MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear argument in No. 62, Monitor Patriot Company vs. Roy. Mr. Williams, you may proceed whenever you're ready.

ARGUMENT OF EDWARD BENNETT WILLIAMS, ESQ.,

ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

MR. WILLIAMS: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court. On September 10 of 1960, a column appeared in the Concord, New Hampshire Monitor Patriot, syndicated and distributed by the North American Newspaper Alliance.

The column discussed and reported upon the up-coming New Hampshire Democratic Senatorial primary race. The column had been written by the late Drew Pearson. The column reported that there were three candidates vying for the Democratic nomination to oppose the Republican incumbent, the late Senator Styles Bridges. Those candidates were Professor Herbert Hill, a Dartmouth College professor, a respected political figure in the State of New Hampshire, and clearly the front runner in the race; one Alfonse Roy, who became the plaintiff in this cause in the court below, and one Frank Sullivan, whose release from the Cheshire County Jail, after his 19th conviction for public drunkenness, had been obtained on the eve of the last filing date by Candidate Roy, so the column reported.

The column further reported that candidate and plaintiff below, Roy, had induced and procured Sullivan's candidacy

1 as a means of attracting an ethnic vote away from Hill, and 2 that candidate Roy had done this in concert and complicity with 3 the Republican incumbent, the late Senator Bridges.

4 The column characterized candidate Roy as "a former 5 small-time bootlegger, later U.S. Marshal."

6 Two other candidates, also habituaries of the New 7 Hampshire jail system, had been disqualified by the New 8 Hampshire Ballot Commission, so the column reported. Roy 9 promptly filed suit in the New Hampshire courts, naming the 10 Concord Monitor Patriot as a defendant, and naming North 11 American Newspaper Alliance as a defendant. He lodged three 12 specific libels: First, the characterization of him as a 13 former small-time bootlegger; secondly, the fact that he had 14 induced and procured Sullivan as a candidate; and, thirdly,
15 the fact that he had done so in complicity with the Republican 16 candidate.

17 At the trial, the jury returned a verdict for the 18 plaintiff against both Concord Monitor Patriot and North 19 American Newspaper Alliance, solely upon the characterization
20 of Roy as a former small-time bootlegger, and that defamation 21 is the only alleged defamation germane to the appeal in this 22 case.

23 It is our contention, if the Court please, that the 24 trial judge and the New Hampshire Supreme Court misread, 25 misjudged and misconstrued the language of this Court in

1 Garrison vs. Louisiana, decided in 1964.

2 Q How much was the verdict?

3 A It was $10,000 against each defendant, Mr.
4 Justice, an aggregate of $20,000, which is permissible under 5 New Hampshire law.

6 The trial judge, if the Court please, gave the jury
7 what was a bifurcated instruction on the law of libel. He told 8 them that if they found that the characterization of Roy as a 9 small-time bootlegger was on a par with the criticism of a 10 public official for the misconduct of his office, then New York
11 Times vs. Sullivan would be applicable, and it would be neces-
12 sary for the plaintiffs to show malice, that is that the false-13 hood was uttered with knowledge of its falsity or with a 14 wreckless cavalier of disregard to its truth or falsity.

15 The trial judge did not stop there. He went on and 16 told the jury that they might find that the libel was in what 17 he characterized as the private sector. He said that if the 18 alleged defamation had no relevance to Roy's fitness for office, 19 if it was merely a bringing forward of his long forgotten past 20 misconduct, if it was not a matter in which the public had no
21 interest, then it was a private matter and New York Times vs.
22 Sullivan would not be applicable, and in that case the plaintiff 23 might recover unless the defendant successfully asserted one of 24 two defenses.

25 He then told them what the two defenses were under the

1 law of New Hampshire. The first one was justification, and the 2 second one was conditional privilege. He then went on to de-
3 scribe the defense for justification. He said that the de-4 fendants could prevail if what they said was true and if it was 5 uttered with good motive.

6 Secondly, he told them that the defendants might pre-7 vail if the defense of conditional privilege obtained, and he 8 said that they could avail themselves of conditional privilege
9 even if what they had uttered was untrue, if it was uttered 10 with a reasonable belief in its truth, a reasonable basis for 11 believing it to be true, and if it was uttered with justifiable 12 purpose and good motive.

13 He told the jury that if they found the characteriza-
14 tion of Roy to have been a public libel, in the public sector, 15 under New York Times vs. Sullivan, then they must exonerate
16 North American Ne spaper Alliance because there had been no
17 showing whatsoever of malice against North American Newspaper 18 Alliance.

19 Obviously, the jury found the libel to have been in 20 the private sector because it returned verdicts against each 21 defendant in this case.

22 Q The second, the alternative part of the charge, 23 instructing the jury as to the conditions under which they 24 could find liability if this were not a public libel, did not 25 -- that part of the charge did not purport to have any

1 reference to the United States Constitution, did it? That was 2 purely a matter of New Hampshire law, wasn't it?

3 A Exactly, Mr. Justice.

4 Q The theory being, I suppose, that if it were 5 that kind of a defamation, the United States Constitution had 6 no impact whatsoever upon it. Is that right?

7 A That's exactly right, sir.

8 Now, it is our contention, if the Court please, that 9 the trial judge committed error of constitutional dimension
10 when he permitted the jury to find that this characterization 11 of Roy could be a so-called "private libel." It is our con-12 tention, if the Court please, that the rule which applies to 13 public officials for defamations concerning the discharge of 14 their public duties, namely that the defamation must be shown 15 to have been made with malice before recovery can be made,
16 applies to a candidate for public office, whether he expires
17 to executive, legislative or judicial office.

18 It is our contention, if the Court please, that the 19 logical sequel to New York Times vs. Sullivan is that defama-20 tions against candidates for public office, so long as they 21 relate to the fitness of the candidate for office, so long as 22 they are in the ambit of public discourse and dialogue regard-
23 ing the qualifications and background of the candidate, have a 24 constitutional protection unless uttered maliciously.

25 This Court, when it articulated New York Times vs.

1 Sullivan, cited immediately with approbation, a case which had 2 been cited for almost half a century with approbation by many 3 state and federal courts. It dealt with the candidate for of-4 fice. It was the case of Coleman vs. McKenna, and in that 5 case eloquently and articulately is stated what we contend 6 should be the rule.

7           There the Court said it is of the utmost consequence
8 that the people should discuss the character and qualifications 9 of candidates for office. The importance to the state and to 10 society of such discussion is so vast and the advantages de-11 rived are so great that they more than counterbalance the in-12 convenience of private persons whose conduct may be involved 13 and occasional injury to the reputation of individuals must 14 yield to the public welfare although at the time such injuries 15 may be great.

16           Q     I suppose you would contend at the very least 17 this man was a public figure if not a public official?

18           A     Of course, he was a public figure, we contend, 19 Mr. Justice. We say more than that, he was a candidate for 20 public office, so there can be no doubt about the malice rule 21 applying to him in his aspirations to public office.

22           Q     Either one would bring it under the Times rule, 23 wouldn't it?

24           A     Yes, sir, I believe it would.

25           Q     Do you think, Mr. Williams, that there is a

1 separate category for candidates as supplementing the distinc-
2 tion that is made between public figures and public officials?

3 A This Court, in Curtis Publishing Company vs.
4 Butts divided, as I read the opinion, with respect to the rule 5 that should apply to public figures as against public officials.
6 I say that there is no reason for division here because cer-
7 tainly a candidate for public office should be treated as a 8 public official.

9 Q A public official or a public figure?

10 A A public official, sir. I think the rule that 11 applies to a public official on defamations concerning the 12 discharge of his duties should apply to a candidate who 13 aspires to such office, because I believe that when a candidate 14 announces for office he lays his life before the press for 15 scrutiny, and I believe that anything in his life is relevant 16 to his fitness for office, his private life and his public 17 life, his character, his mental and physical health, his 18 record, whether it be academic, professional, commercial, 19 social, marital, or criminal, as in this case.

20 I believe that all of that is appropriate for public 21 discourse and that there is a constitutional protection sur-22 rounding the discourse so long as it is within the ambit of 23 dialogue relating to his background, his qualifications, or 24 his fitness for office.

25 Q Did I understand you to say that you see no real

1 difference between public figure and public official classifi-
2 cations, or do you mean as it applies to this case?

3       A     As it applies to this case. In Curtis 4 Publishing Company vs. Butts, where the Court discussed in 5 great detail the doctrine relating to public figures, as I
6 read the opinion, four Justices of this Court felt that there 7 should be a rule of highly unreasonable conduct applicable to 8 the press before a recovery could be made. Other Justices
9 felt that the New York Times rule applied, the rule of malice.
10 I suggest that that distinction does not lie with respect to 11 a candidate for public office. I believe that the New York
12 Times rule should apply in its full import and all of its im-
13 plications with respect to a candidate for public office.

14       Q     I think that was the holding in Butts as to a 15 "public figure," wasn't it, by virtue of, I think, a footnote
16 in the opinion of Chief Justice Warren?

17       A     I think so, yes, sir.

18       Q     Justice Harlan wrote the prevailing opinion but 19 the fact is that --

20       A     Yes, sir.

21       Q     -- those four justices were out-gunned by that 22 footnote.

23       A     Yes, sir. So we contend, if the Court please, 24 that any other rule would ice the wings of public debate con-
25 cerning candidates for office, concerning, as in this case,

1 the candidate for a high office. It would dampen the vigor of 2 and limit the variety of discourse with respect to the qualifi-
3 cations of a candidate for office --

4 Q Mr. Williams, you probably already said it, but 5 I guess I didn't hear it -- was it a fact, a proven fact that 6 this plaintiff had been a small-time bootlegger?

7 A There were five witnesses, Mr. Justice, who 8 testified that he had the reputation for having been a small-9 time bootlegger. He vigorously denied this and claimed that 10 his brother was a bootlegger. But one witness took the stand 11 who had been the original source of the information for the 12 writer of this column and swore that this man had been a former 13 small-time bootlegger and had admitted it to him.

14 Q Do I understand though that, treating this as a 15 private sector case, as the trial judge did, it would not have 16 been a defense that it was true?

17 A It would have been a defense, Mr. Justice, under 18 the New Hampshire rule of conditional privilege even if it were 19 not true if the defendants reasonably believed it to be true.
20 But if they offered it with justifiable purpose and good 21 motive --

22 Q But I would -- suppose the jury had found it was 23 true, would it nevertheless under New Hampshire law have been an 24 action for libel?

25 A Yes, sir, there would have been because under the

1 defense of justification, even though the allegation is true,
2 unless it is published with justifiable purpose, there may be a
3 recovery by the plaintiff, and that is what the jury was told 4 in this case.

5 Q Mr. Williams, you have spoken of New Hampshire
6 law several times. Do you think the state law for libel has 7 survived the line of cases, New York Times and others, or is 8 the state law viable simply up to the point where it is in 9 collision with the first amendment cases in this Court?

10 A I think, Your Honor, that it is certainly a 11 fragment of state libel law has survived, and I think that the 12 trial judge in the New Hampshire Supreme Court misjudged how 13 much of it had survived. The trial judge, if the Court please, 14 read Garrison vs. Louisiana to support the instruction which he 15 gave to the jury. You will remember, if the Court please, that 16 in that case this Court discussed the defense of truth to the 17 criminal libel law of Louisiana and discussed the limitation on 18 truth, namely that the utterance had to have been made with 19 good motives.

20 In a footnote, the Court said this, footnote 8: "We 21 recognize that different interests may be involved where purely 22 private libels, totally unrelated to public affairs, are con-23 cerned. Therefore nothing we say today is to be taken as 24 intimating any views as to the impact of the constitutional 25 guarantees in the discreet area of purely private libel."

1 Now, we do not contend, if the Court please, here
2 before this Court that the moment that a man announces that he 3 is a candidate for high office in this land that he loses all 4 his rights under the area -- in the area of defamation, all the 5 rights that enure to him as a private citizen.

6 For example, if a candidate announced that he was 7 going to run for the Senate and simultaneously in an unrelated 8 transaction he was seeking to buy a house and the prospective 9 vendor was sent a credit report by a credit information bureau
10 in which it was said untruthfully that he had eight unsatisfied 11 judgments against him, and if the sale were cancelled because 12 of that, then if the defamation ever got into the public dis-13 course concerning his fitness for office, if it never became 14 part of the dialogue concerning his qualifications, if it never 15 came within the ambit of what was uttered to influence votes
16 but remained purely private between the credit information 17 bureau and the prospective vendor, we say that his rights would 18 survive as a citizen under appropriate New Hampshire law.

19 Q Well, I don't quite understand that. I thought 20 your theory would permit anybody to put that right into the 21 public discourse, even though untrue, would say this candidate
22 for Senator has eight unsatisfied judgments.

23 A Yes, sir, and if it got into the public discourse 24 and --

25 Q Well, anybody could put it in, a columnist or

1 anybody else.

2 A -- and once it got into the public discourse, it
3 would have a constitutional umbrella over it.

4 Q That is what I thought you would say.

5 A That is exactly what I would say.

6 But take another illustration: If a gossip should go 7 to the candidate's wife during a campaign and say that he was 8 conducting a meretricious relationship with one of his staff
9 while out on the hustings, and if that stayed private, if it
10 broke his marriage but if it never got into the public 11 dialogue, if it never became part of the public discourse, then 12 I suggest it would remain in what this Court characterized as 13 the discreet area of purely private libel. But once it was 14 injected into the discourse concerning his qualifications, fit-15 ness for office by the press or by his opponent or by any 16 member of the media, then it would have a constitutional 17 umbrella protecting it unless maliciously uttered.

18 Q Do you not think there that you are probably 19 suggesting an imaginary line --

20 A I don't think --

21 Q -- that would occur in politics?

22 A I think --

23 Q Do you think that there is anything that any man 24 who runs for office has ever done or said or been charged with 25 that won't be found out and become a part of a campaign?

1           A     I think that the chances are very high that any 2     defamation that was uttered during the life of the campaign
3     will find its way into the public dialogue and get the protec-
4     tion of the Constitution. But I say that it is possible cer-5     tainly that there could be a defamation in what this Court has 6     called the discreet area of purely private libel where the 7     candidate would still retain his rights under the Constitution.

8           Q     And the public would never find out anything 9     about it?

10          A     The public might not find out anything about it.

11          Q     I couldn't imagine that --

12          A     I think it could happen, Mr. Justice. I think 13     it could happen.

14          Q     But your distinction would depend upon the 15     identity of the libel law, that is if it is done by a newspaper 16     or --

17          Q     Well --

18          Q     -- or anyone publicly, to the public?

19          A     I think it depends --

20          Q     It is protected, but on the other hand it is 21     just a private communication from a gossip to the candidate's 22     wife and then it is unprotected?

23          A     I think not, Mr. Justice. I think it depends
24     upon two things: I think it depends upon whether the utterance 25     comes within the perimeters of public discourse on the

1 candidate's fitness. I think it depends upon the design, the 2 purpose for which it was uttered in the first instance. I 3 don't think we can divorce ourselves from the content, from 4 the design for which it is uttered. I think if it gets into 5 the ambit of public discourse regarding the candidate's fitness 6 for office, then it has the constitutional protection.

7 Q I am somewhat confused. Let me see if I can 8 clear up what your thinking is on the private libel. Let's as-9 sume that in today's atmosphere, where pollution is a big 10 problem, someone describes in a column, describes the president 11 of a power company as one of the worst polluters in American 12 life, something of that kind. Up to that time nobody has ever 13 heard about the president of the power company. He isn't a 14 candidate for office. He isn't a public official. Is this a 15 private libel?

16 A No, sir, I think it would be a matter of such 17 high public interest that it would fall within the perimeters 18 of Curtis Publishing Company vs. Butts and therefore that the 19 Times rule would apply, to this particular kind of libel which 20 you cite, Mr. Chief Justice.

21 Q Even though he is neither --

22 A Even though he himself may not be known to the 23 public.

24 Q Not a public figure and not a candidate, not 25 anything.

1           A     Because I think it is a matter of such high
2 public interest, a matter in which the public has such a deep 3 concern.

4           Now, in this case, of course, we're dealing with the 5 characterization of the man as a bootlegger, as a law breaker.
6 Certainly it cannot be held to be irrelevant to his fitness for 7 office. This Court nine years ago found that whether a man was 8 a bootlegger or not was relevant to his fitness for citizenship.
9 And I suggest to the Court that if it is relevant to his fit-10 ness for citizenship, it is relevant to his fitness for member-11 ship in the United States Senate.

12           In Costello vs. United States, decided in 1961, the 13 Court found that the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization
14 might certainly have turned away this applicant for American 15 citizenship if they had known that he was a former bootlegger.
16 And I say it applies here.

17           Now we ask not simply that this case be remanded, be-18 cause indeed there is no cause for remand; we ask that it be 19 reversed because there is absolutely no evidence in this 20 record that this alleged defamation was done with malice on 21 the part of these defendants.

22           The trial judge himself found absolutely no malice
23 with respect to North American Newspaper Alliance. The record 24 is completely devoid of any evidence of malice with respect to 25 the Concord Monitor Patriot. They subscribe to this column.

1 They relied on the information in it, but beyond that the tes-
2 timony in the record was that the editor of the paper himself 3 knew of the plaintiff's reputation as a former bootlegger, he 4 read the column before he allowed it to be printed, relying on 5 his own information as well as his prior experience with the 6 columnist, he permitted the column to go forward.

7 There was no evidence in this record which suggested 8 that there was any awareness of falsity or that there was any 9 wreckless or cavalier disregard as to the truth or falsity of 10 the publication on the part of Concord Monitor Patriot.

11 Q Mr. Williams, I take it you would -- if you 12 would prevail on the basic law, you would foreclose the plain-
13 tiff from attempting to establish the New York Times standard 14 of malice from what you have just said? Do you think you should 15 be foreclosed if the case in fact was tried on the state stand-16 ard?

17 A Not if it had been, Mr. Justice, but it was not.

18 Q It was not --

19 A In fact, the trial post-dated New York Times vs.
20 Sullivan and appropriate amendments were made to the pleadings
21 to allege malice within the purview of New York Times vs.
22 Sullivan, and the plaintiff put proof in to show malice so as 23 to comply with the standards of New York Times vs. Sullivan, 24 and I suggest to the Court that that makes it unnecessary for 25 a remand for that purpose.

1 Q How far back do the alleged bootlegging activi-
2 ties go?

3 A It was not specified, Mr. Justice, but it had to 4 be twenty-six years at least, because the Volstead Act had 5 died twenty-six years before the campaign.

6 Q Well, there wouldn't be any bootleggers where 7 it allowed whiskey to be sold legally.

8 A I'm sorry, Mr. Justice.

9 Q I say the mere fact that the Volstead Act was 10 not in effect wouldn't determine that, would it?

11 A Well, I was --

12 Q There were bootleggers in sections where they --

13 A I was using the term "bootlegger" as a term of 14 art to describe people who traffic in whiskey at a time when it 15 was illegal to traffic in whiskey.

16 Q Yes.

17 A But I agree, Mr. Justice, it is possible that 18 he could have been a bootlegger even after the prohibitions 19 against the sale of liquor were --

20 Q It is not only possible, but it takes place all 21 the time in the country.

22 A I don't know whether it takes place in New 23 Hampshire, Mr. Justice.

24 Q Well, we had a case like that from Massachusetts.
25 There was evidence that if he was a bootlegger, it was sometime

1 in the early 1930's. There was some evidence of that.

2 A Yes, sir.

3 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Mr. Williams.

4 Mr. Brown?

5 ARGUMENT OF STANLEY M. BROWN, ESQ.,

6 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

7 MR. BROWN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 8 Court. Let me start where my Brother Williams left off, and 9 let me start out by answering Mr. Justice Brennan's question, 10 what was the situation factually. Factually, this claim of 11 bootlegger was totally false -- totally false.

12 It wasn't even close. Now, here is the one brush 13 with the law that my client had over sixty-eight years of 14 life, the majority of his adult life being public life and 15 public office, including being a Congressman, being twice a 16 member of the Executive Council of my state.

17 In 1923, one of his brothers was running what in those 18 days was known as a near-beer joint. Now, those of us who 19 remember near-beer remember that it really wasn't much of a 20 drink unless you had a shot to put in it. And the local police 21 officers thought that the brother, Emanuel -- not this plaintiff, 22 not the respondent, but they thought that Emanuel probably was 23 selling an occasional shot of whiskey. So they sent a spy in 24 and the spy got a shot of whiskey and he has to preserve that 25 evidence because that is going to be the evidence on which they

1 are going to rack up Emanuel.

2 So he takes the shot of whiskey and he is holding it
3 under the bar when the rest of the vice squad breaks in in a 4 rush --and this is in the record -- they jump over the bar, hit 5 the bartender in the nose and grab the bottle out of which the 6 shot was poured, and they got Emanuel, there is no question
7 about it. And they also got Oscar, who was acting as bartender 8 at the time.

9 In the rush of people coming in and people inside 10 trying to get out, somebody jossled the arm of the officer who 11 was carefully holding the evidence and spilled the shot, and 12 the officers coming in said, "Alphonse Roy did that and we 13 want him over at the station. We are going to charge him with 14 interfering with a police officer."

15 And he went over to the station. No charge was ever 16 filed. Captain Grory, running the vice squad, told him, "Look, 17 Al, will you see if you can't get your brother out of this 18 racket? He shouldn't be doing it." And Alphonse -- this is 19 the testimony -- he had been trying to get his brother out.
20 And with the assistance of another Franco-American professional 21 man in the area, after he paid this fine, he did get out of it 22 and went back to an honest living.

23 Now, that is the total evidence on which this was 24 written some twenty-six years later, during a period when this 25 man was in vigorous political campaign, and nobody ever made

1 the suggestion, Drew Pearson publishes that this man was a 2 former small-time bootlegger.

3 Q It wouldn't require any brushes with the law to 4 prove a fellow was a bootlegger, I don't suppose?

5 A Mr. Justice White, what we did in this case, we 6 discovered the informant, Drew Pearson, we took his deposition 7 and we gave him a chance to tell us every single thing he 8 claimed to know that was to justify his making this report and 9 then we went out and we found witnesses alive to disprove every 10 one of that man's lies, and we proved that Scott, the informant 11 was a bald-faced liar.

12 Q Well, that is arguing the evidence. But could 13 I ask you if under the court's instructions it was essential, 14 absolutely essential and unavoidable for the jury to find this 15 charge was false, this allegation was false in order to give a 16 recovery?

17 A No recovery is possible under New Hampshire law
18 if the truth is made out a defense. They had to find and pre-19 sumably did find that it was false.

20 Q As I understand your colleague, Mr. Williams,
21 and as I read the instructions of the court, the court said 22 that if the jury found this was on the private side of the 23 libel laws, that it wasn't a public matter, to which the New 24 York Times applied, that even if the matter were true, the de-25 fendant had to justify it. That is the way I read the 1 instructions. Is that the way you read them?

2 A If Your Honor is talking about the total charge,
3 Your Honor, I think, misinterprets it. If Your Honor is talk-4 ing about both segments of the charge my Brother Williams has 5 briefed, you would get that impression. The law in New 6 Hampshire, as I argued to this Court back in 1966, gives a 7 broader conditional privilege than that which this Court is 8 attempting to work on, and you have to read the total charge 9 on the private sector of the state law to see that you can 10 either justify or excuse and in the total picture you cannot -- 11 a plaintiff cannot recover for a false or for a true defamatory 12 publication. The plaintiffs must prove falsity, and you pick 13 that up in the beginning of the charge where the court instructs 14 them with regard to what action is defamation in New Hampshire.

15 May I say this, Mr. Justice White, with regard to 16 this situation to which you're directing our attention: On 17 page 406 of the record in this Court, you will find the de-18 fendant's request for instruction No. 20. Now, under our 19 practice, at the conclusion of the trial, counsel submit re-
20 quests which is supposed to put the judge on the hook, he either 21 grants them or denies them. If he denies them, the fellow who 22 submitted them gets an exception and can go some place. But 23 if he grants them, that becomes the law of the trial and that 24 party is not under our laws entitled to come forward later and 25 complain about the instructions being given that he asked. And

1 this is the defendant's instruction as applied to this case,
2 applying New York Times to this case.

3 Whether or not it was published and circulated among 4 the voters for the sole purpose of giving what the defendant 5 believes to be truthful information concerning a candidate for 6 public office, and for the purpose of enabling such voters to 7 cast their ballots more intelligently, and the whole thing is 8 done in good faith and without malice. The article is privil-9 eged.

10 Q Well, does that say to the jury that the plain-11 tiff in a private defamation is entitled to recover for the 12 injury done to him unless the defendant establishes justifica-13 tion?

14 A Justification if the matter was true and pub-
15 lished for a justifiable purpose. And then there was an addi-16 tional section of the charge that he -- if he can't justify, 17 then he may excuse it.

18 Q Sure, if untrue then he can't justify it and 19 then he goes to conditional privilege.

20 A That's correct.

21 Q I know, but what if the plaintiff -- what if the 22 jury finds in its own mind that this statement is true, the 23 statement is true? Now, as I read the court's instructions, 24 the jury then does not automatically give a recovery, even if 25 he thinks it is defamatory.

1           A     Mr. Justice White, I have read that charge more
2     than once -- talking about the one of Judge Morris in this case
3     -- and I cannot accept your interpretation of it, and I think 4     perhaps there is a misunderstanding with regard to what --

5           Q     What New Hampshire law is?

6           A     -- what the New Hampshire law is.

7           Q     Well, it may be what New Hampshire law is, but 8     what about this case? We are deciding this particular case, 9     and under the instructions if the judge said even if it is 10    true the plaintiff can recover, he said that to the jury, I 11    suppose that the jury might have found it was true but still 12    have given a recovery because the defendant didn't publish it 13    with a justifiable motive.

14          A     Mr. Justice, I do not believe that those instruc-15    tions, that charge left that position open. I am relatively 16    sure that it did not. I was involved in that case, and I have 17    gone over this now. I would be glad to submit -- I didn't 18    brief it here because I didn't think it was going to come up.
19    But what has happened here, a particular portion of the charge 20    has been overemphasized by the defense, and if you read the 21    entire charge as it was given, and understand it was it was 22    given, that position is not open, that is to recover for publi-
23    cation of the truth. It never has been since 9 New Hampshire--

24          Q     And does the Supreme Court opinion straighten 25    this out?

1           A     The Supreme Court, the State Supreme Court de-2     cision in this case says that a charge of bootlegging based 3     upon this solitary brush with the law that I spoke of, which 4     is at least 26 and maybe 37 years old, the rest of the evidence 5     was that such rumor that he might have been a bootlegger had 6     dried up, stopped, it was not prevalent from 1930 on, that 7     bringing that into a 1960 campaign as it was done in this 8     case, could be found factual to be irrelevant to the man's 9     1960 qualifications for office.

10           Now, the Supreme Court decision says obviously the 11     trial court came to that preliminary decision, which is the 12     suggested procedure under Times vs. Sullivan, and obviously in 13     addition the jury so found, and that is what this record is at 14     this point. Nobody, until we get here, has suggested the con-15     trary, that this is not a factual matter as to whether or not 16     something as stale as this is material, relevant to the man's 17     fitness at the time.

18           Q     Could I ask you another thing about the instruc-19     tions.

20           A     Surely.

21           Q     Do you think the instructions fairly left it to 22     the jury to decide whether this was a so-called private matter 23     or public matter?

24           A     Yes.

25           Q     Or was the overall reading of the instructions

1 that -- or did the judge himself decide that he was a public
2 figure or public official?

3 A No, no, Your Honor. The charge is quite specific 4 and in language that jurors could understand, that they came to 5 this division in the road, they must decide as a matter of fact
6 themselves was this bootlegging -- you see, they don't comment
7 on evidence in New Hampshire, the judges, not at all -- if this 8 charge having been published, if they found it would bear on 9 the man's fitness for office and therefore it would be --

10 Q That is a different question. That is a differ-11 ent question.

12 A I'm sorry.

13 Q Is there any issue in the case with respect to 14 whether --was there any issue left to the jury with respect to 15 whether the plaintiff was a public figure or a public official?

16 A No, Your Honor. We stipulated at the outset --
17 Butts and Walker had not yet come down, and we stipulated --

18 Q So concededly he was a public official or a 19 public figure?

20 A That's correct.

21 Q To which the New York Times rule applied.

22 A Well, we conceded that he was a public official.

23 Q Right.

24 A That aspect of it.

25 Q But did you --

1           A     We did not concede that this subject matter was 2 comment concerning his so-called official competence.

3           Q     Yes.

4           A     But his status as a public figure, public
5 official, we conceded and tried the case on that basis. That 6 wasn't left open to the jury. The jury was instructed that 7 that had been agreed upon and they were to handle the case on 8 that basis.

9           Q     Well, do you think that if a publication in-10 jures ap ublic candidate for public office in the minds of the 11 voters, injures his reputation in the minds of voters, that it 12 nevertheless can be held to be irrelevant and private?

13          A     I would say --

14          Q     That is your position, I take it?

15          A     Your Honor, I say the answer to that is yes, and 16 I will go back to Hitler's Mein Kampf, the big lie is the one
17 that hurts. Now understand this, if it please the Court: Not 18 one nickel was awarded for the loss of the election, though he 19 lost the election for whatever time and effort he put into it,
20 and the public lost the benefit of having him as a public 21 official. But in addition to that and thereafter, because 22 this was a big lie, the damage continues on and it damages him
23 in his personal private capacity, and that is what the verdict 24 represents.

25                I don't think that you can take the position that is

1 argued by my Brother Williams that what anybody wants to 2 write about anybody who stands for public office is auto-
3 matically subject to the stricture of New York Times vs.
4 Sullivan. If you take that position, I think you are moving 5 in the wrong direction.

6 The application of the Times doctrine below has gone
7 so far that Judge Skelly Wright, for example, has completely 8 reversed all of the normal procedures that courts are supposed 9 to use on motions for summary judgments, motions to dismiss, 10 and motions for directed verdict. He says that the court shall 11 take into account the credibility of witnesses and the court 12 shall draw all the inferences, and the court shall -- this is 13 his decision in Glassman -- unless the court is satisfied that 14 the plaintiff has won, the case never gets to the jury for de-15 termination.

16 Now all of the law that I know of says that on each 17 of those situations, if there is evidence in the case which 18 raises the material question of fact, the jury is the trier of 19 the fact. In New Hampshire that must be the situation because 20 that is the constitutional requirement. This judge --

21 Q That is the constitutional requirement of a 22 trial by jury in your state?

23 A Yes, but additionally if the court is conduct-
24 ing a jury trial, the court is powerless to make any factual 25 determinations.

1 Q And that is a matter of state constitution?

2 A State constitution, statute and practice since 3 the beginning of time.

4 Let me point out one thing that my Brother Williams
5 did not mention to the Court. We have ample evidence of New 6 York Times malice in this case, but it was not permitted to be 7 considered by the jury because our trial court made one error
8 in ruling. He ruled that Drew Pearson and Drew Pearson's 9 malice, in talking about his wreckless disregard, was not 10 chargeable to manner and to the newspaper. He did this because 11 the defense below, although there were orders to make this 12 clear, successfully avoided letting the court know whether or 13 not Pearson was the real party and in interest the defendant 14 and therefore chargeable with his own act.

15 When they came to this court, by letter they 16 acknowledged that Pearson was the real party in interest by 17 letter to Judge Brennan asking for an extension, which they 18 had been unwilling ever to say to the state court. The factual
19 background between Pearson and these people is that Pearson, 20 by contract with Monitor, writes Mannor is not permitted to 21 change his writings and is affirmatively obligated to spread
22 it out to the newspapers, and if there is any libel, Pearson 23 indemnifies Mannor and in this case also indemnifies the 24 Monitor. And we tried this case assuming that the malice of 25 Pearson, that this whole thing was based on one telephone

1 call to a man he did not know and had never met, no verifica-
2 tion whatsoever, and it was false.

3 This is the situation: There was a name, it wasn't 4 an anonymous telephone call, the fellow's name was Joe Scott.
5 But it might just as well have been anonymous. Did he ask or 6 attempt to find out from the other side, was it true or false?
7 I asked him that, and he said no, he didn't try to find out 8 from Roy whether it was true or false because people in 9 embarrassing positions he knows would deny it anyway.

10 Now this is malice, and we preserved our position 11 that the court was wrong, excluding that -- it came in but 12 the jury was instructed to disregard it. So that if it were 13 necessary on remand, we would go back to the state supreme 14 court prior to a new trial and that court could, I am quite 15 sure, advise the trial court that that was error. We would 16 try it again with this evidence in and we would satisfy all of 17 the requirements of Times vs. Sullivan that anybody justly 18 could say applied to the case.

19 One other thing --

20 Q Mr. Brown, this private sector thing, I think 21 I am confused. Suppose they said that this man was bootlegging 22 last year, would that be in the private sector?

23 A The State Supreme Court decision, Mr. Justice
24 Marshall, adverts to that. What the State Supreme Court says 25 is that a charge of bootlegging, it is difficult to say that

1 that is not relevant, particularly if it were an event of re-2 cent occurrence, but with the passage of time the --

3 Q Well, that is what worries me, is the position
4 of your court, that the passage of time puts it in the private 5 sector. I mean the word "private" gets me in trouble, that a 6 candidate for public office has a private sector.

7 A Well, the court does not --

8 Q Maybe I'm quarreling with the word "private."

9 A -- the court does not, as a matter of law, rule 10 that this was in the private sector. I don't like the language
11 either. What it says is that with the passage of time of more
12 than a quarter of a century, and with no actual factual basis 13 for the charge being made, it becomes a question of fact as to 14 whether it is relevant in a 1960 campaign and therefore let a 15 jury determine that question of fact.

16 Q Under proper instructions, of course?

17 A Sir?

18 Q Under proper instructions?

19 A Yes.

20 Q That is part of the case.

21 A May I add one other thing, and it builds on 22 the point that you bring up. Pearson testified under oath 23 that he didn't make this publication for the purpose of in-24 structing the voters at all. Now, you will find that at page 25 -- I think it is 190, 194 perhaps, and again at 183. What he

1 said was that he was writing this for national consumption and 2 had no intention at all to affect the outcome of the election.

3       So you get this situation: The defense is that 4 since this man is running for public office, anything that is 5 said about him to help the voters or to help persuade them 6 should have this privilege, and the man who wrote it said that 7 isn't what I was writing it for. The only reason that it was 8 published on the Saturday before the election was the general
9 reader interest in this type of thing is highest then, in other 10 words the column has more salability then than it would have a 11 week or two weeks later. But there was no effort to use this, 12 Pearson says, to influence voters.

13       Now, as to whether or not it was relevant and whether 14 to the election campaign, bear this in mind: Nobody in the 15 election campaign itself ever used this bootlegger charge at 16 all. The Hill camp that this article might have helped, they 17 never put out a word claiming any bootlegging. That is the 18 vicious thing about this whole case. You can say, I think, and 19 it is difficult to argue, you can say almost anything about a 20 candidate that may have some relevance to it, almost, and if it 21 is used for the purpose of helping the voters make their de-
22 cision, then it should have some higher standing than as if it 23 is published a month afterwards for the purpose of making some 24 other story.

25       What happened here was that Pearson claimed that

1 Sullivan was a straw after a hearing had been had on it and at 2 which he was held not to be a straw. So this was false. At 3 that hearing the theory of the Hill forces was that Roy had 4 procured all three of them and that wasn't substantiated so 5 that again was false. He throws it in. Nobody really believed 6 that Senator Bridges would fool around with these Democratic 7 candidates. The three of them together couldn't have licked
8 him, and they didn't. It wasn't that close.

9           The evidence is that a national columnist throws big 10 names in to attract attention to his column, that is why
11 Bridges was in there, and he had three people with criminal 12 records who had filed for this office, that is Sullivan, 13 McCarthy, and Robertson, and he wanted one more to make the 14 story that much better, and he made my client, Roy, into a 15 criminal for that purpose. And the information that he got at 16 the time he got this information, he was told that Roy had been 17 a U.S. Congressman. He was told that Roy was a responsible 18 public officer and a responsible businessman. He left that out 19 and he deliberately substituted this. This is something like 20 the Polk case. It is something like Wasserman and Ogarno. He 21 knew that Roy was actually a responsible person. He deliberate-
22 ly maligned him and degraded him, not for the purpose of help-23 ing the voter one bit, but for the purpose of selling that 24 column throughout the United States, and you can take his word 25 for that and not mine.

1           This is the part that this Court is going to have to 2 face up to at some time. You cannot assume that publishers
3 are publishing with proper motives. Motive may be a bad word 4 in this Court, but in good faith and for a proper purpose those 5 two things have always been the underlying basis for allowing 6 the privilege. And where the person claiming that privilege 7 does not make that out, I say there is no basis for this or any 8 other court in this country saying that the injured person who 9 has a constitutional right of equal magnitude to a remedy for 10 that damage to send that person away remedyless.

11           Unless the Court has questions, thank you.

12           MR. CHIEF JUSTICE: Thank you, Mr. Brown.

13           Mr. Williams, you have about three minutes left.

14           ARGUMENT OF EDWARD BENNETT WILLIAMS, ESQ.,

15           ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS -- REBUTTAL

16           MR. WILLIAMS: Thank you, Your Honor.

17           Under the instructions that the trial judge gave, it 18 was entirely possible for the jury to have found that the 19 alleged defamation was true and yet to permit recovery for the 20 plaintiff. Let me read the instructions.

21           The trial judge said, "If you decide" --

22           Q     What page are you on?

23           A     Page 11 of our brief, if the Court please.

24           Q     Fine.

25           A     "If you have decided that it is a private

1 defamation, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover unless 2 the defamatory matter was justified. Now justification is 3 established if the facts stated are true and are published with 4 a justifiable motive."

5 The jury was given full license to find that this 6 publication was not with a justifiable motive and even though
7 the allegation was true, they could have brought in a verdict
8 in this case for the plaintiff.

9 Now, counsel concedes that New York Times vs. Sullivan
10 is appropriate here for application. What counsel is arguing 11 to this court is that under New York Times vs. Sullivan, it is 12 possible that an alleged defamation may be true and yet a re-13 covery may be had by the plaintiff.

14 Q I didn't understand that to be his argument. I
15 thought his argument was that he concedes that New York Times 16 vs. Sullivan is fully applicable if this were defamation having 17 to do with this public figure's record as a public figure, 18 relevant to his qualifications as a candidate. However, he 19 argues the jury was entitled to find, as the court instructed 20 them in this case, that the defamation did not touch upon or 21 was relevant in any way to his fitness for the office for which 22 he was a candidate but had to do with his long forgotten past
23 and in which the public had no interest, and that if the jury 24 found that, then the law of New Hampshire is applicable, and 25 what the law of New Hampshire is is of no business to this

1 Court whatsoever if you accept his hypothesis --

2 A If you accept --

3 Q -- that the First Amendment has nothing to do
4 with it.

5 A If you accept the hypothesis that you can utter 6 in the public dialogue a defamation concerning a candidate for 7 high office that is irrelevant to his fitness --

8 Q Then the law of New Hampshire is of absolutely 9 no interest to this court.

10 A I suggest, if the Court please, that it is a 11 constitutional impossibility to utter a defamation about a can-12 didate for high office that is irrelevant because the mere fact 13 that damage flows to him, as he alleges, makes it relevant if 14 it influences the electorate.

15 Q Right.

16 A If the Court please, counsel said, in quoting 17 the record, that the columnist Pearson did not write this to 18 influence the electorate but rather wrote it in a purely pri-
19 vate vein. This does violence to the record because at page 20 194, the very page which he cites, the witness Pearson said 21 that he wrote this to let the voters -- because the voters had 22 a right to know the background of every candidate, which is the 23 precise reason for the constitutional rule articulated in Times 24 vs. Sullivan.

25 Thank you, Your Honors.

1 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Mr. Williams.

2 Thank you, Mr. Brown. The case is submitted.

4 above-entitled matter was concluded.)
