MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments in Number 77, United States against Weller.

Mr. Springer, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT BY JAMES van R. SPRINGER, ESQ.

ON BEHALF OF APPELLANT

MR. SPRINGER: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the Court:

The question on the merits of this case is the validity of the selective Service regulation that says that a registrant may not be represented by a lawyer when he has his personal appearance before his local draft board.

The Appellee, Weller, was classified 1-A after such a personal appearance, or rather his 1-A classification was retained --I will go into the procedures after a bit, after such a personal appearance.

But he refused to submit to induction when ordered to report by the board and accordingly he was indicted. The District Court dismissed the indictment before trial, based on a motion filed actually before there was a plea to indictment on the ground that Weller's lack of counsel at the personal appearance invalidated the order to report. And the United States has appealed from that order dismissing the indictment.

But, before the Court might reach the merits, there

1 is a threshold question of appellate jurisdiction. There is 2 no doubt that the Government can appeal this simple order of 3 the District Court to some court; the question is, and it's a 4 difficult one under the Criminal Appeals Act whether the appeal
5 should be to this Court or to the Court of Appeals, initially 6 to --

7 Q Tell me, Mr. Springer, we were given the 8 rather welcome news a few weeks back that something was being 9 done by the Congress for the Criminal Appeals Act. Where does 10 that stand; do you know?

11 A I understand -- I don't have a report as to 12 what happened this morning -- the report I had yesterday after-13 noon is that a bill in which the Senate has adopted in sub-14 stance the Government's proposal to clear up this area -- is 15 now before a conference committee. The House had not passed 16 it -- it is a matter of getting it through the conference 17 committee and then having it passed by the House.

18 Q Well, it may happen within the next week or 19 so, we hope?

20 A Yes, it may, Mr. Justice. I am told that it 21 is unlikely, however, that it would be intended to be retro-
22 active to the cases pending on appeal. That may be an issue 23 that will come back to grieve us.

24 Q At least it can't be much longer than it has.

25 A We can hope not.

1 Q I hope we don't get any new problems with the 2 same order.

3 Q Is the Solicitor General's office still of 4 the view that this case should be in the Court of Appeals and 5 not here?

6 A Yes; very much so, Mr. Chief Justice. Of 7 course I will get into that. Although, of course we initially 8 filed a notice of appeal to this Court on further reflection 9 the Solicitor General concluded that the case was one that 10 should be in the Court of Appeals and we --

11 Q Is that --

12 A That would not be necessary, Mr. Justice
13 Brennan, because of the provision in the Criminal Appeals Act 14 that says that appeals improperly brought here --

15 Q Transferred --

16 A Remanded is the word that is used. And, of 17 course, we filed -- in lieu of the jurisdictional statement, 18 we filed something called a motion to remand and the Court has 19 deferred the issue of jurisdiction until this time.

20 So, I would like to speak for a few minutes at the 21 outset about the jurisdictional question. As I indicated, this 22 case comes up on the grant of the motion of -- of a pretrial
23 motion to dismiss the indictment under Rule 12 of the Criminal 24 Rules of Procedure.

25 The motion to dismiss was originally based on two

1 grounds: first a claim that Weller's 1-A classification was 2 improper because there was no basis in fact for denial of his 3 conscientious objector claim and second: the motion asserted
4 the claim which is what is before -- more specifically before 5 the Court now that the order to report was invalid because 6 Weller was, in several respects, denied due process at his 7 personal appearance before the board.

8 Principally, in that he was not allowed to be 9 represented by counsel, and that is the only issue that sur-
10 vived as a live issue to this point, but he also contended 11 initially in his motion that the local boards had improperly 12 denied his request to have witnesses with him and to have a 13 court reporter transcribe the proceedings of the personal 14 appearance.

15 There was no hearing on the motion to dismiss the 16 indictment and the District Court granted the motion on the 17 basis of the indictment itself and Weller's selective service 18 file, which of course, was undisputed as to its contents, which 19 had been attached as an exhibit to the motion to dismiss that 20 he had filed.

21 The selective service file showed on its face that 22 Weller's lawyer had written letters to the draft board asking 23 that he be allowed to appear with Weller and for the other 24 procedures that are mentioned and that the local board had 25 denied them in reliance on the regulations.

1           The District Court concluded in a written opinion 2     that the selective service regulation in question here, the 3     one that provides that "No registrant may be represented 4     before their local board by anyone acting as attorney or legal 5     counsel," was an invalid regulation. It did not directly hold 6     that the regulation was unconstitutional under the Due Process
7     Clause; instead it followed the rubric that that this Court
8     followed in the Greene and McElroy case, some eleven years ago
9     relating to the rights of confrontation in Defense Department 10    security clearance proceedings.

11           The District Court considered that the denial of 12    counsel before the local draft board at a personal appearance 13    was a matter of doubtful constitutionality and therefore it 14    considered that the regulation could not be valid unless there 15    was express Congressional authority for its promulgation by the 16    President. And the District Court found, despite the circum-
17    stances that I will discuss when I reach the merits, as I 18    will, the District Court decided that the general statutory 19    grant of authority for the President to establish selective 20    service procedures did not clearly enough authorize him to 21    promulgate a regulation that excluded representation by counsel.

22           As I indicated, it's plain that this dismissal
23    order is appealable somewhere, since it came before the trial 24    and was done as a matter of law on the basis of procedural 25    defect that was apparent on the face of the selective service

1 record.

2 So, the only question under the Criminal Appeals
3 Act is whether the judgment was one "based on the invalidity 4 or construction of the statute upon which the indictment or 5 information is founded," or in the alternative, whether it was 6 a "decision or judgment sustaining a motion in bar."

7 If it was either of those then the appeal would be 8 directly to this Court. We say, however, that it was neither, 9 so that the appeal should be in the Court of Appeals for the 10 Ninth Circuit, under that part of the statute which gives 11 Courts of Appeals jurisdiction over any decision or judgment 12 dismissing any indictment except for a direct appeal to the 13 Supreme Court as provided by the section.

14 Of course, this --

15 Q Mr. Springer, what are the reasons for your 16 deep concern about this. If it went to the Ninth Circuit would 17 it be here anyway in due course?

18 A Well, it would be here, Mr. Justice Blackmun, 19 only on a petition for a writ of certiorari. Our concern is, 20 rather than a narrow concern with this particular litigation, 21 is with the administration of justice. I think it's fair to 22 say, assuming that we do not have the new legislation, there are 23 serious questions which, if nothing else, are very difficult 24 ones for the Government in deciding where to proceed and we 25 think it's appropriate to make the point here. Also we do

1 believe strongly in the general principle underlying much of 2 this Court's jurisdiction that cases should be considered in 3 the Courts of Appeals before they come here.

4 And I think that general consideration is reflected 5 in the principle that underlies the majority view in the 6 Sisson case last term as well as the number of other of this 7 Court's cases under the Criminal Appeals Act.

8 With that act --

9 Q May I ask you, Mr. Springer, I gather that 10 your position is that it's not under that first paragraph 11 because the decision was not based upon the invalidity or con-12 struction of a statute; is that right?

13 A Yes; that's right, Mr. Justice.

14 Q And on the second one, that this is not a 15 motion in bar; is that it?

16 A Yes. I will try, I hope, briefly to 17 articulate on --

18 Q I mean it's not a motion in bar, not that 19 it's not a motion in bar, when the defendant is -- that it is 20 a motion in bar, but not one when the defendant is not been 21 put yet.

22 A No. I think it is clear there is no question 23 of jeopardy here. This motion was filed even before the 24 pleadings --

25 Q It's just simplistic that it's not a motion

1 in bar. That's the Governments fact.

2 A Yes, yes.

3 Q The Government's in the peculiar position of 4 having brought it here and now it is wishing it hadn't; is it 5 not?

6 A Well, I brought it in by the filing of a 7 piece of paper in the District Court called "a notice of 8 appeal" to the Supreme Court. Of course, we raised this at 9 the first stage at which we filed any papers in this Court.
10 We had a dilemma, frankly, as we frequently have under this 11 Act, in knowing where to go first.

12 But I think the principle -- the basic principle in 13 which this question ought to be considered is the principle, 14 as I indicated, that the Court has recognized on a number of 15 occasions that the Criminal Appeals Act is a technical statute 16 that historically arose from a clear Congressional compromise, 17 rather than from any single coherent, all-embracing legisla-
18 tive purpose and therefore that it should be read narrowly.
19 And I think that principle is especially apt in this situation 20 where the issue is not whether there is an appeal or not, but 21 simply where it should be.

22 So, in a sense, the practical issue is an issue of 23 the management of appellate business rather than deciding 24 whether or not a litigant, that is the Government, has a right 25 to appeal or not. In that sense, I think it might be said that

1 less is at stake than, for example, in the Sisson case where 2 there was an issue of whether or not there would be any appeal 3 at all.

4 In light of that we think it is fair to say that 5 the burden of argumentative persuasion should be on those who 6 say that this appeal should come directly to this Court, short-
7 circuiting the more conventional initial review in the Courts
8 of Appeals. In this respect it is somewhat like the principles 9 that are under -- that underlie some of the Court's decisions 10 in the three-judge court area in civil cases where there is a 11 similar principle of narrow reading of a technical statute.

12 Let me then turn to the two statutory issues. First, 13 the question whether the dismissal of Weller's indictment on 14 the ground that the procedural regulations followed by the 15 local draft board was insufficiently authorized by the statute.
16 The Appellee says that that is -- that decision amounted to a 17 construction of the statute on which the indictment is based; 18 that is: the Selective Service Act.

19 The clear answer to that is that the dismissal was 20 based on the regulation, not on the act and the Court held the 21 regulation to be invalid under a principle of, I guess you 22 would call general law, that regulations, impairing procedural 23 rights are invalid unless Congress has specifically authorized 24 them. The only reference to the statute, therefore, was a 25 negative one. And we do not think that a determination that an

1 act does not say something on the subject has to be treated as 2 a construction " of the statute" under this technical act 3 which, as we say, could be read narrowly.

4 Q The regulation itself didn't purport to 5 either constitute the offense, establish the offense or to 6 interpret the statute of what the offense was?

7 A No, it does not; it's a regulation under a 8 general authorization. So in that respect it is different from 9 the Mersky case, I think.

10 Q That's a lot of difference.

11 A Where the regulation was, first, a substan-12 tive regulation and second: one directly contemplated by the 13 statute to fill out our gap --

14 Q Could I ask you one more question. I don't 15 want to interrupt you. Was this motion of the Government's 16 to remand the appeal before or after Sisson?

17 A It was filed before the Sisson decision --

18 Q It was filed before Sisson came down?

19 A Yes, yes. Clearly it was -- I'm not sure;
20 I think it was early this year.

21 Q January, I think; yes.

22 A Yes.

23 Q Is it your position that the Court cannot 24 consider this case for jurisdictional reasons, or that it 25 should not?

1                   A        I think it's clearly a matter of cannot,
2 Mr. Justice.

3                   Q        How old is this now?

4                   A        Pardon?

5                   Q        How old is this now? This man who was about 6 to be drafted.

7                   A        He was born in 1944, so he would not be 26.
8 But he is under the -- the issue is the criminal indictment for 9 failure to report. He was due to report in, I believe, the 10 summer of 1968 and the criminal proceedings have been pending 11 since.

12                  Q        Is he beyond the age now?

13                  A        I'm not sure exactly when his birthday is, 14 Mr. Justice Black, nor can I speak authoritatively as to the 15 effect that all of this may have on the -- on his future --

16                  Q        What is the effect on cases of this kind.
17 Whether it would be a better procedure if maybe not and maybe 18 we can't, if the Court could, in instances where a delay is 19 wholly unnecessary and is crippling the efforts of the Govern-20 ment, where it wouldn't be better if this Court could, in some 21 cases, decide it. This has been pending two years, hasn't it?

22                  A        Yes. Of course, Mr. Justice Black, I believe 23 that once the case is in the Court of Appeals as we say it 24 should be, then it would be open to a --

25                  Q        That's right.

1           A       -- to a certiorari before a judgment. I 2 think that's not available now because the case is not in the 3 Court of Appeals.

4           Q       That may be an adequate reason.

5           A       So, we do think that this is a very different
6 kind of situation from the Mersky situation where the Court
7 could say and did say, again over the Government's contrary 8 arguments that the regulations were so closely intertwined 9 with the statute that the issue of interpretation of the 10 regulations should be considered as an issue of interpretation 11 of the statute.

12                   This brings me to the motion in bar point which 13 the Appellee urges alternatively as a basis for this Court's 14 jurisdiction. I think Sisson again makes it clear that the 15 question of what a motion in bar is is a question that is still 16 open but we would urge the Court to adopt the definition
17 suggested by Mr. Justice Stewart's opinion in the Mersky case, 18 which would limit a motion in bar to matters in confession and 19 avoidance, such as res adjudicata or the statute of limitations
20 or a denial of speedy trial. That is, limit it to defenses 21 that do not go to the general issue, but which solely on the 22 basis of new matter would prevent a conviction, even if the 23 defendant committed the criminal acts that are charged.

24           Q       Well, this is pretty close to it, isn't it?

25           A       Well, except, Mr. Justice Harlan, I think

1 that this is not new matter. I think it has to be said that 2 implicit in the indictment is an allegation that the process
3 of classification -- that is the order to report for induction, 4 was a valid and proper order.

5 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will resume after 6 lunch.

7 (Whereupon, at 12:00 o'clock p.m. the argument in 8 the above-entitled matter was recessed to be resumed at 1:00 9 o'clock p.m. this day)

1 1:00 o'clock p.m.

2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Springer, you may 3 continue.

4 ORAL ARGUMENT (CONTINUED) BY JAMES van R.

5 SPRINGER, OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

6 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANT

7 MR. SPRINGER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

8 I would like to say just a couple of words more 9 about jurisdiction and then move on to the merits, if I can.

10 We were in the middle of a point about the applica-
11 bility of a motion in bar clause at the lunch hour. As I 12 indicated, we think that that clause should be interpreted in 13 terms of the common law concept of a special plea in bar and 14 there are indications in the legislative history that that is, 15 in fact, what Congress had in mind in 1907 when it passed the 16 act.

17 That is, the principle is that a motion in bar
18 relates only to a defense; it does not go to a general issue 19 and which on the basis of new matter, would prevent the con-20 viction even if the defendant committed the act alleged in the 21 indictment.

22 Q Would that necessitate overruling Mersky?

23 A I think not, because Mersky held nothing 24 about a motion in bar. In Mersky, the Court found -- the 25 majority found jurisdiction on the basis of the construction of 1 the statute.

2 Q That was a little sideline --

3 A A sideplay on the --

4 Q Sideplay on the -- you would have to 5 resolve that bifurcation that's involved --

6 A Yes. That, unfortunately, is necessary, 7 finally, I think, in this case.

8 Q What's the status now of the new criminal 9 appeals, proposed criminal appeals?

10 A Well, I just heard another indication at 11 lunch time. It is in the -- as I indicated earlier -- it is 12 in the House-Senate Conference Committee on the Law Enforcement 13 Assistance -- well, it's a little more complicated than that -- 14 I understand it's the Law Enforcement Assistance Bill. It has 15 been passed by the Senate with the Criminal Appeals Act Amend-16 ment in it but the House has not -- well, the House is going 17 to pass the basic bill. The House has not passed specifically 18 the amendment, so it's a matter of working it out in conference 19 and getting it --

20 Q Would it affect this --

21 A I think it would, because as I understand, the 22 bill would quite clearly resolve this problem. In fact I've 23 had some indications that the bill may eventually come out with 24 a provision only for appeal to the Court of Appeals, reserving 25 this court for certiorari. In any event, I think it's clear

1 that the bill, if it's accepted in anything like the form in 2 which it has been so far, would not allow direct appeal in any 3 case that does not involve the validity of the underlying 4 statute. So that we wouldn't have this construction of the 5 statute issue or the motion in bar issue, I think clearly, as I 6 understand the bill.

7       The point I think on this motion in bar, is some-8 thing raising new matter that would prevent a conviction even 9 if the defendant has committed the act with which he's charged, 10 is that the defense that Weller has raised here is not that 11 kind of defense. His defense raised in his motion is that 12 there was no offense. He's not confessing the offense and 13 saying that "There is some external reason why I can't be con-14 victed for it;" he says there is no offense because implicit 15 in the indictment is an allegation that the order to report
16 for induction was invalid. He claims that this order -- excuse 17 me -- that the order to report was valid. He claims that the 18 order to report was invalid because of the procedural defect 19 and hence, that he committed no crime when he failed to take 20 his step forward at the induction station. So we think that 21 his motion presented a purely legal defense, based on the face 22 of the record and under the common law principle of special 23 plea in bar, a motion in bar that that does not qualify.

24       So, for that reason we think that the case should be 25 remanded to the Court of Appeals and that this Court may not

1 reach the merits. But, since the Court might disagree with 2 that, I will now proceed to the merits.

3 Q What is viewpoint of your adversary on that?

4 A He has taken, as I understand it, the un-
5 qualified position that the Court does have jurisdiction.

6 Q This Court?

7 A Yes.

8 As I indicated, the question on the merits, quite 9 simply, in the terms of the District Court's opinion, as well 10 as the President, had authority from Congress to promulgate the 11 selective service regulation which has been in force, I might 12 say, since 1940, that is throughout the entire modern history 13 of selective service. Whether he had authority to adopt that 14 regulation which reads: No registrant may be represented at 15 his personal appearance before the local board by anyone acting 16 as attorney or legal counsel.

17 And we do not deny that if the District Court was 18 right in holding that regulation invalid that the indictment 19 should, in fact, have been dismissed. So, the question is the 20 validity of that regulation on its face.

21 Before I go on to discuss the arguments made by the 22 District Court and by the Appellee, I think it would be helpful 23 to put the question in context by describing the role that the 24 personal appearance has in the selective service classification 25 process.

1           That process begins, of course, when a young man
2 registers with his local board. Subsequently the board sends 3 him a classification questionnaire which he fills out and which 4 then goes into a selective service file bearing his name, 5 together with any other written information of any kind that 6 the registrant or anyone else on his behalf chooses to provide 7 to the board.

8           In the case of someone who, like Weller, claims to 9 be a conscientious objector, this includes the form 150, the 10 special CO form and it can include, under the regulations, any 11 other written request for a particular classification or any 12 documents, affidavits or depositions, subject only to the con-13 dition that they are as concise and as brief as possible.

14           That is, there is nothing to stop a registrant from 15 filing a complete legal brief with his board on his classifi-16 cation if he chooses to.

17           Then when the time comes, the board classifies each 18 registrant at a formal meeting and the regulations provide, 19 and I think this is important, quite explicitly that the 20 classification must be done on the basis of the entire file and 21 nothing other than written material that appears in that file.
22 And of course the registrant or anyone he authorizes, has the 23 right to inspect that file.

24           Then, after the board makes its initial classifica-25 tion decision they send a notice of classification to the

1 registrant. And then, for the first time, he has a right to 2 the personal appearance that we are talking about, before the 3 board or a member or members designated for the purpose. In 4 order to have such an interview he has to request it in 5 writing within 30 days after his notice of classification.

6 The nature of the personal appearance is described 7 in this language from the selective service regulations, which, 8 incidentally, appear on page 60 of our brief. The regulation 9 says: "At any such appearance the registrant may discuss his 10 classification, may point out the class or classes in which he 11 thinks he should have been placed and may direct attention to 12 any information in his file which he believes the local board 13 has overlooked or to which he believes it has not given suf-
14 ficient weight. The registrant may present such further infor-15 mation as he believes will assist the local board in deter-16 mining his proper classification. Such information shall be 17 in writing or, if oral, shall be summarized in writing by the 18 registrant and in either event, shall be placed in the regis-19 trant's file."

20 The section before that, of course prohibits counsel 21 -- that's the specific regulation we are concerned with -- and 22 that regulation also provides that no person other than a 23 registrant shall have the right to appear in person before the 24 local board but the local board may, in its discretion, permit 25 any person to appear before it with or on behalf of the

1 registrant. Then there is a provision that if he doesn't speak
2 English he can have an interpreter.

3 There either is not a stenographic transcript of the 4 discussion at the personal appearance, but the board may pre-5 pare a summary as the board itself or one of the members of the 6 board did here, and put it in the file and as I indicated, the 7 registrant is directed by the regulations to prepare his own 8 summary so that there will be that record in the file of what 9 went on and this ties in again with the regulation that the 10 board can classify only on the basis of written material con-11 tained in the file.

12 Q Mr. Springer, there is discretion of the 13 board, as I understand it, to allow someone else to appear with 14 the registrant?

15 A Yes, there is, subject to the --

16 Q And --

17 A -- to the explicit provision of excluding 18 representation by an attorney or legal counsel.

19 Q Where is the provision excluding represen-20 tation?

21 A That's the end of that same regulation, which 22 I think is on page 61 of our -- 60 or -- I'm sorry -- it's 23 Section 1624.1.

24 Q Oh, yes.

25 A This all appears in subsection 8 of that

1 regulation --

2 Q Well, the proviso means then, that although 3 the board may permit any person to appear before it, with or 4 on behalf of the registrant, it can't be a lawyer. Is that 5 what it means?

6 A It can't be a lawyer representing him.

7 Q He could have a lawyer there --

8 A He could have a lawyer there but not strictly 9 as a lawyer and --

10 Q He couldn't be acting on behalf of the 11 registrant?

12 A Well, I think it -- if he's acting on behalf 13 of the registrant it amounts to legal representation, which in 14 the context of this case, is what the Appellee is talking about 15 and what the District Court is talking about -- the lawyer
16 asking questions, making arguments --

17 Q As a customary matter do the boards permit 18 registrants to bring someone with them?

19 A I think not as a customary matter. It can 20 be done.

21 Q It can be done and it could be a lawyer as 22 long as he just said, "I'm a friend."

23 A Yes, and of course that would be in the dis-
24 cretion of the board. The board might, in its discretion, 25 assuming that it is reasonable, say, "we don't want anybody

1 here.

2 And of course, if the case ultimately gets into 3 court there is frequently testimony about what went on at the 4 personal appearance by the registrant and by board members.
5 Then after the personal appearance the board meets again to 6 reconsider the classification and sends a new notice of 7 classification, reporting the results. After that the man has 8 30 days to appeal to the State Appeal Board and he can submit, 9 with his notice of appeal a statement specifying the matters
10 in which he believes the local board erred. In other words, 11 again a brief on appeal if he so pleases. And the appeal 12 board then classifies him again de novo and there are certain 13 limited further appeal rights to the national appeal board.

14 Of course a lawyer can assist the registrant in 15 preparing any of these written materials which, again, in the 16 regulations direct the board to make its decision on. It's 17 only when he goes in to discuss his case orally with the board 18 or designated members of it that he is on his own.

19 Q Has there been any statement in connection 20 with the publication of these regulations or anything, an 21 explanation for the exclusion of legal representation from the 22 hearing?

23 A Well, I had planned to get to that --

24 Q Go ahead.

25 A Congress has spoken quite clearly on this.

1 Q Well, at the hearing, the board in its dis-
2 cretion can let anybody under the sun in except a lawyer?

3 A Yes. That's is so.

4 Q Which could mean a political leader?

5 A I think that the discretion is subject to 6 some limits --

7 Q Including the Chamber of Commerce?

8 A Theoretically, yes.

9 Q Or any other good person -- well, what's 10 wrong with a lawyer? Why is he excluded?

11 A Well, Congress, and as I say, I had planned
12 to get to that -- Congress --

13 Q Congress is made up of lawyers and said that 14 they didn't want themselves to be let in.

15 A I think I can summarize the reasons which 16 Congress has gone through in 1967 in connection with the latest 17 revision of this Selective Service Act. Proposals were made 18 at that time both in the House Committee, and in fact, an 19 amendment was introduced on the Floor of the Senate by 20 Senator Morse; both proposals specifically to allow represen-21 tation by counsel at these personal appearances.

22 Q And a real full hearing; wasn't that in there 23 too?

24 A I am --

25 Q I mean a more detailed hearing was in there,

1 wasn't it?

2 A Well, of course that -- I am not sure -- I
3 think Senator Morse's amendment was restricted to counsel. Of 4 course, one of the problems and one of the reasons, I think, 5 why Congress shied away from this was that when we had 6 representation by counsel you inevitably had a different kind 7 of proceedings from the relatively informal discussion that 8 Congress had in mind.

9 But, as I indicated, Congress expressly rejected
10 these proposals in the 1967 Act. Congress has spoken on this 11 issue at other times. There is a provision in the Selective 12 Service Act that expressly exempting selective service pro-
13 ceedings in the Administrative Procedure Act. Also in 1965 14 there was a statute passed relating to a general right to have 15 counsel before administrative agencies and the House Report on 16 that bill made an express statement --

17 Q So that in this case Congressman X could 18 appear at the hearing as Congressman X, but he couldn't appear 19 there as Lawyer X?

20 A Well, I think in context perhaps I should 21 have -- the regulation referred to speaks about a person's 22 appearing on behalf of a registrant. It is possible there are 23 provisions allowing the board to subpoena witnesses, so I 24 think -- it's not done --

25 Q I thought you said that within the discretion

1 of the board that they could let anybody come in.

2 A Well, I think perhaps as I look at it more
3 closely, I think I should amend what I said, because what it 4 says, "but the local board may, in its discretion, permit any 5 person to appear before it with or on behalf of the registrant."
6 Whereas this separate subpoena --

7 Q Well, if Congressman X could come in there
8 on behalf of him as Congressman X, but if he says, "I appear 9 here as Lawyer X," representing him, he's out?

10 A Yes, well I think there is a distinction.
11 Congressman X comes in and says, "I have known this boy all my 12 life and he's a good boy and he's sincere in his conscientious 13 objection." I think what a lawyer --

14 Q That's not representing him.

15 A No, that's speaking on his behalf.

16 Q Doesn't it say "or representing?"

17 A No. "may appear with or on behalf of." And 18 then the prohibition against lawyers, it says: "No lawyer may 19 represent."

20 Q If a lawyer should come in there and say
21 that "I knew the registrant for a long time," et cetera, et 22 cetera, et cetera.

23 A But what Congress has intended to exclude is 24 a lawyer who comes in for the purpose of what I'm doing right 25 now, arguing with the board, citing cases to it, saying the

1 Welsh case means this and the Seeger case means that, perhaps 2 of course, asking questions of the registrant to help him --
3 designed to help him to state his conscientious objector
4 views or if it's a hardship exemption case, to try to help him 5 explain his exemption, and that is what -- I think it is quite 6 clear that Congress has specifically and by design excluded.

7 Now, in --

8 Q Mr. Springer, is this any more, really, than 9 a limitation to keep this from becoming an adversary proceeding?

10 A No; I think that that is exactly -- that is 11 exactly the purpose --

12 Q It doesn't use the term "lawyer," at all.
13 It says "attorney." That means agent and a legal counsel is a 14 separate category. You can't be functioning as a legal counsel 15 in this hearing, but he can have all the fans there he wants, 16 within limits.

17 A Yes, and within the discretion of the board.
18 And of course, in this case, Weller's lawyer asked to come in 19 as a lawyer and the District Court decided on the basis that he 20 should be there as a lawyer so that he can ask questions to 21 clarify matters and help the board make its decision and in the 22 sense in which lawyers ordinarily do when they are acting as 23 lawyers.

24 Q The board can, if it wishes, permit him to 25 have a lawyer to proceed as a lawyer?

1                   A       No, no. The regulation says absolutely 2 not. I am just indicating a little further what the purpose is 3 that Congress had in mind in trying to keep this in a relatively 4 informal nonadversary proceeding. In this 1965 legislation
5 I referred to relating to general rights of counsel before ad-
6 ministrative agencies. The House Report on that bill noted 7 specifically that under regulations prescribed by the President
8 a registrant may not be represented before a local draft board
9 by an attorney. This is because of the large number of regis-10 trants involved; the informality of procedures and the need for 11 a capacity to provide large number of men quickly for service.

12                   And again, in connection with the 1967 draft legis-
13 lation there is a certain amount of Congressional discussion 14 about the reasons for rejecting the proposals then that there 15 should be lawyers, again suggesting that it's inconsistent with 16 the basic duty of the Selective Service System which, of course 17 this Court has recognized in numerous cases and recognized, for 18 example in Clark against Gabriel in the context of preinduction
19 judicial review, that the purpose of the Selective Service 20 System is to raise large numbers of men without litigious in-21 terruptions which Congress has, I think reasonably, believed 22 would incur that obligation.

23                   There is some further suggestion in the legislative 24 history of 1967 that another Congressional feeling which, again 25 I think is reasonable, that the more formalized these

1 proceedings become the greater advantage is given to those who,
2 for one reason or another are in a better position to take 3 advantage of formalized proceedings --

4 Q Do you happen to know whether these draft
5 boards -- to what extent are the draft boards themselves 6 composed of lawyers?

7 A I don't have any figures on that. I would 8 assume that a substantial percentage, just as a substantial 9 number of people in jobs like that tend to be lawyers, and a 10 substantial number are. But there are by no means required to 11 be lawyers and --

12 Q Is there such a functionary as a lawyer to 13 the board?

14 A No, there is not; and that again I think, a 15 problem that Congress could reasonably consider. If a lawyer 16 comes in on behalf -- before a board of part-time laymen on 17 behalf of a registrant to argue with them about what the Welsh 18 case means, for example, I think the board would rightly feel 19 that it should have somebody to give it comparable advice --

20 Q Well, when this thing was set up wasn't 21 there some legal representation for the Selective Service?

22 A Well, there is a -- of course there is a 23 national office. There are state offices, I believe and there 24 may be lawyers in the state offices.

25 Q But I thought there were always lawyers.

1 A I think there are experts --

2 Q The board get their legal advice, I thought 3 from --

4 A But there is no provision under the existing 5 system for --

6 Q For the board to have a lawyer --

7 A -- to be with it at its meeting, except that 8 there is a provision for the appeal agent. There is supposed 9 to be one for each board and he may attend meetings at the 10 request of the board, but he is an unpaid volunteer and I think 11 it would quite drastically change the setup which is something 12 that has been basically in existence, as I indicated, for 30
13 years. It would rather substantially change the set up, I 14 think, if you started to make these adversary proceedings by 15 having a lawyer coming in and performing the kind of job that 16 a lawyer ordinarily does and Congress has made the express 17 decision that it did not want to have that happen and have 18 articulated, I think, a reasonable basis for so deciding.

19 Of course the Appellee relies quite heavily on the 20 Court's decision last term on the Goldberg-Kelly case on 21 procedural rights with respect to welfare determinations.

22 I think it, as with all of these matters, you can't 23 proceed by a process of deductive reasoning. You can't say 24 that, as he does, that the personal appearance is obviously an 25 important matter for a draft registrant. It's a matter

1 in which his personal rights are determined; therefore it is 2 an adjudicative hearing and in every adjudicative hearing you
3 must have a lawyer because the court said so in Goldberg
4 against Kelly, therefore there must be a lawyer.

5 I think the whole premise of the Goldberg against 6 Kelly decision is that you balance each situation. The result 7 there was a relatively limited kind of hearing, but to be sure, 8 the court did say a lawyer should be present. But I think that 9 the draft situation can't be deduced from that; I think it's 10 a matter of making the same kind of balancing process in the 11 draft context, which is something that Congress has done, for 12 the reasons that I have indicated, and I think that cannot be 13 said to be so inconsistent with -- so unreasonable or so in-14 consistent with the principles of fundamental fairness so that 15 should be held to be a violation of the due process clause.

16 Q As a practical matter, what's been going on 17 in the Northern District of California since the day of the 18 District Court's decision? Has anybody been inducted?

19 A I don't honestly know the practical facts.
20 I do know that since this decision the Ninth Circuit has had 21 occasion -- this was a District Court decision -- the Ninth 22 Circuit has had occasion to reject the position taken by the 23 District Judge, Judge Peckham in this case. I confess that I
24 don't -- I'm determined that the practical effect of the con-
25 flict is. Presumably the boards can rely on the Ninth Circuit

1 rather than on the District Court.

2 I think in this context it's -- perhaps the 3 Appellee overestimates and it's easy to overestimate the range
4 of decision-making discretion that a local board has. In this 5 regard there have been a number of quite significant changes
6 in recent years, and in fact, recent months. For example, 7 this Court's Gutknecht decision last term took away from the 8 boards the entire power that they had previously to reclassify 9 people whom they found to be delinquents, which was obviously 10 an area with considerable discretion which the Court felt the 11 boards hadn't been given. So that area is out.

12 As of last spring, occupational deferrments were 13 discontinued, so the questions of what's an essential occupa-14 tion and what is not are now matters that the boards have to 15 consider.

16 Q That was by administrative directive, was 17 it?

18 A Yes. That was by executive order. These 19 regulations are made by the President.

20 And last summer in the conscientious objector area, 21 which we are dealing with here, following a decision in Welsh, 22 specifically last term, the National Director of Selective 23 Service put out a two-page statement of the consideration that 24 the boards should take into account in determining whether a 25 man is a conscientious objector, which I think boils down --

1 I think they are quite comparable to the kind of instructions
2 that a trial judge might give to a jury. So the board is 3 focused, and it's focused principally on the sincerity issue
4 in the conscientious objector area, and a question which I 5 think has to be answered necessarily in terms of what the 6 registrant says out of his own mouth. I think it's not a 7 matter of confronting adverse witnesses; it's not a matter of 8 dealing with self-incrimination problems or forfeiting rights 9 and there is nobody there arguing against him.

10 Basically the job in a CO case is to come in and say 11 words to the board which will convince the board of the nature 12 his beliefs and of the sincerity of them.

13 Q Mr. Springer, did you say that the Ninth 14 Circuit has already taken a view contrary to Judge Peckham's?

15 A Yes, it has, in a case which we cite in our 16 brief.

17 Q So that if we say we have no jurisdiction
18 this case goes to the Ninth Circuit, doesn't it?

19 A I believe that's --

20 Q So you know what the result is going to be, 21 then?

22 A If you have that panel, I suppose, that it
23 might become an en banc question which might well be resolved 24 differently in that court.

25 Q Does that enter in any way into the

1 jurisdictional problem? Do we consider the consequences of 2 the jurisdictional question when we make it?

3 A No. I think the question answers itself. I
4 think I think that's not so.

5 So, I think, in summary, in light of the kind of 6 situation we have in the draft classification process and the 7 unique role of the personal appearance, I think it's not enough 8 to say that since every other kind of administrative proceed-9 ing, or most others, allow counsel, that counsel should be 10 allowed here.

11 I think the Court, as it did in Goldberg, is called 12 upon to weigh the unique factors in the Selective Service 13 System, in order to determine what fundamental fairness is 14 there.

15 I'd like, if I have a minute or two left, I'd like 16 to reserve it for rebuttal.

17 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Karpatkin.

18 ORAL ARGUMENT BY MARVIN M. KARPATKIN, ESQ.

19 2343 ON BEHALF OF APPELLEE

20 MR. KARPATKIN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please 21 the Court:

22 This is the third Selective Service case which the 23 Supreme Court is hearing this week. Unlike Gillette and Negre, 24 which were argued yesterday, however, this case does not in-25 volve the cosmic questions of the definition of a man's

1 conscience or the nature of his religious beliefs, the 2 character of conscientious objection, the relationship between 3 total objection and selective objection. It involves, rather, 4 the more mundane, but no less ubiquitous question of fairness
5 in the operation of the Selective Service System.

6 The administrative agency determines which man shall 7 be drafted and which man shall not. Last term this Court was 8 deeply divided in a case which raised the question of the 9 proper definition of conscientious objection and the relation-10 ship between the religious and the nonreligious objector. I'm 11 referring, of course, to the Welsh case.

12 But this Court was unanimous in its declaration in 13 the Mulloy case, that full and fair and administrative review 14 is indispensable to the fair operation of the Selective Ser-15 vice System.

16 I respectfully submit that the backdrop in the 17 Mulloy case, as is likewise the backdrop in this case, is the 18 extremely limited judicial review of Selective Service admin-
19 istrative decisions. This is a standard of judicial review 20 which this Court has declared since the Estep case in 1936 and 21 continues to reiterate whenever there is a Selective Service 22 case before it, that the decisions of the local boards and the 23 appeal boards of the Selective Service System must be approved 24 by the courts, even if they are erroneous decisions, so long as 25 they are not without a basis in fact.

1 I submit that the essence of this case is the 2 emergence of the doctrine that the Selective Service System is 3 to be treated like any other administrative agency which 4 adjudicates personal and property rights. And that it can 5 operate fairly unless and only if the person has a right to a 6 meaningful hearing before action is taken which affects him.
7 And that under a parade of decisions of this Court and of other 8 courts, there is no meaningful hearing unless the person who 9 is subjected to these sanctions by an administrative agency, 10 who is subjected to these deprivations and effects upon his 11 personal and property rights, has a right to the advice, the 12 assistance, and the presence of counsel at the scene of such 13 hearing.

14 This is the essence of the decision of Judge
15 Peckham below and I respectfully disagree with the Solicitor
16 General when the Solicitor General states that Judge Peckham's 17 decision in the Northern District of California is based only 18 on the question of whether or not the regulation was authorized 19 by statute. The same words which Judge Peckham used to declare 20 the denial of counsel, that is the regulation prohibiting the 21 appearance of counsel as not being authorized by Congress, is 22 likewise the same words which Judge Peckham uses in concluding 23 that the prohibition of counsel is without constitutional sanc-24 tion.

25 I must say, finally, in terms of the setting of this

1 case, that this case also involves, I respectfully submit, the 2 exorcising of the myth, the myth that Selective Service local 3 boards are not administrative tribunals like hundreds of 4 thousands of other administrative tribunals around the country,
5 Federal and State; that some kind of informal kaffee klatch, 6 after church discussion groups, colloquially called "little 7 groups of neighbors(?) and that therefore, they should not 8 held to the same standards as other agencies which affect 9 personal and property rights.

10 This myth, I submit, was always based on fiction, 11 but the myth has now been officially disembodied by a change 12 in the regulations mentioned in my brief which I will get to 13 later in my argument; and the time has long come for it to be 14 finally exorcised.

15 If I may touch upon the jurisdictional question.
16 Frankly, the first point which I was going to make was that 17 which I believe came out in the colloquy between Mr. Justice 18 Brennan and my learned adversary. The Ninth Circuit has quite 19 clearly indicated that it disagrees with the position of Judge 20 Peckham. They indicated that in several decisions which the 21 Government cites in its brief prior to his decision and at least 22 one decision subsequent thereto.

23 Now, the question was asked whether the Government--

24 Q (Inaudible)

25 A I believe that is the Cassidy decision, Mr.

1 Justice Stewart and -- I beg your pardon; it's the Evans
2 decision, Mr. Justice Stewart. It's cited on page 37 of the 3 Government's brief and someplace in our brief.

4 The question before this Court, I submit, on the 5 jurisdictional point, is whether the Government was right when 6 it first took the position that there was exclusive and man-
7 datory jurisdiction in this Court, or whether the Government 8 was right after it reconsidered it and took the position that 9 it should remand and have a go at the Ninth Circuit.

10 Well, of course, I don't deny for one minute that 11 the Department of Justice and the Solicitor General's office 12 are as interested in the administrative of justice as those of 13 us in the defense bar are, but the fact is that one cannot 14 overlook the fact that any experience there would recognize 15 the inevitability of the Ninth Circuit overruling Judge Peckham 16 and I do not believe that the Government was unaware of that.

17 If the question is asked as to why this case was 18 brought to the Supreme Court in the first place, I would refer 19 the Court to Appendix C to the Government's brief, which is a 20 letter written by the distinguished former Director of the 21 Selective Service System, General Lewis B. Hershey, addressed
22 to the Attorney General. This is reprinted at pages 74 and 75
23 of the Government's brief.

24 General Hershey takes the view, and I quote, "The 25 effect of this decision, if allowed to stand unchallenged,

1 would be to place an intolerable upon the administration of the 2 Selective Service System in the Northern District of Califor-3 nia, and if extended to other jurisdictions, would result in 4 constructive paralysis of the Selective Service System in the 5 performance of its mission of procurement of manpower for the 6 Department of Defense."

7 Then it cites various decisions, including the 8 Ninth Circuit and then states: "The Congress of the United 9 States, in enacting and reenacting the selective service laws 10 during the past 29 years, has been well aware of those pro-
11 visions of the selective service regulations which discouraged 12 the presence of legal counsel for registrants."

13 The finally: "I am, therefore, making this formal 14 request on you, under the authority given to me in the statute 15 to proceed as expeditiously as possible in asking for an appeal
16 to the Supreme Court of the United States."

17 And may it please the Court, as I read all of the 18 opinions in the Sisson case and in the Mersky case and in the 19 Blue and in all of the other cases they grapple with the same 20 problems that the Solicitor General's office grapples with, 21 one thing, I think, becomes clear, and that is that it was the 22 -- it is the philosophy of the Criminal Appeals Act that where 23 there are truly vital important constitutional questions in 24 criminal cases, that the path should be smooth for their being 25 resolved by the Supreme Court immediately and without the 1 intermediate step of the Courts of Appeals.

2 And I suggest that where the --

3 Q What about Sisson?

4 A Well, I think that the Sisson case, Mr.
5 Justice White, went off on a number of other problems.
6 Obviously the man appeared before the jury and there was 7 jeopardy in that case.

8 But, it seems that where the man who has been head-9 ing the Selective Service System for 30 years, virtually 10 screams to high heaven that the system is going to be destroyed 11 and bugs the Attorney General to take the case directly to 12 this Court. That, whether he's right or wrong, and of course, 13 we say that he is wrong on the merits, that that is the kind 14 of situation which Congress had in mind when declaring as the 15 philosophy of the Criminal Appeals Act, that major constitu-16 tional decisions would come to this court directly.

17 Q The motion filed here by the Government to 18 send the case to the Court of Appeals, came before the Court of 19 Appeals' decision in the Adams case; did it not? Because I 20 looked at the chronology. I think that the motion was filed 21 here on January 16th of this year and the Evans decision was in 22 April of this year.

23 A That is correct, Mr. Justice Stewart.

24 Q Wasn't the motion on jurisdiction made by the 25 Government earlier than January of '70?

1           A       Well, the Government's motion to remand, Mr.
2 Chief Justice, which I have before me, is dated December, 1969;
3 the date is crossed out and it's stamped January 1970.

4           Q       Wasn't there an earlier motion to the same 5 effect, though?

6           A       If there is I am not aware of it, Mr. Chief
7 Justice.

8           Q       Mr. Springer is indicating in the negative.

9           A       Yes.

10          Q       So that answers it.

11          A       The practical consideration, of course, is 12 that which was revealed in the colloquy between Mr. Justice 13 Brennan and Mr. Springer that if the Government succeeds on its 14 jurisdictional point the case will go to the Ninth Circuit and 15 the decision of the Ninth Circuit has been clearly foreshadowed 16 by the Evans case and others. Then, of course, the probability 17 is that we will be back here again, but this time we will be 18 back as supplicants, as petitioners for certiorari, rather than 19 as parties with a legal right to a decision by the highest court 20 of the land.

21          Q       What about Mr. Springer's point that your 22 position is that no crime was committed?

23          A       Mr. Justice Marshall, our position is that 24 the facts alleged in the indictment did, indeed, occur and our 25 position is that there was, in fact, an induction refusal, as

1 indeed is not contested and was rarely contested in conscien=
2 tious objector cases.

3 Q The only crime could have been that there
4 was a valid induction order. That's the only way the crime
5 could have been committed. And you say that the induction 6 order was invalid.

7 A We do, indeed, Mr. Justice --

8 Q Then there is no crime.

9 A If I can go back to my understanding of the 10 position taken by the dissenters in the Mersky case, Mr.
11 Justice Marshall. They spoke for the traditional view of the 12 motion in bar provision and likened it to, as is in specific 13 ancient pleas, if I'm not being prejudicial in using that word, 14 specific venerable pleas, such as the statute of limitations
15 ultra fori acquit, ultra fori convict, pardon, and suggested 16 that it has to be something in the nature of confession --

17 Now, I suggest that confession and avoidance as 18 I have always understood it was a matter of pleading, whether 19 it's common law pleading or modern pleading, is that you admit 20 to the indictment, but you say that there is something else 21 which gives you a legal right to be exonerated, notwithstanding 22 the admission of the act of the indictment.

23 Q Well, then the only difference to whether or 24 not the valid induction order is a part of the act; the 25 Solicitor General said it is a part and you say it is not a

1 part. The act is only the failure to take the one step for-2 ward. Is that your position?

3 A That is our position, Mr. Justice Marshall.
4 May I also point out that the indictment itself refers to all
5 of the selective service regulations, at least applicable 6 selective service regulations, as being part of the crime of 7 which the defendant is accused. And the indictment speci-8 fically specifies the whole body of regulations, including the 9 regulations governing the rights of personal appearance and 10 the absence of counsel thereof.

11 Of course, under the view of motion in bar, which 12 was taken by Mr. Justice Brennan in his concurring opinion in 13 the Mersky case, we should confine the medieval pleading
14 motions to the dusty bookshelves, if I recall the adjectives 15 correctly, and that a motion in bar exists where there is a 16 termination of the cause and an exculpation of the defendant.
17 And of course, that clearly occurred in this case.

18 In this case the judge decided that the regulation 19 was not authorized by the statute in the first instance. In 20 the second instance he decided that the regulation, in any 21 event, could not have been authorized, that it was beyond 22 constitutional power because of the nature of this type of a
23 hearing.

24 And, in either case, there was a major decision
25 concerning unconstitutionality of a vital part of the Selective

1 Service Administration.

2 I would take the position that all of the starry 3 and interesting discussions in Sisson really does not take our 4 case any further than it was before, I say with respect. I
5 think that we are exactly in the same situation which Mr.
6 Justice Harlan projected in the Blue case, where the question
7 is do we apply Mr. Justice Brennan's standard of the Mersky
8 case, or do we apply the standard of Mr. Justice Stewart and 9 the other dissenters in the Mersky case?

10 And that under any standard, whether it's the only 11 thing which exculpates standard or the confession and avoid-12 ance standard, that just as Blue made it to the Supreme Court 13 directly -- he had a right to in that case, Weller should have 14 a right to make it directly to the Supreme Court in this case.

15 Q Mr. Karparkin, suppose the Government had, 16 however, appealed to the Ninth Circuit. What would have been 17 your avenue of relief, by way of getting here? Where would you 18 be in the Ninth Circuit, period?

19 A I would suppose, Mr. Justice Blackmun, that 20 we would probably make a motion to dismiss the appeal on the 21 grounds that there was direct and exclusive jurisdiction in the 22 Supreme Court of the United States.

23 Q So that you would interpret 3731 to where it 24 says an appeal may be taken, into mandatory language, then?

25 A My friend is showing me the statute.

1 Well, I believe something similar to this 2 happened in the Ninth Circuit in the case of the United States
3 against Fix, which is cited without very much discussion in 4 the government brief and I believe that the Ninth Circuit in 5 that case, recognizing the dilemma, certified the question 6 directly to this court.

7 Now, so much for the --

8 Q Well, was that the -- was that an avenue by 9 certification, separate and distinct from any concern that 10 3731 was mandatory?

11 A I believe that the Ninth Circuit expressed 12 its uncertainty about that, in that case, Mr. Justice Blackmun.

13 The other aspect of the jurisdictional point, con-14 cerns statutory construction. Now, here I believe that we 15 rest firmly with the majority opinion in Mersky. Mersky is 16 clear, as I see it, that where a regulation is so closely 17 linked or closely coupled or associated with the statute, that 18 the validity of one must perforce be determinative of the 19 validity of the other that what the court has done in dismis-20 sing the indictment based upon the construction of such a 21 statute -- brings it within the statutory construction language 22 of 3731.

23 Q Do I understand correctly that here the 24 statute is silent as to whether or not counsel could or couldn't 25 be provided by the executive?

1           A           Absolutely silent, Mr. Justice White.

2           Q           And the regulation expressly says that you 3 may not have counsel?

4           A           Yes, Mr. Justice.

5           Q           And I suppose the District Judge says there 6 is some rule of law in this context which means that a silent 7 statute just doesn't authorize the regulation. Now, is that 8 a construction of the statute?

9           A           Well, I think it is a construction of the 10 statute, but I believe that the District Judge went further 11 than that --

12          Q           You mean because you read it and said it was 13 silent, that's the construction or --

14          A           As I see what the District Judge did, Mr.
15 Justice White, is that he looked to the provisions of the 16 statute and found them silent. But he did find that the 17 statute directed the President to select men for military ser-18 vice in a fair and impartial manner. He did authorized and 19 directed the President to set up a network of local boards and 20 appeal boards. He did find that the statute authorized and 21 directed these local boards to make -- to hear and determine 22 all questions concerning inclusions, exemptions and deferrments 23 and he did specifically find that the statute authorized the 24 President to make the necessary rules and regulations.

25          Q           Yes, mm hmm.

1                   A           It seems to me --

2                   Q           But that isn't why the regulation wasn't 3 authorized.

4                   A           As a matter of law, I certainly feel that 5 the District Judge is absolutely correct in invoking the 6 principle of Greene against McElroy and Hanna against Larche 7 and many other decisions of this court to find that wherever 8 something gets so close to a constitutional right, Congress 9 must act explicitly.

10                  Q           Well, that's not construing the statute; 11 that's not construing the statute. That's just saying that 12 there is a principle about regulations that some are good and 13 some are bad, depending on how close they are to constitutional 14 issues and unless the statute expressly authorizes them --

15                  A           Well, it seems to me again, Mr. Justice 16 White, that the District Judge was looking with a magnifying 17 glass or microscope from the beginning of the statute to the 18 end, looking through every clause which could possibly have 19 some relationship with it and he found that there was none.

20                  Q           But if a District Judge reads a decision of 21 this court which says that any regulation which denies counsel 22 must at least have express Congressional authorization. He 23 looks in the statute; he doesn't find any authorization and he 24 says that the regulation is invalid.

25                               Now, is that a construction of a statute or is it

1 basing a decision on a decision of this Court?

2 A Well, I believe, since the Government takes 3 the position that the statute, properly construed, should in-4 dicate Congressional acquiescence in the existing pattern of 5 denial of counsel, that the District -- and since I am sure
6 his position was ably urged by the United States Attorney 7 in the Northern District of California, the District Judge had 8 to examine the statute and to see if it should be construed from 9 the point of view advocated by the Government.

10 I guess perhaps there may be some --

11 Q Instead of saying -- what you are saying is 12 that the Government is either -- is arguing both sides of the 13 road when it says that the statute is silent on the one hand, 14 but it isn't silent on the other, because of Congressional 15 acquiescence.

16 A You have anticipated my next observation
17 much more aptly, Mr. Justice White. I was going to say, indeed, 18 that to serve its purposes on the Congressional authorization 19 point, the Government tried to couple or link the statute and 20 the regulation as closely together as possible. It even tries 21 to fuse them together with the best writing(?) material that 22 it has.

23 That, for purposes of meeting its jurisdictional 24 argument, the government tries to separate them and this leads 25 to a little bit of schizophrenia in the Government's brief

1 because they refer at one place they refer to the statute and 2 the regulation combined as "the law" of selective service.
3 It obviously suits their purpose to argue that this is "the 4 law" of selective service on the merits while it doesn't suit 5 their purpose to do so on the jurisdictional point.

6 I think, though, that the final point on jurisdic-
7 tion has to do with the Government's concession, as it must 8 concede that there was direct jurisdiction in this Court on 9 statutory construction in the Eisdorfer case. The Government 10 argues that there is some difference between Eisdorfer and this 11 case because Eisdorfer involves the delinquency regulations 12 while this case involves a regulation prohibiting counsel.

13 Well, the Government says that there is this 14 difference. It doesn't say why this makes a difference. It 15 argues that one is more remote than another. But, I submit, 16 that the delinquency regulations, as anyone who has read the 17 Oestereich and Guchknect and Blue decisions of this Court, 18 knows involves procedure perhaps even more so than it involves 19 substance.

20 And the regulation involved in this case is ob-21 viously also a procedural regulation.

22 Q The Eisdorfer case wasn't a decision of this 23 Court, was it? It was dismissal under Rule 60.

24 A It certainly was, Mr. Justice Harlan; yes.
25 It was not a decision of this Court.

1 Q Yes, Yes.

2 A I'm pointing out that the Government is 3 trying to explain the illogic in its position and I believe 4 they had a lot of explaining to do.

5 IF I may move now to the point on the merits. We 6 start with the proposition announced by this Court in Greene 7 against Mc Elroy, and foreshadowed the previous decisions and 8 following later decisions, that since only Congress can draft, 9 only Congress can deny the right to counsel as part of the 10 drafting process. It seems that this is self-evident and the 11 Government almost admits it and except for one place, page 22 12 of its brief where it seems to suggest that maybe this is not 13 so and that maybe there are limits on Presidential power to 14 deny counsel or to otherwise structure the hearings and the 15 implication perhaps is that maybe there are not even any 16 limits on other Presidential war powers, a point which the 17 Government tantalizingly suggests, and doesn't move on. And 18 then once again it talks about nonjusticiability and to my 19 surprise, the case which it cited is an order of this Court 20 denying certiorari.

21 And of course, I was taught from my first breath of 22 constitutional law that one should never see a denial of a 23 petition for certiorari as having any kind of a significance on 24 the merits, but perhaps when -- perhaps that's the best thing 25 that the Government could cite for this proposition, so they 1 cited it.

2 Q Which case is that?

3 A I'm referring, Mr. Justice White, to the 4 footnote on page 22 of the Government's brief where Mora v.
5 McNamara, an order of this Court denying certiorari is pre-6 sumably cited in favor of the proposition that what the 7 Government regards as nonjusticiable controversies of a 8 political nature should not properly be brought before the 9 Court.

10 The -- it seems as we read the Greene case, the 11 requirement of explicit authorization before there may be a 12 tampering with fundamental constitutional rights, is so clear 13 that it is hard to see what the Government is belaboring, 14 except that one must identify what appears to be a complete 15 nimble effort on the part of the Government to read the Greene
16 case to stand for its opposite.

17 The Government seems to read the Greene case as 18 saying that purposeful inaction means the same thing as action.
19 It seems quite clear to me from anybody who reads it, that the 20 Greene case specifically said that mere acquiescence or in-21 action is sufficient-- is insufficient; that Congress must 22 specifically authorize a departure from a fundamental constitu-23 tional right.

24 Now, the Government mentions Hanna against Larche
25 which was, of course, this Court's decision, split 5 to 4 on

1 the amount of due process which was available to witnesses
2 before the Civil Rights Commission. Now, it seems to me that 3 the decision in Hanna against Larche is completely different 4 from that which we have here.

5 In Hanna against Larche, there was indeed -- there
6 were indeed, two proposals before Congress; two complete 7 proposals: one which provided for a greater measure of due 8 process and another which provided for a lesser measure of 9 due process. And both, interestingly, provided for rights of 10 counsel, but to different extents.

11 And the legislative history of Hanna against Larche
12 is clearly revealed by the majority decision of this Court, 13 and the legislative history of the Civil Rights Commission, 14 indicated that Congress explicitly selected one of these 15 schemes and specifically rejected the other scheme.

16 The ultimate of Congressional acquiescence has -- 17 was not followed in this Court in Greene; not followed in this 18 Court in Tussy(?), a selective service matter. The matter 19 involving selective service administration last year, last 20 term.

21 Now, the Government finally argues about the 22 legislative history of the 1967 Act. It appears to us as we 23 read the same legislative history that it means a great deal
24 other than what the Government says it means. Of course there 25 were extensive hearings. As we recall, and if the Court may

1 well take judicial notice, these hearings were essentially 2 about student deferrments, about the lottery, about occupa-3 tional deferrments. Very little attention was given to 4 selective service procedures; very little attention was given 5 to conscientious objection.

6           The Government argues, points to the testimony
7 given by General Hershey in an interim report which was pre-8 pared, but as we point out in our brief, the House Armed 9 Services Committee expressly disclaimed that it was any 10 reflection of General Hershey's views, as indeed it might, for 11 General Hershey distinguished himself at these hearings by 12 making the statement that he was opposed to any amendments to 13 the law because, and I quote: "You can do almost anything under 14 this law, which is more than you can say for a great many laws 15 that are on the books."

16           I can understand the House Armed Services Committee
17 wishing to disassociate itself with that sentiment. The Floor
18 debates are not any more helpful. My learned friend was wrong
19 when he says that there was debate on the Floor of the House 20 concerning counsel at local boards.

21           The proposal made by Congressman Kastenmeier was 22 exclusively confined to appeal boards. There was no discussion 23 at all on the Floor of the House about local boards.

24           It is true, indeed, that the Morse Amendment was 25 entered on the Floor of the Senate, but it is quite clear, I

1 believe, as we pointed out in our brief, that Senator Morse, 2 who raised the question and Senator Russell, the Chairman of 3 the Senate Armed Services Committee, and other Senators who 4 participated in the debate, were, and I must say this with 5 all respect, acting upon complete misinformation as to what 6 was involved. We indicate the colloquy on page 34 in our 7 brief, that Senator Russell, Chairman of the Senate Committee,
8 was stating quite incorrectly that the Government appeals 9 agent is independent; he does not have divided loyalty and 10 stated quite clearly that there is a -- there are separate 11 counsel available for the board and for the registrant.

12 Now, this is clearly wrong. WE indicate in our 13 brief in the long footnote on page 35 a number of other places
14 where there was just clear factual error clear misinformation 15 on the part of the Senators engaged in this debate. Now, what 16 does one make of all this? I suggest that this is an apt
17 illustration of what Mr. Justice Jackson characterized floor 18 debates, and I quote, "not always distinguished for candor or 19 accuracy."

20 The -- and perhaps illustrates the wisdom of the 21 doctrine that one should not resort to legislative history 22 except where the face of the act is inescapably ambiguous.
23 But here the fact of the act is not inescapably ambiguous; it 24 was just silent on the subject.

25 Q Well, silence sometimes is the source of the 1 ambiguity; is it not?

2           A           That is quite so, Mr. Chief Justice; yes.
3 But, at the very least, if I must retreat from my position, 4 though I don't think I am obliged to, it seems that it is 5 hardly the clear showing which the Government argues is clear 6 Congressional action. I do not think that that occurred in 7 this case, by a long shot. And I think that the Government's 8 statements about the legislative history will -- should be and 9 will be read in the light of the actual legislative history in 10 the contentions which we make.

11           The essential constitutional point which we make, 12 may it please the Court, is that a local board -- personal 13 appearance -- is such a vital and necessary part of the pro-
14 cedure whereby young persons are ordered to submit themselves 15 to the demands of military service that it just be properly 16 reviewed as an adjudicatory proceeding and indeed, as this 17 word has been used in many court decisions, as an adversary 18 proceeding.

19           We start with that same local board personal 20 appearance. As my adversary pointed out, this is a formalized
21 part of the structure. Indeed, it is one of the few things 22 which is formal within the structure. It is a means of con-23 test; it is an arena which is created for the registrant who 24 was dissatisfied with his classification to attempt to come
25 forth and secure a change in his classification. Everything

1 else, it can almost be stated without hazard, is by supplica-
2 tion; is by discretion with regard to selective service. This 3 is one of the few guaranteed rights which the regulatory 4 scheme sets up: the right to contest your classification and to 5 have a personal appearance for the purpose of contesting it.

6 Q Does Judge Peckham's decision stand alone
7 among the decisions on this question in the lower courts?

8 A There are -- the short answer to your 9 question is "yes," Mr. Justice Harlan, but I must observe, 10 that, as we cite in my brief, there are about half a dozen 11 decisions of judges who have indicated great discomfort with 12 the denial of counsel and quite clearly indicated how it pro-13 duces injustice in many cases. I refer to many decisions by 14 District Judges and a few decisions by Courts of Appeals.

15 The -- it is by its nature an adversary proceeding, 16 because if one had gone no further than to recall the language 17 of Mr. Justice Brandeis in the Abilene Railroad case, which 18 we quote on page 42 of our brief, that even in the case where 19 the determination must be made as to which of two carriers
20 would get a more favorable rate. I quote: "Every proceeding 21 is adversary in substance if it may result in an order in 22 favor of one carrier as against another one."

23 Obviously, in favor of one registrant as against 24 another one.

25 Q Well, who is your adversary here?

1           A       There are two ways of responding to that 2 question, Mr. Justice Marshall. One can indeed say that the 3 local board and the power which it represents is adversary to 4 the young man.

5           Q       Well, then, why don't you object if the 6 prosecutor and jury and judge are all the same. You don't 7 argue that.

8           A       Because, Mr. Justice Marshall --

9           Q       Because you can't.

10          A       There is a difference between the administra-
11 tive process and the judicial process.

12          Q       Because you can't.

13          A       I can't and I wouldn't.

14          Q       Well, the only people there are the board, the 15 clerk and the man. So, it's got to be the clerk or the board, 16 in order for you to get your adversary. You put so much 17 weight on this adversary proceeding.

18          A       Well, I'm suggesting, Mr. Justice Marshall, 19 that as viewed by Mr. Justice Brandeis in the Abilene Railroad 20 case, that is only one way of determining whether something is 21 adversary or not. That, wherever a choice must be made between 22 two contestants as to who gets the benefits and who gets the 23 burden, that is an adversary proceeding.

24          Q       Well, that's why I am trying to find who are 25 are the two contestants?

1                   A       The contestant in a sense --

2                   Q       I'm just using your language of Justice
3 Brandeis. I'm trying to find out who's the other one.

4                   A       I suggest that the contestant is any other 5 young man who may get that particular deferrment and any other 6 young man who may be called if that deferrment is granted.

7                   Q       But he isn't there, and that would be the 8 negation of the adversary contest, to treat as a party someone 9 who isn't there.

10                  A       At the time that -- if the rule for which we 11 are contending is adopted, then at the time that he receives 12 his 1-A classification, preliminary to an order to report for 13 induction, he will have an opportunity to have a personal 14 appearance and to indicate the grounds for his contest and to 15 have the opportunity for a meaningful hearing.

16                  Q       But, Justice Brandeis was talking about the 17 tripod situation where you had two contending parties and a 18 tryer. Here you do not have, or I think Justice Marshall is 19 concerned about the same thing. Where are the two contending 20 parties and the tryer, the three legs on the stool?

21                  A       I am saying that the philosophy of it, as I 22 read the Abilene case, is that wherever a benefit may be 23 bestowed upon one person rather than another, that even if that 24 person is not before the tribunal he is in an adversary 25 posture.

1           Q       But the Congress in both Houses, filled with 2 a great many lawyers, Mr. Karpatkin, and certainly when they 3 drafted this, didn't see it as an adversary proceeding in that 4 sense, did they?

5           A       It would not appear to have been when it was 6 drafted in 1940 and the regulations that we have are still the 7 harbingers from the 1940 statute, but a great deal has hap-
8 pened in the evolution of standards of administrative due 9 process, as a result of the decisions of this Court and of 10 other courts since then.

11               And this also answers why there have been a large 12 number of District Court and Court of Appeals decisions, all 13 of which we seek to distinguish in our brief, particularly in 14 the early days, which almost started as an ipse dixit, that 15 of course there is no right to counsel; who would everthink of 16 it?

17               But, under the rulings of this Court in Goldberg
18 against Kelly, in in re Gault and in a number of decisions 19 which we cite in our brief, it seems to me that there is an 20 emerging recognition of the fact that whenever any person's 21 private or property rights may be subjected to any deprivation, 22 may be subjected to any loss, may have any baleful effect upon 23 them, that there is a right to a hearing, to a meaningful hear-24 ing and that an essence of a meaningful hearing is the right to 25 be heard and the right to be heard with counsel.

1           And I don't know that it's necessary to rehearse
2 the catalogue of decisions where that isn't held.

3           We set forth in our brief a long -- a discussion of 4 the various possible classifications and a various possible
5 classification which the local board may give and we indicated 6 each one of them. There are questions of law as well as 7 questions of fact which must be decided. Take, for example, 8 conscientious objection.

9           A local board must decide whether someone is a 1-0 10 or 1-A-0. A local board must decide whether someone is a 11 religious or ethical and moral objector within the context of 12 the Seeger, Sicurella and Welsh decisions or whether someone's 13 objection is based on policy pragmatism or expediency, and 14 consequently he is not entitled to conscientious objection. A 15 local board must decide if a prima facie case has been 16 presented so as to justify reopening. Surely that also is a 17 question of law.

18           A local board must decide if there has been a post-19 induction maturation of conscientious objector views, raising 20 the questions that are before this Court in the other case for 21 argument, I believe, for next month. A local board must 22 decide whether a registrant's statements about the readiness to 23 use self-defense come within the exception of the Sicurella
24 case or whether these statements indicate a general objection 25 -- indicate an inconsistency with a general statement of

1 conscientious objection.

2 And of course, perforce on all of these questions, 3 as this Court has reminded us over and over again since the 4 Witmer case, a board must decide the basic question of sin-5 cerity.

6 Now, the incidence of a personal appearance, the 7 regulations provide for the administration of an oath, for the 8 subpoena power. Words like "evidence," and "hearing," and 9 "jurisdiction" are used. The regulations bristle with these 10 characteristics of administrative practice. We do cite in our 11 brief some decisions where courts have recognized the adversary 12 character of selective service local boards, the adjudicative 13 character and the fact that the things which they do affect 14 people's personal and property rights.

15 Q This personal appearance, this right of 16 personal appearance, is a creature of the statute; isn't it?

17 A I believe it's a creature of regulation, Mr.
18 Justice Stewart. I don't think the word "personal appearance" 19 appears in the statute.

20 Q It still was a creature of, like you say, 21 the regulations.

22 A That is correct, Mr. Justice Stewart.

23 Q Well, it is no doubt a circular reason, but 24 I'm sure that's the answer to what my question is going to 25 suggest: if the Selective Service in creating this right by

1 statute, had considered anything like the adversary hearing
2 that you are, in your submission there, saying that it is, it 3 would follow, of course, that it couldn't possibly have promul-4 gated the regulation in issue; could it?

5 A I guess it's not the --

6 Q You guess the answer is that circular 7 reasoning?

8 A Yes, sir; and also is not the first set of 9 regulations which betray inconsistencies. On the one hand the 10 regulation talks about oaths and witnesses and adversaries and 11 subpoenas and jurisdictions and on the other hand, the regula-12 tion says no counsel.

13 Now, this doesn't take us to the special, what I 14 call the "special mythology" of selective service. We had a 15 little project in my office this summer; with the assistance of 16 a number of law students, we presumed to read the statutes and 17 the regulations governing every Federal administrative agency 18 searching for similar regulations dealing with right of counsel, 19 and our findings are revealed in our brief.

20 We found some 36 agencies which expressly provide 21 for the right of counsel, either by statute or regulation. We 22 did not find a single other agency in the Federal system, with 23 the exception of the Selective Service System, where, either by 24 statute or regulation, there was an express prohibition of 25 counsel under any circumstances.

1           Now, it seems to me that there has to be some 2 better argument for sustaining this "everybody is out of step 3 except selective service" argument. Other than the quaint 4 notion that it's just little groups of neighbors sitting around 5 the general store and deciding what's best for neighbor John's 6 son.

7           Now, the fact is that a whole series of cases in 8 the District Court and one in this Court, where, unfortunately, 9 certiorari was denied, have presented very, very strong proof 10 that many of the local board members do not reside in their 11 district. And the response by the Selective Service System to 12 this avalanche of cases has been simply to amend the regulation 13 to rescind the regulation requiring local board members, where-14 ever practicable to reside within the geographical jurisdiction 15 of their board.

16           Q       What about the matter Justice Stewart was 17 pursuing? Do I understand you to concede that administratively 18 the regulations could be amended so as to eliminate any personal 19 appearance at all?

20           A       Oh, no, Mr. Chief Justice; if I conceded that, 21 I am --

22           Q       Well, I got a hint of it; that was all, and I 23 wanted to be sure.

24           A       No, indeed --

25           Q       If it's the creature -- if the regulation is

1 the creature of administrative action, "things so wrought may 2 be unwrought so," may they not?

3 A Subject to the constitution, Mr. Chief
4 Justice.

5 Q But --

6 A And I would suggest that if the Selective 7 Service System would attempt to abolish all regulations govern-8 ing procedures and --

9 Q Not all; just the one about personal appear-10 ance.

11 A Oh, about personal appearance, Mr. Chief
12 Justice --

13 Q Yes, that this would be taking away the right

14 to be heard. A Yes, that this would be taking away the 15 right to be heard, unless something were substituted which is 16 the equivalent thereof. The only thing that seems to me the 17 equivalent of the right to be heard with counsel is the right to 18 be heard at all.

19 Q Well, then, of necessity you are suggesting 20 that when the administrative regulations were promulgated, the 21 purpose was to give effect to a constitutional right to be 22 heard?

23 A I would not, in truth, say that that was the 24 purpose in 1940, Mr. Chief Justice. I think the purpose in 1940
25 was to quickly set up set of regulations to deal with a total

1 national mobilization and an impending world emergency problem
2 and then nobody would have thought very much about what the con-3 stitution required.

4 Q Sometime in between 1940 and now, then, the 5 constitution has intruded itself, with the aid of the courts.

6 A I would say that the recognition of the 7 constitutional compulsions have intruded themselves and, indeed, 8 with each term of this Court, the recognition increases, and I
9 would hope that there would be a similar increase in recogni-10 tion resulting from this case.

11 May I just point out, finally, that the right to 12 counsel is already recognized in certain aspects of conscientious 13 objector cases. It is recognized by the military in all of the 14 in-services hearing procedures, something which was noted by 15 Judge Peckham and not responded to by the Government, and it was 16 recognized for a period of 20 years, may it please the Court, 17 under the old hearings held before the Department of Justice 18 Hearing Officers. I know; I participated in a number of those 19 hearings in 1965 and 1966 and '67, and indeed, it is clear in 20 the Nugent case and it is clear in the four decisions by this 21 Court in 1955 that these all had to deal with the proper status
22 of due process in the Department of Justice hearings, where it 23 was acknowledged that there was a right of counsel.

24 Now, finally, in response to the cries of alarm 25 which are reflected in the letter by General Hershey in the

1 record, and reflected rather uncritically I respectfully
2 suggest in the Government's brief in their arguments that this 3 will be the end of the Selective Service System; this will be 4 paralysis; the nation will be left defenseless and similar hand-5 wringing. I think it's instructive to the Court, and with the 6 Court's permission I should like to read into the record, and 7 I will make copies available to the Clerk, of the recent com-
8 munication by the present National Director of the Selective 9 Service System.

10 Q Why don't you just give us the essence of it 11 in view of the hour, and then put it in -- file it with us.

12 A Yes. The essence of it is one sentence. I've 13 advised the Government of my intention to read this: "We are 14 aware, of course, of cases currently before the Supreme Court 15 which deal with collective conscientious objection and represen-16 tation of registrants by counsel. It is our hope that should 17 changes be made by the Court in either of these areas, you will 18 be able to help us meet the resulting challenges.

19 Though hardly an enthusiastic endorsement of my 20 position, it is quite different from the cry that the Selective 21 Service System will be dismembered if this Court decides that 22 there is a constitutional right to counsel.

23 Q That's a letter to you?

24 A This is a letter, Mr. Justice Stewart, to 25 the Chairman of the National Interreligious Service Board for

1 conscientious objectors; copies of which have been made avail-
2 able to other organizations.

3 Q Mr. Karpatkin, it's your footnote 46, which 4 your law student task force reviewed these various agencies and 5 with prohibition of counsel, or the absence of prohibition 6 provisions, do you know anything about the agricultural review 7 committees which have some parallel, anyway, to the local board, 8 their duty being to determine how much acreage will go into the 9 soil bank; this kind of thing. Do you know whether there is a 10 prohibition of the appearance of counsel?

11 A I do not know the answer to that, Mr. Justice
12 Blackmun, but I would be delighted to research it and present 13 a memorandum to the Court.

14 Q Well, it isn't necessary. I just noticed
15 it wasn't listed here and I --

16 A I can say for sure that we did not find an 17 express prohibition.

18 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Mr. Karpatkin.
19 Mr. Springer, your time is exhausted. If you have something of 20 extreme urgency we will give you one moment.

21 MR. SPRINGER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice; I 22 don't unless there are questions.

23 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: I see no indication of 24 it. Thank you, gentlemen. The case is submitted.

25 (Whereupon, at 2:15 o'clock p.m. the argument in the above-entitled matter was concluded)
