[3] (In session at 9:45 a.m.)

THE COURT: All right. The next case is United States versus Aducto Chavez-Meza, 12CR701.

MR. SAMUEL HURTADO: Samuel Hurtado for the United States.

MR. MARCOS GONZALEZ: Good morning, Your Honor. Marcos Gonzalez on behalf of Mr. Chavez-Meza.

THE COURT: Was the Presentence Report reviewed with Mr. Chavez-Meza?

MR. GONZALEZ: It was, Your Honor, in English. He does speak English. Before we begin, Your Honor, Mr. Chavez-Meza has approached me this morning and would ask for a continuance on this matter, Your Honor, on some other –

THE COURT: On what grounds?

MR. GONZALEZ: Sentencing issues that he would like to explore in this matter, and given the sentence that he – the high sentence that he's looking at, I would like to address this with him, Your Honor.

THE COURT: When was this Presentence Report disclosed?

MR. GONZALEZ: It's been a couple of months, Your Honor, looks like back in May, Your Honor.

THE PROBATION OFFICER: Your Honor, it was on May 2nd.

THE COURT: May the 2nd?

[4] THE PROBATION OFFICER: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: It seems to me like there's been time to explore sentencing issues if this matter was disclosed on May the 2nd. I mean, I think under the rules, what's it, 75 days?

What's the government's position?

MR. HURTADO: Your Honor, as I indicated to Mr. Gonzalez, the United States would oppose. The reason for that is the United States has, on two previous occasions out of professional courtesy, already extended him an opportunity to continue this matter in order to file a Sentencing Memorandum. Defendant has already filed a Sentencing Memorandum. The United States has filed its response, and it's the United States' position that this sentencing hearing should go forward.

I'd also like to note the government is ready and also its FBI agent is present for this sentencing hearing, Your Honor. It's the government's position, therefore, that this matter should proceed as scheduled.

THE COURT: Anything else, Mr. Gonzalez, you want to state on this?

MR. GONZALEZ: No, Your Honor. We do understand that this was continued previously. This was brought to my attention this morning, Your Honor. I thought I would bring it before the Court and –

THE COURT: I understand. The defendant's looking at [5] a lengthy sentence because he was involved in distributing methamphetamine. I see no – I've got a busy docket. This matter's been continued before. You know, in terms of the guidelines, they are what they are. There's a request, I think, that defense counsel filed in terms of the Sentencing Memorandum for a below-guideline sentence, and I'll let you make argument on that.

MR. GONZALEZ: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: But I think the matter, we need to proceed with this, and so the request that this be continued again will be denied.

MR. GONZALEZ: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Before I hear from defense counsel, Mr. Hurtado, the government's position on sentencing in this case?

MR. HURTADO: Yes, Your Honor. The United States won't rehash in its entirety the response that the government filed to the defendant's Sentencing Memorandum, but very briefly, the United States would oppose the defendant's request to a variance. It's the government's position that there is no reason for a variance in this case and that the appropriate sentence is 135 months as set forth in the government's Sentencing Memorandum.

One of the primary issues that the United States objects to is the manner in which the defendant describes the [6] offense for which he has been convicted. Throughout the Sentencing Memorandum that the United States has read, it refers to his serious drug offense as, quote, a transgression, a case of aberrant behavior. In the letter to the Court that was drafted by the family, they referred to his transgression as a mistake, and Your Honor, the United States would take issue with that, because this isn't somebody who was stealing a loaf of bread to feed his family. This is somebody who was selling four pounds of methamphetamine to an undercover police officer, and according to the other coconspirators in this case, the defendant had been doing this repeatedly on various occasions.

And given the nature and circumstances of this case, it is the government's position that a sentence within the guideline range is appropriate, and the United States would also like to note that 135 months is actually at the low end, and the government believes that's appropriate.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Gonzales, I'll hear additional argument from you and then any statement the defendant wishes to make.

MR. GONZALEZ: Certainly, Your Honor. This is a case where it's the amount and purely the amount that suggests a sentence that is at the 135-month range, Your Honor. As you noted earlier, we are here to ask for a sentence below the [7] guidelines, I think well below the guidelines. His history and characteristics of Mr. Chavez himself are unlike many of those others that are involved in this sort of dealings with this amount of methamphetamines, Your Honor. He does understand what he did, and he did take responsibility. He's never played games with the Court or anything. He's, you know, took responsibility well before trial. It wasn't done on the eve of trial, Your Honor. It was done well before trial.

As far as his history and characteristics of Mr. Chavez himself that would distinguish him is he worked his entire adult life. Even though he was involved in this one incident that we're aware of, he worked. He has skills. He works in construction. He worked for Walmart. He was continually employed – employed, Your Honor, job after job. Doing so, he gained experience and skills that are valuable to him then and will be valuable to him once he returns to society, Your Honor. He's highly employable. He'll be desired by many employers.

As far as his family life, his family is here in the audience today, Your Honor. They've been at every hearing so far. They've been in constant contact with me on pretty much a weekly, biweekly basis, Your Honor, inquiring as to Mr. Chavez's well-being and how the case is proceeding. Once he returns, they are prepared to – to support him and help him get back on his feet, Your Honor. Mr. Chavez is active in the [8] church, has strong community support, Your Honor, and I believe this is aberrant behavior, Your Honor. I don't believe that Mr. Chavez – he – he did make a mistake, Your Honor. He got caught up in this lifestyle that he was living, made some bad decisions, but has taken responsibility for those decisions and would like to move past them.

He understands that he is going to have to serve some time, but we'd like to minimize that as much as possible, Your Honor, so that he can move on from this.

This is his first time that he has been in any sort of trouble, and I don't think he'll have any trouble like this, I can assure you after speaking with him and his family, that he will not be before any court in the future, Your Honor. He had not been before and will not be again after.

In fact, this may be a good time and a good thing that has happened to him at a good time so that he was able to correct his transgressions and move on from that. He's young. He's got lots of skills make him employable, Your Honor, and he's got good support at his family, with his family at home, Your Honor.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Did the defendant want to make a statement?

MR. GONZALEZ: He has a letter prepared, Your Honor. Would Your Honor like to see the letter or would you like him [9] to read it?

THE COURT: I can – whatever your preference is.

THE DEFENDANT: I will read it for you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Pardon me?

THE DEFENDANT: I'll read it for you.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, do you want to read it or do you want me to read it?

THE DEFENDANT: I'll read it for you.

THE COURT: Okay. Certainly.

THE DEFENDANT: I would like to tell you that I'm sorry for my actions. I want to say sorry to my family. They're present right here, to the United States, to anybody I brought to harm or do anything bad to them.

This choice that I have made in my past, I would also like to apologize to my family for the pain that I have inflicted on them for a choice I have made.

Now that I have been incarcerated 16 months, it has given me time to think about my past and the bad choice I was making, the people I was hanging around, and living life on the edge tough at the time – though at the time, I thought was a good life. In fact, it wasn't. I was only thinking about myself instead of doing what was right and about the people who meant the most to me, which is my family and the loved ones.

I spend my time incarcerated getting closer to God and my family. I also thought about how I would change my life [10] for the future, to make better choices for myself and family. What I am asking a chance to prove to the Court and my family and myself that I can be a better person and live life in a positive way, also to make better choices for my family and myself as a – as I know I've never been in any kind of trouble in the past.

I would like to hope that – that you will take into consideration and sentence me fairly so that I can reunite with my family and move forward with my life in a better and positive way. Thank you for your time and consideration. Please let the Court have mercy on me. Respectfully, Aducto Chavez.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Hurtado, the – he was charged on in the counts that are in this Indictment, and then there was a Plea Agreement, and he pled guilty to the two counts. Now, the Presentence Report did reflect other drug-trafficking activity, but he was not assessed – ma'am, you need to sit down.

I didn't see that the pre – that, in terms of the guideline calculations, there was any enhancement for any of this other alleged drug-trafficking activity.

MR. HURTADO: No, sir, that's correct. Some of the information that the United States – the United States obtained was from the coconspirator, Jesús Omar Lopez-Valle, who indicated that he, along with the other coconspirators, the [11] defendant included, had previously transported methamphetamine on various occasions.

THE COURT: Right, but there – in other words, it didn't factor into the guideline calculation.

MR. HURTADO: That's correct. Yes, sir.

THE COURT: All right. I'll adopt the Presentence Report's factual findings and the guideline applications. I've consulted the sentencing factors of 18 U.S.C. 3553(a)(1) through (7). The offense level is 33. The criminal history category is I. Under the sentencing guidelines, that's a guideline range of 135 to 168 months. I'll note on March the 1st, 2012, the defendant distributed 1.7 kilograms of actual methamphetamine to an undercover FBI employee in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Now, the reason the guideline sentence is high in this case, even the low end of 135 months, is because of the quantity, 1.75 kilograms of actual methamphetamine, and that's a significant quantity and one of the, again, one of the other reasons that the penalty is severe in this case, is because of methamphetamine. It destroys – I mean, I've been doing this a long time, and from what I gather and what I've seen, methamphetamine, it destroys individual lives, it destroys families, it can destroy communities.

Taking into account the history and characteristics of the defendant and mindful that I'm required to impose a [12] sentence that is sufficient but not greater than necessary to satisfy the goals of sentencing, I will find that a sentence that is sufficient but not greater than necessary to satisfy the goals of sentencing is a sentence on the low end of the guideline range of 135 months. That'll be the term as to each of Counts 1 and 2, to run concurrently, for a total term of incarceration of 135 months. If the defendant's eligible while he's in the Bureau of Prisons, I recommend he participate in the 500-hour drug and alcohol treatment program.

As to Counts 1 and 2, the defendant is placed on supervised release for a term of five years as to each count, those terms to run concurrent, for a total term of supervised release of five years. That term is unsupervised with standard conditions and mandatory conditions and the following special condition, and I'm imposing this condition because the Presentence Report reflects that the defendant's not a U.S. citizen but a permanent resident, so he's going to be subject to deportation. And it's been my experience that, with a drug-trafficking offense of this nature, that the United States government will proceed to deport the defendant after service of the sentence. So in terms of the special condition, I'll impose the requirement that the defendant comply with all Immigrations and Customs Enforcement laws.

Also, no fine will be imposed based on the defendant's lack of financial resources. I do have to impose [13] what is called a special penalty assessment of $100, and I'm required to state that it's due immediately.

And finally, I must advise the defendant within 14 days of the entry of the judgment he can appeal the sentence. He also has the right to apply for leave to appeal in forma pauperis if unable to pay for the cost of an appeal.

Did you wish me to make a recommendation to the Bureau of Prisons where the defendant serve his sentence?

MR. GONZALEZ: I believe Florence, Colorado, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I'll recommend that the defendant be designated to serve his sentence at the Florence, Colorado, facility.

All right. Is there anything else on this matter?

MR. GONZALEZ: No, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right. I'm going to take a short break.

(Recess at 10:00 a.m.)

I. MOTION

1. The Defendant CHAVEZ MEZA was sentenced to a term of 135 months imprisonment predicate on the Federal Sentencing Guidelines. On April 30, 2014 the United States Sentencing Commission enacted Amendment 782 to the United States Sentencing Guidelines (U.S.S.G.).

STIPULATED AGREEMENT IN PETITION FOR REDUCED SENTENCE UNDER 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) REGARDING
DRUG QUANTITY TABLE

The Defendant and the United States have reached a stipulated agreement regarding Defendant's eligibility for a reduced sentence under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) and the Sentencing Guideline policies under section 1B1.10.

As discussed in the United States Probation Memorandum of July 17, 2015, the parties agree that Amendment 782 results in a lower sentencing range for the Defendant. In addition, they agree that the new sentencing range is a term of 108 months to 135 months of imprisonment (i.e., up to the current term of imprisonment that previously was imposed by this Court). The parties agree that the Court has authority under § 3582(c)(2) to impose a new sentence within that range.

The Probation Memorandum stated that the Bureau of Prisons Sentry Disciplinary Report indicates misconduct by Defendant while incarcerated for phone abuse for using another inmate's phone number. The United States, however, agrees that this misconduct is not disqualifying in considering the 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) sentencing factors.

The Defendant asks the Court to impose an amended sentence of 108 months, which is within the new sentencing range. Defendant notes that the Court sentenced him to the low end of the guidelines range as originally calculated. Defendant further notes that the Court, at sentencing, stated that "the reason the guideline sentence is high in this case, even [at] the low end of 135 months, is because of the quantity, 1.75 kilograms of actual methamphetamine." The Court at sentencing specifically found "that a sentence that is sufficient but not greater than necessary to satisfy the goals of sentencing is a sentence on the low end of the guideline range." While incarcerated, Defendant has received certificates for completing classes in masonry and construction, and is working towards obtaining his GED. Accordingly, Defendant respectfully requests that the Court sentence him at the low end of the newly-calculated guidelines range, i.e. 108 months of imprisonment.

This case requires us to determine how much explanation a district court must provide when granting a sentence-reduction motion under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) and choosing a sentence within the revised Sentencing Guidelines range.

Adaucto Chavez-Meza pleaded guilty to drug conspiracy charges in 2013. He originally received a prison sentence of 135 months, the Sentencing Guidelines minimum. In 2014, the Sentencing Commission amended the Guidelines to reduce the relevant offense levels. Chavez-Meza then sought and was granted a sentence reduction pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). He requested the court reduce his sentence to 108 months, the minimum under the revised guidelines range, but the court only reduced his sentence to 114 months. In confirming the new sentence, the district court issued a form order stating it had “tak[en] into account the policy statement set forth at USSG § 1B1.10 and the sentencing factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).” Chavez-Meza appeals his reduced sentence, claiming the district court erred by failing to adequately explain how it applied the § 3553(a) factors in imposing a 114-month sentence.

We AFFIRM the district court’s sentence-reduction order. Section 3582(c)(2) does not require additional explanation when a district court imposes a guidelines sentence and affirmatively states that it considered the § 3553(a) factors in its decision.

I. Background

Chavez-Meza pleaded guilty to conspiracy and possession with intent to distribute methamphetamine. His guidelines range was 135–168 months. The government recommended a 135-month sentence at the low end of the range, which the sentencing court accepted. The court explained “the reason the guideline sentence is high in this case . . . is because of the quantity, 1.75 kilograms of actual methamphetamine . . . . [O]ne of the other reasons that the penalty is severe in this case[] is because of methamphetamine. It destroys . . . individual lives, it destroys families, it can destroy communities.” App., Vol. IV at 15.

In 2015, after the Sentencing Commission amended the Guidelines and reduced the applicable guidelines for this type of crime, Chavez-Meza filed a pro se motion under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2), asking the district court to modify his sentence.

The district court appointed counsel to represent Chavez-Meza, and the government consented to a “stipulated agreement in petition for reduced sentence.” App., Vol. I at 40–41. In the petition they agreed that amendments to the guidelines range resulted in a lower 108- to 135-month sentencing range. Accordingly, Chavez-Meza filed a request for a 108-month sentence, at the low end of the revised range. The government did not offer guidance on a specific sentence.

There is no requirement that district courts hold a hearing in a § 3582(c)(2) sentence-reduction proceeding. United States v. Piper, 839 F.3d 1261, 1270 (10th Cir. 2016). Without doing so, then, the district court issued an order on a two-page standard form reducing Chavez-Meza’s sentence to 114 months. The form, an “AO-247,” is a document prepared by the Federal Judiciary's Administrative Office. It requires the district court to state it has "tak[en] into account the policy statement set forth at USSG § 1B1.10 and the sentencing factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), to the extent that they are applicable." It also requires the court provide both the previous and amended total offense level, criminal history category, and guidelines range. The court must then check a box indicating where the sentence falls relative to the amended guidelines range. Apart from completing the form, the district court did not otherwise explain its decision to reduce the sentence to 114 months rather than the 108 months Chavez-Meza had requested.

II. Analysis

Chavez-Meza contends the district court erred by failing to adequately state reasons supporting its decision in the sentence-reduction order. He argues mere completion of an AO-247 makes it impossible to determine whether the district court complied with § 3582(c), which requires that courts consider the § 3553(a) sentencing factors. The government argues § 3582(c) does not require that courts state specific reasons for imposing a particular sentence, but only that courts consider the applicable § 3553(a) factors.

We review the scope of a district court's authority in sentence reduction under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) de novo. United States v. Verdin-Garcia, 824 F.3d 1218, 1221 (10th Cir. 2016). We review a district court's decision to grant or deny a § 3582(c)(2) motion for an abuse of discretion. Id. An error of law is per se an abuse of discretion. Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 100 (1996).

Section 3582(c)(2) authorizes a district court to reduce a sentence "based on a sentencing range that has subsequently been lowered by the Sentencing Commission.” The statute provides that “the court may reduce the term of imprisonment, after considering the factors set forth in section 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable, if such a reduction is consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission.” Id. (emphasis added).

We have explained in previous cases that the plain language of § 3582(c)(2) does not incorporate the explanatory requirement from § 3553(c):

The language of 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) is clear—it requires the court to consider the factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a). It does not mention § 3553(c). This omission is significant because we have previously interpreted the meaning of both subsections, holding that § 3553(a) requires consideration, while § 3553(c) requires an explanation of the sentence. Congress incorporated only one of these distinct requirements into § 3582(c)(2)—the requirement to consider the § 3553(a) factors.

Verdin–Garcia, 824 F.3d at 1221 (citing United States v. Ruiz–Terrazas, 477 F.3d 1196, 1201 (10th Cir. 2007)). Thus, the statute in referencing § 3553(a) imposes no particular requirement to provide the level of explanation § 3553(c) requires. Rather, “[s]ection 3553(a) imposes on the district court a duty to ‘consider’ a variety of important sentencing considerations. Ruiz–Terrazas, 477 F.3d at 1201. But it nowhere imposes on the court a duty to address those factors on the record; by contrast, § 3553(c) speaks expressly to the nature of the district court’s duty to explain itself on the record. It would be incongruous, we think, to read a duty of explanation into subsection (a) when the exact matter has already been considered and addressed by Congress in subsection (c).

We have also explained that the requirements imposed on a court at a sentence-reduction proceeding cannot be greater than those imposed at an original sentencing proceeding. Verdin–Garcia, 824 F.3d at 1221. This distinction reflects the different status of the two proceedings. Original sentencing proceedings invoke important constitutional rights, and § 3553(c) requires sentencing courts to explain and justify a particular sentence, both for procedural and substantive reasonableness. But no statute or case has established this requirement for sentence-reduction proceedings—which makes sense. Sentence-reduction proceedings merely represent “a congressional act of lenity intended to give prisoners the benefit of later enacted adjustments.” Dillon v. United States, 560 U.S. 817, 828 (2010). Setting the procedural bar for sentence-reduction proceedings higher than for original sentencing proceedings would contravene this hierarchy. We cannot require more for sentence reduction, when § 3553(c) does not apply, than we require for original sentencing, when § 3553(c) does apply. The original sentencing procedures required by § 3553(c) must therefore supply the ceiling for sentence-reduction procedures.

So we begin by reviewing what § 3553(c) requires. We do so not because § 3553(c) applies to sentence reduction, but because the requirements for sentence reduction cannot exceed the requirements of § 3553(c). Congress’s decision not to incorporate § 3553(c) into the sentence-reduction provision dictates this approach. Our precedent on § 3553(c) does not tell us what sentence reduction requires, but it tells us the uppermost bound of what it can require.

And that precedent makes clear that original sentencing proceedings do not require extensive explanations for sentences within the guidelines range. “When imposing a sentence within the properly calculated Guidelines range, a district court must provide, as Section 3553(c) indicates by its plain language, only a general statement noting the appropriate guideline range and how it was calculated.” United States v. Ruiz-Terrazas, 477 F.3d 1196, 1202 (10th Cir. 2007) (internal quotation marks omitted).<sup>1</sup> A court’s “citation of the [presentence report’s] calculation method and recitation of the suggested imprisonment range amply fulfill[s]” this requirement. United States v. Algarate-Valencia, 550 F.3d 1238, 1244 (10th Cir. 2008) (quoting United States v. Cereceres-Zavala, 499 F.3d 1211, 1217 (10th Cir. 2007)). “Section 3553(a) imposes on the district court a duty to ‘consider’ a variety of important sentencing considerations. But it nowhere imposes on the court a duty to address those factors on the record.” Ruiz-Terrazas, 477 F.3d at 1201.

<sup>1</sup> More is required at sentencing when the defendant requests a below-guidelines sentence. See United States v. Sanchez-Juarez, 446 F.3d 1109, 1117 (10th Cir. 2006) (“[W]here a defendant has raised a nonfrivolous argument that the § 3553(a) factors warrant a below-Guideline sentence and has expressly requested such a sentence, we must be able to discern from the record that the sentencing judge did not rest on the guidelines alone, but considered whether the guidelines sentence actually conforms, in the circumstances, to the statutory factors.” (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted)). But that situation is not raised on these facts. Courts can only reduce a sentence to a term less than the guidelines minimum if the sentencing court originally imposed a sentence below the guidelines range. USSG § 1B1.10(b)(2). We do not decide in this case what level of explanation is required when courts decide sentence-reduction motions involving sentences outside the guidelines range.

Read together, Verdin-Garcia and Ruiz-Terrazas thus establish that the same “general statement noting the appropriate guideline range and how it was calculated” in applying § 3553(a) also suffices in sentence-reduction proceedings. Ruiz-Terrazas confirms that level of explanation satisfies the requirements for sentencing proceedings, and Verdin-Garcia clarifies that it provides the ceiling for sentence-reduction proceedings. A contrary rule would go beyond what we have said § 3553(c) requires, thus imposing greater requirements for what both Congress and the Supreme Court have told us is a lesser proceeding—and one to which § 3553(c) does not even apply. We therefore hold that, absent any indication the court failed to consider the § 3553(a) factors, a district court completing form AO-247 need not explain choosing a particular guidelines-range sentence.<sup>2</sup>

This makes sense given our review of sentencing decisions. We “traditionally presume, absent some indication in the record suggesting otherwise, that trial judges are presumed to know the law and apply it in making their decisions.” Ruiz-Terrazas, 477 F.3d at 1201 (alterations and quotation marks omitted). We “do not disturb decisions entrusted by statute or other rule of law to the discretion of a district court unless we have a definite and firm conviction that the lower court made a clear error of judgment or exceeded the bounds of permissible choice in the circumstances.” Id. (quotation marks omitted).

Nothing indicates in this case the district court failed to consider the § 3553(a) factors or otherwise abused its discretion. The first page of form AO-247, signed by the judge, indicates that he has “tak[en] into account the policy statement set forth at USSG § 1B1.10 and the sentencing factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).” App., Vol. 1 at 42. The (sealed) second page of form AO-247 correctly indicates the amended guidelines range. And it is safe to infer from the court’s rejection of the low-end-of-the-range sentence that it carefully considered the materials (which included an incident of misconduct while in prison) presented to it by the parties.

The circuits are split on the degree of explanation necessary to satisfy § 3582. The First, Third, and Fourth Circuits, for example, have all held that no elaborate explanation is necessary in § 3582 sentence-reduction proceedings. See United States v. Zayas-Ortiz, 808 F.3d 520, 524 (1st Cir. 2015) (affirming unelaborated AO-247 order where “the record as a whole is sufficient for [the court of appeals] to infer the pertinent factors taken into account by the court below”); United States v. Brown, 497 F. App’x 196, 198–99 (3d Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (affirming unelaborated AO-247 order where “[t]he record shows the District Court’s consideration of the relevant factors and the rationale for its § 3582(c)(2) ruling”); United States v. Smalls, 720 F.3d 193, 195–96 (4th Cir. 2013) (“[A]bsent a contrary indication, [the court of appeals] presume[s] a district court deciding a § 3582(c)(2) motion has considered the 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) factors and other pertinent matters before it.” (internal quotation marks omitted)). On the other hand, several other circuits have found an explanatory requirement in this context. See United States v. Christie, 736 F.3d 191, 195 (2d Cir. 2013) (“[T]he lack of reasoning in the court’s order prevents [the court of appeals] from exercising meaningful appellate review.” (internal quotation marks omitted)); see also United States v. Howard, 644 F.3d 455, 461 (6th Cir. 2011); United States v. Marion, 590 F.3d 475, 478 (7th Cir. 2009); United States v. Burrell, 622 F.3d 961, 964 (8th Cir. 2010); United States v. Trujillo, 713 F.3d 1003, 1009 (9th Cir. 2013); United States v. Williams, 557 F.3d 1254, 1256-57 (11th Cir. 2009) (all same).

Chavez-Meza relies on these authorities and also points to two Tenth Circuit cases in arguing for a contrary result. In the first case, United States v. Dorrrough, 84 F.3d 1309, 1311 (10th Cir. 1996), we stated in dicta that “[t]here is no requirement that the district court make specific findings regarding [the 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) factors in sentence-reduction orders] as long as it states the reasons for its actions.” The other case, United States v. Nelson, 303 F. App’x 641 (10th Cir. 2008), an unpublished decision that relies on Dorrrough, remanded an AO-247 order that lacked any explanation, explaining “we lack a meaningful basis for reviewing the district court’s consideration of the relevant factors.” Id. at 646. But dicta and unpublished opinions do not bind panels of this court. See 10th Cir. R. 32.1(A) (“Unpublished decisions are not precedential, but may be cited for their persuasive value.”); Bates v. Dep’t of Corr., 81 F.3d 1008, 1011 (10th Cir. 1996) (“[A] panel of this [c]ourt . . . is not bound by a prior panel’s dicta.”). We nonetheless are persuaded that § 3582 does not require more explanation than was provided here.

First, Dorrough and Nelson ultimately locate the source of the explanatory requirement in § 3553(c),<sup>3</sup> but, as we explained in Verdin-Garcia, § 3582(c) plainly does not incorporate that requirement. See Verdin-Garcia, 824 F.3d at 1221 (“§ 3582(c)(2) . . . does not mention § 3553(c).”). Although Nelson states that § 3582(c)(2) “require[s]” a district court “to state the reasons for its decision,” 303 F. App’x at 646, § 3582(c)(2) only directs courts to consider the § 3553(a) factors. Nowhere does the language of § 3582(c)(2) include, reference, or incorporate the explanatory requirement of § 3553(c). Verdin-Garcia, 824 F.3d at 1221. Nelson’s statement that § 3582(c)(2) requires a statement of reasons is unpersuasive for that reason.

Second, Dorrough and Nelson are inconsistent with our cases on sentencing, which provide a ceiling for the requirements in sentence-reduction proceedings. If a sentencing court does not need to explain the reasons behind a within-guidelines sentence, the standard cannot be higher for sentence reduction. Following Nelson’s approach would create a more stringent standard for sentence-reduction proceedings than for original sentencing proceedings. Had Congress wished to include an explanatory requirement in the sentence-reduction provision, as they did in § 3553(c), they could have done so. But “courts must presume that a legislature says in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there.” Barnhart v. Sigmon Coal Co., 534 U.S. 438, 461–62 (2002).

<sup>3</sup> Dorrough gets to § 3553(c) in two steps. As authority for its dictum, Dorrough cited United States v. Lee, 957 F.2d 770, 774–75 (10th Cir. 1992), a case about supervised release that cites § 3553(c) as authority for a similar dictum. Nelson cites Dorrough, so it too ultimately derives its holding from § 3553(c). Nelson, 303 F. App’x at 645.

The rule of Nelson might be good practice for the district courts, and reviewing courts might benefit in some circumstances from additional explanation, but as we explained, neither the text of the statute nor our precedent require additional explanation. Even though district courts need not explain their decisions in sentence-reduction orders, that does not mean that they should not do so. In Verdin-Garcia, we announced a “[g]eneral [p]olicy [s]upporting [e]xplanation,” in light of “the need for a district court to create a meaningful basis for appellate review and to promote the perception of fairness.” 824 F.3d at 1222. As the First Circuit noted in a similar case, “[e]ven a single sentence incorporating the government’s or probation officer’s position might have spared this case a trip to the [court of appeals] and all the attendant effort and expense associated therewith.” Zayas-Ortiz, 808 F.3d at 525. But the standard of review is abuse of discretion, not best practice. In the absence of an explanatory requirement, we do not find that the district court abused its discretion.

III. Conclusion

We therefore AFFIRM the district court’s order reducing Chavez-Meza’s sentence to 114 months.
