in its determination that plaintiffs Corporations cannot bring a Bivens cause of action based on the Fourth Circuit's decision in Annappareddy v. Pascale, 996 F.3d 120 (4th Cir. 2021). The court incorrectly relied on the distinction between corporate entities and individuals to limit corporations' rights to seek redress for constitutional violations. It is well-established that corporations, as legal persons, have the right to bring civil suits under the Seventh Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and the Federal Question Statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1331. The courts have consistently recognized that corporations can bring civil actions under various federal statutes, including 42

U.S.C. § 1983, as affirmed in Levy v. Pappas, 510 F.3d 755, 762 (7th Cir. 2007). Therefore, the Panel's decision improperly restricts corporations' ability to bring civil actions in federal court.

Furthermore, the availability of Bivens actions against federal actors and agents extends to situations involving corporations, as demonstrated in Gerena v. Puerto Rico Legal Servs., Inc., 697 F.2d 447 (1st Cir. 1983) and other circuit court decisions. Despite attempts by some courts to restrict corporate liability under Bivens, the prevailing view allows corporations to seek redress for constitutional violations.

Moreover, the Panel's ruling contradicts established Supreme Court precedent, particularly Wilson v. Layne, 526 U.S. 603 (1999), which delineates that actions under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and Bivens are analogous, allowing plaintiffs to seek redress for Fourth Amendment violations by government officials. The Court in Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662 (2009) highlighted that Bivens serves as the federal equivalent to actions brought against state officials under § 1983. Ultimately, the Court of Appeals failure to adhere to the doctrine of stare decisis and previous Supreme Court and Circuit decisions, as mandated by United States v. Moore-Bush, 963 F.3d 29 (1st Cir. 2020), constitutes legal error in restricting corporations from bringing civil actions and in denying the validity of a Bivens cause of action in the present case.

In conclusion, the constitutional rights of corporations to bring civil suits in federal court for Fourth Amendment violations are firmly supported by legal precedent and statutory authority.

Therefore, this Court should affirm corporations' right to seek redress for constitutional violations and access the federal courts for the adjudication of such claims under the Seventh Amendment and relevant federal statutes.

VI. WHETHER THE SEVENTH AMENDMENT COMPELS FEDERAL COURTS OPERATING UNDER FEDERAL QUESTION JURISDICTION PURSUANT TO 28 U.S.C. § 1331 TO DECIDE CONSTITUTIONAL TORT CLAIMS BASED ON COMMON LAW, EVEN IF THERE ARE NO STATUTORY OR COURT-CREATED REMEDIES FOR MONETARY DAMAGES UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF CASES AND CONTROVERSIES PLEADING STANDARDS.

Under Article III of the United States Constitution, the federal courts are limited to adjudicating "cases" and "controversies" which are disputes suitable for resolution through the judicial process and must involve disputes traditionally resolved by courts, particularly those related to the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States.

A party must demonstrate standing by showing they have suffered a concrete and particularized injury that is actual or imminent, that the injury is caused by the defendant's actions, and that it is likely to be redressed by a favorable court decision. The injury alleged must be directly traceable to the defendant's conduct with a substantial likelihood that the requested relief will provide redress. See Harris v. United States, 447 F.Supp.2d 208 (D.Conn. 2010); Uzuegbunam v. Preczewski, 141 S.Ct. 792 (2021); Legal Aid Soc. of Alameda County v. Brennan, (Supra); Lucas v. Forty-Fourth General Assembly of State of Colo., (Supra).

Federal courts are vested with jurisdiction over cases arising under federal law, including cases involving civil or constitutional rights claims, pursuant to Title 28 U.S.C. § 1331. In reviewing whether a federal claim exists, courts rely on the well-pleaded complaint rule to determine if the cause of action arises from federal law. Additionally, federal courts may apply federal common law in limited circumstances where necessary to protect uniquely federal interests or where authorized by Congress. The decision to create federal common law is subject to a strict standard, and courts generally apply state common law when possible. Franchise Tax Board v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1 (1983); City of Milwaukee v. Illinois, 451 U.S. 304 (1981); Texas Indus., Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., (Supra); Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, (Supra).

The Seventh Amendment guarantees the right to a jury trial in common law tort actions and analogous statutory claims when the claim resembles a tort action seeking legal relief. Claims brought under statutes like 42 U.S.C. § 1983, aimed at restoring rights provided by federal law, are considered essentially tort actions eligible for a jury trial under the Seventh Amendment. The Supreme Court has extended Seventh Amendment protections to constitutional violation claims such as Bivens actions, which allow parties to assert constitutional tort claims against federal officers in their individual capacities. See City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., (Supra); Wilson v. Layne, 526 U.S. 603 (1999).

Punitive damages in tort cases are traditionally determined by a jury, as they provide compensation to plaintiffs for losses resulting from a defendant's wrongful actions. The Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial in suits at common law applies to issues of punitive damages in tort cases. The Supreme Court has reaffirmed the historical precedent granting juries discretionary authority in awarding punitive damages, recognizing actions for money damages as classic legal relief. Consequently, a jury trial is warranted in cases involving punitive damages in tort. Brands Mktg. Grp. LLC v. Intertek Testing Servs., N.A., Inc., 801 F.3d 347 (3d Cir. 2015); City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., (Supra); Day v. Woodworth, 54 U.S. (13 How.) 363 (1851)).

A Bivens claim is an exception under the Westfall Act for claims related to constitutional violations under federal law, as indicated in 28 U.S.C. § 2679(b)(2). When a plaintiff brings a Bivens action or another action under a federal statute authorizing recovery against a government employee, the Federal FTCA is not the exclusive remedy. Courts have consistently held that constitutional tort claims cannot be prosecuted under the FTCA, further emphasizing the availability of a Bivens action for suits alleging violations of constitutional rights by government employees. Osborn v. Haley, 549 U.S. 225 (2007); Rowe v. Marrache, 521 U.S. 1050 (1997).

VII. THE ISSUES ARE RECURRING AND IMPORTANT.

The recurring and important issue before the Court concerns the scope and application of Bivens claims, particularly in cases involving illegal search warrants and warrantless executions. The inconsistent application of the new-context inquiry across different circuits highlights the need for clarification on the proper application of Bivens claims. The question of whether a new Bivens context exists does not hinge on whether Congress is better equipped to assess the costs and benefits of allowing damages actions against federal agents in specific circumstances, as it is within the Court's purview to uphold the Constitution and interpret the law. The lack of consistency in determining the existence of a new context under Bivens due to Congress's failure to enact constitutional causes of action under the Bivens framework underscores the importance of clarifying the application of Bivens claims and ensuring access to justice for violations of secured rights.

The confusion and conflicts in the lower courts regarding the application of Bivens claims demonstrate the need for the Supreme Court to intervene and provide guidance on the new-context inquiry. Given the significant legal issues at stake, the conflicting interpretations of the new-context inquiry, and the potential policy implications on law enforcement practices, the Court's review is necessary to provide clarity on the application of Bivens claims and the analysis of new contexts.

Therefore, the petition for review should be granted to address these important legal issues and uphold the principles of justice and constitutional rights as entrusted to the Court.

The Court's review is essential in resolving the acknowledged circuit conflicts and ensuring consistent application of Bivens claims in cases involving illegal search warrants and warrantless executions. The importance of clarifying the proper application of Bivens claims and securing access to justice for violations of constitutional rights underscores the need for the Supreme Court to grant the petition for review and provide guidance on the interpretation and application of Bivens claims in various contexts.

CONCLUSION

and addresses all three counts. Second, as we conclude that Appellants' Bivens claims cannot move forward, we do not address Appellants' arguments as to absolute and qualified immunity. Third, we understand Appellants' final argument to be that, even if their claims cannot proceed under Bivens, the statute allowing for federal question jurisdiction, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, gives them a presumptive right of action in federal court to bring their claims. We are not persuaded. That statute gives courts the power to hear cases; it does not give plaintiffs the power to maintain any cause of action they want. If Congress intended 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to grant plaintiffs a cause of action against federal actors for constitutional violations, it knew how to do so because it enacted such a statute against state actors. See generally 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Opinion

THOMPSON, Circuit Judge.

After being subjected to alleged unconstitutional searches and seizures, Appellants filed suit seeking money damages pursuant to Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619 (1971).<sup>1</sup> Disagreeing with Appellants' take on the matter, Appellees filed motions to dismiss, which the district court granted. Appellants, unhappy with the district court's decision, brought the case to us. Having carefully considered all arguments, we affirm, albeit on narrower reasoning than the district court.

I.

To begin, we turn to the factual<sup>2</sup> and procedural background (appropriately abbreviated) for context.

Appellants here include (among others) Naicom Corporation (“Naicom”), a network and internet communication platform, and its co-founders, Darwin Quinones-Pimentel (“Quinones”) and Victor Vega-Encarnacion (“Vega”). Appellees, on the other hand, include an Assistant United States Attorney (“AUSA”) for the District of Puerto Rico (and several other unidentified AUSAs), Special Agents and employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (“FBI”), and private parties employed by companies Dish Network and NagraStar (alleged Naicom competitors).<sup>3</sup>

Believing that Naicom was a threat to their business, the Dish and NagraStar Appellees investigated Naicom for piracy. Despite not finding any evidence to support their investigation, the Dish and NagraStar Appellees complained to the FBI Appellees, alleging that Naicom was running a pirate operation. According to Appellants, the Dish and NagraStar Appellees did so to secure their own participation in the execution of search warrants of Naicom's offices and Data Center and, while performing said searches, get access to Naicom's confidential intellectual property and trade secrets.

Starting in September 2017, the Dish and NagraStar Appellees worked with the FBI Appellees during the FBI's criminal investigation of Naicom. This investigation culminated in the AUSA and FBI Appellees securing two search warrants: one for Naicom Corporation, located at 701 Ponce de Leon, Suite 208, and one for Naicom's Data Center, located at 4SS N2 Via Josefina. Appellants say that these warrants were procured based upon knowingly false and perjured statements.

On August 27, 2019, the FBI, Dish, and NagraStar Appellees searched Suite 208 and seized documents, two hard drives, two USB drives, one cell phone, and one tablet, all containing business trade secrets and intellectual property information. During that search, the same Appellees searched Suite 207, which was the headquarters of Vega's other business, Artist Designs & Management Corporation (also an Appellant here), despite being informed by a Naicom staff member that Suite 207 belonged to an independent business and was not included in the search warrant. In Appellants' view, this search was beyond the scope of the warrant and, therefore, warrantless.

That same day, several of the FBI, Dish, and NagraStar Appellees also searched Naicom's Data Center. Present at the time of the search was Quinones, who witnessed the FBI Appellees allow the Dish and NagraStar Appellees to access and search Naicom's computers, servers, and hardware and to take photographs. For his part, Quinones asked for a chance to demonstrate that Naicom was a legitimate business. Finding no evidence of criminal activity, the AUSA and FBI Appellees instructed Quinones and Vega to report to the San Juan FBI offices for an interview. There, Quinones and Vega answered the FBI, Dish, and NagraStar Appellees' questions and eventually asked to end the interview due to the Dish and NagraStar Appellees' questioning regarding Naicom's technology.

Two days later on August 29, 2019, the FBI, Dish, and NagraStar Appellees took a second bite at the apple and searched (purportedly under the original warrant) Naicom's Data Center once more. As during the first search of Naicom's Data Center, Quinones again observed the Dish and NagraStar Appellees accessing Naicom's computers, servers, and hardware. In Appellants' view, this search was also beyond the scope of the search warrant, because any probable cause had dissipated after not finding any evidence of criminal activity during their search two days prior, and for that reason, the search was warrantless.

Wanting their property returned, Appellants filed a motion to that effect under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(g), arguing that the searches and seizures violated their Fourth Amendment rights. Without conceding any constitutional violation, the United States government filed a non-opposition response, and the seized property was returned.

Appellants now claim three Bivens causes of action for money damages related to the searches and seizures. In Count One, they say that Appellees conspired with each other to use false evidence and statements in support of the affidavit used to acquire the search warrants -- all in violation of Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 98 S.Ct. 2674, 57 L.Ed.2d 667 (1978).<sup>4</sup> Count Two says that Appellees' search of Suite 207, the site of Vega's Artist Designs & Management Corporation, exceeded the scope of the Naicom Corporation search warrant because Suite 207 belonged to a separate business and was not included in the search warrant, whereas Count Three says that Appellees' second search of Naicom's Data Center exceeded the scope of the Data Center search warrant because it had been searched two days prior.

The district court dismissed Appellants' complaint, concluding that their claims arose within a new context of Bivens, and special factors at issue counseled against extending relief to Appellants' claims (more on this later). This timely appeal followed.

II.

Appellants' appeal hinges upon whether the district court correctly applied Bivens and its progeny to the claims at issue here, which we review de novo. González v. Vélez, 864 F.3d 45, 50 (1st Cir. 2017). Before getting to our assessment, we take a deep dive into the Bivens landscape.

A.

Our Constitution does not expressly provide for money damages for constitutional wrongs. In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd., 41 F.4th 29, 44–45 (1st Cir. 2022). A federal statute enacted by Congress in 1871, nevertheless, does provide for money damages against state actors who violate the Constitution. See 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Congress, however, has never enacted a similar statute against federal actors. Ziglar v. Abbasi, 582 U.S. 120, 130, 137 S.Ct. 1843, 198 L.Ed.2d 290 (2017).

Bivens then entered the scene in 1971. There, “federal agents ... allegedly manacled the plaintiff and threatened his family while arresting him for narcotics violations.” Egbert v. Boule, 596 U.S. 482, 142 S. Ct. 1793, 1802, 213 L.Ed.2d 54 (2022) (citing Bivens, 403 U.S. at 397, 91 S.Ct. 1999). The Supreme Court “held that a Fourth Amendment violation by federal agents, acting under color of governmental authority, gave rise to [an implied] cause of action for money damages against those agents in their individual capacities.” González, 864 F.3d at 52 (citing Bivens, 403 U.S. at 389, 91 S.Ct. 1999).

In this same vein, the Supreme Court expanded Bivens to two more contexts. First up was Davis v.

Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 229–31, 248–49, 99 S.Ct. 2264, 60 L.Ed.2d 846 (1979), where the Supreme Court allowed a damages action pursuant to the Fifth Amendment's Equal Protection Clause against a Congressperson for sex discrimination towards a member of their staff. Second was Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 16, 20–23, 100 S.Ct. 1468, 64 L.Ed.2d 15 (1980), where the Supreme Court extended Bivens to include an Eighth Amendment violation in which federal prison officials failed to provide adequate medical treatment for a prisoner's asthma, resulting in his death.

Since these cases were decided, however, the Supreme Court has charted a significantly different path, consistently refusing “to extend the Bivens doctrine to new settings.” González, 864 F.3d at 52; see Hernández v. Mesa, — U.S. —, 140 S. Ct. 735, 743, 206 L.Ed.2d 29 (2020) (gathering Supreme Court cases declining to extend Bivens). This hesitance stems from the Supreme Court's recognition that “it is a significant step under separation-of-powers principles for a court to determine that it [as opposed to Congress] has the authority, under the judicial power, to create and enforce a cause of action for damages against federal officials in order to remedy a constitutional violation.” Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 133, 137 S.Ct. 1843. Indeed, in a recent trio of cases, the Supreme Court observed “that expanding the Bivens remedy is now a ‘disfavored’ judicial activity,” id. at 135, 137 S.Ct. 1843 (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 675, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009)); that “Bivens, Davis, and Carlson were the products of an era when the Court routinely inferred ‘causes of action’ that were ‘not explicit’ in the text of the provision that was allegedly violated,” Hernández, 140 S. Ct. at 741 (quoting Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 132, 137 S.Ct. 1843); and that “[i]f there is a rational reason to think that [Congress rather than the courts is who should decide whether to provide a damages remedy] -- as it will be in most every case, ... no Bivens action may lie,” Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1803 (internal citation omitted).

All that said, the Supreme Court has never overruled Bivens and, most recently, clarified how courts should assess such claims. See Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1803; see also Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 134, 137 S.Ct. 1843 (“[I]t must be understood that this opinion is not intended to cast doubt on the continued force, or even the necessity, of Bivens in the search-and-seizure context in which it arose.”). To start, we must ask whether the case presents a new Bivens context, which boils down to whether the case is meaningfully different from Bivens, Davis, and Carlson. Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1803. What makes a difference “meaningful” is a bit unclear, but the Supreme Court has given us a few guideposts:

A case might differ in a meaningful way because of the rank of the officers involved; the constitutional right at issue; the generality or specificity of the official action; the extent of judicial guidance as to how an officer should respond to the problem or emergency to be confronted; the statutory or other legal mandate under which the officer was operating; the risk of disruptive intrusion by the Judiciary into the functioning of other branches; or the presence of potential special factors that previous Bivens cases did not consider.

Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 139–40, 137 S.Ct. 1843. A meaningful difference can also include a new category of defendants. Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1803. While the Supreme Court has instructed that “the new-context inquiry is easily satisfied,” it has also cautioned that “[s]ome differences, of course, will be so trivial that they will not suffice to create a new Bivens context.” Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 149, 137 S.Ct. 1843; see also Snowden v. Henning, 72 F.4th 237, 243-44 (7th Cir. 2023) (“That a difference must be ‘meaningful’ suggests that some degree of variation will not preclude a Bivens remedy.” (emphasis theirs)). If the case presents no meaningful differences (and thus no new context), the analysis ends there and relief under Bivens is available. See Hicks v. Ferreyra, 64 F.4th 156, 166 (4th Cir. 2023).

If, however, the court decides that the case does present a new Bivens context, its next and final question is whether there are any “special factors” counseling against extending Bivens. Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1803. “Special factors” are also not clearly defined, but we know that they include, at least, “alternative remedial structures,” such that if Congress has already given a would-be Bivens plaintiff a way to redress the constitutional violation, the Bivens suit cannot proceed. Id. at 1804. At bottom, this question looks to whether “the Judiciary is at least arguably less equipped than Congress to ‘weigh the costs and benefits of allowing a damages action to proceed.’ ” Id. at 1803 (quoting Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 136, 137 S.Ct. 1843). The absence of any special factors means Bivens relief is available, while the presence of special factors means such relief is unavailable. See Hernández, 140 S. Ct. at 743.

The entire analysis ultimately collapses -- the Supreme Court tells us -- into a single, fundamental inquiry: “whether there is any reason to think that Congress might be better equipped to create a damages remedy.” Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1803. Synthesizing all this together, the modern Bivens analysis involves a factual comparison to the facts of Bivens itself (or Davis, or Carlson, depending on the case), with an emphasis on avoiding any extension of Bivens to meaningfully new factual circumstances. With this backdrop laid out, we turn to our assessment of Appellants' claims.

B.

Starting with the new-context step, there is no dispute that the most similar Supreme Court case between Bivens, Davis, and Carlson to the case here is Bivens itself. Remember, Bivens “authorized a damages action against federal officials for alleged violations of the Fourth Amendment.” Id. at 1799. So too here are Appellants attempting to vindicate their Fourth Amendment rights. We know, however, that this similarity, by itself, is insufficient to qualify this case as presenting the same context as in Bivens. Hernández, 140 S. Ct. at 743 (“A claim may arise in a new context even if it is based on the same constitutional provision as a claim in a case in which a damages remedy was previously recognized.”). What's worse (at least for Appellants) is that the similarities between Bivens and this case also end there.

As we mentioned, the relevant analysis involves a factual comparison, and the facts of Bivens cannot be viewed generally. See, e.g., Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1805; Mays v. Smith, 70 F.4th 198, 204 (4th Cir. 2023) (“But citation to the constitutional provision alone is insufficiently granular for the new-context inquiry.” (citing, e.g., Hernández, 140 S. Ct. at 743)); Tun-Cos v. Perrotte, 922 F.3d 514, 524 (4th Cir. 2019) (“Arguing at so general a level ... only ignores the language of Abbasi.”). To recap, the facts there involved a Fourth Amendment claim against federal line-level investigative officers who allegedly entered and searched the plaintiff's apartment, arrested him for alleged drug violations, manacled him in front of his family, threatened to arrest his family, and later interrogated, booked, and visually strip searched him -- all without probable cause or a warrant and with excessive force. Bivens, 403 U.S. at 389, 91 S.Ct. 1999. The facts of this case, on the contrary, involve Fourth Amendment claims against prosecutors, federal line-level investigative officers, and private, corporate employees acting under color of federal law, who are alleged to have jointly fabricated evidence in support of warrants to search a business investigated for copyright and money laundering violations, seized physical evidence (which was returned), and twice exceeded the scope of those warrants. As these descriptions demonstrate, the differences are plenty.

The district court noted several differences that it considered meaningful, including that 1) the challenged conduct differed from the challenged conduct in Bivens; 2) a warrant was issued and ran against a business, as opposed to an individual; 3) the harm to Appellants was not a result of Appellees' direct actions, but rather a result of intervening decisions by various actors; 4) Appellants' claims required different proof than what was required in Bivens; and 5) the claims were brought against a new category of defendants, prosecutors. We need not comment upon whether any of these differences individually would suffice to make this a new context because together, the differences in the challenged conduct -- including the issuance of a warrant, which ran against a business -- and in the defendants -- including the prosecutors and private, corporate employees -- suffice (when viewed collectively) to show that this case differs meaningfully from Bivens and therefore presents a new context.

To explain, take first the law enforcement actions at issue here, which differ entirely from those at issue in Bivens. See, e.g., Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 140, 137 S.Ct. 1843 (listing “the generality or specificity of the official action” as a meaningful difference); Xiaoxing Xi v. Haugen, 68 F.4th 824, 834 (3d Cir. 2023) (differentiating from Bivens an appellant's Fourth Amendment claims because they “concern a different breed of law enforcement misconduct”); Annappareddy v. Pascale, 996 F.3d 120, 136 (4th Cir. 2021) (differentiating from Bivens an appellant's Fourth Amendment claims because the “alleged misdeeds here are different from those in Bivens” (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)); Ahmed v. Weyker, 984 F.3d 564, 568 (8th Cir. 2020) (differentiating from Bivens an appellant's Fourth Amendment claims because “the sorts of actions being challenged here are different” (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)). Comparing these two sets of facts, the federal officers in Bivens handcuffed and arrested the appellant and, without a warrant, searched his apartment and his person through a visual strip search. Bivens, 403 U.S. at 389, 91 S.Ct. 1999. Here, on the other hand, no one was handcuffed or arrested and no one's home nor their person (naked or otherwise) was searched without a warrant.<sup>5</sup> What's more, here there was a warrant, which was issued against a business, not against an individual or the individual's home.<sup>6</sup> In sum, each of the Appellants' claims targets “a different part of police work than the apprehension, detention, and physical searches at issue in Bivens.” Farah v. Weyker, 926 F.3d 492, 499 (8th Cir. 2019).

Take second the defendants in this case, who are not just federal line-level investigative officers (as was the case in Bivens) but also include federal prosecutors and private, corporate employees allegedly working with the government. Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1803 (identifying as an “example[ ] of [a] new context[ ] ... a case that involves a new category of defendants” (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)). Neither Bivens, Davis, nor Carlson involved claims against prosecutors, and several courts, including one of our sister circuits, have determined that prosecutors are a new category of defendants. See, e.g., Annappareddy, 996 F.3d at 134; Jones v. District of Columbia, No. 21-cv-03117, 2022 WL 2904171, at *5 (D.D.C. July 22, 2022); Greenlaw v. Klimek, No. 4:20-CV-311, 2021 WL 6112784, at *6 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 27, 2021); Martin v. Gray, No. 20-CV-741, 2021 WL 3855566, at *4 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 27, 2021); Hornoff v. Waller, No. 2:19-cv-00198, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 198578, at *56 (D. Me. Oct. 20, 2020). This conclusion makes good sense, as the Supreme Court’s “watchword” in Bivens’ cases “is caution[,]” due to the separation-of-powers issues at play. Hernández, 140 S. Ct. at 742. The inclusion of prosecutors “risk[s] ... intrusion on executive-branch authority to enforce the law and prosecute crimes.” Farah, 926 F.3d at 501.<sup>7</sup>

Similarly, neither Bivens, Davis, nor Carlson involved claims against private, corporate employees. Appellants suggest that this court has previously greenlit Bivens claims against private parties, and the district court expressed confusion over this court’s caselaw on the topic. Compare Stoutt v. Banco Popular de P.R., 320 F.3d 26, 33 (1st Cir. 2003) (“The Supreme Court has already limited Bivens actions by refusing to extend them to private entities acting under color of federal law.” (citing Corr. Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 122 S.Ct. 515, 151 L.Ed.2d 456 (2001)); Fletcher v. R.I. Hosp. Trust Nat'l Bank, 496 F.2d 927, 932 n.8 (1st Cir. 1974) (“[T]here is no cause of action against private parties acting under color of federal law or custom.”), with Gerena v. P.R. Legal Servs., Inc., 697 F.2d 447, 448–52 (1st Cir. 1983) (assuming that a private corporation can be a governmental actor and, therefore, liable for damages under Bivens). Whatever confusion there was, the Supreme Court dispelled it, see Minneeci v. Pollard, 565 U.S. 118, 126, 132 S.Ct. 617, 181 L.Ed.2d 606 (2012) (“Carlson, however, was a case in which a federal prisoner sought damages from personnel employed by the government, not personnel employed by a private firm. ... And for present purposes that fact -- of employment status -- makes a critical difference.” (emphasis theirs) (internal citation omitted)), meaning that the inclusion here of private, corporate employees as defendants contributes to this context being new.

It is of no moment that -- as Appellants point out -- this case also involved the specific acts of line-level agents in the course of enforcing ordinary criminal laws and that there is some judicial guidance on the alleged Fourth Amendment violations at play here.<sup>8</sup> See Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 140, 137 S.Ct. 1843 (explaining that meaningful differences include “the rank of the officers involved; the constitutional right at issue; ... the extent of judicial guidance as to how an officer should respond to the problem or emergency to be confronted; [and] the statutory or other legal mandate under which the officer was operating”). That is so because “even a modest extension is still an extension,” id. at 147, 137 S.Ct. 1843, and the differences in the challenged conduct, combined with the inclusion of multiple new categories of defendants, are sufficient to render this context new.

C.

As we find that Appellants' claims arise in a new Bivens context, we proceed to step two, where we consider whether “special factors counsel[ ] hesitation” in extending Bivens. Id. at 136, 137 S.Ct. 1843 (quoting Carlson, 446 U.S. at 18, 100 S.Ct. 1468) (internal quotation marks omitted). “[E]ven a single reason to pause before applying Bivens in a new context” is sufficient to preclude relief, because “in all but the most unusual circumstances, prescribing a cause of action is a job for Congress, not the courts.” Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1800, 1803 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Here, the existence of an alternative remedy - - namely, Rule 41(g) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure -- gives us sufficient reason to take a beat.

Appellants' claims involve allegations of unlawful searches of their businesses and seizure of relevant property. And Rule 41(g) allows “[a] person aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure of property or by the deprivation of property [to] move for the property's return,” thereby addressing the principal sort of injuries of which Appellants complain. Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(g). Indeed, Appellants pursued and were awarded this relief before initiating the instant lawsuit.

Rule 41(g) provides cold comfort -- Appellants (understandably) tell us -- because it does not provide for damages.<sup>9</sup> In their view, any alternative remedy need not be “perfectly congruent” with Bivens, but it must be, at minimum, “adequate” and “roughly similar.” This argument falls flat because it has been squarely rejected by our judicial superiors. The Supreme Court has recently made plain that “existing remedies [need] not provide complete relief,” Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1804 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted); see also González, 864 F.3d at 54–55 (“The fact that other or different relief might be available ... if constitutional tort suits were permitted” is not a “basis for extending” Bivens claims.), and that remedies such as injunctions and writs of habeas corpus, which likewise do not provide for damages, are sufficient to foreclose Bivens relief and qualify as alternative remedies, Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 144–45, 137 S.Ct. 1843.

Notably, when assessing an alternative remedy, the Supreme Court has clarified that “the court must ask only whether it, rather than the political branches, is better equipped to decide whether existing remedies should be augmented by the creation of a new judicial remedy.” Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1804 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). There is reason here to think Congress is so equipped. The Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, including Rule 41(g), are “prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to the authority conferred upon the [C]ourt by Congress” through the Rules Enabling Act, Miranda v. United States, 255 F.2d 9, 15 (1st Cir. 1958), thus rendering the rules “as binding as any statute duly enacted by Congress,” Bank of N.S. v. United States, 487 U.S. 250, 255, 108 S.Ct. 2369, 101 L.Ed.2d 228 (1988). Congress itself has repeatedly amended Rule 41, see Pub. L. No. 107-56 § 219, 115 Stat. 272, 291 (2001); Pub. L. No. 95-78 § 2(e), 91 Stat. 319, 319-20 (1977), and has never amended it to provide for damages.<sup>10</sup> Such “silence is notable,” because “when Congress fails to provide a damages remedy ... it is much more difficult to believe that congressional inaction was inadvertent.” Abbasi, 582 U.S. at 144, 137 S.Ct. 1843 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

The upshot of all this is that Rule 41(g) functions as an alternative remedy for Appellants and, consequently, a special factor counseling against an extension of Bivens -- a conclusion reached by many other courts. See, e.g., Davis v. Wernick, No. 19-cv-3327, 2021 WL 310999, at *4 (D.D.C. Jan. 29, 2021) (concluding a motion to return property is an alternative remedy, foreclosing Bivens relief); Childress v. Palmer, No. 3:18-cv-00514, 2018 WL 4282601, at *3 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 7, 2018) (same); Omran v. United States, No. 1:14-CV-13881, 2016 WL 4158556, at *11 (D. Mass. June 22, 2016) (same); Baird v. Holton, 806 F. Supp. 2d 53, 57–58 (D.D.C. 2011) (same); Leyland v. Edwards, 797 F. Supp. 2d 7, 10–11 (D.D.C. 2011) (same); cf. Perez-Colon v. Camacho, 206 F. App'x 1, 2 (1st Cir. 2006) (“Because appellant has a cause of action under Rule 41(g), he has no need to base his claim for the return of [money seized] on either the [Federal Tort Claims Act (“FTCA”)] or Bivens.”).<sup>11</sup>

III.

To round out our analysis is our conclusion: Having determined that Appellants' claims arise in a new factual scenario and involve special factors, we affirm the district court's dismissal of Appellants' Bivens claims.<sup>12</sup>

Footnotes

*Of the District of Maine, sitting by designation.

<sup>1</sup>We will explain in greater detail below but, for now, we note that a Bivens claim is an implied cause of action against federal actors for constitutional violations. Hernandez-Cuevas v. Taylor, 723 F.3d 91, 93 n.1 (1st Cir. 2013).

2As this is an appeal from grants of motions to dismiss, we accept as true the complaint's well-pleaded facts and draw all reasonable inferences in Appellants' favor. Fothergill v. United States, 566 F.3d 248, 251 (1st Cir. 2009).

3Up to this point and moving forward, our use of “Appellants” and “Appellees” refers to all Appellants and Appellees, respectively. Where our opinion needs to specify a particular Appellee or Appellees for clarity, we identify them as “AUSA Appellee,” “FBI Appellees,” and “Dish and NagraStar Appellees.”

4Franks held that the use of false statements, made knowingly and intentionally or with reckless disregard to the truth, that are necessary to the finding of probable cause in a search warrant is a violation of the Fourth Amendment. 438 U.S. at 171–72, 98 S.Ct. 2674.

5As we understand it, Appellants argue that Franks violations such as those alleged here are like the law enforcement misconduct in Bivens, because, in Aponte Matos v. Toledo Dávila, 135 F.3d 182 (1st Cir. 1998), this court supposedly authorized Bivens actions for Franks violations. Not so. There, the court analyzed qualified immunity and liability for Franks violations pursuant to § 1983, not Bivens, and stated that “[a]n officer who obtains a warrant through material false statements which result in an unconstitutional search may be held personally liable for his actions under § 1983.” Id. at 187. This distinction matters because Bivens liability is not as expansive as that under § 1983, so the fact that liability under § 1983 exists does not necessarily mean that Bivens liability also exists. See Hernández, 140 S. Ct. at 747 (noting that Bivens is the “more limited federal analog to § 1983” (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)).

All this is not to say that claims involving warrants, allegations of Franks violations, or other alleged misconduct at issue here (such as exceeding the scope of a warrant) necessarily fall outside Bivens' ambit -- issues upon which courts have diverged. See Greenpoint Tactical Income Fund LLC v. Pettigrew, 38 F.4th 555, 563–65 (7th Cir. 2022) (comparing circuit cases that have reached opposing conclusions as to Bivens relief in the “context of alleged false and misleading warrant applications,” and further suggesting that such conduct could support a Bivens claim within the Seventh Circuit). For example, the mere fact of a warrant might not present a new context if the defendant's conduct closely paralleled that from Bivens, Davis, or Carlson. We leave those issues for another day because all the differences identified above, when viewed in the aggregate, are sufficient reason to conclude Appellants' three counts are each an extension of Bivens.

6Appellants appear to suggest that it is irrelevant that the warrant ran against a business, because businesses are entitled to some Fourth Amendment protections. Being entitled to Fourth Amendment protections, however, is not enough to access Bivens relief. See Hernández, 140 S. Ct. at 743 (“A claim may arise in a new context even if it is based on the same constitutional provision as a claim in a case in which a damages remedy was previously recognized.”); see also Annappareddy, 996 F.3d at 137 (“There appear to be no cases — in the Supreme Court or any other court — approving a Bivens claim for acts taken against a corporate entity.”). Appellants also argue that other circuit courts have allowed Bivens claims for acts taken against businesses, relying on three cases. See Schowengerdt v. Gen. Dynamics Corp., 823 F.2d 1328

(9th Cir. 1987); Dobyns v. E-Systems, Inc., 667 F.2d 1219 (5th Cir. 1982); Yiamouyiannis v. Chem. Abstracts Serv., 521 F.2d 1392 (6th Cir. 1975). Those cases hardly stand for such a proposition as the plaintiffs in each of them were individuals, not businesses.

But, just as we mentioned above in relation to warrants, nothing in this opinion should be construed as necessarily foreclosing Bivens actions involving businesses. Here, however, the aforementioned differences, collectively, distinguish this case meaningfully from Bivens.

7Appellants resist this conclusion. They first seem to suggest that the prosecutors here acted more akin to investigators, as opposed to prosecutors. This argument, however, is undermined by their own allegations, which state that the prosecutors reviewed evidence gathered by other individuals and decided to apply for a search warrant. See Greenlaw, 2021 WL 6112784, at *6 (“Defendant Bunch is a prosecutor, not an on-the-scene, investigative officer. His role as a federal officer—which includes reviewing evidence, deciding whether to seek a search warrant, and pursuing criminal charges—meaningfully differs from the narcotics agents in Bivens[.]”). They also point to our decision in Aponte Matos again because we supposedly concluded that a prosecutor can be held liable under Bivens for a Franks violation. That's not correct. None of the claims in Aponte Matos were raised against a prosecutor. 135 F.3d at 186.

8To be sure, the Supreme Court has previously concluded that, even where the officer involved is a line-level agent, other differences can render the factual scenario “new.” See Egbert, 142 S. Ct. at 1804–07.

9Relatedly, Appellants also appear to argue that Appellees cannot now contend that the searches comported with the Fourth Amendment, because the United States did not argue so in the Rule 41(g) proceedings. Accordingly, in Appellants' view, Appellees have waived any such argument. Ultimately, that argument is neither here nor there, because the focus of this appeal is not whether Appellees' actions were constitutional, but whether Appellants have an implied cause of action to bring the claim.

10The 2001 amendment involved the insertion of subsection (b)(3). Pub. L. No. 107-56 § 219, 115 Stat. 272, 291 (2001). When an officer applies for a warrant in an investigation of terrorism, subsection (b)(3) requires a connection between the judge's district and the terrorism activities. Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(b)(3). The 1977 amendment involved changes to the requirements regarding the issuance of warrants based upon an affidavit and those based upon oral testimony. Pub. L. No. 95-78 § 2(e), 91 Stat. 319, 319-20 (1977).

11Because the existence of even one special factor is sufficient to preclude Bivens relief, we do not reach Appellants' arguments as to the other special factors identified by the district court, including separation-of-powers concerns and alternative relief under the FTCA. We also do not reach the Dish and NagraStar Appellees' argument, offered for the first time at oral argument, that Appellants' separate civil suit against them for RICO and other violations is an alternative remedy.

12Before we go, we have a few loose threads to tie up. First, Appellants criticize the district court for, allegedly, failing to analyze Count II and Count III in its decision. We do not believe the district court so erred but, to the extent it did, our analysis is de novo and addresses all three counts. Second, as we conclude that Appellants' Bivens claims cannot move forward, we do not address Appellants' arguments as to absolute and qualified immunity. Third, we understand Appellants' final argument to be that, even if their claims cannot proceed under Bivens, the statute allowing for federal question jurisdiction, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, gives them a presumptive right of action in federal court to bring their claims. We are not persuaded. That statute gives courts the power to hear cases; it does not give plaintiffs the power to maintain any cause of action they want. If Congress intended 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to grant plaintiffs a cause of action against federal actors for constitutional violations, it knew how to do so because it enacted such a statute against state actors. See generally 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

ORDER ON PENDING MOTIONS TO DISMISS
JOHN A. WOODCOCK, JR., UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Two sets of defendants file motions to dismiss plaintiffs' Bivens action lawsuit, which alleged violations of their Fourth Amendment rights. In keeping with the United States Supreme Court's directive that courts should be reticent to expand Bivens actions, the Court concludes that the present case should be dismissed because it presents a new Bivens context, and there are special factors counseling against expanding Bivens in this case, namely separation of powers concerns and alternative remedies available to the plaintiffs. The Court grants both sets of Defendants' motions to dismiss.

Between 2002 and 2012, Naicom's President and Chief Executive Officer, Darwin Quinones developed an Internet Multicast Distribution System. Suppl. Am. Compl. ¶ 38. The system was identified as a Dynamic Internet Semantic Multicast Environment (DISME), and its code sources have been kept confidential under the Federal Defendant Trade Secrets Act. Id. ¶¶ 39-40. DISME proprietary solutions enable broadcast media via the internet by creating Internet Protocol Television (IPTV) services which distribute live-video television content via the internet and private networks. Id. ¶ 39. In April 2012, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) recognized and encouraged the implementation of Digital Broadcast Television using IPTV for customers in the United States. Id. ¶ 40.

By 2016 Mr. Quinones had completed all DISME technology alpha and beta tests and, alongside Victor Vega, founded Naicom Corporation. Id. ¶ 41. Naicom Corporation is a network and internet communication platform that delivers live television, video on-demand content, internet, and wireless network services to subscribers worldwide. Id. ¶ 41. Naicom also provides instant access to television shows, movies, and music/videos on-demand, and live sports and music events through Naicom's set-top box using IPTV and TV Everywhere (TVE) on any mobile device. Id. Mr.

Quinones and Mr. Vega registered Naicom Corporation as a closed corporation with the State Department of Puerto Rico and complied with all requirements as a legitimate IPTV business. Id. ¶ 42. Naicom also began manufacturing its own brand of set-top boxes for end users through Informir LLC and acquired the programming licenses to distribute on-demand content in the United States, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands through worldwide television network companies. Id. ¶¶ 43-44. In 2017, Naicom became a member of the National Rural Telecommunications Cooperative (NRTC). Id. ¶ 44. The Plaintiffs allege that the Defendants were aware that Naicom duly registered and complied with IPTV business requirements, acquired these licenses, and was a member of the NRTC. Id. ¶¶ 42, 44.

In 2016, Naicom executed a Business Executive Summary and Valuation for potential investors and began exploring business opportunities with other cable tv companies. Id. ¶ 45. On January 6, 2017, Naicom submitted a request to the Apple Corporation to have its TV App added to Apple's AppStore. Id. ¶ 46. Apple's legal department requested that Naicom produce all licenses authorizing the distribution of programming to Naicom's subscribers via Naicom's TV App. Id. ¶ 46. On February 16, 2017, Apple approved Naicom's App for inclusion in the Apple AppStore. Id. ¶ 47. In December 2017, Sams Club approved Naicom to launch and distribute Naicom's IPTV set-top box in their retail stores, which Plaintiffs allege Defendants were aware of. Id. ¶ 48.

B. Negotiations with Claro Puerto Rico

In 2017, Naicom entered into negotiations with Claro Puerto Rico to distribute Naicom set-top boxes to Claro residential and business internet customers. Id. ¶ 49. Claro represented to Naicom that it had approximately 320,000 internet subscribers who received only eight Megabytes and thus could not subscribe to Claro's IPTV services, which required sixty Megabytes to upload programming. Id. ¶ 50. During negotiations, Naicom and Claro entered into a mutual non-disclosure agreement (NDA) prior to discussing and analyzing business information and the contents of the resellers' agreement. Id. ¶ 51. Claro's Product Development Officer Anibal Rios projected that the Claro-Naicom business alliance would bring in over $10,000,000 in monthly gross revenue for the first year and over $13,000,000 for the second year just by penetrating Claro's corporate and residential subscribers in Puerto Rico. Id. ¶ 52. Naicom projected that the Claro-Naicom alliance would add 100,000 new corporate subscribers, plus another 150,000 residential subscribers, bringing in a projected monthly income revenue of $9,000,000 in the first year, and $12,000,000 in the second in gross sales. Id. ¶ 53.

Claro had an existing contract with DISH Network Satellite TV, whereby DISH Network provided TV programming to Claro's internet subscribers who could not subscribe to Claro's IPTV services. Id. ¶ 54. The Naicom deal represented a cancellation threat to DISH Network's contract with Claro. Id. Claro was also considering shutting down its IPTV business division due to loss of revenue. Id. During the negotiations for the Claro-Naicom deal, Carlos Garcia, Claro's IPTV business manager, became privy to information that the Claro-Naicom deal would leave him jobless if Claro opted to shut down its IPTV division, which he managed. Id. ¶ 55. Mr. Garcia alerted DISH Network that the Claro-Naicom IPTV deal would lead to cancellation of the DISH contract with Claro, which the Plaintiffs allege lead to “great animosity” between DISH Network and Naicom. Id. ¶ 56. The Plaintiffs allege that Mr. Garcia convened a meeting of DISH Network executives and convinced them that Naicom was an IPTV pirate company because he had Claro employees photograph Naicom's Data Center and the way Naicom established its satellite dishes lock angle indicated that Naicom dishes were being used for TV piracy. Id. ¶ 57. Naicom Data Center employees caught Claro employees photographing Naicom's Data Center. Id. ¶ 58. On August 14, 2018, after a year of meetings between Naicom and Claro, Claro pulled out of negotiations without notice. Id. ¶ 59.

C. The DISH Network Investigation

On August 7, 2017, NagraStar instructed Brian Parson to purchase a Naicom TV set-top box receiver to conduct tests and monitor Naicom's programming. Id. ¶ 61. According to the DISH/NagraStar Defendants, their investigation revealed that the receiver provided access to approximately forty-three channels, including Disney, TBS, ESPN, CNN, HBO, Showtime, and Cinemax. Id. ¶ 62. The investigating DISH/NagraStar Defendants downloaded the Naicom TV App through the Apple AppStore, which provided access to approximately forty-two channels, and tested Naicom TV several times to identify if it was providing DISH programming. Id. ¶¶ 63-64. In each case, the tests revealed no DISH content. Id. ¶ 65.

NagraStar and DISH Network investigators also contacted several media companies to inquire into whether Naicom had the appropriate licensing contracts to distribute its programming. Id. ¶ 65. On each occasion, the investigators were informed that Naicom was authorized to distribute its content. Id. The investigators also discovered that Naicom's TV distribution technology was a threat to DISH Network and Sling for subscribers in Puerto Rico and the United States. Id. ¶ 66.

NagraStar and DISH Network investigators thereafter filed a complaint with the FBI alleging that Naicom Corporation was running an IPTV pirate operation. Id. ¶ 67. Plaintiffs allege that the motive behind the complaint against Naicom was to secure NagraStar and DISH Network's participation in the execution of a search warrant for Naicom's Data Center and the seizure of Naicom's computers, servers, and other hardware containing Naicom's intellectual property and trade secrets, under the ruse of assisting the FBI in discovering incriminating evidence. Id. ¶ 68.

D. The FBI and United States Attorney's Office Investigation

Beginning in September 2017 and throughout 2018, DISH Network Investigator, Kevin Gedeon, and NagraStar investigators, Jordan Smith, Bert Eichhorn and Emily Rinkel, met with Douglas A. Leff, the FBI Special Agent in charge of the San Juan Division to discuss Naicom's alleged IPTV pirate operation. Id. ¶ 69. Agent Leff thereafter opened a criminal investigation. Id.

Agent Leff arranged a meeting among Mr. Gedeon, Mr. Smith, Mr. Eichhorn, and Ms. Rinkel, and FBI Cyber Task Force Supervisor, Special Agent Brad Rex, to discuss details of the criminal investigation. Id. ¶ 70. Agent Leff requested that Agent Rex keep him informed of developments in the investigation so that he could discuss potential criminal prosecution with AUSA Nicholas Cannon. Id. ¶ 71. Agent Rex thereafter launched an investigation and instructed FBI Cyber Task Force Special Agents Kevin Pearson, Andrew Baker, Chris Kuhn, Celia Mahler, Clay Rehrig, Noah Eames, Justin Turner, Mark Ethridge, Clint Nafay, Juan Galarza, Jason Lopez, and several other FBI agents to work with the DISH/NagraStar investigators and Lance Lange, the FBI agent assigned to the case. Id. ¶ 72.

Plaintiffs allege that AUSA Cannon and several other AUSA supervisors participated, supervised, led, coached, and instructed the FBI agents and DISH/NagraStar investigators throughout the criminal investigation beginning in 2017 up until the preparation of the affidavit for a warrant in 2019. Id. ¶ 73. Plaintiffs also submit that neither AUSA Cannon nor any of the FBI agents contacted Wapa TV, Disney, HBO, Turner, NBC, Condista, CBS, Telecinco, ABC, the National Rural Telecommunications Cooperative, Apple Corporation, or Sams Club to investigate and corroborate whether Naicom lacked the contract licenses to distribute the programming content through Naicom's TV set-top boxes, Apple iPhone App, or its contract to distribute TV set-top boxes at Sams Club retail stores. Id. ¶ 74. Most of the evidence furnished to the FBI, Plaintiffs allege, was collected by the DISH/NagraStar investigators in violation of United States copyright laws. Id.

At the final stage of the investigation, AUSA Cannon, the FBI agent defendants and the DISH/NagraStar investigators met to discuss the investigatory files, notes, memoranda, reports, photographs, videos, and other collected evidence to prepare a warrant application. Id. ¶ 75. The Plaintiffs allege that at this meeting, the Defendants collectively noted that the evidence did not support probable cause to procure a search and seizure warrant and that it was at this meeting that the Government and DISH /NagraStar Defendants decided to conspire with each other to figure out a way to alter the evidence in order to satisfy probable cause. Id. ¶¶ 76-77.

On August 27, 2019, AUSA Cannon met with Agent Lange to review, approve, and sign the final draft of the affidavit and application in support of the search warrant. Id. ¶ 79. The Plaintiffs allege AUSA Cannon and Agent Lange knew the affidavit and warrant application, which they filed under oath, contained false and perjured testimony. Id. That same day, AUSA Cannon and Agent Lange met with United States Magistrate Judge Silvia Carreño-Coll to discuss their warrant application to search Naicom Corporation, located at Building Centro de Seguros, 701 Ponce de Leon, Suite 208, San Juan, Puerto Rico 00907, and Naicom's Data Center located at Villa Fontana, 4SS N2 Via Josefina, Carolina, Puerto Rico 00983. Id. ¶ 80. There was no discussion of authorizing a search of Artist Designs & Management Corporation (ADM), located at Building Centro de Seguros, 701 Ponce de Leon, Suite 207, San Juan, Puerto Rico 00907. Id. At the meeting, AUSA Cannon and Agent Lange assured the Magistrate Judge under oath that the contents of the affidavit filed in support of the search warrant were truthful and supported by probable cause. Id. ¶ 81. They also assured the Magistrate Judge that the warrant was being used to gather evidence of criminal conduct, including a criminal copyright property offense, criminal infringement of a copyright, money laundering, wire fraud, and unlawful access to computer systems. Id. ¶ 81. Magistrate Judge Carreño-Coll approved the affidavit in support of the warrant and directed the FBI to execute the search warrant on or before September 4, 2019.

E. Execution of the Search Warrant

1. The Search of Naicom's Offices

On August 27, 2019, the FBI agent Defendants and DISH/NagraStar investigators entered Naicom's offices, located at Building Centro de Seguros, 701 Ponce de Leon, Suite 208,<sup>7</sup> San Juan, Puerto Rico 00907 to execute the warrant. Id. ¶ 83. During the execution of the warrant Agent Lange ordered Naicom staff member Yamila Garcia to unlock ADM located at Suite 207, which was not included in the search warrant. Id. ¶ 84. Ms. Garcia informed Agent Lange that ADM was an independent business and that the search was directed at Naicom, but Agent Lange ordered her to open the doors. Id. Agent Lange and the DISH/NagraStar investigators entered and seized private and confidential ADM documents. Id.

During the execution of the warrant, Mr. Eichhorn, in the presence of Agent Lange, took keys belonging to Mr. Vega and Mr. Quinones from the Naicom, ADM and Naicom Data Center offices; Mr. Eichhorn and Ms. Rinkel entered Naicom's business office without FBI agent supervision and searched, inspected, and photographed private documents containing business trade secrets and intellectual property information belonging to Naicom; Mr.

Eichhorn and Ms. Rinkel entered Mr. Vega's office without FBI agent supervision and photographed private documents containing business trade secrets and intellectual information belonging to Naicom; Mr. Eichhorn accessed Naicom's computers and searched, read, and photographed their contents, which contained trade secrets and intellectual property belonging to Naicom; workers from the other offices in the building witnessed the embarrassment of Naicom employees. Id. ¶¶ 85-89. During the search, Agent Lange, the other FBI agents and DISH/NagraStar investigators seized Plaintiffs' documents, two hard drives, two USB thumb drives, a cell phone, and one tablet containing business trade secrets and intellectual property. Id. ¶ 90. The Defendants left a copy of the warrant and a receipt of the property seized during the search. Id.

2. The First Search of Naicom's Data Center

On August 27, 2019, Agent Pearson, other unknown FBI agents, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Gedeon entered Naicom's Data Center to execute the search warrant. Id. ¶ 91. During the search, Mr. Quinones observed Agent Pearson allow Mr. Smith and Mr. Gedeon to access and personally search Naicom's Data Center computers, servers and other electronic hardware containing business trade secrets and intellectual property and to take pictures of Naicom's Data Center structural and network connection platform. Id. ¶ 92. Agent Pearson, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Gedeon questioned Mr. Quinones and Naicom employee Jaime Echevarria about Naicom's technology, functions, and protocols. Id. ¶ 93. During the search, Mr. Quinones requested that Agent Pearson give him an opportunity to demonstrate that he was running a legitimate IPTV operation. Id. ¶ 94. Mr. Quinones thereafter called Linda Kosher from the National Rural Telecommunications Cooperative who assured Agent Pearson that Naicom was authorized to distribute the programming content via the Naicom TV Home set-top box to its registered subscribers. Id.

Agent Pearson called AUSA Cannon and informed him that they did not find any evidence indicating that Mr. Quinones was running an IPTV pirate distribution business and assured him that it appeared Naicom was a legitimate company. Id. ¶ 95. AUSA Cannon instructed Agent Pearson to instruct Mr. Quinones and Mr. Vega to report to the FBI offices in San Juan with their licensing contracts for an interview. Id. ¶ 96.

Back at the FBI offices, Agent Pearson, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Gedeon questioned Mr. Quinones, in the presence of Naicom's attorney, about how Naicom acquired the IPTV distribution contracts and technology used to distribute its programming. Id. ¶ 97. Mr. Quinones and Mr. Vega clarified and established through Naicom's licenses and contracts with television networks that Naicom was running a legitimate IPTV business operation. Id. ¶ 99. During the interview, Mr. Quinones asked Agent Pearson whether Mr. Smith and Mr. Gedeon were employees from his competition, based on their line of questioning. Id. ¶ 98. Agent Pearson assured Mr. Quinones that Mr. Smith and Mr. Gedeon were expert workers of the FBI and provided Mr. Quinones with their identities. Id. Mr. Eichhorn and Ms. Rinkel refused to identify themselves. Id. At this time, Mr. Vega asked to terminate the interview due to Mr. Smith's and Mr. Gedeon's intensive interrogation regarding Naicom's distribution technology. Id. ¶ 100.

3. The Second Search of Naicom's Data Center

On August 29, 2019, AUSA Cannon ordered Agents Lange and Pearson to return to Naicom's Data Center to perform another search and have the Plaintiffs sign a hold harmless document. Id. ¶ 101. Agent Lange, Agent Pearson, Mr. Eichhorn, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Gedeon entered the Data Center and performed a second search. Id. Agent Pearson contacted Naicom employee Jaime Echevarria and ordered him to come to the Data Center, as Agent Pearson wanted to speak with him, Mr. Quinones, and Mr. Vega. Id. ¶ 102. Upon arriving at the Data Center, Mr. Quinones observed Mr. Smith, Mr. Gedeon, and Mr. Eichhorn accessing Naicom's Data Center computers, servers, and other hardware equipment without authorization. Id. ¶ 103.

During the search, Agents Pearson and Lange pressured Mr. Quinones to sign a hold harmless document accepting that he was running a pirate operation in the past so that they could close the case or else they would shut down the Data Center operation. Id. ¶ 104. Mr. Quinones refused. Id. ¶ 105. Sometime thereafter, Mr. Vega arrived and upon entering the Data Center asked Agents Pearson and Lange if they had another search warrant to enter and search the Data Center. Id. ¶ 106. Agent Lange represented to Mr. Vega that the search warrant gave him ten days to come in and out and search the Data Center. Id. Mr. Vega warned Agent Lange that Agent Lange was violating the United States Constitution and Federal law. Id.

Mr. Vega thereafter informed Agents Pearson and Lange that he had discovered via LinkedIn that the alleged FBI experts who executed the search and interrogated Mr. Quinones and him at the FBI offices were Kevin Gedeon, investigator for DISH Network, and Jordan Smith, Bert Eichhorn, and Emily Rinkel, investigators for NagraStar. Id. ¶ 107. Mr. Vega questioned Agents Lange and Pearson as to why the FBI brought in his competition to search, inspect, and photograph private documents and allowed them access to computers and servers containing trade secrets, code sources, and business and intellectual property belonging to Naicom. Id. ¶ 108. Mr. Vega called his attorney and told him about the second search. Id. ¶ 109. After speaking with Agent Lange, the FBI agents and DISH/NagraStar investigators left the premises. Id.

On August 30, 2019, Mr. Vega texted Agent Pearson seeking authorization to enter Naicom's Data Center and start up Naicom's distribution system to restore customer service. Id. ¶ 110. After instructing Mr. Vega to have his attorney contact the FBI, Agent Lange authorized Mr. Vega to enter Naicom's Data Center and restore the program. Id.

F. The Demand for the Return of Property Under Rule 41(g)

On September 6, 2019, the Plaintiffs filed a motion to demand the return of seized property under Rule 41(g) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Id. ¶ 111. In their motion, the Plaintiffs argued that the search and seizure was unlawful because (1) it contained deliberately and recklessly false statements made under oath so the Magistrate Judge would issue the warrant and (2) the warrant was issued in violation of the Fourth Amendment, and they demanded the immediate return of all unlawfully seized property. Id. ¶ 112. To their motion, the Plaintiffs attached Naicom's contracts authorizing distribution of content programming in Puerto Rico, the United States, and the Virgin Islands, evidence that the Defendants never called HBO or NRTC to ask about Naicom, and evidence that the investigation was a ruse orchestrated by NagraStar and DISH Network to access Naicom's trade secrets and intellectual property. Id. ¶ 113.

On October 15, 2019, the United States filed an unopposed response to the Plaintiffs' Rule 41(g) motion stating that, without conceding any arguments raised, the property items listed in the request would be returned. Id. ¶ 114. The District Court granted the Plaintiffs' Rule 41(g) motion on November 5, 2019. Id. ¶ 115. On February 19, 2020, Agent Lange met with Mr. Quinones, Mr. Vega, and Attorney Rafael Castro Lang to return the seized items to the Plaintiffs. Id. ¶ 117. At the meeting, Agent Lange returned the seized items and gave the Plaintiffs an FBI document titled Document Search Warrant Execution at Naicom Corporation Headquarters, which disclosed details of the search and the identities of the FBI agents involved. Id.

G. The Plaintiffs' Alleged Harm

The Plaintiffs allege that the criminal investigation caused significant damage to their business reputation. Id. ¶ 118. They allege that prior to the execution of the search warrants, the Plaintiffs had a great reputation and were about to close on a $15,000,000 investment deal, but that investors pulled out upon learning Naicom was under criminal investigation. Id. ¶¶ 119-120. The Plaintiffs also allege that Naicom was about to close a multimillion-dollar deal with Claro when Claro learned of the FBI's investigation and pulled out of negotiations. Id. ¶ 121. The Plaintiffs say they have lost subscribers because of a negative reputation resulting from the investigation and that the Defendants' intrusion into Naicom's Data Center computers, servers, and equipment caused damage leaving subscribers without tv programming services for several weeks. Id. ¶ 122.

H. The Plaintiffs' Cause of Action

The Plaintiffs bring three counts. Count One alleges that Nicholas W. Cannon, several unknown AUSA Supervisors, Douglas A. Leff, Brad Rex, Lance Lange, Kevin Pearson, Andrew Baker, Chris Kuhn, Celia Mahler, Clay Rehrig, Noah Eames, Justin Turner, Mark Etheridge, Clint Nafay, Juan Galarza, Jason Lopez, several unknown named FBI Agents, Jordan Smith, Kevin Gedeon, Bert Eichhorn, and Emily Rinkel violated Plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment rights by “formulating false and perjured evidence and statements to be used in support of the affidavit” for a search warrant, conspiring to file an affidavit under oath containing false information, and intentionally deceiving the Magistrate Judge to get her to issue the search warrant. Id. at 48-50.

Count Two alleges that Brad Rex, Lance Lange, Kevin Pearson, Andrew Baker, Chris Kuhn, Celia Mahler, Clay Rehrig, Noah Eames, Justin Turner, Mark Etheridge, Clint Nafay, Juan Galarza, Jason Lopez, several unknown named FBI agents, Kevin Gedeon, Jordan Smith, Bert Eichhorn, and Emily Rinkel violated the Plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment rights by searching and seizing information from the Artist Designs and Management Corporation office, which was not included in the search warrant. Id. at 53.

Finally, Count Three alleges that AUSA Nicholas Cannon, Agents Lance Lange and Kevin Pearson, Jordan Smith, Kevin Gedeon, and Bert Eichhorn violated the Plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment rights by entering Naicom's Data Center on August 29, 2019, without a new warrant. Id. at 56-57.

All three counts are brought pursuant to Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics.

III. THE PARTIES' POSITIONS

A. The DISH/NagraStar Defendants' Motion to Dismiss

The DISH/NagraStar Defendants first argue that the Plaintiffs' claim should be dismissed because allowing their claims to proceed would require the Court to expand Bivens, which is a “disfavored judicial activity.” DISH/NagraStar Defs.' Mot. at 2, 8. The DISH/NagraStar Defendants contend that the Plaintiffs' claims “undeniably arise in a new context, [and] bear little resemblance to Bivens and its progeny” because they “consist of different conduct by different officers operating under different mandates from different agencies and involve private individuals.” Id. at 9-10. The Defendants explain that unlike the individual whose home was searched by the FBI without a warrant in Bivens, the “Plaintiffs complain of a search, pursuant to a warrant, of their business offices in Puerto Rico, by FBI agents, and private citizens, which resulted in no booking, strip search or arrest but rather the seizure of certain business records and other property, which was eventually returned.” Id. at 10-11.

Second, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants submit that “[t]he mechanism of injury in this case also varies significantly from that in Bivens,” which involved “a direct causal connection ... between the plaintiff’s injuries and the federal agents’ conduct.” Id. at 11. Here, the Defendants say that the “Plaintiffs’ injury occurred through a series of intervening steps which involved independent legal decisions, made at various stages, by separate and distinct legal officers.” Id. at 12 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Third, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants say that the Plaintiffs’ Fourth Amendment Claims require significantly different proof than those in Bivens. Id. The Defendants argue that this case “would require discovery or an investigation into the evidence before numerous decision-makers, running the risk of disruptively intruding into the functioning of other branches and would require fact-checking and other probing into executive agency decisions.” Id. (citing Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 701, 117 S.Ct. 1636, 137 L.Ed.2d 945 (1997)).

Additionally, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants claim that the Plaintiffs’ Bivens action involves a new category of defendants because they are “private individuals.” Id. at 13. Relying on Correctional Services Corporation v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 122 S.Ct. 515, 151 L.Ed.2d 456 (2001), and Minneeci v. Pollard, 565 U.S. 118, 132 S. Ct. 617, 181 L.Ed.2d 606 (2012), the Defendants contend that the Supreme Court “rejected expanding Bivens liability to ‘private entities acting under color of law.’ ” Id. at 13 (quoting Malesko, 534 U.S. at 63, 122 S.Ct. 515).

Applying the various Supreme Court tests for determining whether a private party acted under the color of law, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants say they “have no direct links to the government, as they do not carry out any traditional or exclusive public function, are not in any symbiotic relationship with the government and are not federal officials, federal employees, individuals who have received any delegation of federal authority or contractors employed or under contract with the federal government.” Id. at 17. They argue that their “connection with the searches and seizures ... [is] too attenuated to constitute ‘federal or state action’ for [Fourth] Amendment purposes” and that “at best” they were “ ‘in the company of’ or accompanied the FBI defendants during their warrant execution in this case.” Id. at 18.

Turning to prong two of the Bivens extension test, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants argue that multiple special factors counsel against expanding Bivens to this case. Id. at 20. First, they submit that the “Plaintiffs had three alternative remedies available: the Federal Tort Claims Act, Puerto Rico Law and Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(g).” Id. at 21. Second, the Defendants contend that expanding Bivens would “pos[e] the risk of burdening and encroaching on the ... executive branch's investigative and prosecutorial functions” and may “chill federal executive employees in the execution of their duties, thus undermining the separation of powers between the governmental branches.” Id. at 23 (citing Ziglar v. Abbasi, — U.S. —, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1857, 198 L.Ed.2d 290 (2017)).

The DISH/NagraStar Defendants further argue that the Plaintiffs' Bivens conspiracy claim is inadequate because it “allege[s] no more than a dissatisfaction with how law enforcement officers discharged their duties—not facts demonstrating a colorable claim that an actual agreement existed amongst the defendants to deprive Plaintiffs of their constitutional rights.” Id. at 24. They submit that the “Plaintiffs’ mere assertions that ‘upon information and belief’ the defendants conspired, colluded or acted in concert with one another to commit tortious acts against them, without more, will not suffice to state a Bivens conspiracy claim.” Id. at 25.

In the final section of their brief, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants contend that even assuming Bivens can be expanded, the Plaintiffs’ allegations under each Count fail to state a claim on which relief can be granted. Id. at 25-31.

As to Count One, the Defendants argue that there was no violation of a valid warrant or illegal search in violation of the Fourth Amendment because the FBI Defendants secured a warrant, a neutral magistrate judge “made an independent determination that sufficient probable cause existed” and that any doubt should be “resolve[d] ... in favor of a magistrate judge’s probable cause finding.” Id. at 26. The Defendants further say that the “Plaintiffs have not only failed to attribute any purported falsehoods to the[m] ... but have also failed to assert [ ]the omission of any such falsehoods ... [that] would otherwise vitiate the probable cause finding in this case.” Id. at 27. The DISH/NagraStar Defendants contend that their accompaniment of “the FBI defendants during the course of the search and seizure does not render the search invalid and/or unreasonable, as the FBI defendants are given latitude in conducting computer searches and no particularized search protocol or strategy is required.” Id. at 27 (citing 18 U.S.C. § 3105).

As to Count Two, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants argue that they did not conduct a warrantless search of the ADM office because photographs of the space “denote that Artist Designs' office space is located within and/or adjoining to Naicom's space, displays a ‘Naicom HQ’ stamp, and does not reflect that of a distinct office or business space.” Id. at 28. Citing United States v. Ferreras, 192 F.3d 5, 10-11 (1st Cir. 1999), the Defendants say that “a search warrant will not be deemed invalid, or ... unreasonable, due to the failure to specify a subunit or numerical address to be searched, where, as in this case, the multi-unit character of the premises was not externally apparent.” Id. at 29. They emphasize that here, “searching agents or individuals reasonably could conclude that Artist Designs' office, was appurtenant to Suite 208, and as such, a search of the area fell within the purview of the warrant.” Id.

Finally, as to Count Three, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants argue that, even assuming that they were “federal agents,” their August 29, 2019, search at Naicom's Data Center was not a search without a warrant because the Defendants had previously suspended their initial search on August 27 at the Plaintiffs' request, which “triggered the need for the subsequent search.” Id. at 30. Thus, the search “was not a second, warrantless search ... but rather a valid continuation of the original search.” Id. at 31.

1. The Plaintiffs' Opposition

The Plaintiffs oppose the DISH/NagraStar Defendants' motion to dismiss by first insisting that they have validly stated a claim upon which relief can be granted because the “Fourth Amendment protects business[es] and corporations from unreasonable searches and seizures.” Pls.' Opp'n to DISH/NagraStar

Defs.' Mot. at 13 (citing G.M. Leasing Corp. v. United States, 429 U.S. 338, 353, 97 S.Ct. 619, 50 L.Ed.2d 530 (1977)).

As to the Defendants' first argument, the "Plaintiffs submit that they are not implying a cause of action expanding Bivens to a claim that arises under a 'new context' or involve[es] a 'new category of defendants.' " Id. at 16. They argue their "claim does not arise under a 'new context' " but instead "falls squarely under the provinces of Bivens and Franks where the Supreme Court clearly established that a violation of a person's Fourth Amendment rights by federal officers, acting under color of federal law gives rise to a federal cause of action for damages for unconstitutional conduct where the issuance of the search warrant was based on false statements to establish probable cause." Id. at 16-17.

Second, the Plaintiffs say that "[c]ontrary to [t]he DISH/NagraStar defendants' arguments Plaintiffs' right to sue federal officers and actors derives from the constitution itself." Id. at 20. The Plaintiffs submit that "[a]s of today, Congress has not either legislated any law disproving [that] monetary damages [can] be awarded under Bivens, nor has divested the federal Courts of their federal-question adjudicatory authority to do so." Id. at 21.

Third, the Plaintiffs assert that "the Dish/NagraStar and FBI Special Agent[ ] defendants were operating exactly under the same investigatory legal mandate as in Bivens." Id. at 22. The Plaintiffs say that "[i]n the present case, as in Bivens ... the FBI federal defendant agents and AUSA Cannon were seeking evidence for criminal prosecution for possible violations of United States conspiracy," copyright, and money laundering laws. Id. They argue that the federal defendants “unlawfully conspire[d] with the Dish/NagraStar defendants to make false allegations to the Magistrate Judge filing an affidavit containing false and perjured statements” which is “exactly what the Fourth Amendment, Bivens, and Franks prohibit.” Id. at 22-23. Citing Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 164, 98 S.Ct. 2674, 57 L.Ed.2d 667 (1978), and Aponte Matos v. Toledo Dávila, 135 F.3d 182, 187 (1st Cir. 1998), the Plaintiffs say that “the use of false statements to obtain a search warrant violates the Fourth Amendment warrant requirement.” Id. at 25.

Next, the Plaintiffs say that their claims would not require significantly different proof because it “would not require discovery or an investigation into evidence before numerous decision makers” because “[t]he factual allegations and legal controversy which gave birth to this Bivens cause of action are all derived from the same source, the unlawful sworn declaration filed with the Court, and the two warrantless searches.” Id. at 26. The Plaintiffs also assert that based on the documents already on the docket, in the absence of the alleged false statements, “the magistrate judge would never have issued the search warrant.” Id.

Finally, the Plaintiffs argue that the DISH/NagraStar Defendants do not constitute a “new category” of defendant under Bivens. Id. They say that “[t]here is little question that a private actor that conspires with a Governmental official to violate the Constitution is subject to liability,” id. at 28 (citing Lugar v. Edmonson Oil Co., Inc., 457 U.S. 922, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 73 L.Ed.2d 482 (1982); Dennis v. Sparks, 449 U.S. 24, 101 S.Ct. 183, 66 L.Ed.2d 185 (1980); Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 26 L.Ed.2d 142 (1970)), and that the DISH/NagraStar Defendants “squarely meet all three [tests to be characterized as federal actors]; (1) Nexus Test; (2) the Symbiotic Relationship Test; and the (3) Public Function Test.” Id. at 29-30, 101 S.Ct. 183.

The Plaintiffs submit that even if their “claims [are] viewed as an expansion of Bivens liability, their claims should stand because state law remedies do not provide adequate deterrence.” Id. at 42, 101 S.Ct. 183. The Plaintiffs cite Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 100 S.Ct. 1468, 64 L.Ed.2d 15 (1980), for the proposition that “it was Bivens and not the Federal Tort Claims Act ... [that] Congress had in mind [as the appropriate remedy] and [that Congress] did not intend to limit a Bivens Action to an FTCA.” Id. at 43, 100 S.Ct. 1468. The Plaintiffs say that the Carlson Court applied several factors—the deterrent effect of a Bivens versus FTCA suit, the availability of punitive damages and a jury trial under Bivens, and whether the state where the alleged misconduct took place permits a cause of action under state law. Id. at 43-44, 100 S.Ct. 1468. Applying these factors, the Plaintiffs argue that “state tort law claims do not effectively address the conduct” and invocation of “a Federal Tort Claim Act instead” would be “futile” because “the Supreme Court of the United States had already ruled that the correct course of action is a Bivens Action[ ].” Id. at 45, 100 S.Ct. 1468 (citing Carlson, 446 U.S. at 100). The Plaintiffs also say that the DISH/NagraStar Defendants' argument that Rule 41(g) provides an adequate remedy is incorrect because money damages are not available under Rule 41(g). Id. at 46-47, 100 S.Ct. 1468.

The Plaintiffs reject the DISH/NagraStar Defendants' argument that they did not properly plead a Bivens conspiracy claim. Id. at 47, 100 S.Ct. 1468. The Plaintiffs say that there is ample evidence on the record that the Defendants “formed an agreement to deceive the federal magistrate” and that their “ultra vires motive in intruding into Naicom's Data Center and Offices was to appropriate themselves of Naicom's intellectual property” even though “[t]hey knew Plaintiffs were not engaged in tv piracy.” Id. at 48, 100 S.Ct. 1468.

Turning to the viability of each count, the Plaintiffs say that their allegations in Count One do state a claim on which relief can be granted because the evidence shows that the DISH/NagraStar Defendants were “performing the search to assist law enforcement efforts ... to further their own ends, by using the FBI as an instrument to learn Naicom's methods of operation.” Id. at 50, 100 S.Ct. 1468. They also say that the record is clear “that any legitimate investigative purpose dissipated the moment they informed the FBI that Naicom was not using their equipment.” Id. at 51, 100 S.Ct. 1468.

Next, the Plaintiffs say that Count Two similarly states a valid claim because the DISH/NagraStar Defendants “knew they did not have a search warrant to enter Artist Designs & Management Corporation premises,” were warned that it was a different business, and still entered the premises and executed a warrantless search and seizure. Id.

Finally, the Plaintiffs say that despite the Defendants' argument that they re-entered the Naicom Data Center on August 29, 2019, pursuant to the original warrant, Agent Pearson was aware that Naicom had all of its licensing contracts, which Mr. Quinones and Mr. Vega further confirmed during their FBI interview. Id. at 52, 100 S.Ct. 1468. Thus, in support of Count Three, the Plaintiffs contend that the search warrant was fully executed and once executed the Defendants “did not have any authority ... to re-enter Naicom's[ ] Data Center premises, unless they applied for a second warrant.” Id. at 53, 100 S.Ct. 1468.

2. The DISH/NagraStar Defendants' Reply

In reply, the DISH/Nagra Star Defendants reiterate that the current action is significantly different than Bivens and that “[d]espite Plaintiffs' arguments to the contrary, functional equivalence is not the standard [for determining whether a case requires a Bivens expansion], as even ‘significant parallels’ are not enough to warrant a finding of no new context.” DISH/NagraStar Defs.' Reply at 5 (quoting Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1864). The Defendants further state that “[c]ourts do not define a Bivens cause of action at the level of ‘the Fourth Amendment’ or even at the level of ‘the unreasonable-searches-and-seizures clause’ ” and that, as a result, the Court should reject an “amendment-by-amendment ratification” approach to Bivens. Id. (first quoting Cantú v. Moody, 933 F.3d 414, 423 (5th Cir. 2019), then De La Paz v. Coy, 786 F.3d 367, 372 (5th Cir. 2015)).

Second the Defendants reassert that they are “private actors not covered by the scope of Plaintiffs' Bivens claims.” Id. at 6. Defendants say that the Plaintiffs' reliance on Heinrich ex rel. Heinrich v. Sweet, 62 F. Supp. 2d 282, 312 (D. Mass. 1999), is misplaced because the case was decided before Minneci “which unequivocally rejected the identical argument to expand Bivens to non-governmental actors.” Id. at 7. Quoting Stoutt v. Banco Popular de Puerto Rico, 320 F.3d 26, 33 (1st Cir. 2003), the Defendants say that “[t]he First Circuit has consistently interpreted the Supreme Court's holding in Malesko as ‘limit[ing]

Bivens actions by refusing to extend them to private entities acting under color of federal law.’” Id.

Third, the Defendants say that the Plaintiffs' reliance on Carlson does not negate that the FTCA is available to them as an alternative remedy because “the Supreme Court has [since] determined the availability of a remedy under the FTCA to be a significant factor militating against creating a Bivens-type remedy.” Id. at 8 (citing Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1863). Thus, “the mere fact that the FTCA might not provide Plaintiffs with all the relief they seek does not justify finding an expansion of Bivens warranted in this case, but rather counsels against it.” Id. The Defendants further cite Omran v. United States, No. 1:14-CV-13881, 2016 WL 4158556, at *10-11 (D. Mass. June 22, 2016) for the proposition that “[a]lthough Rule 41(g) does not provide damages as a remedy, [a] remedial scheme need not provide [complete] relief to the plaintiff to qualify as a special factor.” Id. at 9 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Defendants therefore contend that “the absence of money damages ... does not negate [Rule 41(g)’s] status as an adequate, alternative remedy” to a Bivens claim. Id. In closing, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants reiterate that even if the Court finds it appropriate to expand Bivens here, all three counts should be dismissed for failure to state a claim. Id. at 9-10.

B. The Government Defendants' Motion to Dismiss

Like the DISH/NagraStar Defendants, the Government Defendants apply the two-part Bivens expansion test and argue that the Plaintiffs have not stated a cognizable Bivens claim. Gov't Defs.' Mot. at 7-9. The Government Defendants put forth the same arguments as the DISH/NagraStar Defendants, and the Court does not separately reiterate them here. See id. at 9-22.

In addition to arguing that Bivens is unavailable to the Plaintiffs, the Defendants further contend that even if the Court chooses to expand Bivens, AUSA Cannon is entitled to absolute immunity, or at the very least, qualified immunity. Id. at 23, 100 S.Ct. 1468. As to absolute immunity, the Defendants argue that AUSA Cannon's actions, including evaluating evidence provided to him by the FBI and meeting with co-defendants for that purpose, were "part of his preparation to initiate the criminal process." Id. at 26-27. They argue that AUSA Cannon's "conduct ... was functionally prosecutorial and associated with his role in the judicial phase of a criminal investigation; specifically, assisting in the preparation and filing of the warrant affidavit." Id. at 29. As to the warrant itself, the Defendants say that AUSA Cannon "did not swear to the facts of the search warrant in a way that made [him] more akin to a witness than a prosecutor in this function. Rather, this legal review ... is more akin to pre-trial evidence gathering intimately associated with the judicial process that is protected by absolute immunity." Id. (alteration in Gov't Defs.' Mot.) (quoting Haworth v. Walla Walla Cnty., No. 4:19-CV-5254-TOR, 2021 WL 2333099, at *—, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89172, at *33 (E.D. Wash. May 10, 2021)).

Even if AUSA Cannon is not entitled to absolute immunity, the Government Defendants submit that he is, at minimum, entitled to qualified immunity. Id. Applying the first prong of the qualified immunity test, the Defendants say that "[r]eviewing an affidavit in support of a search warrant, notarizing the affidavit and authorizing a police officer to present that application to a judge does not state a claim under the Fourth Amendment.” Id. at 31 (quoting Lewis v. Hoppe, No. 16-cv-378-pp, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194100, at *11, 2020 WL 6149705 (E.D. Wis. Oct. 20, 2020)). Additionally, the Defendants note that the warrant application was approved by a magistrate judge, suggesting that law enforcement acted in “objective good faith.” Id. (quoting Messerschmidt v. Millender, 565 U.S. 535, 546, 132 S.Ct. 1235, 182 L.Ed.2d 47 (2012)). Finally, the Defendants contend that it is “not unconstitutional for a federal prosecutor to fail to adequately investigate prior to filing charges, and several courts have found prosecutors are entitled to qualified immunity for such claims.” Id. at 31-32. The Defendants conclude by asserting that all claims against AUSA Cannon should be dismissed because they represent “mere conjecture and bare speculation.” Id. at 32 (quoting Noble v. Brady, No. 1:19-cv-31, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115521 at *16, 2020 WL 3574667 (W.D. Pa. July 1, 2020)).

The Government Defendants go on to contend that the FBI defendants should similarly be entitled to qualified immunity. However, even if they are not, “[t]he allegations against [them] lack the requisite specificity.” Id. at 33. In particular the Defendants say that the Complaint “is deficient because it fails to specify each FBI defendant's constitutional violation” and “[i]nstead, Plaintiffs allege a collective legal wrong” without “plead[ing] that each defendant, through the official's own individual actions, has violated the Constitution.” Id. at 33. Additionally, they say that vicarious liability is inapplicable under Bivens so “government officials may not be held liable for unconstitutional conduct of their subordinates under a theory of respondeat superior.” Id. at 33-34.

As to Count One, the Defendants argue that the FBI agents are entitled to qualified immunity because the agents acted pursuant to their “discretionary functions” in creating and submitting the warrant affidavit. Id. at 35. The Defendants submit that the Plaintiffs did not establish the three required Franks elements to prove reckless falsification of the warrant affidavit, as (1) “they do not state facts to support a finding of a falsehood in the affidavit,” and instead “baldly and repeatedly state, without more, that the warrant contained ‘false and perjured’ statements,” which the court need not accept; (2) the Plaintiffs did not establish or allege “that the supposed ‘false’ information invalidates the magistrate’s finding of probable cause, and thus the legality of the search,” id. at 36-37, and that absent this, the “magistrate’s finding of probable cause is entitled to ‘great deference.’ ” Id. at 37 (quoting Moreta-Ramirez v. Lemert, 233 F. Supp. 2d 286, 291 (D.P.R. 2002)). Lastly, the Complaint “is devoid of any facts suggesting when or how the federal defendants knew or should have known that the information provided by Plaintiffs’ competitors was false or inaccurate, ‘particularly where the information involved complex technology and was potentially subject to dispute.’ ” Id. at 38 (quoting Xiaoxing Xi v. Haugen, No. 17-2132, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63863 at *26, 2021 WL 1224164 (E.D. Pa. March 31, 2021)).

Regarding Count Two, the Government Defendants offer similar arguments to those made by the DISH/NagraStar Defendants and contend that the “Artist Designs [office] was within a space shared with Naicom.” Id. at 38-39. Moreover, the Government Defendants say that “an owner or operator of a business has an expectation of privacy in commercial property that ‘is different from, and indeed less than, a similar expectation in an individual's home.’ ” Id. at 40 (citing Every v. Town of Littleton, 380 F. Supp. 3d 173, 179 (D.N.H. 2019)).

Similarly, on Count Three the Government Defendants echo the DISH/NagraStar Defendants in arguing that they were entitled to search the Naicom Data Center on August 29, 2019, because the warrant had not yet expired and their return search was a reasonable continuation of the August 27 search in light of the fact that the agents agreed to pause the initial search upon Mr. Quinones' and Mr. Vega's request. Id. at 40-42.

1. The Plaintiffs' Opposition

The Plaintiffs repeat arguments made in opposition to the DISH/NagraStar Defendants' motion to dismiss. The Court does not repeat them here. See Pls.' Opp'n to Gov't Defs.' Mot. at 22-37.

As to immunity, the Plaintiffs submit that AUSA Cannon is not entitled to absolute immunity because he “participated in this case as an investigator” and “advis[ed] and coach[ed] [the FBI agents] on how to proceed in the investigation.” Id. at 43. The Plaintiffs emphasize that “[w]hen a prosecutor performs the investigative functions normally performed by a detective or police officer, it is ‘neither appropriate nor justifiable that, for the same act, immunity should protect the one and not the other.’ ” Id. at 44 (emphasis omitted) (quoting Hampton v. Chicago, 484 F.2d 602, 608 (7th Cir. 1973)).

Second, the Plaintiffs argue that AUSA Cannon is similarly not entitled to qualified immunity and that the Government Defendants' framed their argument and cited cases without important context. Id. at 46. The Plaintiffs say that “what [they] are imputing to defendant AUSA Cannon is that after reviewing the information and analyzing the evidence collected from [the] ... criminal investigation, he knew that he did not have probable cause to seek a search warrant, and still opted to conspire with the rest of the defendants.” Id. That such behavior is unlawful, the Plaintiffs contend, is “clearly established for civil liability purposes” and “prohibited and punishable under criminal law.” Id. at 46-47 & 47 n.4 (citing 18 U.S.C. §§ 2234-2236).

As to qualified immunity for the FBI agents and supervisors, the Plaintiffs argue that “[t]he allegations against the FBI defendants support the requisite specificity” based on details disclosed in the FBI search report that Agent Lange provided to Mr. Vega. Id. at 48. However, the Plaintiffs say that “[t]o be more specific, [they] will have to wait for discovery.” Id. at 49.

Second, the Plaintiffs argue that “[p]ursuant to Franks, the affidavit and the warrant [are] void and the defendants executed an illegal search and seizure ... and are liable pursuant to Bivens” because the “federal defendants knowingly, intentionally with reckless disregard for the truth included in the warrant affidavit” false and perjured statements and “that the affidavit's remaining content [when excluding all perjured statements] was insufficient to establish probable cause.” Id. at 56. The Plaintiffs thus assert that “the federal defendants do not enjoy qualified immunity” on Count One. Id. at 57.

Third, the Plaintiffs state that the Defendants' reliance on photographs of the ADM offices to argue that Suites 207 and 208 were shared spaces, is “totally false and [is] being used with the intent to deceive the Court.” Id. at 57-58. They allege that the “federal defendants are hiding from the Court [ ] the fact that Artist Designs & Management Corporation ... was established as an independent corporation” in June 2014, before Naicom's founding, and that the ADM corporation has an independent lease for Suite 207. Id. at 58.

Fourth, the Plaintiffs say that the Court must determine “whether probable cause dissipated” in analyzing whether the August 29 search was unconstitutional. Id. at 64, 122 S.Ct. 515. The Plaintiffs argue that after executing the first search the Government Defendants learned more about the Plaintiffs' licensing and distribution contracts, yet despite this knowledge of the Plaintiffs' legitimacy, AUSA Cannon ordered a second search be performed. Id. at 64-65, 122 S.Ct. 515. As a result, the “warrant expired once it was fully executed at Naicom's Offices and Data Center.” Id. at 67, 122 S.Ct. 515.

2. The Government Defendants' Reply

In reply, the Government Defendants say that “being afforded Fourth Amendment protections does not automatically entitle a plaintiff to redress under Bivens.” Id. at 3. They say that “Bivens does not create any substantive rights” and the “[f]ederal courts lack the authority to engage in the distinctly legislative task of creating causes of action for damages to enforce federal positive law.” Id. at 4 (first quoting Martinez v. United States, No. 1:10-2156, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 129809 at *19, 2012 WL 4018010 (M.D. Pa. Aug. 7, 2012), then Hernandez v. Mesa, 104 S. Ct. 735, 752 (2020) (Thomas, J., concurring)).

As to the strength of the caselaw cited by the Plaintiffs, the Government Defendants say that the Plaintiffs do not adequately support their arguments, and where they do, the cases are factually or legally distinguishable. Id. at 8. In support, the Defendants include a table pointing out the discrepancies in, or inapposite nature of, the Plaintiffs' citations. Id. at 8-10. The Defendants further say that the Plaintiffs' reliance on Carlson is outdated because, post-Abbasi, courts have held that “Carlson[’s] holding concerning FTCA no longer has ‘vitality’ in light of [Abbasi].” Id. at 11 (quoting Turkmen v. Ashcroft, 02-cv-02307 (DLI) (SMG), 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171343, at *22, 2021 WL 4099495 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 9, 2021)).

As to immunity, the Defendants maintain that “[l]iability under ... Bivens requires personal involvement.” Id. at 13 (quoting Boudette v. Buffington, No. 20-1329, 2021 U.S. App. LEXIS 24512 at *8, 2021 WL 3626752 (10th Cir. Aug. 17, 2021)). Thus, because “AUSA Cannon did not participate in any of the challenged searches ... ‘even if those warrant applications contained falsehoods, responsibility would lie with the affiants,’ which is not AUSA Cannon.” Id. at 13-14 (quoting Boudette, 2021 U.S. App. LEXIS 24512, at *8, 2021 WL 3626752). As to the FBI Defendants' qualified immunity, they say that the “Plaintiffs [did] not deny that Artists Designs and Naicom shared office space” and argue that Artist Designs' certificate of incorporation and lease contract were not visible at the time of the search. Id. at 14, 100 S.Ct. 1468.

The Defendants also say that the “Plaintiffs' argument that probable cause ‘dissipated’ immediately after the first search [on August 27] upon examining the fruit of their seizure is unavailing.” Id. at 15, 100

S.Ct. 1468. They say that “[i]t is simply implausible for the Federal Defendants to have reviewed the electronic evidence seized from Plaintiffs within two days, especially when this evidence entailed matters of complex and evolving technology.” Id. at 16, 100 S.Ct. 1468. The Federal Defendants cite Celestin v. City of New York, 581 F. Supp. 2d 420, 432 (E.D.N.Y. 2008) for the proposition that “once probable cause was established to obtain the search warrants in question, the officers were not required to look through the evidence seized to investigate the suspect's innocence.” Id. Thus, “[i]f the FBI Defendants reasonably thought they had not concluded the search, the brief passage of time did not dissipate the continued existence of probable cause to search the premises.” Id.

Finally, the Government Defendants say that they “acted within the scope of their employment” pursuant to the “Westfall Act,” which “afford[s] absolute immunity from suit where they were acting within the scope of employment, but allow[s] the suit to proceed against the federal government.” Id. at 16-17, 100 S.Ct. 1468. In accordance with the Act, the Defendants attach a “Certification of Scope of Employment” signed by the United States Attorney for the District of Puerto Rico. Id., Attach. 1, Certification of Scope of Employment, at 1.

3. The Plaintiffs' Sur-Reply

In their sur-reply the Plaintiffs reiterate their arguments as to the applicability of the Fourth Amendment to businesses and maintain that federal question jurisdiction enables the Court to imply a cause of action in this case. See Pls.' Sur-Reply at 2-8. The Plaintiffs say that “a simple reading of [28 U.S.C. § 1331] clearly establishes that when a party has a cause of action arising under the constitution for the deprivation of constitutional rights, and the controversy involves the sum or value of $3,000, the aggrieved party can file a civil suit in federal Court for the resolution of the constitutional dispute.” Id. at 8. They argue that Congress “has not found the need to legislate any other law implementing monetary awards approved in Bivens since the reach of Section 1331 already affords compensatory or punitive damages.” Id.

The Plaintiffs further argue that, contrary to the Defendants' assertion, their case law is “current, on point, and approved by multiple Federal Courts, even post Abbasi.” Id. at 12. They insist that “Carlson remains good and controlling law” because “if the [Supreme] Court intended to overrule Carlson ... it would simply do so.” Id. at 16, 100 S.Ct. 1468 (quoting Doe v. United States, 381 F. Supp. 3d 573, 615 (M.D.N.C. 2019)).

As to the FTCA, the Plaintiffs contend that “[g]overnment employees sued in their individual capacities for acts committed within the scope of their official duties are not proper defendants to any claim brought under the FTCA” which “ends the matter.” Id. at 19, 100 S.Ct. 1468.

As to the Defendants' closing argument that they are protected by the Westfall Act, the Plaintiffs contend that “the Federal Defendants did not include this defense in their motion to dismiss, therefore, it is waived” and that even if they had, “[t]he Federal Defendants did not act within the scope of their employment.” Id. at 27. Because they did not act within the scope of employment, the Defendants “clearly do not qualify for ... protection and this Court should reject the [Westfall] certification outright.” Id. at 30.

IV. LEGAL STANDARD

Rule 12(b)(6) requires dismissal of a complaint that “fail[s] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.” FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6). To state a claim, a complaint must contain, among other things, “a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.” FED. R. CIV. P. 8(a)(2). In other words, a complaint must contain “sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to ‘state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.’ ” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007)). A claim is facially plausible when “the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.” Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556, 127 S.Ct. 1955). Plausible means “ ‘something more than merely possible’ or ‘merely consistent with a defendant’s liability.’ ” Germanowski v. Harris, 854 F.3d 68, 71-72 (1st Cir. 2017) (internal citation omitted) (quoting Schatz v. Republican State Leadership Comm., 669 F.3d 50, 55 (1st Cir. 2012); Ocasio-Hernández v. Fortuño-Burset, 640 F.3d 1, 11 (1st Cir. 2011)). This is a “ ‘context-specific’ job that compels [judges] ‘to draw on’ [their] ‘judicial experience and common sense.’ ” Schatz, 669 F.3d at 55 (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679, 129 S.Ct. 1937).

This is a “two-step analysis.” Cardigan Mountain Sch. v. N.H. Ins. Co., 787 F.3d 82, 84 (1st Cir. 2015). “First, the court must distinguish ‘the complaint’s factual allegations (which must be accepted as true) from its conclusory legal allegations (which need not be credited).’ ” García-Catalán v. United States, 734 F.3d 100, 103 (1st Cir. 2013) (quoting Morales-Cruz v. Univ. of P.R., 676 F.3d 220, 224 (1st Cir. 2012)); see also Schatz, 669 F.3d at 55 (stating that a court may “isolate and ignore statements in the complaint that simply offer legal labels and conclusions or merely rehash cause-of-action elements”). “Second, the court must determine whether the factual allegations are sufficient to support ‘the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.’ ” García-Catalán, 734 F.3d at 103 (quoting Haley v. City of Bos., 657 F.3d 39, 46 (1st Cir. 2011)).

V. DISCUSSION

“In Bivens, the [United States Supreme] Court held that a Fourth Amendment violation by federal agents, acting under color of governmental authority, gave rise to a cause of action for money damages against those agents in their individual capacities.” González v. Vélez, 864 F.3d 45, 52 (1st Cir. 2017) (citing Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 389, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619 (1971)). The Supreme Court has implied a right of action against federal officials in three circumstances. The first was in Bivens, where the Supreme Court permitted a private right of action for a Fourth Amendment violation after law enforcement officers handcuffed a man in his own home in front of his family without a warrant. González, 864 F.3d at 52 (citing Bivens, 403 U.S. at 389, 91 S.Ct. 1999). The second was in Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 243-44, 99 S.Ct. 2264, 60 L.Ed.2d 846 (1979), where a congressional staffer asserted Fifth Amendment violations due to sex discrimination against a member of Congress. The third was in Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 100 S.Ct. 1468, 64 L.Ed.2d 15 (1980), involving an Eighth Amendment claim against federal corrections officers who failed to treat a prisoner's asthma while he was incarcerated.

A. Whether Bivens Should Be Expanded

The Supreme Court has “specified that when a Bivens-type claim is lodged, the appropriate analysis must begin by determining whether the plaintiff is seeking to extend the Bivens doctrine to a new context [beyond that of Bivens, Davis, or Carlson],” González, 864 F.3d at 52 (citing Ziglar v. Abbasi, — U.S. —, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1864, 198 L.Ed.2d 290 (2017)), or to a “new category of defendants.” Hernandez v. Mesa, — U.S. —, 140 S. Ct. 735, 743, 206 L.Ed.2d 29 (2020) (quoting Correctional Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 68, 122 S.Ct. 515, 151 L.Ed.2d 456 (2001)). If a court determines the context is “new,” the court must then “ask whether an alternative means of obtaining relief exists and, if so, whether ‘special factors’ counsel hesitation in extending the reach of the Bivens doctrine.” González, 864 F.3d at 52-53 (quoting Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1865). “While the boundaries of Bivens-type liability are hazy, the Supreme Court ... [has] made plain its reluctance to extend the Bivens doctrine” beyond the settings identified in Bivens, Davis, and Carlson.<sup>8</sup> Id. at 52; see also Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1848. In fact, the Supreme Court has “gone so far as to observe that ‘if the Court's three Bivens cases [had] been ... decided today,’ it is doubtful that we would have reached the same result.” Hernandez, 140 S. Ct. at 742-43 (alteration in Hernandez) (quoting Abbasi 137 S. Ct. at 1856). The Supreme Court has also expressly stated that “for almost 40 years [it has] consistently rebuffed requests to add to the claims allowed under Bivens.” Id. at 743.

1. Whether the Case Involves a New Context or New Category of Defendants

The Court must first consider whether the Plaintiffs' claims are brought in a new context or against a new group of defendants.

a. New Context

Under the first prong of the Bivens extension analysis, “a context is considered new ‘[i]f the case is different in a meaningful way from previous Bivens cases decided by [the Supreme] Court.’” González, 864 F.3d at 52 (alterations in González) (quoting Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1859). A “meaningful difference” may be “small, at least in practical terms,” Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1865, and may arise even when the claim at issue is “based on the same constitutional provision as a claim in a case in which a damages remedy was previously recognized.” Hernandez, 140 S. Ct. at 743. The Supreme Court has explained:

A case might differ in a meaningful way because of [1] the rank of the officers involved; [2] the constitutional right at issue; [3] the generality or specificity of the official action; [4] the extent of judicial guidance as to how an officer should respond to the problem or emergency to be confronted; [5] the statutory or other legal mandate under which the officer was operating; [6] the risk of disruptive intrusion by the Judiciary into the functioning of other branches; or [7] the presence of potential special factors that previous Bivens cases did not consider.

Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1860.

In light of the Supreme “Court's expressed caution about extending the Bivens remedy ... the new-context inquiry is easily satisfied.” Id. at 1865. Generally, “[c]ourts considering whether to recognize an implied cause of action under Bivens in ‘new context[s]’ should proceed with caution because it is generally the role of Congress, not the courts, to provide for a damages remedy.” Hornof v. Waller, No. 2:19-cv-00198-JDL, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 198578, at *54 (D. Me. Oct. 20, 2020) (alteration in Hornof) (citing Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1857 (“[T]he Court has urged ‘caution’ before ‘extending Bivens remedies into any new context’ ” (quoting Malesko, 534 U.S. at 74, 122 S.Ct. 515))); see also Drewniak v. U.S. Customs & Border Prot., No. 20-cv-852-LM, 554 F.Supp.3d 348, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67937 at *12, 2021 WL 1318028 (D.N.H. Apr. 8, 2021) (“Indeed, Abbasi expressed what one Court of Appeals deemed ‘open hostility’ to recognizing additional Bivens actions” (quoting Tun-Cos v. Perrotte, 922 F.3d 514, 521 (4th Cir. 2019))).

i. Analysis

The Court must first consider whether Plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment claims present a “new context” under Supreme Court precedent.<sup>9</sup> Bivens itself is the most analogous of the three seminal Bivens cases, as it involved a Fourth Amendment claim against federal agents. See González, 864 F.3d at 52 (citing Bivens, 403 U.S. at 389, 91 S.Ct. 1999). In Bivens, the plaintiff alleged that Federal Bureau of Narcotics agents “entered his apartment and arrested him for alleged narcotics violations.” Bivens, 403 U.S. at 389, 91 S.Ct. 1999. During the arrest, officers handcuffed the plaintiff in front of his wife and children and threatened to arrest the entire family. Id. After thoroughly searching the plaintiff's apartment the federal agents took the plaintiff to the federal courthouse “where he was interrogated, booked, and subjected to a visual strip search.” Id. In his complaint the plaintiff “asserted that the arrest and search were effected without a warrant, ... that unreasonable force was employed in making the arrest,” that agents did not have probable cause, and that the agents' unlawful conduct caused him “great humiliation, embarrassment, and mental suffering.” Id. With reference to the circumstances presented in Bivens, the Court must determine whether the factual circumstances of this case are the same or present a “new context.” The Court concludes that the Plaintiffs' claims arise in a new context.

To begin, the fact that the Plaintiffs' claims arise under the Fourth Amendment, like the suit in Bivens, does not preclude a “new context” finding. “Courts do not define a Bivens cause of action at the level of ‘the Fourth Amendment’ or even at the level of ‘the unreasonable-searches-and-seizures clause.’ ” Cantú v. Moody, 933 F.3d 414, 422-23 (5th Cir. 2019) (“No one thinks Davis—which permitted a congressional employee to sue for unlawful termination in violation of the Due Process Clause—means the entirety of the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause is fair game in a Bivens action”); Farah v. Weyker, 926 F.3d 492, 499 (8th Cir. 2019) (“[T]reating all search-and-seizure cases the same would contradict the Supreme Court's direction that a context can be new even if it involves the same constitutional right as an existing case” (citing Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1859)); see also Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1859 (“Even though the right and the mechanism of injury were the same in [Malesko] as they were in Carlson, the Court held that the contexts were different”); Annapparedy v. Pascale, 996 F.3d 120, 135 (4th Cir. 2021) (noting that, unlike Bivens, “this case ... involves searches and a seizure conducted with a warrant” (emphasis original)).

The Court finds particularly instructive the Fourth Circuit case, Annapparedy v. Pascale,<sup>10</sup> which involved highly analogous circumstances. In that case the Maryland Medicaid Fraud Control Unit (MFCU) investigated a pharmacy's billing practices for Medicaid fraud. 996 F.3d at 127. After being cleared of all charges, the owner of the pharmacy brought a Bivens action. In his complaint, the owner alleged that an MFCU investigator, who was working with one of the plaintiff's employees, encouraged the employee to fabricate evidence and “passed ... false information to prosecutors ‘as if it were accurate and reliable.’ ” Id. The plaintiff also alleged that investigators with the United States Department of Health and Human Services rigged findings, ignored potentially exculpatory information, and then “used this falsified analysis as evidence to obtain [ ] a search warrant.” Id. Among his accusations, the plaintiff claimed that the FBI had “actual knowledge” of the “fabrications and falsehoods” and “acted at least recklessly in making them” and “without this flawed evidence ... the [a]ffidavit would not have established probable cause, and the magistrate judge would not have issued the warrants.” Id.

The Annapparedy Court ultimately concluded that the case presented a “new context” because the “alleged misdeeds” were different than those in Bivens, the search involved a warrant, proving the case would impose on the executive branch in a way that Bivens did not, and the case involved the search of a corporate entity rather than of an individual. Id. at 135-137. Given the Fourth Circuit's sound reasoning and the similarities between Annappareddy and this case, that Court comes to a similar conclusion here.

First, the Court notes, and finds meaningfully different, the Defendants' actions in this case compared to those in Bivens. In Bivens the defendants handcuffed the plaintiff in front of his family, threatened to arrest his family, and booked and strip-searched the plaintiff. The Defendants in this case did not do anything akin to this conduct. Based on the Amended Supplemental Complaint, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants conducted a preliminary investigation and alerted the FBI that Naicom may be pirating copyrighted materials. Then, all the Defendants met regularly regarding the investigation and allegedly conspired to falsify a search warrant and affidavit, after which the FBI Defendants and DISH/NagraStar Defendants executed the search warrant and questioned Mr. Quinones and Mr. Vega.

Notably, the law enforcement actions in this case and those in Bivens occurred at different points in the life of a criminal case. In Bivens the plaintiff was immediately arrested for his alleged criminal conduct; in this case, the Defendants were seeking a search warrant in the hopes of uncovering illegal conduct that would give probable cause for an eventual arrest. As noted by the Eighth Circuit, these types of “information-gathering and case-building activit[ies] are a different part of police work than the apprehension, detention, and physical searches at issue in Bivens.” Farah, 926 F.3d at 496, 499 (concluding that a complaint accusing the police of “exaggerating and inventing facts in reports, hiding evidence that would have exonerated [defendants], and pressuring and manipulating the alleged victims into lying” presented materially different circumstances from those in Bivens); see also Annappareddy, 996 F.3d at 136 (“[T]he Court in Bivens never contemplated the kind of extensive data gathering, analysis, examination, and coordination at issue in this case” (quotation marks and citations omitted)); Greenlaw v. Klimek, No. 4:20-CV-311-SDJ, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 245789 at *13, 2021 WL 6112784 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 27, 2021) (concluding that “a case about investigators and a prosecutor who allegedly falsified evidence in connection with a lengthy criminal investigation to facilitate a notorious investor's short and distort scheme” involved materially different conduct than that in Bivens).

A particularly important point of factual distinction between this case and Bivens is the warrant. Although both Bivens and this case involve Fourth Amendment claims, Bivens centered on an unreasonable search and seizure without a warrant; in this case, the Plaintiffs do not dispute that the Defendants had a warrant. Instead, the Plaintiffs argue that the Defendants did not have probable cause to obtain the warrant, alleging that the “warrant application contained deliberately and/or reckless false and perjured statements, ... which misled the Magistrate Judge to believe probable cause existed.” Suppl. Am. Compl. ¶ 7.

The issuance of a warrant makes this case meaningfully different from Bivens because “the Fourth Amendment sharply distinguishes between with-warrant and warrantless searches, treating the introduction of a warrant as a signal moment in the proceedings.” Annappareddy, 966 F.3d at 135-36; see also Greenlaw, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 245789, at *14, 2021 WL 6112784. In particular, the Supreme Court has explained:

Because a search warrant provides the detached scrutiny of a neutral magistrate, which is a more reliable safeguard against improper searches than the hurried judgment of a law enforcement officer engaged in the often competitive enterprise of ferreting out crime, we have expressed a strong preference for warrants and declared that in a doubtful or marginal case a search under a warrant may be sustainable where without one it would fall.

United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 913-14, 104 S.Ct. 3405, 82 L.Ed.2d 677 (1984) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)). Given the Supreme Court's differentiation between searches with and without warrants and the development of the “good faith” exception for searches with warrants, see id., the Court concludes that a search with a warrant—regardless of whether it was properly acquired with probable cause—is meaningfully different from the warrantless search in Bivens.

The Court agrees with the Defendants that the warrant at issue here ran against Naicom, the corporation, and not against Mr. Quinones and Mr. Vega as individuals, which further differentiates this case from Bivens. As the Fourth Circuit has noted, “[t]here appear to be no cases—in the Supreme Court or any other court—approving a Bivens claim for acts taken against a corporate entity” and this Court has found none. Annappareddy, 996 F.3d at 136-37 (“[W]e find it significant that the search warrants in this case ran against the corporate entity of Pharmacare, and not the plaintiff himself”); see also Life Savers Concepts Ass'n v. Wynar, 387 F. Supp. 3d 989, 998-99 (N.D. Cal. 2019) (“Thus, because Bivens, Davis, and Carlson do not involve a corporate entity seeking to assert a Bivens action on behalf of employees, the instant case presents a new Bivens context”).

The Plaintiffs argue that they are entitled to a Bivens remedy because businesses are protected by the Fourth Amendment. In particular they cite G.M. Leasing Corporation v. United States, 429 U.S. 338, 353, 97 S.Ct. 619, 50 L.Ed.2d 530 (1977), for the proposition that “[t]he Supreme Court's precedents leave no doubt that proprietors of commercial premises, including corporations, also have the right to conduct their business free from unreasonable official privacy intrusion.” Pls.' Opp'n to Gov't Defs.' Mot. at 23. Although the Plaintiffs are correct that the Supreme Court has held that businesses are entitled to Fourth Amendment protections, this broad proposition does not save them from the conclusion that a Fourth Amendment case involving a business is meaningfully different than Bivens. The Court agrees with the Government Defendants that “being afforded Fourth Amendment protections does not automatically entitle a plaintiff to redress under Bivens,” Gov't Defs.' Reply at 3, because “[n]ot all constitutional claims are cognizable in a Bivens action.” Drewniak, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67937, at *10, 2021 WL 1318028. If falling under the umbrella of Fourth Amendment protections was all that was needed to seek redress under Bivens, the Supreme Court would not have instructed courts to analyze whether a Bivens action presents a new context or is brought against new defendants.

In Farah v. Weyker, the Eighth Circuit found relevant how directly the defendant's actions caused the alleged harm. The Farah Court noted that Bivens involved “humiliation, embarrassment, and mental suffering,” which could all be directly attributed to the defendants' conduct. 926 F.3d at 499. In contrast, the Farah Court found that allegations of exaggeration and inventing facts in reports and hiding evidence did not reflect direct harm, rather harm through “intervening steps involv[ing] decisions by independent legal actors” including the prosecutors who brought charges, the grand jury that voted to indict, and the magistrate who approved the defendants' continued detention. Id.; see also Xiaoxing Xi v. Haugen, No. 17-2132, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63863 at *48-49, 2021 WL 1224164 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 31, 2021) (concluding that the alleged harm was caused through intervening steps in an “indirect mechanism of injury” where the plaintiff claimed that the defendant recklessly disregarded evidence of his innocence, made false statements and representations in reports, affidavits, and communications with prosecutors, and used false testimony to get an indictment).

The Court finds this argument persuasive under the circumstances of this case and concludes that the alleged harm occurred after a series of intervening decisions. The DISH/NagraStar Defendants brought the Plaintiffs' potentially illegal activity to the attention of the FBI, but the search only took place after (1) the FBI agents evaluated the claims and decided to pursue the case; (2) AUSA Cannon evaluated the FBI evidence to determine that there was probable cause to seek a search warrant; and (3) the Magistrate Judge made an independent finding that there was probable cause to grant the Defendants a search warrant. The alleged harm caused by the DISH/NagraStar Defendants would not have occurred without the intervening acts of the FBI, the prosecutor, and the Magistrate Judge; the alleged harm caused by the FBI Defendants would not have occurred but for the intervening acts of the prosecutor and the Magistrate Judge; and the alleged harm caused by the prosecutor would not have occurred except for the Magistrate Judge's determination of probable cause, and the FBI's subsequent execution of the warrant. As in Farah and Xiaoxing Xi, unlike the conduct of the Bivens defendants who handcuffed, humiliated, and strip searched the plaintiff, here, the connection between the Defendants' actions and the alleged harm is attenuated.

In addition to different circumstances, this case requires different proof than what was required in Bivens. There, the plaintiff had to prove a physical invasion and search without probable cause; here, the Plaintiffs must prove that the Defendants made “intentional or reckless misstatements or omissions [that] implicate the very truthfulness, not just the sufficiency, of a warrant application.” Burke v. Town of Walpole, 405 F.3d 66, 82 (1st Cir. 2005); see also Ahmed v. Weyker, 984 F.3d 564, 569 (8th Cir. 2020) (comparing doctrinal differences between false arrest and warrant falsification cases). Resolving this issue requires application of Franks v. Delaware, 348 U.S. 154 (1978), to determine whether the affidavit submitted by the Defendants contained a falsehood, whether eliminating the falsehood would negate probable cause, and whether the falsehood was included in the affidavit purposefully, deliberately or with reckless disregard for the truth. Jordan v. Town of Waldoboro, 943 F.3d 532, 541 (1st Cir. 2019); see also Burke, 405 U.S. at 82, 92 S.Ct. 862 (“[T]he Franks standard for suppression of evidence informs the scope of qualified immunity in [ ] civil damages suit[s] against officers who allegedly procure a warrant based on an untruthful application”).

The Plaintiffs say that proving their claim “would not require discovery or an investigation into evidence before numerous decision-makers” and that documents already on the Court's docket show that the Magistrate Judge did not have probable cause. Pls.' Opp'n to DISH/NagraStar Defs.' Mot. at 26. The Court disagrees. Because the Franks analysis probes not only the sufficiency of the affidavit, but its truthfulness, to prove their claim the Plaintiffs would have to delve into the subjective beliefs of the officers at the time of the warrant and determine what the officers knew, at what points in time they knew certain information, and what information was shared between the DISH/NagraStar Defendants and the Government Defendants. This, in turn, would require the Plaintiffs to engage in the “type of fact-checking and conscious-probing, ... which can, as the Supreme Court has warned, impose ‘substantial costs.’ ” Annappareddy, 996 F.3d at 136 (quoting Ahmed, 984 F.3d at 570); see also Ahmed, 984 F.3d at 568 (“Lying and manipulation, however bad they might be, are simply not the same as the physical invasions that were at the heart of Bivens”).

In sum, the Court finds that there are ample differences that render this case a “new context” dissimilar from Bivens, Davis, or Carlson: (1) the case involves investigatory actions in a nascent criminal case rather than the arrest of a suspect; (2) the Defendants were conducting a search with a warrant rather than a warrantless search; (3) the search was of business premises rather than a home; and (4) the Plaintiffs do not ground their claims in a physical intrusion but rather allege the falsification of a warrant affidavit, subjecting their claims to the Franks standard. Even if the “new context” were a closer call, the Court would nonetheless reach the same conclusion given the Supreme Court's explicit hesitancy to expand Bivens to new contexts and the low threshold for what qualifies as a “new context.”

b. New Category of Defendants

A second way that Bivens can be extended is if the claims are brought against a category of defendant different from those in Bivens, Davis, or Carlson Hernandez, 140 S. Ct. at 743. However, a defendant does not need to prove that a case presents both a new context and is brought against a new category of defendants. In this particular case, the DISH/NagraStar Defendants argue that the Court should dismiss the claims against them because private investigators are “new categories of defendants.” DISH/NagraStar Defs.’ Mot. at 14-18. To resolve this issue the Court must determine whether the DISH/NagraStar Defendants were private parties “acting under the color of federal law,” or fully private parties whose inclusion in a Bivens lawsuit would expand liability to a new category of defendants.

To begin, the Court notes the disagreement among the district courts in this circuit on whether the First Circuit flatly prohibits Bivens claims against private parties, regardless of whether they were acting under color of federal law, or whether a court must look to the individual conduct and circumstances in the case, applying a similar framework as to § 1983 claims. Compare Marinkovic v. Osborne, No. 19-cv-209-JL, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99364 at *5, 2019 WL 2477710 (D.N.H. Apr. 19, 2019) (“Liability under Bivens, however, cannot attach to private actors”), with Rios v. United States, No. 14-40171-IT, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40262 at *21-22, 2016 WL 1212530 (D. Mass. Feb. 26, 2016) (“When determining whether a party is a ‘federal actor’ under Bivens, courts rely on tests analogous to those employed in Section 1983 actions”); see also Chin v. Bowen, 833 F.2d 21, 24 (2d Cir. 1987) (“Courts of Appeals have held that section 1983 concepts of state action apply in determining whether action was taken ‘under color of federal law’ for Bivens purposes”).

This confusion originates in a footnote in Fletcher v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust National Bank, 496 F.2d 927 (1st Cir. 1974) which states that “there is no cause of action against private parties acting under color of federal law or custom.” Id. at 932 n.8. The defendant in that case was a National Bank. Later, in Stoutt v. Banco Popular De Puerto Rico, 320 F.3d 26 (1st Cir. 2003), the First Circuit stated that “[t]he Supreme Court has already limited Bivens actions by refusing to extend them to private entities acting under color of federal law.” Id. at 33 (citing Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 122 S.Ct. 515, 151 L.Ed.2d 456). At the same time, the First Circuit has not definitively ruled whether a private entity can, under certain circumstances, act “under color of federal law.” Consequently, one district court questioned the binding effect of the First Circuit's statement in Fletcher. See Sarro v. Cornell Corr., Inc., 248 F. Supp. 2d 52, 58 (D.R.I. 2003) (stating that reliance on the Fletcher footnote is “misplaced” because “Fletcher did not involve a Bivens claim” and that the First Circuit had previously implied, in Gerena v. Puerto Rico Legal Services, Inc., 697 F.2d 447 (1st Cir. 1983), “that a private party acting under color of federal law may be liable under Bivens”).

Were the Court to apply the more flexible § 1983 “color of law” tests, it would have to consider (1) the state compulsion test; (2) the nexus/joint action test; and (3) the public function test. Klunder v. Brown Univ., 778 F.3d 24, 30-31 (1st Cir. 2015). Under the state compulsion test, “a private party is fairly characterized as a state actor when the state has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the [challenged conduct] must in law be deemed to be that of the State.” Id. at 30 (quoting Estades-Negroni v. CPC Hosp. San Juan Capestrano, 412 F.3d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 2005) (alteration in Estades-Negroni) (internal quotation marks omitted)). Second, under the nexus/joint action test, a private party is a state actor “where an examination of the totality of the circumstances reveals that the state has ‘so far insinuated itself into a position of interdependence with the [private party] that it was a joint participant in [the challenged activity].’ ” Id. at 31 (quoting Estades-Negroni, 412 F.3d at 5 (alterations in Estades-Negroni) (quoting Bass v. Parkwood Hosp., 180 F.3d 234, 242 (5th Cir. 1999))). Finally, a private party is a state actor under the “public function” test “if the plaintiff establishes that, in engaging in the challenged conduct, the private party performed a public function that has been ‘traditionally the exclusive prerogative of the State.’ ” Id. (quoting Estades-Negroni, 412 F.3d at 5) (quoting Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 1004, 102 S.Ct. 2777, 73 L.Ed.2d 534 (1982)).

Applying the § 1983 tests here—accepting as true the Plaintiffs’ allegations that the DISH/NagraStar Defendants conspired with the Government Defendants, met with FBI agents throughout the investigation, accompanied the FBI to execute the search warrant, searched Naicom without FBI supervision, and questioned Mr. Quinones and Mr. Pimentel alongside the FBI agents—the Plaintiffs have properly stated a claim that the DISH/NagraStar Defendants may have been acting under the color of federal law. The facts as alleged suggest that the DISH/NagraStar Defendants were acting as federal agents would by insinuating themselves into every aspect of the investigation. See Second Am. Compl. ¶ 98 (describing the DISH/NagraStar Defendants as “expert workers” for the FBI). While it is possible that their substantial involvement was due to the technical nature of the investigation subject matter, that is a factual issue requiring additional discovery.

However, this conclusion does not save the Plaintiffs' Bivens claim against the DISH/NagraStar Defendants. The law does not require that the case present both a new context and a new category of defendants for the Court to dismiss this Bivens action. That this case presents a new context is, by itself, enough to preclude Plaintiffs' Bivens action from proceeding against the DISH/NagraStar Defendants, even if Plaintiffs have properly stated a claim that they were acting under the color of federal law.

Separately, applying “new defendants” caselaw, the Plaintiffs cannot maintain a Bivens action against AUSA Cannon, as it is well established that prosecutors are “new defendants” that would expand Bivens. See Hornof, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 198578, at *56 (“Three [of the defendants] are prosecutors, who have never been recognized by the Supreme Court as proper defendants under Bivens”); see also Greenlaw, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 245789, at *14, 2021 WL 6112784 (“Defendant Bunch is a prosecutor, not an on-the-scene, investigative officer. His role as a federal officer—which includes reviewing evidence, deciding whether to seek a search warrant, and pursuing criminal charges—meaningfully differs from the narcotics agents in Bivens”); Martin v. Gray, No. 20-CV-741-JPS, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162381 at *12, 2021 WL 3855566 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 27, 2021) (“The addition of prosecutors would likely expand Bivens to a new set of defendants—one historically afforded great discretion” (citing Wayte v. United States, 470 U.S. 598, 607-08, 105 S.Ct. 1524, 84 L.Ed.2d 547 (1985) (“[T]he decision to prosecute is particularly ill-suited to judicial review”))). The Bivens action against AUSA Cannon is therefore improper as he is both a “new defendant” and the action arises in a “new context.”

2. Special Factors Counseling Against Extension of a Bivens Remedy

Because this case presents a “new context,” the Court must next consider whether there are special factors counseling hesitation against extending Bivens. The Supreme Court has yet to define “special factors counselling hesitation”<sup>11</sup> before expanding Bivens liability but has described it as something that “causes a court to pause before acting without express congressional authorization.” Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1857-58. Under this second step, courts must consider “separation-of-powers principles” and “whether the Judiciary is well suited, absent congressional action or instruction, to consider and weigh the costs and benefits of allowing a damages action to proceed.” Id at 1858; see also Drewniak, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67937, at *15, 2021 WL 1318028 (“[C]ourts have found ‘military concerns, separation of powers, the comprehensiveness of available statutory schemes, national security concerns, and foreign policy considerations’ to be special factors counseling hesitation” (quoting Alvarez v. U.S. Immigr. & Customs Enforcement, 818 F.3d 1194, 1206 (11th Cir. 2016))).

Courts should also consider whether there are alternative remedies available to the plaintiff. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1858, 1862-63. “For if Congress has created ‘any alternative, existing process for protecting the [injured party’s] interest’ that itself may ‘amoun[t] to a convincing reason for the Judicial Branch to refrain from providing a new and freestanding remedy in damages.’ ” Id. (alterations in Abbasi). (quoting Wilkie v. Robbins, 551 U.S. 537, 550, 127 S.Ct. 2588, 168 L.Ed.2d 389 (2007)). However, courts are not required to find both “special factors counseling hesitation” and an alternative remedy. Carlson, 446 U.S. at 18, 100 S.Ct. 1468 (explaining that a private right of action may be defeated when defendants show either special factors or an alternative remedy). The Second and Fifth Circuits have described the threshold for “factors counseling hesitation” as “remarkably low.” Hernandez v. Mesa, 885 F.3d 811, 823 (5th Cir. 2018) (citing De La Paz v. Coy, 786 F.3d 367, 378 (5th Cir. 2015) (quoting Arar v. Ashcroft, 585 F.3d 559, 574 (2d Cir. 2009) (en banc))).

a. Separation of Powers Concerns

The Court is reluctant to extend Bivens in this factual context in part due to separation of powers concerns. As noted above, “recognizing an implied cause of action here would pose a ... risk of intruding on the executive branch’s investigatory and prosecutorial functions.” Greenlaw, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 245789, at *14, 2021 WL 6112784. The type of “fact-checking and conscience-probing,” Annappareddy, 996 F.3d at 136, that this case would require, were it to proceed, would require the judicial branch to “prob[e] executive charging decisions and peek[ ] behind the curtain” of investigatory and prosecutorial decision-making. Farah, 926 F.3d at 499. As the Supreme Court has recognized, probing the “subjective good faith of government officials” comes with “substantial costs” as it could “distract[ ] ... officials from their governmental duties, inhibit[ ] ... discretionary action, and deter[ ] ... people from public service.” Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 816, 102 S.Ct. 2727, 73 L.Ed.2d 396 (1982); see also Annappareddy, 996 F.3d at 136 (citing Ahmed, 984 F.3d at 569 (quoting Harlow, 457 U.S. at 816, 102 S.Ct. 2727)); Drewniak, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67937, at *28-29, 2021 WL 1318028 (“ ‘Bivens liability could deter agents from vigorous enforcement’ of their duties” (quoting De La Paz, 786 F.3d at 379)).

As to AUSA Cannon specifically, the Court notes that “[t]he Attorney General and United States Attorneys retain ‘broad discretion’ to enforce the Nation's criminal laws.” United States v. Armstrong, 517 U.S. 456, 464, 116 S.Ct. 1480, 134 L.Ed.2d 687 (1996) (quoting Wayte v. United States, 470 U.S. 598, 607, 105 S.Ct. 1524, 84 L.Ed.2d 547 (1985)). Because United States Attorneys are “designated by statute as the President's delegates to help him discharge his constitutional responsibilit[ies],” they have a great deal of “latitude.” Id. (citing U.S. CONST., art. II, § 3; 28 U.S.C. §§ 516, 547). As such, courts are “properly hesitant” to examine prosecutorial decisions, id. at 465, 116 S.Ct. 1480 (quoting Wayte, 470 U.S. at 608, 105 S.Ct. 1524), because of the “relative competence of prosecutors” and a desire “not to unnecessarily impair the performance of a core executive constitutional function,” delay prosecutions or “undermine prosecutorial effectiveness by revealing the Government's enforcement policy.” Id. (quoting Wayte, 470 U.S. at 607, 105 S.Ct. 1524). Because “a Bivens action is not ‘a proper vehicle for altering an entity's policy’ ” or questioning the “formulation and implementation of a general policy,” Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1860, it would be inappropriate for the Court to interfere with the investigatory decisions and policies of the United States Attorney's Office.

To the extent that the Plaintiffs cite Lanuza v. Love, 899 F.3d 1019 (9th Cir. 2018) to reason that separation of powers concerns are not present in this case, see Pls.' Opp'n to Gov't Defs.' Mot. at 29, 32, Lanuza is factually distinguishable. The plaintiff in Lanuza had been prosecuted, pleaded guilty, and was sentenced prior to initiating his Bivens action. See id. at 1022-23. Because Lanuza had already been prosecuted, the court reasoned that “[his] civil suit against Love will likely involve no more investigative intrusion than the criminal prosecution initiated against Love by the United States itself.” Id. at 1030. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit determined that the Bivens action would “involve [undisputed] facts the government itself made publicly available” and would “not require unnecessary inquiry ... into government deliberations or policy making.” Id. at 1029.

Here, in contrast, the Plaintiffs have not been prosecuted and allowing Plaintiffs' Bivens action to proceed would require the judicial branch to inquire into the intentions, decisions, and policies of the executive branch in its investigative and prosecutorial decisions. See Greenlaw, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 245789, at *21-22, 2021 WL 6112784 (distinguishing Lanuza on similar grounds); see also Drewniak, 2021 U.S. Dist.

LEXIS 67937, at *30, 2021 WL 1318028 (concluding that a Bivens action against Customs and Border Patrol agents would result in “unwarranted judicial intrusion into an area in which the Judiciary lacks comparative constitutional authority and competence”).

Allowing Plaintiffs' Bivens claims to proceed would also intrude on the legislative branch, as the Judiciary is not well-positioned to resolve whether the Plaintiffs are entitled to the remedy they seek. Instead, Congress is in the best position to “consider and weigh the costs and benefits of allowing a damages action to proceed” and what is in the public's best interest. Hernandez, 140 S. Ct. at 743; see also Byrd v. Lamb, 990 F.3d 879, 881 (5th Cir. 2021). Congress has long been aware of the Supreme Court's Bivens precedent and could have enacted legislation making Bivens actions fully analogous with § 1983 claims. It has not done so. In the absence of congressional action and in light of the Supreme Court's stated hesitancy to extend Bivens to new contexts, allowing the Plaintiffs' Bivens action to proceed would be a foray into territory reserved for the legislative branch.

b. Alternative Remedial Scheme

The Court next considers whether there is an alternative remedial scheme available to the Plaintiffs. See González, 864 F.3d at 53 (“The existence of such alternative processes is a special factor that counsels convincingly against applying the holding in Davis to federal employees generally”).

i. The Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA)

Both the DISH/NagraStar Defendants and the Government Defendants point to the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) as an alternative remedial scheme that precludes the Plaintiffs' Bivens remedy. See DISH/Nagra Star Defs.' Mot. at 21; Gov't Defs.' Mot. at 17-18. A plaintiff “may seek recovery directly from the United States under the FTCA,” Hernandez, 140 S. Ct. at 748, which provides “the exclusive remedy for most claims against Government employees arising out of their official conduct.” Hui v. Castaneda, 559 U.S. 799, 806, 130 S.Ct. 1845, 176 L.Ed.2d 703 (2010).

As a threshold matter, the Court must determine whether the Plaintiffs could theoretically recover under the FTCA. “Under the FTCA, the United States waives its sovereign immunity for ‘injury or loss of property ... caused by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of any employee of the Government while acting within the scope of his office or employment, under circumstances where the United States, if a private person, would be liable to the claimant in accordance with the law of the place where the act or omission occurred.’ ” Nogueras Cartagena v. United States, 172 F. Supp. 2d 296, 309 (D.P.R. 2001) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)). Section 2680(h) of the FCTA exempts certain intentional torts from the sovereign immunity waiver but expressly allows claims for “assault, battery, false imprisonment, false arrest, abuse of process, or malicious prosecution” that originate from “acts or omissions of investigative or law enforcement officers of the United States Government.” Id. at 311; 28 U.S.C. § 2680(h).

Courts have expressly held that fraudulent warrant applications and fraudulent affidavits in support of a warrant fall within the scope of the “abuse of process” claims permitted against investigative or law enforcement officers under the FTCA. See Hornof, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 198578, at *39-40. “Under the FTCA, [courts] look to [the] ‘law of the place’ where the alleged wrongful actions occurred,” in this case Puerto Rico. Rucci v. United States INS, 405 F.3d 45, 49 (1st Cir. 2005). “Under Puerto Rico law, ‘the two basic elements of abuse of process are a bad motive, and the use of a legal process for an improper, collateral objective,’ ” id. at 49 (quoting Microsoft Corp. v. Computer Warehouse, 83 F. Supp. 2d 256, 261 (D.P.R. 2000)), which includes “challenges to the legal action's procedural components.” Id. Thus, the Plaintiffs could bring their claims under the FTCA, although not against all the Defendants. Prosecutors are not “investigative or law enforcement officers” meaning the Plaintiffs cannot bring an FTCA action against AUSA Cannon but could bring one against the FBI Defendants. See Hornof, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 198578, at *40 (citing Yacubian v. United States, 750 F.3d 100, 108 (1st Cir. 2014)).

Having determined that the Plaintiffs could recover under the FTCA, at least from the FBI Defendants, the Court must now turn to the heart of the parties' dispute, which is whether FTCA provides a suitable alternative remedial scheme.

The Plaintiffs argue that the Supreme Court foreclosed the FTCA as a suitable alternative to Bivens in Carlson v. Green. In Carlson, the Supreme Court held that the FTCA was not a “substitute” for recovery under Bivens. 445 U.S. at 18, 100 S.Ct. 883. The Court reasoned that the petitioners had not pointed to anything in the FTCA “or its legislative history to show that Congress meant to pre-empt a Bivens remedy or to create an equally effective remedy for constitutional violations.” Id. The FTCA, the Court said, “was enacted long before Bivens was decided, [and] when Congress amended FTCA in 1974 ... the congressional comments accompanying that amendment made it crystal clear that Congress views FTCA and Bivens as parallel, complementary causes of action.” Id. at 19-20, 100 S.Ct. 883.

Forty years later in Hernandez v. Mesa, faced with another Bivens suit, the Supreme Court looked to several federal statutes for alternative relief, including the FTCA, reasoning that the “pattern of congressional action ... gives [the Court] further reason to hesitate about extending Bivens.” 140 S. Ct. at 749. The Court explained that traditionally, “civil litigation addressed abusive conduct by federal officers ... by subjecting them to liability for common-law torts.” Id. at 748. The Court went on to say that after it decided Westfall v. Erwin, 484 U.S. 292, 108 S.Ct. 580, 98 L.Ed.2d 619 (1988), “Congress passed the so-called Westfall Act, formally the Federal Employees Liability Reform and Tort Compensation Act of 1988 ... [which] makes the ... FTCA ‘the exclusive remedy for most claims against Government employees arising out of their official conduct.’ ” Id. (quoting Hui v. Castaneda, 559 U.S. 799, 806, 130 S.Ct. 1845, 176 L.Ed.2d 703 (2010)). In a footnote, the Court explained that “[t]he Act also permits claims ‘brought for a violation of the Constitution.’ By enacting this provision, Congress made clear that it was not attempting to abrogate Bivens, but the provision certainly does not suggest ... that Congress intended for a robust enforcement of Bivens remedies.... Instead, the provision simply left Bivens where it found it. It is not a license to create a new Bivens remedy in a context we have never before addressed.” Id. at 748 n.9 (internal quotation and citation omitted) (citing Malesko, 534 U.S. at 68, 122 S.Ct. 515).

Since Hernandez and Abbasi, there has been confusion among the courts as to whether the FTCA is an alternative remedy foreclosing a Bivens action and the extent to which Abbasi and Hernandez impact the Supreme Court's holding in Carlson. Compare Boule v. Egbert, 998 F.3d 370, 392 (9th Cir. 2021) (“[T]he exclusiveness of the FTCA remedy was not extended to constitutional torts such as Fourth Amendment ... claims”); Helvig v. United States, No. CV 18-7939 PSG (JCx), 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 228444, at *19, 2019 WL 8108720 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 1, 2019) (stating that “the Westfall Act ‘has an explicit exception for Bivens claims, allowing them to proceed against individuals,’ suggesting Congress did not intend to foreclose a Bivens remedy” (quoting Rodriguez v. Swartz, 899 F.3d 719, 740 (9th Cir. 2018))), with Turkmen v. Ashcroft, No. 02-cv-02307 (DLI) (SMG), 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171343 at *21-22, 2021 WL 4099495 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 9, 2021) (“In Ziglar, the Supreme Court made it clear that the legal landscape has changed since Carlson.... In determining that the FTCA is an available alternative remedy to preclude a Bivens remedy, the magistrate judge properly compared Carlson and Ziglar and found that ‘Ziglar takes a far broader view of’ alternative remedies that preclude a Bivens remedy”).

The First Circuit has not taken a position on this issue, but the Court need not resolve this dispute here. In Carlson the Court stated that an implied right of action could be defeated in two situations: (1) when defendants present “special factors counselling hesitation;” or (2) when the Plaintiffs have an alternative remedy available. 446 U.S. at 18-19, 100 S.Ct. 1468. In Carlson, the Supreme Court found neither special factors nor an alternative remedy and thus allowed plaintiffs' Bivens action to proceed. Regardless of the applicability of the FTCA, here, the Court found significant separation of powers concerns and concluded that the judiciary is not in the best position to imply a cause of action. In other words, unlike Carlson, there are special factors counseling hesitation here. These special factors are, themselves, sufficient to deny Plaintiffs' Bivens action. See Hernandez, 140 S. Ct. at 750 n.12 (“[W]e explained that existence of alternative remedies was merely a further reason not to create Bivens liability”); Greenlaw, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 245789, at *18, 2021 WL 6112784 (“the FTCA's statutory scheme is only one of several factors giving this Court pause, and its absence would not lead to a contrary result”). Moreover, the bar for what “counsels hesitation” against expanding Bivens is so low that the simple fact that the FTCA is a potential alternative is sufficient to give this Court pause. See Oliva v. Nivar, 973 F.3d 438, 443-444 (5th Cir. 2020) (“[T]he existence of a statutory scheme for torts committed by federal officers’ weighs against inferring a new cause of action” (quoting Cantú, 933 F.3d at 423)).

To the extent that the FTCA is available to them, Plaintiffs say that the FTCA is not an appropriate alternative to Bivens because they cannot get punitive damages and the FTCA does not permit jury trials. See Pls.' Opp'n to DISH/NagraStar Defs.' Mot. at 43-44. As to the unavailability of punitive damages, the Supreme Court and First Circuit have dispensed with that argument. In González v. Vélez, the First Circuit rejected the plaintiff's argument that Title VII and the Civil Services Reform Act (CSRA) did not provide an “equally effective remediation” to Bivens because punitive damages were unavailable. 864 F.3d at 54. Citing Bush v. Lucas, 462 U.S. 367, 372, 103 S.Ct. 2404, 76 L.Ed.2d 648 (1983), in which the Supreme Court denied a Bivens claim even though the alternative remedial scheme, the CSRA, did not include a punitive damages remedy, the First Circuit concluded that “[t]he fact that other or different relief might be available” did not justify creating “new causes of action on an ad hoc basis [that] would create a patchwork” of remedies, which Congress had been attempting to avoid. Id. at 54-55.

Applying this reasoning, the absence of punitive damages under the FTCA is not a proper basis to expand Bivens and imply a cause of action under the factual circumstances of this case. Given congressional efforts to craft a tort remedy against government officials through the FTCA, the judiciary is ill “suited, absent congressional action or instruction, to consider and weigh the costs and benefits of allowing a damages action to proceed” in a new context that departs from the circumstances in Bivens. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1857-58. In Farah v. Weyker, the Eighth Circuit stated that “the [Supreme] Court has ... made clear that even remedies that provide no compensation for victims and little deterrence for violators, such as injunctions and writs of habeas corpus, trigger the general rule that ‘when alternative methods of relief are available, a Bivens remedy usually is not.’ ” 926 F.3d at 502 (emphasis in original) (quoting Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1863); see also Malesko, 534 U.S. at 74, 122 S.Ct. 515 (holding that injunctive relief and grievances filed through the Bureau of Prisons' Administrative Remedy Program are adequate alternative remedies).

Similarly, that the FTCA does not offer sufficient deterrence or allow for a jury trial does not justify allowing Plaintiffs' Bivens action to proceed. The wide array of alternative remedies endorsed by the Supreme Court in cases denying a Bivens action similarly suggests that an adequate alternative remedy need not provide the plaintiff a jury trial. See Ramirez v. Tatum, No. 17 Civ. 7801 (LGS), 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88027 at *5-6, 2019 WL 2250339 (S.D.N.Y. May 24, 2019) ("Plaintiff's argument that the FTCA is an insufficient alternative remedy, because it disallows jury trials, is invalid. As the Supreme Court has explained, sufficient alternative remedies come in many forms other than jury trials, including habeas corpus petitions, a civil service regulatory complaint process, an injunction or 'some other form of equitable relief' " (quoting Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1858, 1865)); see also Minneci v. Pollard, 565 U.S. 118, 129, 132 S.Ct. 617, 181 L.Ed.2d 606 (2012) ("We note, as Pollard points out, that state tort law may sometimes prove less generous than would a Bivens action, say, by capping damages.... But we cannot find in this fact sufficient basis to determine state law inadequate. State-law remedies and a potential Bivens remedy need not be perfectly congruent").

ii. Rule 41(g)

The DISH/NagraStar and Government Defendants further argue that Rule 41(g) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides an alternative remedy for the Plaintiffs that precludes their Bivens action. See DISH/NagraStar Def.'s Mot. at 22; Gov't Defs.' Mot. at 20. Rule 41(g) states in relevant part:

A person aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure of property or by the deprivation of property may move for the property's return. The motion must be filed in the district where the property was seized. The court must receive evidence on any factual issue necessary to decide the motion. If it grants the motion, the court must return the property to the movant, but may impose reasonable conditions to protect access to the property and its use in later proceedings.

FED. R. CRIM. P. 41(g). District courts in this Circuit have previously held that Rule 41(g) recovery can preclude a Bivens action. See Omran v. United States, No. 14-13881-LTS, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 190990, at *28, 2016 WL 4077675 (D. Mass. June 1, 2016).

The Plaintiffs say that this remedy is not a suitable alternative to Bivens because it is an equitable remedy and monetary damages are unavailable. Although Rule 41(g) does not provide damages as a remedy, “[a] remedial statute need not provide full relief to the plaintiff to qualify as a ‘special factor.’ ” Id. (quoting Leyland v. Edwards, 797 F. Supp. 2d 7, 10 (D.D.C. 2011)) (holding that a Bivens claim brought by a plaintiff alleging that a search warrant was issued on fabricated statements and that a search exceeded the scope of the issued warrant was “barred due to Rule 41(g) providing an adequate, comprehensive procedural and remedial scheme”); see also De La Paz, 786 F.3d at 377 (declining to accept the argument that the Immigration and Nationality Act, which does not provide a damages remedy, was not an alternative remedy to Bivens because “[t]he absence of monetary damages in the alternative remedial scheme is not ipso facto a basis for a Bivens claim”); Wilson v. Libby, 535

F.3d 697, 705-06 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (“[T]he availability of Bivens remedies does not turn on the completeness of the available statutory relief”). As the Fifth Circuit has stated, the proposition that an alternative remedy to Bivens must provide the “exact equivalent” relief is a “misreading of the case law.” De La Paz, 786 F.3d at 377 (citing Malesko, 534 U.S. at 69, 122 S.Ct. 515 (“So long as the plaintiff had an avenue for some redress, bedrock principles of separation of powers foreclosed judicial imposition of a new substantive liability”))).

The Court therefore concludes that Rule 41(g) is an alternative remedy available to the Plaintiffs and serves as an additional factor counseling hesitation in expanding Bivens.

iii. 31 U.S.C. § 3724

Finally, the Government Defendants argue that the Plaintiffs have an alternative remedy under 31 U.S.C. § 3724. This statute provides, in relevant part that:

The Attorney General may settle, for not more than $50,000 in any one case, a claim for personal injury, death, or damage to, or loss of, privately owned property, caused by an investigative or law enforcement officer as defined in section 2680(h) of title 28 who is employed by the Department of Justice acting within the scope of employment that may not be settled under [the FTCA].

31 U.S.C. § 3724. The Plaintiffs argue that § 3724 is not a suitable alternative because their suit is not one “involv[ing] a claim for personal injury, death, or damage to, or loss of, privately owned property.” Pls.’ Opp’n to Gov’t Defs.’ Mot. at 35. The Court agrees that the Plaintiffs do not allege property loss or damage or any type of personal injury. Even so, the inapplicability of this statute does not change the Court’s analysis that Rule 41(g) and the FTCA are alternative remedial schemes available to the Plaintiffs or its conclusion that it would be improper to expand Bivens in this case.

3. Conclusion

The Court concludes that the Plaintiffs’ Bivens action may not proceed against any of the Defendants. The Plaintiffs’ case presents the Court with a new context that raises concerns about the separation of powers. Cognizant of the Supreme Court’s repeated warnings that expanding Bivens is disfavored, and in light of the alternative remedies available to the Plaintiffs, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs’ claims should be dismissed.<sup>12</sup>

VI. CONCLUSION

The GRANTS the Defendants’ motions to dismiss (ECF Nos. 176, 183) and DISMISSES without prejudice Plaintiffs’ Supplemental Amended Complaint (ECF No. 202)
SO ORDERED.

Footnotes

2*Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics*, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619 (1971).

3The Court collectively refers to the AUSA and FBI defendants as the “Government Defendants” and Bert Eichhorn, Jordan Smith, Emily Rinkel, and Kevin Gedeon as the “DISH/NagraStar Defendants.”

4The named Defendants remained the same except for Kevin Reaves, whose name was corrected to Kevin Pearson in the First Amended Complaint.

5The Plaintiffs later filed a Supplemental First Amended Complaint to correct DISH/NagraStar Defendant Emily Rinkel's name, which was incorrectly spelled “Emily Wrinkle.” See Order on Defs.' Mot. for Reconsideration and Pls.' Mot. to Declare Reconsideration Moot (ECF No. 209). The Supplemental First Amended Complaint is the operative document but is substantively the same as the Amended Complaint filed March 4, 2021, with the exception of the name correction. See id.

6Consistent with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), in describing the facts, the Court has relied upon the allegations in the Plaintiffs' Supplemental Amended Complaint. Foley v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 772 F.3d 63, 68 (1st Cir. 2014); Medina-Velázquez v. Hernández-Gregorat, 767 F.3d 103, 108 (1st Cir. 2014) (“We examine whether the operative complaint states a claim for which relief can be granted when we construe the well-pleaded facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, accepting their truth and drawing all reasonable inferences in the plaintiffs' favor”) (internal citation omitted).

7The Supplemental Amended Complaint states that they entered Suite 207, not 208; however, based on facts alleged earlier in the Complaint, the Court believes that the Plaintiffs must mean Suite 208. The correct suite number does not affect the merits of this decision.

8In Abbasi, Justice Kennedy provided context for the evolution of Bivens claims. See 137 S. Ct. at 1855. He explained that in the mid-20th century, the Supreme Court followed an “ancien regime” whereby the Court “assumed it to be a proper judicial function to ‘provide such remedies as are necessary to make effective’ a statute’s purpose.” Id. (first quoting Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275, 287, 121 S.Ct. 1511, 149 L.Ed.2d 517 (2001), then J.I. Case Co. v. Borak, 377 U.S. 426, 433, 84 S.Ct. 1555, 12 L.Ed.2d 423 (1964)). As a result, the Supreme Court routinely “impl[ie]d causes of action not explicit in the statutory text itself.” Id. It was during this “ancien regime” that the Supreme Court decided Bivens, Davis, and Carlson. “[T]here was a possibility that ‘the Court would keep expanding Bivens until it became the substantial equivalent of 42 U.S.C. § 1983,’ ” had the Court not “adopted a far more cautious course before finding implied causes of action.” Id. (quoting Kent, Are Damages Different?: Bivens and National Security, 87 S. CAL. L. REV. 1123, 1139-40 (2014)). Justice Kennedy noted that “[g]iven the notable change in the Court’s approach to recognizing implied causes of action, ... the Court has made clear that expanding the Bivens remedy is now a ‘disfavored’ judicial activity. This is in accord with the Court’s observation that it has ‘consistently refused to extend Bivens to any new context or new category of defendants.’ Indeed, the Court has refused to do so for the past 30 years.” Id. at 1857 (quoting Malesko, 534 U.S. at 68, 122 S.Ct. 515). To the extent that the Plaintiffs argue that a Bivens remedy is inherent under this Court’s federal question jurisdiction, Pls.’ Opp’n to

DISH/NagraStar Defs.' Mot. at 20-21, the Supreme Court rejected this proposition. See Hernandez, 140 S. Ct. at 742 ("Justice Harlan's Bivens concurrence argued that this power is inherent in the grant of federal question jurisdiction ... but our later cases have demanded a clearer manifestation of congressional intent"). Furthermore, in light of Abbasi, the Court is not generally permitted to infer a cause of action unless it presents circumstances that are the same as those in Bivens, Davis, or Carlson, as inferred causes of action are disfavored.

9The Court simultaneously addresses both sets of Defendants' arguments as to whether this case would require extending Bivens.

10The Plaintiffs instead ask the Court to follow Jacobs v. Alam, 915 F.3d 1028 (6th Cir. 2019) and Lanuza v. Love, 899 F.3d 1019 (9th Cir. 2018). The Plaintiffs say that Jacobs stands for the proposition that "a plaintiff's 'garden-variety Bivens claims' against individual law enforcement officials for excessive force, false arrest, malicious prosecution, fabrication of evidence, and civil conspiracy were viable post-Abbasi." Pls.' Opp'n to Gov't Defs.' Mot. at 32. As the Jacobs Court rightly notes, the Supreme Court confirmed in Abbasi that Bivens is still good law, see Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1857 ("The settled law of Bivens in this common and recurrent sphere of law enforcement, and the undoubted reliance upon it as a fixed principle in the law, are powerful reasons to retain it in that sphere"), but "caution[ed] against expanding its outer reaches." See Jacobs, 915 F.3d at 1037. As the Sixth Circuit stated, Abbasi "clarifies the analytical framework for how courts must approach asserted Bivens claims" but in no-way renders pre-Abbasi cases null. Id.

To the extent that the Plaintiffs rely on Jacobs purely because it concluded that “excessive force, false arrest, malicious prosecution, fabrication and evidence claims” are viable post Abbasi, this broad characterization is not sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss because “[c]ourts do not define a Bivens cause of action at the level of ‘the Fourth Amendment’ or even at the level of ‘the unreasonable-searches-and-seizures clause.’ ” Cantú, 933 F.3d at 422-23.

To the extent that the Plaintiffs rely on Jacobs as an analogous case because the Sixth Circuit concluded the plaintiff's claims were “run-of-the-mill challenges to ‘standard law enforcement operations,’ ” the facts in Jacobs are distinguishable and much more akin to those in Bivens. Jacobs involved a warrantless search of Jacobs' home after agents believed that a fugitive was hiding there. Jacobs, 915 F.3d at 1033-34. There was no warrant in Jacobs nor any alleged falsification of an affidavit to support probable cause for a warrant; instead, Jacobs claimed that officers planted a gun at the scene “in an attempt to bolster their claim that he pulled a gun on them before the shooting.” Id. at 1042; see Greenlaw v. Klimek, No. 4:20-CV-311-SDJ, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 245789 at *16, 2021 WL 6112784 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 27, 2021) (distinguishing Jacobs on its facts from a case involving misstatements and omissions in a warrant affidavit).

Finally, the Plaintiffs rely on § 1983 case law to support their arguments. While the Supreme Court has characterized Bivens as the “federal analog” to § 1983 claims, it has also described Bivens claims as “more limited.” Hernandez, 140 S. Ct. at 747; see also Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1855 (implying that Bivens is narrower than § 1983 because had the Supreme Court continued on the same path as Bivens, Davis, and Carlson, Bivens would have continued to expand to become “the substantial equivalent of 42 U.S.C. § 1983”).

11“Hesitation is a pause, not a full stop, or an abstention; and to counsel is not to require.” Drewniak, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67937, at *15, 2021 WL 1318028 (quoting Arar v. Ashcroft, 585 F.3d 559, 573 (2d Cir. 2009) (en banc)). “A factor counsels hesitation ‘whenever thoughtful discretion would pause even to consider it.’ ” Id. (quoting Arar, 585 F.3d at 573); see also Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. at 1858 (“[I]f there are sound reasons to think Congress might doubt the efficacy or necessity of a damages remedy as part of the system for enforcing the law and correcting a wrong, the courts must refrain from creating the remedy in order to respect the role of Congress in determining the nature and extent of federal-court jurisdiction under Article III”).

12Given the Court's conclusion that Plaintiffs' Bivens action may not proceed, the Court does not reach the merits of the parties' other arguments, including whether the Government Defendants are entitled to absolute or qualified immunity and whether the Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim on which relief can be granted.
