Teema came and talked to me I asked her to show the picture that she drawn for Lindsey the night she broke down to confirm that she draw it and to find the meanings. Teema showed the picture to H.H. that was e-mailed to me from Lindsey. (EXHIBIT 1) H.H. stated that Roger bought the thing that you strap your waist for thirty five dollars Roger stated. The Lincoln County Sheriff Office would search for any Contraband, the fruits of a crime, or things otherwise criminally possessed, and sex toys, sexual videos, and stored in a green suit case, or any other storage area. Based upon training and experience, your affiant knows that cell phones can contain a substantial amount of information relevant to the investigation of a case. Criminals often use cellular phones to communicate with accomplices and will sometimes store accomplices' contact information in address books, speed dial lists or in other areas of the phone. These communications can occur through typical telephone calls or through instant messaging or text messages. To the extent that criminals use services such as instant messaging or text messages, these messages can sometimes be found on the cellular phone itself. Criminals also use cellular phones to document criminal activities both by photographs as well as digital memos. Your affiant knows that these images and memos are also stored on the handset or SIM (Subscriber Identity Module).

Your affiant knows that devices such as these phones can store a large number of phone numbers and call history and some mobile phones can also contain contact information and calendar information and can be linked, either by wire or wireless, with computers. Recent product releases now commonly have both video and still camera capabilities and phones can contain images/videos. Likewise, your affiant knows that images in a camera can contain evidence of where a suspect has been and with whom the suspect has associated. Your affiant knows that devices containing data and images may be important to a criminal investigation in two distinct ways: (1) the objects themselves may be contraband, evidence, instrumentalities, or fruits of crime, and/or (2) the objects may be used as storage devices that contain contraband, evidence, instrumentalities, or fruits of crime in the form of electronic data. In this case, your affidavit requests permission to search and seize the images and data that constitute evidence of the crime and to seize the devices themselves, both as instrumentalities and because it will likely be necessary for reasons of practicality to conduct a search off-site of some of the items. In controlled substance cases, a camera can be used to store images of people, for whom the controlled substance is being sold or purchased, images of products being produced, or images of documents that can later be used to produce a controlled substance. In your affiant's experience, criminals engaged in the type of crime described herein sometimes use cameras to photograph locations frequented to purchase, manufacture or distribute controlled substances. Additionally, your affiant has worked on cases where criminals have used cameras to take pictures of proceeds of crimes and accomplices in crimes. This information can be valuable evidence in determining other participants in a criminal enterprise.

Your affiant knows that those involved in criminal enterprises sometimes use multiple phones to separate contacts with different participants or to attempt to avoid detection and monitoring by law enforcement. They also sometimes possess multiple phones to have a backup means of communication in case a phone is lost or seized by law enforcement.

Based on your affiant's knowledge, training, and experience, your affiant knows that devices such as mobile phones can store information digitally, similar to the way a computer does. Data on these devices or remnants of such data can possibly be recovered possibly days or months after they have been stored in the devices' memory and can be retrieved by experts even after they have been deleted.

Based upon your affiant's knowledge, training and experience, your affiant knows that searching and seizing information from electronic and digital devices often requires law enforcement personnel to seize most or all electronic storage devices to be searched later by a qualified expert. This is true because of the following:

(1) The volume of evidence. Even small hand-held devices, such as cellular phones in issue here, can be capable of storing large amounts of information and of interacting with the internet and other devices. Additionally, a suspect may try to conceal criminal evidence; he or she might store it in random order with deceptive file names. This may require searching authorities to examine all the stored data to determine which particular files that are evidence or instrumentalities of crime.

2) Technical Requirements. Searching computers and electronic and digital storage devices for criminal evidence is a highly technical process requiring expert skill and a properly controlled environment. The vast array of computer hardware and software and digital devices available requires even computer experts to specialize in some systems and applications. Data search protocols are exacting scientific procedures designed to protect the integrity of the evidence and to recover even "hidden," erased, compressed, password-protected, or encrypted files. Because computer, electronic and digital evidence is vulnerable to inadvertent or intentional modification or destruction, a controlled environment may be necessary to complete an accurate analysis.

3) Searching the Devices may require a range of data analysis techniques. Examination techniques for cell phones can vary depending on the make, model and capabilities of the phone. In other cases, however, such techniques may not yield the evidence described in the warrant. Criminals can mislabel or hide files and directories; encode communications to avoid using key words; attempt to delete files to evade detection; or take other steps designed to frustrate law enforcement searches for information. These steps may require agents to conduct more extensive searches, such as scanning areas not allocated to listed files, or opening every file and scanning its contents briefly to determine whether it falls within the scope of the warrant. In light of these difficulties, your affiant requests permission to use whatever data analysis techniques appear necessary to locate and retrieve the evidence as described.

Your affiant will have the phone(s) sent to the Idaho State Police Cyber Crime Unit which specializes in the examination of cellular phones. Analysis will include the use of various software and hardware to image or download the data, information and images contained within the phones and/or to view the images, data and information directly on the phones itself.

Wherefore, it is prayed that a Search Warrant be issued.
