P R O C E E D I N G S

MR. COX: Mr. Justice Black, and may it please
the Court:

Yesterday I pointed out that since the Federal Reserve Act of 1913, managing other people's monies in various fiduciary capacities has been a traditional banking function, and that the individual managing agency account has been one way of performing that function. It allows testamentary trusts, intervivos trusts, executiveships and the like and other forms of agencies.

In the beginning the Federal Reserve Board collowed the common law and forbade national banks to commingle the assets of different beneficiaries or different principals. About 1920 it began to relax that rule and in 1937 there came a major relaxation that permitted the comingling of the ratings of different trusts, executiveships and guardianships and the like. And under that new regulation the now familiar common trust fund grew and flourished. It is partly, I think, because of the economies of comingling which reduce the management costs and partly because of the advantages of diversification.

Q And that, you say, goes back to 1913?

A Well, the statute goes back to 1913; the comingling was not authorized until about 1920; then on a very small scale and then comingling on the scale that we are now

1 familiar with for the common trust fund, came in in 1937.

2 But, in 1937 the world was not relaxed so far as individual 3 managing agency accounts were concerned, which --

4 Q That is for inter vivos trustees or testi-
5 mentary trustees --

6 A Exactly, sir --

7 Q --that could participate in a comingled fund 8 for --

9 A Yes. The effects of Regulation 9 which is 10 in issue in the next case is to extend to managing agencies
11 the sole privilege of comingling that have proved so success-
12 ful and so free from abuse in the case of trusts and that kind 13 of fiduciary capacity.

14 Indeed, when you come to look at Regulation 9 you 15 will see that it treats comingling strict trust funds and 16 managing agency funds in exactly parallel capacity. Well, 17 the reasons for this were very well stated somewhat later by 18 the Federal Reserve Board in a letter to Congress speaking of 19 the public interest in having banks continue to offer this 20 kind of managing agency comingled investment account, in a 21 letter quoted in the back of our brief on Page 45-A, where it
22 pointed out that there were three advantages: first was a 23 means of performing a traditional banking function while 24 efficiently and at less cost; second that it provided competi-
25 tion to the mutual fund, which of course in these cases,

1 is seeking to preserve its monopolistic or quasimonopolistic
2 position free from competition. And third, in special cases
3 it enabled a combination of investment and other special 4 fiduciary services.

5 During the time that Regulation 9 was under con-
6 sideration, the Securities and Exchange Commission took the 7 position that any comingled fund in managing agency accounts
8 would be subject to the Investment Company Act. It said that 9 the interest in the funds would be securities; that the fund
10 or the bank would be an issuer or underwriter and that con-
11 sequently there had to be registration under the Investment
12 Company Act.

13 I would point out in this connection, however, 14 indeed, emphasize that while the SEC and Chairman Carey and 15 Chairman Cohen, stood very stoutly on the position that th 16 must be conformative with the Investment Company Act, they 17 never took the view that the managing agency comingled invest-
18 ment account was unlawful or in any way against the public
19 interest. Indeed, from the very beginning, as Chairman Carey 20 and later Chairman Cohen and the staff all indicated that they 21 would look favorably at exempting a managing agency comingled
22 investment account from any provisions of the Investment
23 Company Act that might be a bar to performing the functions
24 authorized by the Comptroller under Regulation 9 and later 25 reported by the Federal Reserve Board.

1 Q Now, suppose that a single investor, under 2 the 1940 act won't be applicable?

3 A No; not at all. The 1940 Act would not be 4 applicable to the type of common trust fund involving an 5 inter vivos or testamentary trust because it is expressly 6 exempted.

7 Q Nor would it be applicable to management
8 -- for a single investor?

9 A No. That's correct. If we see -- if the 10 SEC said brought it under the Investment Company Act.

11 Q Wasn't it the issuing of certificates of 12 participation or whatever you call it --

13 A I believe not, Justice White. I think their 14 position was that even if there were no piece of paper, it
15 would be the interest, the undivided interest would neverthe-16 less be regarded as something that brought them under the 17 Investment Company Act.

18 That's my understanding of the test matter.

19 Of course, as we do it, there are those certificates.

20 Q For a purpose, I suppose?

21 A For the purpose of carrying -- we say for the 22 purpose of carrying out our fiduciary responsibility and for 23 no other purpose.

24 There is a controversy between the Comptroller and 25 the Commission which led to Congressional hearings. During

1 that controversy Citibank developed a plan in which it was 2 believed would comply best with the requirements of the banking
3 laws and be satisfactory to the SEC and the Investment Com-
4 pany Act.

5 Now, what he contemplated was this: Citibank would 6 continue to receive assets in a fiduciary capacity under the 7 relation of managing agent and principal with all the 8 fiduciary duties, or with discretion to invest those through a 9 common fund. To the extent necessary to comply with the 10 Investment Company Act the common fund or account, as it came 11 to be called, was given a separate structure. The principals, 12 the customer investors, were given certificates of participa-13 tion which were ~~not~~-assignable, non-transferable, which would 14 terminate upon their death.

15 The certificate holders were given the right to 16 choose as they wished a committee made up of five individuals, 17 as it developed; two of whom were not required to be connected 18 with the bank. And the committee of participants were given 19 power to terminate the bank investment advisory contract at 20 any time at the end of the year, subject, however, to the 21 possibility of that adverse role.

22 The bank has custody of all of the assets; as 23 managers, attends to them in every way; chooses what invest-
24 ments to make and so forth. So that in the ordinary day-to-day
25 operation the whole thing is carried out by the bank, subject

1 only to this possibility of the certificate holders exercising
2 common control to kick the bank out.

3 There are a few other minor departures. They are 4 outlined in our brief in footnote 12. None of them, I think,
5 affect the theory or the fiduciary relation; certainly none 6 effect the individual fiduciary relation between the bank and 7 the customer investors, the principals, and the bank continues 8 to be required to conform in all respects, except those I have 9 mentioned and the other details to the provisions of Regula-10 tion 9.

11 Now, from the standpoint of the banking laws, it 12 seemed important that all these activities be conducted, as 13 the Federal Reserve Board later put it, as an arm or depart-
14 ment of the bank, as one of many functions within the trust
15 department of the bank. And, while the investment advisor's 16 contract alone might be enough to do that, it seemed advisable 17 to the bank and its lawyers that a majority of the board of 18 directors should also be officers of the bank. And it was 19 that that led to the application for an exemption from Section 20 10-C, which provides that a bank may not have a majority of 21 the board of directors of an investment company.

22 When the matter came before the SEC it made three 23 critical findings. The first, on page 60 points out that this 24 account which is technically an investment company --

25 Q Page 60 of the record?

1           A           Page 60 of the Appendix; yes.

2           It pointed out that this was not the kind of invest-3 ment company at which Section 10(c) appeared to be aimed.
4 Although Section 10(c) is general in terms it does not appear
5 that it was directed at the type of open-ended investment
6 company represented by the account.

7           Then, skipping a few sentences: "It is clear that 8 the account is substantially different, both in purpose and in 9 nature of operation from the bank-dominated investment com-
10 panies which led to passage of the act."

11           The second finding is over on page 62: "In our 12 opinion," the Commission said, "the bank has shown that sub-13 stantial safeguards are present here against conflicts of 14 interest which could arise as a result of the bank's commer-15 cial banking activities."

16           And the third finding, which is implicit, is that 17 "The exemption to permit these activities to go forward would 18 be in the public interest."

19           We submit first, in our legal argument, that if these 20 findings are reasonable -- these conclusions are reasonable, 21 then the Commission's order is plainly valid. Section 6(c) of 22 the statute, which is on the bank of our brief on Page 7-A,
23 plainly gives the Commission power to exempt any person con-
24 ditionally or unconditionally from any provision or provisions
25 of this title. Surely the words "any provision or provisions

1 of this title," are broad enough to encompass the provisions
2 of Section 10(c). Now, the fact that literally the bank --
3 the account falls within Section 10(c) does not defeat the 4 power to exempt, because of course, the mere purpose of the 5 power to exempt is to take care of cases which literally fall
6 within the language of the statute.

7 And furthermore, that has been the consistent inter-8 pretation of Section 10(c) for 28 years. It was explained to 9 Congress when Section 10(c) was pending before it in 1940 that 10 the aim was to take care of cases which had not been foreseen
11 by the draftsmen, which might fall within the literal language
12 of the statute, but in the judgment of the Commission, not 13 really within its policy or sphere.

14 Now, at the time Section 10(c) was before Congress, 15 there was no comingling of managing agency accounts. Common 16 trust funds, the nearest analogue, were exempted from the 17 Investment Company Act. Consequently, I suggest, that if the 18 Commission's findings are reasonable, then this is the type 19 of case for an exemption.

20 The Commission's findings that the proposed relation-
21 ship between Citibank and the account is not the kind addressed
22 by Section 10(c), seems to me to be supported by five con-
23 siderations. First, the type of investment with which Congress 24 was concerned in 1940, when it was debating Section 10(c), was 25 a closed end investment company, a fixed pool of securities,

1 which bank insiders(?) were selling very largely in the hope
2 of making their own profit in a company in which they cer-
3 tainly had an interest.

4 Now, this account, of course, is wholly the 5 property of the customers, the principals; it's run solely 6 for their benefit and the bank gets nothing more from it than 7 the usual fee that it gets for any fiduciary service; a fee
8 subject to the Comptroller of the Currency.

9 Second, those investment companies, for the most 10 part, purported to be independent concerns. When the customer 11 -- not the customer, when the investor bought a share he 12 thought he was buying a share of the investment company and if 13 the bank, through its control over the directors, dominated 14 it, he wasn't getting something free from the influence of the 15 bank. He, of course, when he goes to the bank and opens his 16 managing agency account, what he is looking for is the bank's 17 services and what he gets, subject to his power of ultimate 18 control, is the bank services throughout the entire enterprise.

19 Third, I would emphasize that there is, in this 20 instance, but not in the kind of investment company which 21 Section 10(c) is concerned, a direct fiduciary relation between 22 the bank and the individual customer-investor.

23 Q Mr. Cox, what is the governing law -- what 24 would be the governing law as between the bank and the people 25 who were investing in this fund or giving their money to the

1 bank for --

2 A Well, it would be the common law, I presume,
3 of New York, and that would be backed up by the regulations
4 of the Comptroller of the Currency in Regulation 9, which 5 spell out many of the duties, and of course, the Comptroller 6 annually inspects the fund, as he does other banking activi-
7 ties or if not always quite that often --

8 Q Well, what -- just out of curiosity, what 9 would restrict the bank from using the funds of its customers 10 in this fund, for banking purposes. Could they invest this 11 money in commercial loans?

12 A Oh, no, no; they are rigidly forbidden by 13 Regulation 9 and also by the Investment Company Act, to have 14 any dealings with the account.

15 Q Right. Any investments they make are with 16 outsiders?

17 A Any investments must be outside. They may 18 make no loans to the account. They may have no interest in 19 the securities that the account acquires or indeed, Regulation
20 9 even would restrict the bank from buying securities of com-21 panies to which it has made a shaky loan, where that would be 22 a breach of trust. And the Comptroller's representatives have 23 been instructed to be on the lookout for such things in the 24 instructions we have quoted in our brief.

25 I would emphasize that this direct fiduciary

1 relationship was noted by the District Court in the RCI case.
2 It's spelled out in the _____ affidavit, the executive
3 vice president of the bank, in the RCI case and is also noted
4 by the Court of Appeals and the SEC.

5 A fourth difference between the investment company
6 at which Section 10(c) is directed and the account, is of 7 course, that the Securities Affiliates and the Associated 8 Investment Company at which Section 10(c) is directed, is set 9 up for the purpose of evading the banking laws and getting 10 out from under the scrutiny of the Comptroller. I perhaps 11 shouldn't say, "evade;" I don't mean that there was any 12 deceit about it. Whereas, all of these activities are carried 13 on, as I said a moment ago, constantly under the control of 14 the Comptroller.

15 The result is, from those four differences, that 16 none of the evils which were pointed to during the investiga-17 tion of the bank securities affiliates and bank dominated 18 investment companies, are possible under the present setup.
19 Indeed, not even the Petitioners argue that they are.

20 Mr. Levin argues that the SEC findings are 21 immaterial, because Section 10(c) imposes a rigid barrier to 22 the bank ever having a majority on the board of directors, 23 where there is any possible conflict of interest. Even so, 24 it's found that this is not the kind of thing that 10(c) is 25 directed at, even though the Commission finds that there are

1 adequate safeguards and even though the Commission finds that 2 the existence of the account is in the public interest.

3 I submit that that argument is unsupportable for 4 four reasons: first, it simply contrary to the plain words of 5 Section 6(c) which give power to invest without restriction, 6 except for the necessary fundings.

7 Second, and very important, the characteristics of 8 the account, or the relationship between the bank and the 9 account, it is said to give rise to the danger of abuse here, 10 are characteristics that are attendant upon all fiduciary 11 banking functions. And we know that Congress didn't find them 12 so dangerous as to prohibit this kind of relationship, because 13 it authorized such fiduciary banking functions in Section 11(k)
14 of the Federal Reserve Act, now Title XII, Section 92(a).

15 It would certainly be incongruous if Congress some-16 how had singled out this one special form of activity which 17 is just like the others so far as any of these problems are 18 concerned, and forbidden in -- especially since in this case
19 one has not only the usual safeguards of the fiduciary re-20 lationship in the Comptroller's supervision, but it now has 21 the additional safeguard of the Investment Company Act.

22 We have outlined in our brief a number of indica-
23 tions, as the Commission did in its opinion, that the Congress 24 was not seeking such a rigid separation between banks and 25 investment companies as Mr. Levin argues. There is a

1 grandfather clause in Section 10(c): banks are allowed to act
2 as investment advisors which, from a day-to-day point of view,
3 is the really controlling manager of the investment company,
4 and because, and we lay great strength on this, the one form
5 of comingling that was known at the time the Investment Com-6 pany Act was adopted, the Common Trust Fund, was exempted from 7 the Investment Company Act and even part of the analogue(?)
8 even though the Commission said we couldn't bring ourselves 9 within it.

10 Now, the remaining question is whether there is 11 adequate support for the SEC findings that the very adequate 12 safeguards against abuse of the bank's control over the fund
13 to the detriment of investors. The Commission took up, point 14 by point, all the abuses which it was said might result and 15 found that they were not sufficiently serious and that there 16 were adequate safeguards against them.

17 Judge Bazelon took not quite that point. The same 18 arguments were made to the Comptroller and he rejected them.
19 The Federal Reserve Board scrutinized most of them, in the 20 letter that is set forth at the end of our brief and it con-21 cluded, too, that there were adequate safeguards and that the 22 existence of such funds would be in the public interest.
23 Consequently, we submit that the Commission findings are 24 reasonably based in the record and that it's order should 25 therefore be affirmed and the judgment of the Court below,

1 affirmed.

2 ORAL ARGUMENT BY DANIEL M. FRIEDMAN, OFFICE
3 OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL, FOR THE U. S., 4 AS AMICUS CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF FIRST
5 NATIONAL CITY BANK

6 MR. FRIEDMAN: Mr. Justice Black, and may it please
7 the Court:

8 At the outset I would just like to explain, in view
9 of the somewhat unusual posture of this case, that the Com-
10 mission is not appearing here in defense of its order, one:
11 why the United States is appearing in this case; and secondly,
12 why we think that the Commission's position in this case
13 does not undermine the validity of its decision.

14 As has been indicated, when the Commission granted
15 this exemption in 1966, the result was 4 to 1, with a strong
16 dissent against the granting of the exemption by Commissioner 17 Budge. The Commission vigorously defended its order early in 18 1967 before the Court of Appeals and that Court unanimously 19 upheld the order.

20 Now, by the time the case reached this Court, 21 however, and this Court had granted the petition, there had 22 been a significant change in the membership of the Commission.
23 Three of the five commissioners who had originally participated
24 in the case were no longer on the Commission and of the re-25 maining two, one, Mr. Bradford(?) by that time had become

1 Chairman and voted against the exemption. The other Com-
2 missioner had voted in favor.

3 Now, it was in that posture that the Commission 4 advised the Solicitor General in June of 1970 that it was 5 taking no position in this case. This is the statements that 6 Mr. Levin read to the Court yesterday from page 3 of the 7 Government's brief. Now, this -- I would just like to re-8 iterate two of the sentences that the Commission included in 9 its statement. The Commission said, "The three subsequently 10 appointed members of the Commission are not prepared to take 11 any position," this was after the Commission had pointed out 12 that there were only two remaining members and one was -- had 13 voted for and one had voted against the exemption.

14 Accordingly, the Commission expresses no position on 15 the merits and urges no offense nor reversal of the judgment
16 of the Court of Appeals. Now, recent written -- in effect, 17 the Commission has said to us in this case is that it is not 18 able at this time to muster a quorum to decide what position 19 to take in this case. Only two members of the Commission at 20 that point were prepared to vote on what to say.

21 We strongly disagree with Mr. Levin's characteriza-
22 tion of the Commission's action yesterday as if the Commis-
23 sion had disavowed its decision. The Commission has not dis-
24 avowed its decision.

25 If I may just mix in athletic metaphors for a moment.

1 The Commission in this case, contrary to Petitioner's sugges-2 tion, has not thrown in the towel in this case; it is merely 3 sitting this one out on the sidelines.

4 Q I don't have it in front of me, but the -- 5 something to the effect that it's possible or maybe even likely 6 that if the Commission were dealing with this problem now it 7 would not reach the same conclusions?

8 A Well, for --

9 Q I don't have this in front of me --

10 A Yes. Well, there is no assurance that the 11 Commission would reach the same judgment, if a similar matter
12 is againpresented. I think thatmerely is a rather briefer 13 statement than what was cited in the original brief. As of 14 that time the Commission didn't know what its position would 15 be because only two of the original Commissioners were then 16 available.

17 But, I want to say that the Commissionhas not dis-18 avowed its decision and it seems to us that basically that the 19 validity of the Commission action must be determined on what 20 happened when it acted; not on the basis of the fact that 21 sometime thereafter there had been changes in the membership 22 of the agency and that the present membership is not prepared 23 now to state what position it would take if the issue came 24 before it.

25 And there was another change in the offering of the

1 Commission which -- we talk about shifts in membership --
2 that Chairman Budge, who was the lone dissenter, has announced 3 his retirement, so that presumably by the time this case gets 4 back to the Commission there will only be one of the original
5 Commissioners and we think that the Commission by definition, 6 is a continuing body; it continues as an entity without regard 7 to changes in the emembership and that if the Commission's 8 action was valid when it was taken, it should be upheld even 9 though changes in the body since that time might suggest that 10 if the Commission were to consider it anew the Commission might 11 come out the other way.

12 The Commission in this case has not asked this 13 Court to remand the case for it to take another look at the 14 case and I think the reason it hasn't done that is again the 15 same reason: that there is no majority of the Commission that 16 is prepared to take any position at this time.

17 So that in these circumstances --

18 Q Did the Solicitor General ask --

19 A In this case you mean?

20 Q Yes.

21 A No, Mr. Justice, we remarked that we came 22 into the case because it was our belief that in view of the 23 importance of this issue and in view of the fact that the 24 Court of Appeals had unanimously upheld the Commission's 25 order, we feel it was not appropriate that the validity of the

1 order should just be defended by the bank, which had received 2 the exemption. We felt there is an interest in this and in 3 addition to that, although we haven't set it forth in our 4 brief, the Government, the Solicitor General representing all
5 Government agencies, has an interest in the basic legal issue 6 here, which is the scope of judicial review of an agency on 7 granting an exemption, a question that this Court has not 8 directly dealt with, as far as I know.

9 So, this is the background as to why we think it
10 was appropriate to give weight to the discretion of the Com-
11 mission in this case even though the Commission is not here
12 appearing in defense of its order, I would like to turn 13 briefly to the merits, which Mr. Cox has fully covered, and 14 why we think in this case the Commission clearly has not 15 abused its discretion.

16 The statute under which the Commission has entered 17 this exemption, Section 6(c) gives the Commission authority 18 in the broadest possible terms that allows it to exempt any 19 persons, any transactions, or any class of persons from any 20 provision of the statute. It couldn't be broader. And there 21 is certainly nothing in that sweeping language that in any 22 way suggests that Section 10 of the act is not within the 23 Commission's power to exempt.

24 What we think Congress is obviously contemplating
25 by this section is that the Commission shall have authority

1 to exempt any transaction, any person, any security within 2 its terms, if a particular fund for which exemption is sought 3 comes within these public interest factors that are listed as 4 the conditions for the exemption. That is: if the exemption
5 is necessarily appropriate in the public interest, consistent 6 with the protection of investors and the purposes fully in-7 tended by the policy and provisions of the act.

8 Now, the determination, the weighing of these many 9 factors that make up this broad public interest standard, is 10 of necessity something that calls for very difficult, close 11 and subtle factors of balancing, of judgment. This is not the 12 kind of thing that is capable of precise measurement exactly.
13 You can't take a yardstick and say whether it reaches a cer-14 tain point and therefore is or is not consistent with the 15 public interest.

16 The granting of an exemption, the decision of 17 whether or not the public interest standards are met in this 18 kind of a case is where the essence of administrative discre-19 tion -- it's the kind of thing that necessarily has to be 20 within the discretion of the agency.

21 And we have developed in our brief, and as Mr. Cox
22 has indicated at some length, the Commission certainly in this 23 case did not abuse its discretion. The basic evils at which 24 Section 10(c) was directed are not the evils present here.
25 Section 10(c) was put into the act because of a lot of abuses

1 that had been shown to have taken place in the 1920s in the 2 way in which the banks operated these investment affiliates.
3 What the banks were doing, they were using the investment
4 affiliates as methods of speculating in the securities market 5 and they were unloading on the investment companies a lot of 6 these speculative securities.

7 Q I think I understood Mr. Cox to say that 8 in answer to that question of Mr. Justice White's, that the 9 bank, and perhaps I didn't hear it correctly, could not make a 10 loan to one of these accounts?

11 A No. The bank could not make a loan to the 12 account or the fund. That is right, but there are several 13 reasons for this. First --

14 Q I know, but what's the significance, then of 15 18(a) of Mr. Cox's brief of Section 3(f)? "A national bank
16 may make a loan to an account; they may take the security
17 there for assets of the account, provided such transaction
18 is fair to such account and is not prohibited by local law.

19 A 18 --

20 Q 18(a) of Mr. Cox's brief of July 18th -- th
21 there are two briefs here, one for December and the other of 22 July.

23 A Well, I assume that that is basically and 24 is for someshort term basis or something like that.

25 Q But it was -- this does say that under the

1 conditions set out the bank may make a loan to --

2 A Mr. Justice, if I may retract my statement, 3 I have been informed that relates to an individual account.

4 Q It does not deal with these cases?

5 A It does not deal with this type of account.
6 That is what the Comptroller's man has informed me.

7 If I may explain several things --

8 Q I thought Mr. Cox had said that Regulation 9
9 had governed the relationship between the bank and the account 10 we have before us.

11 A Regulation 9 broadly governs all fiduciary 12 activities of banks. It's Regulation 9.18 which specifically 13 deals with comingled accounts. This Regulation 9 is the 14 general regulation which affects the bank's control and 15 operation of fiduciary activities.

16 Q Well, except for 9.18, then are you telling 17 us that none of the rest of Regulation 9 printed here as I 18 suggest --

19 A No, I'm not. I'm saying that Regulation 9
20 general governs the bank's fiduciary operations and to what-21 ever extent it's covered by Regulation 9 generally, of course,
22 it's applicable. Then, in addition to that the Comptroller
23 promulgates special regulations dealing with comingled
24 accounts, which is 9.18, which imposes certain obligations --

25 Q And 9.18 is more restrictive on what the bank

1 can --

2 A Oh, yes; marketing --

3 Q -- than is 9.11?

4 A I would think so. 9.18, if I may point out
5 a couple of things: first of all, 9.18 specifically prohibits 6 the bank from having any interest in the account and in addi-
7 tion to that, the account's own prospectus states that it
8 will not borrow any money at all; and finally, that provisions 9 of the Investment Company Act which specifically prohibit 10 transactions between affiliates. So, Section 17 of the 11 Investment Company Act would prohibit the bank from selling 12 securities or loaning money to the account.

13 Q Well, just one more question: I understand 14 that in the provision of 9:12(a) at page 17-A, that this is 15 still another one -- "unless lawfully authorized by the 16 instrument creating the relationship, or by court order or by 17 local law, funds held by a national bank as fiduciary shall 18 not be invested," and so forth, which means that if they were 19 lawfully authorized by the instrument creating a relationship, 20 they could be invested in property acquired from the bank,
21 its directors, and so forth?

22 A Yes.

23 Q You are telling me that this does not apply 24 to this kind of account; is that it?

25 A It does not apply, Mr. Justice, for one

1 reason, which is that the arrangement between the participant
2 and the bank does not permit this and in addition to that, the 3 whole --

4 Q Yes, but that provision says "unless 5 authorized by the instrument."

6 A But 9.18, in turn, has prohibitions against 7 the bank --

8 Q Where in 9.18 is a prohibition against 9 inclusion of a provision under 9.12 in the instrument creating 10 the account? Where's that?

11 A I'm afraid I don't have 9.18 in my brief in 12 the --

13 Q Well, at page 21-A of Mr. Cox's brief.

14 A Section --

15 Q 9.18, collective investments. I doubt if 16 Mr. Cox has given us the full text of Regulation 9.

17 A I believe it's -- it's Section 9.18(b)8(i).
18 Now, let me see if I can find that in Mr. Cox's brief.

19 Yes, it's on page 25-A of Mr. Cox's brief at 20 paragraph a, and it says: "A bank administering a collective 21 investment fund shall not have: (a) any interest in such fund 22 other than in a fiduciary capacity; or (b) make any loans on 23 the security of a participation in such funds," so it pro-24 hibits the bank from having any interest in the fund except in 25 a fiduciary capacity. That is that the bank itself -- if it

1 the bank itself had some money from one of its personal trust
2 accounts, it could invest that in the account.

3 Q Do you think those provisions on their face, 4 proscribe a national bank making a loan to one of these 5 collective funds?

6 A Yes, I think it does, because it says "have 7 an interest in the fund," and in addition to that, the pros-8 pectus of the fund says that the comingled account will not 9 borrow any money. So that as far as --

10 Q Anybody.

11 A Pardon?

12 Q From anybody.

13 A From anybody; that's right. The account is 14 to be operated with the money that the participants have put 15 into the account.

16 Q Where is there any express provision saying 17 that they won't sell -- can't sell any properties to the fund?

18 A Well, specifically, in Section 17 of the 19 Investment Company Act. Section 17 of the Investment Company 20 Act prohibits transactions between affiliates, and under the 21 terms of the Investment Company Act the bank and the fund are 22 affiliates, so that there is an absolute bar in that section.

23 In addition to that, I think the provision saying
24 that the bank shall not have any interest in the fund --

25 Q Prohibits a sale?

1           A       Well, there are -- prohibits a sale -- we are 2 speaking, I take it of the security sale, if the bank were to 3 sell a security?

4           Q       Well, let's assume the bank has the portfolio
5 of loans of real estate mortgages that it would like to market
6 and clean up some of its firms, and they are very good real 7 estate mortgages. And certainly they could sell them to a 8 mortgage company or something. May they sell them to the 9 funds or as a perfectly good investment of the fund in real 10 estate?

11          A       Well, that again, would depend on the circum-
12 stances. There is a provision of the Comptroller's regulation, 13 Section 9.12 here in the record -- it's called "self dealing" -- 14 and it says --

15          Q       I know, but you said that doesn't apply.

16          A       No, I did not say that does not apply.
17 I'm sorry, Mr. Justice --

18          Q       All the instrument would have to do is to 19 authorize it and the bank may transfer property to the fund.

20          A       If those sections might affect the exercise 21 of the best judgment -- if the instrument authorizes, but these 22 instruments do not authorize it.

23               For instance --

24          Q       Well, there is not any prohibition against 25 the instrument authorizing it?

1           A       Well, that again -- that would have to again
2 be submitted to the Comptroller. The Comptroller would have 3 to --

4           Q       Well, here's the regulation. Now, is there
5 or isn't there any provision against the bank selling property 6 to a fund?

7           A       I don't know of any specific provision in 8 those circumstances --

9           Q       That's what I thought.

10          A       -- other than the fact that the bank cannot 11 make any investment have any interest in the fund.

12          Q       Mr. Friedman, do you know whether New York
13 has statutes which many states do which specifically prohibit 14 self-dealing?

15          A       I don't know, Mr. Justice, but I assume that 16 New York, being a very enlightened state, does.

17          Q       Well, I think there are some states more
18 enlightened in the investment field than even New York.

19               (Laughter)

20          Other states do have, either by court decision, 21 common law, or by specific statutes and I would be surprised 22 if it were not present somewhere in the New York statutes.

23          A       I think that the whole question of self-
24 dealing is another problem in this, which is the bank is a 25 fiduciary in its relationship with the participants in the

1 account. And if what the bank does, if it should sell some-2 thing to the account in a way that violated its fiduciary 3 obligations, I would think that the bank would run afoul of 4 that. And of course, the Comptroller is constantly inspecting 5 these banks; inspecting three times every two years. Its 6 trust department inspects the account of the bank and as a 7 result of which if they saw any existence of this self-dealing, 8 it seems to me it could be quickly corrected.

9 So that on balance, as I say, we think that this is 10 an area within the Commission's discretion and that the Com-
11 mission has not abused its discretion in granting the exemp-12 tion here.

13 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF JOSEPH B. LEVIN, ESQ.

14 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

15 MR. LEVIN: Mr. Justice Black, and may it please
16 the Court:

17 I wanted to qualify a response that I gave yesterday 18 in connection with a question Mr. Justice Harlan directed with 19 respect to the Commission's use of Section 6(c). I said that 20 the -- that exemptive authority was used frequently and it is,
21 but I did not mean that it was used frequently in connection 22 with Section 10(c).

23 The Commission has used Section 6(c) in two cases, 24 both on the same day back in 1969. It was an unopposed order 25 and there was no opinion, but the -- in those cases, in one of

1       them the order was sought of the investment company and it
2       was not an open-end investment company, garden variety invest-3       ment company of the kind that we have in this situation, but 4       rather a small business investment company. It's a special 5       arrangement designed to facilitate loans to small business 6       concerns.

7               In one of the cases all of the stock of the small 8       business investment company is owned by the bank itself. In 9       the other case the stock was owned by the bank and by a 10      trustee for the benefit of stockholders. And the recitals in 11      those particular orders, and in both orders there was the same
12      recital, and the recital is that: The applicant investment
13      company believes it's entitled to the exemption, and I quote:

14             "In view of the fact that the public investor inter-15      est in applicant investment company is confined to the share-16      holders of the bank." So that there we have the very much 17      different situation than we have here, because you don't have 18      the potential conflicts of interest between the bank and the 19      investment company.

20             Now, in terms of the scope of the statute, I simply 21      want to make it clear that the type of relationship, the 22      comingled agency account, is a relationship that is very 23      specifically reached by the statute. The legislative history 24      refers to the situation of the comingled agency account -- it's 25      not a bank-sponsored account. But there was a situation that

1 specifically referred to in the legislative history, of where 2 certain people had deposited money on an agency basis with an 3 individual and that individual managed the money. He pooled
4 it and the legislative history treats that particular co-
5 mingled managed agency account as the investment company.
6 Indeed, the Commission, in its report to the Congress in the 7 first volume of the Investment Trust Study, Part 1 on page 8 24, in talking of the types of relationships which give rise 9 to the investment company, refers to the corporate form for 10 the Massachusetts Trust to the joint stock company and lastly 11 to the agency relationship and I would rather quote from that 12 report a brief passage which indicates what the Commission was 13 thinking about.

14 "Another distinctive form of organization of invest-15 ment companies involves an agency relationship between the 16 individual contributors to the fund and the management upon 17 whom they confer substantially the power of attorney to act 18 as agent in the investment of the monies contributed. The 19 group of individuals is not a legal entity, but rather con-
20 stitutes, in essence, a combination of distinct individual 21 interests."

22 Now, the problem of the comingled account and, as I 23 say, not in terms of the bank, but the general concept of the 24 comingled account is considered in considerable detail in the 25 Commission's opinion in the Prudential case, which was affirmed

1 by the Third Circuit. The citation is in our brief and is a
2 full explanation of that particular aspect of the Investment
3 Company Act.

4 Now, with respect to the exemptions from the common
5 trust fund that have been referred to here: the Commission 6 itself in this very Prudential case that I just referred to,
7 and indeed the Third Circuit adopted the very language of the 8 Commission. The Commission said the following; it referring 9 to the Congress:

10 "rested this exemption on the special considerations
11 that the funds were used for bona fide fiduciary purposes, 12 rather than submitting for general public investment and had 13 only a limited impact in the investment fund picture." And 14 the Commission did prepare a, as part of this investment
15 trust study, did prepare a special small volume, pamphlet, 16 dealing with the matter of the common trust fund.

17 Now, of you will remember that the Commission 18 did not make any extensive study of the trust fund, and didn't 19 investigate into the matter of the abuses that were involved 20 in the operation of the common trust fund.

21 Q You mean at the time of the consideration of 22 the bill that became the 1940 act?

23 A That's right. And the Commission pointed out
24 that one of the reasons for it was that at that time there 25 were, all told, some 16 common trust funds in the country and

1 the aggregate that they represented was, I believe, about 2 $36 million. There was nothing of consequence in terms of the 3 common trust fund.

4 Now, the Commission pointed out in that report that 5 the participation in the fund, and I'm quoting now, "in the 6 common trust fund, is not available to the general public," 7 and indeed, the Commission at that time in providing the 8 exemption for the common trust fund, had before it the 9 regulations of the Federal Reserve Board with reference to 10 the common trust funds and and then the specific provisions
11 in the regulations of the common trust fund, at that time it 12 does appear in the appendix to the Commission's study on the 13 comingled trust account.

14 The regulations refer to the fact that a common 15 trust fund is a fund maintained by a national bank exclusively 16 for the collective investment or reinvestment of monies con-
17 tributed thereto by the bank in its capacity as trustee, 18 executor, administrator or guardian.

19 And then it goes on to say, and this is its par-20 ticular significance: "The purpose of this section is to 21 permit the use of common trust funds as defined in Section
22 169 of the Revenue Act of 1936, for the investment of funds
23 held by true fiduciary purposes."

24 And then it goes on: "And the operation of such 25 common trust funds as investment trusts for other than strictly

1       fiduciary purposes is forbidden."

2               Q       I don't understand the point that it is not 3       available to the general public. It is just as available 4       as a mutual fund is. If you have $25,000 you can buy the 5       trust instrument, an inter vivos trust and then turn it over 6       to the bank as trustee, and it's just as available to the man 7       with $10,000 as is an open-ended --

8               A       Well, the Federal Reserve Board, prior to 9       1963 when it administered the regulations with respect to the 10      common trust fund, said that you could not use the common trust 11      fund by the device of an inter vivos trust in order to get 12      participation in this common trust and you couldn't use it as 13      a means, in effect, for public participation in a pool of 14      securities. You couldn't use it for the very purpose that the 15      comingled account is being used.

16              In other words, when --

17              Q       The bank couldn't use it as a trustee under 18      an inter vivos trust?

19              A       It could not be used, and let me put it this 20      way, that the common trust fund could not be used as a means 21      for soliciting public participation in the pool of securities
22      for public investment through the guise of an inter vivos 23      trust.

24              Q       The bank couldn't --

25              A       That's right.

1 Q couldn't take solicitation of it, but it
2 certainly was just as available if John Smith has $10,000.
3 He could just as well make an inter vivos trust and turn it 4 over to a bank to be invested by the bank as trustee in the 5 common trust fund as he could go out and buy shares in an 6 open-ended investment --

7 A He could use the trust relationship to 8 create the trust, but as I say, the terms of the scope of the 9 regulations as it was administered by the Federal Reserve
10 Board was that the trust relationship is not to be used as it
11 is being used here -- actually it isn't a trust relationship -- 12 here it is called a comingled account -- where, in effect, 13 you provide and create a common package of securities for all 14 comers to come in and make an investment in what is a mutual 15 fund

16 And the Federal Reserve Board, as it administered 17 the common trust fund provisions, said that if you do have an 18 individualized relationship, the kind of thing that you have in 19 a trust relationship, then you can pool it. But you cannot 20 go out and create an investment company and use the common
21 trust fund as a device to solicit for public participations 22 which is precisely what has been created here and it is for 23 that very reason that the Commission said that it is subject to 24 the Investment Company Act.

25 MR. JUSTICE BLACK: Is that all of the argument?
