2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We'll hear arguments
3 first this morning in Sumner v. Mata.

4 Mr. Brady, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF THOMAS A. BRADY, ESQ.,

6 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

7 MR. BRADY: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 8 Court:

9 This case is before the Court on a writ or certiorari
10 to the Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit. That court re-
11 versed an order of the district court which denied the respon-
12 dent Mata's habeas corpus petition. The court further ordered 13 that on any retrial of the respondent Mata evidence of identi-14 fications of him by two eyewitnesses could not be admitted.

15 This defendant and his two codefendants --

16 QUESTION: You mean evidence, in-court identifica-
17 tions, or evidence about a pretrial identification?

18 MR. BRADY: As I read the opinion, Your Honor, it 19 would apply to both.

20 QUESTION: Well, which was it? Was there -- did it 21 exclude in-court identifications here?

22 MR. BRADY: It is my reading of the opinion that it
23 excluded both identifications, both evidence of in-court iden-24 tifications and evidence of identifications from a group of 25 photographs.

1 QUESTION: At the state trial there was evidence in-2 troduced with respect to the pretrial identifications?

3 MR. BRADY: That is correct. This defendant and his 4 two codefendants by the names of David Gallegos and Salvador
5 Vargas were convicted in a California court of the first-degree
6 murder of a man by the name of Leonard Arias. The three de-7 fendants were members of the "Mexican Mafia" prison gang.
8 Victim Arias was a member of a rival gang. There was evidence 9 introduced that these three defendants accepted an assignment 10 from the Mexican Mafia hierarchy to kill Mr. Arias because 11 Mr. Arias had stabbed another Mexican Mafia member at the 12 California prison at San Quentin. There was further evidence 13 that they armed themselves and that they stated their inten-
14 tion to kill Mr. Arias. The killing itself occurred at approximately 1:45
15 p.m. of the 19th of October, 1972.

17 QUESTION: Where did that take place?

18 MR. BRADY: It occurred in one of the inmate dormi-
19 tories at the California Correctional Institution at Tehachapi.
20 At the time there was a correctional officer present in this 21 dormitory. He estimated that there were between 30 and 35 22 inmates there at the time. Although both the prosecution and 23 the defense interviewed many of these inmates, only three of 24 them would ever admit that they had witnessed the killing.
25 Each of these three were hesitant to some greater or less

1 degree to admit that they'd seen anything and hesitant to admit 2 that they were able to identify anyone.

3 The three eyewitnesses who testified at trial were 4 inmates and were residents of this particular dormitory.
5 The first of them was an inmate by the name of Paul Childress.
6 The defendant does not now contend that his identification
7 testimony was improperly admitted. Indeed, Mr. Childress tes-
8 tified that he previously knew the defendant and Mr. Gallegos
9 and he was able on the day after the killing to identify them
10 by name, and to select their pictures, as well as a photograph
11 of the third defendant from a group of several hundred pictures 12 shown to him.

13 The other witnesses were inmates by the name of 14 Rigoberto Almengor and Jay Allen. Both of them testified that 15 they were walking with the victim when he was suddenly set upon 16 by three men armed with knives who appeared to have been wait-
17 ing for him. Both of them testified that this fatal struggle 18 took several minutes, perhaps as long as four minutes.

19 Almengor testified that at one point during it he 20 struggled briefly with the defendant. He made eye contact 21 with the defendant, the defendant broke off his attack on the 22 victim and commenced an attack on Mr. Almengor. This lasted 23 a short time. Thereafter Mr. Almengor backed off from the 24 defendant, they faced each other from a very short distance, 25 Mr. Almengor then turned his attention back to the victim,

1 but once again he and Mr. Mata backed off. They faced each
2 other from a short distance, and at this point Almengor indi-
3 cated that he wanted no part of this struggle that was going 4 on.

5 Mr. Allen testified that he too struggled briefly
6 with one of the other men but then he backed off a short dis-7 tance from the struggle and began yelling for help. On the 8 day of the killing Mr. Almengor was shown several hundred pic-9 tures of inmates at the institution. From these he was able 10 to narrow it down to a group of four of them which he said were 11 similar in appearance to the men he had seen. It should be 12 emphasized that his identifications at this time were not 13 positive. In fact, he selected more pictures at the time
14 than he said there were assailants. Mr. Allen was also inter-15 viewed this day. He stated that he did not want to get in-16 volved and for this reason he told the prison authorities he 17 was able to identify no one. Because of this they showed him 18 no pictures.

19 In the next few days after this there is evidence 20 in the record that a riot was occurring at the prison and that 21 the investigation was postponed for a short time because of 22 this. Finally, on the 27th of October, approximately eight 23 days after the killing, the three witnesses were shown a group 24 of 24 pictures of inmates. This was People's Exhibit 23, in-25 troduced at trial, and it as well as People's Exhibit 24,

1 which I'll mention in a moment, has been brought before this 2 Court.

3 Mr. Childress was able to identify all three of the 4 defendants from this initial photo display. Mr. Almengor iden-
5 tified a photograph of Mr. Vargas only. Again his identifica-
6 tion was not positive. He stated that the pictures that he 7 was looking at seemed to him to be outdated and he asked the 8 prison authorities to see what they could do about getting some 9 new pictures for him to view. Mr. Allen saw the same group of 10 pictures that day. He was able to identify no one. He too 11 commented that he thought new pictures would be helpful.

12 In a few days following this the prison authorities 13 attempted to take new pictures of a number of inmates. Only 14 those of the three defendants turned out. These three pictures 15 were placed in a different group of 15 pictures, which is 16 People's Exhibit 24, which were shown to the witnesses on the 17 30th of October. The identifying information on these pic-18 tures, the names and the dates the pictures were taken, that 19 was covered at the time. At this point both Allen and 20 Almengor identified all three of the defendants.

21 At trial the two of them stated that they were now 22 sure when they saw Mr. Vargas in person at trial that he was 23 not one of the people who attacked the victim. They remained 24 firm, however, in their identifications of the defendant and 25 Mr. Gallegos.

1 I believe that the 9th Circuit's opinion is in error
2 in several respects. The first error is its statement of the 3 standard for determining the admissibility of identification
4 evidence in a case where pretrial photographic identification 5 procedures have been used. The 9th Circuit stated that the 6 appropriate standard required a two-part approach. First, a 7 court should look to the necessity for use of photographic 8 identification procedures. Here, since the defendant and his 9 codefendants were state prison inmates, the court found that 10 there was no necessity for the use of photographic identifica-
11 tion procedures. From this lack of necessity it proceeded 12 directly to a determination of whether there had been a likeli-13 hood of misidentification. The lack of necessity was said to 14 be an important factor weighing against the admissibility of 15 their identification evidence.

16 It is our position and our belief that this Court 17 has never held that necessity or lack of necessity for use of 18 a particular procedure is part of the constitutional standard.
19 Indeed, the Court has rejected attempts, most recently, in 20 Manson v. Brathwaite, to have generalities such as this includ-
21 ed in what is basically a fact-oriented balancing process.
22 The Court has, in Simmons v. United States, and again in 23 U.S. v. Ash, declined the opportunity to formulate special 24 rules in cases where pretrial photographic identification 25 procedures have been used.

1 The Court has, instead, applied what we believe is a
2 consistent standard of due process fairness in all cases
3 involving the use of pretrial identification procedures.
4 It has applied the same standard whether photographic identifi-
5 cation procedures were used, whether a live lineup or showup
6 was used, or whether there was a combination of these factors.

7 I believe that this Court's due process standard fo-
8 cuses on two things: first, the suggested nature of the par-9 ticular pretrial confrontation involved in the case; and,
10 second, the reliability of the identification evidence. We 11 believe that the Court's consistent treatment of all these 12 situations makes it clear that it believes that due process 13 does not require that a particular procedure be used, or that 14 the use of one procedure as opposed to another should be 15 penalized. Rather, I believe the Court's cases require only 16 that the procedure which is actually used not be so unfair as 17 to deny a defendant due process.

18 We therefore ask the Court to reject the 9th Cir-19 cuit's approach and to affirm the approach which has been 20 adopted by the 5th Circuit and by the majority of the other 21 courts which have considered the issue. And that approach, 22 very briefly stated, is as follows. First, if the defendant
23 objects to the admission of identification evidence, a court
24 should first ask itself whether the pretrial identification
25 procedures actually used have been so impermissibly suggestive

1 that they could give rise to a very substantial likelihood of 2 mistaken identification.

3 The focus here is on the particular identification
4 confrontation and the circumstances surrounding it. The Court 5 may consider, for example, any circumstances tending to suggest 6 that the witness should identify a particular person or not 7 identify a particular person. It may consider the circum-
8 stances of the crime, the extent that they have a bearing on 9 the question of suggestiveness.

10 If and only if the Court should determine that the 11 pretrial identification procedures used were so impermissibly
12 suggestive that they could give rise to a very substantial 13 likelihood of mistaken identification, does it become necessary 14 to determine whether in fact it is likely that they had 15 this effect. In making this latter determination the focus is 16 on the reliability of the identification evidence. It is at 17 this point that the Court applies the five factors stated in 18 Neil v. Biggers, and restated in Manson v. Brathwaite, and any 19 other factors bearing on the question of whether the identifi-20 cation evidence is reliable.

21 QUESTION: Mr. Brady, the procedural history of this 22 case is that there was a trial in the Superior Court, appealed 23 to the Court of Appeal, the judgment of conviction affirmed, 24 and then federal habeas sought. Is that right?

25 MR. BRADY: Yes, sir.

1 QUESTION: Did the State Court of Appeal pass on the 2 eyewitness identification issues that you've been discussing?

3 MR. BRADY: Yes, sir, it did. It found that there
4 was no impermissible suggestion in them.

5 QUESTION: And the 9th Circuit disagreed with the 6 State Court of Appeal?

7 MR. BRADY: With the State Court of Appeal, and also 8 with the district court.

9 QUESTION: Did the district court hold a hearing, 10 or rely on the state record?

11 MR. BRADY: The district court, as did the 9th Cir-
12 cuit, relied solely on the state record. There was no evidence, 13 no new witnesses.

14 QUESTION: Did they apply the same standards?

15 MR. BRADY: Well, it's our position the 9th Circuit
16 did not apply the same standard that apparently the district
17 court did, or the state courts. Neither of them mentioned 18 the concept of necessity. The only cases cited in either of 19 the lower courts were this Court's cases, particularly Simmons.

20 QUESTICN: Assume you agreed with the standard, the 21 legal standard that the 9th Circuit applied. Would you be 22 here still?

23 MR. BRADY: I believe we would, Your Honor.

24 QUESTION: You think they're -- whatever else there
25 is, you think the 9th Circuit disregarded state courts'

1 findings without --

2 MR. BRADY: Yes, Your Honor. That is another one
3 of the reasons which brings us here, our belief that the 9th 4 Circuit did not apply Section 2254 when it should have.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Attorney General, what about the pos-
6 sibility of a lineup? There wasn't any problem in having a 7 lineup if you wanted one, was there? Is there any reason why 8 they didn't use a lineup?

9 MR. BRADY: Yes, sir. The record suggests several 10 reasons.

11 QUESTION: It wasn't for the lack of people.

12 MR. BRADY: No. One reason appears to be the fact
13 that a riot was going on in the prison at that time. A second 14 reason appears to be that all of this was occurring in a pri-
15 son which, as was stated in Judge Sneed's dissenting opinion
16 in the 9th Circuit and has been stated in many other places, 17 a prison is a unique world and inmates there are not generally 18 very favorably disposed to come forward and give evidence to 19 identify other prisoners as being responsible for crimes.

20 QUESTION: Well, that wouldn't have stopped them
21 from getting in a lineup.

22 MR. BRADY: No, it would not physically stop them,
23 but it is one reason why a decision may be made that the use
24 of photographic identification procedures --

25 QUESTION: But the question was never gone into by

1 anybody?

2 MR. BRADY: No, there was no objection to the admis-
3 sion of the identification.

4 QUESTION: I thought one of the three did ask for a 5 lineup.

6 MR. BRADY: One of the three men mentioned that.
7 This was on the 27th of October, I believe, after he'd seen
8 the first group of photographs. Thereafter he saw a second 9 group of photographs, did not renew the request for a lineup,
10 and he apparently felt that the second group of photographs 11 was --

12 QUESTION: But it never was explained in this record 13 why his request was refused.

14 MR. BRADY: It was alluded to at one time only by --

15 QUESTION: My question was, was it ever explained?

16 MR. BRADY: No, sir, not in so many words.

17 QUESTION: What did the district court, the federal 18 district court hold on the habeas corpus hearing?

19 QUESTION: They denied relief.

20 QUESTION: They denied relief. They found that -- 21 on a fairly conclusory opinion found although the identifica-
22 tion procedures used were deficient in some respects, nonethe-23 less, taken as a whole, the identification evidence was still 24 reliable and was still properly admitted.

25 QUESTION: So, by the time this case got to the

1 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, three courts had held that there
2 had been no miscarriage of justice: the state trial court, 3 the state Court of Appeal, the federal district court, is that 4 right?

5 MR. BRADY: Yes, Your Honor, that is correct, 6 although the state trial court was not expressly called on to 7 resolve the issue.

8 QUESTION: And although the federal district court
9 talked about irregularities, didn't it?

10 MR. BRADY: Yes, Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: But neither the federal district court nor the 12 United States Court of Appeals dealt with your 2254(d) argu-
13 ment at all, did they? Did they mention it?

14 MR. BRADY: No, Your Honor, they did not.

15 QUESTION: When did you first raise that argument?

16 MR. BRADY: The 2254(d) argument was first raised
17 in the district court, in our return. We stated at that time 18 that the findings of the State Court of Appeal should be 19 accorded the presumption of correctness, mandated by 2254.
20 We said that this was necessary, because since there had been 21 no objection at trial, the trial court was not really called 22 upon to make fact-findings regarding this identification 23 issue.

24 QUESTION: Did the trial court -- I understand there 25 was no objection to the testimony about the photo

1 identification procedure. Is it also true there was no objec-
2 tion to the in-court identification?

3 MR. BRADY: That is correct, Your Honor.

4 QUESTION: But you didn't argue as a matter of 5 California procedure that they therefore could not raise this 6 whole problem in the Court of Appeal, did you? That they'd 7 waived their constitutional objection by failure to object in 8 the trial court?

9 MR. BRADY: Well, let me approach this this way.
10 In the United States District Court, we argued that there had 11 been a procedural default by this failure to object. In the 12 district court, however, we were required to acknowledge that 13 there was a controlling 9th Circuit case which would hold 14 that the state Court of Appeal treatment of the issue substan-
15 tively would act as a forgiveness of any default. The same 16 thing held true in the 9th Circuit. They could not argue that 17 in the 9th Circuit because there was controlling 9th Circuit 18 precedent which one panel could not overrule another.

19 QUESTION: And the state Court of Appeal here did 20 treat the matter on the merits, did it not?

21 MR. BRADY: No, Your Honor, I don't believe that -- 22 well, it passed on the constitutional validity of the identi-
23 fication procedures but it's our position that by so doing it
24 did not forgive any procedural default. California's contem-25 poraneous objection rule does not preclude a state appellate

1 court from considering, from discussing a constitutional
2 claim. It precludes it from reversing a judgment of convic-
3 tion if there has been no appropriate objection. It is our 4 position that in order to forgive a procedural default a state
5 appellate court must not only discuss the issue but also re-6 verse the judgment.

7 QUESTION: But, so far as raising the matter beyond
8 the state Court of Appeal, say to bring it to this Court, 9 the defendant would have been perfectly free, I take it, to 10 petition for certiorari on the merits, since the state Court
11 of Appeal had discussed the merits.

12 MR. BRADY: Well, that is one of the questions in 13 this case, Your Honor, whether he would be, or would have been.

14 QUESTION: Isn't your position a little bit incon-
15 sistent? If this was just a meaningless discussion, then 16 2254(d) is of doubtful applicability, isn't it?

17 MR. BRADY: No, Your Honor, I don't think so. The 18 state Court of Appeal here found itself in this rather no-win
19 situation. It had on the one hand the not very appetizing 20 prospect of foreclosing the defendant from relief solely on 21 procedural grounds, or on the other hand, if it wanted any 22 reviewing courts, any federal courts to have the benefit of 23 its views to find out --

24 QUESTION: This is a totally inconclusive dis-25 cussion, and even if the state Court of Appeal had found the

1 identification procedures wholly improper and unconstitutional,
2 your present submission is it had no power to reverse the con-3 viction, and therefore why is 2254(d) applicable at all if 4 this is just an inconclusive, meaningless discussion?

5 MR. BRADY: Let me say, it had the power to reverse
6 the conviction but not the right. And I think the Court's 7 treatment of the issue on the merits was not a meaningless 8 discussion. It was meant to inform not only this defendant but 9 anyone else that might be interested in this case, in the 10 future, of what the Court's views on that were, what it be-11 lieved the appropriate constitutional standard was, the appro-12 priate conclusions. For this reason I don't believe it was at 13 all meaningless.

14 QUESTION: Well, then, if that's the case, the proce-15 dural waiver of failure to object is almost meaningless in the 16 Superior Court. If the California appellate court has the 17 right to say, even though there was no objection, we're free to 18 to treat this on the merits, and we're free to reverse it if 19 we think it's flagrant enough, or if we think it does fall
20 under the federal constitutional ban.

21 MR. BRADY: In my previous answer I attempted to make 22 the distinction between the power to reverse the judgment and 23 the right to do so.

24 QUESTION: I don't understand it.

25 QUESTION: That seems to me somewhat meaningless,

1 frankly, because, when you say it has the power to do it, do
2 you mean that the Supreme Court of California would reverse it
3 if it did that? Or do you simply mean that any court that 4 isn't reviewed further is going to have its judgment enforced?

5 MR. BRADY: Yes, I believe that is what I mean, that 6 the court -- this is the state Court of Appeal -- would be 7 able to reverse it. If it is incorrect in doing so, if the 8 matter came before the California Supreme Court, it should 9 reverse the state appellate court's judgment.

10 But from all this, I don't think that we can neces-
11 sarily say that what the state Court of Appeal did was really 12 meaningless or worthless or kind of a throwaway sort of a 13 thing. The court I think considered the issue in some detail, 14 and I think this Court's previous cases, most notably 15 Wainwright v. Sykes, have encouraged the state appellate 16 courts to deal with issues such as this and to give the 17 federal courts the benefit of their views, the benefit of what 18 thoughts they might have about any particular state procedures
19 or state laws that might be applicable here.

20 And I think it's for this reason that the federal 21 courts should, where a state appellate court has passed on a 22 constitutional issue, give deference to the decision of that 23 state appellate court.

24 QUESTION: But that's not because of Wainwright v.
25 Sykes. That's because of 2254, isn't it?

1 MR. BRADY: That's correct. But in Wainwright v.
2 Sykes, I read that as this Court encouraging the state appel-
3 late courts to tackle these things on the merits and not really 4 to stand on procedural grounds necessarily.

5 QUESTION: Well, the net result is that your Califor-
6 nia Court of Appeal chose not to follow its own contempora-7 neous objection rule. Right?

8 MR. BRADY: Well, that is --

9 QUESTION: In which case, what are we to do about it?

10 MR. BRADY: Well, that is my point. We don't really 11 know from their opinion whether or not they rejected the state 12 contemporaneous objection rule. It was certainly brought 13 to their attention in our brief. It's a very well-known point 14 in California that would not have escaped them. And I think 15 the fact that they considered the constitutional claim on its 16 merits but did not reverse the conviction does not necessarily 17 mean that they forgave the procedural default.

18 QUESTION: Well, they found no error in the admis-
19 sion of the identification evidence, which would lead to no 20 reversal of the conviction.

21 MR. BRADY: That's correct.

22 QUESTION: Well, doesn't that mean that they in 23 effect overruled your suggestion that they not even consider 24 the claim because of a failure to object in the trial court, 25 if they considered it on its merits?

1 MR. BRADY: I do not think you can necessarily imply
2 that, no, sir. Thank you.

3 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Hendon.

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF EZRA HENDON, ESQ.,

5 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

6 MR. HENDON: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
7 the Court:

8 I think the procedural issues in this case need not 9 detain us terribly long. What we have here is, in the first 10 place, procedural issues brought before this Court which have 11 not been timely presented in the courts below. So far as the 12 record which we have here is concerned, there appears to be 13 no indication that the argument that the procedural default 14 bars federal review was ever raised in the district court.
15 The only thing that we have is a bare assertion in the reply 16 brief of the petitioner that it was orally argued. There is 17 no oral transcript of those proceedings in the district court.
18 I personally did not handle the case in the district court, 19 and so far as I know and so far as the Court is aware --

20 QUESTION: I thought Mr. Brady said it was in a 21 response that they filed.

22 MR. HENDON: I think what he said was that their 23 2254(d) argument was in the brief which they filed. The argu-
24 ment that the supposed procedural default bars federal review, 25 so far as the record that is before this Court demonstrates,

1 was never raised in the district court. In any event, even if 2 it was raised, if you read their brief carefully, what you 3 conclude is that what was raised was a concession that they 4 are foreclosed from asserting any procedural default argument,
5 and in any event it was never raised in the 9th Circuit.

6 So that the issue is simply not properly before the Court, and 7 even if it were properly before the Court, as I understand the 8 remarks of counsel here this morning, he seems to have indi-9 cated that, he seems to have agreed that the argument was 10 presented to the state Court of Appeal, he seems to have con-
11 ceded that the state Court of Appeal had the power to reverse 12 the conviction based on the argument on the merits that was 13 presented, and given those two concessions it seems to me very 14 clear that there is simply no federal interest. There is no
15 interest in comity that is advanced by a federal court in es-16 sence regarding a state court ruling which purports to be on 17 its merits as a mere gratuity, and that's the language that 18 counsel uses.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Hendon, is there not a federal in-20 terest, even assuming for the moment there were no California 21 contemporaneous objection rule at all? Not just that they 22 didn't waive it? And supposing a federal judge reviewing the 23 state record formed the conclusion that as a matter of trial 24 tactics the defense counsel decided he would not make any 25 objection to admissibility of the identification evidence,

1 because he thought he might have a greater chance of obtaining 2 a not guilty verdict by cross-examining the witnesses at great 3 length and trying to show improper police behavior, and so
4 forth. Would not the federal court in its interest in trying 5 to reach the right result properly take that trial strategy 6 into account?

7 MR. HENDON: Not as a matter -- it would not bar the 8 federal court, procedurally to bar --

9 QUESTION: I understand. It's not a procedural bar, 10 but should it not be a factor that should be considered in the 11 overall picture of whether due process was denied?

12 MR. HENDON: On the merits, yes. I would say that 13 that is -- that if the conclusion is that it was a tactical 14 decision, then clearly counsel can't get the benefit of both 15 ends of --

16 QUESTION: Well, what is there in the record to 17 indicate that it was not a tactical decision here? Surely 18 the objection is one that's well known to trained defense 19 lawyers.

20 MR. HENDON: Yes, this is one of the unresolved
21 issues of this case. It's unresolved because neither lower 22 court ever reached it, and it is not presented, as I read the 23 papers here, in this Court, as an alternate ground for rever-24 sal of the Court of Appeal by the petitioner. I don't under-25 stand them to be arguing that even if the identification is

1 bad the Court of Appeal's judgment must be reversed because 2 there was a tactical decision not to object.

3 QUESTION: But that's not to say that that's not 4 their 2254(d) argument that you're talking about now, is it?

5 MR. HENDON: No; no, that's not their 2254(d).
6 I suppose what this Court -- well, if this Court were inclined 7 to consider that matter on its merits, I suppose the appro-
8 priate -- first, the Court, of course, would have to find that 9 the identification was improper, that there is something wrong 10 with the identification. If the Court were then to go on and 11 consider that the --

12 QUESTION: No, I'm not sure that that follows. I'm 13 suggesting in the analysis of the question whether there was 14 constitutional error committed --

15 MR. HENDON: Oh, I see.

16 QUESTION: By letting this evidence into the record.
17 It seems to me one could take into consideration the fact that 18 no objection was made and conceivably that that was a tactical 19 decision by counsel. It's hard for me to reach a conclusion
20 that there's a deprivation of due process in receiving unob-21 jected evidence, evidence to which there was no objection at 22 all, if the objection was available to counsel.

23 MR. HENDON: Well, it seems to me that there are 24 two separate questions. One is whether the identification is 25 proper or not, and to resolve that question we look to all of

1 the factors that exist in the case with regard to the identi-
2 fication itself.

3 QUESTION: Yes, but even if it's improper, no denial 4 of due process takes place unless it's put into the record of 5 the trial. You can do everything, all the suggestive material 6 you wanted in the police station if the witnesses never tes-7 tify. There can't be any denial of due process from that.
8 The due process issue only arises at trial, as I understand 9 the constitutionality.

10 MR. HENDON: Yes.

11 QUESTION: So that it seems to me the critical point
12 is when the evidence is offered. And if it's improperly 13 received, perhaps a denial of due process could take place.

14 MR. HENDON: Yes.

15 QUESTION: But it's hard to find a denial of due 16 process by the admission of evidence to which competent coun-
17 sel doesn't make any objection.

18 MR. HENDON: Well, I think that assumes the ground 19 of the --

20 QUESTION: You don't challenge the competency 21 of counsel?

22 MR. HENDON: We did, below. That is --

23 QUESTION: I'm sorry.

24 MR. HENDON: We did, below, yes. And that was not 25 resolved.

1 QUESTION: I see.

2 MR. HENDON: It was not resolved in the 9th Circuit
3 because the 9th Circuit decided that the identification was 4 improper. What I'm suggesting is that if the Court takes the 5 first step and decides that the identification was improper,
6 and is still concerned about the failure to object, then I
7 suppose an appropriate course would be to remand for further 8 consideration on whether there was a tactically based failure 9 to object.

10 Now, with regard to the 2254(d) argument, I think 11 a fair reading of the record again indicates that that is not 12 properly preserved for review in this Court. It was raised in 13 the federal district court. It was not raised in the 9th 14 Circuit until after the case had been decided. And I simply 15 suggest that this is not -- to reach that question, this 16 procedural question on its merits, is basically to reward a 17 kind of off-again-on-again way of approaching procedural 18 issues.

19 QUESTION: Don't you concede the possibility that 20 2254(d) may impose an obligation upon federal courts regardless 21 of whether or not anybody raises the point?

22 MR. HENDON: That may well be. That, I don't think 23 -- with all due respect -- speaks to the question of whether 24 that issue was properly preserved for --

25 QUESTION: Well, but if the Court of Appeals didn't

1 even mention 2254(d) --

2 MR. HENDON: Yes?

3 QUESTION: And if 2254(d) does impose some obliga-
4 tion upon federal courts to consider it, and to find an excep-5 tion to its generalized application -- and it lists various 6 exceptions; eight of them, I think -- what does it matter if 7 anybody raised it?

8 MR. HENDON: Well, if this Court is prepared to hold 9 that in every federal --

10 QUESTION: Well, do you concede the possibility 11 that 2254(d) might impose some obligation upon federal courts, 12 in federal habeas corpus courts?

13 MR. HENDON: I suppose so; yes.

14 QUESTION: And following up Justice Stewart's ques-
15 tion, certainly the phraseology makes it virtually an element 16 of the federal habeas cause of action, does it not? That is 17 it's almost as if it were typical bench trial negligence cau-18 sation damages; the plaintiff fails to prove causation, the 19 defendant doesn't object, and on review would the reviewing 20 court be prevented from assessing or reviewing what is essen-
21 tially a basic element of the cause of action?

22 MR. HENDON: No, I don't think that they would be 23 precluded from reaching it. It has always been my understand-24 ing, and I'm not aware of any authority which suggests that 25 there is a sua sponte obligation on the part of the federal

1 district court or therefore the Court of Appeals to reach that 2 question. And I think this Court would be breaking new ground 3 if it were to decide that.

4 QUESTION: Isn't it virtually jurisdictional?

5 I mean, the habeas corpus statute confers a special kind of 6 jurisdiction on federal courts to, in effect, review the same 7 findings that the state courts made and come out differently,
8 if there is a constitutional claim. And if it's jurisdictional 9 it's really our obligation as well as counsel's to investigate 10 whether the jurisdictional requirement was met.

11 MR. HENDON: Well, if the conclusion is that it is 12 jurisdictional, then you are correct. I am not aware of 13 authority which holds that it is, and I think in any event
14 it's of no moment here because I don't think we're dealing 15 truly with conclusions of fact; I don't think these are fact 16 findings that we're dealing with. I think we're dealing, ~~in~~ 17 properly understood, with conclusions of law, and I think that 18 as I read Justice Powell's footnote in Neil v. Biggers, I 19 think in an extremely similar context he's held as much.
20 I think that what we're dealing here is not so much with the 21 findings of fact as we are with the conclusions, the constitu-
22 tional conclusions to be drawn from those findings.

23 QUESTION: Well, what troubled me about Judge 24 Ely's opinion was that there was absolutely no reference to 25 2254(d) in it. And if you're right, it seems to me he could

1 have set it aside, set the point to rest in a footnote saying
2 we're dealing here with questions of law and therefore 2254(d) 3 has no force or effect or he could have dealt with it in some 4 other way. But one got the impression that neither the 5 majority nor the dissent in the 9th Circuit had even any know-6 ledge of 2254(d).

7 MR. HENDON: Well, with all due respect, Your Honor,
8 I think they had no knowledge of it, and didn't think of it, 9 because counsel never brought it to their attention. Whether 10 it was jurisdictional or not, I think that's the explanation
11 for why it's not addressed. If this Court is inclined to go 12 ahead and treat this procedural issue on its merits, then it 13 has to essentially substitute itself for the 9th Circuit and 14 draw its own conclusions. My point here is that the conclu-15 sions which you have to draw are that what the 9th Circuit was 16 dealing with was conclusions of law, the constitutional signif-17 icance of facts. It was not going ahead and finding any new 18 facts on its own, and I think that's a fair reading of the 19 opinion, regardless of whether the 2254(d) issue is addressed 20 on its face.

21 QUESTION: You are suggesting, then, that 2254
22 just doesn't address itself to mixed questions of fact and law?

23 MR. HENDON: Yes, I am.

24 QUESTION: It's just purely historical facts that it 25 relates to?

1 MR. HENDON: That's right. Primary historical facts.
2 I think that's --

3 QUESTION: But you also contend it only applies to 4 determinations by the finder of fact who actually saw the wit-
5 nesses? That's a separate question.

6 MR. HENDON: Yes. Well, yes, but here you have the 7 wrinkle that there was no objection in the trial court and 8 the argument that's being made by the petitioner is that the 9 finder of fact in that situation is the Court of Appeal.

10 QUESTION: But wouldn't you contend that 2254(d)
11 simply doesn't apply unless there's a determination by a trial
12 court?

13 MR. HENDON: Yes.

14 QUESTION: I thought you'd made that argument.

15 QUESTION: There was at least an implicit determina-
16 tion by the trial court when he admitted the evidence, wasn't 17 there? Didn't he necessarily, by implication --

18 MR. HENDON: Yes.

19 QUESTION: Find that there was, it was perfectly 20 proper to admit the evidence, and therefore that the evidence 21 -- it was not unconstitutional to admit the evidence?

22 MR. HENDON: Yes, but in addressing the question of 23 which primary facts we ought to defer to, which we are not to 24 defer to --

25 QUESTION: There was no discussion, there were no

1 findings of fact as such.

2 MR. HENDON: There was no discussion, so that's why
3 it's difficult to identify them.

4 Now, with regard to the merits, I -- as I understood
5 counsel to be speaking this morning -- I find that I have no 6 special objection to the test that's proposed here, that is 7 we look first to suggestiveness, secondly we look to necessity; 8 and we ask the question with regard to suggestiveness whether 9 these identification procedures could have been suggestive.
10 And with that statement I think what I'd like to do is identify 11 what I regard to be the issue in this case.

12 It seems to me that in Manson v. Brathwaite and in 13 Neil v. Biggers, this Court made clear that the focus of the 14 inquiry in eyewitness identification cases is suggestive-15 ness and reliability, and that the issue that's raised by 16 this case is what a court may properly consider in passing on 17 the question of whether a given identification is suggestive
18 and reliable.

19 QUESTION: You're suggesting then that basically the 20 9th Circuit and the state Court of Appeal applied the same 21 legal test for eyewitness identification?

22 MR. HENDON: The same as each other, each -- as each 23 other?

24 QUESTION: Yes, that they roughly applied the same 25 test but reached different results.

1 MR. HENDON: Yes, I would say that that's --

2 QUESTION: Well, then, wouldn't you feel that there
3 was some obligation on the Court of Appeals to say that the 4 state Court of Appeal was, that your client had demonstrated by 5 clear and convincing evidence under 2254(d) that the state
6 Court of Appeal was wrong?

7 MR. HENDON: I think that the only obligation that 8 the federal court had was to apply the law, the proper law, 9 whatever this Court finds it to be, to not substitute its 10 findings of fact for those that already were made, and to draw
11 constitutional conclusions from them. If the constitutional 12 conclusion that the federal Court of Appeals reaches is dif-
13 ferent from the conclusion that the state Court of Appeal
14 reached, then that issue will be resolved here, but I don't 15 think they had any independent obligation to apply a different
16 standard, a clear and convincing evidence standard, if I 17 understand the thrust of your question.

18 I think the only obligation was to apply the law
19 and to draw their conclusions from it.

20 QUESTION: How do you read the Subsection 8 of 21 2254(d) then, where it says that, where a factual issue was 22 determined by the state court, the burden is on the habeas 23 petitioner to prove by clear and convincing evidence that it 24 was wrong?

25 MR. HENDON: Well, it seems to me that that clear

1 and convincing evidence standard is a part of the already 2 existing legal standard, and that by implicitly, by coming to 3 the conclusion that it came to here, the 9th Circuit has in 4 essence said that.

5 QUESTION: Well, you think that on an appeal, say, 6 within the federal system that doesn't involve federal habeas,
7 that a court of appeals could reverse the admission of identi-8 fication testimony by a district court only if it found that 9 it was clear and convincingly wrong, rather than just wrong
10 by a preponderance of the evidence?

11 MR. HENDON: You're asking me whether, on a direct 12 appeal, and in a federal case?

13 QUESTION: On a direct appeal, yes?

14 MR. HENDON: Well, I have to plead ignorance on that, 15 Your Honor. I do not practice in federal --

16 QUESTION: Well, in a direct appeal of a federal 17 criminal conviction, a federal reviewing court sets the con-
18 viction aside if it finds that there was error in the trial, 19 and I don't know that there's ever been -- it doesn't need to 20 find that beyond a reasonable doubt or by clear and convincing 21 evidence; it just finds that there was error in the trial, 22 error in the admission of evidence or error in the instruc-
23 tions to the jury, or error somewhere else.

24 MR. HENDON: I think that's the point that I have 25 been trying to make, or I tried to make at the outset of

1 Justice Rehnquist's question, that the obligation of the 2 reviewing court is to apply the legal standard that this Court 3 tells it to apply.

4 QUESTION: Generally there's no great argument about 5 what happened at the trial because you have the trial record
6 and you know how the judge did instruct the jury, and you know 7 what was admitted in evidence, and so on.

8 MR. HENDON: You have that here too.

9 QUESTION: So, if you conclude that that was 10 erroneous, something about it, that it was prejudicial, a judg-11 ment of conviction is set aside.

12 MR. HENDON: You have that here too. I don't 13 think there's any problem with the record in that regard.
14 This is a fully litigated issue and you have a complete record
15 on the eyewitness identification question.

16 It seems to me that the dispute between the parties 17 on the merits in this case is essentially whether the Court of 18 Appeals ought to have been free to consider necessity, the lack 19 of necessity, and particularly the failure to conduct a lineup.
20 Now, it seems to me very clear that the court ought to have 21 been free to do it, and that's precisely what the Court of 22 Appeals did in this case.

23 The test that this Court has established in Manson 24 and in Neil is totality of the circumstances. A court looks 25 to all of the circumstances and so long as it predicates its

1 findings on reliability, so long as it looks to reliability,
2 and so long as reliability is the bottom line, then I read
3 this Court's opinions, especially in Manson and Neil, to con-
4 clude that any circumstance may be considered by a court so 5 long as it goes to reliability.

6 Now, here in this case you have a witness who is 7 essentially saying, I cannot make an identification from photo-
8 graphs, I need to see a lineup. You also have no reason why 9 a lineup could not have been conducted. Let's assume, at 10 least, that there is a dispute between the parties on that 11 question. But let's assume, for the moment, that there is no
12 explanation, there is no valid explanation for why a lineup
13 could not be conducted.

14 And it seems to me very obvious, under those facts, 15 that the failure to conduct a lineup is a factor going to 16 reliability. We all know, and this Court has held, that 17 lineups are more reliable than photographic identification
18 where you have a witness saying, I cannot make an identifica-19 tion from a photograph, it's too old, the photographs are in 20 black and white. Where you have a witness who's saying that,
21 and saying, I need to have a lineup, then it's perfectly pro-
22 per for a court to consider the failure to conduct a lineup.
23 And I think if you read the petitioner's briefs in this case,
24 you see that there has been a subtle shift from the opening
25 brief to the closing brief. What petitioner had been arguing

1 at the outset and what is essentially the position that, as I
2 read the 5th Circuit cases, has been adopted in the 5th Circuit,
3 is that you do not look to the conduct of the police in pass-
4 ing on suggestiveness. What you look to is the photo spread
5 by itself. You don't look beyond the photo spread, and you 6 look to the photo spread on its face.

7 Well, that assumes that so long as you have a photo
8 spread which is fair on its face, then you never get beyond 9 it and you never get to the second step, which is reliability.
10 And I think a few simple examples ought to demonstrate to the 11 Court that that simply cannot be the case.

12 Let's assume that you have a photo spread which is 13 fair on its face, but that the police officer is saying to the 14 witness, this is the person. Look at photograph number three, 15 don't you think that looks like him? Now, I think everybody
16 would concede that in a circumstance such as that the conduct 17 of the police in suggesting a particular identification to a 18 witness was a factor that properly could be considered in 19 passing on, (a) suggestiveness, and (b) reliability.

20 And I think that's essentially what was done in this 21 case. I think that you have peculiarity, a peculiar fact 22 situation in this case where you have a witness saying, I 23 cannot make an identification from a photograph, I need to see 24 a lineup. I think that that's one factor to be considered 25 along with many others that exist in this case that point to 1 a suggestive identification.

2 You have, for example, the police officers telling
3 the witnesses who made identifications -- I think the record
4 will bear out the conclusion that the initial identifications
5 that were made by witness Almengor were positive identifica-
6 tions. He identified someone by the name of "Bogus Pete"
7 Nunez, as the perpetrator of the offense, and the guard said 8 to him, no, no, it can't be Bogus Pete, Bogus Pete wasn't in 9 the prison at the time.

10 Now, it seems to me that if what the police are 11 interested in is simply the identification that the witness 12 presents to them rather than the one that they want to orches-
13 trate, they will not point out wrong choices. And I think 14 this Court has indicated in several of its cases that it will 15 not do that.

16 Secondly, they removed all choices that they thought 17 were wrong. The other witnesses, the other -- Almengor also 18 pointed out other people who simply magically disappeared from 19 subsequent showups. Their photographs just never recurred 20 again. I think the record also supports the fact that the 21 three defendants who were ultimately identified were brought 22 before the holding cell in a very suggestive way so that this 23 also focused the attention of the witnesses on them. These 24 are all factors which I think the Court of Appeal considered.
25 I think if you read the Court of Appeal's opinion,

1 it considered all proper factors, it applied an appropriate
2 standard, and it came to the only conclusion that I think it
3 could have come, which was that you had a very volatile, tense 4 situation, there was an interest in identifying somebody, in 5 getting somebody incarcerated for these -- this offense, and 6 they just picked out the three people that they thought were 7 most conducive to being convicted.

8 Now, I think if anything proves the necessity for 9 a lineup in this case, nothing does it so much as the fact
10 that after one of the witnesses said, I need to see a lineup, 11 I cannot make identifications in photographs. They finally 12 showed him the last photo spread, he points to the three 13 defendants, they take him out, he has a chance encounter with 14 the defendant Vargas, who is taking a shower, he sees him live, 15 and he says, my God, I identified the wrong person, and he 16 turns to the guard and he says, I picked out the wrong person, 17 this is not the person who did it.

18 Now, this is a live, he sees him live. This is the 19 only opportunity that he had to see him live and he said, I
20 picked out the wrong person. The guard said, in effect, tell 21 it to the judge. And he goes to court, and here we are today.
22 I think that is palpable proof of the fact that these witnesses
23 indeed needed a lineup, that you could not have a reliable 24 identification in this case without a lineup, and that the 25 Court of Appeals properly considered that factor in reversing

1 this conviction. Thank you.

2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
3 further, Mr. Brady?

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF THOMAS A BRADY, ESQ.,

5 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER -- REBUTTAL

6 MR. BRADY: Very briefly. If, to concede at the 7 moment for purposes of argument that the state Court of 8 Appeal's opinion was an opinion on the merits of the constitu-9 tional issue, then we submit that that court's findings should 10 be accorded the presumption of correctness of Section 2254(d).
11 We raised this point expressly in our return in the district 12 court, and this appears at page 195 of the Joint Appendix.

13 In the 9th Circuit we raised the point a little bit 14 differently. We were at that point reviewing the findings of 15 the district court, and we asked the 9th Circuit to accord to 16 the findings of the district court, which as far as we could 17 see had given appropriate deference to the state Court of 18 Appeal's findings, we asked the 9th Circuit to give the dis-19 trict court's findings deference. It did not.

20 QUESTION: Did the 9th Circuit show a lack of 21 deference to anything other than the ultimate conclusion of the 22 district court?

23 MR. BRADY: Yes; yes, Your Honor --

24 QUESTION: Did they differ on the historical facts?

25 MR. BRADY: I think they differed on the historical

1 facts. I think two examples will show this. The state Court
2 of Appeal opinion says, in so many words --

3 QUESTION: Your colleague doesn't agree with you, 4 does he, on that?

5 MR. BRADY: He apparently does not. The state Court
6 of Appeal says in so many words, there was no influence on 7 the witnesses by the investigating officers. The 9th Circuit
8 holds precisely to the contrary. The state Court of Appeal 9 says there was an adequate opportunity for the witnesses to 10 view the attackers at the time of the attack. The 9th Circuit 11 doesn't so much take that on; it says, the fact that there was 12 this knife attack going on, this violence, this excitement, 13 that very likely had the effect of, if you will, taking the 14 witness's attention away from the men in front of him so that 15 very likely they did not have an opportunity to view the 16 attack.

17 This particular finding seems to be a general pur-18 pose one made up by the 9th Circuit. It could apply to any 19 crime of violence. There is nothing in the record here that 20 these witnesses said, we were afraid, or anything of that sort.
21 So that I think we really have not an academic exercise here, 22 we have a case where a federal appellate court has very really 23 found that it should be a fact finder in a case where there's 24 been both a state trial court determination, state appellate 25 court determination, and also a district court determination.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Brady, if we agree to the 9th Circuit
2 with respect to the necessity part of its opinion, would we 3 reach this other issue?

4 MR. BRADY: I think we would, Your Honor.

5 QUESTION: You don't think the necessity ruling was 6 dispositive, or independently dispositive?

7 MR. BRADY: No, Your Honor, I do not. It was one 8 or two strikes against us, but I think even if we were to 9 assume that the 9th Circuit were correct in this, I still do 10 not think we would be over the line into where we would have 11 a constitutional violation. This Court, I think, has never 12 stated the appropriate standard better than in the Foster case.
13 It asks, is this the man? Has this man been singled out?
14 Looking at the circumstances here, I think this Court cannot 15 conclude that. Thank you.

16 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER; Thank you, gentlemen.
17 The case is submitted.

18 (Whereupon, at 11:10 o'clock a.m., the case in the 19 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
