1 and to supervise the maintenance of the facility.

2 To carry out its responsibilities, the petitioner
3 association is authorized by the Government to hire individuals
4 to work in various categories, such as physicist, engineer, 5 technician, clerical person, et cetera, and all funds for the 6 compensation of those persons are provided by the Federal 7 Government in accordance with the contract. There are rate 8 schedules attached to the contract which have been agreed to 9 by the Government as appropriate for payment of the individuals 10 employed by the petitioner.

11 The claimant in this case maintains that notwith-
12 standing his employment as an electronics technician, that is, 13 one assigned to monitor computers, operate accelerators, and 14 assist in research functions, he should have been paid at area
15 electrician construction rates pursuant to the Davis-Bacon Act.
16 The contract specifically provides that the parties did not 17 contemplate performance of construction work by persons em-
18 ployed by the Association, and therefore there are no Davis-
19 Bacon Act stipulations in the contract. The Federal District 20 Court issued two rulings. The first ruling held that in the 21 absence of an express Davis-Bacon Act provision in the contract 22 there could be no right of recovery. The case was left open 23 for purposes of allowing the plaintiff to show if he could 24 that the Government had made separate determinations regarding 25 his work as being construction in nature. After the taking of

1 a number of depositions, other discovery, Freedom of Informa-
2 tion Act requests, the plaintiff was forced to conclude that 3 he could show no prior agency determination that his work was 4 in fact covered by the Davis-Bacon Act.

5           Consequently, the Federal District Court granted a 6 motion for summary judgment upon that result. The Court of 7 Appeals reversed. The Court of Appeals, in effect, held that 8 regardless of the express inclusion of Davis-Bacon Act provi-
9 sions in this contract, they were included as a matter of law 10 and that the Federal District Court would have authority in 11 effect to substitute its judgment for that of the agency
12 regarding the construction nature of the plaintiff's work,
13 to set an appropriate wage scale, and to set up an appropriate 14 classification.

15           In doing so it extrapolated from its 1977 McDaniel
16 case in which it held that there was an implied right of action
17 to enforce express contract terms setting forth Davis-Bacon Act 18 requirements.

19           We would ask the Court to focus on the fact that this 20 is not a proceeding arising under the Administrative Procedure
21 Act challenging agency action. It is not a proceeding arising 22 under a contract action based upon express contract commitments.
23 Our petitioner here has never entered into a contract agreeing 24 to pay Davis-Bacon Act rates. It is not an action to enforce 25 a self-enforcing statute, such as an equal opportunity clause,

1 which is directed to the beneficiary party without regard to 2 Government actions.

3 This is an action which attempts to maintain a pri-4 vate cause of action to secure a judicial determination as to 5 coverage of the Davis-Bacon Act, application of particular 6 wages and classifications. The effect is to substitute the 7 federal courts for the agencies' contracting officers regard-8 ing these matters of coverage, classification, and rates.

9 Not only that, the action is brought against a not-10 for-profit entity which does not stand to gain or lose, 11 depending on what rates are paid to the employees. And it is 12 brought after the contract has already been performed. It is 13 not being brought in anticipation of the contract, as some 14 recent cases have been brought, but after the contract was 15 performed the Federal District Court was asked to revise the 16 contract to include specific Davis-Bacon Act provisions and 17 to hold the defendant not-for-profit contractor liable without 18 regard to the agency action that it had contracted with.

19 As the Court undoubtedly knows, the Davis-Bacon Act
20 emerged along with other pieces of legislation in the same
21 legislative era of the '30s, including the Fair Labor Standards
22 Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, and of course the Davis-Bacon Act
23 and other provisions requiring the payment of wages at certain 24 levels in order to rectify conditions that had resulted from 25 the Depression.

1           There are significant differences, however, between 2 the Davis Bacon-Act and the Walsh-Healey Act, on the one hand,
3 and the Fair Labor Standards Act on the other. The same
4 Congress that enacted these statutes provided that the Davis-
5 Bacon Act and Walsh-Healey Act policies would be enforced
6 through the vehicle of contract, and not only through the vehi-
7 cle of contract but through the vehicle of administrative pre-8 determination of what the obligations would be.

9           Conversely, in the Fair Labor Standards Act the uni-10 versal minimum wage and hours of work standard was set and the 11 parties affected by that were expressly given the right to 12 file suit to enforce their rights independently of the Govern-
13 ment to secure their wages.

14           Congress was concerned about the social goal that 15 it had, that is, to make sure that local wage and labor markets 16 were not disrupted, but also was concerned about maintaining 17 efficiency in government contracting. And so it struck a 18 balance. It struck a balance in the Davis-Bacon Act, and the 19 fulcrum of that balance is the concept of predetermination, so 20 that before the contract is gone into and executed, all par-
21 ties know what their obligations are and no one can be heard 22 to complain if the obligations prove too onerous.

23           What we have here is an attempt by the Court of 24 Appeals and the respondents to upset that fulcrum, to establish 25 a principle whereby the federal courts after the contract has

1 been executed, notwithstanding the predetermination concept,
2 are in a position to go back and determine that something 3 should have been paid at a different rate than it was. The 4 concept of predetermination, which is embedded in the Davis-
5 Bacon Act, was a topic of the legislative amendments to that 6 Act in 1935. Prior to 1935 there was no provision for pre-7 determination.

8 In 1935, after a four-year history of some confusion 9 in applying the law, Congress expressly amended it to provide 10 for predetermination, so that the contract would carry the 11 obligations and not some implied obligations based upon a 12 post-analysis of the work.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Mann, could I just be sure I under-14 stand your position. Assume here there had been a predetermi-
15 nation that some part of the construction work on the labora-
16 tory would be covered by Davis-Bacon. And the laboratory did 17 not pay those -- and it was performed by their own people.
18 And supposing an employee didn't know about that till the 19 contract was performed and then he had gotten less than the 20 Davis-Bacon Act provided, would he have in your view of the 21 law, have a private cause of action against your client for 22 the difference between what he was paid and what he actually 23 should have been paid?

24 MR. MANN: We have taken the position on that ques-
25 tion, Mr. Justice Stevens, that there is under the Act no

1 private right of action at all, even to recover under express
2 provisions. There may be a right of action in a state court, 3 under a state common law theory of third-party beneficiary, but 4 not in federal court, because there's no real federal question
5 there; it's a contract question involved there. So we've taken 6 the position that even if there were an express contract that 7 there would not be a private right to go to court.

8 QUESTION: Did you take that position in the 7th
9 Circuit?

10 MR. MANN: The position of the 7th Circuit -- that 11 question was not asked in the 7th Circuit, and that issue was 12 not actually before us.

13 QUESTION: But you didn't raise that in the 7th
14 Circuit?

15 MR. MANN: That's correct.

16 QUESTION: Or in the trial court?

17 MR. MANN: In the trial court the question of the 18 private right of action per se was raised in the context of the 19 jurisdiction of the court to revise the contract. That is, we 20 didn't really address the issue whether in general there is a 21 private right to enforce a specific clause, but whether there 22 is a private right to obtain the court determination of the 23 fundamental issues of coverage, of classification of rate, 24 that was the issue presented to the trial court, and the trial 25 court held that it did not have jurisdiction under the

1 Davis-Bacon Act to in effect substitute its judgment for the 2 contracting officer's judgment, at least without having had 3 some effort by the contracting officer to be involved, some 4 appeal to him, some --

5 QUESTION: Well, I understand the distinction between 6 predetermination and postdetermination, but it seems to me 7 that's quite a different question than the question whether 8 there is a private cause of action. And it seemed to me in 9 your brief the issue was rather clear, that you basically were 10 arguing about whether they decided in advance of performance
11 of the contract there was any Davis-Bacon Act work and you
12 said, no, and that's the end of the case. That doesn't re-
13 quire us to think at all about private cause of action, as I 14 see it.

15 MR. MANN: Well, I believe the private cause of 16 action comes in, Your Honor, in connection with the question 17 of whether or not there is a private cause of action in the 18 context of this case, to in effect secure a coverage determina-
19 tion by the federal court as opposed to the contracting 20 agency.

21 QUESTION: But would you say the contracting agency
22 could, after the contract was performed, come in and say, we'd 23 like to make a new, a postcontract coverage determination?

24 MR. MANN: I believe that the evolved law under the 25 Davis-Bacon Act would hold that if the agency wishes to come

1 in and amend the contract, the agency may find itself liable 2 for increased cost, as an amendment for the convenience of the 3 Government, for example. I believe there have been Comptroller
4 General decisions and perhaps some Court of Claims decisions 5 which say that the Government does not have as a matter of 6 right the right to come in and amend its determination, and 7 yet still hold the contractor unequivocally liable as though 8 the amendment had occurred at the outset.

9 But I believe that the concept of predetermination is 10 flexible enough to permit the agency itself, upon its own 11 motion or upon the appeal of some party to --

12 QUESTION: Well, if they assume the responsibility 13 for paying the difference, I suppose anybody could do that.

14 MR. MANN: That's correct. And --

15 QUESTION: But assuming they're saying, no. We paid 16 you the contract amount and we just now realized we should have 17 made a Davis-Bacon Act determination. We failed to do it.
18 They can't do that either, can they, in your view of the law?

19 MR. MANN: Our view of the law is that they cannot.

20 QUESTION: In other words, it seems to me that if 21 I understand your position correctly, it's the same whether the 22 Government were the plaintiff or the employee was the plain-23 tiff?

24 MR. MANN: That's correct, Your Honor.

25 QUESTION: So the private cause of action issue, it

1 seems to me, is a red herring in this case.

2 MR. MANN: Well, except that the private cause of 3 action raises a question as to who is going to control the 4 terms of the contract. I think it's one thing if one of the 5 contracting parties, that is, the Government, moves to amend 6 the contract for its advantage in one way or another.

7 But these are after all public contracts and there's 8 public policy as well as economics involved, and for a third 9 party to come in and say, irrespective of what the agency 10 thinks about how the law should be applied, I believe this was 11 Davis-Bacon work and I want an amendment; we believe that that 12 raises --

13 QUESTION: Well, if he's just saying, I want an 14 amendment. But if his theory is, it clearly says it's Davis-15 Bacon Act work, I provided it and the contract provided for 16 it, you're saying, well, he could sue in the state court.

17 MR. MANN: I would assume that.

18 QUESTION: So the public policy in the private cause 19 of action issue is just a question of where he sues.

20 MR. MANN: If there's an express term in the con-
21 tract, that's correct. I don't believe there is a --

22 QUESTION: And that was in the McDaniel case by hypo-23 thesis, wasn't it?

24 MR. MANN: By hypothesis; that's correct. The 7th 25 Circuit in both McDaniel I and McDaniel II indicated in the

1 course of their opinion that they assumed that there were ex-
2 press provisions.

3 QUESTION: In this case there never would have been 4 a lawsuit had not a private individual claiming a private 5 cause of action under the Davis-Bacon Act brought it, would 6 there?

7 MR. MANN: So far as we know, that's right, 8 Mr. Justice Rehnquist. The only lawsuit that has been brought 9 is by the private individual.

10 QUESTION: So, if there is no -- so, in other words,
11 the question addressed in part II of your brief is the thresh-12 hold question, is it not?

13 MR. MANN: The private cause of action right?

14 QUESTION: Right. If the answer to that is,
15 no, there's no private cause of action at least in the 16 federal courts. Then that's the end of this case, without 17 getting into matter addressed in Part I of your brief.

18 MR. MANN: Yes, Your Honor. Our position is that 19 whether or not there's a private right of action to enforce 20 express terms, clearly there is no federal jurisdiction to 21 create the terms that are being enforced.

22 QUESTION: If there's no private right of action in 23 federal district court, that's the end of that case.

24 MR. MANN: That's the end of the court case. Yes, 25 sir. Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice. At this time I'm ceding my time to Ms. Shapiro to express the views of the 1 United States.

2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mrs. Shapiro.

3 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MRS. HARRIET S. SHAPIRO, ESQ.,

4 ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE

5 MRS. SHAPIRO: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
6 the Court:

7 This is a suit against a federal contractor based 8 solely on the Davis-Bacon Act. It's not a suit to review 9 agency action under the Administrative Procedure Act. An 10 Administrative Procedure Act suit would raise different issues 11 between different parties and require the consideration of 12 different fundamental legislative policies.

13 I want to emphasize that neither my brief nor my 14 remarks today deal with the issues or the policies that would 15 have to be considered in an Administrative Procedure Act suit.
16 We've taken no position on those issues and I'm not authorized 17 to speak for the government concerning them.

18 The question here is only whether the contractor 19 employee has a right to relief against the contractor in an 20 implied private cause of action under the Davis-Bacon Act 21 itself.

22 We have discussed in our brief the reason why we 23 believe that under the Cort v. Ash test there is no such 24 implied cause of action. And we have emphasized there the 25 indications of legislative intent as the recent decisions of 1 this Court require.

2 This morning, however, I would like to focus on the 3 third Cort v. Ash factor, and discuss briefly why we believe 4 that the implication of a private cause of action is not neces-
5 sary to the accomplishment of the legislative purpose. That 6 purpose was to assure the payment of prevailing wages by 7 government construction contractors without disrupting the 8 federal procurement process. The express remedies provided 9 are the result of the congressional balancing of these poten-
10 tially competing federal interests. The remedies are designed 11 to protect the laborer's wages without interfering unduly with 12 efficient procurement.

13 That congressional balancing was originally made in 14 the 1930s when government procurement contracts were far simp-
15 ler than the one before the Court in this case. Today the Act
16 still covers the traditional brick-and-mortar contracts. It 17 also covers contracts for construction that is necessary for 18 the highly technical federal programs at the Department of 19 Energy as well as at NASA and the Defense Department.

20 These two types of contracts are in many ways quite 21 different in terms both of the need of the laborers for the 22 additional protections that a private cause of action would 23 afford, and of the potential of such a cause of action for dis-24 rupting procurement. These differences simply highlight the 25 importance of maintaining the balance Congress struck in an

1 earlier day.

2 Mr. Mann has described briefly how the Fermilab is 3 run under the prime contract at issue here. That operation 4 is typical of many large, long-term federal contracts for 5 work at the frontiers of science and technology. I want to add 6 to his description only the statement-- at the Fermilab the 7 Davis-Bacon decisions are made by a committee composed of 8 agency experts and if the decisions that the private work 9 projects are submitted to the committee, the committee makes 10 a recommendation as to whether the project involves Davis-Bacon 11 work or not. If the committee recommends to the manager and 12 the contracting officer that Davis-Bacon work is involved, 13 that work is subcontracted out to a contractor who works under 14 the Davis-Bacon Act, with the Davis-Bacon clauses in his con-15 tract, using building trades union employees.

16 The operation of this system is monitored. The 17 agency has extensive reviews to make sure that the contracts
18 for construction work include the Davis-Bacon clauses. It 19 also conducts enforcement investigations at the site to make 20 sure that the work is performed as required by the contract and 21 consistently with the contract.

22 QUESTION: Mrs. Shapiro, in a case such as you're 23 describing where there is a clear determination that the Davis-24 Bacon Act is to be performed and to be paid for at the regular 25 rates, assume there was a slip-up and for some reason an

1 employee did not get paid the amount required by the statute 2 and by the predetermination and all the rest of it, and for 3 some reason the Government missed it in its review and paid
4 out the contract. Would the employee in your view have a 5 cause of action against his employer for the difference between 6 what he was paid and what he should have been paid?

7 MRS. SHAPIRO: In your hypothetical the provisions 8 are in the contract?

9 QUESTION: Yes.

10 MRS. SHAPIRO: Yes.

11 QUESTION: He would only be -- in the federal court 12 he'd have such a cause of action?

13 MRS. SHAPIRO: Probably not in the federal court.
14 It would be --

15 QUESTION: Why not in a federal -- ?

16 MRS. SHAPIRO: -- he would have an action on his 17 contract.

18 QUESTION: Right.

19 MRS. SHAPIRO: It wouldn't be on the Davis-Bacon Act.
20 It would be -- well, the contract would --

21 QUESTION: He didn't have a contract with the 22 employer, but he had a contract for a lesser amount with the 23 employer.

24 MRS. SHAPIRO: He's a third-party beneficiary of 25 the contract that was written.

1 QUESTION: And in your view he'd have the remedy but 2 would be confined to the state court?

3 MRS. SHAPIRO: That's correct? He also has --

4 QUESTION: So you ask us basically to overrule --

5 QUESTION: Unless there's diversity jurisdiction 6 or something like that.

7 MRS. SHAPIRO: Yes.

8 QUESTION: Yes, and there's no federal remedy for 9 violation --

10 MRS. SHAPIRO: Well, but -- in that he certainly has 11 an express remedy under the Davis-Bacon Act too.

12 QUESTION: Well, if he has a remedy -- does he have 13 a remedy?

14 MRS. SHAPIRO: Like the Miller Act bond. I mean, 15 it's the --

16 QUESTION: No, no. I'm assuming a case where there 17 was a slipup and they paid out, and the bond was discharged.

18 MRS. SHAPIRO: Yes, yes, that's right.

19 QUESTION: And sometime later he then could sue his 20 employer but you'd say, just as a matter of third-party benefi-
21 ciary of a contract, but he has no federally protected rights.

22 MRS. SHAPIRO: That's right. And --

23 QUESTION: That's the Government's position?

24 MRS. SHAPIRO: -- as Mr. Justice Stewart pointed 25 out, that's basically one -- that's what we thought was

1 involved in the McDaniel case.

2 QUESTION: You don't think he was still within the 3 Cort v. Ash test of a person who was specifically intended to 4 be the specific beneficiary of the statute in that case?

5 MRS. SHAPIRO: Well, but --

6 QUESTION: If the likelihood of a slip-up is so 7 remote that he wouldn't --

8 MRS. SHAPIRO: In your case there has been no viola-9 tion of the Davis-Bacon Act, because --

10 QUESTION: Well, he wasn't paid as the --

11 MRS. SHAPIRO: Well, what the Davis-Bacon Act re-12 quires is that the provisions be put in the contract.

13 QUESTION: The Act does not require that the contract
14 be performed in accordance with the law?

15 MRS. SHAPIRO: It gives certain remedies that are 16 available but the contract -- I mean --

17 QUESTION: Well, then he shouldn't even have a 18 remedy under state law, if I understand you correctly, because 19 the law, as you said, has been complied with. The Government
20 just slipped up. COTTON CONTENT

21 MRS. SHAPIRO: No, I mean, where he has under -- 22 whatever remedy he has under state law is not on the Davis-
23 Bacon Act, it's on the contract provisions which require pay-24 ment of the wages that he didn't get.

25 Mr. Mann has emphasized the difficulties that

1 implication of a private cause of action would cause for 2 Government procurement from the contractor's point of view.
3 There are also problems from the point of view of the agency
4 that is using these highly specialized, expert contractors
5 to achieve important federal goals.

6           The interface between construction, alteration, and 7 repair work covered by Davis-Bacon and installation, experi-8 mental, or maintenance work that is not covered will often be 9 very hard to identify under prime contracts like the one here.

10           Moreover, the various work projects must be closely 11 coordinated and labor disputes avoided. For all these reasons, 12 it is important that decisions concerning Davis-Bacon coverage
13 be made by people who are very familiar with the technical 14 program involved, and that those decisions be made promptly, 15 with finality, and consistently, for all work within the 16 scope of the contract.

17           The possibility of a court acting as an independent 18 decisionmaker in a private cause of action threatens the 19 effective operation of this system. The more independent 20 decisionmakers there are in terms of number of district courts, 21 courts of appeals, the harder --

22           QUESTION: Mrs. Shapiro, can I just refresh my recol-
23 lection? The Government took a contrary position when it filed 24 its memorandum in connection with the sur-petition in 25 McDaniel, did they not, on the private cause of action issue?

1 MRS. SHAPIRO: No.

2 QUESTION: I'm sorry.

3 MRS. SHAPIRO: I don't believe --

4 QUESTION: You took the position in that case that 5 the 7th Circuit was wrong?

6 MRS. SHAPIRO: Yes, we did. Our position in 7 McDaniel was basically, first, the 7th Circuit's opinion was 8 somewhat cloudy, and to us it read as though what they were 9 saying was that they believed that there was an express Davis-10 Bacon clause in the contract. And for the reasons that we 11 just discussed under that theory, we believe that the 7th 12 Circuit didn't have jurisdiction because there wasn't 1331 or 13 1337 jurisdiction, but that there would be a contract action 14 in the state court.

15 QUESTION: Right.

16 MRS. SHAPIRO: And so that, on that theory -- and 17 we didn't think that -- as a matter of fact, the decision --

18 QUESTION: Your view then was there was never 19 any federal implied cause of action under any circumstances?

20 MRS. SHAPIRO: But, the petitioner in McDaniel had 21 not raised that particular question. We did discuss in 22 McDaniel the reasons why we thought that if the Court had been 23 reaching the question that the 7th Circuit clearly reached here
24 it was incorrect because of the application of the Cort v. Ash 25 factors. But we recommended no certiorari because we just

1 didn't think that case was a clear enough case; this one is.

2 My final point is that at least in the particular 3 situation that we have here, there are significant nonjudicial
4 methods for the laborer to assure, to be sure that the agency
5 is not acting in an arbitrary manner. These controls are non-6 judicial but the fact is that the construction trades are 7 highly unionized, since all Davis-Bacon work is required to be 8 performed by subcontract, those unions have a real interest in 9 policing the agencies' implementation of the Act, so that their 10 employers get as much of the total work at the projects as 11 possible. And they have ample means of assuring that the 12 agency will consider their view seriously. These basically are, 13 negotiation locally in Washington with the procuring agency,
14 and through consultation with the Department of Labor.

15 In short, particularly in the context of contracts
16 like this one, the Davis-Bacon Act is effectively enforced 17 through negotiations between union and agency. Implication of 18 a private cause of action in this context is not necessary to 19 achieve the Act's purposes.

20 Unless there are further questions, I reserve the 21 remainder of the time for petitioner.

22 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Nye.

23 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ROBERT JAY NYE, ESQ.,

24 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

25 MR. NYE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

1           Just on that last point about sufficient nonjudicial
2 controls to be sure that the Davis-Bacon Act will be imple-
3 mented and applied by reason of negotiations between unions
4 and agencies, I wish to advise the Court if the Court does not 5 already know that I represent an individual and a class of 6 individuals. I do not represent a union. I am here repre-
7 senting wage earners who have been requested by their employer,
8 the petitioner in this case, to do certain work which mani-9 festly is under a Davis-Bacon Act contract. It says, "for 10 construction, alteration, repair" and everything else that the 11 Davis-Bacon Act requires. These people did perform that work, 12 we are not at the stage yet in this case where it can be said
13 to this Court that they did not -- this case arose on a sum-14 mary judgment, just on a legal issue.

15           They performed that work and they were not paid the 16 prevailing wages required by the Davis-Bacon Act and estab-
17 lished by the Secretary of Labor's predeterminations of wages.
18 Now, on that predetermination point --

19           QUESTION: Why'd you sue in federal court rather 20 that state court?

21           MR. NYE: Because, Your Honor, we have a federal 22 right of action. Number one, because, number one, the statute
23 gives it to us. Section 3(b) of the statute says -- and this 24 Court in its Binghamton decision refers to that as being an 25 employee right of action against his contractor. That statute

1 reads: "The right of action and/or of intervention against 2 the contractor and his sureties conferred by law upon pertinent 3 persons furnishing labor or materials."

4 QUESTION: That refers to the Miller Act, doesn't it?

5 MR. NYE: Well, if it does, Your Honor, and if it is 6 to be so construed, it was not so construed in the Binghamton
7 case, but of course that case did not involve the question.

8 If it is to be construed as being only an action on 9 a surety payment bond -- it doesn't talk about the Miller Act
10 bond, but on a surety payment bond, then we have the anomaly
11 in this case of the contractor failing to furnish the surety
12 payment bond that Congress requires with respect to construc-13 tion contracts, and therefore the employees again are placed in 14 a position of not being able to sue.

15 QUESTION: That may be, but it would not seem to 16 me to necessarily follow that because the employer hasn't pro-17 vided a bond which Congress has required him to file, that 18 gives an employee a private right of action in a federal court.

19 MR. NYE: If the Court please, the question, as 20 the 7th Circuit has said in the McDaniel cases, is not the 21 existence of a private right of action. Congress intended a 22 private right of action.

23 QUESTION: We granted certiorari here to review the 24 judgment of the 7th Circuit.

25 MR. NYE: Yes, Your Honor. I appreciate that, and I

1 understand that. And I am submitting to the Court that 2 Congress has created in favor of employees a private right of 3 action. They intended one where they cannot --

4 QUESTION: Did they say in so many words that an 5 employee shall have a private right of action against an 6 employer for failure to comply with the Davis-Bacon Act?

7 MR. NYE: In my interpretation of that language --

8 QUESTION: Well, I mean -- certainly; you're a law-9 yer, I was a lawyer and like to think of myself as still being 10 one. One could point to a section that says, either an 11 employee shall have a cause of an action in United States 12 District Court in the jurisdiction where he performs the 13 labor. You have to admit it doesn't say that.

14 MR. NYE: I say -- I must take two positions, Your 15 Honor. I say it does --

16 QUESTION: Where?

17 MR. NYE: -- grant the employee that right of action.
18 And the mere fact that it may be on a payment surety bond, the 19 surety bond, after all, is simply security to assure payment 20 of an obligation. When the Congress talks about the right of 21 action given to an employee in Section 3(b) of this Act, they 22 have given a right of action to that employee. They have 23 assured to him a private remedy in the event that none of the 24 other remedies are available. And in this case, none of the 25 other remedies are available. The Government did not --

1 QUESTION: Give me the exact language of Section 2 3(b) as you rely on it.

3 MR. NYE: I am quoting it. I have that language 4 itself -- the employee shall have "the right of action and/or 5 of intervention against the contractors and their sureties 6 conferred by law upon persons furnishing labor or materials."

7 Now, that is the statute and that with reference --

8 QUESTION: Yes, but that refers to -- that refers 9 back to the right of action conferred by law upon persons 10 furnishing labor or material. It's derivative.

11 MR. NYE: Well, that may be the decision of this 12 Court. It has been the decision of the 7th Circuit, that may 13 also be the decision of this court. But to the extent that it 14 does refer back to some payment bond that is required and that 15 payment bond does not exist, I am saying, because Congress 16 intended a right of action, this Court must recognize that 17 there is by implication, at least, some remedy when this statu-18 tory remedy is rendered ineffective and unavailable to the 19 employees, certainly through no fault of the employees what-20 soever.

21 QUESTION: But would you say the same thing if a 22 contractor went into bankruptcy, the Miller Act funds were 23 exhausted, and even given the wage priority, your clients 24 simply couldn't recover?

25 MR. NYE: If they can't recover, they can't recover,

1 Your Honor, if there are no funds. If the employer is bank-
2 rupt and there are no funds available from an estate, from a 3 bankrupt estate with which to to pay the employees, they cannot 4 recover. But that's whether or not the remedy is worthwhile, 5 whether or not there will actually be recovery on a remedy.
6 That's not the existence of the remedy itself.

7 QUESTION: What do you have to say about the 1964
8 amendments on this issue of whether a cause of action should 9 be implied?

10 MR. NYE: The 1964 amendments to my recollection, 11 Your Honor, had nothing to do with the existence or nonexis-
12 tence of the right of action.

13 QUESTION: Wasn't there an effort at that time to 14 amend the statute to provide expressly for --

15 MR. NYE: Representative Goodell in his attempt to 16 place an amendment in the Act, which did not pass, sought to 17 open up the entire area of judicial review concerning all as-18 pects of the Act, at least according to his proposed bill, his 19 proposed amendments. However, other statements by legislators, 20 for example, Representative Fogarty and others, and Representa-21 tive Goodell himself, recognized that the basic purpose of that 22 proposed amendment by that Representative, was to render the 23 Secretary of Labor's predeterminations of prevailing wages, 24 what the prevailing wages in a community are, subject to judi-
25 cial review. And because the Congress has always determined

1 that that question should not be open to judicial review as 2 well as for other nongermane reasons, Congress did not adopt 3 that view.

4 Congress did not, therefore, open up the question
5 of predeterminations of wage rates, what they are in a commun-
6 ity, to judicial review. But the question of predetermination 7 of anything else has never been an issue in the Act. That has 8 never been placed in the hands of any government agency, one
9 way or another. Counsel attempts to use the word predetermi-10 nation in a very broad way, and the Davis-Bacon Act is a very 11 simple statute.

12 It says that the Secretary of Labor shall make pre-13 determinations of wage rates, and he does, and they are pub-
14 lished in the Federal Register for each county and metropolitan 15 area around the country, and that's all that he is supposed to 16 predetermine. Now, what the petitioner seeks to say, that there 17 should be and must be, in order for the Davis-Bacon Act to 18 work, there must be a predetermination by a government agency
19 that a contract is a construction contract.

20 Well, the Solicitor of Labor in his testimony in 21 1962, among others, has said that when Congress enacted the 22 Davis-Bacon Act in 1931 and amended it substantially in 1935, 23 Congress did not use the words "construction, alteration, or 24 repair, including painting and decorating," to mean something 25 special, or something that is placed in the hands of some

1 technicians at some government agency, or something difficult
2 of interpretation. The Solicitor of Labor at that time and 3 all of the authorities who have referred to it have talked 4 about the fact that Congress meant the ordinary meaning of 5 those words, and courts can make those determinations.

6 We have cited the recent Cortelyou of one of our 7 circuits in which the Court held specifically, very recently,
8 that the work that was before it clearly was pursuant to a 9 contract calling for "construction, alteration, or repair, 10 including painting or decorating."

11 Now, I have asserted in my brief that the right of 12 action question was never briefed, argued, or whatever, before 13 the lower courts. This summary judgment matter arose when the 14 petitioner filed a motion for summary judgment, and discovery 15 at that time, by the way, was stayed to permit the court to 16 rule on that legal question.

17 That summary judgment motion was supported by an 18 affidavit of petitioner's counsel saying, "No Davis-Bacon Act 19 stipulations have been included within or are incorporated 20 within the government contract here in question." I am para-21 phrasing a bit there.

22 But that's the issue, that's the issue that was raised 23 before the trial court, that is the -- this contract does not 24 contain Davis-Bacon Act stipulations, that was the issue
25 raised before the trial court and that was the issue

1 argued and dealt with in the 7th Circuit. There was no right
2 of action issue at that time. And the 7th Circuit said, and 3 I respectfully submit, correctly -- and indeed it must be so
4 held -- that a statute that is a mandatory statute, a statute 5 that says that certain things shall occur is incorporated by 6 operation of law if it is not within a contract in itself, or 7 if it is there by reference if it is referred to by the par-8 ties.

9           And I submit to this Court also, that the Davis-
10 Bacon Act is expressly within our contract, notwithstanding 11 the summary judgment granted by the trial court, because among 12 other things this is -- the fact that Davis-Bacon was referred 13 to in correspondence between the AEC at that time and our 14 petitioner. The requirement on the petitioner is that such 15 construction work which is called for by this contract would 16 be subcontracted to subcontractors with the petitioner having 17 the obligation to make sure that Davis-Bacon stipulations were 18 included in all those subcontracts.

19           And there was the further agreement between them by 20 memorandum which we were able to discover -- by the way, [redacted] 21 through Freedom of Information Act procedures, not through the 22 discovery that we were able to get by that time, -- there was 23 the further memorandum of understanding that if the petitioner 24 does any of this work with its own employees -- that's our 25 case -- its own employees, then the contract will be modified.

1 The general contract, this prime contract, will be modified to 2 require that the petitioner pay its own employees the prevail-
3 ing wages required by the Davis-Bacon Act.

4 How can anybody say that the Davis-Bacon Act is not 5 express in that contract? And even if it isn't, even if 6 we were to say that the Davis-Bacon Act is not referred to 7 in that contract and that they are not bound by express con-
8 tract, they are certainly bound by the principle that manda-9 tory statutes which affect government contracts are in those 10 contracts by operation of law.

11 QUESTION: But that isn't the same question as 12 saying where they have a right to sue on those contracts.

13 MR. NYE: That's a separate question. Yes, Your 14 Honor. And that was never raised below, and I raise that here.

15 QUESTION: Do you disagree with your opponent's 16 reply brief at pages 14 and 15, as to his account of how he 17 claims to have raised it in the 7th Circuit treatment of 18 McDaniel I, McDaniel II? Do you say -- you have not had a 19 chance to reply to that. Is he simply being factually inaccur-20 rate?

21 MR. NYE: Well, if I may examine that?

22 QUESTION: Well, no, don't --

23 MR. NYE: He did not raise it, it was not dealt with 24 in that. You can look at his briefs, in his briefs in that 25 court. His brief in that court does not talk about the right

1 of action; indeed, does not go into that question at all.
2 He was placing all of his reliance on the question of contract 3 interpretation. And that was all that was argued before the 4 court of Appeals, except for the exhaustion of administrative 5 remedies points.

6 But on this contract question, as to whether or not 7 my clients, these wage earners, should have exhausted whatever 8 administrative remedies there might be before going to the 9 federal courts. And at that time the 7th Circuit mentioned 10 the petitioner has not suggested any such administrative 11 remedy, and the Court of Appeals could not find one.

12 QUESTION: That was available then?

13 MR. NYE: Or is available today, Your Honor.

14 QUESTION: I know. But there was one, wasn't there, 15 prior to the contract issuance?

16 MR. NYE: No, your Honor. The Government in their 17 briefs, in this case, in their amicus brief, has mentioned 18 that there is no administrative remedy available to a wage 19 earner under these circumstances.

20 QUESTION: After -- I know, after the contract
21 issued.

22 MR. NYE: That's right.

23 QUESTION: Well, how about before?

24 MR. NYE: He was not a wage earner for this petitioner 25 before, Your Honor. He didn't know that he was going to be

1 working for these people. There was no way. There was no
2 way, absolutely, for this wage earner or his class members, not 3 having been employed, not knowing whether they would ever be 4 employed, not knowing that the Government was going to contract
5 with Universities Research Associates, that there was any issue
6 to be raised. They didn't -- they have no interest in it.

7 Their interest developed when they became employed 8 and when it was determined by them -- and of course this is 9 postcontracting -- that they were not being paid the proper
10 minimum wages. And as to that, the Government agrees, there
11 is no administrative remedy. Indeed, in the 1962 hearings
12 before Congress concerning the administration of the Davis-
13 Bacon Act -- it is very interesting to read these; I've cited 14 them in my brief.

15 The representatives of the Comptroller General's 16 office has said, there are, there is no agreement among the 17 agencies as to who has what kinds of enforcement powers.
18 And the Comptroller General also says, the Secretary of Labor
19 believes he does, we believe we do. And then the Secretary
20 of Labor's representative said the same thing, there is no
21 agreement; we believe we do, and they believe they do.

22 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Nye, considering the fact that 23 federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction, on what 24 jurisdictional section of the Title 28 do you rely for being 25 in court here?

1 MR. NYE: Section 1337, Your Honor, a civil action,
2 a civil case arising under any statute, any federal statute
3 affecting interstate commerce. And that is one of the powers
4 exercised by Congress in enacting the Davis-Bacon Act. That 5 is the jurisdictional prerequisite, the right of action is 6 referred to by Congress. To the extent that this Court elects 7 to determine the question of the existence of a right of 8 action, I should point out that I'm not asking this Court nor 9 have I ever asked that this Court or any court in this case 10 consider that there is an alternative private remedy to an 11 employee which he can voluntarily use and disregard any other 12 private remedy that Congress may have given him, such as that 13 one under Section 3(b), talking about the right of action 14 against the contractor and his sureties, which Congress has 15 given to him.

16 I have not said that a wage earner has the right to 17 disregard express remedies. I have said, if an alternative is 18 required, if that statute, if that section is interpreted as 19 meaning only action under some payment bond, then there must be 20 -- since Congress intended -- a right of these individuals to 21 recover their unpaid wages, -- for these individuals to have a 22 right of action directly against the contractor, but only if 23 the original statutory remedies are unavailable, and ineffec-
24 tive in the ways that they are in this case.

25 Now, I should be very frank with this Court to point

1 out that there is nothing in the record thus far to demonstrate 2 that the remedies are unavailable or ineffective in this case.
3 That was shown in the McDaniel case because that was in issue,
4 and we presented affidavits below in the trial court demon-
5 strating that the employer -- that was University of Chicago
6 operating Argonne National Lab -- had not furnished the neces-7 sary surety payment bond and that the Comptroller General had 8 not withheld certain payments in order to pay employees, as 9 well as a couple of other miscellaneous items like blacklist-10 ing, which of course would not be done in this kind of an in-11 stance, and one other minor administrative item.

12           There we made our record. Here we never had a record, 13 had an opportunity to make the record concerning the unavail-14 ability or ineffectiveness of this right of action, if it is 15 so interpreted, if it is so limited to action only on a surety 16 bond. Here we have to -- if the Court is going to rule on 17 this question of the existence of a right of action, this Court
18 must in order to be fair presume that the situation is as it
19 was in McDaniel, and which we have no reason to doubt in this 20 case that the situation was the same, that our Petitioner has 21 not submitted Miller Act bonds or any other kind of surety pay-22 ment bond that the employee can proceed upon, and that the 23 Comptroller General has not withheld sums to assure payment to 24 these laborers.

25           Certainly this Court, unless it makes that

1 presumption cannot rule appropriately on my opponent's sugges-
2 tion that there is no right of action existing under circum-
3 stances such as these. I am not -- and I make this clear
4 again -- I am not asserting that there's an alternate implied
5 right of action for use by employees under any and all circum-
6 stances as an alternative to going through the surety payment 7 bond procedure if the statute is interpreted in that way.

8 I am saying that if those remedies are rendered ineffective
9 and unavailable and particularly if they're rendered ineffec-10 tive and unavailable because of action or inaction by the 11 contractor and maybe cooperation by the Government, that the 12 employee does have this right of action. Congress intended it, 13 and the courts should make sure that --

14 QUESTION: So, any time the agency issues a contract 15 and has made a determination that there is no coverage, that it
16 isn't covered, I suppose you would -- the contract would issue 17 and there wouldn't be a surety bond, and in any of those cir-
18 cumstances if you allege that the agency mistakenly decided 19 that there was no coverage, you would have -- you should be 20 able to have the court redetermine coverage.

21 MR. NYE: Well, I know that Your Honor wants direct 22 answers so I'm going to give you one: yes, Your Honor.

23 QUESTION: Yes. Well, that's this case, isn't it?

24 MR. NYE: That's true. And may -- no, it is not, 25 Your Honor.

1 QUESTION: Oh.

2 MR. NYE: There is no coverage determination saying
3 that the Davis-Bacon Act does not apply in this case.

4 QUESTION: I know, but they didn't -- but they didn't 5 provide for it.

6 MR. NYE: If the Court please, they referred to it, 7 they spoke about it, they did everything except put a long list
8 of stipulations in the contract. Now, if the Court please, 9 the Government and my opponent have not referred to any 10 Government agency determination that this is not a Davis-11 Bacon Act contract.

12 QUESTION: Well, that "long list of stipulations," 13 as you call it, is required by the Davis-Bacon Act, is it not?

14 MR. NYE: The Davis-Bacon Act requires that there 15 be certain stipulations; that's --

16 QUESTION: And therefore its absence indicates that 17 the parties determined that the Davis-Bacon Act is inappli-18 cable.

19 MR. NYE: Well -- or the parties -- well, I know the 20 reason why they did not include that: because they intended 21 that all Davis-Bacon work under this Davis-Bacon contract was 22 to be subcontracted, and that the subcontracts would include 23 those stipulations.

24 But here we are asserting -- and we are at the stage 25 where this must be accepted by the Court. We are asserting on

1 behalf of these laborers that they did certain amounts of the 2 Davis-Bacon Act work.

3 QUESTION: I see.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Nye, in this connection, earlier, I 5 understood you to say that the contract has a provision that 6 says if this eventuality comes to pass then they shall be paid 7 at Davis-Bacon rates.

8 MR. NYE: That's what I contend, even --

9 QUESTION: Do you rely on paragraph 33, is that the 10 paragraph you rely on for that, or is it a different paragraph?

11 MR. NYE: No, it's a letter, a memorandum of under-12 standing in our joint appendix. I think it's one of the 13 later pages. Two letters; excuse me: one at the time of the 14 original signing of the contract in 1968, and again in a memo-15 randum of understanding that I was able to discover when 16 Modification 14 was made by the parties.

17 Modification 14 was the big modification of this 18 contract, so at both times the Government and the petitioner
19 agreed between themselves that in the event that the contractor 20 does any of this work with its own work force -- and these 21 employees whom I represent are in its own work force -- that 22 the contract will be modified. And I say it is modified 23 thereby to include the Davis-Bacon Act stipulations concerning 24 these employees.

25 QUESTION: But don't you run into the same problem

1 Justice Stewart just identified, though, the very fact that 2 it was not subsequently modified tends to indicate that the 3 two parties agreed that no Davis-Bacon Act work had been per-4 formed?

5 MR. NYE: Well, if the Court please, even this 6 Davis-Bacon committee -- it's an informal committee; it's not 7 as formal as counsel would let us believe, and I was present
8 at the depositions where it was described. This informal
9 Davis-Bacon Act committee of three people in the local ABC
10 office was presented with requests for Davis-Bacon Act deter-
11 minations -- they're referred to in my brief also -- approxi-
12 mately 135 during the period of years, for various kinds of 13 work. And 126 of those requests were returned by this Davis-
14 Bacon Act committee saying, this is Davis-Bacon Act work.

15 Now, I submit that certain of the Davis-Bacon Act 16 work done under this contract, and maybe a lot of it that was 17 done pursuant to those determinations -- determinations, now,
18 if we need determinations -- by the government agency here 19 involved, certain of that work was done by my people. And if 20 so, they are entitled to be paid. Congress intended it, and 21 nobody, not their decision -- not to call this a Davis-Bacon
22 Act contract -- not their decision, not --

23 QUESTION: But Mr. Nye, just sticking with that for 24 just a second, is it not true that if that happened the way
25 you describe, the Government had a duty not to pay the contract

1 price until they were satisfied that the employees had been 2 paid the appropriate wages, isn't that true?

3 MR. NYE: Well, there's question as to how that's 4 effectuated, if the Court please. I don't know how that's 5 done. The Davis-Bacon Act itself does not say how that shall 6 be done. All we know is that the Comptroller General is sup-7 posed to withhold certain sums of money. We don't know who 8 asks the Comptroller General to do it or how the Comptroller 9 General decides that.

10 QUESTION: Well, is it not true as a sort of a 11 general propostion that the Government has a duty not to pay 12 out in full on the contract until it's satisfied that there's 13 been no violation of the Davis-Bacon Act?

14 MR. NYE: I think that there is such a duty.
15 I think there is. I'm not proceeding on that duty. I'm not 16 suing the Government in this case. I'm proceeding against my 17 client's employer because the obligation of the Davis-Bacon 18 Act is upon the employer to pay, and it's been referred to 19 again and again by Congress and by the courts as being -- and 20 by this Court -- as being a statute that requires the payment 21 to laborers and mechanics concerning government contracts in-22 volving construction, alteration and repair, including painting 23 and decorating, of wages which the Secretary of Labor has 24 determined are the prevailing wages in a particular area for 25 that type of work.

1 By the way, the Government in its brief has also 2 said that if we look at the payment schedules -- some of which 3 the Petitioner has included in the Joint Appendix. If we look 4 at payment schedules, the Government has said it is clear that 5 certain of the amounts received by my clients -- actually 6 received -- were less than what the prevailing wages would have 7 required that they be paid.

8 So we have -- there is no question that these people
9 have not been paid what they are owed. There is no question 10 that Congress commanded that the prevailing wage principle be 11 effectuated.

12 And by the way, I think it's important to note the Comptrol-
13 ler General has just done a survey and there are 77 statutes
14 concerning federally assisted contract situations, 77 statutes
15 in which the Davis-Bacon Act is referred to and in these 77
16 statutes it is required that Davis-Bacon obligations be per-17 formed, that payment of wages be made in accordance with the 18 prevailing wage principle of the Davis-Bacon Act and the Davis-19 Bacon Act is cited in each of those statutes.

20 I don't know what effect if any this Court's deci-21 sion will have on the 41 state "little Davis-Bacon acts" which 22 exist throughout the country. I'm not representing that it
23 will have or not have any effect, but it shows the pervading
24 effect and acceptance of the prevailing wage principle, not 25 only by Congress in the Davis-Bacon Act, not only by Congress

1 in the 77 other statutes that refer to federally assisted 2 programs and construction, but also throughout the rest of 3 these United States. Thank you.

4 QUESTION: I take it that the heart of the Govern-
5 ment's submission is that the agency determination of coverage 6 is just unreviewable?

7 MR. NYE: If the Court please, I suggest that the 8 agency has no function in deciding or not deciding with any 9 binding effect that a contract is covered or not.

10 QUESTION: I know that, but don't you understand the 11 Government to assert what I say?

12 MR. NYE: Yes, Your Honor.

13 QUESTION: And that if the agency makes a determina-
14 tion before contracting and that is subject to appeal, I sup-
15 pose, to the Department of Labor, but the Department of Labor's 16 decision may or may not bind the agency. But in any event the 17 Government's submission is that those determinations are not 18 subject to judicial review.

19 MR. NYE: I assume that that's what they are 20 saying, and to that extent --

21 QUESTION: I thought, rather, that the specific 22 question exposed by my brother White was one that the Govern-23 ment took no position on?

24 QUESTION: But wouldn't it be very odd to say it's 25 subject to a judicial review but that this case must be

1 dismissed, because where there is no agency determination at 2 all --

3 MR. NYE: It is --

4 QUESTION: Or where there wasn't -- at least, where 5 there's no administrative remedy now?

6 MR. NYE: There is no -- absolutely, there is no
7 administrative remedy. If there were one we wouldn't be going 8 through the Courts. We would be proceeding with a much easier
9 administrative remedy, but we have none, if the Court please.

10 It is our view and request that this Court affirm
11 the decision of the Court of Appeals.

12 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything 13 further?

14 MR. MANN: Just one, comment, Jr. Chief Justice.

15 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ROBERT E. MANN, ESQ.,

16 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER -- REBUTTAL

17 MR. MANN: I'd like to reemphasize that it is our 18 position that in order to hold the contractor liable, there 19 must be an affirmative predetermination of coverage, and the 20 coverage must be not only the wage rates but the existence of 21 the coverage of the Act as well, because the agency making that 22 determination is the other contracting party. And that concept 23 is embodied in the comment that Mr. Nye referred to with 24 respect to the contract, which is shown on pages 62 and 63 of 25 the Appendix, where it indicates that if the Atomic Energy

1 Commission determines that work is covered by Davis-Bacon,
2 then the contract will be amended.

3 QUESTION: May I just ask one other question in re-
4 sponse to something Mr. Nye had said? If those letters that 5 are referred to in the Appendix -- and very honestly, I don't 6 have them in mind -- if they do unambiguously state that, if 7 employees of the contractor do perform any Davis-Bacon work,
8 then they shall be paid at Davis-Bacon rates, if they so pro-
9 vide, then do you have a duty to pay at the rate he claims?

10 MR. MANN: If they provided that, yes, sir. What 11 the provisions of the letter agreement say is that if the 12 Atomic Energy Commission determines both the need for our 13 employees to do the work and that the work is covered, then 14 the contract will be amended.

15 QUESTION: In effect, that's saying, if they do that, 16 then instead of subcontracting the work, they could do it 17 with their own employees if we agree that this is covered work?

18 MR. MANN: Right. In advance. If we agree -- it's 19 in advance. Thank you very much, Mr. Chief Justice.

20 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
21 The case is submitted.

22 (Whereupon, at 12 o'clock noon, the case in the 23 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
