JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The opinion and judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit was entered on August 21, 2023. This petition is filed within 90 days after entry of judgment or order sought to be reviewed. See Sup. Ct. R. 13.1, 13.3. The Court has jurisdiction to grant certiorari under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides, in pertinent part: “No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, ... nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law ....”

The Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides, in pertinent part: “In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to ... trial, by an impartial jury ....”

FEDERAL STATUTE INVOLVED

STATEMENT

Petitioner Luis Alberto Hernandez-Perez was charged with illegally reentering the country after having been removed, in violation of 8 U.S.C. § 1326. Under § 1326(a), the maximum penalty for illegal reentry is two years' imprisonment. Under § 1326(b), the maximum increases to 10 years if the defendant was removed from the United States after having been convicted of a felony, and to 20 years if he was removed after having been convicted of an aggravated felony. Also, a conviction under § 1326(b) increases the maximum supervised release term increases from one year to three years. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 3583(b), 3559(a). In Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998), this Court held that the enhancement-qualifying conviction under § 1326(b) is a sentencing factor, not an element of a separate offense. Hernandez's indictment did not allege a prior conviction. App. B.

Hernandez pleaded guilty as charged. The factual basis for his guilty plea admitted only the elements of § 1326(a); he did not admit to having a prior conviction that would trigger the enhanced penalties in § 1326(b).

A probation officer prepared a presentence report. Although the indictment did not allege that Hernandez had been removed from the United States after a felony conviction, the presentence report stated that that statutory maximum penalty was 20 years' imprisonment and up to three years of supervised release, under 8 U.S.C. § 1326(b)(2).

At sentencing, Hernandez asked for a sentence of 57 months' imprisonment, the bottom of the Guidelines range. Hernandez explained, with supporting exhibits, that Mr. Hernandez first came to the United States at age 13 to escape threats in Guerrero, Mexico. He suffered injuries related to those threats after his deportation in 2006. Hernandez apologized to the district court for coming illegally to the United States. He said that he now has the support of his in-laws to reside elsewhere in Mexico where he believes he will be safe from the threats he would face in Guerrero.

The district court sentenced Hernandez to the top of the Guidelines range: 71 months' imprisonment, followed by three years of supervised release. Hernandez objected to the sentence, citing Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998), and appealed.

Hernandez timely appealed. He argued that, under the reasoning of this Court's decisions in Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000), and Alleyne v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2151 (2013), increasing the statutory maximum sentence pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1326(b) is unconstitutional, when based on facts that are neither alleged in the indictment nor found by a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.<sup>1</sup> He acknowledged that the argument was foreclosed by Almendarez-Torres, but he noted that recent decisions from this Court suggested that Almendarez-Torres may be reconsidered. The court of appeals noted the foreclosure and affirmed Hernandez's sentence. App. A 4.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The Court Should Grant Certiorari to Consider Whether to Overrule Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998).

Section 1326(a) punishes illegal reentry after removal with a maximum term of two years' imprisonment and one year's supervised release. The district court determined, however, that Hernandez was subject to an enhanced sentence under 8 U.S.C. § 1326(b), which increases the maximum penalty if the removal occurred after a conviction for a felony or an aggravated felony. The district court's decision accorded with this Court's decision in Almendarez-Torres v. United States, which held that § 1326(b)'s enhanced penalty is a sentencing factor, not a separate, aggravated offense. 523 U.S. 224, 235 (1998). The Court further ruled that this construction of § 1326(b) did not violate due process; a prior conviction need not be treated as an element of the offense, even if it increases the statutory maximum penalty. Id. at 239–47.

However, the continued validity of Almendarez-Torres is questionable. Just two years after it was decided, the Court appeared to cast doubt on it. See Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000). In Apprendi, the Court announced that facts that increase the maximum sentence must be proved to the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. Id. at 490. The Court acknowledged that this general principle conflicted with the specific holding in Almendarez-Torres that a prior conviction need not be treated as an element under § 1326(b). The Court found it “arguable that Almendarez-Torres was incorrectly decided, and that a logical application of our reasoning today should apply” to prior convictions as well. Id. at 489. But because the fact that increased the penalty in Apprendi was not a prior conviction, the Court considered it unnecessary to revisit Almendarez-Torres. Id. at 490. Instead, the Court framed its holding to avoid expressly overruling the earlier case. Id. at 489.

The Court again questioned Almendarez-Torres’s reasoning in Alleyne v. United States, suggesting that the Court would be willing to revisit the decision. 570 U.S. 99, 111 n.1 (2013). In Alleyne, the Court applied Apprendi's rule to mandatory minimum sentences, holding that any fact that produces a higher sentencing range—not just a sentence above the statutory maximum—must be pleaded in the indictment and either admitted by the defendant or proved to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt. Alleyne, 570 U.S. at 115–16. In the opinion, the Court apparently recognized that Almendarez-Torres remains subject to Sixth Amendment attack. The Court characterized that decision as a “narrow exception to the general rule” that all facts that increase punishment must be alleged and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Id. at 111 n.1. But because the parties in that case did not challenge Almendarez-Torres, the Court said it would “not revisit it for purposes of our decision today.” Id.

Nonetheless, the Court’s reasoning in Alleyne strengthens the challenge to Almendarez-Torres’s recognition of a recidivism exception. Alleyne traced the treatment of the relationship between crime and punishment, beginning in the eighteenth century, repeatedly noting how “[the] linkage of facts with particular sentence ranges … reflects the intimate connection between crime and punishment.” Id. at 109 (“[i]f a fact was by law essential to the penalty, it was an element of the offense”); see id. (historically, crimes were defined as “the whole of the wrong to which the law affixes punishment ... including any fact that annexes a higher degree of punishment”); id. at 111 (“the indictment must contain an allegation of every fact which is legally essential to the punishment to be inflicted”). Alleyne concluded that, because “the whole of the” crime and its punishment cannot be separated, the elements of a crime must include any facts that increase the penalty.

Alleyne’s emphasis that the elements of a crime include the “whole” of the facts for which a defendant is punished seriously undercuts the view, expressed in Almendarez-Torres, that recidivism is different from other sentencing facts. See Almendarez-Torres, 523 U.S. at 243–44; see also Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 490 (“Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt.”). The Apprendi Court later tried to explain this difference by pointing out that, unlike other facts, recidivism “does not relate to the commission of the offense itself.” Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 496. But the Court has since acknowledged that Almendarez-Torres might have been “incorrectly decided.” Id. at 489; see also Shepard v. United States, 544 U.S. 13, 26 n.5 (2005) (acknowledging that Court’s holding in that case undermined Almendarez-Torres); Cunningham v. California, 549 U.S. 270, 291 n.14 (2007) (rejecting invitation to distinguish between “facts concerning the offense, where Apprendi would apply, and facts [like recidivism] concerning the offender, where it would not,” because “Apprendi itself ... leaves no room for the bifurcated approach”).

Indeed, one justice has expressly called for the Court to revisit Almendarez-Torres. See Sessions v. Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. 1204, 1253 (2018) (Thomas, J., dissenting) (opining that Almendarez-Torres should be reconsidered); Mathis v. United States, 579 U.S. 500, 522–23 (2016) (Thomas, J., concurring) (same); Descamps v. United States, 570 U.S. 254, 280–81 (2013) (Thomas, J., concurring) (same). These opinions reveal concern that Almendarez-Torres is constitutionally flawed.

Three concurring justices in Alleyne provide additional reasons for revisiting Almendarez-Torres. See Alleyne, 133 S. Ct. at 2164 (Sotomayor, Ginsburg, Kagan, J.J., concurring). Those justices noted that the viability of the Sixth Amendment principle set forth in Apprendi was initially subject to some doubt, and some justices believed the Court “might retreat” from it. Alleyne, 570 U.S. at 118–22. Instead, Apprendi’s rule “has become even more firmly rooted in the Court’s Sixth Amendment jurisprudence.” Id.

The growing view among members of this Court that Almendarez-Torres was wrongly decided is good reason to clarify whether Almendarez-Torres is still the law. Stare decisis is “at its weakest” when the Court interprets the Constitution. Dobbs v. Jackson Women’s Health Org., 142 S. Ct. 2228, 2237 (2022) (quoting Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 235 (1997)). When “there has been a significant change in, or subsequent development of, our constitutional law,” stare decisis “does not prevent … overruling a previous decision.” Agostini, 521 U.S. at 236. Reversal of even recent precedent is warranted when “the reasoning of [that precedent] has been thoroughly undermined by intervening decisions.” Alleyne, 570 U.S. at 121; see also Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. at 1253 (“The exception recognized in Almendarez-Torres for prior convictions is an aberration, has been seriously undermined by subsequent precedents, and should be reconsidered.”) (Thomas, J., dissenting); Mathis, 579 U.S. at 522 (“I continue to believe that the exception in Apprendi was wrong, and I have urged that Almendarez-Torres be reconsidered.”) (Thomas, J., concurring).

Even if the Court were ultimately to reaffirm Almendarez-Torres, review is warranted. While lower court judges—as well as prosecutors, defense counsel, and criminal defendants—are forced to rely on the decision, they must speculate as to the ultimate validity of the Court’s holding. “There is no good reason to allow such a state of affairs to persist.” Rangel-Reyes v. United States, 547 U.S. 1200, 1201 (2006) (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari).

The question of Almendarez-Torres’s validity can only be resolved in this forum. Id. (citing State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 20 (1997)). Almendarez-Torres is a decision of this country’s highest court on a question of constitutional dimension; no other court, and no other branch of government, can decide if it is wrong. Regarding the Constitution, it is ultimately this Court’s responsibility “to say what the law is.” Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803). The Court should grant certiorari to say whether Almendarez-Torres is still the law.

CONCLUSION

FOR THESE REASONS, Hernandez asks that this Honorable Court grant a writ of certiorari.

Respectfully submitted.
