IN THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1980

No. 83, Original

STATE OF MARYLAND, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,

Defendant.

ON THE REPORT OF THE SPECIAL MASTER
DATED SEPTEMBER 15, 1980

MEMORANDUM REPLY TO
LOUISIANA'S EXCEPTIONS

Louisiana's exceptions to the Special Master's recommendations that its motion to dismiss be denied is based primarily on the claim that the Special Master ignores controlling, prudential considerations in light of an alleged availability of an appropriate State forum (Br., pages 11-29). In this regard, Louisiana urges that there is an alternative state forum available and hence Arizona v. New Mexico, 425 U.S. 196 (1976), calls for dismissal of this case.

However, one striking difference between this proceeding and the Arizona case is that the latter case was decided on the motion for leave to file whereas here this Court has already accepted jurisdiction by order issued June 18, 1979, and during the nearly 18 months which have elapsed since that time, significant proceedings have been conducted before the Special Master appointed by the Court. As a result, there are pending before the Court the Master's recommendations with regard not only to Louisiana's motion to dismiss, but also with regard to motions for judgment on the pleadings as well as motions for leave to intervene filed, inter alia, by the United States and the pipeline companies. Should the Court agree with the contentions of the plaintiff States, the United States and the pipeline companies that judgment on the pleadings may be granted without evidentiary hearings, that would be the end of the case.

The state court proceedings, by contrast, have been virtually dormant for the past 18 months with the exception of a recent flurry of activity by Louisiana, apparently designed to bootstrap its contentions here, that this Court should now refrain from exercising its jurisdiction in deference to the state court proceedings.¹

¹As Louisiana noted (Br., pages 9-10), seven separate state court proceedings in which the constitutionality of the tax is at issue are pending in Louisiana. The pipelines are parties in the first of these, Edwards, et al. v. Transcontinental, brought by officials of Louisiana seeking a declaratory judgment of constitutionality, and in one of the six other actions, which seek recovery of the tax paid and being paid under protest. Contrary to Louisiana's implication (Br., page 10), none of these proceedings has progressed significantly beyond the pleadings stage. Only recently, in October, 1980, did Louisiana move for consolidation of those actions, and filed a rule for the pipeline companies to show cause why the eight

No significant action has been taken to obtain a decision in any of the pending state court actions. In view of the important constitutional questions involved, it seems inevitable that the validity of the tax ultimately will be decided by this Court; and, if and when a decision by the state trial court is rendered, a great deal of additional time would expire before that case could reach this Court in the stage in which the instant case is now presented here.²

The prolonged delays which would thus ensue in reaching a definitive ruling on the controversy here involved constitute potent reasons against deferring the controversy to the Louisiana state courts. The huge sums involved (aggregating roughly a quarter of a billion dollars a year) and the wide-spread impact of the First Use Tax (affecting rates paid by millions of customers in some thirty states)³ together with the importance of sovereign states who are the plaintiffs in the action pending in this Court should not be "invited" to appear as intervenors in the declaratory action filed by the Louisiana officials. On November 10, 1980, the state court judge dismissed out of hand Louisiana's rule to show cause.

²Even if the case were on a "fast track" in the Louisiana state courts, and were disposed of summarily by the trial court, and then by direct review by the Louisiana Supreme Court through supervisory writ jurisdiction (assuming that court is willing to exercise its discretion and bypass the intermediate appellate courts), these proceedings and the subsequent appellate or writ process to this Court probably would consume in the order of two additional years.

³By comparison, the Arizona case involved far less money and its impact was only upon limited customers in Arizona. Moreover, in Arizona, the New Mexico law permitted utilities to contest the tax while withholding payment whereas here, the tax has an immediate impact. Louisiana law requires the pipeline companies to pay the First Use Tax and the pipeline companies are collecting the tax from their customers subject to refund.

the constitutional issues involved, all point to the need for expedition which clearly can be achieved only by the Court's continued exercise of original jurisdiction herein. As the Master observed (Report, page 20):

While no great speed seems possible in a case of this magnitude and complexity, this Court can at least control the case and, if it desires, move it forward more speedily than would be possible in a trial and appeal procedure [in the state courts of Louisiana].

Indeed, over the past year and a half, the parties and prospective intervenors and amici have briefed exhaustively the legal issues believed to be dispositive of the whole case on the merits. It would be particularly inappropriate and unwise under these circumstances, even from a practical standpoint, to defer to the Louisiana trial court and start anew.

Louisiana is unable to show any possible prejudice to its case that would result from an early definitive judgment in the Court, especially when, as here, the issues of federal preemption and constitutionality are sharply drawn and squarely presented.

The pipelines accordingly submit that the Court should accept the Master's recommendation denying Louisiana's motion to dismiss.

Respectfully submitted,
