P R O C E E D I N G S

1 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We'll hear arguments
2 next in Federated Department Stores v. Moitie. Mr. Chapman,
3 I think you may proceed whenever you are ready.

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JEROME I. CHAPMAN, ESQ.,

5 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

6 MR. CHAPMAN: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please
7 the Court:

8 The Petitioners are here to ask the Court to 9 reverse a decision of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, 10 which we believe is not only contrary to established prin-11 ciples but creates a very serious practical impediment on 12 the ability of District Courts to coordinate and control 13 multi-party complex litigations. It is our submission that 14 the decision of the Ninth Circuit cut back on the normal 15 rule of finality of judgments in the context of multiple-16 party, multiple action litigation which is exactly the 17 opposite of what should have been done. That is, in these 18 classes of cases there is more rather than less need for 19 adherence to res judicata and the rule of finality.

20 We would like to take a few moments to describe 21 briefly the background of this case and how it comes to 22 this Court. And then to present what we consider the princi-
23 pal reasons why we believe that the Ninth Circuit decision is 24 contrary to established principles of res judicata and 25 out of step with the salutary trends in improving the

1 abilities of the District Court to control and coordinate 2 complex cases.

3 The present case, Your Honor, started the same 4 way as have hundreds of class action cases in the federal 5 court. It's a class action for treble damages and attorneys 6 fees and other relief, following on the heels of a federal 7 government action. In April of 1976, the federal government 8 obtained a misdemeanor indictment against Petitioners under 9 Section 1 of the Sherman Act, charging that the Petitioners
10 had agreed on the prices of women's clothings in their stores
11 in Northern California. Shortly thereafter, a multiplicity 12 of private class actions were filed; there were seven in all, 13 two of those were filed by the same counsel. One of the 14 actions, which was entitled Moitie v. Federated and Saks 15 has been voluntarily dismissed by the Plaintiffs, and that 16 action is not before this Court.

17 The other action is the Brown case, which is 18 the only case that is before the Court this morning. The 19 complaint in the Brown case, as I say, was largely patterned 20 on the government's pleadings. It alleged that the Peti-
21 tioners had agreed to charge certain prices in their stores
22 on women's clothing and that the Plaintiffs and the class
23 members that were purportedly represented had been injured
24 by being overcharged on those purchases. The one difference 25 was that unlike the government action and the other six

1 class actions, the Brown case alleged that the violations
2 took place in Southern California, rather than in Northern 3 California. Now, the cases proceeded in the District Court 4 before a -- they were coordinated before a single judge and 5 in July of 1976, the Petitioners moved to dismiss all seven 6 cases for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6).
7 There was extensive briefing on the motion, in fact, the 8 District Court set aside one entire day for oral argument.
9 And in January of 1977, the District Court dismissed all 10 seven cases.

11 There were several issues considered, but the 12 primary ground that was relied upon in the District Court's 13 dismissal was that the Plaintiffs and class members as 14 retail purchasers did not allege an injury to their business
15 or property which would entitle them to treble damage
16 recovery under the Clayton Act, Section 4.

17 The parties in five of the other cases appealed,
18 and we've referred to these for convenience in our brief, as 19 the Weinberg cases. The Weinberg cases all took an appeal
20 from the dismissal of their actions to the Ninth Circuit.
21 However, Brown deliberately chose to break away from the 22 other cases at this point, and did not appeal. When the 23 time for appeal had expired, the Respondent Brown filed a 24 new action in the municipal court in Palo Alto-Mountain View
25 judicial district, which was in all material respects

1 absolutely identical to the prior case. And we've referred 2 to these again, for convenience, the prior dismissed action
3 as Brown I; the second action, which is the action now
4 before this Court as Brown II.

5 As I say, Brown I and Brown II were essentially 6 identical, the same parties were involved, were alleged.
7 There were the same descriptions of trade and commerce,
8 exactly the same offenses charged, the same alleged effects 9 of the offenses were charged, the same time period was 10 covered, the period up to April, 1974. The same geographic 11 area was covered in both complaints. They were the exact
12 verbatim allegations of fraudulent concealment and verbatim
13 the same allegations of the alleged injury.

14 The only difference which we submit, and we 15 believe the -- both Courts below perceived as cosmetic
16 differences -- was that the word antitrust was not mentioned 17 in the Brown II complaint. Instead, the complaint was 18 framed in terms of four theories under California law:
19 fraud and deceit, unfair business practices, civil conspir-
20 acy and restitution. But there has never been any question 21 at any time in this case that the gravamen of the two 22 complaints, Brown I and Brown II, the basic thrust and 23 core of both complaints is absolutely identical. They charge 24 that the Petitioners agreed on their prices of women's 25 clothing prior to April, 1974, in Southern California and

1 that that agreement had the effect of causing the --

2 QUESTION: Did the Brown case start in the state
3 court?

4 MR. CHAPMAN: Pardon me?

5 QUESTION: Did the case start in the state court,
6 Brown?

7 MR. CHAPMAN: The Brown case did not start in the 8 state court, Mr. Justice White. The companion Moitie case
9 as had one of the other seven cases named Musser, had orig-
10 inally been filed in the state court --

11 QUESTION: And how were they removed?

12 MR. CHAPMAN: They were removed on the basis of 13 a federal question --

14 QUESTION: A federal question.

15 MR. CHAPMAN: -- and diversity of citizenship.
16 There is complete diversity in this case.

17 QUESTION: So even if there were only state claims 18 stated in those cases that started in the state court, 19 they could have been removed?

20 MR. CHAPMAN: Yes.

21 QUESTION: And now Brown has stated both federal 22 and state grounds?

23 MR. CHAPMAN: No, Your Honor. In Brown I, the 24 factual allegation of the transactions and offenses were 25 exactly identical to Brown II. But there was only one legal

1 theory mentioned in Brown I, and that was violation of 2 the Sherman Act.

3 QUESTION: Federal; yes. And then in Brown II, state?

4 MR. CHAPMAN: Brown II mentioned fraud and deceit, 5 unjust -- restitution, and --

6 QUESTION: Arising out of the same facts?

7 MR. CHAPMAN: Out of the same facts that were 8 stated in identical fashion; they were verbatim copies of 9 the -- Brown II were the verbatim copies --

10 QUESTION: Brown II was in the state court?

11 MR. CHAPMAN: Brown II was originally filed in 12 the state court --

13 QUESTION: And then removed?

14 MR. CHAPMAN: -- and then it was removed.

15 QUESTION: On the grounds of diversity?

16 MR. CHAPMAN: It was removed on grounds of diver-17 sity, of federal question, and then there was an additional 18 federal question -- ground -- that the -- the issue of the 19 scope and effect of the first judgment itself raised the 20 federal question.

21 QUESTION: Now why do you -- what's the basis for 22 your argument that the state grounds alleged in Brown II
23 are barred by res judicata? Because they weren't stated 24 when they were first filed in the federal court, is that it?

25 MR. CHAPMAN: It's the standard principle of res

1   judicata, and I should say, Your Honor, that the -- both
2   courts below held -- we submit, correctly -- that if Brown
3   had been the only case that followed on the government
4   indictment, had it stood alone, the standard principles
5   of res judicata would apply. And that can be stated and 6   has been stated in numerous cases in this Court, that a
7   final judgment -- it was a final judgment in Brown I -- 8   precludes the refiling of the same claim on matters that 9   were raised or could have been raised in the initial case.

10           QUESTION: Now, do you have a case that, right on, 11   that says if you file in the federal court and you state
12   only federal cause of action, and you lose, and then you
13   file in federal court a -- based on diversity, a state cause
14   of action based on the same facts, that res judicata bars 15   the second suit.

16           MR. CHAPMAN: Yes, Your Honor. There are specific 17   suits in the antitrust field which we have cited in our 18   reply brief. Most recently, the Fourth Circuit decision 19   in Nash County Board of Education, that was a case which 20   came up the opposite way. The initial case was filed in 21   state court, alleging only state law antitrust grounds. And 22   when that suit was concluded, another party actually, it
23   was the privy of the first party filed in the federal court --

24           QUESTION: What if Brown II had stayed in the state
25   courts and never been removed, and stated only a state cause

1 of action, could the state court have -- you would have 2 asserted res judicata there too?

3 MR. CHAPMAN: Yes, res judicata --

4 QUESTION: But you might have lost. And would the 5 state court be entitled to, not to try those claims and 6 reject the res judicata claim?

7 MR. CHAPMAN: Well, Your Honor, it is our under-8 standing, and we have never seen anything contrary to this 9 in any of the briefing or research in this case, that the 10 same standards as to res judicata which are applied in the 11 federal court are also applied in California. We believe 12 that the state court --

13 QUESTION: Well, what if California didn't?
14 And they went ahead and tried out their fraud claim? Now if 15 California would permit that to go ahead, shouldn't the 16 federal court permit it to go ahead if the case is removed, 17 on diversity grounds?

18 MR. CHAPMAN: The federal court had a special 19 interest in connection with Brown II in determining and 20 avoiding circumvention of its initial judgment in Brown I.
21 The federal court had already -- there had been active 22 engagement in litigation in the federal court; it had de-
23 voted time and attention to these matters. Indeed, as Mr.
24 Justice White pointed out, there were state claims that 25 were before the federal court at the same time that Brown I

1 was dismissed. And it has -- consideration of both federal 2 and state claims.

3           Once the federal courts enters a judgment, this 4 is really the heart of our case, Mr. Justice White, the 5 rule of res judicata comes into play. There are crucial 6 considerations in terms of avoiding vexatious and multiple 7 litigation, conserving judicial resources and promoting 8 respect for judgments, that come into play when that final 9 judgment is entered -- which was entered in Brown I. It is 10 certainly, and we considered it so, and the District Court
11 considered it so, very much in the interest of the District
12 Court to protect its own judgment and to determine the scope 13 of that judgment.

14           QUESTION: Do you think then that you can 15 get an injunction from the federal court if -- you should 16 have been able to enjoin the filing of Brown II in the state 17 court?

18           MR. CHAPMAN: Yes, Your Honor. We cite in our 19 reply brief the Fifth Circuit's decision in Woods Petroleum, 20 which was exactly that, where the Fifth Circuit held an 21 injunction by the district court against a state proceeding 22 based on an alleged state theory which was not but could 23 have been alleged as a pendent claim in a prior federal 24 case. And the Fifth Circuit, in Woods, adopted the same 25 rationale that I've just spoken of -- that once there's a

1 finale judgment in a federal court, the federal court does 2 have the right to protect that judgment.

3 QUESTION: Well Mr. Chapman, supposing that in 4 federal court you have 30 days to file your notice of 5 appeal to the Court of Appeals, and in the California sys-
6 tem you have 120 days to file your notice of appeal
7 from an adverse decision of the Superior Court; do you think 8 the principles of Angel v. Bullington and cases such as that 9 would require the federal court to adopt the 120-day principle 10 of California, rather than its own Federal Rules of Civil 11 Procedure?

12 MR. CHAPMAN: No, Your Honor, by no means. I think 13 that the procedural rules that govern the administration 14 and management of cases within the federal courts are 15 determined by federal law, and that the -- for example, the 16 30-day, or whatever period that's established in the Federal 17 Rules of Appellate Procedure -- by statute would cover 18 federal cases -- even though on substantive law matters, 19 where a case is in federal court on diversity jurisdiction
20 the federal court would be bound by state law.
21 But certainly not on these procedural matters.

22 They say that there's a -- the -- the timing and 23 manner in which the supposed state theories were raised in 24 Brown II, are very troublesome. They -- all of these theories 25 could have been, and there's no question about it, could have

1 been asserted at the same time that Brown I is filed, and 2 this is another basic thrust of the -- this doctrine against 3 splitting a cause of action in res judicata -- if you 4 bring a case you should bring forth all your theories at 5 one time. The complaint could have alleged state law
6 theories; in fact, the same counsel had filed a complaint
7 contemporaneously with Brown I, the Moitie case, which did 8 allege state law theories.

9 QUESTION: Well didn't Moitie, when it started 10 in the state courts state only a state law?

11 MR. CHAPMAN: Yes.

12 QUESTION: That's all it ever had in it?

13 MR. CHAPMAN: That is correct. And which, I'm 14 saying with respect to Brown I, Your Honor, that it is 15 difficult to see why Brown I --

16 QUESTION: Is the Moitie case here? Or not?

17 MR. CHAPMAN: No, Moitie has been voluntarily
18 dismissed. Let me say, Your Honor, that when the Defendants 19 argued for -- on the motion to dismiss before the district
20 court, and I am again talking about the first cases, Brown 21 I, Moitie I, the Weinberg seven cases -- we were faced with 22 some complaints that alleged Sherman Act violations, other 23 complaints that alleged Cartwright Act, California law
24 violations. And we argued that the determining rule, that 25 is, the standard for determining business or property, was

1 the same under federal law as under California law. So
2 those issues were presented to the district court at the time
3 that the district court dismissed Brown I and dismissed 4 Moitie I. And it disposed of all seven cases including the 5 case before this Court, in its entirety. The crucial differ-
6 ence was that in Brown, which is the only case before this 7 Court, no appeal was taken; instead, an attempt was made to 8 refile, with different theories, all of which could have 9 been brought before the district court, they could have been 10 in the original complaint but they were not. There could 11 have been an argument presented to the district court in 12 the context I've just mentioned that even if you hold that 13 under federal law retail purchasers cannot, do not meet the 14 business or property standard -- that these Plaintiffs 15 could go forward under state law, that could have been done.
16 There could have been a motion to amend the complaint; the 17 federal rules are very liberal.

18 QUESTION: Mr. Chapman, may I ask you a question?
19 Supposing Brown had simultaneously filed his state law
20 theories in the California court, and his federal theories
21 in the federal court. And as I understand it, the first 22 Brown I was simply the federal theory, is that right?

23 MR. CHAPMAN: That is correct.

24 QUESTION: And the federal case--they both pro-25 gressed with discovery and all the rest, and the federal

1 case had gone to judgment first. And you had prevailed,
2 either on the legal theory that the Plaintiffs weren't 3 -- didn't have standing, or that there was no federal vio-
4 lation of some kind, would you then have been entitled to 5 dismissal of the state case; that's your basic theory, isn't 6 it?

7 MR. CHAPMAN: Yes, that's correct. That was 8 exactly what happened in the Fifth Circuit Woods case, which 9 was an injunction action. There were -- the state case
10 that was involved there had been filed simultaneously 11 in fact, perhaps even prior -- but any event, it was 12 proceeding simultaneously with the federal case. The 13 federal case went to judgment first. And that's really the 14 key factor of the res judicata -- application of res judi-
15 cata, that once there's a judgment, it resolves the matter.
16 Unless the judgment is directly attacked on appeal, as the 17 Weinberg plaintiff did --

18 QUESTION: Well, when the Brown II complaint was 19 filed, you did not in the state court move to dismiss on 20 res judicata grounds, you removed?

21 MR. CHAPMAN: That is correct.

22 QUESTION: And then after you removed, you filed 23 a res judicata motion?

24 MR. SCHARMAN: That is correct. And the district
25 Court granted the motion, the matter then went to the Court

1 of Appeals. While Brown II was pending--after the dismissal
2 of Brown II, the Plaintiff did appeal from that judgment --

3 QUESTION: Well Mr. Chapman, suppose in Justice
4 Steven's example, the two cases being filed simultaneously
5 and the federal case finishing first. Suppose the state
6 -- you had then gone to the state court and said res judicata
7 and the state court said, awfully sorry, but we don't apply 8 res judicata that way in this state. And they tried the 9 case and entered judgment against Federated, and the case 10 then came up here. You wouldn't claim that California was 11 constitutionally disentitled, would you?

12 MR. CHAPMAN: It's not a constitutional question, 13 no, that's not part of our --

14 QUESTION: Well why shouldn't the rule in the 15 federal court, in Brown, which was filed in the state and 16 then removed, why shouldn't the state rule apply, of res
17 judicata apply?

18 MR. CHAPMAN: Let me make clear, Your Honor, that 19 the --

20 QUESTION: When it's removed on the basis of 21 diversity?

22 MR. CHAPMAN: Every indication in every case that 23 was ever referred to in the lower courts when this matter
24 was briefed before the lower courts -- it wasn't briefed 25 extensively here, because it wasn't the issue decided by the Ninth Circuit --

1 QUESTION: But why shouldn't the Ninth Circuit though 2 focus on what the state law is?

3 MR. CHAPMAN: No, Your Honor. The fact is, there
4 is no reason to believe there is any difference whatsoever
5 between the California law and federal law on res judicata.
6 If I may --

7 QUESTION: Well -- the Ninth Circuit didn't say 8 that.

9 MR. CHAPMAN: If I may address specifically what 10 the Ninth Circuit did? The Ninth Circuit stated that if 11 there had only been the Brown case, that the normal standards
12 of res judicata -- and it didn't purport to distinguish 13 between federal or state law would apply and that the 14 failure to appeal from the dismissal of Brown I would bar 15 the refiling of Brown II.

16 QUESTION: Well both the federal courts by statute 17 and the state courts by the Constitution are bound by the 18 full faith and credit clause, are they not?

19 MR. CHAPMAN: Precisely. And the important element 20 here is that this was a federal judgment and the scope of 21 the federal judgment is a matter of federal law. This Court 22 had held that in Stoll v. Gottlieb and other cases. But the 23 crucial distinction as to what the Court of Appeals did was as 24 follows: the Court of Appeals said again, if this was only 25 one case, we would have no trouble applying res judicata.

1 But it noted that the Weinberg cases, the other five federal 2 cases which were dismissed at the same time as Brown I, did 3 appeal. They followed the orderly course and took their 4 case up to the Ninth Circuit. Subsequently, this Court, in 5 Reiter v. Sonotone, held that under Section 4 of the Clayton
6 Act, retail purchasers do state a claim of injury to their busi-
7 ness or property and so on the basis of that, the Weinberg 8 cases were reversed by the Ninth Circuit and sent back to 9 the district court.

10 A few months later, Brown II was argued in the Court 11 of Appeals. And the Court of Appeals decided this case on 12 one ground and one ground only, and that is that because 13 the other plaintiffs in other separately filed independent 14 actions, the Weinberg cases, did appeal and did obtain a 15 reversal in their case that even though Plaintiff Brown had 16 suffered a final judgment, had not attempted to appeal his 17 case, but in fact attempted to refile in another litigation, 18 that Brown is entitled to have his action reinstated because 19 of the benefit of the appeal by the other parties. And that 20 was the issue and the only issue raised in the petition 21 for certiorari --

22 QUESTION: Mr. Chapman, are you saying that -- 23 I guess you are, that if you file a federal cause of 24 action in federal court, a federal question case, if out of 25 those facts you have a pendent state claim you must file it.

That is --

Not only does the federal court have jurisdiction over these pendent claims, but it has -- would have absolutely no discretion to refuse to decide the pendent claims.

MR. CHAPMAN: Oh quite the contrary, quite the contrary. The rule is well stated in cases in this Court, and accepted in the restatement, again, it's a question of not splitting your cause of action and bringing all your cases at one time. The key of pendent jurisdiction is discretion.

QUESTION: Well wasn't Brown, when it was originally filed in the state -- in the federal court, weren't the state claims asserted only within the jurisdiction of the federal court because of pendent jurisdiction? Or what was it?

MR. CHAPMAN: The state claims could have been based on diversity or pendent jurisdiction; there was no adjudication of that point. The state claims were permissible there because there was diversity jurisdiction.

QUESTION: But none were alleged, I thought you said?

MR. CHAPMAN: In Brown there were none alleged. In five of the other cases, in two of the other cases they were alleged. But the key, Your Honor, if I may say this, is that --

QUESTION: Well, your argument doesn't depend on what happened in the other cases does it?

1           MR. CHAPMAN: That's exactly the point. But the 2 Ninth Circuit decision depends solely on what happened to 3 the other cases, and nothing else. The Ninth Circuit ruled--

4           QUESTION: But Mr. Chapman --

5           MR. CHAPMAN: -- solely that the only reason why 6 res judicata should be relieved in this case was that the 7 other cases were reversed on appeal. And we submit that 8 that creates a premium for overriding the finality of judg-
9 ment in just the worst kind of cases where you have a 10 piling-on of multiple actions in the wake of a government
11 antitrust case, which is very typical. The only reason 12 that this case is here is because other parties in other 13 cases did appeal and did obtain a reversal. And we believe 14 that to allow relief from the finality of judgments because 15 of actions taken by other parties would only impair the 16 ability of the district courts to coordinate and control
17 complex multi-party class actions.

18           QUESTION: Mr. Chapman, let me interrupt you again, 19 because there's a point of the precise way in which liti-
20 gation -- precise posture of litigation I'd like to clarify.
21 Under the judgment of the Ninth Circuit, as I understand it, 22 the district court is now free to try both the federal claim 23 and the state claim, do you read it that way?

24           MR. CHAPMAN: Yes.

25           QUESTION: And your primary argument is they are

1 wrong in reinstating the federal claim on the basis of the 2 five other -- reversal of the five other cases. But is it
3 not true that there is an entirely separate legal problem
4 as to whether or not the state claim survived, and isn't 5 that problem one we must answer by knowing how California 6 would interpret its doctrine of res judicata?

7 MR. CHAPMAN: Well I would answer in two ways.
8 First, that the -- the answer is no, that is not what the 9 Ninth Circuit did. The Ninth Circuit understood --

10 QUESTION: You just told me they are both still 11 standing, both the state and federal claims are alive now.

12 MR. CHAPMAN: The Ninth Circuit understood that 13 the application of res judicata would bar the entire claim
14 and the term claim is not -- we're not dealing with forms 15 of actions, it's the entire collection of rights and any 16 legal theories that arise out of this transaction.

17 The Ninth Circuit held that normally federal or 18 state claims would be barred if this were the only case. But 19 it relieved Brown of res judicata, which opened up the 20 entire claim because of what happened in the other cases.

21 QUESTION: Well in that --

22 MR. CHAPMAN: May I say, there's no question but 23 that California law and federal law are absolutely identical
24 on what is meant by res judicata. The problem in this case 25 is that the Ninth Circuit refused to follow any of the

1 standards of res judicata by virtue of one fact and one
2 fact alone, namely that the other cases, the Weinberg cases, 3 were reversed on appeal. So there was no distinction be-4 tween, there is no distinction between the law of California 5 and --

6 QUESTION: Well yes, but if in Brown I -- there'd
7 never been any appeals -- the district court had dismissed
8 the complaint saying well I don't know anything about Cali-9 fornia law, but I know you're not a plaintiff qualified to 10 sue under Section 4 of the Clayton Act; file any state law
11 claims you want someplace else. You wouldn't say that you 12 would be barred from going to the state court, I'm quite sure?

13 MR. CHAPMAN: The district court could have had 14 discretion under the doctrine of pendent jurisdiction to 15 pull out any --

16 QUESTION: But there were no state claims asserted, 17 so all he could do on the basis of what had been filed
18 before him, is say well I don't think you are a proper plain-19 tiff under Section 4.

20 MR. CHAPMAN: On the contrary, Your Honor, the law 21 against splitting a cause of action makes it clear that 22 when plaintiffs bring their actions they cannot hold back
23 theories in their back pockets and try out -- try their luck 24 with the federal claim. If that doesn't work, then they 25 have something else to fall, another line to fall back on

1 in state courts. And the cases that we cite on the standard 2 of splitting a cause of action all go to that.

3 The district court does have discretion, but he 4 must not be deprived of his opportunity to exercise dis-
5 cretion by not having the cases brought forward. And I
6 would also say that the district court did know, as counsel
7 concedes in his brief, that there was at least a potential-
8 ity of state cases at the time that Brown I was dismissed
9 because Moitie --

10 QUESTION: Wouldn't you -- on this very argument, 11 wouldn't you make a difference between claims that are 12 just pendent to a federal claim or that are arguably pendent, 13 and claims that could be brought originally in the federal 14 court based on diversity? Because then, these diversity 15 claims would independently be within the jurisdiction of the 16 federal court and -- and there was diversity here.

17 MR. CHAPMAN: There was diversity -- I think, the 18 important point, Your Honor, is this. If you don't have to, 19 and we believe in this case that no issue with respect to 20 pendent jurisdiction is before this Court --

21 QUESTION: Because there is diversity.

22 MR. CHAPMAN: Because there is diversity, but the 23 basic rule against splitting a cause of action would apply 24 no matter how the case got into federal court.

25 QUESTION: Well in any event, there's only one

1 issue before us, is there not?

2 MR. CHAPMAN: Yes sir.

3 QUESTION: In the present posture of the case?

4 MR. CHAPMAN: That's correct.

5 QUESTION: Only one question was raised in the 6 certiorari petition, only one question is addressed in your 7 original brief --

8 MR. CHAPMAN: That is correct.

9 QUESTION: -- and while the Respondent's brief
10 canvasses the issues that my brothers have asked you about, 11 that's not before us now, is it?

12 MR. CHAPMAN: That -- you are precisely correct.
13 The question is to whether there is an exception from res 14 judicata in multiple-party, multiple-action litigation where--

15 QUESTION: But what if the question is did the 16 Court of Appeals -- if the question is, did the Court of 17 Appeals properly reinstate these judgments. That's -- right?

18 MR. CHAPMAN: The Court of Appeals -- the question--

19 QUESTION: That is the question, you say they should 20 not have reinstated either the state or the federal claims?

21 MR. CHAPMAN: The question is whether the Court
22 of Appeals properly reversed the dismissal for res judicata.
23 The grounds, which were stated by the Court of Appeals, was 24 that res judicata would apply but for the action in the other 25 multiple cases. And we say, Your Honor, that there is

1 absolutely no basis, indeed, Respondent presents no basis
2 for the novel ruling of the Court of Appeals in this case.

3 I'd like to reserve the few moments I have for 4 my response.

5 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Offstein.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JERROLD N. OFFSTEIN, ESQ.,

7 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

8 MR. OFFSTEIN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
9 please the Court:

10 The facts have been developed. Seeing the noon
11 hour approaching, I'm going to try to concentrate on points
12 that we concentrated on. I believe the Court of Appeals 13 sought and -- in my view, the Court of Appeals tried to do, 14 was have the baby. It did not want litigation about the 15 same complaints, if you will, and -- the same cognizable
16 claim or not -- before both the federal and the state court.

17 And in so doing ignored its own ruling, in Hodge 18 v. Mountain States Telephone Company. Now Hodge, is very 19 interesting, because it causes me to disagree with a great 20 deal of the authority cited by my opposition. Hodge is a 21 case wherein summary judgment was had over both state and 22 pendent claims, in the district court, the Ninth Circuit in 23 1977, reversed that saying, according to Mine Workers v.
24 Gibbs if there is no substantial federal question, state 25 claim as a matter of comity belong in the state courts.

1           That California law follows that is cited -- is 2   stated very clearly in the case we cite as Merry v. Coast
3   Community College, where the -- and I'm quoting the Ninth
4   Circuit Court of Appeals consistently held that where a 5   federal claim dismissed on a motion for summary judgment
6   before there has been a substantial expenditure of the Court's 7   time or energy on the case, proper exercise of discretion 8   requires dismissal of the state claims without prejudice to 9   plaintiff's right to litigate them in a proper state forum.

10           QUESTION: Well Mr. Offstein, I take it you would 11   concede that the Ninth Circuit is bound by holdings of this 12   Court in matters of federal law?

13           MR. OFFSTEIN: Agreed. Mine Workers v. Gibbs in 14   this case.

15           QUESTION: I notice in your brief you give rather 16   short shrift to the case of Reed v. Allen, which was 17   decided in 1932, on page 8, you cited, simply saying that 18   Professor Moore has criticized it in his treatise. Do you 19   want us to overrule it?

20           MR. OFFSTEIN: I believe it should be, I believe it
21   was bad law then. I believe that a rule, as many commenta-22   tors have stated and many cases have said of equity must be 23   equitably applied as this Court said recently in Brown v.
24   Felsen -- that you have to sparingly apply such a rule so 25   as to avoid shielding wrongdoing behind a technicality.

1 QUESTION: And that would be a case-by-case analysis.

2 MR. OFFSTEIN: Indeed, it is an equitable rule.

3 I want to emphasize two facts with which I disagree
4 with my opposition. Principally what was disposed of in 5 Brown I? It was the question of whether or not the plaintiff 6 could maintain a cognizable claim under Section 4 of the 7 Clayton Act. I was in a court of limited jurisdiction, they 8 told me go away, in its entirety. I went to the Court
9 of general jurisdiction with my claims. Merry v.
10 Coast Community College, the very recent California case,
11 Court of Appeals case on point, says I did the correct
12 thing. Mine Worker v. Gibbs says I did the correct thing.
13 I was -- there was nothing to which to append state claims 14 once we had been directed to get out of the court of --

15 QUESTION: But you could have presented your state
16 claims originally in the federal court, not just as pendent
17 jurisdiction, but as -- on diversity grounds?

18 MR. OFFSTEIN: I don't believe there was diversity.
19 One of the --

20 QUESTION: Oh, I see. I see.

21 MR. OFFSTEIN: -- features of the municipal court.

22 QUESTION: Well how was Brown removed, Brown II
23 removed, eventually, on federal question?

24 MR. OFFSTEIN: In a blur. There were two issues
25 that I believe defeat the diversity jurisdiction in the case

1 at bar, to-wit, Brown II. Point Number One: at the time we 2 filed the action in municipal court, in California, the 3 jurisdictional amount was $5,000.00 and that's what we 4 pleaded per claimant. Not $10,000.00. Under Younger, Harris
5 that cannot be aggregated. Moreover, no injunction was sought, 6 so the jurisdictional amount, it seems to me cannot be 7 generated that way.

8 Accordingly, in my mind, and I've never seen it
9 actually adjudicated, there was never diversity jurisdiction 10 in this case.

11 QUESTION: Well there wasn't federal question then, 12 either?

13 MR. OFFSTEIN: In my mind there was not.

14 QUESTION: So there never -- the removal was 15 wholly improper you think?

16 MR. OFFSTEIN: I do.

17 QUESTION: But the Court of Appeals has decided 18 otherwise.

19 MR. OFFSTEIN: I think the Court of Appeals was 20 trying to avoid piecemeal litigation that is permissible
21 because it didn't like it. It tried --

22 QUESTION: Well suppose we disagree with you on 23 the -- suppose we think it's important to know whether there
24 was diversity jurisdiction and we disagree with you. Suppose 25 we concluded yes there was diversity jurisdiction over the

1 state law claims and that they could have been filed orig-
2 inally with the federal claim in Brown I?

3 MR. OFFSTEIN: Yes sir.

4 QUESTION: Would that make any difference to 5 you?

6 MR. OFFSTEIN: No sir. By Mine Worker v. Gibbs --

7 QUESTION: That's just a pendent case.

8 MR. OFFSTEIN: But once there's no federal nexus
9 and once we haven't gone into -- Mine Worker v. Gibbs it seems 10 to me there was a discussion in the beginning of the opinion 11 where it said even if you were to get into the trial on the 12 merits of the cause, and the only merits we've had heard
13 are whether or not we had standing to maintain a cognizable
14 claim under Section 4 in a court of limited jurisdiction.

15 QUESTION: But in Angel v. Bullington, the Court 16 says the "merits" of a claim are disposed of when it is 17 refused enforcement. I take that to mean it doesn't neces-
18 sarily have to go through A, B, C, D, E, F if it dismisses 19 it for some reason -- and judgment for the defendant.

20 MR. OFFSTEIN: I believe, Your Honor, as I under-21 stand the premises, the increments that add up to whether 22 or not one is entitled to res judicata in effect, against 23 an opponent, is whether or not some threshold bar has 24 prevented an actual dispute or a resolution of the substance 25 of the dispute in the case at bar, whether or not certain

1 activity took place on the part of the department stores
2 which caused injury, proximately caused injury to these 3 people, these claimants in the class -- putative class.

4 QUESTION: Did you make any motion to remand the 5 case?

6 MR. OFFSTEIN: I did, Your Honor, in Brown II.
7 In Brown I there was nothing to remand. The Court sua sponte
8 invited the motion from the defense to dismiss for want 9 of standing under the Clayton Act. That motion was briefed, 10 held under submission for a long time. It was granted, the 11 actions were dismissed in their entirety. I read Mine Worker
12 v. Gibbs, it said when there is nothing to append a state 13 claim to, you don't belong in federal court. So we went to 14 the only other available forum, the court of general juris-
15 diction, the state courts, whose rules of res judicata --
16 the facts at bar in this Merry v. Coast Community College 17 case, say we did the right thing.

18 QUESTION: So then, you think California courts
19 would not have sustained a plea of res judicata?

20 MR. OFFSTEIN: No sir.

21 QUESTION: On these facts?

22 MR. OFFSTEIN: Nor would the Ninth Circuit or 23 this Court, I believe, under Mine Worker v. Gibbs. I
24 believe the Ninth Circuit was trying to fashion an equitable 25 remedy in a larger sense, was a little --

1 QUESTION: And that he arrived at that result by 2 the wrong way, wrong --

3 MR. OFFSTEIN: Agreed. Hodge was their law, Hodge
4 is what they should have followed, Hodge is what we did,
5 following Gibbs. If this rule is undone, that allows someone 6 who is barred on a threshold bar from litigating the sub-7 stance of their dispute between the parties, you have 8 undone Mine Worker v. Gibbs and replete other cases --

9 QUESTION: Hodge is a Ninth Circuit case?

10 MR. OFFSTEIN: That's correct, Hodge v. Mountain
11 States Tel. and Tel., 1977.

12 QUESTION: Well you, if you really mean what you 13 say, it seems to me you are conceding -- if you say that 14 the Ninth Circuit arrived at the right result for the wrong 15 reason, you really are -- aren't you really suggesting or 16 really conceding that the reinstatement of the federal claim 17 is wrong?

18 MR. OFFSTEIN: Yes.

19 QUESTION: Of course, if that's true, I take it 20 under the Cartwright Act you get treble damages, is that 21 right?

22 MR. OFFSTEIN: I did not plead the Cartwright Act
23 claim in Brown II, but yes sir, that is the case.

24 QUESTION: Well you would -- we just have a common 25 law claim, is that what it is?

1 MR. OFFSTEIN: Yes.

2 QUESTION: So that means basically, you're asking 3 for single damages in this?

4 MR. OFFSTEIN: Correct.

5 QUESTION: And also you don't have the benefit of 6 the prima facie -- well what happened in the government case?

7 MR. OFFSTEIN: There was no indictment in the 8 relevant geographic --

9 QUESTION: I see.

10 QUESTION: The California Court wouldn't have 11 -- Brown II, when you filed in the state court, did you 12 state your federal claim too, or was it all state?

13 MR. OFFSTEIN: I was told--I was dismissed for want
14 of standing, I didn't see any other federal claim --

15 QUESTION: Well did you state a federal claim in 16 the state courts in Brown II?

17 MR. OFFSTEIN: No, not in my case.

18 QUESTION: Solely state?

19 MR. OFFSTEIN: Correct.

20 QUESTION: Well, let's see now. The Court of 21 Appeals gave you more than you asked for, then when they 22 reinstated Brown I judgment, is that right?

23 MR. OFFSTEIN: When -- my law clerk asked me, when 24 he saw the decision, what happened? I told him I didn't 25 lose.

1 QUESTION: Well tell me what happened -- tell
2 me what happens if the Ninth Circuit is affirmed, the judg-
3 ment is affirmed by us? What are you going to do when you
4 go back to the district court, say sorry, I don't want you 5 to hear me on the federal claim?

6 MR. OFFSTEIN: I --

7 QUESTION: Just hear me on the state claim?

8 MR. OFFSTEIN: Well, at this point, the federal 9 claim would now, somehow or other, be -- I would like to be 10 in the state court. I think my clients have made -- I know
11 my clients, one of them an attorney, has made the election 12 to proceed into state court under the state claims. We have, 13 frankly, a district judge which has shown no affection for 14 the cause --

15 QUESTION: Well that doesn't answer my question.
16 What are you going to do if we affirm? What are you going 17 to do in the district court about the reinstated federal 18 claim?

19 MR. OFFSTEIN: Well I believe --

20 QUESTION: Which you say you're not entitled to?

21 MR. OFFSTEIN: I'm sorry, I don't follow.

22 QUESTION: Which you just said you're not 23 entitled to, as I understood it.

24 MR. OFFSTEIN: I was asked a narrow question and 25 I tried to answer it straightforwardly.

1 QUESTION: Yes, you did, I think.

2 MR. OFFSTEIN: I believe we would be estopped from 3 relitigating the question of whether or not we have standing 4 under the Clayton Act.

5 QUESTION: Right.

6 MR. OFFSTEIN: And to the extent more is asked, 7 I'm --

8 QUESTION: But you're not -- you are not barred 9 from trying your state claim?

10 MR. OFFSTEIN: No sir. You're going to run right 11 into the state of California if you rule that we can't in 12 this Merry v. Coast Community College case. And I believe 13 this is a paradigm case and I'm willing to stand or fall on 14 its reasoning. The California Court of Appeals.

15 In that case, -- do I presume on the patience of 16 the Court?

17 QUESTION: Perhaps this is a silly question, but 18 you're not going back to the state court, you're going to 19 confine yourself to the state claims, but you're in the 20 federal court to stay, aren't you?

21 MR. OFFSTEIN: It's not clear to me to what --

22 QUESTION: There was a motion to remand that was 23 denied. Didn't that settle where the case will be tried?

24 MR. OFFSTEIN: That could very well settle that.
25 And it could be heard in the district court if that was their pleasure.

1 QUESTION: But if -- I don't know -- what do you
2 suppose the district court will do if it were determined,
3 for example, that the Court of Appeals was wrong in rein-4 stating the federal claim and that only the state claims are 5 there?

6 MR. OFFSTEIN: I believe it would have the 7 express power to act under Mine Worker v. Gibbs.

8 QUESTION: Well it's hardly for the district court
9 to determine that the Court of Appeals was wrong, is it?

10 MR. OFFSTEIN: No sir.

11 QUESTION: Well I'm saying if we said the Court
12 of Appeals was wrong, in reinstating the federal claim.

13 MR. OFFSTEIN: I believe that the district court 14 would have the option, as a matter of discretion.

15 QUESTION: Am I correct in understanding that you
16 are no longer supporting the judgment of the Court of Appeals?

17 MR. OFFSTEIN: No. I support the ultimate conclus-
18 ion of the Court of Appeals and much of its reasoning; I 19 believe that it made an unusually elaborate --

20 QUESTION: Not its reasoning?

21 MR. OFFSTEIN: I made a great deal of its reasoning.
22 And certainly its equitable premises, I believe that it made
23 an elaborate ruling to try to avoid -- to give each side
24 something. In their case --

25 QUESTION: It ruled primarily on equitable grounds,

1 as it said, but you now go -- you now go back to the federal 2 court, and I understand you to say that you thought that 3 was in error?

4 MR. OFFSTEIN: I said that it was -- Clayton 4 5 cause, if any, is now expired, and would be --

6 QUESTION: If you thought it was in error, why 7 didn't you file a cross-claim?

8 MR. OFFSTEIN: Cross-petition in this court?

9 QUESTION: Cross-petition.

10 MR. OFFSTEIN: Because it was my reading of the 11 rules, -- hopefully an accurate one, that once the case was 12 brought up, irrespective of the narrow point, once the entire 13 file would be brought forward the ultimate reasoning of the 14 Court and the increments of its reasoning, I've been led 15 to believe that this Court in particular deals with substance, 16 not form. Thank you.

17 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything 18 further?

19 ORAL REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF JEROME I. CHAPMAN, ESQ.,

20 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

21 MR. CHAPMAN: I would like, Mr. Chief Justice, to 22 make two brief points. First, the issue that is presented 23 in this petition is the Ninth Circuit's ruling that in multi-24 ple-party actions, the appeal by certain parties relieves the 25 party who didn't appeal from the normal application of res
judicata. It's our submission, for the reasons in our briefs,

1 that this would create a tremendous hardship and burden in 2 the administration of complex, multiple-party class actions.
3 The Respondent's submission, Your Honor, would, if accepted,
4 create a burden in all cases, because he is arguing in favor
5 of piecemeal litigation, that you don't have to bring 6 forward once you come into a federal court, or whatever court
7 with your first complaint, you don't have to bring forward 8 all your theories, you don't have to bring forward all of 9 your rights for recovery, you don't have to give the district 10 court discretion to choose whether or not to handle all the 11 cases at one time. So we believe that the issue presented 12 by Respondents is not properly here, and we urge reversal
13 of the Ninth Circuit and reinstatement of the district 14 court's decision.

15 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you gentlemen.
16 The case is submitted.

17 (Whereupon at 11:47 o'clock a.m. the case in the 18 above matter was submitted.)
