MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: No. 41, Securities and Exchange Commission, petitioner, versus National Securities, Incorporated.

THE CLERK: Counsel are present.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN: Mr. Solicitor General.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF ERWIN N. GRISWOLD, ESQ.

ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

MR. GRISWOLD: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the court.

This case is here on a writ of certiorari to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. It involves the construction and application of the McCarran-Ferguson Act and its inter-relation with Section 10-b of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

The text of those two statutes is given on pages 33 and 34 of the Government's brief in this case. I would call attention to the provision in Section 10-b, which makes it unlawful for any person to use or employ in connection with the purchase or sale of any security registered on a National Security Exchange or any security not so registered. The net result of those two phrases is simply to apply to any security, any fraudulent device as defined by the rules of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the relevant rule 10-b-5 is set out at the bottom of page 34 and on page 35.

1 The text of the McCarran-Ferguson Act is on page 33
2 of our brief, and the relevant portion there, although it is 3 all relevant, but the part that comes closest is Section 2-b, 4 "No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair 5 or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of 6 regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee
7 or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates 8 to the business of insurance."

9 And I would suggest that the key words in that pro-10 vision of the McCarran-Ferguson Act are "the business of 11 insurance."

12 The present case began in March, 1965, when the 13 Securities and Exchange Commission filed its petition in the 14 District Court for Arizona. It sought to have that court 15 enjoin the respondent here, National Securities, Inc., and its 16 subsidiary and certain officers and employees, from violating 17 Section 10-b, and rule 10-b-5, on the ground of asserted fraud 18 in connection with the purchase or sale of securities.

19 In due course, the defendants filed a motion for 20 judgment on the pleadings, or, in the alternative, for summary 21 judgment. The motion for judgment on the pleadings was 22 granted by the District Court, and this was affirmed by the 23 Court of Appeals.

24 As the Court of Appeals stated in its opinion, "In 25 this situation, the allegations in the amended complaint must

1 be presumed to be true."

2 And these allegations may be summarized this way.

3 It is alleged that the respondent, National Securities, 4 Inc., is a holding company, which owned two-thirds of the 5 slightly more than a million shares outstanding of National 6 Life, which was an Arizona Insurance Company.

7 Producers Life Insurance Company was another Arizona 8 company. It had some 881,000 outstanding shares held by 9 approximately 14,000 stockholders in many States.

10 In other words, it was quite widely distributed.

11 The allegation is that the defendants formed an 12 illegal scheme, contrary to Section 10-b, under which National 13 Securities would acquire control of Producers Life, National 14 Life, and Producers Life would be consolidated, and the con-
15 solidated company would pay a large part of National Securities' 16 cost of acquiring control of Producers Life.

17 In carrying out this scheme, National Securities 18 purchased the stock in Producers which was held by four of 19 the Producers' directors, and agreed to pay them a very large 20 sum for their agreement not to compete with Producers Life or 21 any successor company.

22 And National Securities also purchased from Producers
23 Life more than 50,000 shares of its treasury stock, and assumed 24 some $600,000 of liabilities of Producers Life, arising out of 25 previous agreements which had been made with other persons

1 not to compete with it.

2 It was further alleged that National Securites did
3 not disclose to Producers Life or its stockholders that it 4 intended to impose both of these liabilities with respect to 5 agreements not to compete upon the corporation which would 6 result from the planned consolidation of Producers Life and 7 National Life.

8 After obtaining control of Producers Life, according 9 to the allegations again, National Securities caused the latter 10 to mail to its stockholders materials soliciting them to 11 approve the proposed consolidation with National Life. And 12 it was then alleged that this material was false and misleading 13 on four grounds:

14 A. That it did not disclose the liability on the 15 agreements not to compete.

16 B. That it predicted substantial consolidated 17 earnings, without disclosing that Producers Life and National 18 Life had each had losses in the prior year.

19 C. It set forth on the pro forma balance sheet for 20 the consolidated company an asset shown as treasury stock in 21 the amount more than a million dollars that was alleged to be 22 illusory, and finally, that it did not disclose/in its report 23 to the Arizona Insurance Commission, and National Life had 24 written down the value of its investment in Producers Life by 25 more than a million dollars.

1 The court allowed the defendants to submit the 2 proposal to the Arizona Insurance Commission, and to the 3 stockholders, both approved the plan and it was carried out.
4 It was then that the Securities and Exchange Commission filed 5 the amended complaint, which is now before the court, seeking 6 such relief as might be appropriate under the circumstances.

7 In its answer to the amended complaint, and in its 8 motion for judgment on the pleadings, the defendant contended
9 that the District Court has no jurisdiction because the matters 10 complained of are entirely within State jurisdiction, as 11 provided in the McCarran Act, thus raising the issue which is 12 here.

13 The District Court accepted this contention as one 14 of its grounds of decision, and the Court of Appeals affirmed
15 the District Court's judgment on this ground alone.

16 The opinion of the Court of Appeals is in rather 17 sweeping terms. The relevant portions for this part of my 18 argument appears on pages 156 and 157 of the appendix near the 19 bottom of page 156, "We are left, then, with a general 20 intention to set the insurance business outside the scope of 21 all existing and future legislation regulating Interstate 22 Commerce without any more direct evidence that Congress had 23 in mind the Securities Exchange Act.

24 "However, Congress was apparently seeking to define 25 an exemption for insurance," and then the word is

1 "conterminous", but I suppose we usually say "co-terminous" --
2 "with its power to regulate Interstate Commerce."

3 The court is there saying that with respect to 4 insurance insofar as Congress would have power to regulate any 5 aspect of it under its commerce power, the effect of the 6 McCarran Act is to say that that power is not being exercised.

7 Over on page 157, just above the middle, the court 8 said, "An equally vital purpose of the McCarran Act was to 9 preserve intact from any Federal intrusion based on the 10 commerce clause existing and future State regulations of the 11 insurance industry."

12 Thus, the sole issue here is whether this construc-13 tion of the McCarran-Ferguson Act and determination of its 14 effect are correct, or whether the facts alleged are suffi-15 cient to state a cause of action under Section 10-b of the 16 Securities Exchange Act of 1934, despite the provisions of the 17 McCarran-Ferguson Act, which was passed in 1946.

18 I will now turn to the legal questions involved in 19 this case. It may be that I have a somewhat narrow ledge to 20 stand on, but I think the footing is firm.

21 When Section 10-b was enacted in 1934, there was no 22 doubt that it applied to fraud and the purchase and sale of 23 all securities. You will recall the phrase in the statute is 24 "any security," including those in insurance companies. This 25 was true despite the fact that it was the common understanding

1 at that time that the Federal Government had no power to 2 regulate "the business of insurance."

3 A clear distinction was evident between the business 4 of insurance on the one hand and securities of a company which 5 is engaged in conducting the insurance business.

6 In 1944, the Southeastern Underwriters case was 7 decided, followed in 1946 by the enactment of the McCarran-
8 Ferguson Act.

9 The Southeastern Underwriters case undoubtedly 10 involved the conduct of the business of insurance, the way in 11 which insurance companies operate together in fixing their 12 rates, and had nothing to do with transactions in securities 13 of an insurance company.

14 The distinction was explicitly made in the McCarran-
15 Ferguson Act itself, where it said that no act of Congress
16 should supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose 17 of regulating the business of insurance.

18 This was emphasized in the report of the House 19 Committee set forth on page 24 of our brief, where the 20 committee said, "It is not the intention of Congress in the 21 enactment of this legislation to clothe the States with any 22 power to regulate or tax the business of insurance beyond that 23 which they had been held to possess prior to the decision of 24 the United States Supreme Court in the Southeastern Under-25 writers Association case."

1 In short the function of the McCarran-Ferguson Act 2 was to restore the status quo, to put things back where they 3 were before the Southeastern Underwriters case was decided, 4 except that it was made explicit that the Sherman Act, the 5 Clayton Act, and the Federal Trade Commission Act should apply
6 to the business of insurance to the extent that such business
7 is not regulated by State law.

8 It was only with respect to these three statutes that 9 there is any indication that Federal law should apply only if 10 there was an applicable provision in State law.

11 Throughout their history, both before and after the 12 enactment of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the provisions of the 13 Securities law, relating to securities, and the securities laws 14 don't relate to the business of insurance -- the provisions of 15 the securities laws relating to securities have been regarded 16 as applicable to securities in insurance companies.

17 We have listed many of these instances in the 18 footnotes on pages 16 and 17 of our brief.

19 Thus, issues of insurance companies' securities had 20 been registered under Section 6 of the Securities Act of 1933, 21 securities of insurance companies listed on National Exchanges 22 have been registered with the Commission under Section 12 of 23 the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, persons who buy and sell 24 insurance company securities have been registered under 25 Sections 15-b of the Securities Exchange Act, investment

1 companies with portfolios consisting of insurance company
2 securites have been registered under Section 8 of the Invest-
3 ment Company Act, and persons selling insurance company
4 securities in a fraudulent manner have been enjoined and con-
5 victed in a considerable number of cases.

6 The decision of the court below, which fails to 7 recognize the distinction between the business of insurance, 8 to which the McCarran-Ferguson Act applies, and dealings in 9 securities which happen to be stocks in insurance companies, 10 would sweep all this away, and broadly exempt all dealings
11 in insurance securities from application of the Federal laws.

12 This is the effect of the decision below, where the 13 court said, "Congress was apparently seeking to define an 14 exemption for insurance conterminous with its power to regu-15 late interstate commerce."

16 If Congress was intending to do that, obviously it 17 swept away all application of the securities laws to dealings 18 in insurance securities.

19 Q Mr. Solicitor General, one of my difficulties 20 in reading the briefs in advance of argument of this case 21 which continues now, is that you and your adversary don't 22 really seem to agree as to what this case is about.

23 Is that fair to say?

24 A Well, I think there is something about that.
25 Mr. Frank raises a lot of other questions which present some

1 difficulties which were not decided by the ---

2 Q I am not referring to the purchase and sale
3 difficulties. I am talking, really, about the broad question
4 to which you are now addressing yourself, and you are quoting
5 to us some very broad language of the United States Circuit 6 Court of Appeals, but the decision was on the part of the 7 District Court, as affirmed by the Court of Appeals, simply 8 that the McCarran Act foreclosed the undoing of a merger that 9 had been approved by the Arizona Commission.

10 That is the holding in this case, isn't it?

11 A Not exactly, Mr. Justice Stewart. We didn't ask 12 for the undoing of the merger in the e- exclusively, as our 13 only relief, in the amended complaint. We asked for such 14 relief as would be appropriate under the circumstances, and it 15 may well be that the merger should be left merged, but that 16 individuals who have profited by the transaction should be 17 required in some way to account, either by disgorging to the 18 merged company, or by making payments to the shareholders who 19 did not participate from it.

20 All the questions of relief are left undecided, both 21 by the District Court and the Court of Appeals, because they 22 didn't get to them, having held that the McCarran-Ferguson Act 23 eliminated the whole matter.

24 Q Well, I didn't under the District Court or the 25 Court of Appeals really to have held that the 1933 Act or the

1 1934 Act was completely inapplicable, or completely inappli-
2 cable to the dealings in securities of insurance companies.

3 A Well, Mr. Justice, I can't read that language on 4 page 157 of the Court of Appeals in any other way, "An 5 equally vital purpose of the McCarran Act was to preserve
6 intact from any Federal intrusion based on the Commerce clause
7 existing in future State regulation of the insurance industry."

8 And that would apply to any fraudulent sale of 9 insurance stocks.

10 Now, it is true that this case does involve a merger
11 of an insurance company, and Mr. Frank argues that approving 12 a merger is in some way analogous to the question of chart-13 ering an insurance company.

14 I find it difficult, even with that, to find any-15 thing in the McCarran-Ferguson Act which says that when this 16 is done in a fraudulent way that the provisions of the Securities 17 and Exchange Act are superseded, are written off, are in 18 effect repealed.

19 I pointed out that the practice has been consistently 20 to the contrary, both before the McCarran-Ferguson Act was 21 passed, and I think what is very relevant, before the South-
22 eastern Underwriters case was decided.

23 It was then regarded as the appropriate construction
24 of the Securities Act that they were applicable to transactions 25 for purchases and sales, in the language of the statute, with

1 respect to insurance companies as to any other securities, and 2 we think that the effect of the decision of the Ninth Circuit
3 is to make the Securities statutes inapplicable to trans-
4 actions, to dealings, to actions, with respect to securities 5 in insurance companies, and it is our contention that that is 6 not the proper construction of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 7 which relates to the business of insurance, to the things
8 done by insurance companies with respect to their policy 9 holders, but not to transactions done by other persons with 10 respect to securities in insurance companies.

11 There obviously are other Federal statutes of 12 general application which were applicable to insurance before 13 the McCarran-Ferguson Act was passed, and which continued to 14 be applicable to insurance thereafter. These include the 15 Copyright and Patent laws.

16 An insurance company is not exempt from the tele-17 phone tax or the Social Security tax. It is not free to 18 issue counterfeit money if it doesn't have enough to meet its 19 legitimate claims. It is subject to the postal laws, in-20 cluding those making it a crime to use the mails for the 21 purposes of fraud, and I would point out that Section 10-b 22 is based on the postal laws as well as on Interstate Commerce, 23 and that the mails were so used, and that there are a sizeable 24 number of prosecutions, before and after the McCarran-25 Ferguson Act, for using the mails to defraud with respect to

1 the sale of insurance securities.

2 These matters are not referred to in the McCarran-
3 Ferguson Act, but it cannot be supposed that Congress con-
4 templated any change in the law with respect to them.

5 As I have said, we are dealing here with a statute
6 which is based in part on the postal power. There is no
7 reason to think that Congress in passing the McCarran-Ferguson 8 Act intended to allow an insurance company to use the mails to 9 defraud stockholders.

10 Q Mr. Solicitor General, I take it then you would 11 say this is because this is not a matter of regulating in-12 surance, but of regulating stock transactions, that if there
13 are Federal regulations as to what should be in a proxy 14 statement in connection with the merger conflict between the 15 Federal regulation and the State regulation, and the State 16 regulation approves the proxy statement and the Federal 17 authorities disapproves, a Federal Act governs?

18 A At this particular time, there was no Federal 19 provision with respect to ---

20 Q But you would say that the Federal law would 21 govern?

22 A The Federal law would govern to the extent that 23 the fraud was proved and found by the court.

24 Yes, Mr. Justice.

25 Q What if there had been no Southeastern case,

1 none at all. Is it your belief, that under the law as it
2 then existed, that Congress could have passed a bill regul-
3 ating this very thing under the Commerce clause?

4 A Yes, Mr. Justice, It is our view that that is 5 just what Congress did do in 1933 and 1934, that it passed a 6 law regulating transactions of purchase and sale of any 7 security, and that that included securities in insurance
8 companies, and was so construed by the Commission, and in a 9 very few cases by the courts, between 1933-34, and 1944, when 10 the Southeastern Underwriters case was decided.

11 Q I asked you that question because I had been 12 under the impression, having summed up evidence in the South-
13 eastern Underwriters case, that it was the purpose of Congress 14 to do away entirely with this effect, was relying on the 15 Commerce clause was concerned in the Insurance Business Act.
16 I am sure it is the Insurance Business Act.

17 Would you not have, if that were the case, would you 18 not have to show that even without that, if that case had 19 never been decided, you had not changed the rule, that Congress
20 could have and would have passed this Act?

21 A Yes, Mr. Justice. That is exactly the argument
22 we do make, that Congress had this power and exercised it 23 before 1944, and that for that reason the enactment of the 24 McCarran-Ferguson Act, which was intended to restore the 25 status quo, did not and was not intended to take away the

1 effect of the statutes which Congress had previously passed 2 with respect to securities.

3 Q Have there been any cases before the South-
4 eastern that were so held?

5 A No cases in this court, certainly. There was 6 a modestly, considerable amount of practical experience in 7 the Securities Exchange Commission, including registration 8 of securities and things of that sort.

9 Q It had not be challenged on that ground?

10 A Never has been challenged on that ground that 11 I am aware of.

12 Q But, Mr. Solicitor General, I would like to 13 direct your attention again to this line of thought.

14 As I understand your adversary, he says that the 15 merger, the merger itself of these companies was approved by 16 the Insurance Commissions.

17 Now, arguably, I suppose, you could say that the 18 merger is certainly an insurance company. We are talking 19 about the merger of two insurance companies here. Then along 20 comes the SEC and says that this aspect of that merger is 21 subject to Federal law, namely, the terms of the offer of 22 exchange, the solicitation of the stockholders, and says that 23 therefore it is in conflict with the McCarran Act, because 24 this is something, the merger, that is insurance business, it 25 is a merger of two insurance companies.

1 I don't profess to state ---

2 A Mr. Justice, I think you have stated the issue
3 very clearly, and very precisely. There is, of course, some 4 overlap here. I think a considerable part of our concern 5 with the sweeping nature of the opinion of the Court of 6 Appeals, which says that the McCarran-Ferguson Act wiped out 7 completely all aspects of the securities regulation with 8 respect to insurance.

9 When you come to the question of a merger, I think 10 it is a nice question as to what is meant by the business of 11 insurance, and I think an argument can be made, which is the 12 one we stand on, that the business of insurance relates to the 13 internal operations of insurance, and not to dealings in 14 securities which Congress has so clearly taken over for 15 Federal authority.

16 Q Let me see if I understand you, because I do 17 believe this is where the argument of the two parties comes 18 in collision.

19 What you are saying is that perhaps a merger of two 20 insurance companies is the business of insurance in some 21 respects, but to the extent that it involves the solicitation 22 of stockholders' consent, that that aspect of it is not the 23 business of insurance?

24 A The dealing with the security holders, we would 25 contend is not "the business of insurance," as was meant by

1 Congress when it used those words in the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

2 There is one decision of this court which is pretty 3 close in many ways, which is the United Benefit Life Insurance
4 Company case decided only a short while ago.

5 There, the company was undoubtedly an insurance 6 company, and the decision of the court that it could not sell 7 variable annuity policies without registering them with the 8 SEC is directly that the securities of an insurance company 9 are subject to the securities law, and are not taken out of the 10 provisions of the securities laws by the McCarran-Ferguson 11 Act.

12 In that case the ---

13 Q The holding in that case was that that company 14 was engaged in selling securities, not insurance policies.
15 Suppose that the insurance company went into the telephone 16 business, they had to pay the tax on telephones?

17 A That would be applicable to the variable annuity 18 life insurance company, which sold nothing but variable
19 annuities, but this -- but the United Benefit Life Insurance 20 Company was undoubtedly an insurance company. It sold large 21 quantities of what everybody would agree was insurance. It 22 also sought to sell variable annuities, and this court held 23 that it couldn't do it without registering them with the SEC, 24 and that, it seems to me, is inevitably a direct decision that 25 the securities of an insurance company are subject to the

1 registration provisions of the securities laws, despite the 2 fact that Congress has passed the McCarran-Ferguson Act, or 3 to put it another way, that dealings in the securities of an 4 insurance company are not "the business of insurance," within 5 the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

6 There are other cases which are close, but I think 7 that the United Benefit case comes very close to supporting 8 our position. The decision of the court below would wipe out 9 every application of the securities laws to securities in 10 insurance companies. This is contrary to the long-continued
11 understanding in this area. It is not required by the lang-12 uage of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, and it is inconsistent with 13 that Act's purposes.

14 Accordingly, the judgment below should be reversed
15 and the case remanded for consideration there of the other 16 questions involved in the case.

17 Q A good many insurance companies, particularly 18 life insurance companies, these days, are owned not by stock-
19 holders, or by shareholders, but are owned by the policy 20 holders.

21 I suppose a merger of two mutual companies would be, 22 I suppose those policy holders as owners -- I guess they are 23 specifically exempted, aren't they?

24 A We would have to find something, Mr. Justice, 25 that would constitute securities in such companies before

1 Section 10-b would apply, because it applies only to purchases
2 and sales of any security.

3 Now, conceivably in a mutual company, you could say 4 that the policy holders are security holders.

5 Q Except I believe there are express exemptions
6 in the Securities Act, aren't there?

7 A With respect to the mutual companies?

8 Q Yes.

9 A There may be, I am not sure.

10 Q There may be.

11 A With respect to the security holders? I am not 12 sure.

13 Q I am not sure.
