2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Firestone Tire & Rubber Company v. Risjord.

4 Mr. Grossman, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF HARVEY M. GROSSMAN, ESQ.,

6 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

7 MR. GROSSMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
8 the Court:

9 This case presents two basic questions. Was the 10 order denying Firestone's motion to disqualify John Risjord 11 appealable, and if so, should that order be reversed?

12 QUESTION: If it wasn't appealable, then we don't 13 ever get to the second question?

14 MR. GROSSMAN: That's correct, Mr. Justice.

15 Before addressing the questions, I would briefly
16 summarize the nature of the factual backgrounds that give rise 17 to them. In essence, Attorney John Risjord represents the 18 plaintiff in certain personal injury suits against Firestone.
19 Mr. Risjord's firm also has a long-standing relationship with 20 the insurance company, Home Insurance Company, which insures 21 Firestone against those very claims. The record reflects that 22 for some 20 years Mr. Risjord's firm has represented Home, 23 the insurer, on a case-by-case basis and throughout that time
24 has held Home out to the public as its foremost insurance 25 client by listing it first in a non-alphabetical listing of 1 insurance clients in the Martindale-Hubbell Directory.

2 In prosecuting his personal injury suits against 3 Firestone, Mr. Risjord has included a theory of intentional
4 tort, and based on that theory Home has disclaimed coverage
5 under its policy. Firestone moved for Mr. Risjord's disquali-
6 fication, contending that in his management of the personal 7 injury cases he inevitably would be affected, consciously or 8 unconsciously, by his awareness of Home's interest in defeating 9 coverage, and that even if it were assumed that his original 10 selection of that theory of intentional tort weren't prompted
11 by Home's interest in determining whether or how aggressively 12 to pursue it, he would necessarily be affected, clouded as it 13 were, in his judgment, because he would know that pursuit of that 14 theory would be helpful and its abandonment harmful to his 15 firm's longstanding client, Home.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Grossman, may I interrupt you for a 17 moment to ask you a question that doesn't really go to the 18 merits of this case at all? In the respondent's brief I notice
19 on page 2 the second very short, one-sentence paragraph said
20 that, "Risjord has filed complaints on behalf of a plaintiff
21 against Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, alleging identical 22 claims..."

23 Now, would a judge who had an interest, legal or 24 equitable, in Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, should such a 25 judge consider disqualifying himself from this litigation?

1 MR. GROSSMAN: As I understand the question, it is 2 directed to the matter of --

3 QUESTION: Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company.

4 MR. GROSSMAN: I would say, no, Your Honor. I would 5 not view that as requisite --

6 QUESTION: Was Home the insurance carrier for 7 Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Home?

8 MR. GROSSMAN: I don't know. Goodyear Tire & Rubber
9 Company is not a client of our office, and I am not aware 10 of this --

11 QUESTION: And it's not a part of this litigation, 12 I know.

13 MR. GROSSMAN: No, and I am not aware of who covers 14 them. I have no knowledge and there's nothing in the record that I'm 15 aware of that indicates that Home was their insurer, but I 16 couldn't state that for a fact.

17 QUESTION: Perhaps your brother will be able to an-18 swer my question. But so far as you're concerned, you 19 see no --

20 MR. GROSSMAN: I see no problem whatever in that 21 regard.

22 The trial court recognized on the undisputed facts 23 Mr. Risjord did in fact face a conflict of interest, but the 24 court then went on to say, in substance, that he nevertheless 25 could continue to represent the personal injury plaintiffs

1 against Firestone if he obtained the consent of those plain-
2 tiffs and of Home Insurance Company.

3 Firestone appealed from that determination, contend-
4 ing that not only was this not a situation where a consent
5 approach was really a viable solution, but the trial court's 6 approach to the consent was flawed in any event.

7 QUESTION: Why was it any concern of Firestone's?

8 MR. GROSSMAN: Because, Your Honor, Firestone viewed 9 the matter, or had to view the matter not only in terms of 10 whether the case might be won or lost, but also from the stand-11 point of insurability. And irrespective of the impact of 12 Mr. Risjord's conflict of interest on the outcome of the case, 13 it would at the very least create a greater risk that any 14 recovery, even if more remote overall, would more likely be 15 fashioned in a manner to defeat coverage. And we submit that 16 that would be a gamble that Firestone ought not to be required
17 to take and that even if Firestone were willing to take it 18 the public interest shouldn't permit it.

19 QUESTION: Well, let's assume Firestone, for a mo-
20 ment, doesn't represent the public interest but just itself.
21 Why is it that Firestone would suffer if he were not disquali-22 fied?

23 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, assume that -- well, there are at 24 least three ways that Firestone would suffer, we would contend.
25 First of all, of course, if in fact his conflict led him to

1 pursue the case in a way that was guided in terms of insura-
2 bility. We think that factor would prejudice Firestone be-3 cause they are entitled to have the case presented by an attor-
4 ney who is guided by the interest of the plaintiff, not of the 5 insurance carrier.

6 QUESTION: Would the options open to the plaintiffs' 7 counsel as to insurability or not, affect recovery against 8 Firestone?

9 MR. GROSSMAN: As I said, they could affect the pros-10 pect that any recovery might be fashioned in such a way as to 11 avoid coverage under the policy. And there's an additional 12 burden, I would cite to the Court, and that is that even if 13 Firestone ultimately prevails on the merits, Firestone could 14 be prejudiced by being required to defend against claims which 15 but for Mr. Risjord's conflict of interests would not have 16 been pursued or if pursued would have been abandoned at an 17 earlier stage of the proceedings.

18 QUESTION: Mr. Grossman, let me continue the inter-19 ruption. Firestone had an action against Home for breach of 20 fiduciary duty. Is that action still pending?

21 MR. GROSSMAN: That action is still pending,
22 Mr. Justice.

23 QUESTION: Is it being held for resolution of this 24 case, or just clogged in the calendar?

25 MR. GROSSMAN: No. It is simply pending in the lower

1 court and it has not been set for trial at this time.

2 I might add -- well, excuse me.

3 QUESTION: Your answer is basically that Firestone 4 might have to pay a greater or lesser amount depending on 5 how much insurability there was in its policy with Home, is 6 that correct?

7 MR. GROSSMAN: Our position is that Firestone is put 8 at risk because it stands a greater chance that recovery or 9 the prospects of recovery might more likely be guided, or I 10 should say the recovery might more likely be fashioned in such 11 a way as to avoid coverage under Home's policy. And we think 12 that's a risk which shouldn't enter into the case. Firestone 13 shouldn't face the risk that the case will be guided, not just 14 in terms of the victory of the plaintiff -- that's a risk that 15 they obviously would have to take, but they shouldn't have to 16 take the risk that the case would be guided in such a way that 17 if plaintiff recovers the recovery would be more likely fash-
18 ioned in a way that would prejudice the position of Firestone
19 as against Home on its insurance policy.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Grossman, suppose this lawyer had 21 withdrawn his name and had in turn given all of his plans, all 22 of his trial briefs, to another lawyer. Would you have a 23 complaint against that lawyer?

24 MR. GROSSMAN: If he imparted his matters of public 25 record to another lawyer, we would have no quarrel with that.

1 QUESTION: If he handed anything he wanted to him,
2 could you complain about it?

3 MR. GROSSMAN: Ordinarily, I would say, not unless 4 there was some link between the two. Not if the other attor-
5 ney were entirely independent and took over the case, it would 6 seem ordinarily we would not be complaining about that. Assume 7 the other lawyer has no connection with Home Insurance Company, 8 there'd be no problem that I could see, ordinarily, in that 9 instance.

10 QUESTION: Well, suppose he's a new lawyer that Home 11 had just hired? I'm asking to see how hypothetical your 12 position is.

13 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, if Home assigned --

14 QUESTION: You're still worried about what might 15 happen, which has not happened, and might not happen. Is 16 that what you're complaining about?

17 MR. GROSSMAN: The reason we are concerned, Your 18 Honor, is that we --

19 QUESTION: You might have to pay more money.

20 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, not just the question of paying 21 more money. We run the risk that we --

22 QUESTION: Well, are you pursuing the public interest
23 or your own private Firestone interests? Because if you 24 aren't, how are you going to recognize that as money?

25 MR. GROSSMAN: Our position, obviously, is prompted

1 by what we perceive to be Firestone's interests, but we believe
2 in this particular case Firestone's interest happens to coa-
3 lesce with the public interest because the continued prosecu-
4 tion of this case in the face of the conflict of interest that 5 Firestone's complaining of in our view would be contrary to 6 the public interest because it injects an element of the case,
7 that is, the consideration of Home, a division of loyalty, a 8 lack of independent judgment, which ought not to be permitted.
9 And to further answer the question posed by Mr. Justice
10 Marshall, I would say that we don't feel the question is hypo-
11 thetical, in the sense that it is inevitable in our view 12 that Mr. Risjord being human, knowing of Home's interest, that 13 his judgment will be clouded by that awareness. The only 14 problem we face is that we cannot determine, and really can't 15 measure at any stage in the proceeding, just what the impact 16 is. We won't be able to tell that even when the case is 17 finally decided.

18 QUESTION: Is Home Fire Firestone's excess insurer?

19 MR. GROSSMAN: Yes, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, it is.
20 Firestone -- so I can clarify that matter -- 21 Firestone selects its own counsel. The problem here is not 22 that Home has picked an attorney to represent Firestone, but 23 rather it's the link between Home and the plaintiff attorney.
24 And our concern, and I think the reason that the Court ought 25 to be concerned with that situation, even though it differs

1 from the usual case where the insurance company selects an 2 attorney to represent the defendant and the conflict arises in 3 that context, is that where the insurance company is linked to 4 the plaintiff's attorney, number one, he has greater control
5 over the case than does the defendant's attorney; number two,
6 there are two interests at jeopardy, the plaintiffs he repre-7 sents -- and we submit that the risk toward plaintiffs, for 8 example, ought to be represented by counsel whose judgments
9 are not prompted by divided loyalty. That may not be Fire-
10 stone's motives, but we believe that their interests coincide 11 with those of Firestone in this instance.

12 And thirdly, and perhaps most importantly, where 13 the insurance carrier is linked to the plaintiff in the case 14 -- as in this instance, the plaintiff's attorney -- it's 15 much more difficult to police the effect or impact of a con-16 flict of interest on the myriad of tactical and strategic 17 choices that an attorney like Mr. Risjord is going to make, 18 or will have to make, in the course of the case.

19 And, of course, there's the danger that -- let's 20 assume that Firestone ultimately attains reversal, there's 21 still the danger that since a retrial doesn't start with a 22 really clean slate, that in the interim the proceedings would 23 have been indelibly painted with acts or omissions of 24 Mr. Risjord prompted by his concern for Home.

25 And at this point I'd like to address a question I

1 think implicit in a question asked by Mr. Justice Blackmun
2 earlier, and that is the possibility of a suit by Firestone
3 against Home. The reason we don't feel that's an answer is, 4 first of all, that the conflicts question we're concerned with 5 in this instance is really separate from whether or not Home
6 is accountable to Firestone.

7 And secondly, we believe the most appropriate place 8 to determine the effectiveness of a consent approach which the 9 trial court adopted here is the very proceeding where those 10 consents are relied on -- and Firestone ought not to be rele-11 gated to the vagaries of whatever relief if any it might be 12 able to obtain against Home, given the problems of proving 13 damages, the impact of the action of Home on the outcome, and 14 so on. Now --

15 QUESTION: Is your claim abuse of discretion?

16 MR. GROSSMAN: We don't believe any discretion was 17 involved, Mr. Justice Marshall, because the trial court
18 acknowledged that the conflict existed. The facts were essen-
19 tially undisputed. The trial court erred, or went off base, 20 so to speak, because it didn't render appropriate redress for 21 the conflict, and we think in that context --

22 QUESTION: That it wasn't discretionary?

23 MR. GROSSMAN: We don't believe that there was any 24 appropriate place for the trial court to exercise discretion
25 in that situation. We don't believe that it was called upon

1 to exercise discretion in that context, just as we don't be-2 lieve that this was a case where the trial court has decided 3 any disputed fact issue which might be entitled to deference.
4 It's simply a case where the trial court misperceived the con-
5 sequences of its own findings of fact.

6 Now, the Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit next 7 considered the matter. And as I mentioned, Firestone's posi-8 tion was that the trial court's consent approach was flawed be-9 cause they looked to the wrong party's consent, and consent 10 wasn't viable.

11 The Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit, without 12 hearing argument, only addressed the merits in one sentence
13 in which they stated, in substance, the trial court's action
14 was an abuse of discretion and as I just mentioned, I don't 15 think that really even addressed the problem.

16 Basically, what that court addressed was the ques-
17 tion of appealability and held in effect that in that circuit
18 appeals from orders denying disqualification would no longer 19 lie.

20 I should mention one other fact. At the time of the 21 motion the record reflects that Mr. Risjord was representing 22 Home in one case, the Cannova case. Subsequently, he withdrew 23 from that case and ultimately the case has been disposed of.
24 Well, we submit that it doesn't really obviate the conflict, 25 because irrespective of whether Mr. Risjord or his firm are

1 representing Home at a given instant, Mr. Risjord would be 2 aware that his firm's potential future business with a long-
3 standing client, Home, could be affected by whether his actions
4 in the personal injury suits against Firestone tend to further 5 or defeat Home's efforts to avoid coverage.

6 Now, turning first to a question raised at the out-7 set, the threshold question of appealability, we contend that 8 not only are the Cohen criteria satisfied but that the treat-9 ment of appeals of orders denying disqualification as appeal-
10 able would be consistent with sound judicial administration.

11 Inasmuch as it's generally conceded that the Cohen
12 criteria of finality and separability are present, the key 13 question is whether the Cohen test of urgency is met. In other 14 words, do we have a situation in which the appeal can wait 15 until the judgment on the merits of the case or not?

16 We submit we can't wait, because in the interim the 17 parties and the public interest will have suffered irreparable 18 injury.

19 QUESTION: You would come out differently, then, on 20 the appealability of an order disqualifying a lawyer, because 21 there would be no finality under Cohen?

22 MR. GROSSMAN: It is correct that I believe a 23 stronger case can be made for appealability of orders denying 24 disqualification than of orders granting, but I think I would 25 frankly acknowledge that even as to orders granting

1 disqualification, the general view that their appealability is 2 not one that I would be prone to take issue with, although I 3 think we have a stronger case under Cohen in the case of 4 orders denying disqualification.

5 QUESTION: But you lack the finality element in 6 Cohen, in an order granting disqualification, don't you?

7 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, I believe that would be a valid
8 concern. I believe that would be a valid concern which isn't pre-9 sent here and as a matter of fact I believe that concern points 10 up the fact that in our view the courts which have held that 11 appeal is to be permitted where disqualification is granted, 12 not where it is denied, really are proceeding in a sense 13 topsy-turvy, because the stronger case can be made when the 14 denial occurs, rather than where the grant occurs.

15 Now, again addressing the urgency factor, the reason 16 we believe this injury occurs is essentially this, and why we 17 believe appealability should be permitted. If we wait until 18 the final judgment on the merits, there is the danger -- and 19 obviously no one can say; it is a matter of prediction, because 20 no one can say with certainty just what's going to happen in 21 any case -- but there is a real danger that the case will become 22 indelibly stamped or shaped by the fruits of a breach of confi-
23 dence or by acts or omissions prompted by divided loyalty, 24 as in the present case. And there's no way that an appeal for 25 the final judgment on the merits could really remedy that.

1 And in terms of the public interest -- and we think 2 that it is appropriate to address that question, irrespective
3 of Firestone's personal concerns here -- the very fact that a 4 case proceeds in the face, with the taint of a conflict, in our 5 view would tend to undermine the public policy which proscribes
6 conflicts of interest and would adversely color the public's 7 perception of the administration of justice.

8 QUESTION: Well, do you think someone who might be 9 sitting in a courtroom at this hearing, in the spectator's 10 part, could get up and move for disqualification of one of the 11 attorneys on the grounds that it was contrary to the public
12 interest?

13 MR. GROSSMAN: While there is authority and there are 14 cases suggesting that any attorney, at least -- leaving aside 15 the question of a lay person -- any attorney who in a case, who 16 was aware of a conflict of interest, because of the public 17 policy considerations involved, does have a duty to call that 18 to the court's attention. I believe that view is sound if that 19 is the question.

20 QUESTION: No, that wasn't the question. The ques-21 tion was whether a lay person who presumably has as much
22 interest in the public interest being enforced as attorneys do 23 could get up and move for disqualification of one of the 24 attorneys to the case being heard on the grounds of conflict of 25 interest?

1 MR. GROSSMAN: I would submit, Mr. Justice, that if 2 in fact that did occur it would be appropriate. However, I
3 would state that in this instance, fortunately, we needn't 4 address that situation because we feel that Firestone does have 5 a very strong personal interest which entitles it to raise it,
6 the question, for the reasons I have indicated. In other 7 words, we feel there is a degree of private prejudice, so the 8 Court in this case doesn't have to address the question whether 9 a public interest concern alone would be sufficient. I believe 10 it ought to be; I don't believe it's necessary to rest the de-11 cision here on that ground.

12 Now, the suggestion has been made that we don't have 13 to allow appeal under the Cohen Doctrine here because the par-
14 ties can secure relief under alternative means. One suggested 15 is writ proceedings; another, permissive appeals under 16 1292(b) of the Judicial Code.

17 We submit, however, that if writs are kept within 18 the limits that this Court has prescribed, and they're very narrow 19 limits, they don't afford a proper means of redress in this 20 instance. And on the other hand, we believe it would be un-21 wise for the Court to disregard the limits on writs and allow 22 them to be used in effect as substitute appeals because that 23 would set the lower courts adrift without the benefit of the 24 Cohen guidelines.

25 And as for permissive appeals, the very criteria the

1 statute lays down for such appeals would tend to preclude their 2 use in many instances involving orders denying disqualifica-
3 tion. For example, the very fact that those orders are collat-4 eral might be viewed as an indication that the disposition of 5 the order -- or appeal from the order, I should say, would not 6 necessarily further the ultimate disposition of litigation, as 7 required under 1292(b).

8 And finally, on this question of appealability, I
9 would submit that this isn't a situation where deferring appeal 10 until final judgment is really helpful because, no matter what 11 stage of the proceedings we look at the matter, there's just 12 no way to tell what the impact of the conflict would have been.
13 So we don't gain any benefit by waiting.

14 Now, if this is the case, the question is, why, if it 15 would seem appropriate to nip a proceeding in the bud where 16 it's tainted, have some of the courts failed to allow appeals?
17 I think the answer rests on two misconceptions. The first, 18 that this sort of appeal would deluge the appellate courts.
19 The experience of the 2nd Circuit, which we cited, supposedly 20 the worst case, does not bear out -- 11 published opinions in 21 six years certainly doesn't account for the deluge. And it's 22 worth noting that in a significant percentage of those cases 23 the court below was reversed. And neither do we believe that 24 there's any necessity for delaying the proceedings based on 25 the appeal of a question. As a matter of fact, we haven't

1 delayed the proceedings here --

2 QUESTION: Mr. Grossman, the question really isn't 3 whether there's a necessity for delaying, as I understand it.
4 This is a 1291 issue, isn't it?

5 MR. GROSSMAN: Yes.

6 QUESTION: If it is a final order within the meaning
7 of 1291, I suppose there's a duty to appeal within 30 days, 8 isn't there, if it's a final order?

9 MR. GROSSMAN: That would be correct. And as a 10 matter of fact, we would submit that for that same reason 11 there's no need to look to alternative remedies because if the 12 appeal lies under 1291, then this Court's Cohen Doctrine would 13 indicate that's as far as we have to go. We don't have to look 14 any further for alternative remedy.

15 QUESTION: That's right. If you want to preserve the 16 objection, you've got to appeal within -- every time your 17 motion is denied.

18 MR. GROSSMAN: That is correct. And Abney, I be-19 lieve, this Court's decision in Abney teaches that if there is 20 any abuse the court can control it by appropriate rules and 21 policies, expedite appeals, and to --

22 QUESTION: Mr. Grossman, is there law on the question 23 whether a motion to disqualify a judge that is denied is 24 appealable immediately?

25 MR. GROSSMAN: There is relatively little on that,

1 and the little that exists would indicate that it's not appeal-
2 able. I think the problem in that instance that distinguishes it from 3 the situation we're dealing with here, is that where a judge 4 is involved, the only real impact is on the disposition of the 5 case on the merits. The argument is that the case will be 6 wrongly decided and that of course doesn't give rise to the 7 question of separability or the collateral nature of the 8 matter

9 QUESTION: Do you think it's more important to get 10 the lawyer out than the judge if there's a conflict of interest 11 or something like that?

12 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, the problem with the attorney's 13 disqualification is it raises a question of breach of confi-14 dence and of breach of --

15 QUESTION: So do -- a motion to disqualify a judge 16 can raise the same kind of thing?

17 MR. GROSSMAN: No, but where the motion is to dis-18 qualify a judge, the ruling, or the matter really goes to the 19 ultimate disposition of the case. The effect of it isn't that 20 there be an intervening -- no, I would submit, Your Honor, that 21 in the case of a judge disqualification, normally the challenge
22 is not that during the interim he's going to be breaching 23 loyalty or breaching confidence, using clients' secrets.
24 Rather, that he is prejudiced in a way that will impair a deci-25 sion on the merits, and because of that we submit that

1 that type of a case doesn't lend itself to disposition under 2 Cohen because it's tied to the merits. It doesn't present the 3 separability factor.

4 QUESTION: Well, but your argument is that this 5 lawyer is going to pursue an intentional tort theory so that 6 he recovers on a theory where there's no coverage. That af-
7 fects the whole prosecution of the merits of the case, doesn't 8 it?

9 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, not in the sense that Cohen 10 uses the term, because we're not addressing a question which 11 goes to the claim itself. It is true, I would concede --

12 QUESTION: Well, sure you are. Whether it's an 13 intentional or a negligent theory goes to the claim itself.

14 MR. GROSSMAN: But the mere fact that a ruling may 15 affect the manner in which the case is handled in our view 16 doesn't dissipate the separability because, for example, in 17 Stack v. Boyle, when we speak of excessive bail, which this 18 Court held was appealable under Cohen. It's true that if the 19 Court posts, or requires excessive bail, the client may not be 20 able to consult with his attorney, and that may impair the 21 attorney's prosecution of the case. But we would submit that 22 is much too tangential to defeat separability under the Cohen
23 Doctrine in this instance.

24 QUESTION: Mr. Grossman, isn't it true that where an 25 intervenor files to intervene and it's denied, he can appeal,

1 but if it's granted, the other side cannot appeal? Isn't that 2 true?

3 MR. GROSSMAN: That is correct, because --

4 QUESTION: Well, isn't that a lot like this?

5 MR. GROSSMAN: That is correct, Mr. Justice Marshall.
6 As a matter of fact, I think that also addresses the question
7 raised by Mr. Justice Rehnquist, and would be an argument
8 for treating, if the Court were to so conclude, for treating 9 denials of disqualification as appealable even if grants were 10 not so treated.

11 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Mr. Gibson.

12 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOHN R. GIBSON, ESQ.,

13 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

14 MR. GIBSON: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please the 15 Court:

16 In this case Firestone, that has never been a client
17 of Risjord's, seeks his disqualification. This case involves 18 no question of breach of confidential information. That admis-
19 sion is made abundantly clear in the reply brief filed by 20 Firestone in this case. The only question relating to conflict 21 is that -- and again, it is speculating what might be -- that 22 Risjord in representing these plaintiffs could guide or 23 fashion the case in such a way that would be harmful to Fire-
24 stone and helpful to Home.

25 Now, this assumption is based on this factual

1 situation, and it is one in which the complete story has not 2 yet come out. Firestone is saying that the Risjord theory is 3 based on what he continuously refers to in his brief as a 4 highly unusual intentional tort theory, and that Home has 5 denied coverage for this theory. Now, what is not said is 6 that Risjord has also pleaded counts in negligence and counts
7 in defective products under Restatement 402(a), alternative
8 counts. He has also pleaded, as was brought out a minute ago, 9 these same theories against other defendants, Goodyear, Budd,
10 Kelsey-Hayes, and we simply don't know who has their coverage.
11 There has certainly been no record made in this case that 12 Home has anything to do with those parties.

13 Now, the fallacy; not only has there been this 14 lack of disclosure of this information, but the fallacy that 15 Mr. Grossman, that Firestone must face, is this -- and I 16 think the district judge knew when he heard the motion for 17 disqualification, the common practice in products cases, in 18 most litigation, is that the plaintiff's attorney is going to 19 submit all of the evidence he has, he's going to submit his 20 cases in the alternative, and the jury then or the judge will 21 determine what the basis of liability is going to be.

22 So it is an alternative submission which is undoubt-
23 edly what we're going to have in this case, not simply a 24 guiding and fashioning and a pursuing of one theory and an 25 abandoning of the other theories. That simply isn't the 1 practicality of what is going to happen.

2 Now, the real conflict, as has been observed, is 3 between Firestone and its insurer, Home. And there is a law-
4 suit that has been filed that raises that particular question.

5 QUESTION: We never get to any of this if we find 6 that the order refusing to disqualify was not appealable, do 7 we?

8 MR. GIBSON: I'm sorry, I didn't get the first part 9 of your question?

10 QUESTION: We never get to this conflict situation
11 if we were to conclude that the order refusing to disqualify
12 Risjord was not appealable?

13 MR. GIBSON: That is correct, Your Honor. If this 14 Court decides this case is not appealable, in the recent case
15 of Coopers & Lybrand, which was decided in 1978, the Court
16 found that the Death Knell Doctrine didn't apply, the Cohen 17 Doctrine didn't apply, there was no appeal, and you don't get 18 to this whole question of conflict and consent, which is tied 19 in with the facts of the case. It simply isn't necessary to 20 go that far.

21 Some of the courts of appeals have gone the next 22 step and decided that question. Some of them haven't. But 23 certainly there is no need to do this. But all of these facts 24 were before the district judge, when he made his order in this 25 case, and following that he fashioned the remedy of either

1 withdrawal from representation of one or the other of the 2 clients, or obtaining consents.

3 Risjord first obtained those consents from the 4 plaintiffs and from Home and then, following that, Risjord was 5 asked to withdraw by Home, and he did withdraw, and following
6 that, that case, that one case was the one case that Risjord 7 had represented Home in for about a 10-year period. We have 8 the deeply rooted argument, we have the Martindale-Hubbell
9 listing. There is no question that they'd been listed as a 10 client in Martindale-Hubbell. But the facts are that Risjord
11 had represented Home in that one fire case, and they were sim-
12 ply one of six insurers, and Home had 10 percent of the risk.
13 And the case was referred to him by an independent adjuster.
14 That's not the real nature of --

15 QUESTION: Mr. Gibson, Home is not only listed in 16 Martindale, it's listed first.

17 MR. GIBSON: That's correct, Your Honor. And 18 Mr. Risjord in his testimony, in his deposition that he gave, 19 said that he had tried to get a change made, he had suggested 20 to them repeatedly that they alphabetize it, and he finally 21 just gave up on it. They just wouldn't do it. They were 22 certain that --

23 QUESTION: Who wouldn't do it? Martindale?

24 MR. GIBSON: Martindale just simply would not alpha-25 betize it for him, and he simply gave up after repeated

1 requests.

2 QUESTION: You mean Martindale would not adhere to 3 his request for a change in his listing of representative 4 clients?

5 MR. GIBSON: That is his testimony, that he could not 6 get them to alphabetize it. And that's in the record in the 7 case. But the question -- and I might say, of course, that 8 the district court did certify this case under 1292(b), but 9 Firestone elected not to pursue that method of appeal, so that 10 they appealed under 1291.

11 QUESTION: Do you know why they made that choice?

12 MR. GIBSON: I'm sorry?

13 QUESTION: Do you know why they made that choice?

14 MR. GIBSON: I cannot say, Your Honor. I don't know
15 whether it was the passage of time or -- I just don't know.
16 But they elected -- now, in the Coopers & Lybrand case, 17 Mr. Justice Stevens's opinion in 1978, there is no attempt to seek 18 the 1292 certification. But here it was given by the court and 19 Firestone elected not to do so.

20 But the real underlying question on the issue of 21 appealability in this case, I would suggest to the Court, is 22 simply this, the Cohen Doctrine applies to a small class of 23 cases. It is an exception to the rules of final decision and 24 appealability, and the question before this Court, I suggest, 25 is should this limitation, this exception, this small class of

1 cases be expanded to include a type of case that the courts of 2 appeals have found is disguised harassment, an abused proce-
3 dure, that which is used as a tactical and a strategic weapon.

4 Now, when we filed our brief in this case, I think 5 on page 21 we cataloged some five circuits that had so charac-
6 terized appeals in disqualification cases.

7 QUESTION: Well, don't all lawyers use tactical and 8 strategic weapons in trying to beat their opponents?

9 MR. GIBSON: They certainly do, but the courts have 10 particularly pointed out that this is a particular subject of 11 abuse, and the five circuits have -- in the last month two 12 more circuits have joined the procession. The 3rd Circuit in 13 the P. Stone case which we have in our supplemental brief 14 joined in this observation. And I just learned yesterday of 15 another decision from the 1st Circuit. And if I may, 16 Mr. Chief Justice, I would provide a citation of this case to 17 the Court by letter. But the 1st Circuit on the 31st of 18 October of this year, In re: Continental Investment Corpora-
19 tion, Case No. 80-1362, also made a similar observation, 20 and also determined that cases of this nature, where there was 21 a denial of a motion to disqualify, were not appealable.

22 There has been a consistent movement since about 23 1976 away from the rule of appealability. When this case came 24 to this Court on petition for certiorari, Firestone referred 25 to the Silver Chrysler case from the 2nd Circuit as the leading

1 case for the rule that disqualification denials were appeal-
2 able. In May of this year that decision was overruled by 3 the Armstrong case in the 2nd Circuit, and that joined the 4 procession of Community Broadcasting from the District of 5 Columbia, Melamed from the 6th Circuit, this case below, and 6 now, October 31, the decision of the 1st Circuit in the 7 Continental Investing in which they also joined in the ruling 8 that these cases are not appealable.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Gibson, is Goodyear Tire & Rubber
10 Company tangentially involved in this case?

11 MR. GIBSON: They are named as additional defendants
12 in a number of the cases where that's applicable. There is a 13 particular case against Goodyear only that's part of this 14 record, and identical claims are served against them.

15 QUESTION: Who is their insurance carrier?

16 MR. GIBSON: The record is silent on that subject.
17 I would certainly think, if Home had been their carrier, we 18 would have known about it, but the record is simply silent as 19 to who their -- we know that Home is Firestone's carrier, but 20 the record is silent on the Goodyear carrier, and I simply have 21 to assume that had Home had some relation to any of the other 22 defendants, it would have been made part of the record in this 23 case.

24 QUESTION: And you don't know, personally?

25 MR. GIBSON: I do not know, sir.

1 QUESTION: Was there a motion made in any of the 2 Goodyear cases to disqualify Mr. Risjord?

3 MR. GIBSON: This is the only motion to disqualify.

4 QUESTION: So then Goodyear has no interest in the 5 outcome of this case?

6 MR. GIBSON: Firestone who is arguing here that what's 7 good for Firestone is good for the public, is the only person
8 making the complaint in this disqualification matter.

9 There are two recent decisions of this Court, 1978
10 decisions, the Coopers & Lybrand case that I referred to; and 11 U.S. v. MacDonald, Mr. Justice Blackmun's opinion, in which 12 the Cohen Doctrine was rejected. Coopers & Lybrand involved
13 denial of a class certification motion, MacDonald involved a 14 denial of a motion to dismiss on a speedy trial basis.

15 And one of the grounds asserted in both of those 16 cases was that those particular types of case were effectively
17 reviewable on appeal after the conclusion of the case. And I 18 would suggest in this case, where we are dealing with what 19 could be and what might be the possibility that the case would 20 be guided or fashioned in a way favorable to Home and unfavor-
21 able to Firestone, that it can only be effectively reviewable 22 after trial, because we don't know what's going to happen in 23 the trial of this case. First, the court might rule that the 24 intentional tort theory isn't submissible and isn't going 25 to the jury at all. The court might rule that all theories

1 go, in which case we don't have the situation that Firestone
2 complains of in which they're simply saying that it's inten-3 tional tort only and there's no coverage, and therefore the 4 the load is all on Firestone and goes off of Home. We simply 5 aren't going to know. So the case is really only effectively 6 reviewable at the end of the case.

7 And these courts of appeals decisions that have led 8 the procession away from appealability have based their rea-
9 soning on the fact that these cases do involve factual situa-10 tions and they are effectively reviewable after trial. And 11 that's Community Broadcasting, Melamed, Armstrong, and the new 12 Continental Investment case that's just come out.

13 QUESTION: Is the trend the same way with respect to 14 orders granting disqualification?

15 MR. GIBSON: Several of the cases, Community Broad-16 casting, Melamed, I think the 8th Circuit in this case, and 17 Armstrong, all held that because the orders granting disquali-
18 fication parted a client from the lawyer, and because the order 19 granting really certified that there was merit, that there was 20 a reason for treating them differently. Now, Armstrong recog-21 nized that maybe this was an inconsistent position, and the -- 22 I think Chief Judge Feinberg in his majority opinion simply 23 accepted the fact that it might be logically inconsistent, but 24 the practicality of it made this a desirable course.

25 I think the 1st Circuit in this recent opinion simply

1 determined that it would not reach that question. But I think 2 there is, of course --

3 QUESTION: So the answer to my question is, yes?
4 The trend generally is to treat them both -- is not -- no,
5 it's no? To treat them differently?

6 MR. GIBSON: Yes. The trend is to treat them dif-
7 ferently. That's correct, Your Honor; that's correct.

8 Armstrong, particularly, pointed out that in cases 9 of this kind the trial court can always reconsider the motion, 10 that protective orders can be issued, and that, of course,
11 reversal and a new trial on the appellate level are sufficient 12 remedies to take care of the particular problem involved in 13 this kind of case.

14 Now, the recusal cases that were the subject a minute
15 ago are one specific incident where courts have refused appeal-16 ability -- and I would say that there is far more problem from 17 the public perception of justice so far as recusal motions of 18 the trial judge than is involved in the attorney situation.
19 Certainly, if they're even, the recusal cases are strong evi-
20 dence that there should be no appeal in this type of case.

21 Mr. Justice Stevens in Coopers & Lybrand observed 22 that rulings on venue, summary judgment, and discovery, really 23 were not different from determinations of class action issues 24 that were involved in that case and certainly they are not 25 different from disqualification motions.

1 There are other issues. Now, the 1st Circuit, the 2 new 1st Circuit decision, Armstrong, both pointed to the im-
3 portant legal issue as an aspect of the Cohen Doctrine.
4 Armstrong recognized that there was a split in this reasoning.
5 Cohen did say that it was the right to security for cost that 6 was the issue in that case that merited appealability, and if 7 it had been a discretionary ruling, this would not have been 8 an appealable order.

9 Again, Armstrong goes back and forth on whether this 10 is an issue. The 1st Circuit new decision does say that this 11 is an issue. In the Coopers & Lybrand decision, Mr. Justice
12 Stevens was particularly writing about the Death Knell Doc-13 trine. But he said there that to allow appeals from cases that 14 turned on the facts throws the appellate court into the trial
15 business, and obliterates the distinction between the function 16 of the trial court and the function of the appellate court as 17 has been set out in the statutory scheme.

18 One other reason for the importance of the issue 19 being a factor in this case is that 1292(b), the discretionary 20 appeal statute, did not exist when Cohen was decided. It now
21 does exist. And in those cases where there is the possibility 22 of irreparable harm, 1292 is available and 1651 mandamus is 23 also available.

24 QUESTION: As an element necessary for certification,
25 you would have to say that it is a probably dispositive issue

1 in the case, don't you? case don't you?

2 MR. GIBSON: That's correct, Your Honor.

3 QUESTION: How could you ever say that the disquali-4 fication of a lawyer was a probably dispositive issue in the 5 case?

6 MR. GIBSON: Well, not -- I think under 1292(b)
7 a legal question has to be shown, but I think all of these 8 circuits have discussed the fact that these discretionary pro-
9 cedures will be available where there is irreparable damage 10 posed.

11 QUESTION: Well, how have they answered the question
12 that I just put to you?

13 MR. GIBSON: Your Honor, I don't think they do.
14 I don't think they do. To my knowledge they've not.

15 Two other issues where Cohen is not met in cases of 16 this kind: separability of issues, the collateral doctrine, -- 17 that's the very wording, that's the very description of it -- 18 simply doesn't apply in this case, and the Solicitor General's 19 brief that has been filed deals with this question because the 20 entire theory of Firestone is that the trial of the case could 21 be fashioned, or could be guided, in a way that is going to 22 be harmful to Firestone and helpful to Home. And we're not 23 going to know, really, until after the case has been tried.
24 So their very argument in this case is tied up with how the 25 case is going to be tried. Risjord --

1 QUESTION: Was there any discussion in the trial 2 court when this question came up as to whether the judge ought 3 to entertain this suggestion on behalf of Firestone?

4 MR. GIBSON: The suggestion on behalf of Firestone
5 that it consent? Your Honor, I think the record on that --

6 QUESTION: No, as to whether or not this objection
7 ought to be heard at all? What interest did the objector have 8 in it? Did the judge feel that there was really a case 9 or controversy?

10 MR. GIBSON: This is the point that we raise so far
11 as the merits of this case are concerned --

12 QUESTION: I know you do.

13 MR. GIBSON: -- that Firestone was never a client of 14 Risjord.

15 QUESTION: Yes.

16 MR. GIBSON: And that the disqualification motion 17 should only have been available to a client.

18 QUESTION: I understand; that's your position now.
19 But was that position expressed in the trial court?

20 MR. GIBSON: I don't think there was discussion of 21 it at the time the trial court considered this. The record 22 does not so inform.

23 QUESTION: The trial judge must have thought it was 24 a suggestion that deserved ruling on?

25 MR. GIBSON: I think we'll know --

1 QUESTION: I'd like to know. I wondered, if it were 2 raised there --

3 MR. GIBSON: I think we simply can't know. The 4 trial judge found -- of course --

5 QUESTION: I suppose the transcript would show what 6 the discussion was?

7 MR. GIBSON: That's been -- that's in the record, and 8 I think there's no discussion of that at all. I think the 9 trial judge found that there were many speculative areas
10 raised in the motions, and he said, I'm going to disregard all 11 of those. And he got down to this as the nub of it, and he 12 said, any possibility of adverse effect on independent repre-
13 sentation can be dispelled by filing the consents or by with-14 drawal from the one.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Gibson, do you happen to know, has 16 the trial been held in abeyance pending the outcome of this 17 appeal?

18 MR. GIBSON: The trial has not been held in abeyance, 19 and I understand discovery has proceeded on. In this particu-
20 lar case it has not resulted in the delay that many of the courts 21 of appeals say attend the filing of such a motion. But --

22 QUESTION: Some trial courts view an appeal under 23 1291 as requiring that the trial proceedings stop, whereas an 24 appeal under 1292(b) permits the trial proceedings to go on.
25 But they went on here in either event.

1 MR. GIBSON: In this case discovery activities have 2 proceeded on and I think they are still a ways away from the 3 trial of the first case.

4 But, of course, in this case Risjord has been before 5 the court of appeals, Firestone has been before the court of 6 appeals, and the discretionary finding of the trial court
7 has been passed upon by the court of appeals, and Firestone 8 has had the very appeal and the very review that it says the 9 appealability question would entitle it to. And we have cited 10 cases in our brief that this Court frequently has said, where 11 two courts, where a trial court and the court of appeals have 12 passed on the factual considerations, this Court will not open 13 them up and look into those issues.

14 QUESTION: Well, this is a troublesome point for me
15 because in both the recent 2nd Circuit case here and the 8th 16 Circuit here they first hold the order as nonappealable, and 17 then they go ahead and decide it.

18 MR. GIBSON: I think as a matter of procedure in 19 those circuits, these orders had been appealable and they were 20 ruling that from this point on they would not be appealable, 21 so that the lawyers would know what the rule is going to be,
22 and they went ahead to pass on the merits, because the change
23 was made in these cases.

24 Now, the 1st Circuit didn't do that. But the 2nd 25 did, the 6th did, the 8th did.

1 QUESTION: Well, Judge Lay certainly spelled it out 2 specifically, that it was prospective and not applicable to 3 this case.

4 MR. GIBSON: That is correct, Your Honor. That is 5 correct, Your Honor.

6 QUESTION: That he had to, in order to rule.

7 MR. GIBSON: That is correct, Your Honor.

8 And that's -- I think it was to give the day in 9 court, to go the extra mile, that led the 8th Circuit as well
10 as the 2nd and the 6th to take this procedure, because then 11 the new procedure was spelled out.

12 But the consents were obtained and were filed. The 13 withdrawal took place and really, DR-5.105. And here we are 14 today in the highest court of the land that is a court of law,
15 and I suggest there are many reasons why disciplinary action
16 should be filed with the state court disciplinary mechanism.
17 We have one in Missouri that is appointed by the Missouri
18 Supreme Court. And I suggest that's an appropriate place
19 for advancing the public interest. In this case I think there 20 is the aspect to the case of attempting to rid oneself of a 21 very vigorous advocate, a lawyer that has probed deeply, that 22 is -- I think publicity in a companion Goodyear case was one of 23 the grounds in this motion that went its way. They have 24 probed into the Watergate documents deeply to find a connection 25 with the slush fund theory, and where they're going with that

1 I don't know, but we have a vigorous advocate, and as these 2 courts in the appealability issues rule, the tactical, strate-
3 gic use of this, the disguised harassment, the artifice of 4 what I think Armstrong refers to as "the artful movement"
5 is much with the case.

6 QUESTION: Of course, Mr. Risjord was a member of 7 the Missouri Bar.

8 MR. GIBSON: Yes.

9 QUESTION: If he were not, suppose he were a visit-
10 ing lawyer, what you have just said would be rather inapplica-11 ble, wouldn't it?

12 MR. GIBSON: Well, of course, I think, under the 13 new rules, the new Uniform Rules of Attorney Conduct, the 14 district court would have the means at its disposal to take 15 care of the problem. And of course I think under those proce-16 dures they would refer to the State Bar organization where 17 that exists.

18 QUESTION: Who is the district judge here? Judge
19 Collinson?

20 MR. GIBSON: Judge Collinson.

21 In one of the cases, the relief that is requested by 22 Firestone in this case in the trial court simply was that 23 Risjord be disqualified in any case in which Home had coverage 24 or in which confidential information had passed from -- in 25 any way. Now, the admission is clear that there was no passage

1 of confidential information, because Risjord's only represen-
2 tation of Home was in the totally unrelated fire case. And the 3 other basis for the motion was not satisfied because Home did
4 not provide coverage in the Hale case. And this simply shows 5 the overbroad reach of the motion that is filed in this case.

6 But the whole issue on merits, the whole issue on 7 who has the right to consent -- and I might say that this 8 question of consent is discussed in the 4th Circuit opinion in 9 the Aetna Casualty case that's referred to in the Solicitor
10 General's brief. And they point very clearly to the fact that 11 it is the client that is required to give the consent. And in 12 that case, a foreigner to this attorney-client relationship 13 is attempting to assert this theory. And the 4th Circuit 14 held that it is the right of a client that exists to give the 15 consent, and that's exactly what was done in this case. Con-16 sents were obtained from Home, they were obtained from the 17 personal injury claimants.

18 And I might say, in discussing the question of the 19 discretion of the trial court, one other fact that has not come 20 before this Court, there is much assertion in the argument of 21 Firestone that Risjord obtained consents from the unsophisti-
22 cated plaintiffs. And this Court was not told in the briefs
23 that three of those unsophisticated plaintiffs had referring 24 counsel and that those referring counsel had discussed the 25 consents with their clients, and had obtained the consents from

1 the clients and the referring counsel had also given their 2 consent.

3 But it is omissions of fact of this kind, and of 4 course there are assertions that Home and Risjord are acting 5 in tandem. There is no evidence of that at all. And the 6 district judge said, there are many speculative matters that 7 he is not going to get to, but here we have the question of 8 purely a factual determination. We have the trial court
9 exercising discretion, finding the facts, reaching conclusions 10 from the facts, fashioning a remedy of either withdrawal from 11 the representation of one or filing the consents.

12 Risjord did both of those things. There simply is 13 no issue in this case that requires disqualification, and the 14 entire issue really can turn on the fact that this is a case
15 that should not be appealable, and that ends the entire dis-16 cussion.

17 I ask this Court to affirm the ruling of the district
18 court.

19 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
20 the case is submitted.

21 (Whereupon, at 1:58 o'clock p.m., the case in the 22 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
