MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: No. 38, James G. Glover,

ORAL ARGUMENT OF WILLIAM M. ACKER, R., ESQ.

ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

MR. ACKER: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please the the Petitioners, Glover and Otis were the plaintiffs this case comes here purely and simply on the pleadings.

The plaintiffs were 14 railroad carmen helpers. Complaint in the District Court charged a cooperative between the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Company and the Brotherhood, the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of Missouri, to perpetuate a long-existing racial discrimination against Negro carmen by the device of using what they called "apprentices" to do the traditional work of carmen helpers; to keep white apprentices, so that the Negro carmen helpers would never be able to get promoted to the classification of carmen.

This device has caused a bottleneck in seniority affects not only the Negro carmen helpers but the White helpers unfortunately behind them on the seniority

The District Court dismissed the case on the grounds plaintiffs had not alleged an exhaustion of one of 1 their remedies before the National Railway Adjustment Board.

2 Two, their remedy within the union itself, and,

3 Three, their remedy provided by the Collective 4 Bargaining Agreement.

5 There were no specific allegations in the complaint
6 as to the character of these two supposed contractual remedies
7 or even if they existed, but the District Court nevertheless 8 concluded that they both were, as he said, "available" and 9 must be employed.

10 The Fifth Circuit affirmed, and this Court has 11 granted certiorari.

12 Let me say that some people do not like the concept 13 of seniority as a criterion for job assignment and promotion.
14 I don't think it is for me to be for or against this concept.
15 It is just a fact of labor life, and racial discrimination in 16 the application of this concept is where discrimination hurts
17 the most. It hurts the pocketbook.

18 I submit that to eliminate invidious discrimination 19 in this area can lead ultimately to its elimination in other 20 sectors of our national life.

21 While I was on the airplane coming up from Birmingham, 22 with the plane jumping up and down, I grabbed something to get 23 my mind off of that, and I picked up the "Look" Magazine for 24 this week. I was surprised to see the first article in that 25 magazine entitled, "What Unions Do To Blacks."

1           As I turned through the pages, I was even more
2 surprised to see a picture of one of my clients. I mention
3 this for two reasons: (1) I don't want the Court to think I
4 had anything to do with the preparation of, or the publication 5 of, this article just before this case is set for oral argument.
6 It was absolutely news to me.

7           (2) Despite that disclaimer, there are a couple of 8 things in this article that I would like to read and that I 9 think have particular bearing.

10           The sub headline says, "For nearly a century, most 11 unions have forced Negroes into Jim Crow locals, giving them 12 dirty jobs or refused to admit them at all. New laws and 13 repeated union promises are not stopping prejudice."

14           Then, down in the body, it says this:

15           "Union controlled apprenticeship programs" -- it 16 fits this particular one like a glove -- "admit far less 17 than token numbers of Negroes. Unions are doggedly battling 18 civil rights complaints that are before the Courts and Govern-19 ment agencies. Despite landmark court decisions in 1967 and 20 1968, the unions seem determined to fight a rearguard holding 21 action reminiscent of the one by the Southern School District
22 after the Supreme Court's 1964 desegregation decision."

23           Now, if we may, let's see where the lower court's 24 reasoning in this case would lead these plaintiffs.

25           First, what about the internal union complaint

1 procedures?

2           The Trial Court said that such procedures were there.
3 For the sake or argument, therefore, we will have to assume,
4 I suppose, that they are there. It would be unbecoming of me
5 to go outside the record to describe these intra-union pro-
6 cedures. There are no allegations as to what they are, no 7 allegations by the plaintiff, no allegation by the defendants.

8           However, I think it is not unsophisticated for this 9 Court, just as I know it knows that the plaintiffs could not 10 get damages -- damages -- that is one of the things they are 11 suing for -- money damages -- for past discrimination from the 12 union. If they go through the union constitution, such as it 13 is, are they going to be able to get what they are asking for 14 here -- damages?

15           It is just as easy, I think, to know that they cannot 16 get promotion from the union. The Union does not promote 17 people.

18           The decision that they theoretically could hope 19 for with the union alone would be an admission by the union, 20 by some top decision-making body or some policy-making body of 21 the union that the union was wrong in failing to take their 22 grievance to the company. That is all they could hope for with 23 the union procedures.

24           Q     Don't you allege a conspiracy, so to speak, be-25 tween the union and the employer here in your complaint?

1           A     Yes, we do.

2           Q     I don't know that you use the word "conspiracy" 3 or joint action by these co-defendants in depriving your clients 4 of promotion and the pay that goes with promotion.

5           A     Exactly.

6           Q     Then, why couldn't they get damages from the 7 union if you are right?

8           A     I don't think they could get damages from the 9 union within the union constitutional procedures.

10          We are discussing constitutional procedures within 11 the union that are not plead and the court does not have any 12 way to know what those procedures are.

13          I will say that the union constitution does not 14 provide a method for the union to compensate someone monetarily 15 for some wrongdoing and that is all I am discussing at this 16 point -- what they could get there theoretically.

17          Now, what could they expect from the company if 18 they processed a grievance without the union's blessing and 19 in the face of its active opposition?

20          The actual grievance machinery here again is not 21 spelled out in the complaint, but in these matters it is easy
22 to know that they would get nowhere. If they sought redress 23 with the company in the face and in the teeth of their own
24 union's opposition and collusion, then, according to the Fifth 25 Circuit, the Court from which this case comes in

1 Haynes against U. S. Pipe, a case that was cited by the Dis-
2 trict Court in its Memorandum Opinion, then there would be no 3 judicial review.

4 The Fifth Circuit is not saying that you exhaust your 5 administrative remedies within the company and if you are not 6 satisfied you then to go Court. They are saying in Haynes, you 7 exhaust your administrative remedy within the company even if 8 the last and ultimate method that the employee employees is to 9 get his union to strike. If that does not work, he is finished.

10 This is what the Fifth Circuit Says:

11 "At this point, the decision denying him relief was 12 final. Under the terms of the Collective Bargaining Agreement, 13 are the processes of the Court now available to him for con-14 testing or voiding that final decision?"

15 We are talking about intra-company procedures. In 16 that case, the Fifth Circuit says that the appellant does not 17 contend that the union did not faithfully represent him.
18 That may be a distinction. He does not charge fraud on either 19 the part of the company or of the union. This is a case
20 where the grievance procedure was final and the Court's opinion 21 was against the appellant.

22 This means the Fifth Circuit in Haynes would say 23 that unless the plaintiffs here would bite off the tremendous 24 burden after having exhausted this machinery that the District
25 Court and the Fifth Circuit say we must exhaust, unless we want

1 bite off the burden and take on the burden of proving fraud on 2 the part of the union and the company -- fraud -- then we have 3 no judicial review. Then we have reached the end of the road 4 by referring this matter to the grievance machine.

5 Now what could the plaintiffs reasonable expect from 6 the National Railroad Adjustment Board?

7 The 1966 revisions of the Railway Labor Act came too 8 late for Mr. Glover and his friends. They filed this case in 9 1965. The carmen in their brief admit to an average of three 10 years for processing a claim before the NARB, Second Division.
11 The railroad admits to less, but this court in Walker v.
12 Southern Railway was not only impressed by the unreasonable 13 delays before the NARB, before the 1966 revisions, which would 14 make the NARA proceedings applicable here just as in Walker, 15 but by the absence of any judicial review in the event of a 16 decision adverse to the individual employee.

17 The Court says, "The Congress also found if an 18 employee receives an award in his favor by the Board, the 19 railroad affected may obtain justicial relief from that award
20 by declining to recognize that award. If, however, an employee 21 fails to receive an award in his favor, there is no means by 22 which judicial review may be obtained."

23 That point is argued in our brief at some length, but 24 this particular case was not exferred to, the most recent on 25 that point. We think that as constituted, as created, as

1 conceived by the Congress, the NARB is not able or designed 2 for handling this kind of grievance.

3 Q I take it there is no question that the individual 4 employee as distinguished from the union may energize the 5 grievance procedure in the railroad business?

6 A Mr. Justice White, you are certainly correct
7 because on behalf of an individual I have invoked that NARA 8 statute procedure.

9 Q Doesn't the statute require the grievance 10 procedure?

11 A You mean the grievance procedure within the 12 company before the NARB?

13 Q Let us assume that a collective bargaining 14 contract between the union and the railroad does not say 15 anything about grievances. Doesn't the Act still require that 16 minor disputes go to the Board?

17 A I think it does.

18 Q Wholly independent of the contract?

19 A By its terms.

20 Q Wholl independent of the contract?

21 A Wholly independent of the contract.

22 Q How do you get around that?

23 A We do not have the contract before us here,
24 but I don't think it says anything about the National Railroad
25 Adjustment Board.

1 Q It does not have to. You are just saying if 2 you claim racial discrimination, the statutory requirement to 3 take that sort of a claim to the Board is ---

4 A Under the Steele, Tunstall, Conley rationale, 5 we say that does control to avoid the exclusive jurisdiction.
6 Now the literal words require it.

7 Q You mean those cases may bypass it?

8 A As I interpret them, and as I hope to demon-9 strate, they do say particularly in this context, particularly 10 where you are suing the union, and this court in several 11 cases has said that a remedy ---

12 Q Let me put it this way: May Congress say in 13 a claim of this kind you must first follow the administrative 14 procedure before you go to court?

15 A My own personal view, Mr. Justice Brennan, would 16 be that this particular tribunal as constituted, with an absence 17 of judicial review from an adverse decision to an employee, if 18 the Congress required it and attempted to overrule by legislation 19 the Steele and Tunstall cases as I interpret them, I think the 20 Congress would have enacted unconstitutional legislation.
21 That is my personal view.

22 I obviously do not have time to comment on all of the 23 important cases bearing on the exhaustion of remedies, but I
24 would like to discuss these: Republic Steel against Maddox, 25 Vaca against Sipes, NRLB against Shipbuilding Local 22, recently denied by the Third Circuit.

1 If I have any time, I would like to mention Conley v.
2 Gibson and Walker against Southern Railway.

3 In Republic Steel against Maddox, the Maddox case first 4 off did not involve a claim against a man's union as well as 5 the company for which he worked. The majority of the Court in 6 that case considered it a run-of-the-mill discharge case and 7 simply held that Mr. Maddox should have employed the grievance 8 machinery which there was clearly provided by the collective 9 bargaining agreement under the evidence. The collective bar-10 gaining agreement was there for the Court to examine and to 11 determine that it was available.

12 In this case, it is not there. It has not been 13 declared by us, and it has not been declared by the defendants.

14 The Court said, "In a general rule to which Federal 15 law applies, Federal labor policy requires that individual 16 employees wishing to to assert contract grievances must attempt 17 use of the contract grievance procedure agreed upon by employer 18 and union as the mode of redress."

19 It continued: "If the union refuses to press or 20 only perfunctorily presses the individual's claim, differences 21 may arise as to the forms of redress then available. But unless 22 the contract provides otherwise, there can be no doubt that the 23 employee must afford the union the opportunity to act on his 24 behalf."

25 Now, we ammended this complaint after Judge Lynn

1 Threw us out. I don't know that we added anything to the com-
2 plaint by our amendment because in the original complaint it 3 clearly appeared that the opportunity for the union to process 4 this grievance had been afforded. They had been called on, 5 and they had not done it.

6 So, without the frustrating responses, short of actual 7 operation of the grievance machinery, the Maddox rationale
8 here, as I have read it here, seems to me to clearly apply.

9 More recently, the Court spoke in Vaca against Sipes ---

10 Q In the Maddox Case, as I remember it, the only 11 reason it could be asserted that he was wrongly discharge was 12 because of rights conferred to him by the collective bargaining 13 agreement itself. Otherwise it would have been employment at 14 will.

15 Therefore, the Court held that if he is going to rely 16 on the rights which are conferred upon him as a beneficiary 17 of the collective bargaining contract. He had to go through the 18 other provisions provided by that contract.

19 Are you in your case relying on rights that are con-20 ferred under the collective bargaining agreement?

21 A I would have to say we are. We admit to asking 22 the Court for a decision which very definitely will involve, 23 and we admit it, an interpretation application of the collective 24 bargaining agreement.

25 Q May I ask you when this case was begun?

1           A       It was filed in June or July of 1965, Mr.
2 Justice Black. It was in the works prior to the enactment of 3 the Civil Rights Act. There is invocation of the 1964 Civil 4 Rights Act.

5           Q       I notice Mr. Cooper's firm had something to do 6 with it.

7           A       Mr. Cooper's firm is counsel for the carmen 8 locally there and did participate in the lower levels of the 9 court.

10          Q       Was that begun while my son was there with you?

11          A       No, Your Honor, it was not. He had gone before 12 that time.

13          Q       There is no question about that?

14          A       No, sir, no question whatsoever.

15          Q       What is the basis for your claim that you don't 16 really have a remedy before the Board? Is it just that it is 17 inadequate, or did you say the Board can't handle a claim by 18 a union member against a union?

19          A       That is right. There is no statute that con-20 stitutes that.

21          Q       That is what the Court said in Steele, wasn't it?

22          A       In Steele and Conley it said there was nothing 23 mechanical.

24          Q       That doesn't go for a suit against the employer 25 based on the collective bargaining contract that he signed.

1           A       That is right. I think if the plaintiffs for 2 one had been willing to forego any claims against their union 3 which had wronged them, and which we say wronged them, if he 4 had been willing to forego that and had also been willing to 5 submit themselves to a tribunal composed of "representatives" 6 from the ---

7           Q       I am suggesting Steele and Tungstall did not 8 hold that the employee may go to court on a breach of a 9 collective bargaining contract in a suit against the employer

10          A       I don't know whether ---

11          Q       Those cases may get you into court on a claim 12 of fair representation against the union.

13          A       I can't remember whether Mr. Justice White 14 was on the Court when Conley against Gibson was decided, but 15 the respondents here never answered and never attempted an 16 answer as to the significance of footnote four in Conley 17 against Gibson.

18               It is conceivable, I suppose, that some of the 19 members of the Court who signed that unanimous opinion might 20 not have seen what that footnote was clearly was saying. I 21 don't think that is true. That footnote overrules the case of 22 Hayes against Union Pacific Railroad. It says it was decided 23 incorrectly.

24               There was only one question in Hayes against the 25 Union Pacific and that was a case against the union and the

1 Q Let us get Steele and Tunstall clear first.

2 Neither of those would get you into court against the employer;
3 is that right?

4 A I think they would, based on their language.

5 They are certainly distinguishable on their facts as far as the 6 union being present.

7 Q They said there wasn't any remedy before the 8 Board because it was a suit against the union.

9 A That is one thing they said.

10 Q It is very critical, isn't it?

11 A I think it is one critical point of those 12 decisions, but I do think that they are both not just susceptible 13 by a sweeping argument to conclude from it that in cases where 14 invidious discrimination such as racial discrimination is 15 involved, then the doors of the Court are opened. I think 16 they are susceptible to that without stretching it beyond the 17 opinion, beyond what they say.

18 Of course, those cases preceded the Conley Case 19 and Hayes Case against the Union Pacific. That was purely and 20 simply a case where the employees were asking for an interpreta-21 tion of the collective bargaining agreement which we conceded 22 we are asking for, and the company was the prime defendant, and 23 it was named Union Pacific Railroad Company.

24 This court held in that case where the charge was 25 collusive discrimination, it was just like this one, unanimously,

1 that that case was decided wrong.

2 Now, if the Court meant that as I think they did,
3 then they were saying as I read that case that in all cases -- 4 now, I may not be able to prove this. I am asking for the 5 opportunity to prove it -- just the opportunity to prove that 6 this union representing them and this company got together at 7 their expense, and if I can prove that, and if any plaintiff 8 similarly situated can make a charge like this and make it 9 stick, then I submit under the footnote four, Conley against 10 Gibson, then they should have that right and the doors of the 11 Court should be open.

12 In Vaca against Sipes, there were three separate 13 viewpoints expressed. Mr. Justice Black adhered to his dissent
14 in Maddox and while I might personally agree with Mr. Justice 15 Black's position in that case, the case should be reversed, 16 I think, on the reasoning of the majority as expressed by 17 Mr. Justice White.

18 I don't believe that the concurring opinion of Mr.
19 Justice Fortas, which was joined in by Mr. Justice Harlan -- 20 and I have forgotten which other of the Court joined in him -- 21 doesn't deal with the issues in this case, but the majority 22 said the following things in Vaca.

23 Q Which case?

24 A Vaca against Sipes. I have the lawyers' Edition
25 17, Law Edition 2nd 842.

1 Q 386 U.S.

2 A "The Preemption Doctrine, however, has never 3 been rigidly applied to cases where it could not be inferred 4 that Congress intended exclusive jurisdiction to lie with the 5 NLRB."

6 This lies with the NLRB, but I think that case fits 7 the NARB. While these exceptions in no way underline the 8 preemption rule where applicable, they demonstrate the presump-9 tion over a given class of cases must depend upon the particular 10 interests being asserted and the effect upon the administration 11 of national labor policies of current judicial and administrative 12 remedies.

13 "It is not applicable to cases involving alleged 14 breaches of the union's duty of fair representation," which 15 I think applies here.

16 "It can be doubted whether the Board brings substan-17 tially greater expertise on these problems than do the courts
18 which have been engaged in this type of review since the Steele 19 decision.

20 "In addition to the above considerations, the unique 21 interests served by the duty of fair representation doctrine 22 have a profound effect, in our opinion, on the applicability 23 of the presumption rule to this class of cases."

24 The Court recognized in Steele that the congressional 25 grant of power to a union to act as exclusive collective

1 bargaining representative with its corresponding reduction in 2 the individual rights of the employee so represented would 3 raise grave constitutional problems if unions were free to 4 exercise this power to further racial discrimination."

5 Since that landmark duty, the decision has stood as 6 a bulwark to prevent arbitrary union conduct against individuals 7 stripped of redress of the provisions of Federal labor law.

8 "However, because these contractual remedies have been 9 devised and often controlled by the employer, they may well 10 prove unsatisfactory and unworkable for the individual grieving.
11 An obvious situation in which the employee should not be 12 limited is in the exclusive remedial procedures and when the 13 document of the employer amounts to a repudiation of these 14 contractual procedures." We say repudiation.

15 I reserve the balance of my time.

16 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: Mr. Fisher.

17 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DONALD W. FISHER, ESQ.

18 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

19 MR. FISHER: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 20 Court, at the beginning of my address, I should like to point 21 out first of all that this is not a Civil Rights Act suit and 22 point out as the court below pointed out in the memorandum 23 opinion that substantially the same plaintiffs have alleged a 24 violation of their civil rights under Title 7 and that particu-
25 lar matter is being processed at the present time in the Dent

1 Case to which reference was made in the Look article commented
2 upon by Mr. Acker.

3 So any possible unfair employment practices which 4 have been committed against these individuals, and I do not at 5 all concede or intimate that any were committed, is in the 6 process of litigation in the lower courts at the present time
7 and has no real connection with the instant case. The instant 8 case is a Railway Labor Act case.

9 Q Under Title 7 of the Civil Rights Act, can 10 the union be made a defendant?

11 A The union was made a defendant in that 12 proceeding, sir.

13 Q In addition to the employer?

14 A Yes, sir.

15 Q The group of the petitioners involved is a 16 racially mixed group, as Mr. Ackerman pointed out. There are 17 I believe, eight Negro members of the group and six white 18 members of the group. So it is not on the surface a normal 19 type of racial discrimination case where all of the members 20 are members of a minority racial or religious group.

21 The Brotherhood and the Carrier, and I am speaking 22 in this instance for both of them, holds no belief for racial 23 discrimination in any form. The Brotherhood and the Carrier 24 concede that no contract or arrangement which makes invidious
25 discriminations or hostile discriminations based on race, color

1 creed, national origin should be or could be countenanced
2 and that is not the issue in the case in its present posture.

3 The question involved is whether the plaintiffs 4 pleaded a sufficient attempt to exhaust administrative contractual 5 remedies to allow them to remain in court. The case has an 6 interesting parallel to the Court's decision in Vaca v. Sipes.
7 In Vaca v. Sipes, the union alone, the Court will recall, was 8 named in a law suit, but in the course of its opinion, the 9 court indicated that perhaps the employer should have been 10 joined in that particular action because, in fact, both the 11 employer and the union had interests and could be adversely 12 affected by the nature of the complaint.

13 Now, in Vaca v. Sipes, which was not a case arising 14 under the Railway Labor Act, the claim against the employer 15 for breach of a collective bargaining contract, for wrongful 16 discharge, if you will, was a legally cognizable claim. It 17 was a judiciable claim and the claim against the union for 18 duty of fair representation was a legally cognizable claim, 19 so this court quite properly held the two could perhaps in 20 future suits, subsequent to Vaca, should be joined together 21 in one action.

22 But in the present case, the claim of the employee
23 against the Carrier for violation of his employment rights 24 as embodied in a collective bargaining agreement and perhaps 25 in customs and practices has been uniformly held by this

1 Cour for a number of years to be nonjudicial. This claim 2 under no stretch of the imagination can be combined with a claim 3 against the union for alleged breach of the duty of fair 4 representation because, as Mr. Justice White indicated in 5 some of his questions, the matter must be submitted before the 6 National Railroad Adjustment Board.

7 Q Mr. Fisher, is the Railway Adjustment Board
8 still divided equally between railroad and Brotherhood?

9 A Yes, sir.

10 Q In this case, do they not allege that there has 11 been cooperation between the Brotherhood and the railroads?

12 A Not at the level, Mr. Justice, at which the 13 selections to the National Adjustment Board are made.

14 Q But they do allege they are working together 15 against their best interests, do they not?

16 A Yes, the allegation is ---

17 Q Then I have three short questions. If Congress 18 adopted an act which says if you and I have a dispute, you shall 19 be the sole arbiter as to which one is right, would that be 20 due process?

21 A I would not believe it would be, sir.

22 Q If Congress passed an act and said that if I 23 had a dispute with you and somebody else, then the two of you 24 would be the final arbiters as to which side was right; would 25 that be due process?

1           A       The two of us?

2           Q       Yes.

3           A       That is not as clear as the first answer. I 4 think there would be some question of constitutionality.

5           Q       What is the difference between that and this 6 situation?

7           A       The difference between that situation and this 8 situation is at the highest level, the carrier group and the 9 union groups appoint individuals who are designated by Federal 10 statute to act as arbitrators.

11           This Court has said that the National Railroad Adjust-12 ment procedure is compulsory arbitration, and I believe it would 13 be indeed presumptuous to assume that the arbitrators who are 14 appointed -- it is true they are appointed by a carrier group 15 a high level carrier group and a high level union group who would 16 not discharge their duties under law the same as all citizens.

17           Perhaps I am getting mixed in my syntax. I think the 18 presumptions certainly would be the carrier members and the 19 labor members abide by the law. Do not hostile or invidious 20 racial discrimination bring forth a correct constructive 21 application of railroad bargaining agreements?

22           As a matter of fact, I think it has been recognized 23 by this court that miscarriages of justice will probably result 24 if judges who are not experts in railroad matters and are not 25 familiar with railroad parlance should attempt to interpret

1 these agreements and customs and practices that also are 2 embodied in the agreement.

3 Q How do you get around Steele? It seems to me 4 this kind of remedy before the Board is not the kind of 5 remedy that has to be exhausted because of the factors that 6 Mr. Justice Marshall mentioned and others.

7 In Steele the defense was there. They had not 8 exhausted the remedies and the Court has just said that that 9 remedy is not much of a remedy when this great charge of 10 racial discrimination is made. Has that case ever been modified 11 so far as you know?

12 A No, sir. The Steele case was not a case 13 involving a claim for an interpretation of rights under an 14 agreement. That case deposited an illegal agreement. On its 15 face, it was discriminatory against the Negro firemen who 16 were classified as "non-promotable."

17 Therefore, there was not question for the Adjustment 18 Board, no question of interpretation. The contract was 19 simply nonmaintainable and the suit ---

20 Q Do you mean that the Court wasted its time 21 talking about this remedy in ther terms that it did?

22 A No, sir, Mr. Justice White.

23 Q They took it seriously?

24 A The Court in the Steele case, I believe, said 25 that this was not a matter that was to be heard before the

1 the Adjustment Board because the hostile discrimination 2 against these individuals engaged in by the union could not 3 be remedied before the Adjustment Board, and that was the 4 suit which established, as I understand it, the so-called 5 "Civil Action for Breach of the Duty of Fair Representation."

6 I concede on behalf of the Brotherhood that the 7 Brotherhood is amenable to suit, not under the terms of this 8 collective bargaining contract which is to be construed exclu-9 sively by the Adjustment Board, but is amenable to suit on the 10 theory that it failed to accord the plaintiffs their right of 11 fair representation, and I think this case raises the question 12 whether a plaintiff who is a railroad employee and is repre-
13 sented by the Brotherhood and is also a member of the Brother-14 hood, as in the Steele case, the Negro firemen were not members 15 of the Brotherhood nor were they eligible to be members of 16 the Brotherhood.

17 But in this case the plaintiffs are and are conceded
18 to be in the pleadings to be members of the Brotherhood. I 19 think the question arises whether they do not have the same 20 duty as other members of the Brotherhood to attempt to invoke 21 the procedures under the union constitution to, in other 22 words, require the Brotherhood to accord them their due 23 rights of representation.

24 I think this is very similar to the problem in 25 Conley versus Gibson but except in Conley versus Gibson the

1 question whether those particular employees who were in the 2 clerks craft or class had any union remedies to exhaust, 3 and I think, as a matter of fact, such as they are related 4 in the Conley v. Gibson decision that those clerks were not 5 members of the Brotherhood.

6 In any event, the question of their need to exhaust 7 remedies under the union constitution was not discussed and 8 not decided. I think that is the question for the Court to 9 decide here.

10 Q In the internal constitutional remedy? You
11 don't want to talk any more about the National Railway
12 Adjustment Board?

13 A No, what I say about the Railway Adjustment
14 Board is that for a vindication of their rights of seniority
15 and their contract rights as railroad employees, their rights 16 under the contract and customs and practices that tyhat is a 17 matter solely and exclusively within the jurisdiction of 18 the National Railroad Adjustment Board, and this has been 19 held many, many times.

20 There are no exceptions to that rule except in the 21 one instance when an employee accepts a discharge as final, 22 the Moor v. Illinois Central exception, and then attempts 23 to sue the carrier for damages only.

24 Q What does Hayes hold?

25 A I must say I am unable to give a description of

1 the Hayes case. I have prepared many, many cases, but I
2 cannot at this time state exactly what Hayes held.

3 Q Well, Hayes was a suit that charged discri-
4 mination against Negro employees much as here, in the enforce-5 ment of a collective bargaining contract.

6 It was held by a Court of Appeals by reasons of 7 provisions of the Railway Adjustment Board that the action
8 did not lie in the District Court.

9 A Yes.

10 Q In this court, footnote four disapproved that 11 holding in Conley v. Gibson?

12 A As I interpreted that, it means the union is 13 amenable to suit as was the case in Conley v. Gibson to require 14 the union to act on behalf of the employee because in Conley v.
15 Gibson, the particular breach of the duty of fair representa-
16 tion was alleged to be that the Brotherhood would process
17 grievances that were submitted by white members of the craft 18 but refused simply because of race to process similar grievances, 19 because of Negro members of the craft.

20 The Court's decision in Conley stated, that if 21 this were proven at trial to be a breach of duty of fair 22 representation, then the Brotherhood would be required to 23 process grievances, and I think if there were no contrary 24 information to the effect that that were wrong and that 25 should have been overruled---

1           Q       But Hayes actually was a suit against the 2 railroad. There was a charge of discrimination by the 3 railroad against these union members in the making of the 4 union assignments for promotions. That is precisely the 5 same sort of thing we have here, isn't it?

6           Here, as I understand it, this allegation is made 7 in this case as a conclusive agreement between the railroad 8 and the union, isn't it?

9           A       Not as to the agreement.

10          Q       Hayes, again, seems to only have been 11 against the railroad and not also against the union. Does 12 that make a difference?

13          A       Again, Mr. Justice Brennan, I am sorry; I 14 can't discuss the Hayes case in the detail I should.

15          Q       It is only two paragraphs long. Do you 16 think the significance of the footnote 4 only goes to the 17 action there involved in Conley and would breach the fair 18 representation against the union?

19          A       Yes, Conley was limited to the claim that the 20 union failed to accord these Negro members of the clerks 21 craft with the carrier their fair representation, and the 22 Court found on the basis of the allegations made that this 23 would be true.

24          Q       Well, my difficulty is that I have difficulty 25 seeing why Hayes bore at all on an action for breach of the

1 obligation to accord fair representation only in an action 2 against the railroad.

3 Q And I would suppose that Hayes should have 4 been obviously reversed under Tunstall.

5 It may well have been if the contract was clearly 6 discriminatory.

7 Q But Tunstall was clearly a claim in the 8 contract but not a negotiation of it, and Tunstall said 9 that there was -- you just can't get in court any time you 10 want to enforce the contract, but if you also allege a breach 11 in fair representation and racial discrimination that you
12 can come to Court, and that was stated in Tunstall

13 A In the Convey v. Gibson case, it has indicated 14 that the breach of the duty that we are talking about, I 15 think, in part, the fair representation is a breach of duty 16 on the part of the union, a breach of contract, when you say 17 interpretation of contract. If a carrier refuses to accord a 18 group of its employees certain promotional rights, that is a 19 breach of contract.

20 Q But Tunstall went on to say that in the 21 remedy of the employer before the Railroad Adjustment Board, 22 the remedy was not adequate because of the make-up of both of 23 them.

24 A I am not aware that the Supreme Court in those 25 cases held that the Board was not a fair tribunal or a proper

1 tribunal to bring a contract claim.

2 I state to the Court that it is clear that if the 3 contract is illegal and there is no real debate or there is 4 no doubt that the contract is an illegal and discriminatory
5 contract. Then there is in fact nothing for the Adjustment
6 Board to interpret or to construe.

7 Q As I read Hayes, and I know you have not 8 seen it yet---

9 A I have seen the case.

10 Q That was an action charging the railroads 11 with the discriminatory application in this matter of 12 seniority and promotion which stemmed from the collective 13 bargaining agreement, and the Court of Appeals in that case 14 said there is an adequate remedy before the Board and the 15 Court, as I read footnote 4, disapproved that holding.

16 In your case, I do not see that it happens
17 to involve allegation of discrimination between the railroad 18 and the union, but I don't see that footnote 4 makes that 19 inapplicable in your case.

20 A In the Conley v. Gibson case, that dealt with 21 the duty of the railroad to press the grievance when they 22 were asked to press a grievance. When the grievance was 23 filed, the Brotherhood refused to press it, and they did it 24 because of race, and this Court held that that was a duty, 25 a violation of duty of fair representation. We don't dispute

1 that. We say the question raised here, even though there may 2 arguably be an allegation that the Brotherhood refused to act 3 on behalf of these plaintiffs in a proper manner, since they 4 were members of the union, since they didn't have the duty
5 which by analogy we can find in Section 101(A)(4) or 411(A)(4)
6 of the Landrum-Griffin Act, the duty to attempt to get action 7 without suing the union, by the same token, we say when the 8 contract is admitted to be a proper contract, the contract 9 is not discriminatory, the contract is not being attacked, 10 but the railroad is breaching the contract and the union is 11 concluding with the railroad in the breach of this agreement; 12 that, however, it is not at all clear that this contract
13 gives them the rights as helpers to be promoted to carmen 14 as against the claim of apprentices to be promoted to carmen, 15 and this is a matter which involves the expertise of the 16 National Railroad Adjustment Board.

17 Q What expertise does the Railroad Adjustment
18 Board have to find to determine whether a man is being dis-19 criminated against because of his race?

20 A That is the issue which I think is justiciable
21 in the courts. We concede that is a legal justiciable claim 22 whether he is legally being discriminated against because of 23 his race.

24 To the extent that he is suing the union for 25 discriminating against him and is a member of the union, he

1 should attempt to exhaust his union remedy. That is our 2 position. He made no attempt, and it is clear from the 3 pleading that both in the original pleading and in the 4 amended pleading---

5 Q Is there anything in the procedure that will 6 give him compensation for what has been done to him in the 7 past?

8 A Pardon?

9 Q There is no grievance procedure or internal 10 Brotherhood procedures that would give him damages.

11 A Not damages but the Adjustment Board grants 12 back pay.

13 Q I for one have difficulty in jumping from 14 the union to the Adjustment Board.

15 A There is no such jumping. The claim against 16 the union is not a claim destined for resolution by the 17 Adjustment Board. We concede that.

18 Q My point is why most of your argument, as I 19 get it, is the assumption of what they cannot prove but the 20 point before us is whether they shall be given an opportunity 21 to try to prove that there has been collusion. That is all 22 they are asking for here.

23 A Yes, but we say also as a member of an 24 association before they attempt to sue the association for 25 a possible act of misfeasance on the part of a local agent

1 that it is proper and it is so recognized under Federal law
2 as mete and proper to attempt to get this matter resolved
3 internally within the organization. If they had done this 4 the first time they were aware of any discrimination, it is 5 entirely possible that the discrimination would have been 6 eliminated, but they never filed any grievance, any claim 7 within the confines of the Brotherhood to the effect that 8 officials at Birmingham were dicriminating against them. We 9 say that that type of exhaustion and remedy under the union 10 constitution is necessary under law and it is necessary in 11 fairness to the union because the union can be held liable 12 for the action of its agent, but it should have some oppor-
13 tunity to take corrective action.

14 Q Would you say if they had pursued those 15 remedies and stopped there they would be properly here?

16 A Yes, if they had attempted, if they had made 17 a fair, bone fide reasonable attempt which they did not make 18 and which they concede they did not make and found they were 19 getting no relief, I think pursuant to the law as it exists 20 today they might have then turned to the courts and sought 21 relief, but they made no attempts.

22 Q Without going to the Board?

23 A The remedy I am talking about is the remedy
24 against the union, the remedy that they sought in Conley vs.
25 Gibson.

1 Q I asked if they would be proper in this case,
2 not whatever they are asking for. Would they be proper here?
3 Would you be out then so far as this case is concerned?

4 A Not in respect to their claim for application 5 or interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement.
6 That is a matter to the question of whether they were actually 7 entitled to be upgraded to carmen or whether apprentices were 8 improperly upgraded instead of them which is a question that, 9 under all of the decisions of this Court, it seems to me,
10 must be resolved by the National Railroad Adjustment Board.

11 Q Then your answer would be that even though 12 they had gone through all of the grievance procedures, if 13 they wanted the relief they are seeking in this case, they 14 must also have gone to the arbitration board?

15 A Yes. The relief under the contract is 16 available fore the adjustment board. The relief against the 17 union and the relief for breach of the duty, the relief for 18 racial discrimination, for breach of the duty of fair repre-19 sentation is a claim which is judicially cognizable for 20 which recovery may be made after proper proof, but our position 21 here, again, is that there is this duty, this preliminary duty 22 which is, I think, well-embodied in Federal law to attempt to 23 exhaust the remedies available to them, and they concede -- I
24 do want to emphasize to the Court that they at no point ever 25 denied that there are remedies. They refused in their pleading

1 to state that the contract remedies are and what the union 2 constitutional remedies are, but they have taken a rather 3 cavalier attitude toward these remedies and say there is no
4 need for us to attempt to exhaust them because this is a 5 racial case. I presume we are immune from that requirement 6 which is presumably imposed upon all other persons.

7 Q How long would it normally take them to go
8 through the grievance procedure?

9 A Not very long.

10 Q How long?

11 A Are you talking about the railroad agreement?

12 Q I am talking about the grievance in this case.

13 A The grievance is two-fold.

14 Q Let's take both of them together.

15 A Both of them together, I believe they could 16 have processed the grievances fully in less than two years.

17 Q Less than two years?

18 A Less than two years, yes, sir.

19 Q If they had to go to the arbitration board 20 after that to get the relief sought, how long would it take 21 to go through there?

22 A I was assuming the arbitration board decision 23 would also be handed down, Mr. Chief Justice. I think the 24 entire matter could have been processed on the property to 25 the readjustment board and also the claim within the union's

1 tribunals to make the union do what they say the union
2 wouldn't do in less than two years.

3 Q I thought counsel said something about three 4 years before the board, that there was a concession to that 5 effect.

6 A I said less than three years but my co-counsel 7 for the carrier pointed out a report which I then read and 8 the backlog is less than a year on the second division. I 9 am of the opinion---

10 Q You say three years.

11 A I say now two years or less the entire 12 matter could have been processed through all of the tribunals 13 involved.

14 Q Through the courts, after the board to the 15 court?

16 A Decision of the Board is final and binding 17 except certain limited grounds of review, so unless those 18 grounds are available---

19 Q If they are available?

20 A If they are available, I would hate to say 21 what the state of the docket in Birmingham would be. They 22 would be longer.

23 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: The Court is in recess
24 until 12:30.

25 [Whereupon, at 12:00 the Court was recessed, to reconvene at 12:30 of the same date.]

1 AFTERNOON SESSION

2 12:30 p.m.

3 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: Mr. Fisher, you may 4 continue your argument.

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DONALD W. FISHER (resumed)

6 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

7 MR. FISHER: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 8 court.

9 To go back to the point which I left at the noon
10 recess, in talking about the Tunstall case and the Steele case, 11 it seems to me that the carrier and the Brotherhood again say 12 that regardless of who the parties were in these cases, the 13 cases involve the duty of a labor union to accord to minority 14 members of a craft or class fair representation.

15 I think that is put in sharp outline by the opening 16 statement of Chief Justice Stone, who said that the question of 17 whether the Railway Labor Act imposes on a labor organization 18 acting by authority of the statute as the exclusive bargaining 19 representative of a craft or class of railway employees, the 20 duty to represent all the employees of the craft without dis-
21 crimination because of their race, and if so, whether the courts 22 have jurisdiction to protect the minority of the craft or class 23 from the violation of such obligation.

24 And to point out further, regardless of who the 25 parties were, that the court also noted that there no differences

1 between the parties in the Field case or in the Tunstall case, 2 for that matter, as to the interpretation of the contract on 3 page 205 of the court's opinion, nor are there any differences 4 as to the interpretation of contract which, by the act are 5 committed to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Adjustment Board.

6 Now in the Tunstall case, it is true that it was 7 a discriminatory application, that the union was the guilty
8 party, the most guilty party that violated the duty of fair 9 representation.

10 Now, again in Conley versus Gibson the thrust was 11 against the union for refusing to process these grievances, and 12 and we concede in this case that the union cannot discriminate.
13 There is no problem in my mind about that -- this union cannot 14 discriminate. I see my time is up.

15 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: You may finish your 16 statement, if you wish.

17 MR. FISHER: Thank you, Your Honor. I merely want 18 to say this case prevents the question when you are suing the 19 union for violation of that duty, and the plaintiff is a member, 20 even though he is a Negro, he is a member of the union, doesn't 21 he have the same obligation that other union members of the union 22 have, of attempting to utilize his internal remedy, and the 23 question of the interpretation of this contract. There is no 24 conceded --

25 Q Why did the court say that the administrative remedy

1 was inadequate in Steele and in Tunstall -- they said that part 2 of the reason was that it was not an unbiased tribunal, that 3 both parties who were accused of discriminating against the 4 plaintiff were sitting there deciding this dispute. That was 5 part of the reason, was it not?

6 A I think they did make that observation.

7 Q If the union who was sitting on one side was so 8 biased and so unreliable as not to furnish a decent administra-
9 tive remedy, why would you suggest that the union would be un-10 biased and would furnish a suitable remedy inside the union?

11 A Well, may I answer the question this way, Mr. Justice.
12 The court observed in those days that the adjustment board would 13 not permit individual plaintiffs to go before it. It said in 14 over 400 cases ---

15 Q I understand that.

16 A Let me attempt to answer it directly, then, if I may, 17 and if I have not been direct.

18 In that case they were talking about the brief of the 19 union, of its duty of fair representation. They said this is 20 not the claim that should go to the adjustment board. I concede 21 they perhaps said it would not be a fair tribunal in weighing 22 the union's duty because it was a union appointed representative 23 on the tribunal.

24 I am saying, and I hope I have been clear in this, 25 that the question of contract interpretation, pure and simple,

1 is the only question that I believe is properly referable to the 2 adjustment board. And I am conceding, with Justice Marshall 3 and the other Justices on the court that the claim for breach of 4 the duty to treat members of a craft or class fairly is a claim 5 that is cognizable in the courts.

6 I think on that claim, which is a judicially 7 cognizable claim, since he is a member of the union, suing his 8 union, he should make some attempt to exhaust his remedies. If 9 he had done that years ago he might have had immediate and 10 instantaneous relief. He made no attempt and admits that he 11 made no attempt to exhaust his remedies.

12 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: Thank you.

13 MR. FISHER: Thank you.

14 MR. ACKER: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the 15 court, just a couple of remarks. As I understand Mr. Fisher, he 16 is saying that these plaintiffs must have gone three separate 17 routes and that they must fragment their claim. They must take 18 their union claim to the union, and their claim against the 19 company to the company grievance machinery and thereafter to 20 the Railroad Adjustment Board.

21 I do not think that could be done in two years.
22 Whether you did it simultaneously or not, at any rate he is 23 requiring a fragmentation. He is saying there is no right at 24 any time anywhere to sue the union and the company together 25 before one tribunal.

1           That ground was not in the motion to dismiss. They 2 do not say in the motion to dismiss that you have no right in 3 this court to sue these two entities together. They say that 4 here, as to footnote 4 of Conley against Gibson I think what 5 Mr. Fisher is saying is that footnote 4 went further than the 6 court needed to go to decide that particular case and therefore 7 it is dictum, and he might be right there.

8           But I do think that what the court said in that 9 footnote 4 was carefully reasoned and was correct and should 10 become the law in a case where very clearly that question that 11 appeared in Hayes against Union Pacific is presented. There is 12 no question about that in this case.

13           One other thing --

14           MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: Make it brief.

15           MR. ACKER: One other thing. The remark was made 16 and was made in brief that Mr. Dent had availed himself of the 17 remedy provided him -- or attempted to because he has been 18 unsuccessful thus far -- remedy under the Civil Rights Act, 19 section 64, in which I am not involved.

20           I will say only one thing more. This case here 21 certainly should not rise or fall on what one of the petitioners 22 here is doing in another case outside of the control of counsel 23 in this case. But if Mr. Dent is successful there ultimately, 24 after having been thrown out there as he was here, he will not 25 be entitled under the Civil Rights Act to damages which is what

1 we are talking about when we talk about loss of seniority and 2 job rights. We are talking about money.

3 Thank you.
