To the Honorable Chief Justice John Roberts, as Circuit Justice for the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit:

Pursuant to this Court’s Rules (“Rule”) 13.5, 22, 30.2 and 30.3, the 40 military chaplain petitioners (hereafter, “Chaplains” or “Petitioners”) listed below respectfully request that the time to file their Petition for a Writ of Certiorari (“Petition”) in this matter be extended for 38 days up to and including Monday, December 8, 2023. No corporate disclosure statement is needed as all the petitioners are individuals.

Chaplains intend to file a Petition seeking review of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit’s August 3, 2022, unpublished Judgment in Israel Alvarado, et al. v. Lloyd Austin, III, et al., No. 23-1419, see Appendix (“App.”) A, dismissing the Chaplains’ appeal of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia’s (“District Court”) November 23, 2023 order denying the Chaplains’ Motion for a Preliminary Injunction and dismissal of their Complaint, see App. B); and the District Court’s February 17, 2023 order denying the Chaplains’ Motion for Reconsideration, see App. C.

Absent an extension of time, the Petition would be due on November 1, 2023. Petitioners are filing this Application more than 10 days prior to that date in accordance with Rules 13.5 and 30.2. This Court would have jurisdiction over the judgment under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1). The 38-day extension of time would move the filing date to Friday, December 8, 2023.

THE LIST OF PETITIONERS

Petitioners are 40 military chaplain chaplains of all services including active, Reserve and National Guard and all ranks from Officers paygrade O3 (Captain) to and including O6 (Colonel): Israel Alvarado, Brenton C. Asbury, Jordan Ballard, Steven Barfield, Chad Booth, Jeremiah Botello, Walter Brobst, Justin Brown, David Calger, Mark Cox, Clayton Diltz, Jacob Eastman, Thomas Fussell, Nathanael Gentilhomme, Doyle Harris, Michael Hart, Jeremiah Henderson, Andrew Hirko, Krista Ingram, Ryan Jackson, Jacob Lawrence, Joshua Layfield, James Lee, Brad Lewis, Robert Nelson, Rick Pak, Randy Pogue, Gerardo Rodriguez, Parker Schnetz, Lance Schrader, Richard Shaffer, Jonathan Shour, Jeremiah Snyder, David Troyer, Seth Weaver, Thomas Withers, Justin Wine, Matthew Wronski, Jerry Young, and Jonathan Zagdanski.

BACKGROUND

Alvarado v. Austin is a putative class-action filed by 40 military chaplains of all services challenging Secretary of Defense Austin's (1) lack of authority to mandate that all service persons take COVID-19 vaccines under penalty of criminal sanctions and lifelong career destruction and (2) implementation of that Mandate in violation of well-established statutory and constitutional protections. The Chaplains claim the Secretary and his subordinate Armed Services Secretaries (collectively Department of Defense or "DoD") unlawfully and unconstitutionally retaliated against them for exercising their rights to file a religious accommodation request ("RAR") excusing them from the taking the Mandate based on matters of conscience.

Review of these Chaplains' claims must be put in the context of Congress' special protections for chaplains' decisions based on following their conscience as formed by faith in § 533(b) of the 2013 National Defense Authorization Act ("NDAA"), as amended by the 2014 NDAA ("Section 533"), see App. D. Section 533 was passed to protect the right of conscience for military personnel, § 533(a), and chaplains, § 533(b), following turmoil within the DoD accompanied by unprecedented attacks on the conscience of military personnel as formed by faith and chaplains' religious liberty following Congress's repeal of what was popularly known as the "don't ask don't tell" Policy.

Several facts show DoD's hostility to § 533's provisions and purpose. The Complaint alleges and shows DoD suppressed § 533's provisions and protections for conscience despite § 533(c)'s order for DoD to publish § 533(a)'s and § 533(b)'s provisions and protections for conscience as an expression of religious liberty until September 1, 2020, when it published DoD Instruction 1300.17. Second, Secretary Austin has excluded § 533's "negative personnel actions" from the "negative actions" he reports have been remediated in rescinding his Mandate. The "negative personnel actions" §533(b) prohibits are the very same career destroying actions Respondents have taken against these Chaplains and still remain in their records, e.g., low fitness reports and failures of promotion, despite Secretary Austin's contrary assertions.

Third, the Mandate's threatened disciplinary actions and discharge characterizations for refusal to take the vaccines after the Chaplains' RARs universal denials would destroy any chaplain's future career in civilian ministry.

The Chaplains' first challenge, "lack of authority", arises under the Major Policy Questions Doctrine because the DoD Mandate was issued based on the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's ("CDC") September 21, 2021 changes to the classic definition of "vaccine" and "vaccination" from something that produced immunity, i.e., protection from the disease and preclusion of its transmission, to a procedure that stimulated the immune system without protecting the recipient or preventing transmission. The CDC's new definition was inconsistent with the DoD's immunization regulation, DoD Instruction, 6205.02, "DoD Immunization Program" (July 23, 2019) which was in effect at that time, still is, and through the present and uses the previous definitions of "vaccine" and "vaccination".

A September 21, 2021, email between CDC employees shows the change was made because the experimental COVID-19 vaccines under development were known not to produce protection from the disease or preclude its transmission, requirements under the previous vaccine definition. See CDC email chain, Alvarado Complaint Exhibit 8.

The Chaplains' Complaint claims that (1) the Secretary's implementation of his Mandate violated their statutory and constitutional protections and was designed to purge the Armed Services of those who believe in following their conscience as formed by their faith rather than a bureaucrat's dictate; (2) the Secretary and his subordinate Service Secretaries retaliated against these Chaplains for filing RARs; and (3) the DoD's negative personnel actions have destroyed these chaplains' careers. Those negative actions remain in their records despite the 2023 NDAA's order to "rescind" the illegal Mandate which means restore Petitioners to their status before the Secretary issued his Mandate.

This is a violation of these Chaplains' constitutional and statutory protections. This includes violation of Article VI's No Religious Test Clause, the First Amendment's Establishment, Free Exercise, Free Speech and Right to Petition Clauses, the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause and its equal protection component, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act ("RFRA"), Section 533, and the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA").

The Chaplains requested a preliminary injunction requiring DoD to stop the then current retaliation against them for exercising their right to seek an RAR, actions § 533 and RFRA prohibit e.g., bad fitness reports, missed schooling, prejudicial assignments; enjoining all future retaliation against the Chaplains, and ending the irreparable harm DoD's actions inflicted on these and other military chaplains in violation of the First and Fifth Amendments.

The District Court denied the Chaplains' preliminary injunction motion and dismissed their all their claims finding they had had not exhausted their administrative remedies, depriving the court of subject matter jurisdiction as required by the Fourth Circuit's adoption of the Mendez v. Seaman test, 453 F.2d 197, 201-202 (5th Cir. 1971). App B. The District Court also rejected the Chaplains' subsequent motion for reconsideration following the 2023's NDAA order to the Secretary to "rescind" his Mandate. App C.

The Chaplains timely appealed to the Fourth Circuit, No. 23-1419, which stayed its briefing schedule following DoD's motion to dismiss for mootness. ECF No. 12. The Chaplains argued the destruction done to these Chaplains' careers from requesting RARs had not been remedied, e.g., failures of promotions, a fact DoD admitted in briefing, and that DoD's February 28, 2023, testimony to Congress showed it had no intention of fixing these and other class members' destroyed careers. DoD did not recognize that "rescind" meant the Mandate was void from its beginning and that all chaplains who filed RARs were entitled to be restored to the status quo ante. The Chaplains also pointed to many legal issues that remained unresolved that precedent has held prevented mootness, some capable of repetition but avoiding review.

The Chaplains provided this Court's June 30, 2023, decision in 303 Creative, LLC, v. Elenis, 600 U.S. ---, 143 S.Ct. 2298 (2023) as supplemental authority. Alvarado's central issue is who controls a chaplain's conscience, the God of his/her faith, or a government bureaucrat or politician? 303 Creative's answered those questions decisively in favor of freedom of conscience.

The Fourth Circuit ignored the Chaplains' argument 303 Creative's precedent should apply because of Alvarado's controlling issue of conscience.

The Fourth Circuit dismissed the Chaplains' claims as moot with no explanation on August 3, 2023. App A.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. The Fourth Circuit dismissed as moot the Chaplains' appeal of the district court's denial of their preliminary injunction motion and dismissal of their claims that (1) the Secretary lacked authority to issue his Covid-19 vaccine mandate ordering Petitioners take Covid vaccines, and (2) DoD's implementation of the Mandate and retaliation against petitioners for requesting religious accommodations request (RARs) violated numerous constitutional and statutory rights and protections, destroying their careers.

Question. Did the Fourt Circuit abuse its discretion by violating well-established mootness precedent when it ignored (a) the Chaplains' unchallenged evidence that the Secretary's assertion the Armed Services' had remediated their retaliatory career destroying "negative actions" in rescinding his Covid-19 vaccine mandate was not true; (b) major legal questions remained capable of repetition yet evading review; and (c) continuing irreparable harm to petitioner's flowed from the secretary's First and Fifth Amendment violations and remained unaddressed?

2. The district court dismissed the Chaplains' claims of irreparable harm from constitutional and statutory violations for failure "to exhaust available administrative remedies" citing Fourth Circuit precedent adopting the test of Mindes v. Seaman, 453 F.2d 197, 201-02 (5th Cir. 1971), for judicial review of challenges by military personnel to military decisions.

Question. Did the Fourth Circuit abuse its discretion by not reversing the district court's decision because (a) Mindes specifically excused the Chaplains' claims of abuse of authority, failure to follow its own regulations, and "irreparable injury", id. at 199-200; (b) the district court imposed a review restriction not authorized by Congress in the Religious Freedom Restoration Act that was incompatible with its purpose and strict scrutiny; (c) the DoD's administrative remedy for RAR requests ended when the selected authority for final review of denials made its decision; and (d) further delay continued ultra vires actions, irreparable harm and undermined First and Fifth Amendment rights and protections?

3. Chaplains informed the Fourth Circuit that 303 Creative, LLC, v. Elenis,¹⁴³ S. Ct. 2298 (2023), held that individuals controlled their conscience “on matters that are important to the individual” as formed by their faith, not the government.

Question. Did the Fourth Circuit abuse its discretion by rejecting 303 Creative's application to and/or impact on Alvarado's central issue, who controls a chaplain's conscience, the God of his/her faith, or a government bureaucrat, an issue that remains in contention today despite § 533?

Reasons for Granting An extension of Time

Chaplains respectfully request that the time to file a Petition should be extended for 38 days for the following reasons:

1. The above discussion illustrates some of Rule 10's “compelling reasons” for this Court's appropriate review and intervention. The Fourth Circuit has rendered a decision in conflict with this Court and other United States Court of Appeals on the same important matter; and “has so far departed from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings” and “sanctioned such a departure by a lower court, as to call for an exercise of this Court's supervisory power”; and “has decided an important federal question in a way that conflicts with relevant decisions of this Court.” Id.

Alvarado raises serious questions regarding Petitioners’ rights under the First and Fifth Amendments, statutory construction, and important procedural questions involving when lower courts may impose administrative remedies not required by Congress and effective remedies against fraud, deceit, and abuse of authority by the Secretary of Defense. Lower courts have not given these Chaplains’ individual claims of religious retaliation, Establishment and Free Exercise violations the searching inquiry this Court’s precedents require. Gillette v. U.S., 401 U.S. 437, 452 (1971) (“the Establishment Clause forbids subtle departures from neutrality, ‘religious gerrymanders,’ as well as obvious abuses”); Church of Lukumi Babalu Aye v. City of Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 534 (U.S. 1993) (“The Free Exercise Clause protects against governmental hostility which is masked as well as overt”) Walz v. Tax Comm'n of New York City, 397 U.S. 664, 696 (1970) (“The Court must survey meticulously the circumstances of governmental categories to eliminate, as it were, religious gerrymanders”) (Harlan, J., concurring)). The Fourth Circuit ignored unchallenged evidence of religious-based retaliation in violation the First Amendment and Congress’ specific protections for chaplains who follow their conscience.

"The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances." Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 120-121 (1866)). Alvarado raises the question whether that principal expounding the Constitution's Supremacy Clause applies to military chaplains and military personnel. Alvarado provides the perfect vehicle for this Court to definitively affirm that, "[t]he military has not been exempted from constitutional provisions that protect the rights of individuals. It is precisely the role of the courts to determine whether those rights have been violated." Emory v. Sec'y of the Navy, 819 F.2d 291, 294 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (per curiam).

2. The primary reason for asking for delay is counsel's past and current schedule and legal duties have not and will not allow sufficient time to adequately prepare the petition due to unique combinations of new legal issues and demands.

A. Lancaster v. Secretary, (4th Cir. No. 23- 1578) is the Fourth Circuit appeal of the Eastern District of Virginia's decision (1) granting the Navy's motion to dismiss after first granting plaintiff permission to move to amend his complaint under Fed.R.Civ. P. 15(a)(2) and then being notified of Lancaster's death before said motion could be filed; and then, after Lancaster's widow was appointed his executor, (2) denying her Fed.R.Civ. P. 60(b) motion to reopen the case and her Rule 25 motion to substitute herself as plaintiff for the decedent. The briefing dates were extended for four weeks due to the defendant's counsel being out of the country during the original briefing time. The opening brief is now due October 3, in the middle of preparing a petition for Alvarado.

Two other cases have suddenly issued decisions dismissing claims that require Counsel to brief clients on appropriate relief procedures, including a possible motion for reconsideration based on failure to apply the controlling and relevant statute and law. On September 11, 2023, the Court of Federal Claims in Cochran v. The United States, No. 22-1474C, dismissed the plaintiff's claims challenging the Air Force Board of Corrections for Military Records' failure to correct his record and grant promotion as beyond the statute of limitations and denied his request for transfer to a District Court. The decision fails to address the fact plaintiff's claims arise under 10 U.S.C. §§ 1552 ("Review of actions by corrections board") and 1558 ("Review of actions of selection boards: correction of military records by special boards; judicial review") which have their own unique limitations periods and deny judicial review of promotion failure claims until a military corrections board has denied a claim and/or issued a decision. The court's decision meets RCFC 59(e) criteria for reconsideration but has a 28 day time limit for such a motion.

On August 23, 2023, the D.C. District Court issued a summary judgment in In Re Navy Chaplaincy, 07-mc-269, ECF No. 382, denying equitable tolling applied to 17 chaplain plaintiffs' challenges to specific Navy Chaplain Corps' promotion policies. The original summary judgment motion was filed May 24, 2021; briefing was complete in October 2021. The analysis of the District Court's decision in the context of each chaplain's claims to determine whether an appeal is appropriate cannot begin until the Lancaster Appeal is filed.

B. Counsel has other legal duties and obligations he cannot ignore, e.g., executive director for an association of chaplain endorsers. This includes scheduling and attending medical appointments to address medical issues affecting his wife.

3. Counsel believes he has medical issues arising from his COVID vaccine that have at times impaired his ability to timely address the above legal issues. He regularly gets fatigued, something that did not happen before COVID vaccination, requiring a nap. This is part of something being called “Long COVID.” See <https://www.hopkinsmedicine.org/health/conditions-and-diseases/coronavirus/covid-long-haulers-long-term-effects-of-covid19>;

<https://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2022/02/19/science/long-covid-causes.html>

The 38 day extension will allow counsel to meet these competing issues and properly prepare the petition.

4. Respondents suffer no prejudice with the grant of a 38 day extension.

CONCLUSION

A 38 day extension will resolve the unusual flood of legal and other issues described above that limited Counsel’s ability to prepare a petition. It is in the interest of justice to grant this petition. Petitioners respectfully request the time to file a Petition for a Writ of Certiorari in this matter be extended 38 days, up to and including December 8, 2023.

ORDER

Plaintiffs have moved for a Preliminary Injunction (the “Motion”)¹ [Doc. No. 59] to enjoin Defendants, executive branch officials, from enforcing the military’s vaccine directive or taking any adverse action against Plaintiffs, a proposed class of military chaplains, on the basis of any Plaintiff’s refusal to vaccinate against COVID-19. After full briefing, on September 28, 2022 the Court held a hearing on the Motion. After the hearing, Plaintiffs Moved for Leave to File Supplemental Evidence [Doc. No. 74], which the Court granted [Doc. No. 77]. That supplemental evidence was further briefed [Doc. Nos. 80, 81]. After full consideration of the briefings and arguments, for the following reasons, the Motion is DENIED and the Complaint DISMISSED sua sponte for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction based on non-justiciability.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Parties

Plaintiffs are forty-two² active duty and reserve military chaplains seeking to represent a purported class of more than 100 chaplains in opposition to the COVID-19 vaccine directive (the “Directive”) issued by Department of Defense (“DoD”) Secretary Lloyd Austin, III. In addition to Secretary Austin, Plaintiffs name the Secretary of the Navy, Secretary of the Army, Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”), Acting Commissioner of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (“FDA”), and Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (“CDC”), all in their official capacities. Plaintiffs allege the Directive and its subsequent implementation and enforcement, along with a CDC definitional change, have triggered statutory and constitutional violations. Consequently, Plaintiffs seek to preliminarily enjoin the Directive and secure other injunctive remedies for the alleged violations.

B. Impact of COVID-19 on the Armed Forces

Amid a global pandemic that has killed more than a million Americans, the Department of Defense (“DoD”) implemented policies that it claims were based on senior military leaders’ judgment related to force readiness and aimed at “reducing the risk of infections, hospitalizations, and deaths among service members.” Opp. 1-2. More than 400,000 servicemembers have contracted COVID-19 and ninety-six have died. Id. at 2. Of those who died, only two were fully vaccinated. Id. And while no active duty servicemembers have died from COVID-19 since late last year,³ Mem. 6, serious illness, outbreaks, and/or long-haul COVID adversely affect military operations, Opp. 2.

² The Complaint originally named thirty-one Plaintiffs. Compl. ¶¶ 28 - 58. Eleven additional chaplains were later joined as Plaintiffs under Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(a). [Doc. No. 68].

³ It is worth noting that the last death occurred not long after the Directive was issued.

C. The Directive, Implementation, and Objections

After previewing an upcoming COVID-19 vaccine requirement two weeks prior, on August 24, 2021, the day after the FDA granted final approval of the Pfizer vaccine, Secretary Austin issued the Directive to require full vaccination against COVID-19 for all members of the armed forces.⁴ Opp. 3. Following the Directive, the Army, Navy, and Air Force issued implementation guidance and set vaccination deadlines. Id. The guidance established exemptions for medical,⁵ administrative,⁶ and religious purposes. Id. at 4. A servicemember's application for a religious exemption is called a Religious Accommodation Request ("RAR").

While exact procedures vary, each service branch has a process for RARs that includes (a) an appeals process; (b) input from another chaplain, medical professional, the requesting service member, and the commanding officer; and (c) review by a senior military leader. Id. Some RARs have been approved,⁷ id. at 4, but Plaintiffs assert that the few approved RARs are limited to servicemembers "already programed for retirement or separation," Mem. 10.

When active duty servicemembers refuse vaccination and have not been granted an exemption, administrative discharge proceedings are initiated.⁸ Opp. 5. While procedures vary by department, in the Navy, Marine Corp, and Air Force, such proceedings take a minimum of several

⁷ As reflected in the citations in Defendants' brief, as of July 7, 2022, there have been 7,701 RARs for the Active Army, Army National Guard, and Army Reserve, and 19 have been granted. Id. For the Navy, as of August 24, 2022, there have been 4,251 RARs for the Active Duty and Reserve members, and 47 have been granted. Id. Air Force numbers are not discernible because RARs are considered a subset of administrative exemptions, and only total administrative exemptions are reported. Id.

⁸ As represented by the parties, such proceedings are presently "largely enjoined" for the Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps. Id. at 5.

months to complete and do not necessarily conclude with termination. Id. However, where they do end with termination, an Honorable or General (under honorable conditions) Discharge is issued. Id. And even after discharge, additional remedies are available. Id. In the Air Force, prior to a possible discharge, servicemembers out of compliance and without an exemption are placed in a no pay/no points status and involuntarily reassigned to the Individual Ready Reserve.⁹ Id. at 6. In the Army, no guidance regarding a discharge process has yet been issued, though DoD does not provide funding for pay for unvaccinated Army National Guard or Reserve members who do not have an approved or pending exemption request. Id. at 5. Additionally, Army National Guard and Reserve troops in this category are not permitted to participate in drills, training, or other duties. Id. at 5-6.

With respect to the Directive, Plaintiffs lodge personal objections to the vaccine on a variety of religious and secular grounds, none of which require, given the basis for the Court's ruling discussed below, that the Court assess the military, religious, ethical or scientific basis for those objections.

D. Religious Accommodation Requests and Alleged "No Accommodation Policy"

Plaintiffs allege that DoD established a "No Accommodation Policy," or "Categorical RA Ban." Mem. 9. They largely base their allegations on information and belief and their own declarations, along with a two-page memorandum purportedly from DoD's Acting Inspector General and the declaration of a Navy servicemember who is not a plaintiff in this case. Id.; Compl. ¶¶ 97-101; Mem. 9-11 & n.19; Mem. Ex. 9; see generally Mot. for Leave to File Supp. Evid. [Doc. No. 74]; Reply to Def. Resp. to Mot. for Leave to File Supp. Evid. [Doc. No. 81]. Plaintiffs further argue that because the language in denial letters is similar and because only senior military officials serve as the final adjudicatory authority, RAR results are predetermined. Mem. 9-10. Defendants deny the existence of a wholesale RAR rejection policy and assert that RARs are individually considered. Opp. 18.

E. Alleged Harm to Unvaccinated Chaplains for Refusing to Vaccinate

Plaintiffs allege that because they refuse to comply with the Directive, they have been denied promotion, schooling, training, and assignments. Mem. 10. Further, they allege First Amendment violations and other harms on account of their exclusion from the RAR process,¹⁰ compelled speech, hostile work environment, ostracization/isolation/stigmatization, futility of the RAR process, retaliation, and censorship/self-censorship. Id. at 10-11, Ex. 11. Plaintiffs also allege they were “coerce[d] and coopt[ed] [] to be complicit in these constitutional violations” by allegedly receiving scripts to recite “government-endorsed positions” when counseling other servicemembers on religious objections to the vaccine. Id. at 11. Plaintiffs also assert a variety of adverse employment or disciplinary consequences that either have or could result from their refusal to comply with the Directive. Id. at 12. In total, Plaintiffs assert nine causes of action based on alleged violations of statutory and constitutional provisions.¹¹

F. Treatment by Other Courts

As compared to similar cases where servicemembers (though not chaplains) have sought preliminary injunctive relief related to the Directive, the vast majority of courts as of the Parties’

¹⁰ Presumably, Plaintiffs refer to their exclusion from the RAR process to mean their exclusion from being permitted to be the consulting chaplain on other servicemembers RARs, not from their exclusion in the process for their own RARs.

¹¹ Plaintiffs assert the following causes of action:

- Counts I and II: National Defense Authorization Act § 533
- Count III: Religious Freedom Restoration Act
- Count IV: Article VI and Establishment Clause
- Count V: Free Exercise Clause
- Count VI: Free Speech and Right to Petition Clauses
- Count VII: Fifth Amendment Due Process
- Count VIII: Administrative Procedure Act
- Count IX: Separation of Powers

briefing have denied preliminary relief (or dismissed the claims),¹² while significantly fewer have preliminarily enjoined either the vaccine requirement or the military from taking any adverse actions against those plaintiffs. Opp. 8-9. There have been no such cases within the Fourth Circuit. Id. And while no case has reached the Supreme Court for full consideration, the Supreme Court, as discussed below, has stayed one district court's issuance of a preliminary injunction that would have precluded the Navy from considering "vaccination status in making deployment, assignment, and other operational decisions." Austin v. U.S. Navy Seals 1-26, 142 S. Ct. 1301, 1301 (2022).

II. LEGAL PRINCIPLES

Plaintiffs seek a preliminary injunction, which the Supreme Court has described as "an extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right." Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24 (2008). Preliminary injunctions are "very far-reaching power[s] to be granted only sparingly and in limited circumstances." MicroStrategy Inc. v. Motorola, 245 F.3d 335, 339 (4th Cir. 2001) (quoting Direx Israel, Ltd. V. Breakthrough Med. Corp., 952 F.2d 802, 816 (4th Cir. 1991)). To obtain relief, a plaintiff must show all four of the following factors: "[1] he is likely to succeed on the merits, [2] that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, [3] that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and [4] that an injunction is in the public interest."

¹² See, e.g., Miller v. Austin, No. 22-cv-118, 2022 WL 3584666, at *1-2 (D. Wyo. Aug. 22, 2022) (denying preliminary injunction for lack of standing); Abbott v. Biden, No. 6:22-3, 2022 WL 2287547, at *6 (E.D. Tex. June 24, 2022) (denying preliminary injunction because of, inter alia, deference afforded to the military); Knick v. Austin, No. 22-1267, 2022 WL 2157066, at *1 (D.D.C. June 15, 2022) (denying preliminary injunction and declining "to meddle prematurely in the military's decision-making regarding personnel readiness"); Creaghan v. Austin, No. 22-981, 2022 WL 1500544, at *1, 6 (D.D.C. May 12, 2022) (denying preliminary injunction and noting "military and scientific justiciability concerns"); Navy Seal I v. Austin, No. 22-688, 2022 WL 1294486, at *1, 6 (D.D.C. Apr. 29, 2022) (denying preliminary injunction and expressing concerns that the claims "may be nonjusticiable"); Short v. Berger, No. cv-22-444, 2022 WL 1203876, at *16 (D. Ariz. Apr. 22, 2022) (denying preliminary injunction and noting "serious questions as to justiciability"); Vance v. Wormuth, No. 3:21-cv-730, 2022 WL 1094665, at *7 (W.D. Ky. Apr. 12, 2022) (granting a motion to dismiss for want of subject-matter jurisdiction); Roberts v. Roth, No. 21-1797, 2022 WL 834148, at *1 (D.D.C. Mar. 21, 2022) (dismissing the case for want of subject-matter jurisdiction); Short v. Berger, No. cv-22-1151, 2022 WL 1051852, at *6 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 3, 2022) (applying the Mindes test and denying preliminary injunction on justiciability grounds); Robert v. Austin, No. 21-cv-2228, 2022 WL 103374, at *3 (D. Colo. Jan. 11, 2022) (denying preliminary injunction and dismissing the case for want of subject-matter jurisdiction); Church v. Biden, 573 F. Supp. 3d 118, 137-38 (D.D.C. 2021) (finding servicemembers' claims to be non-justiciable).

Winter, 555 U.S. at 20. The first two factors are most important. Maryland Undercoating Co. v. Payne, 603 F.2d 477, 482 n.12 (4th Cir. 1979); see also Blackwelder Furniture Co. of Statesville, Inc. v. Seilig Mfg. Co., 550 F.2d 189, 195 (4th Cir. 1977) (finding that if irreparable injury is only “possible,” then the probability of success can be the decisive inquiry). The party moving for the preliminary injunction carries the burden of establishing each factor by a “clear showing.” Hardnett v. M&T Bank, 204 F. Supp. 3d 851, 862 (E.D. Va. 2016) (quoting in part Winter, 555 U.S. at 22).

Traditionally, the Supreme Court has afforded deference to the military over military decisions, free from judicial interference. See Gilligan v. Morgan, 413 U.S. 1, 10 (1973) (“The complex[,] subtle, and professional decisions as to the composition, training, equipping, and control of a military force are essentially professional judgments”) and Goldman v. Weinberger, 475 U.S. 503, 507 (1986) (“[W]hen evaluating whether military needs justify a particular restriction on religiously motivated conduct, courts must give great deference to the professional judgment of military authorities”); see also Solorio v. United States, 483 U.S. 435, 448 (1987) (“[W]e have adhered to [the] principle of deference in a variety of contexts where . . . the constitutional rights of servicemen were implicated); Schlesinger v. Ballard, 419 U.S. 498, 510 (1975) (“It is the primary business of armies and navies to fight or be ready to fight wars should the occasion arise . . . [and] [t]he responsibility for determining how best our Armed Forces shall attend to that business rests” outside the judiciary) (quoting in part U.S. ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, 350 U.S. 11, 17 (1955)).

III. ANALYSIS

Plaintiffs' likelihood of success on the merits necessarily requires an evaluation into whether the Court can exercise its jurisdiction. Accordingly, the Court must first evaluate the likelihood that Plaintiffs' claims are justiciable. Defendants argue Plaintiffs' claims are non-justiciable because they (1) amount to a review of military assignment and operational decisions, (2) fail to exhaust administrative remedies,¹³ and (3) do not satisfy the four-factor test articulated in Mindes v. Seaman, 453 F.2d 197 (5th Cir. 1971) (the "Mindes test").

A. Review of Military Assignment and Operational Decisions

Plaintiffs seek injunctive relief to enjoin (1) the Directive's implementation, (2) Defendants' purported retaliation, (3) any punitive or administrative action from being taken against Plaintiffs, and (4) compliance with various statutory and constitutional provisions. Mot. 1. But such injunctive relief clearly raises the specter of a non-justiciable, improper intrusion into military affairs. See Winter, 555 U.S. at 24 (reversing the district court's grant of a preliminary injunction because, inter alia, the "complex[,] subtle, and professional decisions as to the composition, training, equipping, and control of a military force [] are essentially professional military judgments") (citation and quotations omitted); see also Gilligan, 413 U.S. at 10 ("[I]t is difficult to conceive of an area of governmental activity in which the courts have less competence [than] . . . professional military judgments."); Orloff v. Willoughby, 345 U.S. 83, 93 (1953) ("[J]udges are not given the task of running the Army."); Harkness v. Sec'y of the Navy, 858 F.3d 437, 443 (6th Cir. 2017) ("[C]ourts are generally reluctant to review claims involving military duty assignments

. . . [due to] lack of expertise, deference to the unique role of the military in our constitutional structure, and the practical difficulties that would arise if every military duty assignment was open to judicial review.”) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Critically, in a recent military vaccine case the Supreme Court has stayed a district court’s order “preclud[ing] the Navy from considering respondents’ vaccination status in making deployment, assignment, and other operational decisions.” U.S. Navy Seals 1-26, 142 S. Ct. at 1302. In that case, Justice Kavanaugh’s concurrence pointedly noted that “the President of the United States, not any federal judge, is the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces” and that there was no basis to “employ[] the judicial power in a manner that military commanders believe would impair the military.” Id. at 1302 (Kavanaugh, J. concurring).

Plaintiffs argue their claims are justiciable by first citing Winters v. United States, 89 S. Ct. 57 (1968) (Douglas, J., in chambers), a decision on an application for a stay that noted it was within the province of the judiciary to ensure men and women in the military are treated equally under the law and in ways that “do not turn on the charity of a military commander.” Winters, 89 S. Ct. at 59-60 (Douglas, J., in chambers). But the ultimate holding in Winters is based on facts that are distinguishable from this case. In Winters, the Court’s rationale was to prevent men and women from being treated differently by different superiors within the military. Id. By contrast, Plaintiffs here challenge what they purport to be the practice of the entire military (i.e., the alleged No Accommodation Policy). Additionally, Winters is distinguishable in that it involves a reservist attempting to evade active-duty call-up to Vietnam, id. at 57, whereas this case involves servicemembers’ attempt to remain and advance in the military.

Specifically with respect to the RFRA claim, Plaintiffs also argue those claims are justiciable because the statute permits the assertion of a violation “as a claim or defense in a judicial proceeding and [to] obtain appropriate relief against the government,” thereby making such claims justiciable. Mem. 18 (citing 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1(c)). But while RFRA claims may be justiciable in certain military contexts, see Singh v. McHugh, 185 F. Supp. 3d 201, 218 (D.D.C. 2016) (finding RFRA applies to the military), the Mindes test raises the justiciability bar considerably and for the foregoing reasons, weighs heavily against the likelihood of success of Plaintiffs’ claims in this specific case.¹⁴

Ultimately, given the threat that COVID-19 poses to, inter alia, military readiness and operations, the Court finds persuasive and analogous the line of cases affording significant leeway to military leaders for these types of military judgments. Accordingly, Winter v. NRDC and its progenitors, along with Justice Kavanaugh’s recent concurrence in a similar case, counsel that Plaintiffs’ claims, with the possible exception of Count III, are non-justiciable military judgments, even before confronting the Mindes test. However, notwithstanding the Court’s finding that apart from potentially Count III, Plaintiffs have, at a minimum, failed at the outset to clearly show that all their claims are justiciable, the Court will further consider justiciability issues by next applying the second Mindes threshold requirement of exhaustion.

B. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

Separately, to succeed on their claims, Plaintiffs must exhaust their available remedies within the armed forces. See Parisi v. Davidson, 405 U.S. 34, 37 (1972) (describing the exhaustion doctrine as allowing “an administrative agency to perform functions within its special competence

[E]ven accepting that RFRA applies in this particular military context, RFRA does not justify judicial intrusion into military affairs in this case. That is because the Navy has an extraordinarily compelling interest in maintaining strategic and operational control over the assignment and deployment of all Special Warfare personnel—including control over decisions about military readiness. And no less restrictive means would satisfy that interest in this context.

U.S. Navy Seals 1-26, 142 S. Ct. at 1302 (Kavanaugh, J., concurring). Plaintiffs do point to the minority of related military vaccine cases that found similar claims justiciable, which the Court finds unpersuasive.

. . . to moot judicial controversies”); Williams v. Wilson, 762 F.2d 357, 359-60 (4th Cir. 1985) (holding that under Mindes, courts “should not review internal military affairs” absent “exhaustion of available intraservice corrective measures”). That Plaintiffs allege constitutional and statutory claims against the military do not obviate Plaintiffs’ obligation to exhaust the military’s intraservice corrective measures prior to filing suit. See Mindes, 453 F.2d at 201.

Defendants argue that (1) no Plaintiff has yet faced separation proceedings, and (2) even if they do and receive a final separation order, they can pursue corrections to their military record and/or reinstatement through existing processes. Opp. 16. Plaintiffs argue that such relief is futile because it could be overridden by the Service Secretaries and would not declare Defendants’ actions as unlawful and therefore available avenues of relief are imperfect remedies that need not be exhausted. Mem. 21. However, Plaintiffs only assume, but have not demonstrated, futility. Moreover, that Plaintiffs seek relief that may extend outside of the scope of the administrative review process does not vitiate the exhaustion requirement. See Guerra v. Scruggs, 942 F. 2d 270, 277 (4th Cir. 1991) (“[T]he inability of the [correction] board to give the plaintiff all the relief he seeks does not automatically excuse the failure to exhaust.”). Defendants represent, including through declarations of non-Defendant military leaders, that Plaintiffs’ unexhausted administrative remedies are not futile formalities and would be determined on an individualized basis. Opp. 18.

Plaintiffs contend they have exhausted military remedies because they have each submitted an RAR. Reply 9. But it is undisputed that some Plaintiffs are still awaiting an initial decision on their RARs while others await their appeals. The Court rejects the notion that a mere pre-decision submission of an RAR, or even an RAR appeal submission can constitute exhaustion, even if the RAR approval rate is low. And Plaintiffs’ position runs contrary to the definition of “exhaustion,” which means the “pursuit of options until none remain.” Exhaustion, Black’s Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019). Further, not only are there outstanding intraservice remedies available to all Plaintiffs, but no Plaintiff has actually gone through separation proceedings, a fact which further forecloses a finding of exhaustion. And it is those final separation proceedings that are of particular consequence. Absent a separation proceeding and final decision, the Court cannot find that Plaintiffs have exhausted their intraservice remedies. And while district courts have admittedly reached different conclusions with respect to the exhaustion requirement as applied in similar cases, the Court finds persuasive the reasonings of those courts that have found servicemembers to have failed the exhaustion requirement. See, e.g., Short, 2022 WL 1051852, at *4 (finding plaintiff's claims to be non-justiciable, in part because the plaintiff, whose appeal was denied but had not yet undergone separation proceedings, had "not yet exhausted administrative remedies" and that such remedies could not be categorized as futile).

The Court also finds unavailing Plaintiffs' argument that the futility exception to the exhaustion doctrine applies because (1) some RARs have been granted, and (2) no Plaintiff has fully exhausted available remedies, including by pleading their case in an administrative discharge proceeding; thus, it is premature to say that such remedies are futile.¹⁵ See id. (rejecting a servicemember's futility argument because the approval rate was "not zero" and the plaintiff's evidence focused on the results of the RAR and RAR appeal process, not the results of separation proceedings, which would be the decisive inquiry to determine futility).¹⁶

¹⁵ The Court has reviewed and considered all of the evidence, including the supplemental evidence that Plaintiffs submitted and the related briefing by the Parties. The Court affords little to no weight to the purported Info Memo from the Acting Inspector General. Not only does the short, two-page document fail to identify with sufficient specificity its evaluation methods, criteria, and sample size, but it is both preliminary in nature (i.e., it only discusses "potential noncompliance") and contradicts the more concrete evidence that Defendants have presented. See, e.g., declarations identified infra n. 17-21. Nevertheless, the Court is permitted to evaluate the justiciability of a claim based on the evidence before it, even in the early stages of litigation; see Lovern v. Edwards, 190 F.3d 648, 654 (4th Cir. 1999) ("[T]he absence of jurisdiction may be raised at any time during the case, and may be based on the court's review of the evidence."); and the Court has considered it. See also Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 514 (2006) ("[I]n some instances, if subject-matter jurisdiction turns on contested facts, the trial judge may be authorized to review the evidence and resolve the dispute on her own.").

¹⁶ Other courts to address the futility argument are split.

Plaintiffs also argue that RFRA has no exhaustion requirement. Reply 9. But the cases to which Plaintiffs cite are either (a) those minority of federal courts that have granted preliminary injunctions in the military vaccine context; or (b) distinguishable as Plaintiffs' cited case, Stuart Circle Parish v. Bd. of Zoning Appeals, 946 F. Supp. 1225, 1234 (E.D. Va. 1996), was a civilian case about whether a church was required under RFRA to seek an accommodation prior to challenging a binding local law. Overall, Plaintiffs fail to address those military vaccine cases that find servicemembers' claims (including under RFRA) to be non-justiciable, in part on exhaustion grounds. See, e.g., Church, 573 F. Supp. 3d at 137-38; Short, 2022 WL 1051852, at *3-4. In any event, even assuming arguendo that no statutory exhaustion requirement is per se imposed on the RFRA claim, the jurisprudential exhaustion requirement imposed under Mindes, as adopted by the Fourth Circuit, still controls. Cf. Williams, 762 F.2d at 360 (noting "the second Mindes threshold requirement of exhaustion of available intraservice remedies").

Based on the First Amendment, Plaintiffs also argue that under Cooksey v. Futrell, 721 F.3d 226 (4th Cir. 2013), exhaustion is not required when the government has "manifested its views" that a policy has been violated. Reply 9. But that is simply not the case here. Indeed, the policy at play in this case is that failure to vaccinate violates the Directive unless a servicemember has an approved exemption. Defendants have demonstrated through working files and declarations from non-Defendant leaders in the Army,¹⁷ Navy,¹⁸ Marines,¹⁹ Coast Guard,²⁰ and Air Force²¹ that no wholesale denial policy exists and that individualized considerations are given to each RAR and appeal. On the evidence before the Court, it cannot be said that a top-down, universal policy exists that holds all servicemembers who seek RARs are in violation of the Directive on the sole basis that they seek a religious exemption. Indeed, Plaintiffs are specifically not in violation while pursuing an exemption. [Doc. No. 82] at 35:10-11. In other words, Plaintiffs are not in violation of the policy during the pendency of their RAR and/or RAR appeal, and if an RAR is granted (either in the first instance or after pursuing the intraservice appeal/remedy process) then there would be no violation for failing to vaccinate. This makes Cooksey inapposite.²²

Ultimately, Plaintiffs' failure to clearly show that they exhausted their intraservice remedies alone precludes the Court from granting a preliminary injunction. However, for the sake of completeness and given the split among those courts that have evaluated the validity of Plaintiffs' futility argument, the Court will apply the Mindes test.

²² Moreover, the cases that Plaintiffs cite in footnote 11 of their Reply are distinguishable as they fail to address the exhaustion doctrine as applied in Mindes and relate, respectively in the order they are cited, to a facial challenge to land use regulations, exhaustion under North Carolina law as it applies to civilian challenges on constitutional grounds to state statutes, and exhaustion of state administrative remedies in § 1983 actions.

C. Mindes Test

In Williams v. Wilson, the Fourth Circuit adopted the test set forth in Mindes v. Seaman for determining the reviewability by federal courts of actions by military authorities. See Williams, 762 F.2d at 360; see also Roe v. Dep't of Def., 947 F.3d 207, 217-18 (4th Cir. 2010) (noting the Mindes test continues to be binding in the Fourth Circuit). The Mindes test requires district courts to weigh four considerations “in light of the general policy of nonreview of military matters.” Williams, 762 F.2d at 359. The four factors are:

- (1) the nature and strength of the plaintiff's challenge to the military determination;
- (2) the potential injury to the plaintiff if review is refused;
- (3) the type and degree of anticipated interference with the military function;
- (4) the extent to which the exercise of military expertise or discretion is involved.

Id.

The parties agree that the Mindes test applies, but differ in their views concerning its application. First, as to the nature and strength of their challenge, Plaintiffs cite six cases where preliminary injunctions were granted in military vaccine cases to argue the strength of their case.²³ Mem. 7 & n.8. Second, as to injury, Plaintiffs claim a presumption that they will be irreparably harmed, and further state that loss of careers and career-related responsibilities, benefits, outside employment opportunities, and family disruptions constitute a serious injury. Mem. 22. Defendants counter that because Plaintiffs have not yet been formally disciplined or separated, any injuries are “wholly speculative.” Opp. 20. Third, Plaintiffs claim neither (a) requiring DoD to follow existing policies nor (b) Plaintiffs' refusal to vaccinate, particularly given that other servicemembers remain unvaccinated due to medical exemptions, interferes with military functions. Mem. 23. Fourth, Plaintiffs contend adjudication of constitutional issues do not require military expertise, and that review of the military's alleged failure to follow its own policies is not discretionary. Mem. 23. Defendants lump the third and fourth Mindes factors together, arguing that judicial resolution would improperly “scrutinize military determinations regarding the health and safety of service members and overall force readiness.” Opp. 20.

On balance, each of the four Mindes factors weigh against judicial intervention. First, upon careful review of each of Plaintiffs’ causes of action, the briefing in support thereof and in opposition thereto, and a review similar cases, the Court finds Plaintiffs’ claims are not strong and are unlikely to succeed. Second, Plaintiffs’ injuries are either not yet realized or redressable. Third, and most importantly, Defendants assert, and the Court places great weight in their expert military judgment, that injunctive relief would significantly interfere with military operations as it pertains to troop health and combat readiness. See U.S. Navy Seals 1-26, 142 S. Ct. at 1302 (Kavanaugh, J., concurring) (finding no basis in a military vaccine case “for employing the judicial power in a manner that military commanders believe would impair the military”). Fourth, significant military expertise and discretion was necessary in crafting DoD’s response to the pandemic given the unique training, mobilization, and health needs and dynamics associated with America’s Armed Forces. Id. (citing a Navy Admiral’s declaration). Therefore, the Mindes factors counsel against justiciability.

For the aforementioned reasons, Plaintiffs’ Motion for a Preliminary Injunctions is DENIED because Plaintiffs have failed to make a “clear showing” that their claims are likely justiciable; therefore, the claims cannot be likely to succeed. In light of this finding, the Court need not consider the likelihood of success on the merits of each particular cause of action, except to the extent it already has in evaluating the RFRA claim, supra n.15, and the strength of Plaintiffs’ claims overall under the first Mindes factor. Cf. Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83, 96 (1942) (“federal courts will not give advisory opinions”) (quoting C. Wright, Federal Courts 34 (1963)).

IV. Sua Sponte Dismissal

More than 200 years ago, Chief Justice John Marshall laid the groundwork for the justiciability doctrine, proclaiming that “[q]uestions . . . which are, by the constitution and laws, submitted to the executive, can never be made in this court.” Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 170 (1803). One hundred and fifty years later, the Supreme Court applied this principle to hold that “judges are not given the task of running the Army,” and that military decision-making “rests upon the Congress and upon the President of the United States and his subordinates.” Orloff, 345 U.S. at 93-94. Congress has not enacted legislation related to a COVID-19 vaccination requirement in the military.²⁴ However, the President, through his subordinates, has acted and implemented the Directive.

Accordingly, and for the reasons articulated in Section III, supra, not only are Plaintiffs’ claims unlikely to succeed for want of justiciability, they are, in fact, non-justiciable. The Court therefore lacks subject-matter jurisdiction and this action must be dismissed. Cf. Hamilton v. Pallozzi, 848 F.3d 614, 619 (4th Cir. 2017) (“Justiciability is an issue of subject-matter jurisdiction, and we have an independent obligation to evaluate our ability to hear a case before reaching the merits.”). The Court makes this finding after Plaintiffs had ample opportunity to (and did) address justiciability, including (1) having fully briefed this issue in their memorandum accompanying their Motion, see Mem. 18-24; (2) having responded to Defendants’ arguments in writing, see Reply 5-11; and (3) having had the opportunity to argue justiciability at the September 28 hearing, see [Doc. No. 82] at 4:7-9 (Plaintiffs’ counsel noting “[m]y cocounsel will be handling justiciability, the Mindes application”). See Robertson v. Anderson Mill Elementary Sch., 989 F.3d 282, 291 (4th Cir. 2021) (stating district courts may “exercise their authority to sua sponte dismiss inadequate complaints if the procedure employed is fair to the parties” and plaintiffs are “afforded notice and an opportunity to amend the complaint or otherwise respond”) (citations and quotations omitted).²⁵

In light of the Court’s finding of non-justiciability, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(h)(3) demands that “[i]f the court determines at any time that it lacks subject-matter jurisdiction, the court must dismiss the action.” In this Circuit, “a federal court is obligated to dismiss a case whenever it appears the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction.” Lovern v. Edwards, 190 F.3d 648, 654 (4th Cir. 1999); see also Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 514 (2006) (“[C]ourts . . . have an independent obligation to determine whether subject-matter jurisdiction exists, even in the absence of a challenge from any party [W]hen a federal court concludes that it lacks subject-matter jurisdiction, the court must dismiss the complaint in its entirety.”); Brickwood Contractors, Inc. v. Datanet Eng’g, 369 F.3d 385, 390 (4th Cir. 2004) (“[Q]uestions of subject matter jurisdiction may be raised at any point during the proceedings and may (or, more precisely, must) be raised sua sponte by the court.”); Thompson v. Gillen, 491 F. Supp. 24, 26 (E.D. Va. 1980) (remanding a case and noting that though no motion was filed, “courts of limited jurisdiction, such as this Court, have the duty, sua sponte, to determine in each case their jurisdiction to proceed”).

The Court having found that Plaintiffs’ claims are non-justiciable, and Plaintiffs having received notice of the justiciability issue through a fair procedure and then addressing it on three separate occasions, the Complaint is DISMISSED sua sponte.

²⁵ The Court recognizes that in some circumstances an evidentiary hearing must be held prior to dismissing a case for want of jurisdiction. See Lovern, 190 F.3d at 654. However, here, the Court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction because Plaintiffs’ claims are non-justiciable based on the undisputed fact that, inter alia, Plaintiffs are servicemembers suing executive branch officials over a military policy based on the military’s professional judgment. In other words, unlike in Lovern, jurisdictional facts are not “intertwined with the merits of the dispute[.]” Id. at 654, and dismissal at this stage promotes the efficiency the Fourth Circuit endorsed in Lovern when it disposed of the case early in the litigation. Id.

V. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, it is hereby

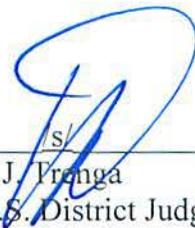

ORDERED Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction [Doc. No. 59] be, and the same hereby is, DENIED; and it is further

ORDERED that the above-captioned matter be, and the same hereby is, DISMISSED for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction; and it is further ORDERED that Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification [Doc. No. 71] be, and the same hereby is, DENIED as moot.

The Clerk is directed to enter judgment in favor of Defendants pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 58 and forward copies of this Order to all counsel of record.

Case No. 1:22-cv-876 (AJT/JFA)

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs have filed a Motion for Reconsideration (the “Motion”), [Doc. No. 88], with respect to the Court’s dismissal of this action on November 23, 2022. For the following reasons, the Motion is DENIED.

I. BACKGROUND

This action stems from a Complaint by military chaplains surrounding the military’s COVID-19 Vaccine Mandate (the “Mandate”). The Court has previously summarized the Mandate and relevant issues, see [Doc. No. 86] at 2-6, and in response to Plaintiffs’ Motion for a Preliminary Injunction, [Doc. No. 59], issued an Order on November 23, 2022, denying that motion and sua sponte dismissing the case for want of subject-matter jurisdiction, [Doc. No. 86] (the “Order”).

After the Court’s Order, the James M. Inhofe National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2023 (“2023 NDAA”) was enacted. [Doc. No. 90-1] at 1, 6.¹ Contained within the 2023 NDAA was an express provision, Section 525, requiring the Department of Defense to rescind the Mandate. [Doc. No. 94] at 5. On January 10, 2023, Secretary of Defense Lloyd Austin issued a memorandum rescinding the Mandate (the “Rescission Memo”), ordering that the military update records to remove adverse actions based on prior refusals to vaccinate, and outlining recourse for any servicemembers administratively discharged. [Doc. No. 94-1]. The Secretary also directed that further guidance be issued to ensure uniform implementation of the Rescission Memo. Id.

On December 17, 2022, Plaintiffs filed the Motion under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59(e), seeking reconsideration of the Court’s Order on the grounds that (1) the 2023 NDAA amounted to a change in controlling law; (2) the Court made clear errors of law in dismissing this action; and (3) new evidence emerged and is now available to the Court.² [Doc. No. 90-1] at 1.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59(e) permits a party to file a motion to alter or amend a judgment within 28 days after judgment is entered. The Fourth Circuit provides three grounds for reconsideration: “(1) to accommodate an intervening change in controlling law; (2) to account for new evidence not available at trial; or (3) to correct a clear error of law or prevent manifest injustice.” Hutchinson v. Staton, 994 F.2d 1076, 1081 (4th Cir. 1993). However, “reconsideration of a judgment after its entry is an extraordinary remedy which should be used sparingly,” Pacific Ins. Co. v. Am. Nat. Fire Ins. Co., 148 F.3d 396, 403 (4th Cir. 1998) (quotation and citation omitted), and is “not intended to allow for reargument of the very issues that the court has previously decided,” DeLong v. Thompson, 790 F. Supp. 594, 618 (E.D. Va. 1991).

² As discussed, infra Sec. III(C), the “new evidence” that Plaintiffs rely on is a statement that Government counsel made in a hearing before the Sixth Circuit, which Plaintiffs did not discover until after the Motion for Preliminary Injunction in this action was adjudicated. [Doc. No. 90-1] at 26-27.

III. ANALYSIS

For the reasons stated below, reconsideration is not warranted in this case because (a) the 2023 NDAA is not a change in law that affects the basis for the Court’s Order and the 2023 NDAA would have resulted in the same sua sponte dismissal of this action, had it been in effect when the Court ruled on the preliminary injunction motion; (b) even if the purported “new evidence” was new, it is not material, and (c) there are neither clear errors of law that need to be corrected nor manifest injustice to be prevented.

A. Enactment of 2023 NDAA

Plaintiffs argue the 2023 NDAA “eliminates entirely the legal basis” for the Mandate and “conclusively demonstrates that Secretary Austin sought and did usurp major policy decisions properly made by Congress.” [Doc. No. 90-1] at 7-6 (internal citation and quotation omitted). But Plaintiffs mischaracterize Section 525, which provides:

Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall rescind the mandate that members of the Armed Forces be vaccinated against COVID-19 pursuant to the memorandum dated August 24, 2021, regarding “Mandatory Coronavirus Disease 2019 Vaccination of Department of Defense Service Members.”

[Doc. No. 94] at 5. The 2023 NDAA does not address the legality of the Mandate or otherwise speak to whether Defendants acted outside of their authority by issuing and implementing the Mandate prior to the enactment of Section 525. Rather, Congress simply exercised its authority to make a post-Mandate policy decision with respect to the military. That Congress acted in such a fashion does not in and of itself suggest the Mandate was unlawful or that the Court erred in its legal analysis based on the then-existing facts and law.

Plaintiffs further contend that Section 525 “eliminates” a central premise to the Court’s sua sponte dismissal.³ [Doc. No. 90-1] at 7. But again, the enactment of the 2023 NDAA did not establish or in any way suggest that the Court erred in concluding that decisions such as whether to require that troops be vaccinated rest outside Article III. If anything, the 2023 NDAA endorses the Court’s reasoning as it shows that even absent judicial review, the Mandate was at all times subject to civilian review through the political branches.⁴

The 2023 NDAA and the Rescission Memo also confirm that Plaintiffs have still failed to exhaust their intraservice remedies and their claims are non-justiciable because, inter alia, they are not ripe claims. No Plaintiff can now be separated on account of their vaccination status. And to the extent any Plaintiff complains of any other alleged harm stemming from their refusal to vaccinate – e.g., exclusion from certain assignments/training, letters of reprimand, etc. – they have not exhausted their intraservice remedies as to those claims. Additional guidance is forthcoming related to the Rescission Memo, [Doc. No. 94-1], and any harm that Plaintiffs claim to have already suffered may be redressed by that guidance and the Rescission Memo’s implementation. Thus, any future or ongoing harm that Plaintiffs allege is entirely speculative, and prospective remedies based on alleged past harm is not yet exhausted in light of new and forthcoming policies.

In sum, the Court did not commit clear error by imposing an exhaustion requirement on Plaintiffs’ claims, see discussion infra Sec. III(B), and even if the Court were to now find that Plaintiffs had previously exhausted their intraservice remedies by seeking religious accommodation requests,⁵ such requests and any relief therefrom are now stale given the Rescission Memo. While the 2023 NDAA is a change in law, that change may, and likely will, allow Plaintiffs to obtain review of and relief from Plaintiffs' complained-of injuries through forthcoming, post-Rescission Memo intraservice remedies and policies, thereby potentially eliminating any need for litigation. Accordingly, the 2023 NDAA further confirms that Plaintiffs cannot show that they have exhausted their intraservice remedies and that this litigation is premature.

⁴ Because the 2023 NDAA was signed by President Biden, it was both Article I and Article II actors that ultimately reviewed and rescinded the Mandate.

The ongoing implementation of the Rescission Memo also confirms that the Court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction based on lack of ripeness as to any claim for injuries. In that regard, a claim is not ripe for adjudication if it is not fit for judicial intervention. In re Naranjo, 768 F.3d 332, 347 (4th Cir. 2014) (citation omitted). "A case is fit for adjudication when the action in controversy is final and not dependent on future uncertainties; conversely, a claim is not ripe when it rests upon contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated." Id. (quoting in part Scoggins v. Lee's Crossing Homeowner's Ass'n, 718 F.3d 262, 270 (4th Cir. 2013)) (internal quotations omitted). Here, the case is not fit for judicial intervention. How and if the military will redress and/or accommodate Plaintiffs in the aftermath of Section 525 and the Rescission Memo is entirely speculative and uncertain. See Beard v. Stahr, 370 U.S. 41, 41-42 (1962) (finding a servicemember's suit to enjoin his removal from the active duty list was premature because he had not been removed and, if he were, "adequate procedures for seeking redress will be open to him"); Roberts v. Roth, 594 F. Supp. 3d 29, 35-36 (D.D.C. 2022) (holding in a military vaccine case that plaintiff's claims were not ripe because the intraservice corrective process was not complete and finding the action “premature” because the plaintiff was not yet discharged). For these reasons, the case is not ripe for adjudication and must be dismissed for want of subject-matter jurisdiction.

B. Plaintiffs’ Assertions of Clear Errors of Law

Plaintiffs first argue that the Court clearly erred when it added an exhaustion requirement to the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (“RFRA”) in derogation of its steadfast duty to resolve cases within its jurisdiction. [Doc. No. 90-1] at 9. Plaintiffs claim the Court contradicted itself and had already recognized that RFRA does not require exhaustion when it noted that Plaintiffs’ claims are non-justiciable military judgments “with the possible exception of [RFRA]”). [Doc. No. 90-1] at 10 n.5 (citing [Doc. No. 86] at 10). To the contrary, the Court simply noted in that regard that the RFRA claim was arguably not foreclosed at the outset as a non-justiciable military judgment. See [Doc. No. 86] at 10 (stating that “even before confronting the Mindes [v. Seaman, 543 F.2d 197 (5th Cir. 1971)] test,” Plaintiffs’ claims are non-justiciable military judgments “with the possible exception of [RFRA]”). The Court went on to rule, however, that the RFRA claim was, in fact, non-justiciable once the Court concluded, as it did, that the Mindes test and accompanying exhaustion prerequisite applies to RFRA. See [Doc. No. 86] at 10. The Court then distinguished the few cases Plaintiffs cited for the contrary proposition.⁶ [Doc. No. 86] at 13; cf. id. at 11-12 (citing Williams v. Wilson, 762 F.2d 357, 359-60 (4th Cir. 1985) (holding that under Mindes, courts “should not review internal military affairs” absent “exhaustion of available intraservice corrective measures”)). Because the Court found that Plaintiffs’ RFRA claims were not exhausted, the Mindes exhaustion requirement, imposed by the Fourth Circuit in Williams, was not satisfied; judicial review of Plaintiffs' claims was, therefore, improper; and the Court was required to dismiss the case for want of jurisdiction.

Plaintiffs similarly challenge the Court's dismissal of their other non-RFRA claims, again arguing that either no exhaustion requirement exists or the requirement was satisfied.⁷ But following the Rescission Memo, as detailed above, no claim can now be deemed exhausted. And as to the existence of an exhaustion requirement, Plaintiffs fail to recognize and reconcile the difference between a statutory and a judicial exhaustion requirement. In that regard, it is undisputed that certain of Plaintiffs' claims do not have a statutory exhaustion requirement. But that a particular claim may lack a statutory exhaustion requirement does not preclude courts from imposing one. See McCarthy v. Madigan, 503 U.S. 140, 144 (1992) (“[W]here Congress has not clearly required exhaustion, sound judicial discretion governs.”). Thus, all of Plaintiffs' claims have a threshold judicial exhaustion requirement imposed by Williams/Mindes. And that judicially created exhaustion requirement simply speaks to whether the Court has jurisdiction to hear a particular case at that time. Cf. Nat'l Treasury Emps. Union v. King, 961 F.2d 240, 243 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (“The doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies concerns the timing

In other words, the Court’s finding with respect to Plaintiffs’ failure to exhaust was a determination on the timing of their claims rather than the substance, notwithstanding the general deference that Courts afford to the military in these types of matters, and thus Plaintiffs’ cited authority about courts’ inherent duty to hear cases within their jurisdiction misses the mark. Because Plaintiffs failed to exhaust their claims, the Court did not commit clear error by finding they were non-justiciable at that time.⁸

Plaintiffs also contend that the Court improperly found that Plaintiffs had not pursued relief through the Board of Correction of Military Records (“BCMR”) prior to exhausting their claims.⁹ [Doc. No. 90-1] at 11. The Court need not address this issue because the Rescission Memo requires that Service Secretaries cease review of religious accommodation requests and appeals, orders that records be updated, and directs that future guidance be given. As detailed above, these requirements necessarily mean that any complained-of injuries, past or present, may be remedied or addressed under the new policy, thereby necessarily making premature any consideration of what remedies the BCMR can provide and whether Plaintiffs are required to seek those remedies to satisfy the exhaustion requirements.

⁸ The Court also rejects the claim that, even if an irreparable injury exception to exhaustion applies in this Circuit, one exists here. Plaintiffs’ injuries are either not yet realized or redressable. Plaintiffs’ principle case for such an assertion, Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347 (1976), is distinguishable as a civilian case related solely to a First Amendment case based on political affiliation. And unlike another one of Plaintiffs’ cited cases, U.S. ex rel. Brooks v. Clifford, 412 F.2d 1137 (4th Cir. 1969), Plaintiffs here are no longer subject to the objected-to requirement (notably, even when the Mandate was in effect, there were no forcible vaccinations). Brooks is further distinguishable because it was a habeas proceeding regarding a conscientious objector to military service generally. And any suggestion that allegations of constitutional violations do not require exhaustion does not square with the first Mindes prerequisite, which requires both a constitutional (or statutory or regulatory) violation and intraservice exhaustion. Mindes, 453 F.2d at 201. In other words, imposing the dual requirement of exhaustion and a constitutional violation would make no sense if a constitutional violation excused a failure to exhaust, as Plaintiffs contend. Cf. Thetford Properties IV Ltd. P’ship v. U.S. Dep’t of Hous. & Urb. Dev., 907 F.2d 445, 448 (4th Cir. 1990) (rejecting “as a generally rule [that] exhaustion is not necessary where administrative litigants raise constitutional challenges”).

Similarly irrelevant is whether the Court committed clear error, as Plaintiffs contend, in the Court's previous assessment of the Mindes doctrine's four factors based on the facts of this case. See [Doc. No. 86] at 16. That assessment, summary in nature, was not central, or essential, to the Court's decision, since the Court's necessary inquiry with respect to justiciability needed to go no further than its determination that the Plaintiffs had failed to satisfy the Mindes prerequisite of exhaustion, thereby eliminating the need to consider the merits of the Mindes factors. Whatever the merits of the four Mindes factors, the Court's Order was not anchored in them.

Lastly, Plaintiffs argue the Court erred by giving more weight to certain out-of-circuit decisions than others, and for relying on Justice Kavanaugh's concurrence in a similar and recent military vaccine case.¹⁰ [Doc. No. 90-1] at 24-26. The Court declines to find clear error based on its assessment of the existing legal authority.

C. New Evidence

Plaintiffs assert that a statement by Government counsel in a hearing before the Sixth Circuit constitutes new evidence. [Doc. No. 90-1] at 26-27. That hearing occurred after the hearing in this case on Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction but prior to the Court's November 23, 2022 Order. It appears that Plaintiffs did not become aware of the statement until sometime after November 29, 2022, which is when the Sixth Circuit opinion was released. Given the statement occurred prior to the Court's Order, it arguably is not "new." But in any event, statements by counsel are not evidence. See, e.g., Crawford v. Newport News Indus. Corp., No. 4:14-cr-130, 2018 WL 4524124, at *6 (E.D. Va. Feb. 26, 2018) ("It should go without saying that statements of attorneys are not evidence, and that only admissible evidence can be considered by the Court in resolving [motions]."). More importantly, having reviewed the recording of oral argument in ¹⁰ That case is Austin v. U.S. Navy Seals 1-26, 142 S. Ct. 1301 (2022) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring).

Doster v. Kendall, No. 22-3497 (6th Circ. 2022), the Court does not share Plaintiffs’ construction of Government counsel’s statements, and the statements would not have, in any event, altered the outcome of or analysis in the Court’s prior Order in any respect.

D. Manifest Injustice

Plaintiffs argue that Defendants misrepresented the procedural rights and protections afforded to more junior chaplains, and that those chaplains instead may be discharged without those protections.¹¹ [Doc. No 90-1] at 27-28. But even assuming arguendo that the Court materially relied on the alleged misrepresentation, Chaplain Hirko, who Plaintiffs point to, can no longer suffer the allegedly “irreparable harm” of discharge under the Rescission Memo. Accordingly, for the reasons stated earlier, any other allegations of past or future harm is speculative, unexhausted, not ripe for adjudication at this time, and cannot be said to have resulted in, or present the prospect of, manifest injustice.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the above reasons, it is hereby ORDERED that Plaintiffs’ Motion for Reconsideration, [Doc. No. 88], be, and hereby is, DENIED.

The Clerk is directed to forward copies of this Order to all counsel of record.
