MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will resume arguments in Number 835: Dewey against the Reynolds Metals Company.

ORAL ARGUMENT (Continued) BY DONALD F.

OOSTERHOUSE, ESQ. ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

MR. OOSTERHOUSE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the Court:

Mr. Dewey has been working at Reynolds Metals Company since the District Judge ordered him reinstated to the present date. The last time Sunday work was scheduled at that Reynolds Plant was in November of 1968.

The statute involved in this case, the Civil Rights of '64, Section 70381, deleting the material not bearing on religion would say: "It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to discharge any individual because of such individual's religion.

The clause in the entire section, "or otherwise to discriminate against," I believe defines discharge for religion as discrimination. And thus the language is rather broad in prohibiting discharge for religion.

While religion is difficult to define precisely, I think there are at least two elements always present in that they are beliefs on the one hand, and conduct falling out of these beliefs on the other.

Q Well, does anyone challenge that issue here

1 to be --

2 A I don't think it's challenged, Your Honor.
3 Except in the Chamber of Commerce brief, they would interpret 4 the statute to cover and protect naked belief only, rather 5 than conduct.

6 This Court has applied the Civil Rights Act. I am 7 thinking particularly now of Griggs against Duke Power which 8 was decided March 8th of this year. And the Court said that 9 the face of the rule or even the uniform application of the 10 rule is not an adequate matter for investigation. Quote:

11 "But Congress directed the thrust of the Act to the 12 consequences of employment practices, not simply the motiva-13 tion." This, of course, followed the Court's doctrine in the 14 constitutional free exercise of religion also in such a case 15 as Sherbert against Verner and in Barnett, where it is the 16 effect of discrimination, rather than the face of the rule 17 that counts.

18 Q Well, in the Griggs case wasn't that impact 19 discussion, that is judging it by its impact and effect, tied 20 in with the situation in which there has been a long history 21 of discriminatory employment practices? Isn't that so?

22 A Yes, Mr. Chief Justice; this is correct.
23 That case involved that kind of a fact situation.

24 Q But, do you claim any long history of dis-25 criminatory practices against religious beliefs in this case?

1           A           No; we do not. But we do claim that the 2 language which this Court used in Griggs is broad enough to 3 cover more than the bare fact situation in that case; that the 4 approach to this act is to look at consequences of discrimina-5 tion.

6           Reynolds' defense that this rule of required over-7 time applied uniformly to all people, whether they had 8 religious objections to working on Sunday or not, we claim, 9 therefore, is not an adequate defense because the effect of 10 this rule is to put a person with Dewey's religious beliefs 11 to a choice that no other employee is put to, and that is: of 12 either sacrificing his job or sacrificing his religious con-13 victions.

14           It was precisely this kind of a conflict which 15 this Court disapproved of in Sherbert against Verner even 16 though that was under the constitution, I think, the principle 17 of interpretation is applicable to the conflict between 18 religion and employment under the Civil Rights Act.

19           The Commission charged with enforcement of this 20 act has adopted regulations and it has, by the regulations, 21 adopted an intermediate interpretation of the act. As I indi-
22 cated before, the Chamber of Commerce brief would have us
23 apply the protection of the Civil Rights Act only to belief, 24 not to conduct flowing from that belief at all.

25           The language of the statute itself is very broad

1 in prohibiting discharge because of religion without any 2 reference to the degree of hardship which might result.
3 from continuing the employment of a person. The regulations 4 adopted in its reinterpretation, saying that a person may be 5 discharged because of religion, if to do otherwise would 6 create undue hardship upon an employer. The regulations place 7 the burden of proof of showing this undue hardship also upon 8 the employer.

9 In this case the accommodation which is required
10 by the regulation could have been easily accomplished and I 11 think that the employer here has completely failed in his 12 burden of proof to show that to accommodate would have created 13 undue hardship. The evidence indicates that there were, on 14 each of the Sundays involved, several people in Dewey's 15 classification who were not assigned to work. The evidence 16 shows that Mr. Dewey was the only person in this classifica-
17 tion with the religious convictions against Sunday work.

18 The evidence also shows that there were two persons 19 outside of the classification who were qualified; that in fact 20 on one of the three Sundays involved Reynolds did ask one of 21 these persons outside of the classification to work and he did 22 work. And there were no great problems according to the facts 23 we have before this Court, resulting from Reynolds doing that.

24 We submit that on the basis of the evidence 25 presented there is nothing to show that REynolds was unable to

1 accommodate by getting volunteers to take Dewey's place on the 2 three Sundays in question. And that's accommodation even 3 short of using their compulsory overtime clause. I don't 4 think that we, on the evidence, even have to get into the 5 compulsory overtime clause. They could have done it without 6 directing an employee to work; they could have done it by 7 asking another employee to work.

8           However, even use of the compulsory overtime 9 clause had been required I think this is still in the area of 10 reasonable accommodation and does not show undue hardship.

11           Reynolds claims that at one point, some ten years 12 prior to the three Sundays which Dewey was involved they had 13 trouble in obtaining enough people to do overtime work. This 14 was before their contract contained any compulsory overtime
15 clause, so I don't think that that constitutes any evidence 16 whatsoever of undue hardship in Dewey's situation.

17           Their other claim of undue hardship is that to 18 accommodate Dewey would completely negate their compulsory 19 overtime clause and I submit that this, too, is not correct.
20 If this statute is as we interpret it, it will supercede the 21 provisions of the contract only to the very narrow extent 22 necessary to comply with the act.

23           If the law be that accommodations must be made on 24 the basis of religious belief this does not mean, as Reynolds 25 argues, that accommodation has to be made for every personal

1 reason. The statute only lists specific classifications.

2 Thank you.

3 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Mr.
4 Oosterhouse.

5 Mr. Wallace.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT BY LAWRENCE G. WALLACE,

7 OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL ON

8 BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE

9 Mr. Wallace. Mr. Chief Justice and may it please
10 the Court;

11 This is the third case under Title VII of the 1964
12 Civil Rights Act to be argued in this Court. The first two 13 cases were decided earlier this term. In all three cases the 14 complaint had been acted upon by the Equal Employment Oppor-
15 tunity Commission prior to the filing of the suit as the law
16 requires. But, because of statutory differences between en-17 forcement powers of that commission and the powers of other 18 Federal agencies, such as the National Labor Relations Board
19 and the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Equal Employment
20 Opportunity Commission was not a party to any of these three 21 suits in the Federal Courts to enforce Title VII.

22 Since we believe that this Court's decision in these 23 case are in many ways as vital to the work and the responsi-24 bilities of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission as 25 this Court's decisions under the statutes other agencies

1 administer or to those agencies and since the Attorney 2 General also has important statutory responsibilities for the 3 enforcement of Title VII the United States filed an amicus 4 brief in each of the three cases and asked to participate in 5 the oral argument in each of them. And in two of the three 6 cases, including the present one, the Court granted our 7 request to participate in the arguments.

8 Now, the District Court's judgment in this case in 9 favor of the Petitioner was reversed by the Court of Appeals 10 on two grounds, and we believe that the Court of Appeals was 11 wrong on both grounds and that the District Court's judgment 12 should be reinstated.

13 The first ground of reversal was that arbitration
14 under the collective agreement foreclosed suit in the courts
15 under Title VII. This, however, is of great concern to us
16 because of the severe impact that it had on all of the rights 17 against discrimination conferred by Title VII.

18 Q Do you suggest that it's undesirable to have 19 rights under the act disposed of by private arbitration; that 20 is by factual arbitration?

21 A Congress specified a different method for 22 enforcing the rights under the act.

23 Q Did it exclude private arbitration?

24 A Not in terms, Your Honor.

25 Q Does any statute ever exclude arbitration

1 unless it does so by the most explicit terms? Has it ever 2 been so held?

3 A There has been no holding in this Court to 4 my knowledge to that effect, but we think the legislative 5 history indicates that Congress conferred on an individual an 6 ultimate right to vindication of the rights against discrim-7 ination conferred under Title VII by their own lawsuits in the 8 Federal Courts, rather than to representation by their union 9 against whom Title VII was also directed and was also, in 10 Congress's view been, in some instances, guilty of the kind of 11 discrimination that Congress wanted to eliminate in the 12 arbitration process.

13 Q Well, putting aside for a moment, even 14 though not setting aside as unimportant the intervention of 15 the union here, or in such cases. Is it not true that the 16 courts generally for a long time, including this Court, in 17 opinions, have indicated broad approval of disposition of 18 conflicts by arbitration?

19 A Well, we believe our position is entirely 20 compatible with that approval because if the decision below 21 were to prevail, if an employee could invoke the arbitration
22 remedy only at the cost of sacrificing some of his Title VII 23 rights, he would be discouraged from invoking the arbitration 24 remedy.

25 Q I thought your point of the laws was that

1 this arbitration did not and did not purport to settle any 2 results under the act, but only to settle the rights of the 3 parties under the collective bargaining agreement.

4 A Well, that is our point in this case, Mr.
5 Justice Stewart. That is entirely true. We felt that in our 6 brief we also should address the broader issue and say what 7 our position is. That issue need not be passed upon by this 8 Court, but we wanted our position known because sometimes the 9 Court's opinions do speak beyond the narrow confines of the 10 case.

11 In this case there is no question but what the 12 arbitrator did not purport to pass on the Title VII issue and 13 he had no authority under the collective agreement to pass on 14 anything but a claim under the agreement. The agreement did 15 not contain any provision relating to religious discrimination.
16 It did have a provision relating to sex discrimination and 17 that is the only anti-discrimination provision in the agree-18 ment.

19 Q But it did have a provision which said no 20 one would be excused from overtime except for good cause or 21 some provision like that --

22 A Well, there were provisions concerning 23 overtime. The arbitrator ruled that the employer's position
24 in this case was supported by those provisions and the Title 25 VII suit in no way questions that the decision of the 1 as to the meaning of the collective agreement.

2 There is a statutory right at issue that's wholly 3 independent of the collective agreement here, and if the 4 collective agreement hadn't existed at all the statutory issue
5 would be exactly the same, in our view, that Congress con-6 ferred a right on individuals. It doesn't depend on whether 7 they had a union or whether the union entered into a 8 collective agreement with their employer. That's the point 9 in this case.

10 We have in our brief, elaborated the fact that 11 under-- what happened, we recognize, at least in the restate-12 ment of the judgment, as elementary principles of the law of 13 judgment, are directly contrary to the position which the 14 Court of Appeals took in this case: we have cited the relevant 15 comments and illustrations from the restatement in our brief, 16 and as we have pointed out, two other Courts of Appeals, those 17 of the Fifth and Seventh Circuits, have taken the opposite 18 view about the relation between arbitration in Title VII in 19 circumstances essentially similar to the circumstances here.

20 Q Earlier this term we had a case involving a 21 very ancient statute, 18th Century or very early 19th Century, 22 affecting --

23 A The Arguelles case.

24 Q -- affecting seamen?

25 A Yes.

1 Q And a collective bargaining agreement to 2 which that seaman's union and his employer were parties?

3 A Yes, Mr. Justice.

4 Q Do you --

5 A We discussed that case in our brief and as 6 we point out in a footnote in our brief, we don't think the 7 present case presents the difficulty that divided the Court
8 in the Arguelles case. Even in that case --

9 Q How do you spell that case?

10 A The Arguelles case; A-r-g-u-e-l-l-e-s.
11 That, as I recall, is the second, rather than the first party.
12 It's on page 19 of our brief in Footnote Number 6: United 13 States Bulk Carriers, Incorporated, against Arguelles.

14 As we pointed out in that case that the dissenting 15 justices emphasized the fact that the statutory penalty in 16 those circumstances depended, according to Mr. Justice White's 17 opinion, entirely on interpretation and application of the 18 bargaining agreement. And we are not involved with that kind 19 of right at all here. And for other reasons that we discuss 20 in the course of the brief, we don't think that the difficul-21 ties of that case are presented here.

22 Here all that the arbitrator decided was that the 23 discharge of Petitioner did not violate the terms of the 24 collective bargaining agreement, containing no anti-discrimina-25 tion provision relevant here.

1 In other words, under the Court of Appeals'
2 holding the Petitioner is entitled to virtually nothing more
3 than he would have if Title VII had never been enacted; a 4 decision by the arbitrator about whether the collective 5 bargaining agreement afforded him protection or not. I say 6 "virtually nothing more," because he did have the benefit of 7 conciliation efforts on this behalf by the Equal Employment 8 Opportunity Commission, but those efforts are likely to be 9 of little effect in a situation in which the possibility of 10 enforcement of Title VII would be foreclosed, because of the 11 grievance procedure.

12 And we believe, in enacting Title VII the Congress 13 did accomplish more than this, otherwise a large category of 14 of employees covered by collective bargaining agreements would 15 be virtually denied the benefits of Title VII, which to us, is 16 a very important matter.

17 Although the relationship between arbitration of 18 Title VII rights was not explicitly discussed in the legisla-19 tive history of Title VII, Congress was, of course, aware in 20 1964 of the widespread use of arbitration under collective 21 agreements, and this is another distinction of the Arguelles 22 case, where we are dealing with an old statute. And yet the 23 whole design reflected in Title VII was to confer an ultimate 24 individual right to sue that would not displace other rights, 25 but would be in addition to; we elaborate that in our brief.

1 And this is all taken into account in the 2 decisions of the Fifth and Seventh Circuits which have held 3 that the Selection of Rights Doctrine is inappropriate here.
4 Those decisions I cited on page 16 of our brief.

5 And their holding is that arbitration under the 6 collective agreement and remedies under Title VII may each 7 be separately pursued to judgment so long as double recovery
8 is not allowed, which we think is the proper approach. It may 9 be coincidental that the same remedy is appropriate if rights 10 under both the collective agreement and Title VII have been 11 violated. In this case no right under the Collective Agree-12 ment was violated by the employer, so that issue doesn't even 13 arise.

14 There are important differences between arbitration
15 and the Title VII rights which we think justify this view and 16 one is the fact previously mentioned that the submission of 17 the grievance to the arbitrator is controlled by the union 18 where the Congress in Title VII conferred the right to sue on 19 the individual complainant. And it is significant in this 20 context that Congress found it appropriate to afford protection
21 under Title VII against discrimination by the unions as well 22 as by employers and thought that this was a comparable problem 23 and although in this case no claim of bad faith in the union's 24 representation is made, it is noteworthy that in the grievance 25 proceeding before the arbitrator the employer was represented

1 by a lawyer; the union was not, and the employer filed a 2 post-hearing brief and the union did not.

3 We think it's significant that Congress gave the 4 complainant the right to control his own litigation under 5 Title VII.

6 Another important difference, and I think a 7 crucially important difference is that the scope of judicial 8 review that arbitrators award is very limited and this is 9 appropriate, because arbitrators are applying the disparate
10 provisions of private agreements. But in Title VII Congress 11 conferred a statutory right on individuals and provided for 12 its enforcement through the normal judicial processes which 13 assured greater uniformity in the interpretation and applica-14 tion of that right and there is a corresponding public in-15 terest in assuring that access to the courts is available 16 because the availability of that access encourages compliance 17 with the act as the courts have interpreted it.

18 Q Mr. Wallace, didn't Petitioner also seek 19 redress as under the state statute, the Michigan Civil Rights 20 Law?

21 A That is a prerequisite here, because --

22 Q -- to his invoking his --

23 A To his invoking Title VII. That is correct, 24 and the Michigan Civil Rights Commission determined that he 25 did not have a right under the Michigan Law and then he could

1 proceed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and 2 bring this suit.

3 Q That was a necessary condition of proceed-4 ing under the --

5 A Under the Federal Statute; that is correct.

6 Well, if I may I will turn to the merits of the 7 suit, since we believe that this Court should also reach the 8 merits, and the Court of Appeals, as a second ground for its 9 reversal of the District Court's judgment, also ruled against 10 the Petitioner on the merits.

11 And our starting point on the merits is this 12 Court's recent decision in Griggs against Duke Power Company, 13 which held that where employment practices are neutral on their 14 face, but discriminatory in their effect, the employer has the 15 burden of showing that they are required by business necessity.
16 This has long been the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's 17 approach to the act.

18 It is true that in the Griggs case, as the Chief 19 Justice has pointed out, that with the background of discrim-20 ination by the employer, this is relevant to the right of the 21 Attorney General to bring a suit under Title VII because of 22 the pattern of practice of discrimination, perhaps, but it
23 doesn't seem to us to make a difference to Mr. Dewey.

24 Q Didn't the Griggs opinion link those two 25 items rather intimately together?

1           A       In one portion of the opinion; yes, Your 2 Honor. But, Congress didn't require the individual to show 3 a pattern of practice of discrimination. Congress said the 4 individual has a right not to be discriminated against in his 5 employment because of his religion regardless of whether any-6 one else is being discriminated against by the employer and 7 indeed, it doesn't really comfort Mr. Dewey very much if he 8 loses his job to know that the employer is discriminating 9 against anyone else.

10           Q       Well, that's a different question, is it not 11 from conditioning this, what might be called "an impact test" 12 or an impact inquiry to the existence of prior discrimination 13 generally?

14           A       Well, it's -- I don't think that there is a 15 significant difference there. No employer today, certainly 16 no institutional employer of the type largely covered by 17 Title VII is going to say that it won't hire a member of the 18 Faith Reformed Church or that it's going to fire people be-19 cause they belong to the Faith REformed Church. The religious 20 discrimination protection afforded by Congress would become a 21 virtual nullity if it were limited only to discriminations on 22 their face because of religion.

23                   And it seems to us that the religious guarantee 24 that Congress had in mind, the protection of religious freedom 25 and diversity in this country, necessarily must extend beyond

1 that, as this Court's opinions have recognized time and again,
2 whether you want to cite Sherbert against Verner or the West 3 Virginia Board of Education against Barnett, Zorak against 4 Clausen --

5 Q Those are all constitutional cases, First 6 Amendment cases? This is not that --

7 A Yes. This is not that; this is a statutory 8 right that Congress has conferred which we think is very 9 comparable to the constitutional right against governmental 10 action. It may not be identical but we don't think there is 11 any warrant for reading it so drastically more narrowly than 12 this Court has afforded in protections of individuals against 13 governmental action.

14 Q Well, the question is: what does this 15 statute mean? And if it does mean that Congress, by statute, 16 is giving employees as against their employers all the rights
17 that all of us have against Government under the First Amend-18 ment, then what you say is obviously correct. But that's the 19 issue in the case; isn't it?

20 A Well, we even go so far as to say all of 21 the rights --

22 Q But the issue is: what does this statute 23 mean?

24 A Well --

25 Q -- as related to these facts.

1           A       Well, one of the best approaches to that is 2 to look at the guidelines adopted by the agency responsible 3 for enforcement of the statute. As this Court said in Griggs, 4 those guidelines are entitled to great deference --

5           Q       Which is that; the earlier one or the later 6 one?

7           A       Well, we don't think that makes a material
8 difference in this case, as we pointed out in our brief. There 9 is really no substantial difference in the governing portion 10 other than in this case. The only difference of substance 11 between the earlier ones and the later ones is that the earlier 12 ones gave a number of examples of the application, none of 13 which fit the precise facts and so the general standards in 14 the earlier one in our view is the governing standard, and 15 that is, essentially the same as the general standard applied 16 by the District Court in relying on the 1967 guidelines. It's 17 set forth in the 1967 guideline on page 41, Appendix B of our 18 brief, and the Commission there referred to obligation on the 19 part of the employer to accommodate to the reasonable reli-20 gious needs of employees so long as this can be done without 21 serious inconvenience to the conduct of the business, a 22 virtually identical formulation to the 1967 formulation.

23           This approach, which is very similar to the Griggs
24 approach, seems to us entirely appropriate here. Its applica-25 tion in this case is indeed much less disruptive of the 1 employer's preferences than was the application of the 2 general business necessity standards in the Griggs case,

3 because there the employer was required to give up its high 4 school diploma and testing qualifications altogether for jobs 5 for which they were not shown to be job-related and here the 6 Respondent is free to retain his overtime substitute policy
7 just as it has been applying it and all it need do is make a 8 simple accommodation to the religious needs of this employee 9 by arranging itself for a voluntary substitute for the 10 Petitioner, rather than insisting that the Petitioner make the 11 arrangement, which is a very minor intrusion, it seems to us 12 on the employer's preferences.

13         The records show that at least four possible sub-14 stitutes were available on each of the Sundays in question and 15 the Respondent did not show that it could not arrange for one 16 of these men to work voluntarily in Petitioner's place. It 17 seems to us it was the Respondent's burden to make a showing, 18 but, as this Court held in Griggs: The stipulated facts -- 19 this is on page 42 of the Appendix -- that the Petitioner had 20 managed to get a voluntary substitute on at least five pre-21 vious Sundays, strongly suggests that the employer could 22 similarly have made satisfactory arrangements for the other 23 three Sundays after the Petitioner decided on further reflec-24 tion that his religion forbade him to make the arrangements.
25 He had managed on five Sundays to get a voluntary replacement

1 without any power or compulsion over these individuals.

2 Q It was always the same one, wasn't it, Mr.
3 Wallace?

4 A I think that is right. I believe that man
5 was available also on two of the three other Sundays.

6 Q Well, you would make the same argument,
7 wouldn't you, if the other employees said: "No; we don't want 8 to work on Sunday; let's take turns at it."

9 A We would make the same argument, but the 10 Court need not reach it in this case. It seems -- this case 11 seems like a rather easy one, but I don't want to exaggerate.
12 But, we don't have to go that far in this case.

13 Q But your argument does.

14 A Our argument does in the brief. We feel 15 that an amicus brief of this kind --

16 Q If the other -- can't be sustained, how 17 about this case?

18 A Well, I think that's inherent in my saying 19 the Court need not reach the broader ground. I think this 20 kind of a minor adjustment by the employer is certainly justifi-21 fiable under the act. If the employer had made a showing that 22 he could not get a voluntary replacement then there would be 23 more substance, it seems to us, in his argument that the 24 seniority exception has a bearing on this case.

25 Q Would you be here making the argument if the 1 question was work on Saturday on a regular shift?

2 A That would depend on the evidence in the 3 case and what showing had been made about the needs of the 4 employer's business.

5 Q Well, if he's always working a six-day week 6 and --

7 A And what kind of problem he would have if 8 this man would refuse and were excused from the Saturday work 9 perhaps could work compensatorily the other times. It would 10 depend on his business situation. That's the Commission's 11 approach to the act and we think the proper approach.

12 Q Mr. Wallace, if someone suggested that your 13 argument for this act and the agency's construction tends to 14 create a governmental preference in favor of religious people 15 which it does not give to nonreligious people would you say 16 that was an improper inference?

17 A Well, that argument is made in this case;
18 indeed the argument was made that the application of the act 19 would violate the establishment clause. It seems to us to be 20 almost exactly the same preference that this Court held in 21 Sherbert against Verner which required in the circumstances of 22 that case under the free exercise clause. It seems a little 23 strange to us to be making the argument so much the other way 24 with that case and the Virginia Board of Education against 25 Barnette and Zorack against Clausen on the books.

1 I think actually the case that's most closely in 2 point are the Sunday closing law cases decided by this Court
3 in the 1960 term. In one of those cases, Braunfeld against 4 Brown, the Court held that while an exemption for Sabbatarians 5 is not constitutionally required, it is constitutionally per-6 missible and indeed, the opinion of the Court said that may 7 well be the wiser way of handling the problem of Sunday clos-8 ing laws, even though it could be argued that that gives 9 Sabbatarians the advantage to compete on Saturdays in a way 10 that others can't compete.

11 There is also an argument advanced here by the 12 Respondent that even if the District Court is otherwise 13 correct, it should not have awarded that case because the 14 Respondent relied in his case on the collective bargaining
15 agreement and the Respondent there cites a District Court
16 decision in Oregon in which the District Judge did not award
17 that -- because the Respondent there had relied on a state 18 statute limiting the weights that can be lifted by women.

19 We don't think -- in the first place we do not 20 endorse the decision of the District Court in Oregon, but we 21 don't think that it's really apposite here. The Respondent
22 here was not in any dilemma comparable to that of the employer 23 in Oregon arguably was in, where he felt he would be violating 24 the requirement of state law if he acceded to the request of 25 his employees.

1 Here, although the collective bargaining agreement,
2 the arbitrator held, empowered the Respondent to fire Dewey,
3 it certainly did not require the Respondent to fire Dewey
4 in these circumstances and the Respondent could hardly claim
5 it felt its obligations under the agreements to the union
6 required that it fired Dewey, since the union took exactly 7 the opposite position throughout the grievance proceeding that 8 the employer should not fire Dewey because of this problem.

9 And so in sum we argue that the District Court 10 probably applied the act here in accordance with the Congress-11 sional intent to protect religious freedom and diversity in 12 this country from unnecessary rigidities in the employment 13 practices of institutional employers, such as the Respondent 14 and accordingly we ask that the District Court's judgment be 15 reinstated.

16 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Coughlin.

17 ORAL ARGUMENT BY WILLIAM A. COUGHLIN, JR., ESQ.

18 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

19 MR. COUGHLIN: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please
20 the Court:

21 This is an action for money damages and reinstatement
22 of position brought under Title VII of the Civil Rights
23 Act of '64. Respondent REynolds Metals Company discharged 24 Petitioner Dewey because he violated the provisions of the 25 collective bargaining agreement entered into by his union and

1 employer: Reynolds Metals Company.

2 The violation consisted of his refusal to work on 3 three overtime Sunday assignments when assigned pursuant to 4 the collective bargaining agreement and his refusal on each 5 of the Sundays in question to arrange for a replacement. This 6 was an ultimate procedure which had been extensively used by 7 all employees, including Petitioner Dewey.

8 If you will bear with me, and we feel strongly 9 about this, there are six separate grounds which establish in 10 this matter that the Respondent did not violate the Civil 11 Rights Act of 1964 and I would like to briefly outline them 12 and then go to them.

13 One: In this case the discharge did not violate 14 the Civil Rights Act in any way.

15 Two: The act itself, the Civil Rights Act itself, 16 contains a number of exemptions, exceptions and limitations.
17 Reynolds falls within a particular exception.

18 Three: The Government, through the EEOC, has 19 stated that the prohibition against discrimination for 20 religious reasons, includes an obligation to accommodate 21 religious scruples. Respondent argues there is no legal basis 22 under this act for accommodation and the enforcement of accom-23 modation by the EEOC may well be a violation of the Establish-24 ment Clause of the First Amendment.

25 Four: Even if accommodation is required as a part

1 of the prohibition against discrimination the EEOC has issued 2 guidelines which in two instances in 1966 ratified the conduct
3 of Reynolds Metals Company, and in the third part of the '66
4 guidelines we accommodate, in the words of that act.

5 Five: Because of the wording of the act itself
6 which is called the remedial section thereof, requiring inten-7 tional violation, which Mr. Wallace just referred to; we 8 don't think there is any right under the law to reinstatement 9 or back pay, and finally, under the 10 And finally, under the election of remedies theory

11 the case shouldn't even be here, as the Sixth Circuit Court
12 of Appeals indicated. But I would say that the Sixth Circuit
13 Court of Appeals in ruling on this case, went to the merits 14 first and then to the procedure and so it's well done in our 15 estimation in this point that the whole matter can be quali-16 fied because the individual involved, the Petitioner, does not 17 suffer on a procedural basis. You have before you both the 18 merits and the procedure.

19 I would like to go to the first of our bases. We 20 don't think that under any interpretation of the Civil Rights
21 Act, whether you go to discrimination by intent or discrimina-22 tion by effect, that there is an violation. The objective of 23 the act, as was said in the Griggs case, is to achieve equal 24 employment opportunity. This objective has to be achieved 25 through prohibiting selective forms of employment discrimination

1 involving religion, race, color, et cetera.

2 What is discrimination? It isn't defined in the 3 law. The classical definition has to do, in a -- of making 4 a distinction or making a difference in treatment between one 5 employer and another based on religion in this particular act.

6 The more important question, I suppose, is what 7 kind of discrimination is prohibited? What are we talking 8 about? Are we talking about discrimination by intent? Are 9 we talking about discrimination by effect? I would submit to 10 you that if you look at the legislation and I know you gentle-11 men are much more familiar with it than I, but nevertheless I 12 submit that if you look at the act itself -- for instance, 13 703(h) in this particular act. It says an employer may apply 14 different terms and conditions to an employee and then the 15 magic ring which, if it is, provided if it is based on a 16 seniority system: "provided there is no intention to dis-17 criminate."

18 Going to 706(g): The remedial relief under this 19 act as envisaged by Congress, was to be applied, reinstatement 20 and back pay and injunctive action if the employer has inten-21 tionally engaged in unlawful employment. Both sections seem 22 directed at discrimination by intent.

23 Let me quote to you if you will, and it's very hard 24 in the legislative debates, because of the way that the act 25 was passed, and the format that went through the Senate and

1 the House, but at the time that it was passed, then Senator
2 Humphrey had this to say, and he was talking about Section 3 706(g), and he said in part: 706(g) is amended to require a 4 showing of intentional violation of the title in order to 5 obtain relief. This is a clarifying change since the title 6 bars only discrimination because of race, color, religion, 7 sex or national origin, it would seem already to require 8 intent, and thus the proposed change does not involve any 9 substantive change in the title.

10 The express requirement of intent is designed to 11 make it wholly clear that inadvertent or accidental discrimina-
12 tion will not violate the Title or result in injury of court 13 orders. It means simply that the Respondent must have 14 intended to discriminate.

15 Q Where does that appear in the briefs or 16 appendix. Could you tell me?

17 A I am unable to say that it is in the briefs 18 or the Appendix. It is in a Michigan Law Review article that 19 is as yet unpublished. Senator Humphrey -- let me correct 20 myself. It may be --

21 Q Don't interrupt your argument now, but give 22 me the legislative reference so that sometime after your 23 argument --

24 A The legislative reference would be 110
25 Congressional Record, 5,723 and going onto the next page, 724.

1 1964.

2 A further support for this definition of intent 3 is found in the views expressed by Senators Joseph Clark and 4 Clifford Case, the floor managers of the Civil Rights Act.
5 In their interpretive memorandum concerning Title VII they 6 noted inter alia: "It has been suggested that the concept of 7 discrimination is vague. In fact, it is clear and simple and 8 it has no hidden means. To discriminate is to make a distinc-9 tion, to make a difference in treatment or favor and those 10 distinctions are differences in treatment or favor which are 11 prohibited by 704 which was later changed to 703 when the act 12 came out, of those which are based on any five of the for-13 bidden criteria: race, color, religion, sex and national 14 origin.

15 "Any other criteria or qualification for employment 16 is not affected by this title." The reference is 110 Congres-17 sional Record, 7213.

18 I submit that with this background I would like to 19 take you through the actual facts of the case. Prior to 1960
20 this plant located in the outskirts of Grand Rapids, Michigan, 21 found it impossible, not difficult, as the District Judge 22 said, but as the stipulation says, "found it impossible to 23 work in overtime situations." This was because of the fact 24 that overtime under the UAW collective bargaining agreement 25 was based on a voluntary overtime proposition as far as

1 employees were concerned, and the plant found it impossible
2 to operate on overtime situations.

3           The company negotiated with the UAW in 1960 as the 4 bargaining agent and achieved a compulsory work clause which 5 provides for the allocation of overtime work equally among a 6 classification on a voluntary basis. And let me explain to 7 you briefly how that's done. In that situation when there is 8 an overtime situation, according to union contract you equal-9 lize -- you go to the classification and you at first, with 10 an attempt to equalize the overtime opportunities, go to the 11 low man in the classification, low man on overtime, as far as 12 overtime is concerned, his past experience. He is given the 13 first opportunity and then the next man and the next man, 14 based on his, where they are on the overtime, regardless of 15 seniority at the moment.

16           If enough people volunteer then there is no reason
17 to go any further. If you don't have enough people then you 18 go to the low man in the classification by seniority and you 19 compel him until you have enough people to work the overtime.
20 This compulsory overtime was necessary in this plant to enable 21 the company to work in overtime situations when business 22 demanded it. This is, in a sense, a job shop. They do not 23 produce for storage; they produce on the basis of orders and 24 as the orders to accommodate your customers to compete with 25 Alcoa and Kaiser. This is the necessity that arises at the 1 time; this was the business necessity to enable the plant to 2 work on six or seven days and also work in a normal overtime

3 situation.

4 Beyond that, the substitute program was instituted 5 in 1965. By the "substitute program," we mean that if an 6 individual wanted a day off, for whatever reason, be it 7 religion or otherwise, he could have the day off. But, under 8 the compulsory overtime the responsibility is his to seek out 9 the substitute. This system of inauguration was initiated in 10 1965, long before the EEOC suggested accommodation by guide-11 lines.

12 In 1964, '65 and '66 there was an increase in pro-13 duction to the point where in 1966 the company worked substan-
14 tial overtime on 24 out of 37 Sundays. How would we apply 15 this compulsory work clause in the substitute system in the 16 contract? The company, as the arbitration indicates, in its 17 own course agreed to this point. The company disciplined all 18 who refused to work, whether it was because of Sunday, because 19 of a problem on Sunday or because of any other day. There 20 were 11 disciplinary penalty cases involving religion prior to 21 Mr. Dewey's discharge. There were a host of other disciplinary 22 actions for any reason on any day on overtime.

23 What happened to Mr. Dewey? He worked overtime 24 prior to 1961, but in 1960 it was established, as I have 25 indicated, the compulsory work clause.

1 Q You said he worked overtime. Did he work
2 overtime on Sunday?

3 A He worked overtime on Sundays prior to 4 1960. That will be found in the Appendix at 77-A. In other 5 words, and I think, Mr. Chief Justice, the reasoning for that 6 is, as you will see, is that his present, or his -- and I
7 don't want to say "present" or his religious preference did 8 not become apparent until 1961. So he had no scruple prior to 9 1961.

10 Q Does that affect the merits?

11 A I don't think so, sir.

12 Q That would not be remarkable for someone to 13 change his views on a religious issue; would it?

14 A It would not be remarkable. The question
15 beyond that -- I agree it would not be. The question beyond 16 that is how much protection should be given under the inter-17 pretation of the act? I agree there is no reason that we 18 would say that one could not be converted to whatever faith 19 one wanted, regardless of the time of life.

20 In 1965, I believe in November of '65, Mr. Dewey
21 refused a work assignment under the collective bargaining
22 agreement. At that point he was not disciplined. In 1966, 23 as the record indicates, at 42-A, Stipulation 15, Mr. Dewey 24 in 1966 used the substitute system on five occasions and then 25 finally in mid-1966 on August 28th, to be specific, Mr. Dewey

1 refused to work and refused to get a substitute. On 2 September 4th the same practice; on September 11th the same 3 practice.

4 For each of these situations Mr. Dewey was dis-
5 ciplined. In the first instance he was disciplined; on the 6 second he was disciplined again in the form of a three-day 7 layoff and on the third day he was discharged for refusing to 8 work or to get a substitute.

9 In conclusion on that point: a _____ of the 10 replacement system was nondiscriminatory and was applied uni-
11 formly to all employees by the seniority system of the col-12 lective bargaining agreement. Dewey was never assigned or 13 denied overtime because of his religion. REynolds did not 14 discriminate against Dewey, rather afforded him and everybody 15 else equal employment opportunity.

16 The Sixth Circuit says very definitely and says
17 it as well as I can say it; that the collective bargaining, 18 there was nothing discriminatory in the collective bargaining 19 agreement itself, nor in its application. It was a fair and 20 equitable method of distributing a heavy workload among all 21 the employees without discrimination against anyone.

22 Griggs doesn't require, in our opinion, the 23 application of a different rule. I submit to you that the 24 rule, as far as we can see, is that we are not -- discrimina-
25 tion by intention and Griggs doesn't require, in our opinion,

1 the application of the different rule.

2 The Court said in Griggs, with all due deference
3 to the Court, our understanding of it, that practices neutral 4 on their face, neutral in intent, uniformly applied, cannot 5 be maintained if they operate to freeze the status quo of 6 prior discriminatory employment practices.

7 In this situation before this Court there are no
8 prior discriminatory practices. It was a regular policy, 9 neutral on its face, nondiscriminatory in intent in either 10 _____ in application. There can be nothing more 11 clear than the policy that was used in this particular 12 situation.

13 Q How long had Mr. Dewey been with the 14 company?

15 A Mr. Dewey has been with the company since 16 approximately 1951.

17 Q Twenty years?

18 A Yes, sir. Twenty years -- let me say 20 19 years until 1971. At the time of the discharge in 1966 he 20 had been there 15 years, sir. He acquired his religious 21 preference, his religious scruple in 1961.

22 Q What religious scruple was that?

23 A The religious scruple was that it was 24 against the tenets of his religion as he envisaged his 25 religion, to work on Sundays.

1 Q Or to ask anybody else to.

2 A Well, an interesting point: that aspect of 3 his case did not develop until 1965.

4 Q That's his present --

5 A The present tenets -- he can't work as a 6 tenet of his religion, and secondly, he can't ask somebody
7 else. Now, I don't want to go into the thing --

8 Q Well, we have to accept that, don't we?

9 A Pardon?

10 Q We have to accept that.

11 A I have no quarrel with the religion, nor do 12 I really want to engage the Court as to what is the definition 13 of religion.

14 Q How many times during this period have you 15 had trouble with him?

16 A With Mr. Dewey?

17 Q During the time he worked.

18 A During the time he worked --

19 Q How many days did you have the dispute 20 over?

21 A How many days did we have the dispute over?
22 We had a dispute with him on one particular Sunday in 1965;
23 on three particular days in 1966.

24 Q Mr. Coughlin, I take it there is no question
25 other wise about the integrity of his work. He was a

1 satisfactory worker?

2 A Yes, sir.

3 Q And then what did the company accomplish by 4 firing him completely? Did it avoid the disruption of his 5 not appearing for overtime?

6 A Well, let me put it this way: your question 7 suggests why would not the company get a substitute.

8 Q I'm not really asking that --

9 A All right. I will answer what you put to 10 me. The discharge was, in our opinion, mandatory as far as 11 the company was concerned for the uniform administration of 12 the collective bargaining agreement in that this contract had 13 -- the contract itself, there are also in the record shop 14 rules and the shop rules call for certain penalties under 15 certain circumstances with ability of the company to be more 16 lenient if they choose.

17 But, in answering Mr. Justice Blackmun, to your 18 question: if we back off this situation we have to back off 19 every religious situation and we know not where to go as far 20 as how deep that exception is. If we release Mr. Dewey or 21 accept mMr. Dewey, our theory is that we lose our rule, our 22 compulsory work rule, and under those circumstances our last 23 days are worse than our first in the sense that we are back 24 to a pre-1960 situation where we will not be able to work 25 overtime when the company has the necessity.

1 Q You mean on Sunday?

2 A Or Saturday. In other words, this rule of 3 compulsory overtime applies to all overtime situations, and if 4 we except as to one individual, whether it be Sunday, whether 5 it be Saturday or whether it be any given day, a normal day, 6 then we can't fire uniformly. We will have great resistance 7 -- in other words, the essence of the collective bargaining
8 agreement -- is uniformity of application. We treat Dewey 9 just the same as we treat everybody else and if you make 10 exceptions for Dewey, Mr. Justice Black, we must make excep-11 tions for everybody else under the labor agreement or else 12 you have disparate treatment under the labor agreement.

13 Q Where is Mr. Dewey now?

14 A Mr. Dewey was put back to work in the plant 15 by virtue of an injunction of the District Judge for the --

16 Q Have there been any disciplinary problems 17 since he got back?

18 A Yes, sir --

19 Q Well, why if he stays there will you have 20 all these things you are talking about?

21 A You mean if he stays there -- we're under 22 injunction at the present time. If he stays there he will be 23 obliged to take his turn at overtime just as every single 24 person in the plant --

25 Q Is he doing that now?

1           A       No, sir. We are under injunction not to 2       require it and ---

3           Q       And the plant is running just normally, just 4       as if he had been ---

5           A       Yes, sir; in answer to your specific 6       question.

7           Q       Well, this was put in here in an effort to 8       settle this controversy so that you wouldn't have to have all 9       of these constant losses; wasn't it?

10          A       The injunction, sir?

11          Q       The contract that you had.

12          A       The essence of our collective bargaining
13       contract is to treat everybody the same and to avoid disparate 14       treatment; that's the essence of it ---

15          Q       Wasn't it intended to settle this particular 16       problem?

17          A       Yes, sir.

18          Q       Why hasn't it? What's wrong with it?

19          A       Well ---

20          Q       What kind of changes do you say would have 21       to be made to get it settled where it wouldn't have to be 22       coming all the way up to us?

23          A       My answer is that under our opinion the 24       matter was settled when it went to the arbitration and in 25       that situation the arbitrator held for the company as against

1 Mr. Dewey and that was a final resolution to the ordinary 2 contract situation that would be --

3 Q That's what has happened, isn't it?

4 A Well, if that's final, except that under 5 the way that the Civil Rights Act is applied for the moment, 6 an employee has two bites of the apple and this is the -- 7 and this reminds me to a certain extent of two small boys who 8 say, "Let's throw two out of three," and they flip. And then 9 the loser says "Let's throw three out of five." In this 10 situation it's heads the employee wins and tails: let's flip 11 again, because if he loses his arbitration then he goes to 12 the Civil Rights Commission.

13 Q It sounds to me like that illustration is 14 pretty good with reference to the fight at all: "Heads I win 15 and tails you lose."

16 How would you change that contract to get around 17 that?

18 A Well, I'd like to say, Mr. Justice Black, 19 that I don't think the contract needs changing and I don't 20 think that the law says we have to do it.

21 Q Suppose the law has said it and we say it; 22 how would you get around it then?

23 A I would have to say to you that at that 24 point we would have to attempt to negotiate with the union
25 to make certain exceptions to that policy and at that point I

1 don't know what the consequences of the resolution of the 2 problem would be. In other words, can you get the union to 3 accept for a part of the people, except overtime requirements
4 on certain days for part of its people. I guess the easy 5 answer to that is everybody would turn religious and then the 6 exception would be swallowed by the rule.

7 Q If the contracts were amended hypotheti-
8 cally, to provide for final binding and unreviewable arbitra-
9 tion of all issues, including claims under the Civil Rights 10 Act, would that be the end of the problem? Your friend, in 11 opposition, with a question something like that, said that the 12 union cannot bargain away the employees rights under the 13 Civil Rights Act. What would you have to say about that?

14 A I am of the opinion that you can't bargain 15 away a right, but let me say that in this case, and we are 16 going to the election of rights theory, the right in the con-
17 tract and the right under Civil Rights, the right to a 18 grievance, was discrimination against the individual. The 19 right in Title VII that's alleged is discrimination against 20 the individual.

21 The remedy to complete reinstatement and back pay
22 under the arbitration, the remedy under Title VII of rein-23 statement and back pay, and my answer is that I think that in 24 this situation that the rights are the same and there are 25 two forms that are available, but you can't go both ways.

1 And, in answer to your question I think you could make a 2 clause of that sort possibly, but I suppose it might not be 3 applicable in every case. I'm not positive. In this par-
4 ticular case, Mr. Chief Justice, the rights and remedies are 5 the same.

6 The Hutchins case says that there are two causes 7 of action here and you can see that and look at the distinction
8 between the rights and remedies. Hutchins and Bowe both say 9 that. An analysis doesn't bear them out in this case and 10 there is one cause of action or one pleading in this case and 11 really we don't quarrel with whichever way you go, whether 12 you go the arbitration way or whether you go the Civil Rights 13 litigation way, but -- and go both at the same time if you 14 wish, but when you get a judgment that -- and in that regard 15 -- in that regard, if this Court should hold the concurrent 16 remedy moot, an interesting thing will come to pass, I believe.

17 This: that the vitality of arbitration is its 18 finality. In this particular situation if you espouse the 19 concurrent rule every employee will write his grievance in the 20 language of the contract in a disciplinary case. "I was 21 disciplined; I didn't get a promotion; I didn't get my 22 vacation on time; you disciplined me or you took me out of 23 the line of seniority." Then he will add one other rule in 24 every grievance, and that rule will limit the age, and we all 25 have it in one way or another, in the sense we all have it

1 one way or another; religion: generally we have it. Color:
2 we have it one way or the other; and so in that case each
3 individual will add one rule and it doesn't have to be too 4 pertinent either, then the matter will be submitted to 5 arbitration. If the employee wins that's the end of the case.
6 If the employee loses, Mr. Chief Justice, at that point he 7 says: "That was too bad; that was a bad ride. Now I will go 8 on to the second of my two rights," and go back to the 9 litigation route by statute, under Title VII.

10 And I say to you that as far as union contracts
11 are concerned, that I can foresee very quickly that vitality 12 of that arbitration as a final and binding rule is gone.
13 And the Government says in its brief, at a certain juncture:
14 Now look, what we really mean in this case is that you as an 15 employer get a group to uphold for arbitration. There is a 16 no-strike clause. I grant you that, but there is also a 17 significant thing that when you get arbitration as a final 18 step it won't be final any more, because these things are the 19 basic essences of life, when you take those things that are 20 in the Civil Rights Act.

21 Q Will you answer this: As one of those who 22 have been listening for years to the idea that arbitration is 23 going to solve all our difficulties, it sounds to me like you 24 think arbitration may have some difficulties of its own.

25 A Arbitration in its own, in the collective

1 bargaining contracts, is, as far as I am concerned, I agree
2 with everything this Court and prior courts have said: it's 3 an excellent way to put a safety valve on the -- and it's the 4 one way that companies can live with unions and unions with 5 companies and they can resolve their difficulties and the 6 arbitrators in America today take a collection of these cases 7 that will never get into the courts.

8 What happens is when you get a Title VII case -- 9 and I'm not disparaging Title VII, but there isn't any 10 treatment, Congressionally speaking as to how this thing will 11 be treated. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals said: "This 12 is a matter for judicial discretion as to how we're going to 13 handle an interrelationship of Title VII and arbitration."

14 I think arbitration does a splendid job in the 15 American industrial complex today.

16 Q When it decides your way --

17 A Pardon me?

18 Q When it decides your way it's --

19 A Oh, no, sir; I have been in the labor 20 practice for 20 years and I'll take my lumps both ways. And 21 I think it's a safety valve of no small impact.

22 Q Could I assume correctly that if you had a 23 provision in the contract against discrimination on the basis 24 of religion you would be arguing the exact same way you are 25 now; wouldn't you?

1                   A       Yes, sir.

2                   Q       Let me try another hypothetical on you that 3 may or may not be helpful to us. Suppose -- I don't know
4 whether you have a union shop contract here, compulsory union 5 membership, but assume that that's the kind you have, and 6 suppose Mr. Dewey had a tenet in his religion that prohibits 7 him from joining any organization against his will. Then we 8 would have a collision between the compulsory union member-9 ship claims and the Civil Rights Act, I take it?

10                  A       Yes, sir.

11                  Q       I am going to ask your friend if he will 12 comment on that in rebuttal, if they wish. What would your 13 reaction be to that?

14                  A       Now, let me say this: that the hypothetical 15 that you have posed and the actual case before you -- in 16 other words, the union shop clause, the Taft-Hartley, the 17 Labor Relations Act says that union shop can be negotiated and 18 it is negotiated in practically every Government contract 19 with which we are most familiar -- the union shop is indeed.

20                         And also, in the case before you the Taft-Hartley 21 also says that overtime, negotiation on overtime is a com-
22 pulsory matter of negotiation between the parties and it 23 would be negotiated, so that Taft-Hartley approves both of 24 these situations.

25                         And your question to me, I gather, is that

1 if there is a conflict between the situations as far as 2 religion, I would have to say at this juncture that at the 3 present state of the law that I would say that as long as the 4 application is made to -- as long as the law is in its present
5 state, and you apply the laws to everybody, the same rule, 6 then there isn't any discrimination.

7 The question, I think, that you are getting at, or 8 as I sense it, and in your sense is: what has the Civil Rights 9 Act done as far as espousing discrimination? Some say, and 10 I think this is the correct answer to your question: what they 11 reall did -- what Congress really did, they took the First 12 Amendment and moved it into the Civil Rights Act of '64. I 13 say -- and that would be that you can freely exercise your 14 religion in employment.

15 I submit to you, sir, that the language of -- if 16 Congress were willing to do that they could very well have 17 done it, but they didn't do it. So, the question is: the 18 Civil Rights Act of '64 does not involve a First Amendment
19 transplant. I think what it does do is equal employment 20 opportunity and it says: "Look, will you please treat every-21 body the same as far as religion is concerned; treat them the 22 same as far as sex is concerned; for instance, in Martin-23 Marietta you say, the Court says that you can't treat married 24 women differently from married men.

25 This is equalization. So, under those circumstances

1 -- under those circumstances as far as your question is 2 concerned, I would say that as far as I am concerned, I think 3 the Civil Rights Act would not prohibit, would not strike 4 down the union shop.

5 In a summary on the interpretation of the act. The 6 objective, as far as we are concerned, as we see the act, is 7 equal employment opportunity. However the act describes 8 discriminatory preference for any group, minority or majority, 9 words from -- In our estimation Dewey is requesting prefer-10 ential treatment not accorded to other employees. He has no 11 such right under the First Amendment; he has no such right 12 under the Civil Rights Act.

13 The Michigan Civil Right Act, and this was raised 14 today -- the Michigan Civil Rights Commission, a constitutional 15 body of the State of Michigan, treated this case as far back 16 as 1966 and said that an employer has the right to establish 17 a normal work week and foreseeable overtime in its labor 18 agreement and absent the intent to discriminate there was no 19 right of accommodation and there is no violation.

20 I submit to you that the same results should 21 obtain here.

22 I'd like to touch on one other aspect as far as 23 Congress is concerned. There are a number of exceptions in 24 this act and no one, with the exception of the Sixth Circuit, 25 would pay much attention to them. The exception to which I

1 refer is limited -- and I think it exemplifies again what 2 Congress intended. 703(h) specifies that it is not an un-
3 fair labor question for an employer to apply different terms
4 and conditions of employment pursuant to a bona fide seniority
5 system provided the differences are not resulting in inten-6 tional discrimination because of race, color, or religion.

7 Now, the questions in the Senate debate are very 8 revealing and they asked at the time -- they said at the 9 time that they intended the act was sure to conflict with the 10 rights of seniority nor to affect the collective bargaining 11 contracts which are based on bona fide seniority.

12 And in the Senate a question was asked: What if a 13 Negro was the last man hired in your plant and when it came to 14 a layoff situation and the seniority provisions in it, the 15 junior man would be laid off, as historically is done. It 16 may be a question of seniority; it may be plant-wide seniority.
17 What if it says the junior man is to be laid off and this 18 Negro is the last man in?

19 In the answer in the debates: "There would be no 20 discrimination on that theory, but the low man on the totem 21 pole, the junior man, goes first.

22 In the Reynolds overtime situation the application 23 is based on the seniority clause negotiated years ago based 24 on classification of seniority. You get your seniority when 25 you go to the classification. No one chooses and picks or

1 does otherwise. You get it when you go in.

2           There can be no question as to the bona fideness
3 of that classification, of the seniority. So that the assign-4 ment of overtime is tied to a neutral policy. So, less than 5 -- arises, differences in terms of employment. I work on 6 Sunday; you don't. You work on Sunday; I don't. This is the 7 -- of the act, and as far as I am concerned, the Congress 8 says this is an exception.

9           I want to touch on other other point and this was 10 alluded to, I believe, by Mr. Justice White and by Mr. Justice 11 Stewart at one point. Two things: the prohibition against 12 discrimination, according to EEOC, includes an obligation to 13 accommodate. The Civil Rights Act, as expressed in terms of 14 prohibition, meaning the employer should not differentiate 15 between employees on the basis of religion. I will restrict 16 myself to religion.

17           The conflict of accommodation has no basis in this 18 statute and in effect, is a form of discrimination itself.
19 Accommodation in its simplest form means to adjust, to help, 20 to do a favor for. The Civil Rights Act permits the EEOC to 21 interpret the law. The Civil Rights Act doesn't permit the 22 EEOC to legislate.

23           The Sixth Circuit, on page 32 of our brief, said 24 that the requirement of accommodation is not consistent with 25 the act. The Stempler case from California, which was refused

1 certiorari by this Court, a lower constitutional question
2 because the relationship is the Government to an employee, 3 also takes the position that accommodation is not necessarily 4 under the First Amendment.

5 The Eastern Greylines case on page 33 of our brief, 6 a decision of the highest court of the State of New York,
7 holds that as to accommodation one not need make an accommoda-
8 tion to particularization which could assume many variations 9 in appearance and in train schedules.

10 And not only is there apparent as far as we are 11 concerned that accommodation constitutes legislation, not 12 interpretation here. As to Mr. Justice Stewart's question, I 13 think that the operation of accommodation by the EEOC, of 14 compelling employers to accommodate, raises the question of 15 whether you are not into the Establishment Clause of the First 16 Amendment.

17 In Schemp you held that the Government must be 18 neutral with respect to religious matters. In Gillette versus 19 the United States this term, you said that as a general 20 matter the Establishment Clause prohibits the Government from 21 the -- secular purposes in order to put its -- on one 22 religion or in religion as such. Or to favor the adherents 23 of any sect or religious organization, by issuing guidelines
24 to the EEOC, by issuing guidelines by which religious beliefs 25 ought to be accommodated, the Government finds itself putting

1 its _____ on religion as such and this means to us a 2 violation of the Establishment Clause.

3 If the Government as a general rule is without 4 power to support or favor any religion it is submitted that 5 the effect in this case is that the EEOC is, in fact, favoring 6 religion through its guidelines and such action could well be 7 unconstitutional. This question was raised in the Sixth 8 Circuit.

9 Another step, and this was raised also by you
10 gentlemen and I think by Mr. Justice White. If accommodation 11 is required I suggest that the guidelines exist in it.
12 Section 713(b) provides the guidelines upon which and this is 13 the Congressional Act, the Civil Rights Act, if you are in 14 conformity with the guidelines, you can rely on the guidelines 15 it's a bar to action on proceedings under this act.

16 The first guidelines, and the guideline which 17 should be applied in this case, is the 1966 guidelines.
18 The employee Dewey was disciplined and subsequently discharged
19 in August and September of '66. The '66 guidelines set forth 20 for the first time the principle of accommodations as being 21 included within the ambit of discrimination. But, look what 22 that guideline said, that -- at 1605183(?) it said, "However 23 the Commission believes that an employer is free under Title 24 VII to establish a normal work week generally applicable to 25 all employees, notwithstanding that such schedule may operate

1 with uniformity in its effect -- may not operate with 2 uniformity in its effect upon the religious observances of 3 one's employees.

4 This is the '66 guideline. Reynolds established a 5 normal work week generally applicable to all employees long 6 prior to the discharge of Dewey, long prior to the effective
7 date of the Civil Rights Act, and long prior to the effective 8 date of the guidelines. When the guidelines came out in 9 June of 1966 they looked at those guidelines -- they were 10 squarely in favor of those guidelines, with the exceptions
11 written into the '66 guidelines. That guideline sets forth 12 the uniformity of application theory and specifies that re-13 gardless of the impact if you have a uniform application you 14 agree you have a _____ to this section.

15 And I submit to this Court that this case should 16 have been taken care of by the EEOC years ago under its own 17 guidelines. I recognize that the guidelines were changed in 18 1967, a year later, but the law as written by Congress, if 19 anybody is interested in it, and I know you gentlemen are, 20 but the question -- as the law was written it says: This 21 guideline or any guideline if you are conformity with it, if 22 you rely on it, under those circumstances it will be a bar to 23 any action for discrimination even if the guidelines is sub-24 sequently changed by judicial fiat, by administrative decree; 25 it makes no difference.

1           Again, look at the 1966 guidelines. It says:
2 Here are some illustrations: what do you mean by accommoda-
3 tion? It says: We authorize the employer -- the employer 4 should be authorized to prescribe the normal work week and 5 foreseeable overtime requirements and absent any intent to 6 discriminate an employee who holds or has reason to believe 7 that the requirements of his employment will conflict with 8 his religious beliefs does not entitle him to request an 9 accommodation of his religious needs.

10           We negotiated our compulsory work clause of the 11 sixties. Mr. Dewey obtained -- and there is no question -- 12 he obtained his religious scruples in 1961 for the first time.
13 When he did he had knowledge of our compulsory work clause 14 and under the guidelines he knew that our schedules had 15 presented him with a problem and whether you like it or not, 16 or whether we like it or not, the EEOC at that time said that 17 as far as they were concerned in such a situation you don't 18 have a right to request any accommodation.

19           And then you go another step: what's the accommo-
20 dation in the guideline? The accommodation in the guideline 21 is time off; that's what it means, and I submit to you that 22 that's what we have done as far as time off is concerned. We 23 have reasonably accommodated if there is an accommodation 24 obligation.

25           And the further question as raised by the Petitioner:

1 and by the Government, is: "Look, when you get down to 2 basics, why don't you take the step and get the substitute?"
3 Our answer is this: In 1960, prior to '60 you couldn't work 4 overtime. We negotiated the compulsory overtime clause. We 5 worked hard for that and in 1965 it was renegotiated. It has 6 subsequently been renegotiated beyond the confines of this 7 record and a settlement of a strike ensued, partly under that 8 clause.

9 Disregard that if you will, but it's hard won, this 10 clause.

11 Now, under those circumstances you get the sub-12 stitute. If we get the substitute three things happen, we 13 feel. One, and we went into this a little bit, Mr. Justice
14 Blackmun, at that point -- one: if we get Dewey's substitute 15 obviously we have to get all religious -- substitutes for all 16 religious people who request it.

17 Now, the second step is: what holds you to that?
18 In other words, if you accept as to one element in your 19 organization, there are no -- or bars to excepting to all.
20 The Government says at a particular point in its brief, as 21 does Petitioner, that in that situation what you should do is 22 you should except as to the religious people and to impress 23 the other people; make the nonreligious people work,

24 because the Civil Rights Act takes precedence over the 25 contract.

1 I submit to you that what we are doing -- what they 2 are suggesting that we do, we'll be back here, God willing, 3 in approximately two or three years under the situation where 4 what we then are doing is making people work who have no
5 religious beliefs -- whatever their beliefs are, we must say 6 there are no religious beliefs and under that circumstance the 7 religious people are free and those without religion are im-8 pressed into work.

9 I think that's a discrimination of the Civil Rights 10 Act of '64. I think we're making our decision basically on 11 religion. This is just what the act says. I think this is 12 intentional discrimination. I also think it's a violation of 13 Title VII and it is also a violation of our labor contract 14 because such a situation would be making us go back up the 15 ladder and skip those seniority people who have no religious 16 exception. And under these

17 And under these circumstances we not only have the 18 answer, we will have arbitration. If we accept as to 19 religion I am willing to file on the other side. If I were 20 an employee and I were the UAW I would pause through arbitra-21 tion to determine the extent of the waiver of the -- of the 22 exception of what we are doing.

23 And we submit to you that if we were forced to get 24 the substitute, these results come about, we will be back, and 25 as the Biblical expression: "As our last days will be worse

1 than our first." In other words we will be back to pre-'60.
2 We will not be able to work overtime to meet our demands. We 3 will possibly be faced with a Title VII violation. We will 4 also be faced with a violation of our contract.

5 So, under those circumstances I think if you want
6 to talk in terms of the '66 guideline that certainly is a 7 serious inconvenience; if you want to talk about the '67
8 guidelines that's undue hardship.

9 I would say that as far as we are concerned that we 10 have not violated the contract -- the Civil Rights Act under 11 any interpretation of the law and I would like to touch upon 12 the election of remedies briefly. And in that area the two 13 general theories that have evolved, of the theories that were 14 posed here today, the Sixth Circuit saying that the claims 15 that when you have an employer changing adjudication and 16 arbitration he should not be permitted to proceed on the same 17 claim because you impose upon an employer multiple legal 18 actions on the same claim and you can lead to an eroding of 19 arbitration as a final remedy.

20 The second theory is phrased in terms of Hutchings
21 and Bowe, in terms that the rights and remedies under arbitra-22 tion under Title VII are separate. And I mentioned this 23 briefly, but I wish you would bear with me. In the briefs in 24 the grievance that was presented, in the arbitration or 25 grievance part of the contract, it was said that it was a clear

1 case of discrimination on the part of the company in applying
2 its policy to Petitioner.

3 In the process of arbitration in which Petitioner
4 was represented by the International Rep of the UAW, and I 5 might add, notwithstanding in its ramifications, I think that 6 in an arbitration in those areas that the International Reps 7 of most unions are as skilled, if not more so, than many 8 lawyers, and do a better job because this is their bread and 9 butter, vis-a-vis a lawyer who doesn't specialize.

10 But I say that in that situation the union
11 suggested in that arbitration that the effect of the applica-12 tion of the labor agreement resulted in discrimination against 13 its employees who seek to be excused from assigned work for 14 reasons of religion.

15 Now, the arbitrator found the employee could not 16 refuse to work on Sunday because/<sup>of</sup>the wording of the labor 17 contract and the employer's consistent administration as to 18 all employees of the relevant provisions of the agreement.

19 I submit to you that the argument that the rights 20 under arbitration are different from the rights under the law
21 or under the statute, doesn't stand up. They are the same 22 in this case. Again, the distinguishing fact, according to 23 the Fifth Circuit, the remedies are different. And I have 24 said before, in this case what is the remedy? The remedy in 25 arbitration is reinstatement and back pay. What is the remedy

1 under the statute? It's reinstatement and back pay. Someone 2 would add: Yes, but you can get an injunction, under Title
3 VII in the statutory classes.

4 I say you can get a decision of an arbitrator which 5 acts as precedent. So that I submit that under the circum-
6 stances the better judicial principle would be that enun-
7 ciated by the Sixth Circuit and the District Court of Califor-8 nia, to the effect that you may pursue both remedies as long 9 as you know that when you get a decision in one then the issue 10 becomes moot in the other form.

11 It would appear that this approach to the question 12 would also be sound administratively, speaking in that re-
13 current jurisdiction brings waste, confusion, form shopping
14 and what appears to be an unnecessary series of litigation
15 and I have given away part of my argument in the sense that I 16 think that as far as arbitration is concerned, that Mr.
17 Justice Black discussed the finality of the arbitration. I 18 think that we are in serious difficulty as a remedy and I
19 recognize Lincoln Mills and Boys Markets and Steelworkers
20 Trillogy(?) and everything that this Court has said.

21 And it can be undone if you allow a concurrent 22 jurisdiction theory. And then I write in to my arbitration;
23 I write into my grievance: you have violated my seniority
24 provisions because you didn't follow the wording of the con-25 tract and -also I am 49, because of age, and you say that this

1 is ridiculous. What's that got to do with age? Don't use
2 age; use religion. Use color; use sex.

3 And I say under those circumstances this is what 4 is coming in this situation that you then have two bites of 5 the apple in every situation and, unlike the National Labor
6 Relations Act, the matrix of the Civil Rights Act is inter-7 woven into the labor contract.

8 Everything that you do in the labor contract -- 9 all the conditions that you cover involve, and the working 10 conditions cover the prescriptions of the Civil Rights Act so 11 that as far as I am concerned the election of remedies theory 12 should be applied.

13 I -- Arguelles is very interesting. In the problem
14 that was raised there and I think this problem that is raised 15 here is much more significant than the problem, with all due 16 respect, to Arguelles, because the impact you are going to 17 suffer, that we are going to suffer on arbitration as a final 18 process.

19 So, under these circumstances I would conclude by 20 saying that it is submitted that the Civil Rights Act -- 21 under the Civil Rights Act, management should have the right 22 to establish working schedules, including overtime. The 23 working schedules in this case were applied on a uniform and 24 nondiscriminatory basis. An employee has a duty to observe 25 these work schedules that are so established; and four: the

1 religious beliefs of an employee don't entitle an individual 2 to special or peculiar privileges denied to others.

3 From a practical point of view you gentleman are 4 faced with an enormous problem -- I am a lawyer from a Mid-
5 Western State and I am overwhelmed at some of these problems, 6 but I want to pose the problem that faces you eventually.

7 According to the '62 yearbook of American Churches,
8 which is the nearest year that I could tie to the Dewey dis-9 charge in '65, there were 259 religious bodies supporting 10 membership in the United States. They had a membership at 11 thatpoint of 114 million people. The work force of the United 12 States today amounts to 70 million employees.

13 As to religious observances of various days I 14 selected four categories. I chose Catholic because I am one 15 and I wanted to see what they did. There are 52 Sundays and 16 13 holidays, holy days for a total of 65 particular days where 17 this accommodation may work in.

18 The Jewish religion has 52 Saturdays and 30 other
19 holy days for a total of 82 days.

20 The Greek Orthodox has 52 Sundays and ten other
21 holy days for a total of 62 days.

22 The Seventh Day Adventists as best I could see, 23 had 52 Saturdays.

24 The total of these four religions alone amounted 25 to approximately 261 days upon which employees under the EEOC

1 accommodation theory might ask for accommodation in terms of 2 time off. The problem of scheduling, the problems of extra 3 manpower, the problems of administration which are difficult 4 in ordinary situations, become a great deal more complicated.

5 Such an analysis brings into perspective the 6 statement of the California Court of Appeals in the Stemple 7 matter, where they said:

8 "The proliferation of religions with an infinite 9 variety of tenets would, if the state is required as an 10 employer, to accommodate each employee's particular scruples 11 place an intolerable burden upon the state," and accommodation 12 was not required.

13 It is submitted that the EEOC approach also places
14 an intolerable burden upon the private employers of America 15 if the Court should accept the EEOC version of the law. We 16 submit that it is not only intolerable; it is illegal under 17 our constitution and under our laws.

18 Thank you gentlemen.

19 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Mr. Coughlin.

20 Mr. Oosterhouse.

21 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT BY DONALD F. OOSTERHOUSE, ESQ.

22 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

23 MR. OOSTERHOUSE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it 24 please the Court:

25 First to respond to the possible broad ramifications

1 of employers sometime in the future accommodating all of the 2 different possible religious dates, let me just say that I 3 am sure that Congress was fully aware of the diversity of 4 religion in this country when it passed the Civil Rights Act,
5 and said: "Employers shall not discharge because of religion."

6 I think this is an argument not to this Court, but 7 to the Congress to repeal this part of the act.

8 Q Do you think the employer here would be 9 discriminating on the basis of religion if he permitted your 10 client to avoid overtime on the basis of his religion and say 11 nevertheless, the Seventh Day Adventist is going to work on 12 Saturday or be fired?

13 A He would have to give the Seventh Day
14 Adventist relief on Saturday under the same circumstances.
15 Now, if the employer was working a full shift on Saturday and 16 a partial shift on Sunday --

17 Q If the employer in your case can easily 18 find a replacement you say he must do so?

19 A Yes, Your Honor.

20 Q And if he can easily find a replacement for 21 a Seventh Day Adventist on Saturday he must do so?

22 A Yes, sir.

23 Q And even though that duplicates all sorts 24 of company records and things like that and if he has two 25 employees instead of one for six days.

1           A       Well, the question is always to be decided 2 in terms of undue hardship, but if, as we say in this case, 3 and I think the evidence quite clearly shows this, it was 4 easy for Reynolds to find a replacement for Dewey then --

5           Q       You don't know that, do you?

6           A       I think --

7           Q       All you are saying is that were so many 8 employees who weren't busy.

9           A       They were available.

10          Q       How do you know they were available; they 11 weren't asked.

12          A       The stipulation says that they were avail-13 able.

14          Q       Available, what does that mean if they were 15 -- that they would have come without any objection?

16          A       That's the way I understand it.

17          Q       What if they would have come without the 18 union even objecting or what?

19          A       I think that the stipulation saying that 20 they were available combined with the other items in the 21 stipulation showing that employees could get other employees 22 when they had no power to compel them means that these people 23 were available without recourse to the compulsory overtime
24 clause.

25          Q       So that's the basis that we take the case

1 that all an employer had to do was pick up the telephone and 2 he would have a replacement.

3 A This is correct.

4 Q That's the purport of the stipulation?

5 A Right.

6 Q Mr. Oosterhouse, suppose there are two of 7 us, me and Dewey and neither of us won't work on Sundays,
8 period. We just don't like to work on Sunday because it's a 9 good golfing day. Dewey cannot be discharged, but I can.

10 A I think that this is -- 11 Q Is that right?

12 A The statute says --

13 Q Aren't you discriminating against me
14 because of religion or lack of it?

15 A Well, the statute says that you may not 16 discharge because of religion and certain other things.

17 Q Is there anything in Dewey's discharge
18 that says because of religion?

19 A I think the evidence shows --

20 Q Does anything in the discharge say reli-21 gion? That you are discharged because you are a member of 22 blank, blank church?

23 A No. It's a discharge because of conduct 24 flowing from his religion.

25 Q So, it's effect and not cause?

1           A           This is a way to say it; yes. The effect 2 of this practice was the cause of his discharge because of 3 religion.

4           Now, I think to come back to the question on golf, 5 there is, and the statute sets up certain classifications as 6 being entitled to protection. There is at that point at 7 some extent, a preference for consideration for religion, 8 race, sex, as compared to considerations of golf or other 9 strictly personal preferences.

10          Q           Well you would say Congress would have the 11 power to pass a statute which would say that a company may 12 not lawfully force with the threat of discharge hanging over 13 him, if he doesn't, force any person to work on Sunday who has 14 religious scruples.

15          A           I think it's paramount to the constitutional 16 right of free exercise where the compelling state interest has 17 been adopted and I see that the undue hardship as a parallel 18 limitation and whether this is a limitation on the power of 19 Congress or strictly on the interpretation of the act, I am 20 not sure.

21          Q           Well, in effect, the guidelines say that 22 in certain circumstances you may not override a person's 23 religious scruples and make him work on Sundays?

24          A           This is correct.

25          Q           Well, I take it then that you would say that

1 Congress could just impose a flat ban by statute that said
2 that no work on Sundays for those with religious scruples?

3 A I would think that that is what --

4 Q But we won't excuse golf players.

5 Q Or agnostics.

6 A Well, agnostics might be in a different 7 category. Maybe this is --

8 Q Golfing agnostic?

9 A But golfing is not. There is a distinction
10 drawn between the protection of religion and the other cate-11 gories as distinguished from golf.

12 Q Well, the agnostic comes in and says, "Well, 13 I don't want to work on Sunday either. It's not because of 14 my religion, but because I just don't like to work on Sundays."
15 You can't discriminate against me. I don't have religion, but 16 if you let some off who do you are discriminating against me.

17 A The statute prohibits discrimination on 18 certain classifications and to the extent that therefore 19 people in those classifications have a right not to be dis-20 criminated against they are, to that very limited extent, 21 preferred over people in classifications who are not.

22 Q Do you think Congress has as much power to 23 do that as it would to exempt people from the draft on account 24 of religion, I suppose?

25 Q There is quite a difference, isn't there,

1 in religion and doing something to somebody on account of 2 their professions of faith, or on account of the conduct which 3 they say their professions of faith require. You would say 4 that; wouldn't you?

5 A There certainly is --

6 Q It was held so about the Mormons.

7 A It is distinguishable; yes. But, I think 8 the act protects both the belief and the conduct itself.

9 Q But it wouldn't protect the -- if he married 10 three times, would it?

11 A No. You get the compelling state interest 12 or the undue hardship as the balancing factor.

13 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will recess at this 14 time, Counsel.

15 (Whereupon, at 12:00 o'clock p.m. the argument in 16 the above-entitled matter was concluded)
