6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MITCHELL ROGOVIN

7 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

8 MR. ROGOVIN: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please the 9 Court:

10 This is an income tax case dealing with the construc-11 tion of a portion of the accumulated corporate earnings tax. The 12 purpose of this tax, the accumulated earnings tax has been part 13 of our tax fabric since 1913, is to determine holders of a 14 corporation from avoiding individual income tax by having the 15 corporation accumulate earnings beyond the reasonable needs of 16 the corporation.

17 The Government's petition for writ of certiorari to 18 review the judgment of the Sixth Circuit in this case takes 19 place because the Sixth Circuit's decision was in conflict with 20 four other circuits, circuits that had supported the United 21 States in its construction.

22 The surplus earnings tax deals with Sections 531 thru
23 537 of the Internal Revenue Code and they have three essential 24 features. Section 532 (a) of the Code has the critical operative 25 provision in the context of the accumulated earnings tax. This

1 is the provision that imposes the special tax on "every corpora-
2 tion formed or available for the purpose of avoiding the income 3 tax with respect to its shareholders by permitting earnings and 4 profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed."

5 This feature requires a particular showing of conduct 6 and a particular showing of the state of mind. Questions of 7 intent and state of mind, however, are difficult and since 1913 8 the statute has carried with it a rebuttal presumption regarding 9 the prohibited purpose.

10 Section 533(a) of the Code carries this presumption.
11 It provides that the fact that earnings and profits are permitted 12 to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business shall 13 be determinative of the purpose to avoid the income tax with 14 respect to shareholders unless the corporation by the preponder-15 ance of the evidence shall prove to the contrary.

16 Finally, since 1954 there has been a credit provision 17 within the accumulated earnings tax and this is found at 535(c).
18 The most significant of the two credits are the 535(c)(1) credit 19 which, in essence, permits a credit notwithstanding the essence 20 of the prescribed purpose, as to that portion of the accumulated 21 earnings determined by the trier of fact to be reasonable.

22 Although the ultimate issue is whether or not there is 23 a prescribed purpose, whether or not it exists, even if it is 24 found to exist, the credit under 535(c)(1) would wash out the tax 25 at least as to that portion of the accumulation ---

1 Q Is this true even though you are not relying on the 2 presumption? Let's assume there is some express proof of what 3 the purpose was and that it was to avoid the income tax?

4 A Yes, sir.

5 Q As long as the accumulation is reasonable, there is 6 no penalty for it?

7 A Yes, Justice White, what happened prior to 1954 was 8 that if any portion of the total accumulation were determined 9 to be unreasonable, then the tax would apply to the totality of 10 the accumulation. The credit in '54 allowed the taxpayer to at 11 least take out of the ambit of the tax that portion which was 12 determined to be reasonable at all times, assuming that the 13 avoidance purpose existed.

14 Q This in effect is just a law against unreasonable
15 accumulation?

16 A With the requisite intent, the intent is built into 17 the statute.

18 To summarize, the special tax will be imposed if the 19 purpose of avoiding the shareholder tax is found to exist either 20 because of the presumption in 533(a) or if it is found independ-
21 ently of it but subject to the credit for so much of the retained 22 earnings as are reasonably needed for the business.

23 The present case takes the form of a suit for a refund.
24 At the trial the jury heard evidence that for the years '60 and 25 '61, the respondent, a bubble gum manufacturer, had increased

1 the accumulated earnings in those years in suit from approxi-
2 mately $1,638,000 to $1,679,000. There was no record of any 3 dividends ever being paid in the years insuit or any indication
4 of dividends being paid since the inception of the corporation 5 in '47.

6 The sole stockholder testified that the reasons for 7 the accumulations were to purchase the stock of respondent's
8 major distributor. There was also testimony that the accumula-
9 tions were because of a fear of depression, possible fear of war
10 and also a desire on the part of respondent to follow, by expan-
11 sion, in the footsteps of the Wrigley Company.

12 In response to interrogatories, the jury found that 13 (1) during the years in suit the respondent had accumulated its 14 earnings beyond the reasonably anticipated needs of the business 15 but that it had not retained its earnings for the purpose of 16 avoiding the income tax on its sole shareholder.

17 The Government's appeal was based on the District
18 Court's refusal to define the phrase "the purpose as it relates 19 to the reason for retention of the earnings." The Court of 20 Appeals reversed and remanded for new trial, holding that the 21 jury might well have been led to believe that tax avoidance must 22 be the sole purpose behind an accumulation.

23 This position that tax avoidance must be the sole pur-
24 pose had not been asserted by either of the parties. The Sixth 25 Circuit in reaching this decision rejected the Government's

1 request for a jury instruction, that tax avoidance need only be 2 one of the purposes for the company's accumulation policy.

3 The Sixth Circuit went on to hold that the jury
4 should be instructed that the accumulated earnings tax applies
5 only if tax avoidance was the dominant, controlling or impelling 6 motive. The Government seeks review in this Court, because we 7 believe that this dominant purpose standard is erroneous; we 8 believe that the proper view is the view that was requested at 9 the District Court, that tax avoidance need only be one of the 10 purposes of an accumulation for this special tax to come into 11 play.

12 The basic purpose of Sections 541 thru 537 to discourage 13 the use of the corporation as a repository for accumulations, 14 which if distributed would have been taxed at progressive rates
15 from the individual shareholders. Since corporations have a 16 legal existence apart from that of the shareholders, the corpora-17 tion could be interposed between the source of income and the 18 receipt by the individual owner, thus allowing the beneficial 19 owner to avoid income tax at the graduated rates.

20 This device has been recognized by the Congress since 21 the inception of the modern income tax in 1913, Sections 531 thru 22 537 are a statutory effort to overcome the fact that we do not 23 have integration between the income tax and the corporate tax.
24 The purpose of the accumulated earnings tax is as this Court had 25 concluded in Helvering vs. Stockyards, 318 U.S. 693 at page 679,

1 "To compel the company to distribute any profits not needed for 2 the conduct of its business so that when so distributed, indi-
3 vidual shareholders will become liable."

4 Underlying this statute is a legislative assumption 5 that it becomes a misuse of a corporation if its profits are 6 retained for the purpose of avoiding the stockholders' individual 7 income tax. Judge Learned Hand in the United Business Court, 8 663 Fed. (2d) 754, at 756, said as to the accumulated earnings
9 tax, "Companies may accumulate what profits they please so long 10 as they do not defeat the fiscal policies of the United States.
11 Their business does not include the manipulation of dividends to 12 avoid taxes; by definition that has nothing to do with the normal 13 management of their affairs."

14 The critical language is that in 542, "availed of for 15 the purpose of avoiding the income tax." In no way does this 16 language import qualification such as formulated by the Sixth 17 Circuit that this tax avoidance must be the dominant purpose.
18 "Availed of" simply means used to the extent tax avoidance induces 19 or aids in inducing in the retention of accumulated earnings
20 the corporation has been used or, in the statutory language, 21 availed of for this prohibitive purpose.

22 The Government's position is derived from the plain 23 statutory language that implies no further qualification and 24 also from this Court's interpretation of that statutory language 25 in the Stockyards Case. We though, as did Fourth Circuit, that

1 this issue had been laid to rest.

2 Now in the Stockyards Case, the First Circuit, the 3 taxpayer argued that the accumulation policy of the corporation
4 intended to satisfy the debts of a New Jersey subsidiary upon 5 its contemplated liquidation in 1940 and that this plan had been 6 inaugurated prior to the adoption of the 16th Amendment and 7 consistently followed by the corporation thereafter, so that,
8 argued the taxpayer, the corporation could not have been availed 9 of for the prescribed purpose set out in the law and this was 10 their position as a matter of law.

11 Now although the First Circuit reversed the Board of 12 Tax Appeals, which had upheld the assertion of the accumulated 13 tax, the First Circuit rejected the taxpayer's argument. The 14 First Circuit in Chicago Stockyards, 129 Fed (2d) 937, at page 15 948, said, "It is clear that Section 104 would apply if in the 16 totality of reason which induced the continuing of the accumula-
17 tion, the forbidden motive of surtax avoidance played a substan-18 tial part."

19 The First Circuit thus rejected the concept of a domi-
20 nant purpose theory. It was in this context that the case came 21 to this Court. This Court stated at page 699, "A corporate prac-22 tice adopted for the mere convenience or for other reasons, and 23 without tax significance when adopted, may have been continued
24 with the additional motive of avoiding surtax on the stockholders."

25 The Board's conclusion, that is, the conclusion of the

1 Board of Tax Appeals that the accumulated earnings tax was to 2 be imposed, may justifiably have been reached in the view that 3 whatever the motive when the practice of accumulation was adopted, 4 the purpose of avoiding surtax induced or aided in inducing the 5 continuance of the practice.

6 Q What case was that?

7 A In the Stockyards Case, 318 U.S., at page 699.

8 Q Mr. Rogovin, I suppose it is true that most companies 9 now and for many years, most very large companies, have paid out 10 only a small fraction of their earnings as dividends?

11 A I believe that is correct, sir.

12 Q Does the Bureau proceed on the assumption that some 13 of the largest companies are totally without purpose of a tax 14 avoidance for their stockholders in that process of accumulation?
15 Take any one of them you like as an illustration, any of the 16 largest companies. Pick any one that you like and tell me does 17 the Bureau assume that the rule you advocate here would or would 18 not compel you to go after them?

19 A It is a two-part test. The objective part of the test 20 has not been considered in your hypothetical and that is, are 21 the accumulations unreasonable, are the funds retained for the 22 purpose of avoiding the surtax on individuals?

23 Q I understand that part of it. I understand that 24 problem, I think, but some of them are mighty big.

25 A I believe the track record of the Revenue Service in

1 this regard tends to indicate that they are looking at the small 2 closely held corporations.

3 Q That is exactly it, that is what bothers me. As I 4 understand it, this statutory provision has been used almost 5 exclusively with respect to the small closely held corporations
6 and my question to you is whether the standard for which you con-
7 tend would have an impact upon that, whether it is the Bureau's
8 view that if this standard is correct in view of the problem
9 presented by the large corporations.

10 A The concern of the Congress in passing the accumulated 11 earnings tax was the concern that the stockholders could so manipu-
12 late the corporation and thereby require or cause the corporation 13 to retain earnings, earnings that would not be passed on to the 14 stockholders.

15 Q I don't think you are contending that should be a con-
16 dition precedent to the Bureau's ability to invoke this section, 17 are you?

18 A That is a presumption that the Congress indulged in 19 assuming that this close relationship between stockholder and 20 corporation could cause this result and there would be no objec-
21 tive evidence to demonstrate tax avoidance, so the presumption 22 was built into the statute.

23 Q Are you telling this Court that the Bureau construes this 24 statute or these sections on unreasonable accumulations, as 25 applicable only to the small closely held corporations?

1 A No, theoretically it could be applicable to a large
2 listed corporation if the listed corporations, Justice Fortas,
3 had the liquid assets and the accumulated cash in an unreason-
4 able posture for its needs.

5 Q Has it ever been applied to any company other than the 6 small closely held company?

7 A I believe it has been applied in one case, TRICO, to 8 1500 stockholders.

9 Q That is the largest?

10 A That is about the largest, yes, sir.

11 Q I know the origins of these provisions way back in 12 Section 102, I think, were the Christian Corporation, and those 13 closely held companies. But certainly the wording in the 14 statute is much broader and certainly the rule for which you are 15 now contending would literally open up the question of a large 16 corporation, those that are held generally, isn't that right?

17 A Technically it would open it up, technically we are 18 construing it as it has always been construed. To respond to 19 your question, however, I feel the question of the nature of the 20 accumulation would differ substantially with the large corpora-21 tion.

22 Q What you are saying is the large corporation might or 23 it might not be able to show some intended or prospective need 24 for the accumulation great enough or imminent enough to justify 25 their holding onto it without the accumulation being characterized 1 as unreasonable?

2 A I believe the pressures of large listed corporations
3 and stockholder pressures are such that large amounts of liquid 4 assets not being applied to the purposes of the corporation would 5 generate better management, if not dividends.

6 Q I wonder if Congress wanted this applied mainly to small 7 closely held corporations if it would not have said so in the 8 act. Certainly this would go to large companies as well as 9 small companies when Congress was using the general language it 10 used?

11 Why won't it make the distinction in the language
12 rather than have you make it in the administration of the statute?

13 A I have no answer to the question.

14 Q Put it this way, if Congress wrote the statute, generally
15 what authority is there in the Internal Revenue Bureau to inter-16 pret it in this manner just as against these small corporations 17 are closely held?

18 A It is because the concern of the Congress was in the 19 retention for the benefit of shareholders and in the large cor-20 porations, listed corporations with hundreds of thousands of 21 shareholders that potential just doesn't exist with any degree 22 of frequency.

23 It does exist and that is what Congress is concerned 24 about in the main and has been expressed this concern throughout 25 the reenactments of the statute since 1913. But there has been

1 no indication that the statute would not apply to a large corpora-
2 tion if the factual pattern so existed. I don't think the Reve-
3 nue Service is binding itself that it would not go audit a 4 corporation and raise this issue if it exists, but the facts
5 just don't support it in large corporations.

6 Q Your ability to make it stick would depend on your 7 ability to prove that the accumulation was unreasonable?

8 A That is right.

9 Q Why in this particular case, for example, isn't the 10 suggestion that the accumualted on this -- were thinking of 11 going out to market and buying stock of a company that owned a 12 substantial block and buy some stock of a related company?

13 A Of a distributor, yes.

14 Q And they had never done it, as I remember the facts
15 of this case; nevertheless they said, "We are thinking about 16 getting bigger by a stock acquisition." Why doesn't that put 17 them in the category of a big company rather than a small company 18 for the purposes of the application, so to speak, of the statute?

19 A This was a solely owned corporation, wholly owned by 20 one individual. The testimony was given as to why the accumula-21 tions were being retained and the jury evidently didn't feel 22 satisfied, because they found for the Government, they found that 23 there were unreasonable accumulations.

24 We are talking about accumulations that come about 25 because of loans to relatives, accumulations that come about

1 because of large portfolios of stock that have no relationship
2 to the corporation, these are not normally the sizes that you
3 find with a large sized corporation.

4 Q When was this law passed?

5 A 1913.

6 Q Is the issue here really whether the Government proved 7 the purpose or only one of several purposes?

8 A Those are the burdens, but it is the taxpayer's burden.

9 Q It seems to me that if the taxpayer can prove that there 10 was a reasonable purpose, he certainly doesn't pay any tax, does 11 he?

12 A The structure of the tax would reach that result.

13 Q So even if there was also the purpose of avoiding 14 taxes, he would still win?

15 A As long as the accumulation were reasonable, he would 16 still win, that is correct.

17 Q All he has to prove is he does avoid additional taxes
18 just by proving one other purpose beside avoiding taxes?

19 A After those accumulations, you may have a million 20 dollar accumulation and the taxpayer may have 15 or 20 purposes, 21 as subscribed to the accumulation, and then the tryer of the 22 fact would determine whether, for example, moneys that were 23 set aside for a fear of a depression, a reserve of a setup of 24 that nature was a reasonable type of reserve.

25 The Court may say no, it is unreasonable.

1 Q They may decide it is unreasonable, but what they are 2 really deciding is there is no other purpose than avoiding taxes.

3 A The Court could find that the accumulation were reason-
4 able and concurrently throughout all of this there was a tax
5 motive. But as to those portions determined not to be reasonable--

6 Q Then there isn't any other reason for it?

7 A It is simply that the tryer of fact determined that 8 was not a reasonable accumulation.

9 Q They showed $200,000. The reasonable needs of the 10 business are $100,000.

11 A There would be a $100,000 need.

12 Q And the tax would be assessed against the other $100,000?

13 A Yes.

14 Q Suppose you had a case where, in fact, you accumula-15 tion is again $100,000, but you know the only purpose of the 16 accumulation would be tax avoidance. Yet they also introduce 17 evidence that they have a business need and $100,000 is reason-18 able. Again the $100,000, there would be no tax on that?

19 A That is correct.

20 Q And there would be no tax?

21 A That's right. And what the Sixth Court has done in 22 this case, they are saying if a corporation with an admitted 23 tax avoidance purpose, if this corporation could avoid the 24 penalty if the tryer of fact was persuaded that at least equal 25 weight was to be given to the nontax reasons, as described by the 1 corporation.

2 We believe this an erroneous statement of the statute.
3 If a corporation has a variety of motives for the accumulation,
4 it does not matter which motive predominates, Congress provided
5 for the elimination of the tax through the credit to the extent 6 that there are demonstrable business needs to justify the accumu-7 lation and what the Sixth Circuit Court is doing is putting into 8 the statute an extremely heavy burden.

9 Q I don't understand how that comes down to anything
10 except the hypotheticalities I suggested, that establish insofar 11 as the accumulation is related to the reasonable needs of the 12 business there is no tax and any excess is taxed, is that right?

13 A No, there has to be a finding under the 532 finding there 14 that the purpose of the accumulation was to avoid the tax on the 15 shareholder level.

16 Q But the presumption is not rebutted?

17 A That is correct.

18 Q If all you establish is insofar as dollars are related 19 to the reasonable needs of the business, period, then you pay 20 a tax on the extra?

21 Q May I ask you did the single stockholder make any 22 effort to prove that in the production of bubble gum he needed 23 any more than $1 million to carry on the business?

24 A There was no evidence of that. The $1.6 million was 25 an accumulation.

1 Q Did he make a showing he wanted to enlarge the bubble
2 gum business?

3 A There was some indication that they wanted to follow
4 in the footsteps of the Wrigley Company, but there were no
5 definite plans as what he was going to do with these funds.

6 Q As I recall it, the Roosevelt Administration at one 7 time thought this law was not enough to prevent tax evasion and 8 attempted to get laws which would coerce.

9 Q It not only attempted to, but put into effect many,
10 many laws.

11 A The Congress has uniformly reenacted this statute and 12 this statute has the effect, the policy is to put a pressure on 13 the corporation to divulge, to distribute dividends where they 14 have no other use for the accumulated earnings to the extent 15 that there is another purpose or a business purpose.

16 Q There was during the Roosevelt Administration an income 17 tax law which went further.

18 A In 1938 the Senate Finance Committee had an opportunity
19 to strengthen the presumption in this statute and the Finance
20 Committee described the changes that took place as "This is page 21 17 of the brief, requiring the taxpayer by a clear presentation 22 of the evidence to prove the absence of any purpose to avoid 23 surtaxes upon shareholders after it has been determined that the 24 earnings and profits have been unreasonably accumulated."

25 We believe that the decision of the Sixth Circuit is

1 erroneous, that this decision of this Court in the Stockyards
2 Case is controlling.

3 Q Now the Stockyards Case was a case in which the Board
4 of Tax Appeals found, first of all, that the corporation and 5 then the Board of Tax Appeals further found that the sole purpose 6 of the retention of earnings was to avoid taxes. The issue in 7 this case, which finally got here, was whether or not a corpora-
8 tion originally formed for another purpose could later be availed 9 of for retention of earnings for the prohibited purpose. That was 10 the basic issue here.

11 And finally there was a question of accepting the fact-
12 finding of the BTA.

13 A As to the language of this Court with respect to 14 inducement or aids in inducing, the purpose of the question,
15 this was the language that the Court inserted. The First Cir-
16 cuit referred to avoidance playing a substantial part.

17 Q The administrative body, the fact-finding body had 18 found that it was the sole purpose of Mr. Prince's corporation, 19 had it not?

20 A It had, yes, sir.

21 Thank you.

1 ORAL ARGUMENT OF RICHARD L. BRAUNSTEIN

2 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

3 MR. BRAUNSTEIN: May it please the Court:

4 On the issue before this Court is the construction of 5 a statute that has been on the books for many, many years, since 6 1913. The statute as enacted at that time provided that a cor-
7 poration formed or fraudulently an accumulation for the purpose
8 of preventing tax on the shareholders would trigger a penalty
9 tax on the shareholder at that time.

10 There was a rebuttal presumption then as there is now
11 that is earnings were permitted to accumulate beyond the reason-12 able needs of the business, that this was prima facie evidence
13 for the purpose to escape the tax. The statute has been amended 14 throughout the years. The word "fraudulently" was excised. The 15 tax is now imposed on the corporation rather than the share-
16 holders and instead of a prima facie evidence or a rebuttal 17 presumption, we have a virtual determinant of an assumption that 18 once a corporation accumulates its earnings beyond its reason-
19 able needs, that unless the taxpayer comes forward and determina-20 tively shows otherwise, that the penalty applies.

21 Q May I ask you if it shows why they struck out the 22 word "fraudulently"?

23 A I think there was the question on the common law it was 24 very difficult to establish fraud and that was the reason that 25 was struck out. The reason the tax was then imposed on the

1 shareholder, it was first imposed on the shareholders and then
2 it was not. Perhaps there was a constitutional question involved.
3 I think the purpose going into this statute that reading the 4 early indications, that there were a lot of holding company 5 cases involved here.

6 At the time the statute was enacted there was no cor-
7 poration tax, taxpayers were permitted to deal with their corpora-
8 tion in sizes which would lead to tax avoidance, and what hap-9 pened, many taxpayers who had stocks and securities and were 10 receiving income on that were able to put it in a corporate shell 11 and really insulate themselves from any taxes.

12 In addition, a taxpayer was permitted to sell stock
13 which he had purchased to his corporation. If he realized a 14 loss on that, he could take it. I think if this case came up
15 in 1913 we would make a very strong argument that the purpose
16 required was the sole purpose and that the Court used the word 17 "fraudulently" because it was talking about a situation where the 18 corporation was used in a fraudulent manner.

19 I think had this case come up, we would say that the 20 case, the statute only applied if there was absolutely no reason, 21 no valid reason that the sole purpose for the shareholder forming 22 this corporation had to be tax avoidance.

23 Q Did you say "valid reason"?

24 A That the sole purpose for the corporation, there was 25 no business reason, that before the penalty was to apply, the

1 Court would have to find that the sole and only purpose of form-2 ing the corporation was ---

3 Q But to succeed, don't you have to say that even if the 4 taxpayer may succeed, even though he can't prove that the accumu-
5 lation is reasonable in terms of business need?

6 A I think basically coming down through our test and what 7 the Sixth Circuit is really saying is that once it is shown that 8 the accumulation is beyond the objective useful needs of the busi-9 ness, and that phrase has tremendous significance. That has 10 been determined as fixed, definite, certain plans, almost balance 11 sheet liabilities and written commitments, once the taxpayer has 12 accumulated beyond that, and the fact that he says, "Well, my 13 purpose is really I would like to expand, I would like to 14 acquire, but I just can't go out and buy a newspaper or a radio 15 station or a cement plant. It is just impossible."

16 The position of the Government today is that you are 17 out of the ballgame. The reason they say that is, they say 18 what is the purpose test? How do we determine that?

19 It is very simple. They say if the shareholder is sub-20 ject to taxable income, he is in a tax bracket, he has no operat-
21 ing loss carryovers, and he has been advised that a distribution 22 would result in taxable income, that is all you have to show,
23 because then it follows that accumulated results in an avoidance 24 of the tax, which is true.

25 Q And the avoidance is the purpose?

1 Q This isn't really a case about whether you need one 2 or several purposes?

3 A It isn't. I think the Government concedes he might 4 have 100 purposes and that you might be talking about tax avoid-5 ance or the tax purpose might be incidental, remote. He would 6 not really care about it, but the tax applies. That is the 7 Government's position. They say if it is one out of 100 reasons, 8 the tax applies.

9 Basically if you take that approach ---

10 Q The Government says that its position is that it is 11 up to the taxpayer to prove the complete absence of any tax 12 avoidance purpose and your point is that is impossible to do?

13 A It is impossible. The only two situations I can think 14 of is if you have a net operating loss carryover where you can 15 show the distribution will not result in income, or in the other 16 situation where someone is just completely and honestly ignorant
17 and had not been advised. But it just doesn't happen. But I 18 think the whole point of the Government's position, it is really 19 not asking for a construction of the statute, you can forget about 20 available for a purpose.

21 What the Government's position is, in effect, saying 22 that if you accumulate beyond fixed, definite and reasonable needs, 23 forget about it if you are closely held corporations. We think 24 that at least the small businessman should have the opportunity 25 to try to rebut this presumption.

1 The Sixth Circuit Court isn't giving anything here.

2 When you talk about it, the burden, it is a determinative burden 3 which this taxpayer has to show that tax avoidance was not the 4 dominant or impelling motive. He just can't sit up there and 5 say that wasn't my motive. He's got to be fairly specific and 6 concrete in what he is saying.

7 I think the thing that really disturbs us about this 8 case is you are really preventing expansion of the smaller cor-
9 poration. I just can't see how we could expand under the Govern-10 ment's interpretation.

11 I think things have changed where the substantial 12 economic power is in the publicly held corporation. But a statute 13 which was aimed at the power, the economic power, is now being 14 applied against the little man and the persons that it was 15 intended to cover initially are just not being covered at this 16 particular time. I think basically our position here is that 17 simple, that what the Government asks is not a construction of 18 the statute. There is no construction; there is no statute.

19 We think the only real tenable and reasonable view is 20 the position of the Sixth Circuit.

21 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: We will adjourn.

22 (Whereupon, at 2:32 p.m. the Court adjourned, to recon-23 vene the following day, Wednesday, October 23, 1968, at 10 a.m.)

1 The argument was resumed at 10:10 a.m., Wednesday
2 Morning, October 23, 1968.

3 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: Number 17, United States,
4 Petitioner, versus the Donruss Company.

5 Mr. Braunstein?

6 ARGUMENT OF RICHARD L. BRAUNSTEIN, ESQ.

7 MR. BRAUNSTEIN: May it please the Court, I believe 8 the impression was left yesterday that the taxpayer in this 9 case accumulated a substantial amount of funds, with the sole 10 purpose being the avoidance of tax, but that was not the deci-11 sion of the court below.

12 The first inquiry is whether the accumulation exceeds 13 the reasonable needs of the taxpayer's business. But this phrase 14 has come to mean the fixed, definite and certain needs of the 15 business, or of the obligations of the taxpayer. It is a test
16 which the Government is trying to restrict as closely as pos-17 sible.

18 Q Do we have that before us, or isn't the narrow 19 issue before us the Government's request for an instruction and 20 denial of that instruction, and then the action of the Court of 21 Appeals in reversing further procedures pursuant to the stan-22 dards it has laid down, all of this being with respect to the 23 question of purpose or intent?

24 A That is correct. This issue is not before the 25 Court, but I think it is pertinent in terms of the effect of

1 what the Government proposes to ask this Court to set as a 2 test, because in circumstances like this, the jury found that 3 the taxpayer did not have fixed and definite purposes, but they 4 held that he did not have a tax avoidance purpose.

5 The taxpayer stated that he had plans for expansion.
6 He intended to buy stock in a distributor.

7 The jury, we could infer, believed that this was the 8 purpose motivating his conduct. So while it was not fixed, 9 definite and certain, nevertheless it was a permissible purpose
10 and the facts were that the taxpayer did purchase $380,000 worth 11 of the distributor's stock, and the taxpayer did expand.

12 It was because of this expansion and purchase that 13 the taxpayer is continuing to be successful. But the critical 14 point is that it is the Government's position that in adopting 15 the purpose test, you would then ask the taxpayer only two 16 questions:

17 No. 1 - If the distribution was made to you, would it 18 be taxable?

19 No. 2 - Were you aware that if the distribution was 20 made to you it would be taxable?

21 If both of those answers were yes, then it is my 22 understanding that regardless of the fact that the taxpayer's 23 purpose, his dominant purpose, the whole purpose of the accumu-
24 lation, was for expansion, to preserve and expand the business, 25 that, nevertheless, the penalty would apply.

1 Q The Government would not agree with that charac-
2 terization, would it?

3 A I haven't heard them deny that characterization.

4 Q It is not whether the effect on the distribution 5 would be to subject the stockholder to the tax, but whether that 6 was one of the motives in withholding the distribution.

7 A I don't regard that as what the Government is 8 asking this Court to rule on. I think they say very clearly that 9 if the avoidance is one of 100 purposes, regardless of its sig-
10 nificance, then the tax applies.

11 Having determined what do you mean by avoidance of 12 tax -- avoidance of tax is knowledge that a distribution results 13 in taxable income, and the whole thrust of the Government's 14 argument and our argument here is such a test really writes out 15 the purpose test.

16 Q I guess it gets pretty obvious, but there is a 17 difference between what we are struggling with, shading the 18 difference between the words "purpose", "effect", and "motive".

19 A I think that is correct. It is basically our 20 position that the Sixth Circuit correctly characterized the 21 test in terms of the dominant motive.

22 I think one of the difficult things is the burden of 23 proof that the taxpayer has, if you enunciate a test other than 24 dominant or impelling test, whether it has any meaning, because 25 once the court finds that an accumulation is beyond the

1 objective and reasonable needs of the business, the taxpayer
2 is faced with a determinate presumption. He has to go forward
3 and prove and bear a heavy burden that this was not the purpose.

4 He obviously cannot say "Well, that was not my pur-5 pose." I don't think that carries the burden. I think he is 6 compelled to give specific and definite reasons as relates to 7 his motivation.

8 As a practical matter, these cases are tried four or 9 five years after the year in issue, and he cannot fabricate. I
10 think the Government is concerned that these are subjective 11 matters; that there is no objective way to determine or test 12 the testimony of the taxpayer.

13 But this is not true. He is talking about a situa-
14 tion of his intentions, of his plans, and we are viewing this 15 four or five years after. What he says must be as susceptible 16 to objective verification and reason.

17 It is our position that it is only through utiliza-
18 tion of the dominant or impelling test that there is any mean-19 ing in the phrase "avoidance of the purpose"; that any other 20 test just puts an impossible burden on the taxpayer. I think 21 this is why we believe that the Government's position is very 22 clear when they say one out of 100, that that is enough to 23 carry the day. That is their position.

24 A But it is only their position against the back-25 ground of the finding that the accumulation was, in terms of

1 their frame of reference, by objective standards, an unreason-
2 able accumulation.

3 A I don't gather that from the record. I think 4 the Government's position in a purpose, that if avoidance of 5 the tax is a purpose --

6 Q Do you mean the jury wouldn't have to find that 7 there was an unreasonable accumulation?

8 A I think the jury would have to find initially --

9 Q That is what I mean.

10 A Yes.

11 Q Before the taxpayer goes out the window in the 12 Government's position, it has to be found that the accumulation 13 was unreasonable.

14 A Unreasonable.

15 Q And once it is found to be unreasonable, objec-
16 tively there is a no-reason in terms of the needs of the busi-
17 ness to the extent that it is unreasonable.

18 A No, I don't think that is true. When you talk 19 about the unreasonable needs of the business, that phrase has 20 been determined as requiring fixed, definite and certain needs, 21 something that is susceptible to a knowledge that this is going 22 to require a liability. If we had a more liberal view of the 23 unreasonable --

24 Q But you do concede it is necessary to find the 25 accumulation was unreasonable, then what the taxpayer is claiming

1 as justification for this accumulation has been termed to be 2 unreasonable, and he is giving an unreasonable reason for the 3 accumulation.

4 It may be that as a matter of subjective thinking, the 5 thought he needed this much money for that purpose. You say that 6 that subjective attitude -- that there should be some room for 7 that, some room for you to prove that in the case.

8 A I would think so, because one of the things that 9 concerns or disturbs me is that in testing what is unreasonable, 10 it is not a very broad test. It is rather limited. I think 11 the whole thrust of our argument in terms of the unreasonable 12 test --

13 Q What if it weren't, though?

14 A I think if it were not, you would have fewer 15 cases going on the purpose test. I think what you are really 16 getting here is the expansion problem, the taxpayer that intends 17 to expand, desires to diversify, but under the unreasonable 18 test cannot satisfy it because his plans have not matured to 19 the state required by the statute.

20 Our position is, in view of the fact that this is 21 what the unreasonable test is, to then adopt a purpose test
22 precludes a taxpayer from expanding.

23 Q But if the court, if the judge or a jury, found
24 the accumulation to be unreasonable by whatever applicable 25 standards there were, your suggestion is, nevertheless, the

1 taxpayer should be allowed to not be taxed on the unreasonable
2 accumulation because he had a good-faith view that his business 3 needed this accumulation.

4 A Correct. I think what we are saying is whatever
5 his motivation, he is not looking to avoid tax, but he honestly 6 believes this.

7 Q Mr. Braunstein, the consideration that bothers 8 me in this case, following your colloquy with Justice White, is 9 that it is arguable that the standard adopted by the Court of 10 Appeals, which you are defending here, is contrary, really, to 11 what Congress expressed and provided. In a way, it undermines 12 the specific language of section 533(a). 533(a) makes the test 13 of intent to avoid stockholder tax a very minor consequence, as 14 I read it.

15 It says once you find that the earnings of the corpor-
16 ation are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs 17 of the business, that "that shall be determinative of the pur-18 pose to avoid the income tax with respect to shareholders unless 19 the corporation, by the preponderance of the evidence, shall 20 prove to the contrary."

21 Those are very rigid standards, but they are Congress'
22 standards. Whether one thinks they are good, bad, or indiffer-23 ent, there they are in the law.

24 A I agree with you. I think they are very diffi-25 cult standards.

1 What we are saying is that in the Government's view,
2 to adopt a purpose test really writes out any opportunity of 3 the taxpayer to meet that standard.

4 Q Even if you assume that, if you go the other way
5 and adopt a dominant purpose test, as the Court of Appeals did, 6 it would seem to be extreme and to undermine what would seem to 7 be the fairly obvious intention of the Congress.

8 A I view that really as a burden of proof aspect
9 that Congress created, making it most difficult for the taxpayer 0 once a determination has been made that the accumulation exceeds 1 the "reasonable needs of the business," that a very difficult
2 burden is placed on the taxpayer.

3 In turn, the taxpayer then is given one last oppor-
4 tunity, as I view it, to show that its conduct was not motivated 5 by the avoidance of tax; that it was motivated by something else.
6 If we adopt the "a purpose" test --

7 Q That would be the reasonable needs of the busi-
8 ness, but as my brother White was pointing out, if you can show 9 that this accumulation was needed for the reasonable needs of 0 the business, you never get to that question.

1 A You never get to that; but, on the other hand,
2 reasonable needs of the business have been construed by regu-
3 lation, in the courts and in instruction, to be fixed, definite.
4 There are many taxpayers, if they do want to go on an expansion
5 program at the end of any particular year, it may be completely

1 fortuitous that they have advanced to this stage.

2 What we are saying is that if you accept the Govern-
3 ment's interpretation, in effect you are just preventing a tax-
4 payer whose legitimate purpose is the expansion and diversifi-
5 cation of his business from pursuing that point of view.

6 Q The problem that I am putting to you is, very 7 simply, whether your argument is properly addressed to this 8 Court or to the Congress. And that gets down to the matter of 9 unraveling what the Congress really intended; what the spiritual 10 thrust of the legislation is.

11 A I think the spiritual thrust of the regulation is,
12 going back historically, to get at corporations where the pri-13 mary purpose was formation for matters not germane to the 14 corporate function, but to tax avoidance. I think that really 15 is the thrust.

16 What we are saying here is that this interpretation
17 is not inconsistent with that thrust. What it does is permit
18 the closely held corporation to compete with the public cor-19 poration.

20 In no way do I view the test enunciated by the Sixth 21 Circuit as inconsistent with this basic purpose. I think the 22 Second Circuit recognized the fact that this statute should not 23 be construed inconsistent with the antitrust laws; that it 24 recognize that the philosophy of Congress, I think, rather than 25 being hindered by the interpretation of the Sixth Circuit, is

1 actually helped. I think it is consistent with permitting com-
2 petition and permitting the closely held corporation to compete.

3 We are not arguing for a standard which permits tax 4 avoidance. We are arguing for a standard which permits the 5 closely held corporation to compete with the public company to 6 diversify and expand. To that extent, I submit it is completely
7 consistent with the Congressional purpose of this statute.

8 Q The Government's position is the "a purpose".

9 A That is correct. Their position, as I understand
10 it, is that the statute applies if a purpose was the avoidance
11 of tax. The way to test a purpose is that if the individual 12 knows the distribution will result in taxable income, it is a 13 purpose.

14 Q I thought it was a reference to subsection (a) 15 of the statute.

16 A No. I am sorry.

17 Our position is that you are really writing out the 18 statute. Under that interpretation, I might as well just have 19 a statute that says that if there is an accumulation beyond the 20 reasonable needs of the business, the tax applies, period, be-21 cause if you accept that interpretation, the rest is just sur-
22 plus. I can't see any need for it at all.

23 Q If you were the judge preparing a charge to the 24 jury, how would you define it?

25 A Under the statute?

1 Q Yes.

2 A I think under the statute the judge would have to 3 say that to find it is reasonable you would have to find that the 4 taxpayer had fixed and definite commitments; he had contracts
5 which required the expenditure of these funds. The fact that a 6 taxpayer intended, whether you believed he intended or not, to 7 expand and to diversify, or was attempting to diversify, does 8 not qualify under the reasonable accumulation test.

9 Q What does that have to do with your charge about 10 being reasonable? That is what they have to determine -- 11 whether it is reasonable without regard to the motive.

12 A That is correct. The motive would only be impor-
13 tant on the avoidance of the purpose test. It is our position 14 that the proper construction is that the motive resulting in a 15 substantial penalty should be the motive controlling the actions 16 of the taxpayer.

17 Q Didn't Congress intend to let somebody determine 18 whether there was more than was reasonable?

19 A I think ultimately it is a jury or a court ques-20 tion. I think at first blush the revenue agent does come in and 21 make a determination as to whether the accumulation was reason-22 able or unreasonable in terms of the defined standard.

23 Q Is it ordinary to turn over tax cases to juries
24 to probe the minds, to find out how many of the dominant pur-
25 poses are for one thing and how many are for another?

1 A I am not suggesting it is an easy test, but the 2 court has done it in the Allen Trust Company of Georgia case, 3 involving transfers, as the court did it in Duberstein, in 4 terms of what is a gift when it is searched. I think in Duber-
5 stein the court refused to come up with an easy test, but said
6 you have to search for the dominant, controlling and impelling 7 motive.

8 We are asking the Court where this test presents no 9 more of a difficulty than this Court addressed itself to in 10 Duberstein and the Trust Company of George where it did accept 11 the dominant and compelling test.

12 Q Suppose there was a $2,000 corporation that sold 13 $2 million worth of goods and made $1-1/2 million profit? Would 14 the motive of the man who saved that $1-1/2 million have any-15 thing to do with what the jury decided?

16 A I think it is required under the statute.

17 Q You do?

18 A Yes, I do.

19 Q Do you think the jury is instructed that the tax-20 payer loses only if there is an unreasonable accumulation, and 21 the jury finds there is an unreasonable accumulation? Do you 22 think as a matter of actual practice, in terms of whet her you 23 are going to win or lose the case, the jury is going to say, 24 "Well, there was an unreasonable accumulation here but, never-25 theless, the taxpayer still wins because he just made a mistake."

1 How is your experience with a jury or judge going 2 to be against that finding?

3 A I think our experience quite frankly, and most 4 tax practitioners have focused everything in trying to con-
5 vince the trier of the fact, is that it is unreasonable. But 6 you then get into a very difficult question if the courts 7 restrict what is reasonable and what is not; that you only have 8 one last refuge. What really concerns us --

9 Q I am just wondering how significant this whole 10 argument is. What is the finding going to be?

11 A We think it is substantial in terms of the closely 12 held company.

13 Q And I think the Government thinks so, too. I 14 guess what it means is that there probably will be more trials, 15 more efforts, the necessity to make more settlements.

16 A We say it is a small price to pay for a com-17 petitor's assignees.

18 (Whereupon, the oral argument in the above-entitled 19 matter was concluded.)
