Before TJOFLAT and JORDAN, Circuit Judges, and STEELE, District Judge.*

TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge:

In 1988, Congress enacted the Indian Gaming Revenue Act (“IGRA”), Pub. L. No. 100-497, 102 Stat. 2467 (1988) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 2701 et seq.), “to protect the Indian gaming industry from corruption and to provide for extensive federal oversight of all but the most rudimentary forms of Indian gaming,” Tamiami Partners, Ltd. By & Through Tamiami Dev. Corp. v. Miccosukee Tribe of Indians of Fla., 63 F.3d 1030, 1033 (11th Cir. 1995). IGRA permits an Indian tribe to engage in gaming and to distribute the revenue from gaming activities to its members on a per capita basis—that is, an equal payment to each member. 25 U.S.C. § 2710(b)(1), (b)(3). When an Indian tribe decides to distribute the revenue from gaming activities, however, the distributions are subject to federal taxation. Id. § 2710(b)(3)(D). The Indian tribe, as a consequence, must report the distributions, notify its members of their tax liability, and withhold the taxes due on them. Id. § 2710(b)(3)(D); 26 U.S.C. §§ 3402(r)(1), 6041(a).

In the case before us, an Indian tribe engaged in gaming activities. Each quarter, the tribe used the revenue of the gaming activities to fund per capita distributions to its members. But the tribe disregarded its tax obligations on these distributions. It neither reported the distributions nor withheld taxes on them.

* Honorable John E. Steele, United States District Judge for the Middle District of Florida, sitting by designation.

App. A

In 2001, a member of the tribe received distributions on behalf of herself, her husband, and her two daughters. She neither filed a tax return for the 2001 tax year nor paid federal taxes on the distributions. The Government, after catching wind of the tribe's distribution program, assessed taxes, penalties, and interest against the member for the distributions. The member did not pay the assessments.

As a result, the Government brought suit to reduce the tax assessments to a judgment in district court. The tribe moved to intervene as of right¹ because the case required a determination as to the taxability of the distributions, which could impair its distribution program and subject it to reporting and withholding requirements. Its motion was granted, and the tribe filed an answer and affirmative defenses.

In the proceedings below, the member and the tribe raised as an affirmative defense that the distributions were exempt from taxation as "Indian general welfare benefit[s]" under the Tribal General Welfare Exclusion Act ("GWEA"), Pub. L. No. 113-168, 128 Stat. 1883 (2014) (codified at 26 U.S.C. § 139E). GWEA excludes from federal taxation "any payment made or services provided to or on behalf of a member of an Indian tribe . . . pursuant to an Indian tribal government program.”² 26 U.S.C. § 139E(b). The Government moved for summary judgment on this defense. On summary judgment, the District Court determined that “the Tribal GWE Act was not meant to supplant the IGRA; that is, per capita distributions of gaming revenue remain taxable income, even if these distributions arguably promote the general welfare of a tribe.”

In this appeal, the member and the tribe contend that the District Court erred in concluding that the exemption for Indian general welfare benefits did not apply to the distributions.³ The tribe alone asserts that the District Court erroneously upheld tax penalties against the member and incorrectly attributed to the member the distributions of her husband and daughters. Lastly, the tribe argues that the District Court erred by entering judgment against it as an intervenor.

We affirm the ruling of the District Court in each of these matters. The distribution payments cannot qualify as Indian general welfare benefits under

² To qualify for this exemption, the Indian tribal government program must meet the following requirements:

- (1) the program is administered under specified guidelines and does not discriminate in favor of members of the governing body of the tribe, and
- (2) the benefits provided under such program--
 - (A) are available to any tribal member who meets such guidelines,
 - (B) are for the promotion of general welfare,
 - (C) are not lavish or extravagant, and
 - (D) are not compensation for services.

26 U.S.C. § 139E(b)(1)–(2).

³ The member and the tribe raise two arguments in the alternative that are wholly lacking in merit. See infra note 17.

GWEA because Congress specifically subjected such distributions to federal taxation in IGRA. The member has waived any arguments as to penalties or the amount assessed against her, and the tribe lacks a legal interest in those issues. The District Court did not err in entering judgment against the tribe because the tribe intervened as of right and the Government sought to establish its obligation to withhold taxes on the distributions.

In 1990, the Miccosukee Indian Tribe of Florida (“Tribe”), an Indian tribe recognized under the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, Pub. L. No. 73-383, 48 Stat. 984 (1934), began to operate a gaming facility called Miccosukee Indian Bingo and Gaming (“MIBG”) on its reservation lands in southern Florida.

Since 1984, the Tribe has provided its members quarterly payments to help them live on the reservation without outside assistance.⁴ To fund these distributions, the Tribe taxes the “gross sales” made on the reservation as well as the rents from land and oil leases. The Tribe collects this tax revenue in what it calls the “non-taxable distributable revenue” account (“NTDR”). Each quarter, the Tribe gathers and approves a distribution from the NTDR. It divides the NTDR’s balance by the number of tribal members and then writes a check to each member for her proportional share.

In 1995, when the Tribe began gaming activities, it imposed a “gross receipts tax” specifically on MIBG.⁵ The Tribe also collects this gaming tax in the NTDR for distribution. In theory, therefore, the NTDR contains revenue from both gaming and non-gaming sources, all of which the Tribe distributes to its members.

The reality is that the lion’s share of the revenue for the distributions comes from MIBG. In the financial year ending on September 30, 2001, MIBG contributed $32,103,681 into the NTDR; the Tribe distributed $32,268,000 to its members that year. This means that $164,319 originated from other sources. Similarly, in 2002, MIBG paid $37,462,023 into the NTDR; the Tribe distributed a total of $36,335,300 that year, leaving an excess of $1,126,723 in gaming revenue. As the numbers reveal, MIBG contributed the vast majority of the funds for distribution. Despite this fact, the Tribe neither reported the distributions nor withheld federal taxes on them.

⁵ The Tribe defined “gross receipts” to “include all amounts wagered and received by MIBG, all admission fees paid to MIBG, and all other monies received by MIBG from ancillary or supporting operations (including, but not limited to, food and beverage services, gift shop sales, and related commercial activities).” MIBG was required to calculate and pay the gross receipts tax on the last day of each calendar month.

App. A

In 2001, Sally Jim, a member of the Tribe, received and cashed distribution checks on behalf of herself, her husband, and her two children.⁶ The distributions totaled $272,000, which amounted to $68,000 per person. She also earned $25,990 through her employment at the tribal healthcare center in that year. Sally Jim neither filed a tax return in 2001 nor paid federal taxes on the distributions.

In September, 2004, because of Sally Jim's failure to file a tax return, the Government assessed taxes, penalties, and interest against her for the 2001 tax year. On December 31, 2012, after becoming aware of the distributions Sally Jim received from the Tribe, the Government assessed additional taxes, penalties, and interest against her. Sally Jim did not pay the assessments.

B.

On July 1, 2014, the Government sought to reduce the assessments to a judgment in the District Court. In its one-count complaint, the Government alleged that Sally Jim failed to pay taxes and penalties of $267,237.18 for 2001.⁷ The Tribe moved to intervene as of right under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure

⁷ In January 2015, after the IRS had commenced proceedings against Sally Jim, her attorney prepared her tax return for 2001. She signed and filed it on January 20, 2015. The return stated that the $272,000 she received in distribution payments in 2001 were non-taxable as Indian general welfare benefits under GWEA.

App. A

24(a).⁸ The District Court granted the motion after determining that a ruling could subject the Tribe to withholding and reporting requirements and affect its general welfare program.

Sally Jim and the Tribe answered the complaint and raised affirmative defenses. They alleged that Sally Jim did not owe taxes on the distributions because they were exempt from taxation. Their principal argument was that the distributions qualified as “Indian general welfare benefit[s]” under GWEA and therefore could not be taxed.⁹ 26 U.S.C. § 139E(a). In case this argument failed, Sally Jim alleged that the Government wrongly included the distributions of her household members in the assessment against her. She also alleged that she should not be subject to penalties because she relied “upon the advice of Tribal officials as well as the representatives of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.”

⁸ Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24(a) reads:

(a) Intervention of Right. On timely motion, the court must permit anyone to intervene who:

(1) is given an unconditional right to intervene by a federal statute; or

(2) claims an interest relating to the property or transaction that is the subject of the action, and is so situated that disposing of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the movant’s ability to protect its interest, unless existing parties adequately represent that interest.

⁹ Sally Jim and the Tribe also alleged that the distributions did not come from the “net revenue” of MIBG and that the “[d]istributions are derived directly from the land, and thus are not subject to federal income taxation and reporting requirements.”

App. A

The Government moved the District Court for summary judgment, arguing that GWEA did not exempt the payments from taxation.¹⁰ Specifically, the Government argued that GWEA is inapplicable to the distributions because Congress, through IGRA, specifically intended to tax distributions of gaming revenue. Sally Jim and the Tribe, in a joint response, countered that a dispute of material fact existed on whether the distributions met the requirements to qualify as Indian general welfare benefits under GWEA.

The District Court granted summary judgment in part. It held that pursuant to IGRA the “per capita distributions of gaming revenue remain taxable income, even if these distributions arguably promote the general welfare of a tribe.”¹¹ The District Court, however, denied summary judgment as to how much of the distributions came from sources other than gaming, which might render them eligible for an exemption as Indian general welfare benefits.

With respect to the tax assessments against Sally Jim, the District Court concluded that a genuine dispute of material fact existed regarding the extent of Sally Jim’s tax liability because some of the checks she received were “made out to her husband and her daughter.” On tax penalties, the District Court held that

¹¹ The District Court also held that a gaming enterprise, like MIBG, does not directly derive income from the land and therefore does not have a tax exemption on that ground.

App. A

Sally Jim had not demonstrated reasonable cause for failing to timely file her tax return as to her salary.¹² But the District Court denied summary judgment on whether Sally Jim was subject to penalties for failing to report and pay taxes on the tribal distributions because a dispute of material fact existed as to whether she reasonably relied on the advice of an attorney or statements made during tribal meetings.

The parties consented to a bench trial, which took place August 11–16, 2016. In its opening statement and closing argument, the Government stressed that the distributions came solely from the gross receipts tax on MIBG, a gaming facility, and thus that GWEA could not apply to any portion of them. As to the amount of the tax assessments against Sally Jim, the Government contended that Sally Jim “had discretion” to spend the distributions the Tribe made to the members of her household and therefore that she must pay federal taxes on them. Lastly, the Government asserted that Sally Jim lacked reasonable cause for failing to pay taxes on the distributions because she never received advice from a tax expert.

Sally Jim and the Tribe, in their opening statements and closing arguments, made no effort to establish how much of the distributions came from a source other than gaming activities.¹³ They insisted that Sally Jim could not be liable for the full assessment amount and that she reasonably relied on the advice of tribal officials and Dexter Lehtinen, the Tribe's general counsel in 2001.

¹² The District Court based this conclusion on Sally Jim’s deposition testimony that she had “everything ready” but “just completely forgot to file that year.”

App. A

After careful consideration of the evidence and arguments of the parties, the District Court set forth its findings of facts and conclusions of law in an order on August 19, 2016. The District Court reiterated that "the Tribe's distributions, derived from gaming proceeds, are not exempted from federal taxation as general welfare payments or income from the land." Because neither Sally Jim nor the Tribe "present[ed] any evidence identifying a specific percentage of the distributions derived from non-gaming sources," the District Court held that "no exemption from taxation applies to the income at issue in this case." Moving to whether the Government correctly included the distributions of Sally Jim's household members in the assessment against her, the District Court held that she "exercised sufficient control over the full amount of tribal distributions she received" to be liable for taxes on them.¹⁴ Lastly, the District Court addressed

¹⁴ In so holding, the District Court put weight on the fact that Sally Jim included the full $272,000 in distributions on the 2001 tax return she filed in 2015. It found relevant that Sally Jim did not provide evidence of the trusts in which she allegedly placed her daughters' distribution checks and that Sally Jim admitted to spending all the money in one of her daughter's trust accounts on household expenses. Lastly, with respect to her husband, the District Court determined that Sally Jim exercised sufficient control over his distribution because the Tribe "is a matriarchal society," meaning that "[p]ayments . . . to a male member of the Tribe whether the Government could impose penalties on Sally Jim for failure to file a tax return and to pay taxes on the distributions. The District Court ruled that Sally Jim lacked reasonable cause for this failure because she admittedly forgot to file the tax return and could not have reasonably relied on the statements of tribal leaders or Dexter Lehtinen.¹⁵

The District Court concluded that “final judgment will be entered . . . in favor of the United States of America and against Sally Jim.” It instructed the Government “to submit a proposed order of final judgment.” Complying with this instruction, the Government proposed language for an order entering judgment:

In light of the Order Setting Forth Court’s Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, it is ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Judgment is entered in favor of the United States and against Defendant Sally Jim and Intervenor-Defendant Miccosukee Tribe of Indians of Florida. Specifically, Sally Jim is liable to the United States in the amount of $278,758.83 as of April 9, 2015 for unpaid federal income taxes, penalties, and interest assessed against her for the 2001 Tax Year, plus statutory additions and interest that continue to accrue under 26 U.S.C. §§ 6621–6622.

The District Court adopted the Government’s proposed language with minor alterations—and thus entered judgment against both Sally Jim and the Tribe and who is married to a female member of the Tribe are generally made available to the female member.”

¹⁵ Specifically, the District Court opined that Sally Jim could not have relied on advice of the tribal leaders because she had not established that any of them were tax experts. As to Dexter Lehtinen, the District Court credited his testimony that “(1) he never represented Jim or any other individual member of the Tribe; and (2) he never instructed Jim not to file her federal income tax returns, nor did he instruct her not to pay tax on the distributions she received from the NTDR account.”

specified that Sally Jim was liable for the unpaid federal income taxes, penalties, and interest.

A few weeks later, the Tribe moved the District Court to alter and amend the judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59(e). The Tribe contended that the District Court erred by entering judgment against it. A district court, the Tribe contended, “cannot enter a judgment against a party when nothing during the course of the litigation or the trial indicated that judgment would be entered against that party.” Because the record does not explain the “basis” of the judgment, the Tribe continued, the final judgment is “likely to lead to confusion regarding who is liable for the amount due and what impact, if any, the judgment has on the Tribe.”

The District Court denied the Tribe’s motion to alter and amend the judgment. In seeking to intervene, the District Court reasoned, the Tribe “expressly stated it had an interest in the . . . determination of whether its distribution payments were subject to federal taxation.” At summary judgment, the District Court rejected Sally Jim and the Tribe’s affirmative defenses and held that the distributions were subject to federal taxation—a holding that subjected the Tribe to reporting and withholding requirements on the distributions. The District Court therefore ruled that the circumstances warranted entering judgment against the Tribe, an intervenor as of right with an interest at stake.¹⁶

Sally Jim and the Tribe filed notices of appeal, challenging the District Court's order granting the Government partial summary judgment, its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and its final judgment. The Tribe also appealed the denial of its motion to alter and amend the judgment.

II.

In an attempt to avoid federal income taxation on the distributions, Sally Jim and the Tribe primarily raise one argument on appeal as to the tax status of the distributions.¹⁷ They argue that the distributions qualify as "Indian general welfare

¹⁷ Sally Jim raises two alternative arguments, both of which lack merit. First, she argues that the distributions do not come from the "net revenue" of MIBG. This is the case, she contends, because the Tribe imposes a tax on MIBG, places the tax into the NTDR, and then distributes the NTDR balance each quarter. In other words, Sally Jim argues that the distributions aren't made directly from MIBG and therefore aren't subject to federal taxation. We decline this invitation to place form over substance in analyzing the taxability of the distributions. Ocmulgee Fields, Inc. v. C.I.R., 613 F.3d 1360, 1368 (11th Cir. 2010) ("[A] basic maxim of tax law is that 'the substance of a transaction, rather than the form in which it is cast, ordinarily determines its tax consequences.'" (quoting Swaim v. United States, 651 F.2d 1066, 1069-70 (5th Cir. 1981))). IGRA subjects to federal taxation the per capita payments an Indian tribe makes to its members from gaming revenue, no matter the mechanisms devised to collect the revenue or administer the payments.

Second, Sally Jim contends that the income from MIBG derives from the land and is therefore tax exempt under 25 U.S.C. § 5506 and the Miccosukee Settlement Act of 1997, Pub. L. No. 105-83, 111 Stat. 1624 (1997). These statutes provide that the lands conveyed to Indian tribes by the Government are not taxable. To be tax exempt under such statutes, the income in question must "derive[] directly" from an Indian tribe's lands. Squire v. Capoeman, 351 U.S. 1, benefit[s]” and therefore are not subject to federal income taxation. 26 U.S.C. § 139E(a).¹⁸ This argument presents a question of statutory interpretation: whether GWEA in effect amended IGRA. We review this question de novo. United States v. Maupin, 520 F.3d 1304, 1306 (11th Cir. 2008).

IGRA, enacted in 1988, imposes federal income taxes on the per capita payments an Indian tribe distributes from the net revenue of Indian gaming activities. 25 U.S.C. § 2710(b)(3). It therefore imposes taxation in “a very specific situation,” Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 550, 94 S. Ct. 2474, 2483 (1974). GWEA, enacted in 2014,¹⁹ provides a tax exemption “of general application”²⁰ for 9, 76 S. Ct. 611, 616 (1956). MIBG, a casino, does not generate income from the use of reservation land or the resources of the land. Rather, the income from MIBG comes from “investment in . . . improvements” on the land and “business activities related to those assets,” namely gambling. Critzer v. United States, 597 F.2d 708, 714 (Ct. Cl. 1979) (en banc); see also Campbell v. Comm’r, 164 F.3d 1140, 1142–43 (8th Cir. 1999). It therefore does not derive directly from the land. Neither the Miccosukee Settlement Act nor § 5506 exempts the income from MIBG from taxation under IGRA.

¹⁸ Section 139E(a) provides that an Indian general welfare benefit is excluded from “gross income,” 26 U.S.C. § 63(a), and therefore is not subject to federal income taxation.

Indian general welfare benefits,²¹ without regard to the source of the income. 26 U.S.C. § 139E(b).

“Where there is no clear intention otherwise, a specific statute will not be controlled or nullified by a general one, regardless of the priority of the enactment.” Morton, 417 U.S. at 550–51, 94 S. Ct. at 2483; see also Radzanower v. Touche Ross & Co., 426 U.S. 148, 153, 96 S. Ct. 1989, 1992–93 (1976) (“It is a basic principle of statutory construction that a statute dealing with a narrow, precise, and specific subject is not submerged by a later enacted statute covering a more generalized spectrum.”). In enacting GWEA, Congress expressed no intent to release the per capita payments of gaming revenue from federal taxation.²² Congress spoke clearly when it imposed federal income taxation on per capita payments derived from gaming revenue. If Congress intended GWEA to undo this arrangement, it knew the words to do so. It chose not to use them. See Animal ²¹ Provided, of course, that the payments in question meet the four requirements in the statute. See supra note 2.

²² To the contrary, the legislative history of GWEA suggests that Congress intended to codify and clarify Revenue Procedure 2014-35, 2014-26 I.R.B. 1110, which itself stated that “per capita payments to tribal members of tribal gaming revenues that are subject to the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act are . . . not excludable from gross income under the general welfare exclusion or this revenue procedure.” See Staff of Joint Comm. on Taxation, 113th Cong., General Explanation of Tax Legislation Enacted in the 113th Congress, at 40 (Comm. Print 2015) (stating that GWEA “contains similar requirements to Rev. Proc. 2014-35 in terms of which benefits would qualify for exclusion under the general welfare doctrine”); 160 Cong. Rec. E1469-02 (daily ed. Sept. 16, 2014) (statement of Rep. Tom Reed) (noting that GWEA “generally codifies” Revenue Procedure 2014-35); 160 Cong. Rec. H7601 (daily ed. Sept. 16, 2014) (statement of Rep. Nunes) (stating that GWEA “would codify [Revenue Procedure 2014-35], specifically applying the general welfare exclusion to Indian tribes and payments received by tribal members, their spouses and children”).

(“Where Congress knows how to say something but chooses not to, its silence is controlling.” (quotation omitted)). We therefore hold that the exemption for Indian general welfare benefits, 26 U.S.C. § 139E(a), is inapplicable to the per capita payments an Indian tribe makes from gaming revenue. The District Court did not err in holding that GWEA does not exempt the distributions of MIBG’s revenue from federal taxation.²³

III.

Following trial, the District Court held that Sally Jim was subject to tax penalties for failing to timely file a tax return and that she exercised sufficient control over the distributions of her husband and children to be assessed taxes on them. The Tribe, in its initial brief on appeal, contended that the District Court

²³ This, of course, would not prevent the exemptions for general welfare benefits or income derived directly from the land from applying to funds in the NTDR that came from sources other than MIBG, assuming that Sally Jim and the Tribe could prove that the NTDR contained such funds. The District Court correctly reserved that question for trial. After trial, the District Court found that “[t]he vast majority, if not all, of the Tribe’s distributions come from the Tribe’s net gaming revenue” and that “[t]he Tribe produced no documentary evidence substantiating its claim that sources other than the Bingo Hall contributed to the NTDR account,” See United States v. White, 466 F.3d 1241, 1248 (11th Cir. 2006) (stating that a civil defendant has the burden of proving a tax assessment erroneous after the Government proves that the assessment was properly made). The District Court therefore held that none of the funds in the NTDR qualified for the exemptions for general welfare benefits or income directly derived from the land. Neither Sally Jim nor the Tribe expressly challenged this determination in their briefs on appeal. Even if they had, the evidence supports the District Court’s finding that the great majority, if not all, of the distributions came from MIBG and therefore the District Court committed no error in this regard.

erred in reaching these conclusions. Sally Jim, however, did not challenge the District Court's rulings on these matters in her brief.

“Under our caselaw, a party seeking to raise a claim or issue on appeal must plainly and prominently so indicate. Otherwise, the issue—even if properly preserved at trial—will be considered abandoned.” United States v. Jernigan, 341 F.3d 1273, 1283 n.8 (11th Cir. 2003); see also Sapuppo v. Allstate Floridian Ins. Co., 739 F.3d 678, 681 (11th Cir. 2014) (“A party fails to adequately ‘brief’ a claim when he does not ‘plainly and prominently’ raise it, ‘for instance by devoting a discrete section of his argument to those claims.’” (quoting Cole v. U.S. Attorney Gen., 712 F.3d 517, 530 (11th Cir. 2013))). Accordingly, this Court refuses “to consider issues raised for the first time in an appellant’s reply brief.” United States v. Levy, 379 F.3d 1241, 1244 (11th Cir. 2004).

In her brief on appeal, Sally Jim challenged only the District Court’s determination that the distributions were subject to federal income taxation. In other words, Sally Jim bet the farm on the argument that the distributions were not taxable.²⁴ She chose not to raise arguments as to penalties or the extent of her tax liability if we decided, as we do, that the distributions are subject to federal income taxation.²⁵ We therefore need not address these issues because they have been waived. The District Court's rulings on them stand.

²⁴ Indeed, her brief argues only that the distributions do not originate from the “[n]et revenue” of a gaming facility, 25 U.S.C. § 2710(b)(3), or, in the alternative, that the distributions are exempt from federal income taxation as Indian general welfare benefits or income derived directly from the land.

App. A

IV.

Lastly, the Tribe contends that the District Court erred by entering judgment against it and challenges the District Court's order denying its motion to amend the judgment. "The decision to alter or amend judgment is committed to the sound discretion of the district judge and will not be overturned on appeal absent an abuse of discretion." Am. Home Assurance Co. v. Glenn Estess & Assocs., Inc., 763 F.2d 1237, 1238–39 (11th Cir. 1985). We disagree with the Tribe.

It is hornbook law that an intervenor "is treated as . . . an original party and has equal standing with the original parties." 7C Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R.

²⁵ The Tribe contested these issues in its brief on appeal, and Sally Jim attempted to adopt them in her reply brief. The Tribe, however, has no legal interest with respect to penalties leveled against Sally Jim or Sally Jim's tax liability for the distributions of her husband and children; it therefore could not raise those issues on appeal. See Kirkland v. N.Y. State Dep't of Corr. Servs., 711 F.2d 1117, 1126 (2d Cir. 1983) ("[T]he sum of rights possessed by an intervenor, even if granted unconditional intervention, is not necessarily equivalent to that of a party in a case and depends upon the nature of the intervenor's interest."); 7C Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller & Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1923 (3d ed. 2007) ("An appeal will be allowed . . . only to the extent of the interest that made it possible for intervention."); cf. Town of Chester, N.Y. v. Laroe Estates, Inc., 581 U.S. —, 137 S. Ct. 1645, 1651 (2017) ("[A]n intervenor of right must demonstrate Article III standing when it seeks additional relief beyond that which the plaintiff requests."); Boston Tow Boat Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 632, 634, 64 S. Ct. 776, 777 (1944) (holding that an intervenor could not establish violation of an "independent right" sufficient to support an "independent appeal"). Sally Jim also fails to avoid waiver by incorporating the Tribe's arguments in her reply brief; she brought these arguments "too late." Sapuppo, 739 F.3d at 683.

Just as an original party, an intervenor is “vulnerable to complete adjudication by the federal court of the issues in litigation between the intervenor and the adverse party.” United States v. Oregon, 657 F.2d 1009, 1014 (8th Cir. 1981) (quotation omitted). A district court may therefore enter judgment against an intervenor, the same as any original party.

Here, the Tribe intervened as of right regarding the tax status of its distribution payments. As the Tribe argued in its motion to intervene, the determination whether the distributions were subject to federal taxation would affect “the Tribe’s ability to preserve the integrity of its general welfare system and governmental functions.” If the distributions were determined to be taxable, the Tribe would have legal obligations in the form of reporting and withholding requirements.

As an intervenor, the Tribe entered the lawsuit with full knowledge of the Government’s claims, and asserted affirmative defenses that were resolved by the District Court. It argued each motion, attended depositions, gave an opening statement and closing argument, examined witnesses, and produced evidence and testimony. In other words, the Tribe not only had the status of an original party but acted like one. The Tribe was also aware that, in its proposed conclusions of law, the Government asked the District Court to declare that the Tribe's distributions were subject to federal income taxation and therefore that the Tribe had an obligation to withhold taxes on them. As a result, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to amend the judgment.²⁷

AFFIRMED.

²⁷ The Tribe's argument that the final judgment creates confusion has no merit. The order clearly states that Sally Jim is liable for the tax assessment, not the Tribe. There can be no confusion on that point.

CASE NO. 14-22441-CIV-ALTONAGA/O'Sullivan

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

v.

SALLY JIM,

Defendant.

ORDER

THIS CAUSE came before the Court upon Plaintiff, United States of America's ("Plaintiff[s]") Third Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment . . . [ECF No. 156], filed on April 1, 2016. Defendant, Sally Jim ("Jim"), and Intervenor-Defendant, the Miccosukee Tribe of Indians of Florida ("the Tribe"), filed their Response . . . ("Response") [ECF No. 159], on April 22, 2016; Plaintiff filed its Reply . . . ("Reply") [ECF No. 160] on May 2, 2016. The Court has considered the parties' submissions,¹ the record, and applicable law.

I. BACKGROUND

Since approximately the 1960s, the Miccosukee Tribe of Indians of Florida has made quarterly assistance payments to its members to help them provide for their needs. (See Pl.'s SMF ¶ 8; see also Mot., Ex. 12, Deposition of Colley Billie ("Billie Deposition") [ECF No. 156-7] 61:7–64:11). The Tribe distributes these payments in the form of checks or cash issued in equal amounts to each tribal member, on a quarterly basis. (See Billie Dep. 60:3–20; see also Mot., Ex. 13, Deposition of Gabriel K. Osceola ("Osceola Deposition") [ECF No. 156-7] 87:22–

¹ Other documents include Plaintiff's Statement of Undisputed Facts ("Plaintiff's SMF") [ECF No. 156-1] and Jim and the Tribe's Response to United States' Statement of Undisputed Facts ("Defendants' SMF") [ECF No. 159-1].

23 (“We don’t discriminate between member to member. Everybody gets the same.”)). Originally, the payment amounts were small, starting at around $20–25 several times a year, gleaned from various forms of tribal revenue. (See Billie Dep. 61:16–23).

Around 1990, the Tribe started operating a gaming facility known as the Bingo Hall or Miccosukee Indian Bingo Gaming (hereinafter, the “Bingo Hall”), which offers class II gaming, including bingo, poker, and video pull-tab machines. (See Pl.’s SMF ¶ 9). The Bingo Hall began generating larger amounts of income, allowing the Tribe to distribute increased quarterly assistance payments to its members. (See id. ¶ 10). Currently, the Tribe’s quarterly distributions can reach into tens of thousands of dollars per tribal member. (See Billie Dep. 69:18–70:15 (stating the distribution account generally contains between $17-20 million, and distributions are calculated by dividing this amount equally among the Tribe’s approximately 600 members)).

On December 8, 1994, Congress added a provision to the Internal Revenue Code, requiring American Indian tribes to withhold federal income tax from any payment of net revenue from class II gaming. (See Mot. 4; see also 26 U.S.C. § 3402(r)). In response to this provision, Plaintiff asserts the Tribe “devised a scheme” to be able to argue its quarterly assistance payments did not constitute net revenue from gaming. (Pl.’s SMF ¶ 11). Specifically, the Tribe enacted a “gross receipts tax” or “gross receipts license fee,” which it applied to its gaming facility. (Id.). This license fee is a percentage of the gross revenue of the Bingo Hall, and the Tribe places the fee into a non-taxable distributable revenue (“NTDR”) account. (See id.).

Currently, the license fee is set at over 8% of the Bingo Hall’s gross revenue. (See id. ¶ 12). The Tribe distributes its quarterly assistance payments to its members from this NTDR account. (See id. ¶ 12). The Tribe asserts these distributions are not taxable because they are general welfare payments for the benefit of tribal members, as opposed to per capita distributions of net gaming revenue. (See generally Resp.).

The Tribe also places funds from other sources into the NTDR account, such as taxes assessed on other tribal businesses, shops, and fishing. (See Mot., Ex. 15, Deposition of Jose I. Marrero (“Marrero Deposition”) [ECF No. 156-7] 154:12–17 (“Best of my recollection, there was [sic] other sources of funds that came revenues [sic], because there was a tax they assessed on other businesses, whether it was their . . . shops that they had or their fishing. Everything that generated revenues went into that account.” (alteration added)); see also Billie Dep. 65:16–25 (“Into that [NTDR] account I know that we have money we collect from — from our rental of our radio towers and our land lease that we have for the purposes of cattle grazing, and other areas that we collect monies from.” (alteration added)). Nevertheless, most of the funds in the NTDR account stem from gaming revenues. (See Marrero Dep. 155:12–18 (“[T]he revenue from gaming was significantly greater than the revenue from any other source.” (alteration added)). Also, the Tribe often subsidized the non-gaming tribal businesses with gaming revenue in order to keep them afloat. (See Osceola Dep. 27:1–29:8). For example, in the year 2001, the non-gaming tribal enterprises would not have made a profit without the Tribe’s assistance. (See id. 126:10–127:3).

From before 1995 to 2009, Billy Cypress (“Cypress”) was chairman of the Tribe. (See Pl.’s SMF ¶ 19). At the Tribe’s General Council meetings, Cypress often instructed tribal members not to claim the NTDR distributions as income. (See Mot., Ex. 6, Special General Council Meeting Minutes [ECF No. 156-5] L000443). In particular, Cypress told the Tribe members not to claim the NTDR money as income when applying for credit, and stated “if the [Internal Revenue Service] IRS were to find out about these monies then we could end up being taxed” (Id. (alterations added)). Cypress also instructed members not to cash their distribution checks in places where they would be reported to the IRS. (See Mot., Ex. 8, Special General Council Meeting Minutes [ECF No. 156-6] SJ001412 (“[Chairman Cypress] stated the only way the tribal member’s [sic] money will not be reported to the IRS is if they cash their checks at the Administration office, this is the only way they can be assured they will not be reported. He stated if a tribal member also has a banking account (with a substantial amount of money) then this too will be reported and the IRS will investigate into how the money was obtained.” (alteration added))).

Cypress notified members the Tribe would keep a reserve should the members ultimately need to pay taxes on their distributions. (See Mot., Ex. 1, Special General Council Meeting Minutes [ECF No. 156-5] L000339). Dexter Lehtinen, former counsel to the Tribe, gave tribal members at General Council meetings legal advice that the Tribe’s distributions were not taxable. (See Mot., Ex. 11, Deposition of Sally Jim (“Jim Deposition”) [ECF No. 156-7] 76:5–23).

Sally Jim is a member of the Tribe. (See Defs.’ SMF ¶ 3). Jim attended numerous General Council meetings and recalls Cypress making some of these statements. (See id. ¶ 15; see also Jim Dep. 60:25–62:3). Plaintiff asserts Jim received $272,000.00 in quarterly distributions from the Tribe in 2001. (See Pl.’s SMF ¶ 4). Jim admits receiving payments from the Tribe and states she used the money to provide for household expenses. (See Jim Dep. 41:16–42:2). Jim also worked for the Tribe’s healthcare facility and received wages in the amount of $25,990 in 2001. (See Defs.’ SMF ¶ 5). Jim did not timely file a tax return for the year 2001. (See id. ¶ 7). In January 2015, she attempted to submit a belated 2001 tax return to the IRS, in which she stated she received $272,000 in benefits from the Tribe as “other income,” excluded from gross income as Indian general welfare benefits. (See id. ¶ 4; see also Mot., Ex. 5, Return [ECF No. 156-5]).

Plaintiff asserts Jim is indebted to the United States for her federal income tax liabilities for 2001, including interest, penalties, and statutory additions, in the amount of $278,758.83. (See Declaration of Berlinda Nez (“Nez Declaration”) [ECF No. 156-2] ¶ 6). Jim does not dispute she owes taxes on her wage income, but argues the quarterly distributions she received from the Tribe constitute general welfare benefits, and thus are not taxable income. (See generally Resp.). Plaintiff presently moves for summary judgment, arguing U.S. tax law requires Jim to pay taxes on the distributions she received from the Tribe and no exclusions apply. (See generally Mot.).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Summary judgment shall be rendered if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56(a), (c). In making this assessment, the Court “must view all the evidence and all factual inferences reasonably drawn from the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party,” Stewart v. Happy Herman’s Cheshire Bridge, Inc., 117 F.3d 1278, 1285 (11th Cir. 1997), and “must resolve all reasonable doubts about the facts in favor of the non-movant,” United of Omaha Life Ins. Co. v. Sun Life Ins. Co. of Am., 894 F.2d 1555, 1558 (11th Cir. 1990). “An issue of fact is material if it is a legal element of the claim under the applicable substantive law which might affect the outcome of the case.” Burgos v. Chertoff, 274 F. App’x 839, 841 (11th Cir. 2008) (quoting Allen v. Tyson Foods Inc., 121 F.3d 642, 646 (11th Cir. 1997) (internal quotation marks omitted)). “A factual dispute is genuine ‘if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.” Channa Imps., Inc. v. Hybur, Ltd., No. 07-21516-CIV, 2008 WL 2914977, at *2 (S.D. Fla. July 25, 2008) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986)).

The movant’s initial burden on a motion for summary judgment “consists of a responsibility to inform the court of the basis for its motion and to identify those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.” Fitzpatrick v. City of Atlanta, 2 F.3d 1112, 1115 (11th Cir. 1993) (quoting Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323 (1986) (alterations and internal quotation marks omitted)). “[T]he plain language of Rule 56 mandates the entry of summary judgment against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party’s case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.” Jones v. UPS Ground Freight, 683 F.3d 1283, 1292 (11th Cir. 2012) (alteration added) (quoting Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322 (alterations and internal quotation marks omitted)).

III. ANALYSIS

The parties predominantly dispute the following issues: (1) whether the Tribe’s distributions are excludable from income as general welfare payments; (2) whether the IRS’s assessment is inflated because it includes distributions made to Jim’s husband and children; and (3) whether the distributions constitute income from the land. (See generally Mot.; Resp.). The Court addresses each in turn, as well as Plaintiff’s argument — not addressed in the Response — that Jim is liable for penalties for her failure to file a tax return and pay taxes when due.

A. General Welfare Payments

Plaintiff argues the Tribe's distributions are subject to taxation pursuant to the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, 25 U.S.C. section 2701 et seq. ("IGRA"), as "per capita" distributions of gaming revenue. (See Mot. 11). Jim contends the distributions are not subject to taxation because they constitute general welfare payments pursuant to 26 U.S.C. section 139E(b), the Tribal General Welfare Exclusion Act ("Tribal GWE Act"). (See Resp. 4–5). Because the intersection of these two statutes forms the crux of the present dispute, the Court provides a brief statutory analysis.

In 1988, Congress passed the IGRA to promote Indian tribes' gaming operations as a means of tribal economic development and to ensure the operations were conducted in accordance with the law. See 25 U.S.C. § 2702. The IGRA allows tribes to distribute gaming revenues amongst their members in the form of per capita payments, but only if these payments are subject to federal taxation. See id. § 2710(b)(3). Many tribes provide these per capita payments to their members. See Kathryn R.L. Rand & Steven A. Light, Virtue or Vice? How Igra Shapes the Politics of Native American Gaming, Sovereignty, and Identity, 4 VA. J. SOC. POL'Y & L. 381, 418 (1997) ("As of March 1996, twenty-three tribes were making per capita payments to members."). In some smaller tribes, these per capita distributions from gaming revenues provide sufficient income for the entire community. See Eric Henderson, Indian Gaming: Social Consequences, 29 ARIZ. ST. L.J. 205, 236 (1997).

Separately, years later, the IRS issued guidance regarding when benefits provided by Indian tribal governments to their members may qualify as general welfare, thus exempted from federal taxation. See Rev. Proc. 2014-35, 2014-26 I.R.B. 1110 (2014). The Guidance expressly referenced the IGRA and per capita distributions, stating:

[G]eneral welfare programs may be funded from casino revenues. However, per capita payments to tribal members of tribal gaming revenues that are subject to the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act are gross income under § 61, are subject to the information reporting and withholding requirements of §§ 6041 and 3402(r), and are not excludable from gross income under the general welfare exclusion or this revenue procedure. See 25 U.S.C. §§ 2701-2721 and 25 C.F.R. Part 290.

Id. (alteration and emphasis added).

Congress codified part of this IRS Guidance in 2014, when it enacted the Tribal GWE Act. See 160 Cong. Rec. H7599-02 (Sept. 16, 2014) (statement of Rep. Kind) (“[This legislation] would codify existing IRS practice . . . [referring to segments of Rev. Proc. 2014-35].” (alterations added)). The Tribal GWE Act defines the term “Indian general welfare benefit” as:

any payment made or services provided to or on behalf of a member of an Indian tribe (or any spouse or dependent of such a member) pursuant to an Indian tribal government program, but only if

- (1) the program is administered under specified guidelines and does not discriminate in favor of members of the governing body of the tribe, and
- (2) the benefits provided under such program-
 - (A) are available to any tribal member who meets such guidelines,
 - (B) are for the promotion of general welfare,
 - (C) are not lavish or extravagant, and
 - (D) are not compensation for services.

26 U.S.C. § 139E(b).

“Ambiguities in [the Tribal GWE Act] . . . shall be resolved in favor of Indian tribal governments and deference shall be given to Indian tribal governments for the programs administered and authorized by the tribe to benefit the general welfare of the tribal community.” Pub. L. 113–168, § 2(c) (alterations added). Yet, “this canon of interpretation does not permit [courts to rely] on ambiguities that do not exist,” and “the canon’s force may be overcome by other circumstances evidencing congressional intent.” Maniilaq Ass’n v. Burwell, No. CV 15-

152 (JDB), 2016 WL 1118256, at *4 (D.D.C. Mar. 22, 2016) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted; alteration in original).

Analyzing the two statutes in conjunction indicates the Tribal GWE Act was not meant to supplant the IGRA; that is, per capita distributions of gaming revenue remain taxable income, even if these distributions arguably promote the general welfare of a tribe. This conclusion is supported by the IRS Guidance, which distinguished that while general welfare programs may be funded by casino revenues, per capita distributions of casino revenue still constitute taxable income. See Rev. Proc. 2014-35, 2014-26 I.R.B. 1110 (2014). The Eleventh Circuit appears to agree the Tribal GWE Act does not replace or modify the IGRA. In an opinion related to the instant case, United States v. Billie, the court considered whether an IRS administrative summons directing the Miccosukee Tribe to release records regarding its alleged distribution of casino revenue was enforceable. See 611 F. App'x 608, 609 (11th Cir. 2015). The Tribe asserted the Tribal GWE Act mandated suspension of the examination; however, the court cited to the IGRA and stated, "much of the [Tribal GWE] Act at least arguably conflicts with separate U.S. Code provisions that mandate reporting, withholding, and taxation of distributions of tribal gaming revenue [such as the IGRA]." Id. at 612 (alterations added).

In determining whether the IGRA applies to the present case, the Court must decide whether the Tribe's payments to Jim constitute per capita distributions of gaming revenue. See 25 U.S.C. § 2710. In her Response to Plaintiff's Statement of Undisputed Facts, Jim denies the tribal distributions are "per capita" (see Defs.' SMF ¶ 8), and also states the payments were funded, in part, by gross receipts of tax revenue derived from non-gaming related activities (see id. ¶ 16). Yet, the record undisputedly establishes the distributions were "per capita." (See Mot., Ex. 4, IRS Meeting Notes [ECF No. 156-5] 00027 ("Per Marrero and Lehtinen — none of the payments were need based — they were equal to each tribal member”); see also Osceola Dep., 87:22–23 (“We don’t discriminate between member to member. Everybody gets the same.”)). Jim presents no evidence to the contrary, and her mere statement in a response brief the tribal distributions are not “per capita” cannot prevent summary judgment on its own. See Godwin v. Kelley, No. 2:12CV164-WHA-CSC, 2013 WL 3325777, at *12 (M.D. Ala. July 1, 2013) (“Plaintiffs[’] mere statement in brief that the conduct [in] the case is ‘at least negligence’ is not sufficient to create a question of fact under Rule 56.” (alterations added)).

In contrast, Jim’s statement the tribal distributions were funded, in part, by gross receipts of tax revenue derived from non-gaming related activities presents a genuine issue as to a material fact. The Court acknowledges the record indicates gaming revenues constituted a significant amount of the tribal distributions. (See Osceola Dep., 27:5–17 (“[A]ll the other operations [other than Miccosukee Indian Bingo and Gaming] are not substantial The enterprises, they don’t make any money.”); id. 123:8–127:3 (noting many of the tribal enterprises did not make a profit without tribal assistance)). (See also Mot., Ex. 7, Special General Council Meeting Minutes [ECF No. 156-6] 6 (“NTDR payments would be in accordance with revenue generated at MIBG. Business has been good and NTDR payments have been increasing and not decreasing.”); Marrero Dep. 155:12–18 (“[T]he revenue from gaming was significantly greater than the revenue from any other source.” (alteration added))). Furthermore, one witness testified the non-gaming tribal enterprises would not have made a profit in 2001 without the Tribe’s assistance. (See Osceola Dep. 126:10–127:3).

Nonetheless, Jim has presented evidence indicating at least some portion of the tribal distributions might arise from non-gaming sources. (See Marrero Dep. 154:12–17 (“[T]here was [sic] other sources of funds that came revenues [sic], because there was a tax they assessed on other businesses, whether it was their . . . shops that they had or their fishing. Everything that generated revenues went into that account.” (alterations added)); see also Billie Dep. 65:16–25 (“Into that [NTDR] account I know that we have money we collect from — from our rental of our radio towers and our land lease that we have for the purposes of cattle grazing, and other areas that we collect monies from.” (alteration added)). This issue is significant because while gaming revenues distributed per capita to tribal members clearly constitute taxable income under the IGRA, revenues derived from non-gaming activities may be more likely to qualify as general welfare payments or fall under another exception, such as income from the land. While the evidence at trial may ultimately reveal the non-gaming revenue sources contributed de minimis or non-existent amounts to the NTDR in 2001, the current state of the record presents a material issue of fact on this issue. Therefore, summary judgment is denied on the question of whether the NTDR distributions derived from non-gaming sources constitute taxable income.

Nevertheless, summary judgment is warranted finding the tribal distributions derived from gaming revenue constitute taxable income, rather than qualify as general welfare payments. Because the IGRA applies, the distributions derived from gaming revenue are taxable income unless Defendant can identify an express exemption. See Campbell v. C.I.R., 164 F.3d 1140, 1142 (8th Cir. 1999). Jim’s argument the Tribal GWE Act provides this exemption fails to persuade. The Court is sensitive to the fact that deference should be given to tribal governments in implementing social welfare programs tailored to fit their communities’ needs. See Pub. L. 113–168, § 2(c) (“Ambiguities in [the Tribal GWE Act] . . . shall be resolved in favor of Indian tribal governments and deference shall be given to Indian tribal governments for the programs administered and authorized by the tribe to benefit the general welfare” (alterations added)).

Yet, tribes are also not permitted to merely brand payments as “general welfare” for the purpose of evading taxes, especially where, as here, another statute expressly governs.

There are several indications the Tribe’s distributions derived from gaming revenue do not qualify as general welfare under the Tribal GWE Act. Primarily, one of the Act’s guidelines is that benefits provided may not be “lavish or extravagant.” 26 U.S.C. § 139E(b). It is undisputed Jim’s family received approximately 272,000.00 dollars’ worth of distributions in one year. (See Pl.’s SMF ¶ 4).² Admittedly, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Tribal Advisory Committee have not yet “establish[ed] guidelines for what constitutes lavish or extravagant benefits with respect to Indian tribal government programs.” 26 U.S.C. § 139E(c)(3) (alteration added). But it is difficult to believe such an amount would not qualify, especially when it was simply used for household expenses (see Jim Dep. 41:16–42:2), and provided in addition to the Tribe’s other benefits, including housing, education, medical care, and elder care (see Defs.’ SMF ¶ 25).³ The Eleventh Circuit in United States v. Billie, indicated its agreement on this issue, noting in dictum “because the present examination involves up to $300 million distributed to 600 tribal members or to service providers, there is a high likelihood the present payments would not qualify as ‘general welfare payments.’” 611 F. App’x at 609.

Another of the Act’s guidelines requires the benefits be for “the promotion of general welfare.” 26 U.S.C. § 139E(b). Jim argues the tribal distributions are intended for the promotion of general welfare, and she asserts Congress intended for this phrase to be construed broadly. (See Resp. 8). While this may be the case, it seems clear Congress did not intend to allow tribal members to utilize the Tribal GWE Act to circumvent the IGRA by broadly labeling per capita distributions of gaming revenue as welfare payments.

² While the record will be further developed at trial, it is undisputed the majority of the $272,000.00 derived from gaming revenues as opposed to non-gaming sources. (See Marrero Dep. 155:12–18).

In re Hutchinson is instructive on this point. See 354 B.R. 523, 530–31 (Bankr. D. Kan. 2006). There, a tribal member claimed his per capita distributions derived from casino revenues were exempt from a bankruptcy proceeding because they constituted “a local public assistance benefit” pursuant to an applicable Kansas statute. Id. at 529. The court acknowledged the IGRA requires tribes to use net revenues “to provide for the general welfare of the Indian tribe and its members,” among other purposes; however, this fact was insufficient to exempt the distributions as public assistance benefits. Id. at 530. In its decision, the court noted: “Although [the tribe’s] distributions may be made with the goal of providing for the general welfare of the tribe and its members, as required by the IGRA, there is no indication that these distributions are specifically aimed at assisting needy, blind, aged, or disabled persons and to dependent children [as required by the Kansas statute] In fact, the distributions are made in equal amounts to all enrolled tribal members regardless of need.” Id. at 530–31 (alterations added).

While the Kansas statute at issue in Hutchinson and the Tribal GWE Act differ slightly textually, their premise is similar. In both, it is certainly possible the tribal distributions derived from gaming revenues are being utilized by tribal members to care for their general needs and promote the general welfare of the Tribe. However, where those distributions: (1) clearly fall under the IGRA; and (2) are not based on need, but rather distributed to all members equally; it is unlikely they fall within the purview of general welfare payments. See generally id. The Court refrains from holding every payment made under the Tribal GWE Act must be based on need in order to satisfy the “promote the general welfare” prong. As Jim points out, the Act itself does not specifically mandate this, and tribal programs providing for general welfare should typically be construed broadly. (See Resp. 8). However, viewing the following undisputed facts in their entirety: (1) the distributions are lavish, (2) the IGRA clearly applies, and (3) the distributions are not based on need, the Court finds there is no genuine issue of material dispute the tribal distributions derived from gaming revenue are not general welfare payments, but rather constitute taxable income under the IGRA.

B. Distributions to Jim's Husband and Children

Jim argues even if the Tribe's distributions do not constitute general welfare payments, the IRS's assessment against her is inflated because the $272,000.00 she listed on her tax return included tribal distributions made to her family members. (See Resp. 14). In particular, Jim asserts she sometimes took physical possession of the quarterly assistance payments made out to her husband and daughter. (See Jim Dep. 38:19–39:19, 48:8–25 (stating at times Jim put her daughter's distribution in a tribal account, and other times she cashed the check and put the cash in a safe); see id. 46:25–47:25 (stating Jim picked up her husband's distribution check and cashed it); see also Billie Dep. 115:9–12 (stating that ordinarily the entire distribution check goes to one or two members of the family)). Jim argues payments she received on behalf of her family members do not constitute income to her; thus, the IRS assessment against her should be reduced. (See Resp. 14).

Plaintiff asserts Jim has already admitted she received 272,000.00 dollars' worth of "benefits from Indian welfare payments," because she listed this amount on her belated IRS tax return which an attorney helped her prepare, and she did not dispute the amount during her deposition. (See Reply 2–3). Plaintiff contends Jim should not be allowed to question the amount in dispute for the first time now; however, this argument fails to persuade. (See id. 3).

While Jim did not indicate her intent to challenge the amount in dispute during her deposition, she did state she received checks on behalf of her family members. (See Jim Dep. 46:25–47:25). Plaintiff was on notice of this issue and could have more vigorously pursued discovery related to Jim's husband, and/or other relevant witnesses.⁴ See, e.g., Stolarczyk ex rel. Estate of Stolarczyk v. Senator Int'l Freight Forwarding, LLC, 376 F. Supp. 2d 834, 843 (N.D. Ill. 2005) (declining to exclude a witness's affidavit offered in support of the plaintiff's summary judgment response where, while the plaintiff never disclosed the witness in its Rule 26 disclosures, a second witness identified the first witness in his deposition testimony; thus, the defendant was on notice the first witness may have had information relevant to the case.).

Jim's statements she possessed and cashed the distribution checks made out to her husband and her daughter indicate the $272,000.00 assessment likely includes some of these amounts. Jim has identified a genuine question of material fact as to the amount of the IRS assessment personally asserted against her. See Hoeper v. Tax Comm'n of Wis., 284 U.S. 206, 218 (1931) (“[A]ny attempt by a state to measure the tax on one person's property or income by reference to the property or income of another is contrary to due process of law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. That which is not in fact the taxpayer's income cannot be made such by calling it income.” (alteration added)). Trial testimony may ultimately reveal the sum of $272,000.00 is, in fact, the correct assessment applied to Jim. However, considering there is a genuine dispute of material fact, summary judgment on the limited issue of the amount of the assessment is not appropriate.

⁴ Plaintiff notes it subpoenaed and was prepared to depose Alexander Osceola, Jim's husband, on this issue, but he left the deposition site prior to his deposition. (See Reply 3 n. 2). Plaintiff asserts it would have vigorously pursued this issue in discovery, had it known Jim would contest the amount of the distributions. (See id.).

C. Income from the Land

Jim also argues the Tribe's distributions are exempt from taxation because they are income derived from tribal lands. (See Resp. 16–30). She relies on several statutes: 25 U.S.C. section 1750(d), which establishes the Miccosukee Indian Reservation lands; 25 U.S.C. section 2210, which provides that lands given to the Indian tribes are exempt from taxation; and 25 U.S.C. section 459(e), which states that property conveyed to tribes is exempt from taxation as long as the property is held in trust by the United States. (See Resp. 17 n.9).

A review of tribal jurisprudence reveals income derived from tribal lands may be exempt from taxation, but only where: (1) the income is derived directly from the land itself (e.g., farming and timber-cutting) as opposed to businesses on the land, see Critzer v. United States, 597 F.2d 708, 715 (Ct. Cl. 1979) (finding income received from the operation of businesses and building leases on tribal lands is not exempt from federal taxation); or (2) the income is derived from a trust allotment held by an individual tribal member, as opposed to the Tribe as a whole, see United States v. Anderson, 625 F.2d 910, 914 (9th Cir. 1980) (noting income derived from an Indian's individually allotted land was not taxable). Courts have specifically found income generated by tribal casinos does not constitute income “directly derived from the land.” Matter of Cabazon Indian Casino, 57 B.R. 398, 402 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1986) (“The income derived from operating the casino stems in a far more important fashion from card playing, liquor sales and food preparation, than it does from the land alone.”); see also Campbell v. C.I.R., 74 T.C.M. (CCH) 1121, *4 (T.C. 1997), aff'd and remanded, 164 F.3d 1140 (8th Cir. 1999) (“The courts have confined the exemption to income received from activities that diminish or exploit the value of the land (such as logging, mining, or farming). Income earned through the investment of capital or labor, such as restaurants, motels, tobacco shops, and similar improvements to the land, fail to qualify for the exemption, although the activity takes place on land held in trust.”).

As discussed, the tribal distributions Jim received were derived predominantly from gaming revenues. See supra 9–10. Accordingly, whatever percentage of the NTDR distributions was derived from gaming revenues does not constitute income derived directly from the land. See Matter of Cabazon Indian Casino, 57 B.R. at 403. There is a genuine question of material fact regarding whether the percentage of the distributions derived from non-gaming sources might constitute income derived from the land. (See Billie Dep. 65:16–25 (“Into that [NTDR] account I know that we have money we collect from — from our rental of our radio towers and our land lease that we have for the purposes of cattle grazing, and other areas that we collect monies from.” (alteration added))). Accordingly, summary judgment is denied on the issue of whether the tribal distributions derived from non-gaming sources constitute income derived from the land.

D. Liability for Penalties

Plaintiff argues Jim is liable for penalties for her failure to file a tax return and pay taxes when due. (See Mot. 28). Jim does not address this issue in her Response; nonetheless, the Court analyzes it. (See generally Resp.). Under 26 U.S.C. section 6651(a)(1), if a taxpayer fails to timely file her tax return, “unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect,” the IRS shall impose a penalty in the form of “5 percent of the amount of such tax if the failure is for not more than 1 month, with an additional 5 percent for each additional month or fraction thereof during which such failure continues, not exceeding 25 percent in the aggregate” Id. (alteration added). Similarly, 26 U.S.C. section 6651(a)(2) provides that “unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect,” if a taxpayer fails to timely pay her required taxes, the IRS shall impose a penalty in the form of “0.5 percent of the amount of such tax if the failure is for not more than 1 month, with an additional 0.5 percent for each additional month or fraction thereof during which such failure continues, not exceeding 25 percent in the aggregate.” Id.

The term “willful neglect” may be read as meaning “a conscious, intentional failure or reckless indifference,” while “reasonable cause” calls on the taxpayer to demonstrate she exercised “ordinary business care and prudence” but nevertheless was “unable to file the return within the prescribed time.” United States v. Boyle, 469 U.S. 241, 245–46 (1985); see also In re Sanford, 979 F.2d 1511, 1514 n.8 (11th Cir. 1992) (Treasury Regulation § 301.6651-1(c)(1) “considers a delay in filing a required return to be due to reasonable cause if the taxpayer ‘exercised ordinary business care and prudence in providing for payment of his tax and was nevertheless either unable to pay the tax or would suffer an undue hardship’ if he paid the tax on time.”). While under some circumstances reliance on a tax expert can constitute reasonable cause for failing to meet a deadline “where [the] taxpayer made full disclosure to [the] expert, [and] relied on his advice,” James v. United States, No. 8:11-CV-271-T-30AEP, 2012 WL 3522610, at *3 (M.D. Fla. Aug. 14, 2012) (alterations added); simply forgetting to file a return does not constitute reasonable cause, see Halbin v. C.I.R., 97 T.C.M. (CCH) 1066, *4 (T.C. 2009).

Jim admitted she forgot to file her return for the year 2001. (See Jim Dep. 58:1–4 (“Q: Could you describe what efforts you took if any to determine whether you needed to file a tax return for 2001? A: I think I had everything ready, but I just completely forgot to file that year.”)). Consequently, the Court finds Jim has not established her failure to timely file her 2001 tax return is excused by reasonable cause, and sanctions are appropriate pursuant to 26 U.S.C.

section 6651(a)(1). Whether sanctions are warranted pursuant to 26 U.S.C. section 6651(a)(2), however, is a different story. While Jim is liable for penalties for her failure to timely file her tax return, she is not necessarily liable for penalties for failing to pay her taxes — at least the taxes on her tribal distributions. See Estate of Thouron v. United States, 752 F.3d 311, 312–15 (3d Cir. 2014) (finding a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the plaintiff's reliance on the advice of its tax expert, as to the applicable tax law, was reasonable cause for failure to pay its full tax liability by the appropriate deadline).

The record shows Bernie Roman (“Roman”), Jim’s personal attorney, assisted her in preparing her 2001 tax return. (See Jim Dep. 92:12–15). While Jim does not explicitly state Roman advised her not to report her tribal distributions as taxable income, his assistance in the process, coupled with her limited education (see Defs.’ SMF ¶ 4), indicates this might have been the case. Furthermore, while they were not her personal attorneys, both Billy Cypress and Dexter Lehtinen, the Tribe’s lawyer, advised tribal members at General Council meetings the Tribe’s distributions did not constitute taxable income. (See Jim Dep. 76:5–23; see also Mot., Ex. 6, Special General Council Meeting Minutes [ECF No. 156-5] L000443). Certainly Cypress’s and Lehtinen’s statements alone would not be enough to excuse Jim’s failure to include tribal distributions as taxable income on her tax return, but their comments, when viewed in the greater context of tribal dynamics, could be said to have some impact on the “reasonable cause” analysis.

Overall, given the combination of Roman’s assistance, Cypress’s and Lehtinen’s comments, and the fact the issue of whether the tribal distributions constitute taxable income is a new and unsettled area of the law, there is a genuine dispute as to whether penalties under 26 U.S.C. section 6651(a)(2) are warranted. The same conclusion applies to the penalties under 26

U.S.C. section 6651(a)(1) solely with respect to the percentages assessed on the tribal distribution amounts.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is

ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that the Motion [ECF No. 156] is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as follows:

1. Jim is liable for paying federal income taxes on the tribal distributions derived from gaming revenue, as these distributions are governed by the IGRA.
2. Summary judgment is not warranted regarding Jim's liability for tribal distributions derived from non-gaming sources. A genuine issue of material fact exists regarding whether these distributions qualify as income derived from the land or general welfare benefits.
3. Summary judgment is not appropriate regarding the amount of the 2001 IRS assessment against Sally Jim. A genuine issue of material fact exists regarding at least whether any of her husband's personal income was included in the assessment.
4. Summary judgment is not warranted imposing penalties pursuant to 26 U.S.C. sections 6651(a)(2) and 6651(a)(1) solely with respect to the percentages assessed on the tribal distribution amounts.

DONE AND ORDERED in Miami, Florida, this 3rd day of June, 2016.
