OPINION BELOW

The unpublished opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is attached to this petition as Appendix A.

JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Court of Appeals entered judgment in Petitioner's case on December 21, 2017. This petition is filed within 90 days after entry of judgment. See SUP. CT. R. 13.1. This Court has jurisdiction to grant certiorari under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides, in pertinent part: "No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury,... nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law"

The Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides, in pertinent part: "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to ... trial, by an impartial jury"

FEDERAL STATUTE INVOLVED

The text of Title 8 U.S.C. § 1326 is reproduced in Appendix C.

STATEMENT

Martin Barcenas-Patino, a Mexican citizen, came to the United States illegally in 1979. Twenty years later, he was convicted of possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver and sentenced to 50 years' imprisonment. Barcenas was removed to Mexico in 2004, 2011, and 2015. On March 29, 2016, he was found in the Western District of Texas. Barcenas had not received permission from the Attorney General or the Secretary of Homeland Security to reapply for admission. Barcenas was indicted for illegal reentry after removal, in violation of 8 U.S.C. § 1326.

Under § 1326(b), certain prior convictions increase the maximum sentence for a reentry offense from two to 20 years. Barcenas had a qualifying prior conviction. In Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998), the Court held that the enhancement-qualifying conviction under § 1326(b) is a sentencing factor, not an element of a separate offense. In accordance with Almendarez-Torres, no prior felony was alleged in Barcenas's indictment. App. B. Barcenas pleaded guilty to the charge in his indictment, but he objected to any sentence imposed under § 1326(b). The district court overruled that objection and sentenced Barcenas to 48 months' imprisonment and three years' supervised release.

Barcenas appealed, arguing that, because the prior conviction was not alleged in the indictment, it could not subject him to enhanced penalties. Counsel acknowledged that the argument was foreclosed by this Court's precedent, but said that recent decisions from the Court suggested the precedent may be reconsidered. The court of appeals, finding itself bound by Almendarez-Torres, affirmed the sentence. App. A at 2.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The Court Should Grant Certiorari to Consider Whether to Overrule Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998).

Title 8 U.S.C. § 1326(a) punishes illegal reentry after removal with a maximum term of two years' imprisonment and one year of supervised release. The district court determined, however, that Barcenas was subject to enhancement under § 1326(b), which increases the maximum penalty if the removal occurred after certain convictions. The district court's decision accorded with this Court's decision in Almendarez-Torres v. United States, which held that § 1326(b)'s enhanced penalty is a sentencing factor, not a separate, aggravated offense. 523 U.S. 224, 235 (1998). This Court further ruled that this construction of § 1326(b) did not violate due process; a prior conviction need not be treated as an element of the offense, even if it increases the statutory maximum penalty. Id. at 239–47.

However, the continued validity of Almendarez-Torres is questionable. Just two years after it was decided, the Court appeared to cast doubt on it. See Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000). In Apprendi, the Court announced that facts that increase the maximum sentence must be proved to the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. 530 U.S. at 490. The Court acknowledged that this general principle conflicted with the specific holding in Almendarez-Torres that a prior conviction need not be treated as an element under § 1326(b). The Court found it “arguable that Almendarez-Torres was incorrectly decided, and that a logical application of our reasoning today should apply” to prior convictions as well. Id. at 489. But because Apprendi did not involve a prior conviction, the Court considered it unnecessary to revisit Almendarez-Torres. Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 490. Instead, the Court framed its holding to avoid expressly overruling the earlier case. Id. at 489.

Relying on Apprendi, and later indications from the Court and individual justices that Almendarez-Torres should be reversed, defendants like Barcenas preserved for possible review the contention that their reentry sentences exceeded the punishment permitted by statute and should be reversed. The Court did not grant certiorari on this issue and, in 2007, a panel of the court of appeals for the Fifth Circuit opined, in dictum, that a challenge to Almendarez-Torres is “foreclosed from further debate.” United States v. Pineda-Arrellano, 492 F.3d 624, 625 (5th Cir. 2007).

However, since that time, the Court has again questioned Almendarez-Torres’s reasoning and suggested the Court would be willing to revisit its holding. See Alleyne v. United States, 570 U.S. 99, 111 n.1 (2013); see also Mathis v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2243, 2258–59 (2016) (stating that Almendarez-Torres should be overturned) (citing Descamps v. United States, 570 U.S. 254, 281 (2013)).

(Thomas, J., concurring) (same)). These opinions reveal concern that Almendarez-Torres is constitutionally flawed.

In Alleyne, the Court applied Apprendi's rule to mandatory minimum sentences, holding that any fact that produces a higher sentencing range—not just a sentence above the mandatory maximum—must be pleaded in the indictment and either admitted by the defendant or proved to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt. Alleyne, 570 U.S. at 114–16. In its opinion, the Court apparently recognized that Almendarez-Torres remained subject to Sixth Amendment attack. The Court characterized that decision as a “narrow exception to the general rule” that all facts that increase punishment must be alleged and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Id. at 111 n.1. But because the parties in that case did not challenge Almendarez-Torres, the Court said it would “not revisit it for purposes of our decision today.” Id.

The Court's reasoning in Alleyne, however, strengthens any future challenge brought against Almendarez-Torres's recidivism exception. Alleyne traced the treatment of the relationship between crime and punishment, beginning in the Eighteenth Century, repeatedly noting how “[the] linkage of facts with particular sentence ranges ... reflects the intimate connection between crime and punishment.” Id. at 109; see also id. (“[i]f a fact was by law essential to the penalty, it was an element of the offense.”); id. (historically, crimes were defined as “the whole of the wrong to which the law affixes punishment ... including any fact that annexes a higher degree of punishment”) (internal citations omitted); id. at 111 (“the indictment must contain an allegation of every fact which is legally essential to the punishment to be inflicted.”) (quoting 1 J. Bishop, CRIMINAL PROCEDURE § 81 at 51 (2d ed. 1872)). The Court concluded that, because “the whole of the” crime and its punishment cannot be separated, the elements of a crime must include any facts that increase the penalty. Id. at 109, 114–15. The Court recognized no limitations or exceptions to this principle.

Alleyne’s emphasis that the elements of a crime include the whole of the facts for which a defendant is punished seriously undercuts the view, expressed in Almendarez-Torres, that recidivism is different from other sentencing facts. Almendarez-Torres, 523 U.S. at 243–44; see also Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 490 (“Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt.”) Apprendi later tried to explain this difference by pointing out that, unlike other facts, recidivism “does not relate to the commission of the offense itself[.]” 530 U.S. at 496 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). But the Court has since acknowledged that Almendarez-Torres might have been “incorrectly decided[.]” Id. at 489; see also Shepard v. United States, 544 U.S. 13, 26 n.5 (2005) (acknowledging that the Court’s holding in that case undermined Almendarez-Torres); Cunningham v. California, 549 U.S. 270, 291 n.14 (2007) (rejecting invitation to distinguish between “facts concerning the offense, where Apprendi would apply, and facts [like recidivism] concerning the offender, where it would not,” because “Apprendi itself ... leaves no room for the bifurcated approach”).

Three concurring justices in Alleyne provide additional reason to believe that this Court should and will revisit Almendarez-Torres. See Alleyne, 570 U.S. at 118 (Sotomayor, Ginsburg, Kagan, J.J., concurring). Those justices noted that the viability of the Sixth Amendment principle set forth in Apprendi was initially subject to some doubt, and some justices believed the Court “might retreat” from it. Id. at 120. Instead, Apprendi’s rule “has become even more firmly rooted in the Court’s Sixth Amendment jurisprudence.” Id. Reversal of even recent precedent is warranted when “the reasoning of [that precedent] has been thoroughly undermined by intervening decisions.” Id. at 121.

The growing view among members of this Court that Almendarez-Torres was wrongly decided is good reason to clarify whether Almendarez-Torres is still the law. Stare decisis “is at its weakest” when the Court interprets the Constitution. Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 235 (1997); see also Seminole Tribe v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 63 (1996). When “there has been a significant change in, or subsequent development of, our constitutional law,” stare decisis “does not prevent ... overruling a previous decision.” Agostini, 521 U.S. at 235–36. Even if the Court were ultimately to reaffirm Almendarez-Torres, review is warranted. As shown above, a majority of the Justices have stated that Almendarez-Torres is wrong as a matter of constitutional law. While lower court judges—as well as prosecutors, defense counsel, and criminal defendants—are forced to rely on the decision, they must speculate as to the ultimate validity of the Court’s holding. “There is no good reason to allow such a state of affairs to persist.” Rangel-Reyes v. United States, 547 U.S. 1200 (2006) (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari).

If Apprendi, its progeny, and, most recently, Alleyne, undermine Almendarez-Torres, as Barcenas argues, his imprisonment exceeds the statutory maximum. The indictment stated only the elements of the § 1326(a) offense; it did not include any allegation of a prior conviction. Because Barcenas was charged only with the § 1326(a) offense, he preserved for further review the argument that his maximum punishment was limited to two years' imprisonment.

The question of Almendarez-Torres's validity can be resolved only in this forum. Rangel-Reyes, 547 U.S. at 1200 (Thomas, J., dissenting) (citing State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 20 (1997)). Almendarez-Torres is a decision of the country's highest court on a question of constitutional dimension; no other court, and no other branch of government, can decide if it is wrong. Regarding the Constitution, it is ultimately the Court's responsibility "to say what the law is." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803). The Court should grant certiorari to say whether Almendarez-Torres is still the law.

CONCLUSION

FOR THESE REASONS, this Court should grant certiorari in this case.

Respectfully submitted.
