Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas
No. 1:19-CV-219

REVISED

Before SMITH, WILLETT, and DUNCAN, Circuit Judges.

JERRY E. SMITH, Circuit Judge:

Three Texas attorneys sued officers and directors of the State Bar of Texas under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. They allege that the Bar is engaged in political and ideological activities that are not germane to its interests in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services and that therefore, compelling them to join the Bar and subsidize those activities violates their First Amendment rights. We vacate in part, render in part, and remand.

State bar associations are of two types: (1) “mandatory” and (2) “voluntary.” Mandatory bars, also known as “integrated” bars, require that attorneys join and pay compulsory dues “as a condition of practicing law in a State.” Keller v. State Bar of Cal., 496 U.S. 1, 5 (1990). Voluntary bars do not. See Jarchow v. State Bar of Wis., 140 S. Ct. 1720, 1720 (2020) (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari). Thirty-one states and the District of Columbia have mandatory bars, while most of the others have voluntary bars.¹

The State Bar of Texas is mandatory. See TEX. GOV'T CODE § 81.051(b). All licensed Texas attorneys, more than 120,000 as of May 2019, must join the Bar, which “is a public corporation and an administrative agency” controlled by the Supreme Court of Texas. Id. § 81.011(a), (c). The Bar serves the following statutorily enumerated purposes:

(1) to aid the courts in carrying on and improving the administration of justice;

(2) to advance the quality of legal services to the public and to foster the role of the legal profession in serving the public;

(3) to foster and maintain on the part of those engaged in the practice of law high ideals and integrity, learning, competence in public service, and high standards of conduct;

(4) to provide proper professional services to the members of the state bar;

(5) to encourage the formation of and activities of local bar associations;

(6) to provide forums for the discussion of subjects pertaining to the practice of law, the

Most states have either a mandatory or voluntary bar, but California has switched to a hybrid model in which core functions are performed by a mandatory state bar, while other functions previously performed by its “sections” are now done by a separate voluntary bar association. science of jurisprudence and law reform, and the relationship of the state bar to the public; and

(7) to publish information relating to the subjects listed in Subdivision (6).

Id. § 81.012.

In addition to being required to join the Bar, Texas attorneys are mandated to pay membership fees.² The Bar, which is entirely self-funded, relies on membership fees for nearly half of its budget.³ The Supreme Court of Texas, in collaboration with the Bar, sets the membership fee schedule. See id. § 81.054(a). The current annual dues for active attorneys range from $68 to $235, depending on how many years the attorney has been licensed. Those on inactive status pay $50.

Texas law does not give the Bar carte blanche to spend the membership fees however it pleases. The dues may “be used only for administering the public purposes” outlined above. Id. § 81.054(d). The State Bar Act forbids the Bar from using funds to “influenc[e] the passage or defeat of any legislative measure unless the measure relates to the regulation of the legal profession, improving the quality of legal services, or the administration of justice.” Id. § 81.034. And the Bar’s Policy Manual recognizes that “[t]he expenditure of funds by the State Bar of Texas is limited . . . as set forth . . . in Keller,”⁴ a case that we discuss at length infra.

In addition to their required membership in the general Bar Association, Texas attorneys have the option to join a number of subject-matter “sections” that the Bar maintains. Those sections are funded in part by dues paid by attorneys who voluntarily join them⁵ and in part by money allocated from the Bar’s general fund.⁶

Finally, on top of the membership fees, Texas imposes a $65 “legal services fee” on certain attorneys.⁷ Those funds are collected by the Supreme Court of Texas and remitted to the Comptroller. Id. § 81.054(c).

⁷ TEX. GOV’T CODE § 81.054(j). Exempt from the legal services fee are (1) inactive and nonpracticing attorneys, (2) attorneys over seventy years old, (3) those who work for the federal, state, or local governments, (4) § 501(c)(3) employees, and (5) out-of-state lawyers who do not practice in Texas. Id. § 81.054(k).

B.

In carrying out its statutorily enumerated purposes, the Bar undertakes a plethora of initiatives. The plaintiffs object to a number of them, alleging that they are “political and ideological activities that extend far beyond any regulatory functions.” We outline the objected-to activities here.

The Bar has a legislative program, through which it lobbies for “bills drafted by sections of the State Bar.” The Bar’s Policy Manual forbids the Bar from taking a position on proposed legislation unless strict criteria are met. See Policy Manual § 8.01.03. Among those criteria are that the proposed legislation (1) “falls within the purposes, expressed or implied, of the State Bar as provided in the State Bar Act,” (2) “does not carry the potential of deep philosophical or emotional division among a substantial segment of the membership of the bar,” (3) “is in the public interest,” and (4) “cannot be construed to advocate political or ideological positions.” Policy Manual § 8.01.03(A), (C)–(D), (G).

In 2019, the Bar lobbied for forty-seven bills, on subjects ranging from LGBT rights to trusts and estates, that it supposedly determined to have met those criteria. Those measures included efforts to, among other things, (1) amend the Texas Constitution’s definition of marriage (SJR 9); (2) create civil unions

App. 7

“as an alternative to marriage” (HB 978); (3) alter the procedures grandparents must use to obtain access to their grandchildren over parental objections (HB 575); (4) substantively amend Texas trust law (HB 2782); and (5) impose new notification requirements on parents who wish to take summer weekend possession of a child under a court order (HB 553).

The voluntary sections, as distinguished from the Bar as a whole, write and lobby for the bills included in the legislative program. But the Bar, using mandatory dues, supports those efforts in a number of ways. First, the legislative program must be approved by the Bar’s board, placing the entire Bar’s imprimatur on it. Second, the voluntary sections are funded in part by the Bar’s general fund. And third, the Bar funds a Government Relations Department (“GRD”), which “manages and coordinates the State Bar’s legislative program.”⁸

The record reflects that the Bar houses an Office of Minority Affairs (“OMA”), whose goals include “serv[ing] minority, women, and LGBT attorneys and legal organizations in Texas” and “enhanc[ing] employment and economic opportunities . . . in the legal profession” for members of those groups. OMA sponsors “ongoing forums, projects, programs, and publications”—called “Minority Initiatives”—“dedicated to [its] diversity efforts.” Though the programming is focused on furthering diversity relative to certain groups, all Texas attorneys are encouraged to participate. All told, the Bar spends about $500,000 per year on minority affairs.

⁸ Governmental Relations, STATE BAR OF TEXAS (Apr. 21, 2021), <https://www.texasbar.com/Content/NavigationMenu/AboutUs/GovernmentalRelations/default.htm>. The GRD also “serves as the State Bar’s liaison to the Texas Legislature and other state and federal governmental entities.” Id. In that capacity, it responds to requests for information and assistance by the Texas Legislature and other entities, and reviews thousands of bills each legislative session.

The Bar engages in, or financially supports, numerous activities aimed at making legal services available to the needy. First, it spends more than $1 million annually to support its Legal Access Division (“LAD”), which facilitates pro bono efforts in a wide variety of activities in the legal arena, including immigration, veterans’ affairs, and landlord-tenant disputes. It “offers support, training, publications, resource materials, and more to legal services programs and pro bono volunteers.”

Second, in support of its pro bono efforts, the Bar maintains a directory of “volunteer and resource opportunities.”⁹ The webpage appears to direct lawyers to various resources depending on the Bar’s perceived needs of the time. For example, as of April 2021, it directed lawyers to volunteering for legal needs related to the COVID-19 pandemic (e.g. evictions, unemployment, and domestic problems). For a time in ⁹ Volunteer and Resource Opportunities, STATE BAR OF TEXAS, <https://www.texasbar.com/Content/NavigationMenu/LawyersGivingBack/Volunteer/default.htm>.

App. 9

2019, it directed lawyers to organizations representing asylum-seekers and illegal aliens.

Third, the Bar funds the Texas Supreme Court's Access to Justice Commission ("AJC"), which "focuses on cutting-edge initiatives and pilot projects that promote access to justice in Texas." Among other things, it aims to "increase resources and funding for access to justice," "develop and implement initiatives designed to expand civil access to justice," and promote "systemic change." One of its mechanisms for achieving those aims is lobbying for "both funding and non-funding legislation."

Finally, as mentioned above, the legal services fee, by statute, is used to fund legal services for the indigent.

The Bar also undertakes a number of miscellaneous activities to which the plaintiffs object. It hosts an annual convention, which sponsors panels, some of which the plaintiffs contend are ideologically charged. The Bar funds continuing legal education ("CLE") programs, some of which the plaintiffs aver are similarly charged. And the Bar funds the Texas Bar Journal.

C.

Recognizing that some members might object to various of its myriad initiatives, the Bar provides ways for dissenting members to make their disagreements known. Before the expenditure is approved, members can lodge their objections to either the Bar's Board of Directors or the appropriate committee or section. See, e.g., Policy Manual §§ 8.01.03(B), 8.01.06(B), 8.01.08(B), 8.01.09(D). Members may also express disapproval at the Bar’s annual public hearing on its proposed budget. TEX. GOV’T CODE § 81.022(b)–(c). The ballot box provides another incidental check: Members vote for the Bar’s officers and directors. See generally Policy Manual §§ 1.03, 2.01.

The Bar also provides a mechanism for objecting members to obtain a pro rata refund of their membership fee. Specifically, members may file a written objection “to a proposed or actual expenditure . . . as not within the purposes or limitations” set forth by the State Bar Act or by Supreme Court precedent. Policy Manual §§ 3.14.01, 3.14.02. The protesting member may “seek refund of a pro rata portion of his or her dues expended, plus interest,” on the objectionable activity. Id. § 3.14.02. The Bar does not proactively furnish members with a breakdown of their respective pro rata shares of funding the Bar’s chosen pursuits. Objections are reviewed by the Executive Director, who “in consultation with the President, shall have the discretion to resolve” it. Id. § 3.14.03. A refund is the only available remedy—an objector cannot prevent the Bar from otherwise pursuing the objected-to activity. If a refund is issued, it is done so only “for the convenience of the Bar”: It does not constitute an admission that the expense was improper. Id. § 3.14.04. If a refund is denied, the objector has no further administrative recourse.

The Bar requires notice of those procedures to be “published in conjunction with any publication or description of the State Bar’s budget, legislative program, performance measures, amicus briefs, and any other similar policy positions adopted by the State Bar.” Id. § 3.14.05. Nevertheless, the Bar has record of only one member—who is not among the plaintiffs and who lodged the objection after the plaintiffs filed this lawsuit—using the procedure since its adoption in 2005.

D.

The plaintiffs sued under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1983 and 1988 on three theories: (1) Compelling the plaintiffs “to join, associate with, and financially support the State Bar as a precondition to engaging in their chosen profession” violates their “rights to free speech and association”; (2) in the alternative, if they can be compelled to join, requiring them to “subsidize political and ideological activities that extend beyond the Bar’s core regulatory functions” violates their right to free speech; and (3) related to both of those, “[t]he Bar’s procedures for separating chargeable and non-chargeable expenses are inadequate to protect” their First Amendment rights. The plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction and partial summary judgment on liability.¹⁰

¹⁰ The plaintiffs moved only for partial summary judgment because the scope of relief they planned to seek differed based on the district court’s holding on liability. We address both the summary judgment on liability and the scope of the relief plaintiffs are entitled to through a preliminary injunction; we do not have occasion to opine on the full scope of relief to which they may be entitled.

The Bar cross-moved for summary judgment.¹¹ It countered with three principal points. First, it contended that Supreme Court precedent—specifically Keller and Lathrop v. Donohue, 367 U.S. 820 (1961) (plurality)—forecloses the plaintiffs’ claim that being compelled to join the bar violates the First Amendment. Second, the Bar asserted that the challenged expenditures are constitutionally permissible as “necessarily or reasonably incurred for the purpose of regulating the legal profession or improving the quality of . . . legal service[s].” And third, the Bar maintained that its refund procedures are constitutionally adequate.

The district court denied the plaintiffs’ motions and granted summary judgment to the Bar. The court held that Lathrop and Keller remain binding in spite of Janus v. American Federation of State, County, & Municipal Employees, Council 31, 138 S. Ct. 2448 (2018), and that Lathrop and Keller foreclose the plaintiffs’ contention that being forced to join the bar violates the First Amendment. The court further determined that all of the challenged Bar expenses passed constitutional muster under Keller, “because they further[ed] Texas’s interest in professional regulation or legal-service quality improvement.” Finally, the court rejected the plaintiffs’ challenge to the refund procedures, concluding that they are constitutionally adequate. The court entered a “take nothing” judgment, and the plaintiffs appeal.

¹¹ The Bar also filed a motion to dismiss, asserting that the original named defendants did not enforce the mandatory bar membership and legal services fee. In response, the plaintiffs filed an amended complaint adding additional defendants to address those concerns. The district court dismissed the Bar’s motion without prejudice, and the Bar does not challenge the propriety of that dismissal on appeal.

II.

Because “[t]his court has a continuing obligation to assure itself of its own jurisdiction”¹² before addressing the merits, we must determine whether the Tax Injunction Act (“TIA”) stripped the district court of jurisdiction. Our review is de novo. Washington v. Linebarger, Goggan, Blair, Pena & Sampson, LLP, 338 F.3d 442, 444 (5th Cir. 2003).

The TIA provides that “district courts shall not enjoin, suspend or restrain the assessment, levy or collection of any tax under State law where a plain, speedy and efficient remedy may be had in the courts of such State.” 28 U.S.C. § 1341.¹³ In other words, “the [TIA] is a broad jurisdictional impediment to federal court interference with the administration of state tax systems.” Home Builders Ass’n of Miss., Inc. v. City of Madison, 143 F.3d 1006, 1010 (5th Cir. 1998) (quotation marks omitted). The TIA does not, however, impede federal courts’ review of regulatory fees. See id. Therefore, to determine our jurisdiction, we must decide whether the membership fee and the legal services fee are taxes or, instead, whether they are fees.

¹² United States v. Pedroza-Rocha, 933 F.3d 490, 493 (5th Cir. 2019) (per curiam), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 2769 (2020).

¹³ Similarly, “[t]he Anti-injunction Act, 26 U.S.C. §7421(a), bars any ‘suit for the purposes of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax.’” CIC Servs., LLC, v. IRS, 141 S. Ct. 1582, 1586 (2021).

“Whether a charge is a fee or a tax is a question of federal law.” Neinast v. Texas, 217 F.3d 275, 278 (5th Cir. 2000). Although the label given to a particular outlay “has no bearing on the resolution of the question,” Home Builders, 143 F.3d at 1010 n.10, we may take notice of how an expense is treated by the state’s courts, see Lipscomb v. Columbus Mun. Separate Sch. Dist., 269 F.3d 494, 500 n.13 (5th Cir. 2001). Generally, “a broad construction of ‘tax’ is necessary to honor Congress’s goals in promulgating the TIA.” Henderson v. Stalder, 407 F.3d 351, 356 (5th Cir. 2005).

“[T]he line between a ‘tax’ and a ‘fee’ can be a blurry one.” Home Builders, 143 F.3d at 1011 (quotation marks omitted). Indeed, “the distinction between a tax and a fee is a spectrum with the paradigmatic fee at one end and the paradigmatic tax at the other.” Washington, 338 F.3d at 444 (quotation marks omitted). But we have enunciated some workable distinctions. First, “the classic tax sustains the essential flow of revenue to the government, while the classic fee is linked to some regulatory scheme.” Home Builders, 143 F.3d at 1011. Second, “[t]he classic tax is imposed by a state or municipal legislature, while the classic fee is imposed by an agency upon those it regulates.” Id. And third, “[t]he classic tax is designed to provide a benefit for the entire community, while the classic fee is designed to raise money to help defray an agency’s regulatory expenses.” Id.

The membership fees are “classic fees.” First, they are linked to the regulation of the legal profession, not to generating revenue for the government. Texas law requires that Bar funds “be used only for administering the public purposes provided by” the State Bar Act. TEX. GOV’T CODE § 81.054(d). In fact, the Supreme Court of Texas must distribute the fees to the Bar only for funding expenditures to pursue those ends. See id. § 81.054(c). Second, the membership fees are imposed neither by a legislature nor on the entire community. Although a statute authorizes charging the fees, the process of setting and collecting those fees is left to the Texas Supreme Court and the Bar. See id. §§ 81.022, 81.054(a), (c). Furthermore, the dues are paid only by those regulated by the Bar—licensed Texas attorneys—“not the public at large,” indicating they are a fee. Neinast, 217 F.3d at 278. Third and finally, the membership fees defray the Bar’s costs. The Bar is entirely self-funded, and the mandatory dues amount to nearly half of its annual revenue.

The legal services fee is also a fee, albeit a less paradigmatic one. Like the membership fee, the legal services fee is imposed only on the legal profession, “not the public at large.” Id. And the fee is linked to the regulation of the legal profession, given that its purpose is to ensure adequate funding of “basic civil legal services to the indigent and legal representation and other defense services to indigent defendants in criminal cases.” TEX. GOV’T CODE § 81.054(d). In other words, its purpose is not to raise revenue but to ensure that members of the legal profession are able to provide a particular legal service. On the other hand, unlike the membership fee, the legal services fee is imposed directly by the legislature. Compare id. § 81.054(a), with id. § 81.054(j). But that does not outweigh the other factors.

Since neither the membership fee nor the legal services fee is a tax, the TIA does not deprive the federal courts of jurisdiction. We therefore turn to the merits.

III.

We first analyze the plaintiffs' claim that compelling them to join the Bar violates the First Amendment. The Supreme Court has twice opined on whether mandatory bars violate the First Amendment. We discuss those cases, Lathrop v. Donohue, 367 U.S. 820 (1961) (plurality), and Keller v. State Bar of California, 496 U.S. 1 (1990), to determine whether the plaintiffs' claim survives.¹⁴

¹⁴ Since Lathrop and Keller were decided, the Supreme Court's First Amendment caselaw has changed dramatically. Both cases drew from the then-existing jurisprudence on the First Amendment implications of mandatory union dues, but that jurisprudence has evolved. Keller, in particular, rested almost exclusively on Abood v. Detroit Board of Education, 431 U.S. 209 (1977), which the Court overruled in Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2486. Those changes, and Janus in particular, cast doubt on Lathrop and Keller. See Jarchow, 140 S. Ct. at 1720 (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari). Contra Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2498 (Kagan, J., dissenting) (contending that Janus did not call Keller into question).

But “the Supreme Court abrogates its cases with a bang, not a whimper, and it has never revisited” either Lathrop or Keller. Tex. Democratic Party v. Abbott, 961 F.3d 389, 405 (5th Cir. 2020). So, despite their “increasingly wobbly, moth-eaten foundations,” State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 20 (1997) (cleaned up), Lathrop and Keller remain binding. Because they have “direct application

In Lathrop, 367 U.S. at 827–28, the Court considered whether mandatory bar membership necessarily violates the right to freedom of association. The Wisconsin Bar, the Lathrop plaintiff alleged, “express[es] . . . opinion[s] on legislative matters” and “utilizes its property, funds and employees for the purposes of influencing legislation and public opinion toward legislation.” Id. at 827. Therefore, he contended “that he [could not] constitutionally be compelled to join and give support to” the Bar. Id.

The Court rejected the plaintiff’s claim for two reasons. First, it noted that the plaintiff’s “compulsory enrollment imposes only the duty to pay dues”; his involuntary membership did not require any other participation. Id. at 827–28. Second, the Court found that the bar’s activities at issue were almost entirely limited to “elevating the educational and ethical standards of the Bar to the end of improving the quality of the legal service available to the people of the State” Id. at 843. Though that bar was engaged in legislative activity, that activity was “not the major activity of the State Bar,” id. at 839, and, furthermore, it was limited to bills pertinent to the legal profession for which there was “substantial unanimity,” id. at 834–38.

After deciding that compelling the plaintiff to pay dues to such a bar association did not violate the in [this] case,” we apply them, “leaving to [the Supreme] Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions.” Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989). With that said, Lathrop’s and Keller’s weakened foundations counsel against expanding their reach as we consider questions they left open.

freedom of association, the Lathrop Court, noting the paucity of the record, declined to decide whether “the use of his money for causes which he opposes” violated his right to free speech. Id. at 845. Three decades later, Keller reached that issue.

Like the Lathrop plaintiff, the Keller plaintiffs claimed that compelling their financial support of political activities violated their rights to freedom of speech and freedom of association. Keller, 496 U.S. at 5–6. The Court held that state bar associations may constitutionally charge mandatory dues to “fund activities germane” to “the purpose[s] for which compelled association was justified,” i.e., “regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services.” Id. at 13–14. But state bar associations cannot constitutionally use mandatory dues to “fund activities of an ideological nature which fall outside of those areas of activity.” Id. at 14. Although it held that at least some complained-of activities were germane, the Court remanded for the lower courts to determine exactly which of the challenged activities were non-germane.¹⁵

After deciding the free speech issue, the Court turned briefly to freedom of association. The Keller plaintiffs contended that “they cannot be compelled to associate with an organization that engages in political or ideological activities beyond those for which mandatory financial support is justified under the principles of Lathrop and Abood [v. Detroit Board of Education, 431 U.S. 209 (1977)].” Id. Despite noting that the plaintiffs’ claim “appears to implicate a much broader freedom of association claim than was at issue in Lathrop,” id. at 17, the Court did not resolve that broader claim, see id.

So where do Lathrop and Keller leave us? Lathrop held that lawyers may constitutionally be mandated to join a bar association that solely regulates the legal profession and improves the quality of legal services. Keller identified that Lathrop did not decide whether lawyers may be constitutionally mandated to join a bar association that engages in other, non-germane activities. Nor did Keller resolve that question.¹⁶ Therefore, we must both decide that issue and determine whether the Texas Bar is engaged in non-germane activities.

To determine whether compelling the plaintiffs to join a bar that engages in non-germane activities violates their freedom of association, we must decide (1) whether compelling the plaintiffs to join burdens their rights and, (2) if so, whether it is nevertheless justified by a sufficient state interest.

¹⁶ We join the Ninth and Tenth Circuits in reading Lathrop and Keller as leaving that question unresolved. See Schell v. The Chief Justice & Justices of the Oklahoma Supreme Court, No. 20-6044, 2021 WL 2657106, at *11 (10th Cir. June 29, 2021); Crowe v. Or. State Bar, 989 F.3d 714, 727–29 (9th Cir. 2021), petition for cert. filed (May 27, 2021) (No. 20-1678).”

“[F]reedom of association is never mentioned in the United States Constitution.”¹⁷ Instead, it is implicit in the other rights listed in the First Amendment. See Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 618 (1984). As relevant here, “[a]n individual’s freedom to speak . . . could not be vigorously protected from interference by the State unless a correlative freedom to engage in group effort toward those ends were not also guaranteed.”¹⁸ Because the right to freedom of association is part of the freedom of speech, “[t]o determine whether a group is protected by the First Amendment’s expressive associational right, we must determine whether the group engages in ‘expressive association.’” Boy Scouts of Am. v. Dale, 530 U.S. 640, 648 (2000).

For groups that engage in expressive association, the “[f]reedom of association . . . plainly presupposes a freedom not to associate.” Roberts, 468 U.S. at 623. Those groups have a right to restrict their membership, because the membership is the message.¹⁹ Individuals have an analogous right to “eschew association for expressive purposes.” Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2463. That right is part and parcel of the “cardinal constitutional command” that the government may not compel “individuals to mouth support for views they find objectionable.” *Id.*²⁰

Based on that, compelling a lawyer to join a bar association engaged in non-germane activities burdens his or her First Amendment right to freedom of association. Such a bar association would invariably be engaged in expressive activities. Even bar associations that engage in only germane activities undertake some expressive activities; for example, proposing an ethical rule expresses a view that the rule is a good one, and commenting on potential changes to the state’s court system, as the bar in Lathrop did, expresses a view that such a reform is a good or bad idea.

Bar associations that also engage in non-germane activities will almost certainly be engaging in additional expressive activities that “support . . . a particular conception of the good life or controversial ideology of the good society.” Id. And, when a bar association does so, part of its expressive message is that its members stand behind its expression. The membership is part of the message. Compelling membership, therefore, compels support of that message. If a member disagrees with that “conception of the good life or controversial ideology,” then compelling his or her membership infringes on the freedom of association. Id.

But that does not necessarily mean the plaintiffs are entitled to relief. “The right to associate for expressive purposes is not . . . absolute.” Roberts, 468 U.S. at 623. In its freedom-of-association cases, the Court has generally applied “exacting . . . scrutiny,” under which “mandatory associations are permissible only when they serve a ‘compelling state interest that cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms.’” Knox v. Serv. Emps. Intl Union, Loc. 1000, 567 U.S. 298, 310 (2012) (quoting Roberts, 468 U.S. at 623).

Compelled membership in a bar association that is engaged in only germane activities survives that scrutiny. We know that both because Lathrop held that compelled membership in such a bar did not violate freedom of association and because of the more recent statement in Harris v. Quinn, 573 U.S. 616, 655–56 (2014): States “have a strong interest in allocating to the members of the bar, rather than the general public, the expense of ensuring that attorneys adhere to ethical practices” as well as of regulating the legal protection and improving the quality of legal services. Id. And, for that reason, Keller, which allowed compelled subsidization²¹ of germane activities, “fits comfortably within the [exacting scrutiny] framework.” Id. at 655.

Compelled membership in a bar association that engages in non-germane activities, on the other hand, fails exacting scrutiny. Knox v. Serv. Emps. Int’l Union, Loc. 1000, 567 U.S. 298, 310 (2012) (quoting Roberts, 468 U.S. at 623). Plaintiffs suggest that, instead of exacting scrutiny, strict scrutiny should apply. Under that standard, the government must show that its action is “narrowly tailored” to “further compelling governmental interests.” Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 505 (2005) (cleaned up). Because the bar’s mandatory membership “cannot survive under even the more permissive standard,” we do not decide whether strict scrutiny is necessary. See Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2465. Although states have interests in allocating the expenses of regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services to licensed attorneys, they do not have a compelling interest in having all licensed attorneys engage as a group in other, non-germane activities.

Moreover, there are other “means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms” to achieve the state’s legitimate interests. Knox, 567 U.S. at 310. Almost twenty states—including some of the largest legal markets, such as New York, Illinois, and Pennsylvania—directly regulate the licensing and disciplining of attorneys. See Brock, supra, at 24 n.1 (not listing those states as having mandatory bars).

The Bar cannot reasonably suggest that those states are unable to regulate their legal professions adequately. Nor does the Bar have to cede its ability to engage in non-germane activities entirely—as California has shown, a hybrid model is possible.

Therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to summary judgment on their freedom-of-association claim if the Bar is in fact engaged in non-germane activities.

B.

The purposes justifying compelled association in a bar association are “regulating the legal profession” and “improving the quality of legal services.” Keller, 496 U.S. at 13. For activities to be germane, they must be “necessarily or reasonably incurred for” those purposes. Id. at 14. The plaintiffs contend that all “activities of a ‘political or ideological’ nature” necessarily are non-germane. That misses the mark.

Keller said mandatory dues cannot be used to “fund activities of an ideological nature which fall outside of those areas of activity.” Id. (emphasis added). Though later decisions have framed Keller somewhat as these plaintiffs do,²² none of them purported to alter Keller’s standard, which contemplates that some political or ideological activities might be germane. With that in mind, we turn to “[t]he difficult question” of determining whether each respective challenged activity is germane. Id.

²² See, e.g., Harris, 573 U.S. at 655 (describing Keller as holding “that members of this bar could not be required to pay the portion of bar dues used for political or ideological purposes but that they could be required to pay the portion of the dues used for activities connected with proposing ethical codes and disciplining bar members”); Johanns v. Livestock Mktg. Ass’n, 544 U.S. 550, 558

The Bar’s legislative program is neither entirely germane nor wholly non-germane. The plaintiffs advocate a bright line rule that any legislative lobbying is non-germane. But such a rule is foreclosed by Lathrop and Keller. In Lathrop, 367 U.S. at 836–37, the Court identified no First Amendment violation despite the Wisconsin bar’s lobbying for various pieces of legislation regarding the state court system, attorney compensation, and other matters related to the legal profession. And Keller, 496 U.S. at 15, highlighted that lobbying is germane where “officials and members of the Bar are acting essentially as professional advisers to those ultimately charged with the regulation of the legal profession.” At the same time, the scope of the Bar’s legislative program belies its contention that every single bill it has lobbied for is germane to regulating the legal profession or improving the quality of legal services.

(2005) (“[W]e have invalidated the use of the compulsory fees to fund speech on political matters.” (citing Keller)); Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Wis. Sys. v. Southworth, 529 U.S. 217, 231 (2000) (“[L]awyers could not, however, be required to fund the bar association’s own political expression.” (citing Keller, 496 U.S. at 16)).

Keller did not lay down a test to determine when lobbying is germane and when it is not, acknowledging that the dividing line would “not always be easy to discern.” Id. at 16. Instead, it identified “advanc[ing] a gun control or nuclear weapons freeze initiative” and “proposing ethical codes” as the bookends of the spectrum and left it to lower courts to work out intermediate cases. We must do so now.

Except as stated below, advocating changes to a state’s substantive law is non-germane to the purposes identified in Keller. Such lobbying has nothing to do with regulating the legal profession or improving the quality of legal services. Instead, those efforts are directed entirely at changing the law governing cases, disputes, or transactions in which attorneys might be involved. Lobbying for legislation regarding the functioning of the state’s courts or legal system writ large, on the other hand, is germane. So too is advocating for laws governing the activities of lawyers qua lawyers.²³

²³ Lathrop’s description of the topics on which the Wisconsin Bar took positions is illustrative of the type of lobbying that is germane:

The State Bar, through its Board of Governors or Executive Committee, has taken a formal position with respect to a number of questions of legislative policy. These have included such subjects as an increase in the salaries of State Supreme Court justices; making attorneys notaries public; amending the Federal Career Compensation Act to apply to attorneys employed with the Armed Forces the same provisions for special pay and promotion available to members of other professions; improving pay scales of attorneys in state service; court Applied to the Bar's 2019 legislative program, for example, that means that some lobbying was germane, but most was not. Many of the bills the Bar supported relate to substantive Texas law and are wholly disconnected from the Texas court system or the law governing lawyers' activities. For example, the Bar's lobbying to amend the Texas Constitution's definition of marriage and create civil unions is obviously non-germane.²⁴ The Bar's presumably less-controversial reorganization; extending personal jurisdiction over nonresidents; allowing the recording of unwitnessed conveyances; use of deceased partners' names in firm names; revision of the law governing federal tax liens; law clerks for State Supreme Court justices; curtesy and dower; securities transfers by fiduciaries; jurisdiction of county courts over the administration of inter vivos trusts; special appropriations for research for the State Legislative Council.

Lathrop, 367 U.S. at 836–37 (citations omitted). Those positions, with the possible exceptions of “curtesy and dower,” “extending personal jurisdiction over nonresidents,” and “federal tax liens,” all relate to the state’s court system or the activities of lawyers. That type of lobbying is germane.

In addition to its formally taken positions, the Wisconsin bar set up a group to address federal legislation affecting “the practice of law, or lawyers as a class, or the jurisdiction, procedure and practice of the Federal courts and other Federal tribunals, or creation of new Federal courts or judgeships affecting this state, and comparable subjects.” Id. at 838. Announcing positions on those topics would also pass the germaneness test.

²⁴ The Bar contends that its lobbying was germane because “seeking to amend or repeal unconstitutional laws benefits the legal profession and improves the quality of legal services because it reduces the risk that lawyers, their clients, members of the public, or government officials will rely on laws that judicial proposed substantive changes to Texas family law are equally non-germane. The Bar’s lobbying for the “creation of an exemption regarding the appointment of pro bono volunteers,” on the other hand, is germane, because it relates to the law governing lawyers. Its lobbying for changes to Texas trust law is germane to the extent the changes affect lawyers’ duties when serving as trustees, and non-germane to the extent the changes do not.

What is important, however, is that some of the legislative program is non-germane. The Bar attempts to salvage the program by maintaining that only its voluntary sections engage in lobbying and that therefore plaintiffs are not compelled to associate with those initiatives. But, by the Bar’s own admission, “[n]o voluntary section may assert a position regarding legislative, judicial, or executive action unless it has first obtained permission” from the Bar’s Board of Directors. See Policy Manual § 8.01.06. Those positions have the imprimatur of the entire Bar.

Moreover, even if the subject-matter sections undertake the direct-lobbying expenses, the Bar still uses mandatory dues to fund those sections directly and to pay for the GRD, which reviews the sections’ proposals. That too ties the entire Bar to the program. In sum, some of the legislative program is non-germane, so compelling the plaintiffs to join an decisions have rendered invalid.” But Keller does not afford the Bar a roving commission to advocate for legislation to “amend or repeal unconstitutional laws” or “clean up legal texts.”

association engaging in it violates their freedom of association.

The Bar’s various diversity initiatives through OMA, though highly ideologically charged, are germane to the purposes identified in Keller. The plaintiffs contend that OMA’s diversity initiatives are “highly ideological,” because they support the approach of “having programs targeted at certain individuals based on their race, gender, or sexual orientation” and “people of good faith . . . disagree sharply about the merits of such programs.” The plaintiffs are certainly right on that point—affirmative action and other identity-based programs, in contexts ranging from contract bidding to higher education, have spawned sharply divided public debate and widespread, contentious litigation.²⁵ Legislation has been introduced in Congress to address a number of race-based issues,²⁶ and litigation remains pending

²⁵ See, e.g., Schuette v. Coal. to Defend Affirmative Action, Integration & Immigrant Rights & Fight for Equal. by Any Means Necessary (BAMN), 572 U.S. 291 (2014); *Parents Involved in Cmty. challenging several diversity-justified initiatives.²⁷ In other words, that issue is a “sensitive political topic[]” that is “undoubtedly [a] matter[] of profound value and concern to the public.” Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2476 (cleaned up).

But, despite the controversial and ideological nature of those diversity initiatives, they are germane to the purposes identified by Keller. They are aimed at “creating a fair and equal legal profession for minority, women, and LGBT attorneys,” which is a form of regulating the legal profession. And the Bar contends that those initiatives “help to build and maintain the public’s trust in the legal profession and the judicial process as a whole,” which is an improvement in the quality of legal services.

The germaneness test does not require that there be unanimity on the Bar’s position on what best regulates the legal profession—that is typically for the Bar to decide.²⁸ To take a non-controversial example, the Bar’s

²⁸ But there are limits. Certain ideologically charged activities might be so tenuously related to the legal profession that any argument they are germane would be pretextual. In holding that the diversity initiatives are germane, we do not give the Bar carte blanche to engage in any ideological activities so long as they have some sophistic argument the activities are germane. We just identify that the diversity initiatives are not so tenuously connected to the purposes identified in Keller, and that therefore their ideologically charged nature does not defeat their germaneness.

advocating a particular ethical rule is germane no matter how strenuously an attorney might disagree with its propriety. The same principle applies here. In sum, the diversity initiatives are “activities of an ideological nature which fall [in]side” the areas identified by Keller, 496 U.S. at 14. Given that those activities are germane under Keller, they are not a basis for granting summary judgment for the plaintiffs.²⁹

Most, but not quite all, of the Bar’s activities aimed at aiding the needy are germane. Specifically, (1) the LAD, (2) the Bar’s directory of volunteer and resource opportunities, and (3) the legal services fee solely support pro bono work. That is germane to both regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services. Legal aid and pro bono programs focus on providing legal counsel to millions of Texans who cannot afford it and would otherwise be forced to proceed pro se. This improves the quality of legal services available to low-income Texans, given that they would otherwise have no legal services at all.

Such initiatives also aid Texas courts, because decreasing the number of pro se litigants reduces the administrative burdens those litigants place on Texas courts. Moreover, legal aid and pro bono efforts help lawyers to “fulfill [their] ethical responsibility to provide public interest legal service.”³⁰ The Supreme Court has suggested that funding legal aid and encouraging pro bono service are permissible ends for a mandatory bar to pursue,³¹ and our sister circuits appear to agree.³²

The plaintiffs’ main complaint with those programs seems to be that they disagree with the Bar’s choice of legal aid organizations to support, particularly in the context of immigration. Specifically, they contend that facilitating representation of aliens “is itself a highly ‘substantive’ and ‘ideological activity’” that “squarely aligns the Bar with one view of a politically charged national debate.” But a “lawyer’s representation of a client . . . does not constitute an endorsement of the client’s political, economic, social or moral views or activities.”³³ It follows that there is no reason to believe that facilitating lawyers’ representation of aliens in navigating immigration laws constitutes an endorsement of any particular viewpoint about those statutes. And structurally, in cases where the federal government is a party, it is unsurprising that only one side of that “v” needs pro bono assistance.

³⁰ TEX. DISCIPLINARY R. PRO. CONDUCT 6.01 cmt. 5; see also id. preamble ¶ 6 (“A lawyer should render public interest legal service. . . . The provision of free legal services to those unable to pay reasonable fees is a moral obligation of each lawyer”); TEX. STATE BAR BD. OF DIRS., PRO BONO RESOLUTION (2000) (“[E]ach Texas attorney should aspire to render at least 50 hours of legal services to the poor each year”).

³¹ See Lathrop, 367 U.S. at 840–43 (observing most of the Wisconsin Bar’s political activities, which included support for legal aid, “serve the function . . . of elevating the educational and ethical standards of the Bar to the end of improving the quality of the legal service available to the people of the State”).

In any event, LAD’s directory merely provides information for attorneys interested in such matters to connect with related organizations, and LAD provides pro bono support for groups touching on a wide array of legal disciplines.³⁴ The plaintiffs do not allege, and the record does not support, that LAD reserves those resources only for low-income Texans with certain political views or those who are pursuing certain ideological causes.

AJC is more complicated, because unlike LAD, the resources page, and the legal services fee, AJC’s activities are not entirely cabined to making legal representation more available to low-income Texans.

³³ TEX. DISCIPLINARY R. PRO. CONDUCT 6.01 cmt.4. If it did, no attorney would want to represent an accused murderer or child molester.

To be sure, most of its activities are so directed,³⁵ and to the extent the Bar is supporting AJC activities limited to helping low-income Texans access legal services, it is germane. But some of AJC’s activities include lobbying for changes to Texas substantive law designed to benefit low-income Texans.³⁶ Those may be salutary activities. But they are aimed at making substantive Texas law more favorable to low-income Texans, not at “regulating the legal profession” or “improving the quality of legal services,” so they are non-germane under Keller. Therefore, the Bar’s funding of the AJC is non-germane.

The miscellaneous activities—hosting an annual convention, running CLE programs, and publishing the Texas Bar Journal—are all germane. We explain why.

The Bar’s annual convention and CLE offerings help regulate the legal profession and improve the quality of legal services. Both programs assist attorneys in fulfilling requirements designed to ensure that they maintain the requisite knowledge to be competent practitioners. See, e.g., TEX. DISCIPLINARY R. PRO. CONDUCT 1.01 cmt. 8. The plaintiffs' complaint is that some of the convention panels and CLE courses are ideologically charged. Probably so. But that is not the test under Keller. And moreover, any objectionable CLE and annual convention offerings are only one part of a large, varied catalogue, and the Bar includes disclaimers indicating that it is not endorsing any of the views expressed. That is enough to satisfy Keller.³⁷

The Texas Bar Journal publishes information related to regulating the profession and improving legal services. Such information includes, among other things, (1) notices regarding disciplinary proceedings against Bar members, see TEX. R. DISCIPLINARY P. 6.07; (2) announcements of amendments to evidentiary and procedural rules, see TEX. GOV'T CODE § 22.108(c); id. § 22.109(c); (3) "public statements, sanctions, and orders" issued by the State Commission on Judicial Conduct, see id. § 33.005(e); and (4) articles "devoted to legal matters and the affairs of the [Texas] Bar and its members," TEX. STATE BAR R. art. IX. Moreover, the Journal purports to feature articles advancing various viewpoints, and, in any event, includes a disclaimer clarifying that the Bar does not endorse any views expressed therein. That structure suffices under Keller.³⁸

* * * * *

In sum, the Bar is engaged in non-germane activities, so compelling the plaintiffs to join it violates their First Amendment rights. There are multiple other constitutional options: The Bar can cease engaging in non-germane activities; Texas can directly regulate the legal profession and create a voluntary bar association, like New York's; or Texas can adopt a hybrid system, like California's. But it may not continue mandating membership in the Bar as currently structured or engaging in its current activities.

IV.

Assuming, arguendo, that the plaintiffs can be required to join the Bar, compelling them to subsidize the Bar's non-germane activities violates their freedom of speech.³⁹ Given that the Bar is engaged in non-

³⁸ The plaintiffs also reference, in a single sentence, the Bar's spending on advertising. Beyond that, however, they do not explain how it is unlawful, under Keller, to compel them to support those efforts. "It is not enough to merely mention or allude to a legal theory" "[A] party must 'press' its claims," which means, at a minimum, "clearly identifying a theory as a proposed basis for deciding the case." United States v. Scroggins, 599 F.3d 433, 446–47 (5th Cir. 2010). Because the plaintiffs have not met that threshold, they have forfeited any contention related to the advertising expenditures.

³⁹ "This alternative holding is not dicta. In this circuit, 'alternative holdings are binding precedent and not obiter dicta.'" Ramos-

germane activities and that its interests fail exacting scrutiny,⁴⁰ that is a straightforward application of Keller. The Bar may “constitutionally fund activities germane to [regulating the legal profession or improving the quality of legal services] out of the mandatory dues of all members. It may not, however, in such manner fund activities of an ideological nature which fall outside of those areas of activity.” Keller, 496 U.S. at 14. As explained above, parts of the legislative program and the support for AJC are non-germane, so compelling plaintiffs to fund them violates their freedom of speech. They are entitled to summary judgment on their second claim.

V.

The plaintiffs maintain that the Bar’s procedures for separating chargeable from non-chargeable expenses is constitutionally inadequate.⁴¹ They are, but not for the primary reason the plaintiffs offer.

Portillo v. Barr, 919 F.3d 955, 962 n.5 (5th Cir. 2019) (quoting Whitaker v. Collier, 862 F.3d 490, 496 n.14 (5th Cir. 2017)).

⁴⁰ See Part III.C, supra.

The plaintiffs contend the Bar’s procedures, outlined in Part I.C, supra, are constitutionally inadequate in light of recent precedent requiring clear, free, and affirmative consent—i.e., an opt-in system⁴²—“before an association can use an individual’s coerced fees or dues to support its political and ideological activities.” The plaintiffs assert in the alternative that, even if the Bar may use an opt-out refund procedure, its current procedures are still inadequate because the Bar (1) requires members to pay dues before seeking any refund, (2) does not provide adequate notice of its spending as required by Chicago Teachers Union, Local No. 1, AFT, AFL-CIO v. Hudson, 475 U.S. 292 (1986), and (3) makes refunds available only at the Bar’s discretion.

The Bar counters that “nothing in Keller mandates that integrated bars adopt the exact procedures Hudson outlined,” let alone that mandatory bars use an opt-in system. The Bar avers that its current procedures are constitutional under Keller because “the Bar provides members with advance, detailed notice of its proposed expenditures, along with several opportunities to object to those expenditures before they occur.” Specifically, the Bar points to (1) the publication of its proposed budget, which itemizes expenditures for particular categories, in the Texas Bar Journal; (2) opportunities to object at the budget hearing and the annual Bar Board meeting related to the budget; and (3) the protest procedure, which allows members to object to both proposed and actual expenditures and obtain a refund.

Each side is half right. The plaintiffs are correct that the Bar's procedures are constitutionally wanting, but they are incorrect that, at least under current law, opt-in procedures are required. Though Janus and Knox indicate that may be the case, Keller, despite "its increasingly wobbly, moth-eaten foundations,"⁴³ remains binding on this court. And Keller noted that "an integrated bar could certainly meet its Aboud obligation by adopting the sort of procedures described in Hudson." Keller, 496 U.S. at 17.

Hudson requires that a public organization collecting mandatory dues and engaging in non-germane conduct have procedures that "include an adequate explanation of the basis for the fee, a reasonably prompt opportunity to challenge the amount of the fee before an impartial decisionmaker, and an escrow for the amounts reasonably in dispute while such challenges are pending." Hudson, 475 U.S. at 310. The explanation of the basis of the fee must include "sufficient information to gauge the propriety of the union's fee." Id. at 306. Hudson's procedures contemplate an opt-out rule. And Keller indicated that Hudson's procedures are sufficient to satisfy a Bar's obligations. Therefore, assuming that plaintiffs can be compelled to join the Bar at all, the Bar may constitutionally use some sort of opt-out procedure for giving pro-rata refunds.

But, though the Bar may use opt-out procedures, its current procedures are constitutionally inadequate. The Bar asserts that Keller did not hold that Hudson's procedures are constitutionally necessary. That is correct as far as it goes: Keller left open whether “one or more alternative procedures would likewise satisfy” the Bar’s obligation. Keller, 496 U.S. at 17. But Janus and Knox have subsequently made clear that procedures even more protective than those described in Hudson (i.e., opt-in procedures) are necessary in the closely related union context.⁴⁴ In the absence of Keller’s holding that Hudson’s procedures are sufficient, we would be bound to follow the Supreme Court’s directive in those cases and require opt-in procedures. But of course, Keller’s indication that Hudson’s procedures are sufficient remains binding. Therefore, given that Keller indicated that Hudson’s procedures are sufficient, and Janus held even more protective procedures are necessary, Hudson’s procedures are both necessary and sufficient.⁴⁵

⁴⁴ “Neither an agency fee nor any other payment to the union may be deducted from a nonmember’s wages, nor may any other attempt be made to collect such a payment, unless the employee affirmatively consents to pay.” Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2486 (emphasis added); see also Knox, 567 U.S. at 312–13 (explaining that the cases approving opt-out procedures were more “historical accident” than “careful application of First Amendment principles”); id. at 314 (“By authorizing a union to collect fees from nonmembers and permitting the use of an opt-out system for the collection of fees levied to cover nonchargeable expenses, our prior decisions approach, if they do not cross, the limit of what the First Amendment can tolerate.”).

The Bar's procedures are inadequate under Hudson. The Bar does not furnish Texas attorneys with meaningful notice regarding how their dues will be spent. Nor does it provide them with any breakdown of where their fees go. Instead, it places the onus on objecting attorneys to parse the Bar's proposed budget—which only details expenses at the line-item level, often without significant explanation—to determine which activities might be objectionable. That is a far cry from a Hudson notice, which estimates the breakdown between chargeable and non-chargeable activities and explains how those amounts were determined. See Hudson, 475 U.S. at 307 & n.18.

The Bar then leaves the objecting attorney with precious few worthwhile options to express his or her disapproval. Though attorneys may register their complaints with committees and sections or lodge an objection at the Bar's annual hearing on its proposed budget, those processes give cold comfort: Any objector's opposition can be summarily overruled, leaving that lawyer on the hook to fund ideological activities that he or she does not support. To obtain a refund, the Bar requires that attorneys object to a specific activity.⁴⁶ Moreover, whether a refund is available is left to the sole discretion of the Bar's Executive Director, and refunds are issued only "for the convenience of the Bar." In the event a refund is denied, the objecting attorney is out of luck. Hudson requires more than that.

VI.

Having held that the plaintiffs are entitled to partial summary judgment, we turn to whether they warrant a preliminary injunction pending the remedies stage. They do.

“We review a . . . denial of a preliminary injunction for an abuse of discretion,” Moore v. Brown, 868 F.3d 398, 402 (5th Cir. 2017), “but we review a decision grounded in erroneous legal principles de novo,” City of Dall. v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., 847 F.3d 279, 286 (5th Cir. 2017) (quotation marks omitted). As discussed at length, supra, the denial of the preliminary injunction was based on an erroneous holding that the Bar was not engaged in any non-germane activities, so our review is de novo.

To obtain a preliminary injunction, the plaintiffs must establish that (1) they are “likely to succeed on the merits,” (2) they are “likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief,” (3) “the balance of equities tips in [their] favor,” and (4) “an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008).

The plaintiffs have plainly satisfied the first factor. They are not just likely to succeed on the merits; they have succeeded on the merits already. The remaining factors also support granting the preliminary injunction. First, “[t]he loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.” Elrod

v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976) (plurality). Next, “injunctions protecting First Amendment freedoms are always in the public interest.” Texans for Free Enter. v. Tex. Ethics Comm’n, 732 F.3d 535, 539 (5th Cir. 2013) (quotation marks omitted). Finally, the balance of equities weighs heavily in plaintiffs’ favor because the only harm to the Bar is the inability to extract mandatory dues from the plaintiffs in violation of the First Amendment, which is really “no harm at all.” Christian Legal Soc’y v. Walker, 453 F.3d 853, 867 (7th Cir. 2006).

* * *

The district court erred in its reading of Lathrop and Keller and in its application of Keller’s germaneness test to the Bar’s activities. We therefore VACATE the summary judgment, RENDER partial summary judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, and REMAND for the court to determine the full scope of relief to which plaintiffs are entitled. We additionally REVERSE the denial of plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction and RENDER a preliminary injunction preventing the Bar from requiring the plaintiffs to join or pay dues pending completion of the remedies phase.

ORDER ON CROSS-MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Before the court in the above-styled cause are the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment, responses, replies, amicus briefs, and exhibits.¹ On

August 1, 2019, the court held a hearing on the motions at which all parties were represented by counsel. Having considered the motions, responses, replies, amicus briefs, the parties' summary-judgment proof, argument of counsel, post-hearing submissions, case file, and applicable law, the court renders the following order.

Jurisdiction and venue

Federal courts have original jurisdiction over “all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws or treaties of the United States.” 28 U.S.C. § 1331. This action arises under the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution and is brought pursuant Section 1983 of Title 42 of the United States Code. This court has subject-matter jurisdiction under Sections 1331 and 1343 of Title 28 of the United States Code, and venue is proper in this district because at least one of the defendants resides in this district and all defendants reside in the State of Texas. See 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b)(1).

Factual background

Texas requires all lawyers licensed to practice in the state to enroll in, and pay annual membership fees to, a statewide bar. See Tex. Gov't Code §§ 81.051, 81.054, 81.102. The Texas Legislature established the State Bar of Texas (the "Bar") in 1939 as "an administrative agency of the Judicial Department of the State." State Bar Act § 2, reprinted in 2 Tex. B.J. 128, 128 (1939). The operations and responsibilities of the Bar are governed by statute, along with the Bar's internal rules and policies. The State Bar Act (the "Act") mandates that all attorneys licensed to practice law in Texas be members of the Bar. The Bar "is a public corporation and an administrative agency of the judicial department" of Texas government and is subject to "administrative control" by the Texas Supreme Court. See Tex. Gov't Code § 81.011(a), (c).

The Act specifies the Bar's purposes as follows:

- (1) to aid the courts in carrying on and improving the administration of justice;
- (2) to advance the quality of legal services to the public and to foster the role of the legal profession in serving the public;
- (3) to foster and maintain on the part of those engaged in the practice of law high ideals and integrity, learning, competence in public service, and high standards of conduct;
- (4) to provide proper professional services to the members of the state bar;

(5) to encourage the formation of and activities of local bar associations;

(6) to provide forums for the discussion of subjects pertaining to the practice of law, the science of jurisprudence and law reform, and the relationship of the state bar to the public; and

(7) to publish information relating to the subjects listed in Subdivision (6).

Id. at § 81.012.

The Bar's members elect the Bar's officers and the majority of the members of the Bar's Board of Directors. Id. at §§ 81.019(b), 81.020(b). Almost half of the Bar's annual revenue comes from membership fees, and the Texas Supreme Court and the Bar's Board of Directors share responsibility for setting the fee amount. See id. at §§ 81.022, 81.054(a). The Board may increase fees by up to 10% once every six years. Id. at § 81.022(a-4). All other fee increases are subject to a referendum vote by the Bar's members. Id. at § 81.022(a-3). The annual membership fees are currently $68 for active members licensed less than three years; $148 for active members licensed between three and five years; $235 for active members licensed for at least five years; and $50 for inactive members. Members 70 years of age and older are exempt from paying membership fees. The Bar has not raised annual membership fees since 1991, and remains the lowest among the states with integrated bars.²

² An integrated bar is defined as an official state organization requiring membership and financial support of all attorneys

In 2003, the Texas Legislature amended the Act to require non-exempt Texas lawyers to pay a $65 legal-services fee in addition to the membership fee. Id. at § 81.054(c)-(d), (j)-(k). The Bar does not receive or control that fee. Id. at § 81.054(c)-(d). The Texas Supreme Court distributes the legal-services fees to the Texas Comptroller, who allocates half to the Supreme Court Judicial Fund to fund civil legal services for the indigent and the other half to the Fair Defense Account of the state's general-revenue fund for indigent-criminal-defense programs. Id. at § 81.054(c).

The Texas Legislature periodically conducts “sunset” reviews of the Bar to determine “whether a public need exists” for the Bar’s continued existence, including “whether less restrictive or alternative methods of performing any function that the agency performs could adequately protect or provide service to the public.” Tex. Gov’t Code § 325.011. The Bar has undergone sunset review four times, the last in 2017, when the Texas Legislature voted to continue the Bar’s existence until the next sunset review in 2029. See S.B. No. 302 (2017).

Plaintiffs Tony K. McDonald and Joshua B. Hammer are attorneys licensed to practice law in Texas and active members of the Bar. Plaintiff Mark S. Pulliam is an inactive member of the Bar. Plaintiffs filed suit against Defendants, all of whom are members admitted to practice in that jurisdiction. It has two facets which set it apart from a voluntary bar association-official organization by authority of the state and compulsory membership. See Tex. Gov’t Code § 81.102.

of the State Bar of Texas Board of Directors, in their official capacities only, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief to remedy alleged unconstitutional coerced speech and association in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution. Plaintiffs assert that the mandatory requirement that attorneys in Texas must join, associate with, and pay dues to the Bar violates their First Amendment right to freedom of speech and association. See 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment that Texas law compelling them to join, associate with, and financially support the Bar violates the First and Fourteenth Amendments. See 28 U.S.C. § 2201. Plaintiffs further seek attorney's fees and costs. See 42 U.S.C. § 1988.

Plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment on liability asserts that the current structure of the Bar violates their First Amendment rights in three ways: (1) by compelling membership in, and financial support for, the Bar in violation of Plaintiffs' First Amendment right to freedom of speech and association; (2) by compelling Plaintiffs to support the Bar's activities beyond attorney regulation in violation the First Amendment; and (3) and by implementing procedures for identifying non-chargeable expenses in violation the First Amendment. Defendants' cross-motion for summary judgment on all of Plaintiffs' claims asserts that Plaintiffs have failed to raise any plausible constitutional violations.

Arguments

Plaintiffs argue that under Janus v. American Federation of State, County, & Municipal Employees, 138 S. Ct. 2448 (2018), an organization that collects compelled dues must adopt procedures under which members opt in to supporting political and ideological causes, rather than charging everyone the fee by default and expecting objectors to opt out. Defendants argue that Lathrop v. Donohue, 367 U.S. 820 (1961) and Keller v. State Bar of California, 496 U.S. 1 (1990), control, holding that mandatory bar membership and mandatory bar fees do not violate the First Amendment. Defendants further assert that Plaintiffs' reliance on Janus is misplaced, because Janus's reassessment of whether a state's interests in maintaining labor peace and avoiding nonmember free riding on unions' collective-bargaining efforts justify compelled payments from nonmembers does not undermine the United States Supreme Court's endorsement of the state interests in professional regulation and legal-service quality served by integrated bars.

Summary-judgment review

“Summary judgment is required when ‘the movant shows that there is no dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.’” Trent v. Wade, 776 F.3d 368, 376 (5th Cir. 2015) (quoting FED. R. CIV. P. 56(a)). “A genuine dispute of material fact exists when the ‘evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.’” Nola Spice Designs, LLC v. Haydel Enters., Inc., 783 F.3d 527, 536 (5th Cir. 2015) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986)). “The moving party ‘bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of [the record] which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.” Id. (quoting EEOC v. LHC Grp., Inc., 773 F.3d 688, 694 (5th Cir. 2014)). A fact is material if “its resolution could affect the outcome of the action.” Aly v. City of Lake Jackson, 605 Fed. App’x 260, 262 (5th Cir. 2015). “If the moving party fails to meet [its] initial burden, the motion [for summary judgment] must be denied, regardless of the nonmovant’s response.” Pioneer Exploration, LLC v. Steadfast Ins. Co., 767 F.3d 503 (5th Cir. 2014).

“When the moving party has met its Rule 56(c) burden, the nonmoving party cannot survive a summary judgment motion by resting on the mere allegations of its pleadings.” Duffie v. United States, 600 F.3d 362, 371 (5th Cir. 2010). The nonmovant must identify specific evidence in the record and articulate how that evidence supports that party’s claim. Willis v. Cleco Corp., 749 F.3d 314, 317 (5th Cir. 2014). “This burden will not be satisfied by ‘some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts, by conclusory allegations, by unsubstantiated assertions, or by only a scintilla of evidence.’” Boudreaux v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 402 F.3d 536, 540 (5th Cir. 2005). In deciding a summary-judgment motion, the court draws all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Darden v. City of Fort Worth, 866 F.3d 698, 702 (5th Cir. 2017).

On cross motions for summary judgment, the court reviews each party’s motion independently, viewing the evidence and inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and determining for each side whether judgment may be rendered in accordance with the Rule 56 standard. Amerisure Ins. Co. v. Navigators Ins. Co., 611 F.3d 299, 304 (5th Cir. 2010) (internal citation and quotation omitted); Shaw Constr. v. ICF Kaiser Engrs., Inc., 395 F.3d 533 fn. 8 & 9 (5th Cir. 2004).

Analysis

Counts One and Two

In Counts One and Two of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs assert that compelling membership in and financial support for the Bar and compelling Plaintiffs to support the Bar's activities beyond attorney regulation violates Plaintiffs' First Amendment right to freedom of speech and association. See Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2463-64. Plaintiffs acknowledge that the United States Supreme Court upheld compulsory state bars in Keller, but they argue that the Court did so only by relying heavily on Abood v. Detroit Board of Education, 431 U.S. 209 (1977), which Plaintiffs argue the Court explicitly overruled in Janus. See 138 S. Ct. at 2478-79. Plaintiffs argue in the alternative that even if Keller remains good law, nothing in Keller authorizes a state to compel bar membership when the bar engages in political or ideological activities.

Defendants argue that Lathrop and Keller foreclose Plaintiffs' claims by squarely holding that the First Amendment permits states to adopt integrated bars supported by compulsory membership fees to further the state's interests in "regulating the legal profession or 'improving the quality of the legal service available to the people of the State.” Keller, 496 U.S. at 14 (quoting Lathrop, 367 U.S. at 843). Defendants further argue that contrary to Plaintiffs’ contentions, Janus did not overrule Keller, and integrated bars may engage in activities that some members may view as “political or ideological” in nature so long as they advance the legitimate state interests recognized in Keller.

In Lathrop, the plaintiff claimed that Wisconsin’s establishment of an integrated bar with compulsory membership fees violated his First Amendment rights of freedom of association and free speech. 367 U.S. at 821-23. The Supreme Court concluded that Wisconsin’s integrated bar did not violate the First Amendment’s guarantee of freedom of association, reasoning that a state may constitutionally require attorneys to pay dues to a state bar “in order to further the State’s legitimate interests in raising the quality of professional services,” even when an integrated bar “engages in some legislative activity,” as long as “the bulk of State Bar activities serve the function . . . of elevating the educational and ethical standards of the Bar to the end of improving the quality of the legal service available to the people of the State.” Id. at 843. Concluding that the record was insufficiently developed to provide a “sound basis” for deciding whether the integrated bar violated the plaintiffs right to free speech, the Lathrop Court declined to resolve that issue. Id. at 845-48.

However, Keller did resolve the free-speech issue left open by Lathrop. The Keller plaintiffs claimed that the integrated California State Bar’s “use of their compulsory dues to finance political and ideological activities . . . with which they disagree violate[d] their rights of free speech.” 496 U.S. at 9. The Court held that lawyers “may be required to join and pay dues to the State Bar,” and articulated “the scope of permissible dues-financed activities in which the State Bar may engage.” Id. at 4. The Court concluded that integrated bars “are justified by the State’s interest in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services.” Id. at 13. Keller held that state bars may use mandatory membership fees to “fund activities germane to those goals,” but may not use mandatory fees to “fund activities of an ideological nature which fall outside of those areas of activity.” Id. at 14. Therefore, under Keller, integrated state bars’ use of membership fees complies with the First Amendment if the “expenditures are necessarily or reasonably incurred for the purpose of regulating the legal profession or ‘improving the quality of the legal service available to the people of the State.’” Id. (quoting Lathrop, 367 U.S. at 843). Keller acknowledges that determining on which side of that constitutional line a particular expenditure falls “will not always be easy,” but the Court explained that “the extreme ends of the spectrum are clear”: although mandatory fees may not be used for advancing “gun control or nuclear weapons freeze” initiatives, they may be used for “activities connected with disciplining members of the Bar or proposing ethical codes for the profession.” Id. at 15-16.

Janus did not disturb the binding holdings of Lathrop and Keller.³ Janus addressed First Amendment issues applicable only to public-sector employees. 38 S. Ct. at 2478. The Court held that arrangements whereby a governmental entity and a labor organization agree to require government employees to pay fees that are used by the union to negotiate how governmental funds are spent, and in what amounts, implicate the First Amendment in ways distinct from agency fees in the private sector. Public-sector fees involve “the government . . . compel[ling] a person to pay for another party’s speech,” on matters involving “the budget of government” and “the performance of government services.” Id. at 2467, 2473. The Court also indicated that public unions raise particular First Amendment concerns that are not raised by integrated state bars, noting that collective bargaining by public unions has a special “political valence” that the Court in Abood did not appreciate at the time. Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2483. Private-sector agency fees raise no such issues. Like Keller and Lathrop, this case involves mandatory membership in a bar association, not a public-sector union.

Although Plaintiffs contend that Keller relies heavily on Abood, the Supreme Court decided Keller principally in the context of rejecting the contention that the California State Bar’s “status as a regulated state agency exempted it from any constitutional constraints on the use of its dues.” 496 U.S. at 10. Keller merely drew an “analogy” between integrated state bars and labor unions. Id. at 12. Janus’s reassessment of the state interests that Abood concluded justified agency fee arrangements did not undermine Keller’s recognition of the very different state interests in professional regulation and legal-service quality served by integrated bars. See id. at 13-14.

Moreover, the majority opinion in Janus did not address Keller or respond to the dissent’s assertion that Keller was a “case . . . involving compelled speech subsidies outside the labor sphere [that] today’s decision does not question.” 138 S. Ct. at 2498 (Kagan, J., dissenting). Keller and Lathrop directly control under the facts of this case, and therefore bind this court. See Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989) (“If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions.”).

Additionally, the Supreme Court’s decision in Harris v. Quinn, 573 U.S. 616 (2014), confirms that Keller fits within the “exacting scrutiny” framework applied in Janus. Harris applied “exacting scrutiny” in holding that states could not constitutionally charge non-public employees agency fees. See id. at 648-51. As later explained by Janus, exacting scrutiny requires that a compelled subsidy “serve a compelling state interest that cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms.” Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2465 (quoting Knox v. Serv. Emps. Int’l Union, 567 U.S. 298, 310 (2012)). Harris explicitly considered whether the exacting-scrutiny framework would disturb its prior holding in Keller that states may require lawyers to pay fees to fund bar activities furthering the “State’s interest in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services.” Harris, 573 U.S. at 655 (quoting Keller, 496 U.S. at 14). The Court answered no, holding that Keller “fits comfortably within [the exacting-scrutiny] framework” applied in Harris and that its decision in Harris was “wholly consistent with [the Court’s] holding in Keller.” Id. at 656. Thus, the court finds no basis for holding that Janus overrules Keller.

Having determined that Keller applies, the court will next address whether the Bar’s challenged activities meet the Keller standard. Keller held that integrated bars “are justified by the State’s interest in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services available to the people of the State,” id. at 13; thus, state bars may use mandatory membership fees to “fund activities germane to those goals,” so long as they do not “fund activities of an ideological nature which fall outside of those areas of activity.” Id. at 14. The question is not whether the challenged activity is “political or ideological” in the abstract, but whether the challenged activity is “germane to” the state interests that justify integrated bars’ establishment of “regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services.” Id. at 13; see also United States v. United Foods, Inc., 533 U.S. 405, 414 (2001) (under Keller, lawyers can “be required to pay moneys in support of activities . . . germane to the reason justifying the compelled association”); Kingstad v. State Bar of Wis., 622 F.3d 708, 716 (7th Cir. 2010) (question is “whether challenged expenditures . . . are reasonably related to the constitutionally relevant purposes of [the mandatory] association”).

“The purpose of the State Bar of Texas is to engage in those activities enumerated at [Section] 81.012 of the State Bar Act. The expenditure of funds by the State Bar of Texas is limited both as set forth at [Section] 81.034 of the State Bar Act and in Keller.” Board Policy Manual § 3.14.01 (“Policy Manual”). The court finds that the following Bar activities Plaintiffs challenge comply with the Keller standard because they further Texas’s interest in professional regulation or legal-service quality improvement.

Lobbying. Members of the Bar’s voluntary, subject-matter sections coordinate all lobbying activities without compensation from the Bar for their efforts. The Bar follows a detailed, multi-step process to ensure that its legislative activities comply with the requirements of the State Bar Act and Keller. In addition, the Bar maintains a policy against engaging in legislative activities that “carry the potential of deep philosophical or emotional division among a substantial segment of the membership of the bar.” Policy Manual § 8.01.03(c). Participating in legislative activities such as seeking to amend or repeal unconstitutional laws benefits the legal profession and improves the quality of legal services because it reduces the risk that lawyers, their clients, members of the public, or government officials will rely on laws that judicial decisions have rendered invalid. To date no person–Plaintiffs included–have raised an objection under the Bar’s protest procedure from the time of its adoption in 2005 until the filing of Plaintiffs’ suit.

Access to Justice Programs. The Texas Supreme Court established the Texas Access to Justice Commission in 2001 in response to findings by a statewide planning group that many poverty-stricken people in Texas are underrepresented, and that gaps exist in developing a comprehensive, integrated statewide civil-legal-services-delivery system in Texas. The Texas Supreme Court’s order creating the Commission expressly provides that it is prohibited from using Bar funds “for influencing the passage or defeat of any legislative measure unless the measure relates to the regulation of the legal profession, improving the quality of legal services, or the administration of justice and the amount of the expenditure is reasonable and necessary.” Tex. Gov’t Code § 81.034.

In addition, the preamble to the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct urges attorneys to be “mindful of deficiencies in the administration of justice and of the fact that the poor, and sometimes persons who are not poor, cannot afford adequate legal assistance.” Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof’l Conduct preamble 15, reprinted in Tex. Gov’t Code Ann., tit. 2, subtit. G, app. A (West 2013). The Bar advances Texas’ interest in professional regulation by taking steps to assist lawyers in fulfilling their “ethical responsibility to provide public interest legal service.” Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof'l Conduct 6.01 cmt. 5.

Diversity Initiatives. Texas has a long history of discrimination in the legal profession and legal education. See, e.g., League of United Latin Am. Citizens, Council No. 4434 v. Clements, 999 F.2d 831, 866 (5th Cir. 1993) (en banc) (noting “Texas’ long history of discrimination against its black and Hispanic citizens in all areas of public life”). The Bar’s diversity-related initiatives seek to reduce those barriers and promote a fairness and equity among lawyers help to build and maintain the public’s trust in the legal profession and the judicial process as a whole, advancing Texas’s interests in professional regulation and improving the quality of legal services.

Continuing Legal Education. The Bar’s Continuing Education programs assist Bar members in satisfying minimum continuing legal education requirement in furtherance of the members’ professional duty to maintain the requisite knowledge of a competent practitioner. See Tex. State Bar R. art. XII, § 6, reprinted in Tex. Gov’t Code Ann., tit. 2. subtit. G, app. A (West 2013); Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof'l Conduct 1.01 cmt. 8. The programs’ fees aid in funding the Bar’s operations, without which the Bar would likely increase its membership fees. The Bar regularly publishes disclaimers stating that the opinions expressed by speakers in continuing legal education programs “do not necessarily reflect opinions of the State Bar of Texas, its sections, or committees.”

Bar Journal. The Bar publishes the Texas Bar Journal, providing articles regarding “legal matters and the affairs of the [] Bar and its members.” State Bar R. art. IX. The Bar is required to publish information of interest to the legal profession, including notices of disciplinary actions and amendments to evidentiary and procedural rules. See, e.g., Tex. R. Disciplinary P. 6.07; Tex. Gov’t Code §§ 22.108(c), 22.109(c). The Texas Bar Journal aims to “report [on] matters objectively” and to feature articles expressing “[v]arious viewpoints,” including the “opinions of people differing with the State Bar and/or Bar leaders.” Policy Manual § 7.05.02. Each issue includes a disclaimer making clear that publication of any article or statement is not to be deemed an endorsement of the views expressed therein. Like the continuing legal education programs, the Texas Bar Journal advances the interest of professional regulation and improving legal-service quality by keeping Bar members up-to-date on developments in the law and the legal profession. Cf. Lehnert v. Ferris Faculty Ass’n, 500 U.S. 507, 529 (1991) (rejecting First Amendment challenge to expenditures on union’s statewide journal).

Advertising. Keller authorizes expenditures to inform lawyers and the public regarding the Bar’s programs and the Bar’s role in regulating the legal profession and advancing the quality of legal services. See Kingstad, 622 F.3d at 718-19 (upholding state bar public image campaign). See also Gardner v. State Bar of Nev., 284 F.3d at 1043 (9th Cir. 2002). Indeed, the Bar’s advertising activities are “highly germane to the purposes for which the State Bar exists,” Gardner, 284 F.3d at 1043, because they inform lawyers and the public about the Bar's programs and the Bar's role in furthering those interests.

The court concludes that the $65 legal-services fee added by the Texas Legislature in 2003 is not subject to Keller because it is not used to fund any Bar expenditures, but rather is used by the Texas Supreme Court and the Texas Indigent Defense Commission to promote legal services for the indigent. See Tex. Gov't Code § 81.0549(c)-(d). Even if Keller applies, the fee satisfies Keller because—like the Bar's access-to-justice programs—promoting legal services for the indigent is “germane to” the state's interests in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services. Keller, 496 U.S. at 13-14.

Count Three

In Count Three, Plaintiffs assert that the Bar's implementation of procedures for identifying non-chargeable expenses violate the First Amendment because the Bar has failed to adopt the precise procedures established by the Supreme Court in Chicago Teachers Union v. Hudson, 475 U.S. 292 (1986). The court notes, however, that Keller did not address the question of whether integrated bars can adopt “alternative procedures” to prevent bar members from being compelled to fund nonchargeable expenses. See Keller, 496 U.S. at 17. Having previously concluded that the Bar's procedures ensure that all of its expenditures comply with Keller, the court further concludes that the Bar's existing policies and procedures achieve the objective of procedural safeguards in the First Amendment by ensuring that “the government treads with sensitivity in areas freighted with First Amendment concerns.” Hudson, 475 U.S. at 303 n.12.

The Bar provides members with advance, detailed notice of its proposed expenditures, along with several opportunities to object to those expenditures before they occur. Bar members have multiple opportunities to object to proposed expenditures before they occur—none of which Plaintiffs have undertaken—including, but not limited to, (1) at the annual public budget hearing required under Tex. Gov’t Code § 81.022(b), (2) at the annual Bar Board meeting at which the budget is approved under Policy Manual § 3.02.03, and (3) under the Policy Manual’s protest procedure, which allows members to “object to a proposed or actual expenditure,” Policy Manual § 3.14.02. In addition, members can object to proposed legislative activities and participate in the Legislative Policy Subcommittee meeting on the Bar’s proposed legislative program. Because the Bar has adequate procedural safeguards in place to protect against compelled speech and because mandatory Bar membership and compulsory fees do not otherwise violate the First Amendment, Plaintiffs’ claim that the Bar unconstitutionally coerces them into funding allegedly non-chargeable activities without a meaningful opportunity to object necessarily fails as a matter of law.

Conclusion

IT IS ORDERED that Plaintiffs’ Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Liability filed March 25, 2019 (Doc. #6) is DENIED.

App. 65

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants' Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment filed May 13, 2019 (Doc. #35) is GRANTED.⁴

A Final Judgment shall be rendered subsequently in this cause.
