MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments now in Complete Auto Transit v. Reis.

Mr. Hunter, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF R. IAN HUNTER, ESQ.

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

MR. HUNTER: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

The issue submitted to the Court in this case is limited to a determination whether individual employees who engage in a violation of a collective bargaining agreement and who acted without the authorization of their labor organization are responsible for damages sustained by their employer and liable to it arising out of their individualized breach of that collective bargaining agreement.

And I might note that it would appear that is the very issue reserved by this Court in its decision of Atkinson v. Sinclair Refining. I think a --

QUESTION: Is this exclusively a question under Section 301?

MR. HUNTER: Yes, Your Honor.

QUESTION: Of the 1947 Act?

MR. HUNTER: Yes, it is, Your Honor. A brief recitation of the facts, I think, are important to a determination of this issue.

1 In June of 1967 the respondent employees engaged in 2 a work stoppage against the three petitioners for up to and 3 including two weeks in time. Now, petitioners alleged and 4 respondents admit that at no time did their labor organiza-
5 tion, aid, abet, condone, or authorize this work stoppage, 6 that this was indeed an individual action on their part.

7 QUESTION: You're equating that to ordinary breach 8 of contract between private parties?

9 MR. HUNTER: I'm equating it to the violation of 10 the agreement that contained a no-strike clause.

11 QUESTION: Just as though there was no union entity
12 involved?

13 MR. HUNTER: Well, I can't involve a collective 14 bargaining agreement without acknowledging the role of the 15 union, but I do know that the no-strike clause should be 16 equally enforceable against the employees as well as the union.

17 QUESTION: Just as though 124 individuals had 18 signed a contract with the employer without any union?

19 MR. HUNTER: To the degree that they signed a no-
20 strike clause, yes. Yes, Your Honor.

21 QUESTION: Yes. That's what I'm driving at.

22 MR. HUNTER: Petitioner employers now attempt to 23 hold these employees responsible for the damages directly 24 resulting from their individualized breaches of the collec-25 tive bargaining agreement pursuant to this lawsuit brought in

1 accordance with Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations
2 Act.

3 Now, although 301 on its face contemplates suits
4 alleging violation of collective bargaining agreements, 5 petitioner concedes that the language does not expressly 6 address the issue of individual liability arising out of 7 those violations. A review of relevant congressional history, 8 in the opinion of petitioners, indicates that Congress did 9 not specifically authorize or prohibit such actions against 10 individual employees, when their conduct was not authorized 11 by their local unions.

12 QUESTION: Well, I gather though the statutes, 13 the genesis, initially, was that there wasn't any way pre-14 viously of suing unions.

15 MR. HUNTER: Yes, that was one of the principal 16 concerns.

17 QUESTION: And 301 was enacted so that unions might 18 be made subject to suits.

19 MR. HUNTER: That's right. That was one of the 20 principal concerns. That was one, as I understand, not the 21 only concern.

22 QUESTION: Well, I know, but -- it may not have been 23 the only one, but was there one that individual employees 24 should be subject to suits?

25 MR. HUNTER: Was there -- ?

1 QUESTION: Was one of the reasons to make indi-
2 vidual employees alleged to have violated collective bar-
3 gaining agreements subject to suits?

4 MR. HUNTER: No, I don't believe that there was any 5 specific discussion covering that subject matter in the Taft-6 Hartley.

7 The purpose of the Taft-Hartley, as I understand 8 it, and in reading this Court's decisions, not attempting 9 to tell you what you meant, but attempting to read as what I 10 understand it to be, is that Section 301 was intended to per-11 mit the enforcement of labor agreements against labor organi-12 zations, as pointed out by Justice Brennan; to hold these 13 agreements equally binding upon all parties to that collec-
14 tive bargaining agreement; to foster a collective bargaining 15 process as the desired method of resolving industrial disputes 16 in this country.

17 QUESTION: Now, as I recall it, there was a lot of 18 discussion in the legislative history of the Danbury Hatters 19 case, wasn't there?

20 MR. HUNTER: There was, particularly in the Case bill 21 and to some degree as it related to Section 301(b). Now, 22 there was indeed some congressional concern about that, but 23 petitioners respectfully suggest that the facts confronting 24 the Court in this issue are considerably different and not 25 analogous to Danbury Hatters. As I understand Danbury Hatters

1 it was a decision which arose out of a consumer or secondary 2 boycott by the Hatters' Union against Danbury Hatters. It's 3 my understanding that the members of the union who were ulti-4 mately held responsible for damages may or may not have known
5 of the actions of their union. It was a consumer boycott.
6 But by their association with the union the court held that 7 they were responsible for the damages imposed by the union.
8 And this was the spectrum --

9 QUESTION: But that the union, as union, could not 10 be held responsible?

11 MR. HUNTER: No, the union could have been held 12 responsible but in that time they couldn't have because it 13 was under court-abridged association; right.

14 QUESTION: That's right.

15 MR. HUNTER: And therefore they had to go to the 16 employees to seek the assets to fulfill for damage remedies.
17 Congress was concerned about that and sought in 301(b) 18 specific language which said that a damage judgment against 19 unions is not to be held -- the individuals are not to be 20 held responsible. And we are not attempting by this decision 21 to invade that, or this Court's prior decision in Atkinson
22 v. Sinclair. But we are addressing another issue.

23 Now, respondent and amicus, we believe, erroneously 24 attempt to convert some legislative history dealing with the 25 Case bill as dispositive of the present issue. And in that

1 sense they attempt to persuade the Court that the Case bill 2 discussions, which did deal with the issue of discipline be-3 ing the sole remedy available to employers in an unauthorized 4 strike, is applicable to the Taft-Hartley bill. And I direct 5 the Congress's discussion as to 10(d) of the Case bill as the 6 points in question that respondent attempts to emphasize.

7 They contend that this language and the congres-
8 sional discussion attendant to this language provides a basis
9 for the premise that Congress must have intended that disci-
10 pline should be the sole remedy available to the employer.

11 I believe these arguments avoid two very significant facts.

12 One, the provisions of 10(d) of the Case bill did not survive 13 the Taft-Hartley and, in fact, show up only briefly in the 14 early days of the Taft-Hartley and disappear inexplicably.

15 And we can't find out why, in reading the congressional his-16 tory, but it disappeared. And the discussion relied upon by 17 the respondents as well as the three circuit courts which have 18 discussed this matter, do not recognize that this discussion 19 was not repeated, it was not an integral part of the congres-20 sional history of the Taft-Hartley.

21 Effort to impose upon the Taft-Hartley the meaning 22 of a provision not included within it seems to be erroneous 23 in the opinion of petitioners. Moreover, the role of 24 congressional silence as the adoption of a controlling rule 25 of law is less treacherous, as I reflect the verbiage of 1 this Court in Boys Markets. We believe that more disposi-

2 tive of the present issue, is the discussion in the House 3 conference report, in the Taft-Hartley itself, where the 4 House rejected the Senate's proposed unfair labor practice 5 involving breaches of collective bargaining agreements, which 6 ostensibly would have encompassed a violation of a no-strike 7 clause; omitted that provision, in deference to the enforce-8 ment of collective bargaining agreements by the usual pro-
9 cesses of law, a principle noted by this Court in Dowd Box
10 and reflected in the House conference report, No. 510, p. 52.

11 Petitioners respectfully submit that a damage 12 remedy against the proven violators of a contract certainly 13 is more consistent with the usual processes of law than the 14 total absence of such remedy or the total dependence upon a 15 disciplinary device which is suggested by the courts, the 16 circuit courts and respondents.

17 QUESTION: Well, does petitioner, your client, 18 concede -- or does it? -- that this is a question of federal 19 law?

20 MR. HUNTER: Absolutely.

21 QUESTION: Governed by the federal labor law?

22 MR. HUNTER: Absolutely.

23 QUESTION: And I suppose it is true that if the 24 union had been liable in the case, the individuals would not 25 have been?

1 MR. HUNTER: Would not have; exactly.

2 QUESTION: Now, is that -- do you really mean that,
3 or is it that you mean just that a judgment against the union 4 can't be collected from the -- ?

5 MR. HUNTER: No, I would mean that the facts of 6 this case are such that given your Carbon Fuel decision, 7 there would be no way that petitioners could seek to hold 8 the labor organization involved here liable.

9 QUESTION: No, I didn't, that isn't my question.
10 My question is, suppose that the union was liable in this 11 case. Suppose on the facts of this case the union could be 12 sued for violating the no-strike clause.

13 MR. HUNTER: Fine.

14 QUESTION: Could the employer also sue with the 15 union the employees?

16 MR. HUNTER: I would suggest that 301(b) establishes 17 a firmer foundation for precluding that remedy than it does 18 in this case. The union itself would be held responsible 19 for the actions of its members.

20 QUESTION: But would you just say, would you say 21 that the -- you say that if the union were liable, the em-
22 ployees, the action against the employees should be dismissed 23 for failure to state a cause of action?

24 MR. HUNTER: Yes. Yes, I would say that that would 25 be my understanding of the current state of the law, when the 1 union can be held responsible for its actions. It is the 2 principal party to the contract, but the employees must be viewed 3 as party, at least they have been deemed parties for pur-

4 poses of enforcing their rights. And if the union is not 5 responsible and has taken whatever action it felt necessary 6 and could to curtail the work stoppage, to eliminate the 7 work stoppage, where else would the employer look for a 8 monetary remedy?

9 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Hunter, what if you had an 10 insolvent union? Why couldn't you sue the employees directly 11 under your theory?

12 MR. HUNTER: Again, I suppose you could and maybe 13 that's the next step in this development of the law, but, 14 seeing as the union's responsible for the fact that it's in-15 solvent is merely a question of collection, not a question 16 of principle, because the --

17 QUESTION: But the individuals also have violated
18 the contract under your theory?

19 MR. HUNTER: All under the auspices of their local 20 union, their exclusive representative for that purpose. It's 21 where they avoid that device along with a no-strike clause
22 that I feel that they put themselves in jeopardy and leaving 23 the employer without a remedy.

24 QUESTION: Well, don't you have a remedy in the 25 state court?

1 MR. HUNTER: That's my understanding; we do not.

2 QUESTION: Why not?

3 MR. HUNTER: The federal law is exclusive under 301.

4 QUESTION: Well, if you say it, if the federal law
5 covers it and there's no cause of action against the employees 6 that's the answer, and if that's your relief, that would be 7 true whether there was jurisdiction under 301 or not.

8 MR. HUNTER: The state court maybe at that point, 9 but then, say, in light of a determination that there is no
10 cause of action against employees in the federal law, there-11 fore we have jurisdiction and we could --

12 QUESTION: Well, the question would be, whether a 13 federal law affirmatively says there is no cause of action 14 against individual employees --

15 MR. HUNTER: Then I would --

16 QUESTION: Or whether the holding is that federal 17 law just is nonexistent in that area.

18 MR. HUNTER: Well, could there be a remedy available 19 in the state court under either of those circumstances?

20 QUESTION: No, and the first one there, it clearly 21 would not be.

22 MR. HUNTER: Not be, and the other one there might 23 be.

24 QUESTION: Yes. ~~It wouldn't be there, if federal~~

25 QUESTION: Well, why wouldn't there be, if federal

1 law is simply nonexistent, then there would no barrier to a 2 state law, if you have -- isn't that right?

3 MR. HUNTER: Exactly. But a federal law

4 QUESTION: But if federal law affirmatively says
5 there cannot be a right of action against individual employ-6 ees, then there can't be in a state court either.

7 MR. HUNTER: That's right.

8 QUESTION: But in our Boeing decision of some years
9 ago, didn't we say that it wasn't up to the NLRB to decide 10 whether the fines levied by a union on members who crossed a 11 picket line were unreasonable or not, that that was an action 12 that would have to be brought in a state court?

13 MR. HUNTER: It did, but I don't know how that 14 points on to the issue. I would be hard pressed, until 15 today, to argue that I could go into the state courts seeking 16 remedies of damages for a violation of a no-strike clause 17 between an employer and a labor organization in interstate 18 commerce and not be told that I have to deal with federal law.

19 QUESTION: But I don't think that's universally true 20 of every conceivable dispute.

21 MR. HUNTER: Oh, not every conceivable item, but 22 certainly a violation of a no-strike clause would be one of 23 those I would assume would fall within that area.

24 QUESTION: You don't have to assume it. That's 25 been held.

1 MR. HUNTER: That's right.

2 QUESTION: And if you suggest that if you brought a 3 cause of action against the union and the employees together, 4 claiming the union is responsible and that the employees are 5 responsible too, you told me a minute ago that the employees 6 should be dismissed from the suit if the union is liable.

7 MR. HUNTER: They were, for example, in Atkinson 8 v. Sinclair Refining on the plea that they were agents of 9 the union.

10 QUESTION: And you wouldn't suggest then that you
11 could turn around and sue them in state court?

12 MR. HUNTER: No, I certainly would not at this point.
13 I feel I am limited to whatever remedy is available under 14 the federal law at this point in the development of the 15 federal labor laws. And the problem that we have as peti-16 tioners is that we don't know what that remedy is under the 17 current state of the law.

18 In the context of the absence of any explicit con-19 gressional mandate, and at best an ambiguous congressional 20 history, we look as petitioners to the language of this Court 21 to determine the logic of our suggested remedy.

22 QUESTION: Well, could I ask you, is it clear under 23 the lower court cases -- I'm not sure that we have a case -- 24 that the employer, if the strike is still going on, a wildcat 25 strike is still going on, may the employer enjoin the 1 wildcatters themselves?

2 MR. HUNTER: As I understand it, there is no deci-
3 sion of this Court which has resolved that issue.

4 QUESTION: How about the lower courts?

5 MR. HUNTER: I know that I have succeeded in enjoin-6 ing wildcatters by a federal district court injunction but --

7 QUESTION: Under 301?

8 MR. HUNTER: And --

9 QUESTION: Under 301 and saying that the contract 10 is enforceable against the individuals?

11 MR. HUNTER: For example, the 6th Circuit in this 12 case. We brought this issue to you. They also determined 13 than an injunction against these employees was forthcoming 14 except that by the time the injunction was issued the --

15 QUESTION: It was moot.

16 MR. HUNTER: -- it was moot.

17 QUESTION: But did you get those injunctions in 18 the context of collective bargaining agreements with arbi-19 tration clauses?

20 MR. HUNTER: Yes.

21 QUESTION: Not otherwise?

22 MR. HUNTER: Not otherwise.

23 QUESTION: And in a federal district court?

24 MR. HUNTER: In a federal district court; yes.

25 QUESTION: Under 301?

1 MR. HUNTER: Under 301. Additionally, for the 2 Court's benefit, the strike began, we went for an ex parte, 3 it was denied, we went for a hearing, we were denied the 4 injunction because the lower court found that the dispute
5 at that time appeared to be a dispute --

6 QUESTION: Buffalo Forge's case?

7 MR. HUNTER: Well, it was in the sense it was 8 not arbitrable.

9 QUESTION: Yes.

10 MR. HUNTER: Ultimately, during the duration of the 11 strike, the issue changed and was enjoined because it became 12 a dispute that was arbitrable.

13 QUESTION: Yes. And only then.

14 MR. HUNTER: Only.

15 QUESTION: Otherwise Section 4 of Norris-La Guardia
16 would bar you just as much --

17 MR. HUNTER: That's right. And it was so found, 18 barred us in the early stages of that strike.

19 Now, as I understand it, Lincoln Mills directs that 20 the lower courts fashion a body of substantive federal law 21 for the enforcement of collective bargaining agreements, 22 which was viewed by this Court a paramount concern of 23 Congress. The Court recognized that the act itself provided 24 some specific guidance. Other problems, admittedly, were 25 within the penumbra of the express statutory mandate.

1 This Court envisioned that union as well as employee
2 should be bound to the collective bargaining agreements.
3 And the lower courts were asked to look at the policy of the 4 legislation and fashion a remedy or remedies that would effec-
5 tuate that policy, the enforcement of collective bargaining 6 agreements. The degree of judicial inventiveness would be 7 determined by the nature of the problem. We appealed to the 8 judicial inventiveness of the 6th Circuit and were told that 9 the remedy we sought was not available. We suggest that that 10 was an error on the part of the 6th Circuit and the issue 11 was framed accordingly.

12 Smith v. Evening News brings to fruition the abili-
13 ty of employees, ostensibly those same employees involved 14 in this work stoppage, to enforce their rights under the 15 collective bargaining agreement, and to bring an action under 16 301 to enforce the employer's obligation to them, whether be 17 he terminated for unjust cause or whether his seniority was 18 violated, but the employer is expected to comply with the 19 collective bargaining agreement and if the union doesn't take 20 care of it, the employee is entitled to under the conditions 21 enunciated by this Court in its Vaca v. Sipes and Hines v.
22 Anchor cases. So the employee is clearly made a party for 23 enforcement purposes by this Court, I think consistent with 24 the congressional intent, and as this case, wherein the 25 petitioner seeks to allow the employer to enforce a right

1 afforded it by its employees when they seek to ignore both 2 the contract and their local union.

3 QUESTION: Could I just ask you a question that's 4 running through my mind?

5 MR. HUNTER: Justice Stevens.

6 QUESTION: There are two remedies available when 7 the employee breaches a contract. One, you can get an 8 injunction requiring him to go back to work. And secondly, 9 you can discharge him. Those are both remedies.

10 MR. HUNTER: They are available within the limits 11 imposed by this Court and the lower courts comply with its 12 decisions. For example, in this case, the petitioners were 13 unable to enjoin the strike in its early stages even though 14 it was ostensibly a violation of the no-strike clause because 15 the issue was viewed not arbitrable.

16 QUESTION: Well, perhaps sometimes the injunctive 17 remedy is not available. The discharge remedy is always 18 available.

19 MR. HUNTER: Discharge; it should be always avail-20 able.

21 QUESTION: Now, on the damage remedy that you asked 22 the judiciary to invent, what is the measure of damages?

23 MR. HUNTER: The measure of damages would be the 24 proven damages as sustained by the employers as the result 25 of work stoppage.

1 QUESTION: Loss of profits to the company?

2 MR. HUNTER: Loss of profits based upon the circum-
3 stances, whatever they could prove were damages.

4 QUESTION: Is there a body of law that tells us
5 that that would be the measure of damages?

6 MR. HUNTER: I suspect that the courts would have 7 to revert to the contract -- for a violation --

8 QUESTION: I'm going to ask a question, that's 9 the next question down the road, I guess.

10 MR. HUNTER: That's really something that at this 11 point -- there's no specific difference between damages for 12 a breach of a collective bargaining agreement and otherwise, 13 to the best of my knowledge.

14 QUESTION: Well, there are not many suits by employ-15 ers against employees generally, is there?

16 MR. HUNTER: No, there are not.

17 QUESTION: I'm just wondering what your --

18 MR. HUNTER: But there are against local unions.

19 QUESTION: I understand.

20 MR. HUNTER: And I believe they've measured those 21 in loss of profits, whatever you can relate as to proven 22 damages as a result of proven violations that occurred. It 23 could be ordinary contract damages.

24 QUESTION: Sometimes, you know, there are different 25 contract damage rules, whether it was in the contemplation of

1 the parties, and loss of profits, a lot of different -- I know 2 you don't have a theory yet as what damage recovery would be?

3 MR. HUNTER: I do not. I have not been permitted 4 to develop the theory of damages because the action was dis-
5 missed prior to any deliberations.

6 QUESTION: Getting into ancient history, the Dan-
7 bury Hatters was a very big one, wasn't it?

8 MR. HUNTER: In the damages? Yes. Hundreds of 9 thousands of dollars, I believe, against hundreds of members 10 of the Hatters' Union.

11 QUESTION: But it was a big one?

12 MR. HUNTER: Most of whom, as I understand it, knew 13 nothing about what was being boycotted, unlike here where we 14 only would be able to sustain damages against those indi-
15 viduals who knowingly had violated the collective bargaining 16 agreement. Boys Markets, the next in this Court's line of 17 decision, reflects this Court's recognition of the vital im-18 portance of the no-strike agreement to the employer. This 19 Court characterized it as the quid pro quo upon which the 20 employer agreed to submit its industrial disputes to arbi-
21 tration. An injunction was justified by this Court to enjoin 22 violation of that important provision. And it recognized in 23 Boys Market that frequently the circumstances surrounding the 24 passage of labor legislation changes to a degree that it is 25 necessary entirely to emphasize remedies and impose

1 responsibilities not necessarily contemplated by Congress at 2 the time that they passed that labor legislation in question.

3 We then come to this Court's decision in Carbon 4 Fuel which I believe puts into perspective the urgency of 5 this Court's decision as to the issue submitted today.
6 Carbon Fuel found that a labor organization is not obligated 7 for the damages imposed by people acting beyond the common 8 law rule of agency in the midst of a violation of a no-
9 strike clause. That puts into focus the Atkinson v. Sinclair 10 where individuals were not responsible for the actions of 11 their union, and Carbon Fuel puts into the law that unions 12 are not responsible for the actions of individuals not 13 acting as their agents. The question we now raise, are those 14 individuals who violate that contract responsible to the 15 employer, given the fact that the labor organization is not?

16 QUESTION: What if you had sued in the federal 17 district court under diversity of citizenship and alleged 18 more than $10,000 in damages and said this was a breach of 19 contract on the part of these particular individuals? Do 20 you think it would have been thrown out?

21 MR. HUNTER: I think we would have been confronted 22 with the same argument I am now confronted with, that this is 23 a violation of a collective bargaining agreement and it con-
24 stitutes part of the Lincoln Mills substantive federal labor
25 law, and I think they would have been somewhat justified --

1 I think.

2 QUESTION: Why couldn't they have applied that in 3 the diversity case?

4 MR. HUNTER: Well, diversity, I'd have trouble
5 getting diversity in light of it's a Michigan corporation
6 suing Michigan employees.

7 QUESTION: But it would be the same question of 8 federal law.

9 MR. HUNTER: I think so. I'm convinced it would be.

10 QUESTION: Well, except that, as suggested earlier,
11 just because you don't have a lawsuit under Section 301
12 in a federal district court doesn't necessarily mean that you 13 don't have an action for a breach of contract in a state 14 court.

15 MR. HUNTER: It does not --

16 QUESTION: If the result of this case is there just 17 isn't any federal law, that this isn't under 301, but it's 18 not prohibited by federal law, then you do have, presumably, 19 subject to the state law --

20 MR. HUNTER: If this Court's decisions were like 21 that very dogma, I think maybe an argument could be based on 22 that --

23 QUESTION: Then it would be a matter of state law, 24 whether or not you have one.

25 MR. HUNTER: It would be a matter of state law,

1 and the absence of uniformity in an area very closely related 2 to federal labor law might be --

3 QUESTION: Might be very undesirable.

4 MR. HUNTER: -- undesirable. Well, one comment
5 before -- I just want to make one point that respondents' 6 and amicus's contention that discharge is a better solution 7 and a better deterrent doesn't really make a lot of sense to 8 me. Discharge has been viewed by many as industrial capital 9 punishment and I don't think the employees being terminated 10 are necessarily going to find their relationship with their 11 employer any more harmonious than if they were being subjected 12 to a lawsuit merely to collect those damages that they cost 13 the employer.

14 QUESTION: If you have -- if a producer has a con-
15 tract with Ingrid Bergman and she walks off honoring a no-16 strike clause, to discharge her is exactly what she wants.
17 Damages is really the producer's only remedy for redress.

18 MR. HUNTER: I believe it was Senator Taft that 19 even suggested that in some of his dialogue that after all,
20 if an employee quits, he's quitting when he violates the no-21 strike clause and he ought to assuming that's what he wanted.
22 And he concurred with that.

23 QUESTION: May I ask, isn't there some legislative 24 history to indicate that Congress intended that the sanction 25 should be limited to discharge or other discipline than damages?

1 MR. HUNTER: I respectfully suggest that
2 that was at least in the case of bill dealing with Section 3 10(d) and 10(d) did not survive the Taft-Hartley.

4 QUESTION: And you think that's -- it's limited
5 to that, or something?

6 MR. HUNTER: I do, and that's where the dialogue 7 took place.

8 QUESTION: Well, the legislative history reflects
9 that discharge was a remedy --

10 MR. HUNTER: A remedy suggested --

11 QUESTION: -- but it could not negate a private 12 suit.

13 MR. HUNTER: That is my opinion of the Congres-14 sional history about this.

15 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Grossman.

16 ORAL ARGUMENT OF HIRAM S. GROSSMAN, ESQ.,

17 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

18 QUESTION: You might at some point, if you would, 19 touch on that legislative history, but at your own time and 20 convenience.

21 MR. GROSSMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please 22 the Court:

23 Respondents respectfully urge this honorable Court
24 to affirm the decision of the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals
25 and conclude that petitioner is not entitled to a damage

1 remedy under Section 301 against its employees who breached 2 a collective bargaining agreement by participating in an 3 unauthorized work stoppage; and that the petitioners' remedies 4 and relief under Section 301 are discipline and discharge of 5 employees, which I may add, it has already done; it obtained
6 a Boys Market injunction; and it quickly did end the unauthor-7 ized work stoppage which it has already obtained; and they 8 had the cooperation and the assistance of the union in not 9 authorizing or sanctioning the work stoppage, and also urging 10 the employees to return to work.

11 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Grossman, what if a producer 12 had a contract with Ingrid Bergman and she walked off the 13 lot honoring a no-strike clause, or a sympathy strike, or 14 something like that, and do you say that there would be no 15 action even in diversity in a federal court against her 16 for damages?

17 MR. GROSSMAN: Are we somehow saying that Ingrid
18 Bergman is also covered under this collective bargaining 19 agreement?

20 QUESTION: Yes, that she's a member of the Screen 21 Actors' Guild.

22 MR. GROSSMAN: She's a member of the Screen Actors'
23 Guild. I would say then, Your Honor, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, 24 that the provisions of the Act, although not expressing it,
25 the legislative history, and the policy behind the Act

1 would not allow a damage remedy.

2 QUESTION: In other words, the Congress affirma-
3 tively prohibited damages by simply conferring jurisdiction 4 on federal courts under 301?

5 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, I think the purposes of the 6 enactment of Section 301 are -- when I say limited, are -- 7 It was to make unions responsible, allow a forum in which 8 they could be sued to enforce collective bargaining agree-9 ments, it was to also assure the union -- let me back up.
10 It was also to assure employees that even if they did violate 11 terms of the collective bargaining agreement, they would not 12 be subject to a damage action but --

13 QUESTION: Where do you find that in the language 14 of 301?

15 MR. GROSSMAN: Okay. Well --

16 QUESTION: That a party whose agent negotiates an 17 agreement for them is not subject to damages -- ?

18 MR. GROSSMAN: The language does not expressly 19 state that, Your Honor, but what I am saying the purpose of 20 the statute, the enactment of the statute, it was to accom-21 plish certain limited ends. When I say, limited, it wanted to 22 make unions responsible under the terms of the collective 23 bargaining agreement.

24 QUESTION: It didn't want to make employees irre-25 sponsible.

1 MR. GROSSMAN: No, it didn't want to make employees
2 irresponsible. And the nature of an employer's relief, I
3 maintain, is that employees who do violate the terms of a 4 contract are subject to discipline and/or discharge.

5 QUESTION: But why aren't they subject to damages 6 the way any other person signing an employment contract is?

7 MR. GROSSMAN: Under Section 301, I am maintaining, 8 they would not be, because Congress in enacting the legisla-9 tion created these rights that can be used to enforce the 10 terms of the contract to a specific group. And I say, it 11 bound the union, it made the union responsible for its actions.
12 It makes -- when I say it makes the employees responsible, 13 it makes it that if the employee breaches the terms of a 14 contract and the employer acts by disciplining or discharging 15 the employee, the employee has, what I say, no recourse.
16 The enactment, at the time Section 301 was enacted, the 17 Taft-Hartley Act added union unfair labor practices, it also 18 stated that if an employer discharges an employee and the 19 employer has cause, the employee does not have a right of 20 action under the National Labor Relations Act to allege that 21 his discharge was violative of that.

22 QUESTION: Does an employee have a right to sue 23 in a federal district court, not under 301, but under diver-24 sity jurisdiction, an employer for breach of his contract and 25 and allege damages?

1 MR. GROSSMAN: I'm unaware of any actions that have 2 happened. That ~~isn't~~ to say that there isn't any; I'm 3 just saying that I am unaware of any, Your Honor.

4 QUESTION: Justice Rehnquist's question takes me
5 back to the one I put to your friend at the outset: are you 6 saying that you have the same kind of claim as though you 7 have individual contracts with these employees with no union 8 involved at all? And I think he said, yes. Now, to take 9 the Ingrid Bergman or any other star, if Ingrid Bergman, for 10 example, made a private contract, is not a member of any 11 union, then walked off the scene when they'd done half of the 12 film and spent millions of dollars, would there not be a 13 suit for breach of contract for damages against her?

14 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, if there would, it wouldn't be 15 under 301.

16 QUESTION: No, no, but, there's no question about 17 if there would be, would there not? A breach of contract?

18 MR. GROSSMAN: There conceivably could be, if their 19 rights were violated. But the focus that we have to put in 20 front of us now is that this action was brought under Section 21 301, it wasn't brought under diversity, it wasn't brought 22 under any --

23 QUESTION: Then the question arises, whether 301
24 precludes -- now, you, you, I take it, concede that there 25 being no union contract, there being no 301 problem, the 1 producer could have an action for breach of contract against 2 the actor or actress.

3 MR. GROSSMAN: Okay, I can't see any reason why 4 they could not.

5 QUESTION: There's no equitable remedy available 6 because they can't compel the painting of a picture or the 7 performance of a work of art. So, what is the difference, 8 then, because there happens to be a collective bargaining
9 contract? Unless you can point to something that Congress 10 intended to wipe out that private action.

11 MR. GROSSMAN: Okay. I'm not going to contend -- 12 that I'm unaware whether Congress intended to wipe out --

13 QUESTION: Well, the question here is, isn't it -- 14 or am I mistaken? -- whether or not Section 301 confers 15 federal jurisdiction over a case such as this?

16 MR. GROSSMAN: But that is -- okay, that is a 17 matter that, how this matter originally arose, and it arose 18 in 1976. Yes, it was --

19 QUESTION: Well, is that the question or not?

20 MR. GROSSMAN: It is that whether it's under 21 Section 301 --

22 QUESTION: Whether or not Section 301 confers the 23 jurisdiction of a federal district court over an action such 24 as this?

25 MR. GROSSMAN: Over a damage action against

1 individual employees.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Grossman, if you look at the statute, 3 what the statute says is, jurisdiction is conferred on dis-
4 trict courts of suits for violation of contracts concluded 5 as the result of collective bargaining between an employer
6 and a labor organization representing employees in an indus-7 try affecting commerce. And the question is whether this is 8 a suit which is maintainable under that language, isn't it?

9 MR. GROSSMAN: It's a suit that is maintainable
10 under 301 --

11 QUESTION: That's what I say, is it -- it's a 12 question of construction of that language, isn't it?

13 MR. GROSSMAN: In construing Section 301(a), the 14 type of suit, to seek the remedy of damage, I would say that 15 Section 301(a) does not intend that type of --

16 QUESTION: Cannot be construed to authorize a 17 suit of this kind or confer jurisdiction over --

18 MR. GROSSMAN: No, it would not confer jurisdiction 19 on a federal district court to entertain a suit of this type.

20 QUESTION: Now, that's what you have to persuade 21 us, isn't it?

22 QUESTION: May I just add one question? Is it not 23 also true that if 301 does not authorize this suit, then the 24 suit may not go forward, because there's no other basis for 25 federal jurisdiction here?

1 MR. GROSSMAN: True.

2 QUESTION: So we don't have to reach the question
3 whether it's 301 prohibits the suit. We just have to first 4 decide whether it authorizes a suit.

5 MR. GROSSMAN: That's right. If Section 301 does 6 not authorize the suit, then --

7 QUESTION: That's the end of this case.

8 MR. GROSSMAN: That's the end --

9 QUESTION: And whether they could sue in a state 10 court or sue Ingrid Bergman would be in another lawsuit, not 11 this one.

12 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Grossman, on that other thing
13 you're saying that the remedy is to discharge?

14 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, the employer has the option 15 of disciplining or discharging the employees.

16 QUESTION: Let me ask you, if 90 percent of the 17 employees go out on an illegal strike, is firing them an 18 adequate remedy?

19 MR. GROSSMAN: If the employer so --

20 QUESTION: Because he couldn't run on ten, with 21 that, can he?

22 MR. GROSSMAN: I'm sorry.

23 QUESTION: I said, if 90 percent are out, is his 24 only remedy to fire 90 percent of his labor force?

25 MR. GROSSMAN: No, he can do what this employer did,

1 is go into federal district court and seek an injunction which 2 it obtained.

3 QUESTION: How -- why can he do that under 301?
4 Why do you concede that?

5 MR. GROSSMAN: Because in this particular action 6 the employer in his filing of the lawsuit filed it against 7 both the union and the employees and we did not raise the 8 particular question at the time.

9 QUESTION: It would seem to me if he can, and if 10 you concede that he can, then you're conceding away your law-
11 suit.

12 MR. GROSSMAN: Okay, I --

13 QUESTION: Well, you're conceding away the juris-
14 dictional point that the federal courts set --

15 QUESTION: Which is the only point here, isn't it?

16 QUESTION: Well, you're not conceding the cause of 17 action?

18 MR. GROSSMAN: No, I'm not conceding the cause of 19 action, Your Honor.

20 QUESTION: Otherwise you would be out of our --

21 QUESTION: Well, the reason he could go into 22 federal court and get an injunction is that Boys Market held 23 that he could, if what he had was an arbitration clause in 24 the agreement.

25 MR. GROSSMAN: With Boys Market this Court concluded

1 that if the matter is subject to the parties' collective bar-2 gaining agreement, and the walkout involves a dispute that is 3 covered by the collective bargaining agreement, then an in-4 junction can be obtained. And that's what the district court 5 on the second hearing concluded, that the employer was en-
6 titled to a Boys Market injunction. Now --

7 QUESTION: Did the injunction in Boys Market run 8 against the employees as well as the union? Do you remember?

9 MR. GROSSMAN: Yes.

10 QUESTION: Against both?

11 MR. GROSSMAN: It ran against the employees, it ran 12 against the local, it ran against the international. And 13 as soon as the injunction was issued they went back to work.

14 QUESTION: So to that extent we have recognized 15 that there is a 301 action against the employees.

16 MR. GROSSMAN: See, the 301 action would refer to 17 the ability under 301 to obtain a damage -- the remedy of 18 damages against employees participating in an unauthorized work
19 stoppage, it seems to me. And I say that under Section 301, 20 which created a certain type of rights which permitted cer-21 tain types of actions against a union, that to presume because 22 the language does not specifically say that the employer, 23 you cannot sue individual employees individually for their 24 participation in an unauthorized work stoppage, thereby you 25 can read that into it because it doesn't explicitly say

1 you can't. I'm saying, in a statute of this type where there
2 are rights that are created, you should -- if it was Congress'
3 intent to have a remedy such as a damage remedy against indi-
4 vidual employees who participate in unauthorized work stop-5 pages, it should have been explicitly stated and expressly 6 stated.

7 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Grossman, is your basic argu-8 ment that there is no 301 jurisdiction in federal courts for 9 this kind of an action, or that this kind of an action simply 10 cannot be brought because Congress has prohibited imposing 11 liability on individual members ?

12 MR. GROSSMAN: Okay, I would say that the language 13 of the statute doesn't permit it, the legislative history 14 doesn't say that Congress intended to allow it, and what 15 petitioners are attempting to have this Court do is by the 16 inventive -- because this is an area that's in the penumbra, 17 is to use the ~~t~~judicialal inventiveness to allow them to 18 sue and obtain a money damage action, remedy, against employ-19 ees where the language doesn't say they can.

20 QUESTION: Well, but -- so your argument is basic-21 ally, no 301 jurisdiction, not that if there were diversity
22 jurisdiction in a federal court? Which there wasn't here, 23 but might be in some other cases, that federal substantive 24 law prohibits the maintenance of this sort of thing?

25 MR. GROSSMAN: Yes, I would say, even if there were

1 diversity, if it was under a collective bargaining contract, 2 that there would be a prohibition.

3 QUESTION: How do you explain Smith v. Evening
4 News, then?

5 MR. GROSSMAN: Smith v. Evening News? Okay, it
6 was basically a question of double jurisdiction. And you
7 can -- this Court could have arrived at the decision at Smith 8 v. Evening News without determining, for example, whether the 9 employees, the employee who was suing for a wage claim, 10 basically, was "a party" to the contract, I said, a party to 11 the contract. Is it one of the -- when you talk in terms of 12 301(a), we talk in terms of jurisdiction of the parties.

13 Now, does that just mean the employer and the 14 labor organization who are "the parties" who, to the contract?
15 Would it permit in an individual who is a beneficiary of that 16 contract to sue for rights under the contract? Suing for 17 rights under the contract, this Court, I would say, allowed 18 in suits such as Smith, allowed in suits such as --

19 QUESTION: Well, wouldn't you -- in the Smith
20 and Lucas, those kinds of suits in a state court, under 301, 21 they are governed by federal law.

22 MR. GROSSMAN: Yes, they are, Your Honor.

23 QUESTION: And I don't suppose you could get a 24 remedy in a state court that, for example, against a union 25 that Carbon Fuel said you couldn't get?

1 MR. GROSSMAN: No, it would be inconsistent, it
2 would not -- it would be inconsistent with the federal deci-3 sions that --

4 QUESTION: Yes. So, your real submission, it seems 5 to me, is that under the federal law damage recoveries from 6 individual employees are simply forbidden. There's just no 7 cause of action against them for that.

8 MR. GROSSMAN: Yes, sir, that is true.

9 QUESTION: Whether under 301, or whether in state 10 court, or whether in federal court, or -- ?

11 MR. GROSSMAN: Yes, I would say if you're going to be 12 going under, if the theory of the lawsuit involves collective 13 bargaining and a breach of the collective bargaining agreement.

14 QUESTION: Then that's as true of Ingrid Bergman who 15 may have damaged the employer by $2 or $3 million, as by 16 someone who quits voluntarily and can easily be replaced?

17 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, I don't know -- okay, if she's 18 covered under this contract.

19 QUESTION: Well, this is a hypothetical.

20 QUESTION: The assumption is that she is, and then 21 your answer's the same.

22 MR. GROSSMAN: Right, my answer would be the same 23 again. Now -- and, what I see, employer-petitioner really 24 has obtained all the relief that it can under the statute.
25 As I mentioned, they did obtain a Boys Market injunction,

1 they did discipline and discharge employees, and they ob-
2 tained the union's cooperation by not authorizing the work 3 stoppage. The -- okay, in enacting the Section 301, the 4 Congress indicated what it wanted to do is, it tended to 5 make unions accountable. They wanted to insure enforcement 6 of the contracts; I think did not want to impose a damage
7 action remedy against individual employees who participated 8 in unauthorized work stoppages; and again, it allows the 9 employer the ability to discharge employees who were involved 10 in an unauthorized work stoppage by disciplining them and/or 11 discharging them.

12 QUESTION: As I recall the Taft-Hartley provision, 13 one of them was to say that no worker should be penalized for 14 engaging or for not engaging in collective activity. And yet 15 your construction of 301 would immunize workers who 16 worked under a collective bargaining agreement that was ob-17 tained by collective activity from any damage remedy. Where-18 as a single worker who signed an agreement to work would be 19 liable.

20 MR. GROSSMAN: If the single worker was covered 21 under the collective bargaining agreement, I don't -- okay, 22 what I'm -- I guess, if you could imagine a situation where 23 there were 100 employees and only one walked out, yet caused 24 the employer damages, and what I would maintain is, that 25 employee could only be discharged. The fact that he caused

1 his employer monetary damages, the employer could not bring a 2 301 action against the employee for the damages imposed.

3 QUESTION: Do you concede or do you not that this 4 lawsuit comes within the literal language of 301(a)?

5 MR. GROSSMAN: It was brought under 301(a), yes.

6 QUESTION: Well, do you -- perhaps you didn't under-7 stand my question. Does the lawsuit come within the literal 8 language of 301(a)?

9 MR. GROSSMAN: Okay, it involves --

10 QUESTION: This was a contract between an employer 11 and the laborers' organization --

12 MR. GROSSMAN: Right.

13 QUESTION: Representing employees in an industry
14 affecting commerce, wasn't it?

15 MR. GROSSMAN: That's correct, Your Honor.

16 QUESTION: And this is a suit for violation of that 17 contract.

18 MR. GROSSMAN: That is true.

19 QUESTION: And therefore, do you concede that it 20 comes within the literal language of 301(a)? Or do you think 21 that a suit for violation of that contract can as a matter of 22 law be brought only against the labor organizations?

23 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, I think that it can be brought 24 against -- okay, it has been brought against both. Had I 25 looked -- looking backward, I may have in 1976 raised certain

1 questions at the point of time that initially the employer 2 decided it wasn't going to pursue it any further against the 3 union. But both parties were initially brought under the law-4 suit. The lawsuit was filed against individuals as well as 5 the local, and the international, and there was a work ces-6 sation and the court enjoined it and enjoined everybody at 7 the time, including the employees.

8 QUESTION: How did the international and the local 9 drop out of the case?

10 MR. GROSSMAN: The petitioners elected not to pur-11 sue the cause of action against them. Once the -- 12 QUESTION: Proceed only against the employees?

13 MR. GROSSMAN: Once the work stoppage ended, every-14 body went back to work and the petitioners pursued the damage
15 remedy against the employees. And may I add, the decision 16 that the petitioners made was much, in point of time, earlier 17 than this Court's decision in Carbon Fuel.

18 QUESTION: Well, was there ever any decision or 19 any claim that the union couldn't have been liable even if the 20 employees were?

21 MR. GROSSMAN: I'm sorry, I didn't hear you.

22 QUESTION: Was there ever a decision by a court 23 that the union couldn't have been liable in all cases?

24 MR. GROSSMAN: No, it was, the only decision that 25 the court made was to order everybody back to work.

1 QUESTION: Because certainly Atkinson v. Sinclair
2 said you can't avoid 301(b) by just suing the employees, if 3 the union is liable.

4 MR. GROSSMAN: No, that's correct. And this law-
5 suit, I guess, could have continued with the petitioner suing 6 both the local and international --

7 QUESTION: Well, why don't you -- why isn't, 8 why aren't you arguing -- maybe you are -- that you really 9 can't tell, at least you can't hold the employees liable, 10 until it's been legally determined that the union is not 11 liable?

12 MR. GROSSMAN: Well --

13 QUESTION: Because if it is, Atkinson v. Sinclair 14 says 301(b) bars it.

15 MR. GROSSMAN: Okay. Had they elected to continue 16 with the lawsuit, I would have -- no, it would have had --

17 QUESTION: Well, they can't elect -- Atkinson says 18 you just can't elect to sue employees.

19 MR. GROSSMAN: No, what I'm saying to you is that 20 had petitioner elected to continue keeping all the parties 21 in the lawsuit --

22 QUESTION: Yes?

23 MR. GROSSMAN: -- what would have happened is, I
24 guess the same type of motions could have been brought, ~~so~~ 25 saying that you could not, by respondents, that you could not

1 have, permit a damage action against individual employees.

2 QUESTION: You couldn't have had judgment against 3 both of them?

4 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, yes, under --

5 QUESTION: Under 301(b)?

6 MR. GROSSMAN: Well, you could have precipitated 7 the matter by saying that 301 would not permit a damage remedy
8 against individual employees; as I did.

9 QUESTION: And, or, and the employer could have 10 said, could have said, well, we think they're both liable, 11 but if the union isn't, certainly the employees are.

12 MR. GROSSMAN: Right. Then you would have been 13 faced with the same matter --

14 QUESTION: Exactly. Well, how do we know whether 15 the union would ever have been liable or not?

16 MR. GROSSMAN: We don't know. Your Honor, in look-17 ing at the legislative history, there was a congressional 18 concern to avoid the repetition of Danbury Hatters, and as 19 this Court recognized in the Atkinson case, that what the 20 way the lawsuit developed was that it was only the individual 21 employees who were sued, and it was only the individual em-22 ployees who had a judgment against them. And the $250,000
23 that the Danbury Hatters employees were sued pales in signif-24 icance to the amount of dollars that are being sought in this 25 particular case. Now, that really has no bearing, but, see,

1 Congress was concerned that under Danbury that they didn't 2 want to have a repetition of Danbury Hatters, and my conten-
3 tion is, with respect to that, is that not only in the situa-4 tion where you could say conceivably it was the union that 5 was at fault. I think Congress spoke and said, we do not 6 want to have a situation where individual employees would be 7 responsible in damages for even unauthorized work stoppages, 8 their breaches of the collective bargaining agreement.

9 QUESTION: What section do you rely on for that?
10 What language?

11 MR. GROSSMAN: Okay. I relied on the fact that 12 had Congress intended to include and allow damage actions
13 such as petitioner is seeking, it would have said so. Okay?
14 Now, the reason that I say that is that it was, what I say, 15 creating these rights in this legislation. So if it intended 16 to do it, it would have said it. And you should not by im-
17 plication say it is there because there's nothing in the lan-18 guage of the statute one way or the other. The reason that 19 I feel that in 301(b) there's the language that says that if 20 a union is responsible for a breach you should not look to the 21 employees, is that that was the only type of remedy, monetary 22 remedy that Congress was willing to allow. They were willing 23 to allow a damage action against unions if they had breached
24 the terms of the contract. Okay? And if they, the union, 25 breached the terms of the contract, you can get a money damage

1 remedy against them. But not against the employees. And 2 that is the only type of money damage remedy that in effect
3 was flowing from 301 that was hitting, directed at the union, 4 and if it's directed at the union, you can't direct it at,
5 you can't collect from the employees. And there was no in-6 tention to permit a damage remedy against the individual 7 employees. Okay, now --

8 QUESTION: So what you're saying is that Congress
9 said, yes, you can collect from the union, if the union 10 breaches the contract, that is, if the walkout is with the 11 union's approval. But the individual members are immune 12 from liability?

13 MR. GROSSMAN: From financial liability. They are 14 not immune, no, but --

15 QUESTION: From financial --

16 MR. GROSSMAN: Right; financial liability, and 17 as I said, the reason that that was the case is that Congress 18 recognized, and acknowledged, that employees who do partici-
19 pate in unauthorized activity, who breach the contract, are 20 subject to discharge and discipline, and they have no protec-21 tion under the Act. And that was the type of relief that 22 was afforded them. I don't think that any arguments of 23 mutuality because the employee can sue the employer for money 24 damages thereby entitles the employer to sue the employee 25 for money damages.

1 QUESTION: Is there any express language in 2 the Acts authorizing an injunction?

3 MR. GROSSMAN: No, but we have an overwhelming --

4 QUESTION: That's been read into the statute, now, 5 hasn't it?

6 MR. GROSSMAN: We have an overwhelming policy to 7 promote, to promote the adherence to the terms of the con-8 tract.

9 QUESTION: That's been read into the statute, not-10 withstanding the Norris-La Guardia Act -- ?

11 MR. GROSSMAN: That is correct. Under Boys Market.
12 We read it, in those limited situations that the Court out-
13 lined in Boys Market. This Court, in Boys Market, also ac-14 knowledged that even -- and one of the reasons maybe that it
15 was granted, that injunctive relief was granted in Boys
16 Market, was this Court's acknowledgment that even to permit
17 a damage action which happens when an employer sues a union 18 is not conducive to promoting industrial stability, and that 19 was a main purpose of the Act, to promote industrial stability.
20 Now, you will not promote -- I maintain you will not promote 21 industrial stability by allowing the damage remedy action.

22 This petitioner has discharged employees, it's 23 almost five years after the incident in question, it's still 24 pursuing the remedy of damages, and it does nothing but 25 exacerbate the industrial peace.

1 QUESTION: Well, of course, then a wildcat strike
2 also exacerbates industrial peace, doesn't it?

3 MR. GROSSMAN: It does. I'm not going to say that 4 it doesn't, but within two weeks -- and that's a long time 5 -- the entire matter was settled in terms of the, from the 6 time that the action began to the time that they were ordered 7 back to work, two weeks elapsed. And thereafter the dis-8 charges occurred which would have ended it but for this.

9 Thank you very much.

10 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Have you
11 anything further, Mr. Hunter?

12 MR. HUNTER: Mr. Chief Justice, I believe I have 13 a minute, and I want to address, very quickly, two issues.

14 ORAL ARGUMENT OF R. IAN HUNTER, ESQ.,

15 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS -- REBUTTAL

16 MR. HUNTER: Note that on page 25 of the Joint 17 Appendix the respondents admitted in the answer that the 18 local union did not authorize or condone the strike. So 19 that's not at issue. Respondents admitted in their answer 20 that the local union did not authorize the strike.

21 QUESTION: Well, is that -- do you think that's 22 tantamount to admitting the union was not liable?

23 MR. HUNTER: It certainly is, it admitted that 24 they did not condone it. And we have no foundation of as-25 serting they hadn't, based on our understanding of the facts.

1 The injunction did go against the employees.
2 The local union was only party to one of the three consoli-
3 dated lawsuits so the injunction was intended to go against 4 the employees in that the --

5 QUESTION: I think the -- I see a recitation in the 6 Court of Appeals opinion that the district court actually 7 found that the union had not authorized the strike.

8 MR. HUNTER: That's right. And it was found by 9 the court; right.

10 And the jurisdiction of a matter of this nature
11 was alluded to in this Court's decision in Smith v. Evening
12 News, alluding to Atkinson v. Sinclair as a jurisdictional 13 admission. Thank you.

14 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
15 The case is submitted.

16 (Whereupon, at 2:54 o'clock p.m. the case in the 17 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
