OPINION

LARSEN, Circuit Judge. Johnny Gatewood filed a motion under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to vacate his life sentence. The district court denied the motion as untimely. On appeal, the government now concedes that Gatewood's motion was timely but maintains that his claim is nevertheless barred by procedural default. We agree and AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

I.

In 1997, a federal jury convicted Gatewood of two counts of kidnapping, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1201, and one count of robbery affecting interstate commerce, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1951. At sentencing, the government pursued a life sentence under 18 U.S.C. § 3559(c), the federal three-strikes statute. Under that provision, a person convicted in federal court of a "serious violent felony" must be sentenced to life imprisonment if "the person has been convicted . . . on separate prior occasions" in state or federal court of "2 or more serious violent felonies." 18 U.S.C. § 3559(c)(1)(A)(i). The district court determined that Gatewood's four prior Arkansas robbery convictions qualified as serious violent felonies and handed down a life sentence. This court affirmed Gatewood's sentence on appeal, and the Supreme Court denied certiorari. United States v. Gatewood, 230 F.3d 186 (6th Cir. 2000) (en banc), cert. denied 534 U.S. 1107 (2002).

In 2016, Gatewood filed a motion to vacate his sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255, arguing that his Arkansas robbery convictions could no longer be considered serious violent felonies. A crime is a "serious violent felony" under the three-strikes statute if it (1) falls within a list of enumerated generic offenses, including "robbery," 18 U.S.C. § 3559(c)(2)(F)(i) (the "enumerated-offenses clause"); (2) is "punishable by a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years or more" and "has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another," id. § 3559(c)(2)(F)(ii) (the "elements clause"); or (3) is "punishable by a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years or more" and "by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person of another may be used in the course of committing the offense," id. (the "residual clause"). In Gatewood's § 2255 motion, he argued that his state-law robbery convictions were deemed serious violent felonies only under the residual clause and that the residual clause is unconstitutionally vague. For the latter point, he relied on the Supreme Court's decision in Johnson v. United States, which held that the similarly worded residual clause of the Armed Career Criminal Act (ACCA) is void for vagueness. 576 U.S. 591, 606 (2015); see 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B) (defining a "violent felony" as a felony that "involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another").

In response, the government argued that Gatewood’s § 2255 motion was untimely. It pointed out that Gatewood filed his motion fourteen years after his conviction became final. See 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (providing as a general rule that § 2255 motions must be filed within one year of “the date on which the judgment of conviction becomes final”). And, although the government acknowledged that Gatewood filed his motion within a year of Johnson, it argued that Johnson could not render the motion timely because the rule it announced applied only to the ACCA, not the three-strikes statute. See id. § 2255(f)(3) (permitting petitions filed within one year of “the date on which the right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, if that right has been newly recognized by the Supreme Court and made retroactively applicable to cases on collateral review”). The government also argued that Gatewood’s claim was procedurally defaulted and that it failed on the merits.

After the government had filed its response, the Supreme Court decided United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019). Relying on Johnson, Davis held that the residual clause of 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(B), which is nearly identical to the residual clause of the three-strikes statute, is unconstitutionally vague. Davis, 139 S. Ct. at 2336; see 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(B) (defining a “crime of violence” as a felony “that by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense”). In his reply to the government’s response, Gatewood relied on Davis as further support for his claim that the residual clause of the three-strikes law, § 3559(c)(2)(F)(ii), is unconstitutionally vague.

The district court denied Gatewood’s § 2255 motion, ruling that it was untimely, but it granted a certificate of appealability “on the question of whether applying Johnson and its progeny to § 3559(c)’s Residual Clause renders the Clause unconstitutionally vague, therefore making [Gatewood]’s § 2255 Motion timely.” Gatewood now appeals.

II.

The government has partially reversed course on appeal. Because “[t]he statutory residual clause struck down in Davis has essentially the same language as the statutory residual clause in § 3559(c)(2)(F)(ii),” it now concedes that the residual clause of § 3559(c)(2)(F)(ii) is unconstitutionally vague. Appellee Br. at 11–12. Furthermore, because Gatewood relied on Davis in his reply below, the government also concedes that his § 2255 motion is timely. We do not question this concession for purposes of this appeal. Because the government has “intelligently cho[sen] to waive a statute of limitations defense,” we are “not . . . at liberty to disregard that choice.” Day v. McDonough, 547 U.S. 198, 210 n.11 (2006).

The government nevertheless urges us to affirm the district court on alternative grounds that it properly raised below but that the district court did not address. First, it contends that Gatewood procedurally defaulted the vagueness claim by failing to raise it on direct review. Second, it argues that Gatewood’s claim fails on the merits because his state-law convictions qualify as serious violent felonies under both the enumerated-offenses clause of § 3559(c)(2)(F)(i) and the elements clause of § 3559(c)(2)(F)(ii).

Gatewood contends that we may not address either argument unless we expand the scope of the certificate of appealability. But a certificate of appealability is required “only when ‘an appeal’ is ‘taken to the court of appeals.’” Jennings v. Stephens, 574 U.S. 271, 282 (2015) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(1)). Taking an appeal does not include “the defense of a judgment on alternative grounds.” Id. at 283. Moreover, even if raising alternative grounds for affirmance constituted “an appeal” under § 2253(c)(1), only habeas petitioners must obtain a certificate of appealability before they are authorized to file an appeal. “A certificate of appealability is not required when . . . the United States or its representative appeals.” Fed. R. App. P. 22(b)(3). Thus, regardless of what issues were certified for appeal, “we are free to affirm the district court for any reason supported by the record.” Snider v. United States, 908 F.3d 183, 189 (6th Cir. 2018). Because both “parties have fully and ably briefed the [government’s] alternative ground for [affirmance] both in the district court and on appeal,” we will proceed to the merits of the government’s procedural-default claim. Katt v. Dykhouse, 983 F.2d 690, 695 (6th Cir. 1992).

III.

Gatewood acknowledges that he did not raise his present vagueness claim on direct review. He must therefore “show (1) cause for not raising the claim on appeal and (2) prejudice from the error alleged in the claim.” Moody v. United States, 958 F.3d 485, 492 (6th Cir. 2020).¹ Gatewood argues that he can show cause because, before the Supreme Court decided Johnson, his vagueness claim was “so novel that its legal basis [was] not reasonably available to counsel.” Reed v. Ross, 468 U.S. 1, 16 (1984).

A claim qualifies as novel if, “at the time of [the] default, the legal tools, i.e., case law, necessary to conceive and argue the claim were not yet in existence and available to counsel.” Gibbs v. United States, 655 F.3d 473, 476 (6th Cir. 2011) (quoting Cvijetinovic v. Eberlin, 617 F.3d 833, 837 (6th Cir. 2010)). “The novelty standard, however, is a high one: the petitioner’s counsel must have had ‘no reasonable basis upon which to formulate’ the question now raised.” Id. (quoting Reed, 468 U.S. at 14).

We have said that an “issue can hardly be novel” if, at the time of default, “other defense counsel ha[d] raised the claim.” Cvijetinovic, 617 F.3d at 837 (citation omitted); see also Gibbs, 655 F.3d at 476–77. If another litigant pressed the claim, the tools required to conceive it must have existed. Gatewood does not deny that, before he was sentenced in 1997, others had raised the same vagueness challenge to the ¹ A habeas petitioner challenging his conviction or capital sentence who fails to establish cause and prejudice can nevertheless overcome procedural default by establishing actual innocence. But it is an open question in this circuit whether actual innocence can excuse procedural default in a challenge to a noncapital sentence. See Gibbs v. United States, 655 F.3d 473, 477-78 (6th Cir. 2011). Because Gatewood does not present a claim of actual innocence, we need not address the question.

ACCA that he now makes to the federal three-strikes statute. In fact, he identifies several such cases in his reply brief. See United States v. Veasey, 73 F.3d 363, 1995 WL 758439, at *2 (6th Cir. 1995) (table decision) (per curiam); United States v. Presley, 52 F.3d 64, 68 (4th Cir. 1995); United States v. Argo, 925 F.2d 1133, 1134—35 (9th Cir. 1991); United States v. Sorenson, 914 F.2d 173, 175 (9th Cir. 1990). The tools to raise Gatewood’s present argument thus certainly existed at the time of his default.

Relying on the Supreme Court’s decision in Reed v. Ross, Gatewood instead argues that his vagueness claim is “novel” in a different sense—because at the time of his sentencing it “was foreclosed by ‘a near-unanimous body of lower court authority.’” Reply Br. at 5 (quoting Reed, 468 U.S. at 17). Reed did suggest that this species of “novelty,” later described by the Court as “futility,” could excuse procedural default. 468 U.S. at 16; see Bousley v. United States, 523 U.S. 614, 622—23 (1998) (treating novelty and futility as distinct potential grounds for finding cause); Smith v. Murray, 477 U.S. 527, 534—37 (1986) (same). And the Supreme Court still favorably cites Reed for the general proposition that cause exists when “the legal basis” for a claim is “not reasonably available to counsel.” See, e.g., Bousley, 523 U.S. at 622; Smith, 477 U.S. at 536. “Subsequent case law, however, has limited the breadth of Reed’s holding.” Wheeler v. United States, 329 F. App’x 632, 635 (6th Cir. 2009); see also Daniels v. United States, 254 F.3d 1180, 1191 (10th Cir. 2001) (explaining that the Court subsequently “narrowed the broad Reed ‘novelty’ test in Bousley”); Simpson v. Matesanz, 175 F.3d 200, 212 (1st Cir. 1999) (questioning whether “the familiar Reed unavailability standard is still good law” after Bousley).

In Smith, the petitioner argued that he had shown cause because his “claim had little chance of success in the Virginia courts” at the time of default. 477 U.S. at 534. The Supreme Court rejected that argument, ruling that “perceived futility alone cannot constitute cause” for procedural default. Id. at 535 (quoting Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 130 & n.36 (1982)). In Bousley, the Supreme Court likewise rejected the argument that adverse circuit precedent could excuse procedural default, explaining that “futility cannot constitute cause if it means simply that a claim was unacceptable to that particular court at that particular time.” 523 U.S. at 623 (quoting Engel, 456 U.S. at 130 n.35).

We have interpreted these decisions to mean that “futility cannot be cause,” at least where the source of the “perceived futility” is adverse state or lower court precedent. Cvijetinovic, 617 F.3d at 839—40 (quoting McCoy v. United States, 266 F.3d 1245, 1259 (11th Cir. 2001)).² Even “the alignment of the circuits

² Other circuits have reached the same conclusion. See McCoy, 266 F.3d at 1258 (holding that “[t]he fact that every circuit which had addressed [an] issue had rejected the proposition” did not constitute cause to overcome procedural default); Daniels, 254 F.3d at 1191 (“Thus, even a futile claim may be ‘reasonably available’ for ‘cause’ purposes prior to a change in the law.”); United States v. Sanders, 247 F.3d 139, 146 (4th Cir. 2001) (holding cause did not exist because, even though the federal circuits had unanimously rejected the claim at that time, “[t]he germ of Sanders’ Apprendi claim had sprouted at the time of his conviction”); United States v. Smith, 241 F.3d 546, 548—49 (7th Cir. 2001) (same); see also United States v. Moss, 252 F.3d 993, 1002 (8th Cir. 2001) (“The Supreme Court has rejected the against a particular legal argument does not equate to cause for procedurally defaulting it.” Id. at 839. Instead, we suggested that “[u]nless the Supreme Court has decisively foreclosed an argument, declarations of its futility are premature.” Id. at 839 n.7. Gatewood therefore cannot establish cause by showing that his vagueness claim cut against the current of federal circuit precedent at the time of his direct appeal.

Gatewood next contends that Raines v. United States, 898 F.3d 680 (6th Cir. 2018) (per curiam), shows that he has cause for his default. In that case, we held that Raines, a habeas petitioner, “had cause for failing to raise his Johnson claim on direct appeal.” Id. at 687. The opinion noted that “Johnson was not decided until June 26, 2015, well after Raines’s direct appeal was decided on June 11, 2013,” but offered no further explanation why the legal basis for Raines’s claim had not been reasonably available to him before Johnson was decided. Id.

Yet cause existed in Raines for a reason not present here. We could not have deemed Raines’s vagueness claim “novel” on the ground that he lacked the tools to construct the argument in 2013. Since, as we have discussed, those tools existed in 1997, they argument that default can be excused when existing lower court precedent would have rendered a claim unsuccessful.”); Simpson, 175 F.3d at 211 (“Bousley made it clear that if an issue has been decided adversely to an argument in the relevant jurisdiction, and the argument is not made for that reason, that is insufficient reason to constitute cause for a procedural default.”). But see Cross v. United States, 892 F.3d 288, 296 (7th Cir. 2018) (procedural default excused where “a substantial body of circuit precedent” stood in the way of the claim).

unquestionably existed in 2013. See, e.g., United States v. Stafford, 721 F.3d 380, 403 (6th Cir. 2013) (considering a vagueness challenge to the residual clause of the ACCA). Nor could we have concluded that Raines’s claim was “futile” on the ground that lower courts would have rejected his Johnson claim in 2013; that conclusion would have been contrary to Bousley and Cvijetinovic. We must instead have found cause because, at the time of Raines’s default, “the Supreme Court ha[d] decisively foreclosed [the] argument” that would later prevail in Johnson. Cvijetinovic, 617 F.3d at 839 n.7. Such a situation, we suggested in Cvijetinovic, would amount to “actual futility,” which might constitute cause for a procedural default. See id.

It follows from Reed that “actual futility,” caused by the Supreme Court’s ruling on an issue, can constitute cause. Reed concluded that a criminal defendant has cause for failing to raise a claim when, at the time of default, the claim had been expressly foreclosed by a precedent of the Supreme Court that the Court later “explicitly overrule[s].” 468 U.S. at 17. Although we held in Cvijetinovic that Smith and Bousley had modified the Court’s view on whether adverse state or lower court precedent can render a claim unavailable, Reed is the only Supreme Court decision to address whether cause exists when Supreme Court precedent itself forecloses an argument at the time of default. Reed therefore remains the controlling decision on that issue. See Lassend v. United States, 898 F.3d 115, 123 (1st Cir. 2018) (“Bousley is no help to the government because the petitioner’s argument in [Bousley] was not based on a constitutional right created by the Supreme Court’s overruling of its own precedent.”). A claim foreclosed by Supreme Court precedent at the time of default qualifies as actually futile, whereas a claim foreclosed merely by state or lower court precedent does not. See Cvijetinovic, 617 F.3d at 839 n.7.

At the time of Raines’s trial and direct appeal, the Supreme Court had foreclosed his argument that the ACCA’s residual clause was void for vagueness. See James v. United States, 550 U.S. 192, 210 n.6 (2007) (“[W]e are not persuaded by Justice Scalia’s suggestion . . . that the residual provision is unconstitutionally vague.”); see also Sykes v. United States, 564 U.S. 1, 1516 (2011) (reaffirming the constitutionality of the ACCA’s residual clause). Raines, therefore, provides no help to Gatewood. To recount the timeline: after Gatewood’s direct appeal ended (in 2002), but before Raines was convicted (in 2012), the Supreme Court expressly held (in 2007) that the ACCA’s residual clause was not void for vagueness. Thus from 2007, when James was decided, until 2015, when Johnson overruled James and Sykes, there was no reasonable basis for arguing that the ACCA’s residual clause was unconstitutionally vague. See Lassend, 898 F.3d at 122 (finding cause because “[a]t the time of Lassend’s direct appeal in 2013, the Supreme Court’s decisions in James and Sykes were still good law”); Ezell v. United States, 743 F. App’x 784, 785 & n.1 (9th Cir. 2018) (same); Rose v. United States, 738 F. App’x 617, 626—27 (11th Cir. 2018) (same). Had Raines pressed his vagueness claim in 2013, he would have found that effort “actually futile,” given James and Sykes.

By contrast, from Gatewood’s sentencing in 1997 to the conclusion of his direct appeal in 2002, the tools to construct his present vagueness claim existed, and no Supreme Court precedent foreclosed it.³ Gatewood therefore had a reasonable basis for raising a vagueness challenge to the residual clause of the three-strikes statute, § 3559(c)(2)(F)(ii). Because he did not raise such a challenge on direct appeal, procedural default bars him from doing so now on collateral review.

In so holding, we part ways with the Seventh and Tenth Circuits, which have concluded that, under Reed, Johnson's overruling of James and Sykes creates cause even for petitioners whose convictions became final before James was decided. See Cross v. United States, 892 F.3d 288, 295—96 (7th Cir. 2018); United States v. Snyder, 871 F.3d 1122, 1127 (10th Cir. 2017) (dictum). Snyder did not offer a justification for this conclusion. Cross “acknowledge[d] that” James and Sykes “could not themselves have influenced petitioners’ failure to object at trial.” 892 F.3d at 295—96. It nonetheless found cause because “when the Supreme Court reverses course, the change generally indicates an abrupt shift in law.” Id. at 296. We do not find this reading of Reed persuasive. Under Reed, the ultimate inquiry is not simply whether a Supreme Court decision marks a “clear break with the past” but whether, at the time of default, the petitioner’s “attorney ha[d] a ‘reasonable basis’ upon which to develop [the] legal theory” at issue. 468 U.S. at 17 (citation omitted); see also Howard v. United States, 374 F.3d 1068, 1072 (11th Cir. 2004) (“A new retroactive decision must be a sufficiently clear break with the past, so that an attorney representing the defendant would not reasonably have had the tools for presenting the claim in the state courts.” (emphasis added) (citation omitted)).

When, at the time of default, a petitioner’s argument was foreclosed by Supreme Court precedent, then “[b]y definition, . . . there will almost certainly have been no reasonable basis upon which an attorney . . . could have urged a . . . court to adopt the position that [the Supreme] Court has ultimately adopted.” Reed, 468 U.S. at 17. At that point in time, every court in the country would have been bound to reject the argument. But when, at the time of default, the Supreme Court had not yet foreclosed an argument, the argument was not “[b]y definition” futile, because at that time state courts, lower federal courts, and the Supreme Court itself still remained free to adopt it. Reed’s discussion of cases where the Supreme Court “explicitly overrule[s] one of [its] own precedents,” id., thus must be read as taking for granted that, at the time of default, the precedent that would later be overturned was the law of the land.

Gatewood has not shown cause for the procedural default of his vagueness claim. He therefore may not raise it on collateral review.

APPENDIX B

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE
WESTERN DIVISION

JOHNNY GATEWOOD,

Movant,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

Case No. 2:17-cv-02040-JPM-jay

Criminal No. 2:95-cr-20183-JPM-1

October 31, 2019

ORDER DENYING MOTION UNDER
28 U.S.C. § 2255,
CERTIFYING ISSUES FOR APPEAL,
AND CERTIFYING THAT AN APPEAL WOULD BE TAKEN IN GOOD FAITH

Before the Court is Movant Johnny Gatewood's January 1, 2017 Motion to Vacate, Reduce or Set Aside Sentence pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2255. (ECF No. 1.) For the reasons set forth below, Movant's § 2255 Motion is DENIED.

I. BACKGROUND

In 1997, a jury found Gatewood guilty of two counts of kidnapping, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1201, and one count of robbery affecting interstate commerce, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1951. (95-cr-20183, ECF No. 146.) Later that year, the Court sentenced him to life in prison under the federal three-strikes statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3559(c). (Id. at PageID 3.) In 2003, Gatewood contested his sentence through a motion filed under 18 U.S.C § 3742, which the Court denied.

On June 24, 2016, Gatewood filed a Motion to Vacate Sentence pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2255, arguing that his sentence is unconstitutional following the Supreme Court's ruling in Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2551 (2015). (ECF No. 2.) On July 1, 2016, Gatewood filed with the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals an Application to File a Second or Successive Motion to Vacate. (ECF No. 1.) On January 19, 2017, the Sixth Circuit found that the Court's previous denial of a Gatewood's 2003 § 3742 Motion is not to be held against him for purposes of second-or-successive status. (Id. at PageID 2.) The Sixth Circuit found that Gatewood's petition could proceed and transferred the case to this Court. (Id.) On March 2 and March 15, 2018, Gatewood filed a Motion to Appoint Counsel, in which he stated that he is functionally illiterate. (ECF Nos. 6, 7.)

The Government filed a response to Gatewood's petition on March 6, 2019. (ECF No. 12.) Gatewood filed a reply on July 23, 2019. (ECF No. 17.)

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A federal prisoner who claims his sentence violates the Constitution or federal law may move the sentencing court to vacate, set aside, or correct his sentence. 28 U.S.C. § 2255(a). “A prisoner seeking relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 must allege either: (1) an error of constitutional magnitude; (2) a sentence imposed outside the statutory limits; or (3) an error of fact or law that was so fundamental as to render the entire proceeding invalid.” Short v. United States, 471 F.3d 686, 691 (6th Cir. 2006) (internal quotation marks omitted).

“[A] § 2255 motion is not a substitute for a direct appeal.” Ray v. United States, 721 F.3d 758, 761 (6th Cir. 2013) (internal quotation marks omitted). “[N]onconstitutional claims that could have been raised on appeal, but were not, may not be asserted in collateral proceedings.” Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. 465, 477 n.10 (1976). “Defendants must assert their claims in the ordinary course of trial and direct appeal.” Grant v. United States, 72 F.3d 503, 506 (6th Cir. 1996).

A prisoner must file their § 2255 motion within one year of the date on which: (1) the movant’s conviction becomes final; (2) the “impediment to making a motion created by governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is removed, if the movant was prevented from making a motion by such governmental action”; (3) “the right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, if that right has been newly recognized by the Supreme Court and made retroactively applicable to cases on collateral review”; or (4) the facts supporting the movant's claims first became discoverable through the exercise of due diligence. 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f).

The sentencing court reviews the § 2255 motion, and, “[i]f it plainly appears from the motion, any attached exhibits, and the record of prior proceedings that the moving party is not entitled to relief, the judge must dismiss the motion.” Rule 4(b), Rules Governing Section 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts (“§ 2255 Rules”). “If the motion is not dismissed, the judge must order the United States attorney to file an answer, motion, or other response within a fixed time, or to take other action the judge may order.” Id. The movant is then entitled to reply to the Government's response. Rule 5(d), § 2255 Rules. The court may also direct the parties to provide additional information relating to the motion. See Rule 7, § 2255 Rules.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Background Law

Under the Armed Career Criminal Act (“ACCA”), an individual who is convicted of violating 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) must receive a prison sentence of at least fifteen years if the individual has at least three previous convictions for a “violent felony or a serious drug offense, or both,” with each being committed on different occasions. See 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(1). The ACCA defines “violent felony” as a felony that (1) includes the actual, attempted, or threatened use of physical force as an element (the “elements clause”); (2) is burglary, arson, extortion, or a felony involving the use of explosives (the “enumerated clause”); or (3) “otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another” (the “residual clause”). See 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B).

On June 26, 2015, the Supreme Court held that the ACCA’s residual clause is unconstitutionally void for vagueness. Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2551, 2557 (2015). On April 18, 2016, the Supreme Court further held that Johnson announced a new substantive rule with retroactive effect on collateral review. Welch v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1257, 1265 (2016).

On April 17, 2018, the Supreme Court applied its holding in Johnson to the residual clause of 18 U.S.C. § 16(b). Sessions v. Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. 1204, 1215—16 (2018). On June 24, 2019, the Supreme Court also applied its holding in Johnson to find that a similarly constructed residual clause in 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(B) is unconstitutionally vague. United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319, 2336 (2019). However, the Supreme Court has not yet addressed whether the rules in Dimaya or Davis apply retroactively to cases on collateral review.

B. The Instant § 2255 Motion

Movant argues that Johnson v. United States should apply to the residual clause of 28 U.S.C. § 3559(c), therefore entitling him to relief from his sentence. (Complaint, ECF No. 1; Reply, ECF No. 17.) Movant asserts that the residual clause of Section 3559(c), better known as the “three-strikes” statute, employs similar language to the residual clauses of the ACCA and § 16(b) and therefore should similarly be found unconstitutional. (ECF No. 17 at PageID 89.) The Court, however, will not address the merits of Movant's § 2255 motion.

A § 2255 motion is timely if filed within one year of the date of sentencing, or if “the right asserted [by movant] was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, if that right has been newly recognized by the Supreme Court and made retroactively applicable to cases on collateral review.” 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f). Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 310–311 (1989). In 1997, the Court sentenced Movant pursuant to § 3559(c). (95-cr-20183, ECF No. 146.) His § 2255 Motion is therefore untimely unless the Motion falls within one of the other subsections of § 2255(f). The timeliness of Movant's § 2255 Motion rests solely on his argument that Johnson and Welch v. United States apply to § 3559(c). Welch, 136 S. Ct. at 1265. (ECF No. 17 at PageID 91 — 92.)

The Supreme Court's new rule in Johnson, however, does not provide Movant with grounds for relief from his sentence. The new rule in Johnson was limited to sentences entered pursuant to the residual clause under the ACCA, 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B). Welch, 136 S. Ct. at 1268; see Raybon v. United States, 867 F.3d 625, 630 (6th Cir. 2017) (finding that Johnson's application to the mandatory sentencing guidelines was an “open question” and therefore Johnson's new rule did not affect sentences calculated by the ACCA's mandatory guidelines). Johnson's substantive rule, therefore, does not apply to Movant's sentence under § 3559. Whether § 3559(c)'s residual clause is unconstitutionally vague is an open question that has not been answered by the Sixth Circuit or the Supreme Court. While the Supreme Court has applied Johnson to find other similarly constructed residual clauses unconstitutionally vague, it has yet to apply Johnson to § 3559(c)'s residual clause. The Supreme Court also has not yet held that Johnson retroactively applies to sentences entered pursuant to § 3559(c) on collateral review. See Dimaya, 138 S.Ct. at 200, United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. at 2336.

Because the new rule in Johnson does not apply to Movant, his § 2255 Motion does not qualify for the one-year filing period provided by § 2255(f)(3). 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(3). See Raybon, 867 F.3d at 629—31 (finding that because the rule in Johnson did not apply to the mandatory sentencing guidelines, movant's motion was untimely when filed years after his conviction); Crowder v. United States, 757 F. Appx. 479, 481—82 (6th Cir. 2018) (finding similarly). Because the § 2255 Motion was filed on July 1, 2016, almost 19 years after final judgment was entered against him by the Court, Movant's § 2255 Motion is therefore untimely under § 2255(f)(1).

IV. CONCLUSION AND APPEAL ISSUES

The § 2255 Motion and the files and record in this case “conclusively show that the prisoner is entitled to no relief.” 28 U.S.C. § 2255(b); see also Rule 4(b), § 2255 Rules. The Motion may be resolved without an evidentiary hearing. Smith v. United States, 348 F.3d 545, 550 (6th Cir. 2003); Arredondo v. United States, 178 F.3d 778, 782 (6th Cir. 1999). Movant Johnny Gatewood's sentence is therefore valid, and, accordingly, his § 2255 Motion is DENIED. Judgment shall be entered for the United States.

28 U.S.C. § 2253(a) requires the district court to evaluate the appealability of its decision denying a § 2255 motion and to issue a certificate of appealability (“COA”) “only if the applicant has made a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right.” 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2); see also Fed. R. App. P. 22(b). No § 2255 movant may appeal without this certificate.

A COA may issue only if the movant has made a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right, and the COA must indicate the specific issue(s) which satisfy the required showing. 28 U.S.C. §§ 2253(c)(2) & (3). A “substantial showing” is made when the movant demonstrates that “reasonable jurists could debate whether (or, for that matter, agree that) the petition should have been resolved in a different manner or that the issues presented were ‘adequate to deserve encouragement to proceed further.’” Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U.S. 322, 336 (2003) (quoting Barefoot v. Estelle, 463 U.S. 880, 893 n.4 (1983)); Henley v. Bell, 308 F. App’x 989 (6th Cir. 2009) (same), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. 1057 (2009). A COA does not require a showing that the appeal will succeed. Miller, 537 U.S. at 337; Caldwell v. Lewis, 414 F. App’x 809, 814–15 (6th Cir. 2011) (same). Courts should not issue a COA as a matter of course. Bradley v. Birkett, 156 F. App’x 771, 773 (6th Cir. 2005) (quoting Miller-El, 537 U.S. at 337).

In this case, reasonable jurists could disagree over the question of whether Movant is entitled to relief from his sentence entered pursuant to § 3559(c). Specifically, reasonable jurists could disagree on the question of whether applying Johnson and its progeny to § 3559(c)’s Residual Clause renders the Clause unconstitutionally vague, therefore making Movant’s § 2255 Motion timely. See, e.g., United States v.

Morrison, 751 F. App'x 1026, 1027 (9th Cir. 2019); United States v. Goodridge, 392 F. Supp. 3d, 173—74 (D. Mass. 2019); United States v. Minjarez, 374 F. Supp. 3d 977, 990—92 (E.D. Cal. 2019); Karr v. Kallis, 2019 WL 3416653, at *4 (C.D. Ill. July 9, 2019); but see Holman v. United States, 2019 WL 2525505, at *4 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 21, 2019), report and recommendation adopted, 2019 WL 2524915 (N.D. Tex. June 19, 2019).

The Sixth Circuit has held that the Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a)-(b), does not apply to appeals of orders denying § 2255 motions. Kincade v. Sparkman, 117 F.3d 949, 951 (6th Cir. 1997). Rather, to appeal in forma pauperis in a § 2255 case, and thereby avoid the appellate filing fee required by 28 U.S.C. §§ 1913 and 1917, the prisoner must obtain pauper status pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 24(a). Kincade, 117 F.3d at 952. Rule 24(a) provides that a party seeking pauper status on appeal must first file a motion in the district court, along with a supporting affidavit. Fed. R. App. P. 24(a)(1). However, Rule 24(a) also provides that if the district court certifies that an appeal would not be taken in good faith, or otherwise denies leave to appeal in forma pauperis, the prisoner must file his motion to proceed in forma pauperis in the appellate court. See Fed. R. App. P. 24(a) (4)-(5).

The Court CERTIFIES, pursuant to Rule 24(a), that an appeal in this matter would be taken in good faith to the extent the appeal addresses the above-referenced issues for which the Court has granted a certificate of appealability. An appeal that does not address these issues is not certified as taken in good faith, and Movant should follow the procedures of Rule 24(a)(5) to obtain in forma pauperis status for an appeal raising those issues.

SO ORDERED, this 31st day of October, 2019.

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

1. 18 U.S.C. § 3559 provides in pertinent part:

* * * * *

(c) Imprisonment of certain felons.--

(1) Mandatory life imprisonment.--

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a person who is convicted in a court of the United States of a serious violent felony shall be sentenced to life imprisonment if—

(A) the person has been convicted (and those convictions have become final) on separate prior occasions in a court of the United States or of a State of—

(i) 2 or more serious violent felonies; or

* * * * *

(2) Definitions.--For purposes of this subsection--

* * * * *

(F) the term “serious violent felony” means--

* * * * *

(ii) any other offense punishable by a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years or more that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another or that, by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person of another may be used in the course of committing the offense;

* * * * *

2. 28 U.S.C. § 2255 provides in pertinent part:

(a) A prisoner in custody under sentence of a court established by Act of Congress claiming the right to be released upon the ground that the sentence was imposed in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States, or that the court was without jurisdiction to impose such sentence, or that the sentence was in excess of the maximum authorized by law, or is otherwise subject to collateral attack, may move the court which imposed the sentence to vacate, set aside or correct the sentence.

* * * * *

(f) A 1-year period of limitation shall apply to a motion under this section. The limitation period shall run from the latest of--

- (1) the date on which the judgment of conviction becomes final;
- (2) the date on which the impediment to making a motion created by governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is removed, if the movant was prevented from making a motion by such governmental action;
- (3) the date on which the right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, if that right has been newly recognized by the Supreme Court and made retroactively applicable to cases on collateral review; or

(4) the date on which the facts supporting the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of due diligence.
