MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We'll hear arguments next in Alessi v. Raybestos and the consolidated case.

Mr. Sachs, I think you may proceed when you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF THEODORE SACHS, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANTS IN NO. 79-1943

MR. SACHS: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

This matter involves consolidated matters arising from the 3rd Circuit on appeal from and certiorari to the 3rd Circuit. I'm of counsel in the Alessi v. Raybestos matter, and with the Court's permission I'll address the 203(a) issue of ERISA and Mr. Gettis will then address the preemption question.

The 3rd Circuit decided in this matter that notwithstanding the very broad nonforfeitability guarantees in Section 203(a) of the Pension Reform Act with respect to normal retirement benefits, that a workmen's compensation offset provision in a retirement plan did not violate that statute.

The decision and analysis of the 3rd Circuit has been disagreed with by at least one other circuit, the 6th, and by at least seven district courts. And I will respectfully suggest that the 3rd Circuit paid excessive attention to form and indeed to the form of a regulation whose nature

1 the intended beneficiary, the IRS, does not agree with.

2 The fact of the matter in this situation is that 3 normal retirement benefits earned over the life careers,
4 working careers of the affected individuals, have indeed 5 been forfeited, and that is seen very directly by looking at 6 the facts.

7 QUESTION: Let me ask you a question, if I may.
8 This ERISA statute does give authority to the Treasury
9 Department to issue regulations, does it not?

10 MR. SACHS: Yes, Your Honor, it does.

11 QUESTION: It is not just a question of adminis-12 tering an act?

13 MR. SACHS: No, that is correct. There is certain 14 administrative authority with respect to Treasury; there is 15 certain administrative authority with respect to the Depart-
16 ment of Labor. But there is none of the kind of administra-
17 tive or rule-making authority which the 3rd Circuit conceived
18 to be applicable and which the Internal Revenue Service re-
19 nounces. The Internal Revenue Service does not claim legisla-
20 tive rule-making authority which the 3rd Circuit found.
21 Treasury purports to find that authority in an interpretive 22 basis. But the interpretive basis, we submit, is contrary to 23 the statute in question and indeed the argument made by the 24 Government brief here is contrary to the argument which it 25 made below. There is a diametrical change in position.

ERASE
1 If I may, the specific facts will highlight how the 2 statutory provision directly works. Each of these employees 3 had put in, in the case of Raybestos, more than 30 years when 4 they retired in '72 and '73. They earned normal retirement
5 benefits. I emphasize there was no disability pension ques-
6 tion here; they earned normal retirement benefits. Each had 7 reached age 65.

8 Similarly, in the case of the General Motors plan.
9 Each had reached normal retirement age of 65 and had rendered
10 a number of years of service almost as much. They in fact 11 began to receive 100 percent of the normal retirement bene-
12 fits under the plan. They did so for several years, and then 13 a funny thing happened. They made an application for partial 14 permanent disability under the New Jersey Workers Compensa-
15 tion Statute and they were awarded that. This was for a 16 variety of permanent occupational diseases and injuries, in-17 cluding pulmonary conditions, asbestosis, other serious dis-18 abling conditions, and at that point invoking the respective 19 plans, General Motors and Raybestos-Manhattan cut off the 20 pensions.

21 The pensions ceased at that point in an effort at 22 recoupment by both companies of an amount equivalent to the 23 workers' compensation awards. They did so in the case of GM 24 under a plan which is plainly conditioning the benefits upon 25 forbearance from filing that workers comp. claim.

EXERASE
COTT

1 If the individuals in the GM plan had not filed for 2 workers' compensation, they would have continued to receive 3 their pension, and indeed had they filed their application 4 for workers' compensation within two years after they had re-5 tired, under the plan itself GM could not have claimed an 6 offset. So there was a double condition here: one, in the 7 first place, filing for workers' comp. cut off the pension;
8 in the second place, if that claim were not filed within two 9 years, the pension was cut off.

10 In the Raybestos plan the specific language begins, 11 "Notwithstanding the other provisions of this Article 6, the 12 following condition shall apply to the payment of retirement 13 income." And then under this extraordinary clause in the 14 Raybestos plan, a whole array of benefits, collateral bene-
15 fits, which the employee might receive are then used to invoke
16 a forfeiture to cut off his pension. Not merely workers'
17 compensation or occupational disease, but unemployment com-18 pensation, a factor, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, which the Internal 19 Revenue Service itself doesn't recognize; cash sickness bene-
20 fits, which Internal Revenue has not recognized.

21 QUESTION: Counsel, the Internal Revenue Service I
22 had always supposed to be part of the Treasury Department.

23 MR. SACHS: Yes, Your Honor.

24 QUESTION: So that, isn't it rather unlikely that 25 the Administrator of ERISA for Treasury would be at odds with

1 the Administrator of the IRS?

2 MR. SACHS: I'm not suggesting a disparity of views
3 as between Treasury and IRS. I did not mean to suggest that, 4 Your Honor.

5 QUESTION: I thought you had said that the IRS took 6 a different view?

7 MR. SACHS: Oh, I am saying that, sir, with respect 8 to the specific elements that are part of the offset in the 9 Raybestos plan. The Treasury rulings, pre-ERISA, which had 10 been invoked by the various defendants here and the various 11 amici supporting their position don't go so far as to permit
12 what Raybestos has done and claimed here, as part of this 13 plan.

14 IRS, we sought to suggest in the briefs and other 15 courts have recognized, has drawn absolutely irrational lines 16 as to what kind of offset is permitted or what kind of offset 17 is not permitted, and all I was meaning to suggest, Your 18 Honor, in my last comment, is that there are elements within 19 the Raybestos plan which don't satisfy even the irrational
20 standards of Treasury, as those had been enunciated in a 21 variety of Treasury rulings.

22 The point I seek to make here is that the reality
23 which is confronted here is that each of these individuals
24 who received a normal retirement benefit on account of age 25 and service suddenly had that benefit divested. I should

1 also point out that the workmens' --

2 QUESTION: Mr. Sachs, let me just -- this sudden-3 ness of it, it's been a part of the plan for quite some time?

4 MR. SACHS: It has not, Your Honor, with all respect.
5 The GM offset came in in 1970, two years before the peti-6 tioners retired.

7 QUESTION: Were these plans the product of collec-8 tive bargaining?

9 MR. SACHS: It's difficult to answer that yes or no, 10 Your Honor. They were the --

11 QUESTION: Well, usually they are, where you've got 12 a union involved, and the terms of the plan are usually a 13 key thing in negotiation.

14 MR. SACHS: There are aspects, Your Honor, there are 15 aspects of the present plan of General Motors which are of 16 the power of collective bargaining, the product of collective 17 bargaining. There are aspects of --

18 QUESTION: Isn't it fair to assume the union knew 19 about this offset provision? It's not something like fine 20 print at the bottom of the contract or anything like this.

21 MR. SACHS: Your Honor, there is no question that 22 the union was aware of that, but Your Honor's question was 23 related to the length and duration of these clauses, and my 24 response is that they came into the contracts in 1970 vir-
25 tually at the end of the working career of these employees.

ERASL

1 The employees had worked 28, 29 years. They came in at the 2 tail end of that.

3 QUESTION: Well, I understand. It seems to me
4 you're making sort of an equitable argument when we really 5 have a rather dry statutory question.

6 MR. SACHS: Well, the equitable argument is rele-
7 vant, Your Honor, because of the congressional purpose, and 8 that is the key, I would respectfully submit. Congress said 9 this is not --

10 QUESTION: You'd make the same argument, even if 11 this had been in the plan for 40 years and everybody knew 12 about it, it seems to me.

13 MR. SACHS: Absolutely no question, Your Honor.
14 I would certainly be making that argument. But I make the 15 point because there is a claim of reliance, there is a claim 16 on contractual provisions, as though that could somehow over-17 come the statute. But there is no reliance, in fact. The 18 point, additionally, that I wanted to make is that the work-
19 men's compensation benefits which was awarded under New Jersey 20 law had no relationship to wage loss, was not dependent on 21 wage loss, and in fact it would have been paid and could have 22 been paid had the claim been made while these men were still 23 working and had not retired.

24 So that we ought to dismiss from the picture any 25 suggestion here that they are somehow receiving workmen's

1 comp., something beyond what they otherwise could have re-
2 ceived. These are different benefits. The retirement bene-
3 fit was earned. But, directly responsive to your question,
4 Mr. Justice Stevens, Congress said in enacting this statute 5 that we are dealing here with reform. That's why this is 6 called a pension reform act; this is a broad remedial statute.
7 And what Congress wanted to do, and the debates make abso-
8 lutely clear it wanted to do, was inject notions of equity, 9 so that workers' legitimate expectations could be realized.

10 And there were two particular areas in the matter
11 of vesting that we're talking about, in addition to the other 12 remedies this statute was designed to achieve which are per-13 tinent here.

14 When we're talking about vesting, what Congress
15 wanted to assure is, one, that when the time for retirement 16 came, there would be money in the coffers to pay the pension.
17 And that's what this Court dealt with in Nachman. And the other 18 thing Congress wanted to do was to make sure that the small 19 print would not take away what the employee anticipated over 20 his working career he was in fact going to receive. And 21 that is why, based upon the findings of Congress, that 22 workers with long years of service and significant periods of 23 service were losing the retirement benefits on which they 24 had planned for a working career lifetime.

25 Congress enunciated an extraordinarily broad rule in Section 203(a). It's stated that all is forbidden except which we permit with respect to normal retirement benefits. 203(a) says that a worker is entitled, and coupling this with definitions in (3), part 19, of the Act, "a worker is entitled to an unconditional right to fulfillment of his normal retirement benefit when he reaches normal retirement age and when he attains any of the alternative minimum mandatory vesting schedules of the Act."

Now, when Congress intended exceptions it said what it wanted to do. And in 203(a)(3) it stated the exceptions which it was willing to recognize, and this is not one of them. Congress did not permit any exception for workers' compensation, never; never in this Act, never before this Act, never in any pre-ERISA history has Congress ever acknowledged the euphemism which is used by the defendants that this has something to do with integration, the euphemism with which the 3rd Circuit was, unfortunately, taken.

QUESTION: Your contention, then, is that the regulation is invalid?

MR. SACHS: Yes, Your Honor. The regulation is invalid for numerous reasons.

QUESTION: And it's invalid across the board?

MR. SACHS: Absolutely, Your Honor, and certainly it is invalid in application here. The regulation to which the 3rd Circuit gave dispositive deference for all practical

1 purposes says that you can set off benefits -- unqualified 2 word: benefits -- created under state or federal law and 3 social security benefits, as an offset against normal retire-4 ment benefits. There isn't a shred of a support for that in 5 the statute, it flies in the face of the broad and unqualified 6 provision of 203(a), unqualified except of course for the 7 specific exceptions to 203(a), which are enumerated, and 8 which have nothing to do with this. The 6th Circuit --

9 QUESTION: Mr. Sachs, would you address this very 10 narrow argument that the Court of Appeals made? You say 11 that this is forfeiture and it's not permitted forfeiture
12 under subparagraph (3). Well, they say, well, if that argu-
13 ment follows, then also an offset for social security bene-
14 fits would be a forfeiture --

15 MR. SACHS: Yes.

16 QUESTION: And it is clear that that's permitted.
17 How would you get out of that -- ?

18 MR. SACHS: Your Honor, there is absolutely no
19 question that social security offsets are permitted.

20 QUESTION: Are they a forfeiture or not?

21 MR. SACHS: They are not a forfeiture because --

22 QUESTION: If they're not a forfeiture, how can you 23 be so sure this is a forfeiture? That's the --

24 MR. SACHS: They are not a forfeiture because Con-
25 gress independently addressed in ERISA social security

1 integration. We have had social security integration since 2 1942. Ironically, social security came first; pensions, as 3 we know them now, were treated by Congress in 1942 as a 4 supplement to social security and the integration, were that --

5 QUESTION: So your argument is that it's not a for-6 feiture because there's evidence Congress specifically in-7 tended to permit this kind of offset. They argue there's 8 comparable evidence with respect to workmen's compensation
9 because of the history of the Treasury regulation. What's 10 wrong with that argument?

11 MR. SACHS: Your Honor, if I may, not merely 12 evidence; the statute does speak explicitly to social security 13 in 206(b) of ERISA and in 401(a)(15) of the Tax Code, which 14 was added by ERISA, Congress agonized about integration of social 15 security benefits. Congress didn't see this as a solution, it 16 saw it as a problem, that of social security benefits. And 17 the compromise which Congress reached in enacting ERISA was 18 to say for the moment, we'll freeze social security levels of 19 integration so that if they go up, you can't cut down the 20 amount of pension which is otherwise going to be payable.

21 But the point, Your Honor, is they addressed social 22 security as such, explicitly legislated on social security 23 as such. The 3rd Circuit somehow had the notion that we 24 were claiming that if you can't fix social security under one 25 of the sections to 203(a), it can't stand.

MILLERS FALLS
E ZEPHYRUS
STATIONER

1 Social security integration doesn't relate to 2 203(a) and isn't dependent on it. It is independently dealt 3 with. Social security came into the picture again in 1942,
4 and has been carried forward in the Tax Code for totally un-5 related reasons. Treasury was never in the business of 6 evaluating the fairness of workers' benefits or assuring that 7 they would not be lost except only in the context, very peri-
8 pherally, of making sure under 401(a), which is the section 9 on tax preference for pension plans, of making sure that there
10 would not be discrimination in favor of higher compensated
11 persons and officers.

12 As part of that analysis, Congress in permitting 13 the supplementing of social security benefits said, okay, 14 we recognize that if we permit the so-called integration, 15 lower-compensated employees might lose out; we'll make an 16 exception in that. They did it in '42 and they continued it
17 ever after. In 1974 and in preceding years, when Congress
18 considered adoption of this statute, they were very much con-
19 cerned about that, and they thought there was a social problem.
20 But they also recognized that there were cost factors as to 21 social security, and the compromise is what I have indicated.

22 But that whole discrete history has absolutely 23 nothing to do with this entire new set of regulations which 24 Congress imposed under 203(a). It recognized it was dealing 25 with new standards. Indeed, in the 3rd Circuit analysis, it

FEB 25 1975

1 carried the social security comparison so far as to say,
2 well, you can have social security disability offsets against 3 normal retirement benefits. And again, it unfortunately 4 was persuaded of something that can't be a fact, because 5 social security disability benefits end at age 65 and retire-6 ment benefits begin, your normal retirement, at 65. And the 7 3rd Circuit was dealing with an illusory problem.

8 The situation -- seeing that my time is up, Your 9 Honors, and I want to reserve time, I might just --

10 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Just your warning sign.
11 You're into your rebuttal time now.

12 MR. SACHS: Yes. I want to reserve some rebuttal
13 time. The point I simply want to conclude with is that Con-
14 gress intended here to comprehensively protect normal retire-
15 ment benefits on the theory that these are the workers' own 16 wages, but deferred. And consequently, when he loses those 17 deferred wages at time of retirement through any device whe-18 ther it is sophisticated or simple-minded, as this Court has 19 said in other contexts, that is prohibited.

20 The 3rd Circuit turned the rule around, since the 21 statute says all which is not permitted is prohibited, that 22 should be the in jure and the forfeiture should be reversed.

23 I'll reserve my time, with the Court's permission.
24 Thank you.

25 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Mr. Gettis.

1 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MARC C. GETTIS, ESQ.,
2 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS IN NO. 80-193

3 MR. GETTIS: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
4 the Court:

5 This Court is now in possession of a handful of 6 briefs from respondent, appellant, and various amici, all of 7 which briefs cite the same legislative history and quote the 8 same statements from Senators Williams and Javits and Repre-
9 sentative Dent regarding the broad nature of preemption under 10 Section 514 of ERISA.

11 Petitioners herein have never contended otherwise.
12 We've agreed all along that Section 514 does provide for broad 13 preemption. However, we find it remarkable that all but one
14 of these briefs virtually ignore the existence of Section 15 4(b)(3) of ERISA. That section provides an express exception
16 to preemption. Among other things, it exempts pension plans 17 maintained solely to comply with state workers' compensation 18 laws. It exempts these plans from Title I, and Section 514 is 19 a provision of Title I of ERISA. Therefore, in Section 20 4(b)(3) Congress has recognized explicitly that certain areas 21 of traditional state interest are exempt from preemption under 22 ERISA. ERISA has an internal provision right within the 23 statute allowing state regulation of workers' compensation, 24 even if that regulation may relate to pension plans.

25 QUESTION: Well, do you contend that the regulation

MILLERS FALLS
1 previously discussed is unauthorized by the statute?

2 MR. GETTIS: Mr. Justice Rehnquist, are you refer-
3 ring to the Treasury regulation?

4 QUESTION: Yes.

5 MR. GETTIS: We do contend that this is unauthorized
6 and contrary to the statute. What I was just --

7 QUESTION: You're addressing the preemption act?

8 MR. GETTIS: Yes, but I do concur that that regula-9 tion is invalid and unauthorized. I'm suggesting that the 10 statute itself permits state regulation of workers' compensa-
11 tion, and this Court has recognized that the employment rela-12 tionship, including workers' compensation, which protects 13 against injury suffered in the course of employment, is a 14 traditional area of state interest.

15 A number of cases have been cited standing for the 16 proposition of broad preemption. But other than the decision 17 of the 3rd Circuit below, no case has held a state workers'
18 compensation statute preempted. In fact, one district court
19 and one court of appeals, the 9th Circuit, has recognized 20 workers' compensation laws of states as an exception to the 21 preemption doctrine of ERISA.

22 The focus of the inquiry under 4(b)(3) should not 23 be, as our adversaries suggest, whether a plan is exempt under 24 4(b)(3). Rather it must be to the statute. If a plan main-25 tained to comply with a state workers' compensation law is

1 exempt from ERISA preemption, a fortiori the underlying 2 workers' compensation statute must be preempted.

3 The fact that the State of New Jersey has had a 4 workers' compensation statute in effect since 1911 and has 5 continuously regulated the area for over 70 years shows that 6 this is a strong area of state interest and has been tradi-7 tionally regulated by the state. In enacting Chapter 156 as 8 an amendment to the New Jersey Workers' Compensation Act, the 9 State of New Jersey has expressed its policy to protect 10 workers' compensation benefits to insure that a compensation
11 award adjudged by a tribunal must be paid.

12 There is another area of traditional state interest 13 which has been ruled an exception to ERISA preemption. That 14 is the area of domestic relations and support.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Gettis, can I interrupt you again,
16 because I want to be sure I've caught it? I'm not -- you said
17 4(b)(3) is the section you read before?

18 MR. GETTIS: That's correct, Your Honor.

19 QUESTION: Is that quoted in your brief?

20 MR. GETTIS: Yes, it is, Your Honor.

21 QUESTION: Do you happen to know the page?

22 QUESTION: Do you have it under a different number,
23 Mr. Gettis?

24 MR. GETTIS: 4(b)(3) of ERISA perhaps was cited as 25 29 U.S.C. 1003(b).

1 QUESTION: 1003(b).

2 MR. GETTIS: Your Honor, that's quoted at page 19
3 of the reply brief, and I believe it also appears in the main 4 brief at page 44 -- of the petitioners' brief, that is.

5 In the area of domestic relations and support,
6 preemption challenges have been litigated under ERISA where a 7 state court has ordered a pensioner's pension benefits to be 8 garnished or severed to satisfy that worker's obligations
9 under state laws, either support obligations or community
10 property laws. Two courts of appeals, both the 2nd Circuit
11 and the 9th Circuit, have held that such state laws are not 12 preempted under ERISA, that these laws only marginally affect 13 pension plans and are within an area of strong state interest.

14 One court of appeals which has not permitted a state 15 court to garnish a pension has done so under Section 206 of 16 ERISA, and did not engage in any preemption analysis of the 17 state law.

18 We agree with our adversaries' contention that 19 ERISA preemption is intended to assist in the congressional 20 goal of providing for uniform regulation of pension plans, but 21 our adversaries incorrectly assert that the New Jersey law in 22 question frustrates this purpose. In fact, it is the use of 23 the pension offset by General Motors and Raybestos-Manhattan
24 which frustrates this purpose. Due to the offset of workers' 25 compensation benefits, the pension benefits may vary from

1 state to state, depending on the particular workers' compen-
2 sation statutory scheme in the state.

3 A finding that Chapter 156 of the New Jersey Laws 4 of 1977 is valid, if anything would assist in achieving the 5 congressional goal of uniformity of pension plan regulation.

6 Our adversaries have tailored their arguments
7 depending upon which issue in this case they're addressing.
8 When arguing that Chapter 156 of the New Jersey statutes is pre-9 empted, our adversaries claim that New Jersey is attempting 10 to regulate pension plans and such regulation is not per-11 mitted by ERISA. When arguing against nonforfeitability under 12 ERISA, our adversaries suggest that ERISA does not protect 13 state workers' compensation awards. It is clear that the 14 New Jersey statute in question protects workers' compensation 15 awards whereas ERISA protects pension benefits. These are 16 separate benefits.

17 Even if this Court should find that Section 203
18 does not prohibit the offset in question, which of course 19 petitioners strongly suggest it does, Chapter 156 of the New 20 Jersey Laws would still stand as a valid exercise of the 21 state police power. Even if this Court were to hold Section 22 203 not prohibiting the offset, it still cannot in any way be 23 said that the permitting of such offset was a congressional 24 purpose in enacting ERISA.

25 Congress clearly set forth its purposes in

1 Section 2 of ERISA to prohibit certain abuses which had taken
2 place. They set forth vesting standards, minimum funding 3 standards, disclosure requirements, and fiduciary require-
4 ments. In no way did Congress show any intent to permit
5 offsets of workers' compensation. Therefore, the state law 6 in its attempt to protect workers' compensation benefits does 7 not in any way stand as an obstacle to the attainment of con-
8 gressional objectives and goals which Congress had in mind
9 when enacting ERISA.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Gettis, let me just -- because I
11 frankly had missed the point. I want to be sure I understand 12 your argument. I'm reading from your blue brief at page 44, 13 and I don't have the full text of the statute before me, but 14 the section on which you rely, the 4(b)(3), is described as 15 providing a plan "maintained solely for the purpose of com-16 plying with applicable workmen's compensation laws," is not 17 subject to Title I.

18 MR. GETTIS: That's correct, Mr. Justice Stevens.

19 QUESTION: But that's not quite like an exception
20 from the preemption section, is it?

21 MR. GETTIS: Your preemption is --

22 QUESTION: And furthermore, this is not a plan main-23 tained solely to comply with the state workmen's compensation 24 law.

25 MR. GETTIS: That's correct, Your Honor, and we have

1 never contended otherwise.

2 QUESTION: I see.

3 MR. GETTIS: However, the preemption provision,
4 Section 514, is a part of Title I. What petitioners are con-
5 tending --

6 QUESTION: Well, the preemption does not apply to 7 plans maintained solely for the purpose of complying with 8 state -- which is not this plan.

9 MR. GETTIS: That is not this plan. What we suggest 10 is that the inquiry is not whether the plan is a 4(b)(3)
11 plan, but rather to the underlying workers' compensation law.
12 In other words, if a plan is maintained to comply for workers'
13 compensation purposes and that plan is exempt under ERISA, it 14 must follow that the underlying workers' compensation law 15 enacted by the state with which that plan, for which it was 16 created, must not be preempted. If a plan is exempt, it's 17 not possible that the underlying state statute is not exempt.

18 QUESTION: I don't follow the argument. What it 19 seems to me that the statute says is that a workmen's comp.
20 plan does not have to comply with the federal statute.

21 MR. GETTIS: That is true, Mr. Justice Stevens.

22 QUESTION: That's all it really says.

23 MR. GETTIS: Well, we suggest that in 4(b)(3)
24 Congress has shown an intent to allow states to regulate 25 certain areas, traditionally within state regulation, not to

PRIVATE
CONFIDENTIAL

1 regulate pensions but to regulate these particular areas, and 2 should that regulation "relate to pension plans," that will 3 not invalidate the state statute.

4 QUESTION: I see.

5 MR. GETTIS: Thank you.

6 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Mr. Reich.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAURENCE REICH, ESQ.,

8 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT IN NO. 80-193

9 MR. REICH: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the 10 Court:

11 The issue before the court: is the right of a defined
12 pension plan such as the General Motors and Raybestos-
13 Manhattan plans to continue since ERISA as before, to inte-
14 grate workers' compensation benefits with pension plan bene-15 fits?

16 Integration describes a benefit structure by which 17 a pension plan takes into account employer-financed benefits
18 under a governmental benefit plan. In determining employer-19 financed pension plan benefits, whether by way of reduction or 20 offset, the right of integration of benefits proceeds from 21 the basic structure of pension plans in the United States, 22 the fundamental proposition that whether an employer furnishes 23 post-retirement income to its employees and how much that 24 employer furnishes to its employees is a matter of determina-25 tion in the first instance by the employer and in the case of

ERISA CASE
1 a collectively bargained plan, such as the two plans involved 2 in these cases, a matter of contract between the employer and 3 the union representing the employees.

4 Integration has been an integral part of pension
5 plan benefit structure in the United States since at least 6 1942 when it was expressly approved by what is now Section 7 401(a)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

8 Social security is indeed the most universal and 9 ubiquitous of these benefits that is integrated. However, 10 it is by no means the only benefit. Another is railroad re-
11 tirement benefits, and third is workers' compensation bene-
12 fits. In 1968 workers' compensation benefits were held sub-
13 ject to integration by the Internal Revenue Service in a 14 ruling, Revenue Ruling 68-243. That ruling has been twice 15 republished in the Internal Revenue Service's Guide to Quali-
16 fication of Pension, Profit-Sharing, and Stock Bonus Plans, 17 the bible of the Internal Revenue Service up to the time that 18 ERISA was enacted. The last republication was in IRS Publica-
19 tion 778. We know that publication 778 was before the commit-
20 tees that wrote ERISA.

21 Further, workers' compensation integration is an 22 integral part of the pension plan structure in the steel, 23 automotive, and telephone industries. It surely could not 24 have escaped the attention of Congress. Section 203(a)
25 refers indeed to forfeitures. It simply states that each

WILLERS FALLS

1 pension plan shall provide that an employee's right to his 2 normal retirement benefit is nonforfeitable upon the attain-
3 ment of normal retirement age.

4 Now, the concept of nonforfeitability did not spring
5 out of ERISA. Indeed, it existed at the time ERISA was 6 enacted. It dates back at least to Section 401(a)(7) which 7 was introduced into the Internal Revenue Code in 1962.
8 Section 401(a)(7) at that time provided merely for nonfor-
9 feitability upon plan termination or discontinuance of con-
10 tributions, saying essentially the same thing.

11 ERISA, indeed, expanded the application of the con-
12 cept of nonforfeitability contained in Section 401(a)(7).

13 Now, as Mr. Justice Stevens' question, I think, 14 observed, the 3rd Circuit's argument in its opinion was that 15 Section 203(a) if it is deemed to include workers' compensation
16 integration as a forfeiture must include every integrated off-
17 set as a forfeiture. To do that requires ignoring the plain 18 evidence in ERISA that Congress did not intend to disturb 19 social security integration, which is merely one of the inte-
20 grating offsets available.

21 That evidence exists in Section 401(a)(15) of the 22 Code and Section 206(b) of ERISA. Contrary to the petitioners' 23 and appellants' argument, those sections do not authorize 24 social security or railroad retirement benefit integration.
25 They merely describe a limitation upon that integration,

MILLERS FALLS
1 a limitation, moreover, which was neither new to ERISA -- on 2 the contrary, the legislative history makes clear that the 3 two sections merely codified with a slight extension the pre-4 existing IRS administrative practice on limiting social 5 security integration.

6 Now, Section 203(a) requires that the employee's
7 right to his normal retirement benefit be nonforfeitable. It 8 does not say what that normal retirement benefit is to be.
9 Neither does the Section 3(19) definition of nonforfeitable.
10 It merely refers to the benefit under the plan, as does the 11 Section 3(22) definition of normal retirement benefit. There-12 fore what is nonforfeitable is the benefit which the plan pro-
13 vides; in this case that benefit has never been anything
14 other than a benefit integrated with workers' compensation 15 benefits. And, indeed, since Mr. Sachs has referred to the 16 time span within which this particular provision has been in 17 the General Motors pension plan, I should call to the Court's 18 attention that it was in the General Motors hourly rate pen-
19 sion plan, the plan before the Court, from 1950 to 1961. It 20 was absent from 1961 to 1970. It has been in the plan from 21 1970 to and including the present date. It is not something 22 which was sprung upon these employees, aside from the fact 23 that, of course, it was negotiated by their union shortly 24 before they retired. It was a fixture of the plan. It's 25 absent --

1 QUESTION: That rather circular statutory argument
2 doesn't depend at all on the Treasury regulation; is that 3 correct?

4 MR. REICH: No, sir. If the Treasury regulation
5 didn't exist, I submit that this Court would have to invent 6 it, as it were. The Treasury regulation merely stands as 7 very strong, persuasive proof that what the statutory analy-
8 sis shows is indeed the way the Treasury Department views it, 9 and the Treasury Department has, of course, been expressly 10 authorized, whether the regulation be considered legislative 11 or interpretative, the Treasury Department has been given the 12 right, power, of rulemaking by Section 3002(c) of ERISA.

13 QUESTION: But your argument didn't depend at all 14 upon that regulation?

15 MR. REICH: Yes. My argument does not depend at 16 all upon it. My argument --

17 QUESTION: And in other words, your argument would 18 allow a plan to offset by the amount of recovery in a common 19 law court, wouldn't it?

20 MR. REICH: No, sir, it would not, because --

21 QUESTION: It hasn't always been a fixture of the 22 plan, and --

23 MR. REICH: No, sir, because it's a fixture of the 24 plan, a fixture of the plan permitted by Section 401(a)(5).
25 The concept of integration, as I started with, is limited to

1 a situation in which the benefit being offset is a benefit
2 under a governmental plan, and I refer to the statute.

3 401(a)(5) provides for -- integration --

4 QUESTION: Where does this appear?

5 MR. REICH: This appears in the petitioners' and 6 appellants' briefs in the Appendix, I know.

7 QUESTION: Could you give me the Code cite to 8 401(a)(5)?

9 MR. REICH: That is Section 401(a)(5) of the 10 Code, 26 U.S.C.

11 QUESTION: 401(a)(5). It's on page 1a of the 12 appellants' brief in the -- ?

13 MR. REICH: Yes. It provides that a plan shall 14 not be considered discriminatory in the meaning of 401(a)(4) 15 merely because contributions or benefits differ because of 16 any retirement benefits created under state or federal law, 17 and the entire principle of integration permitted by the 18 Internal Revenue Service under 401(a)(5) since its inception 19 in 1942 has been that the, only the statutory benefits, may 20 be offset.

21 QUESTION: Of course -- well, workmen's compensa-
22 tion is not the same as retirement benefits.

23 MR. REICH: I submit that when it is income provided 24 as post-retirement income to a retiree, it replaces --

25 QUESTION: Workmen's compensation is compensation

1 for illness or accident, employment-connected, is it not?

2 MR. REICH: Yes.

3 QUESTION: It's not a retirement plan.

4 MR. REICH: But social security disability benefits 5 are also benefits for disability, although it need not be 6 work-connected. The work-connected aspect is not material, 7 I should say.

8 QUESTION: Well, in any event, compensation, workmens' 9 compensation, is compensation for injury or accident. It is 10 not a pension benefit.

11 MR. REICH: It is compensation for a disability, it 12 is compensation for a disability whether it is injury, accident, 13 or occupational disease. It is compensation for a disability 14 which is --

15 QUESTION: And it's not generally -- I doubt that it 16 would be generally considered as a retirement benefit, if 17 you're relying on that language of the statute.

18 MR. REICH: Well, indeed, when the period for which 19 it is, or the disability covers a period of retirement, I sug-
20 gest that it should so be considered for the simple reason 21 that the retirement is, the concept of retirement is not 22 limited to retirement for age.

23 QUESTION: Well, I suppose a judgment in a state 24 court would be the same argument, a retirement benefit created 25 under state law.

1 MR. REICH: No, it's been -- there has been a dis-
2 tinction drawn by the Internal Revenue Service in holding that 3 state law common law actions may not, the common law damages
4 may not be offset.

5 QUESTION: Well, that's a Treasury regulation.

6 MR. REICH: That is a Treasury --

7 QUESTION: It has no -- it plays no part in your 8 present statutory -- ?

9 MR. REICH: Oh, yes, sir. I'm saying, I'm distin-
10 guishing between -- I'm saying that the Regulation 411(a)(4)(a) 11 if it didn't exist would nevertheless have to exist, the rule 12 would be the same. It has been declared by the Treasury that 13 the Treasury declaration is correct. It is I believe manifest
14 from the legislative history. Section 401(a)(5) was reenacted
15 by ERISA without material change. It was reenacted by ERISA
16 with the administrative interpretation that it is applicable 17 to workers' compensation integration as well as the social 18 security integration as well as to railroad retirement inte-19 gration.

20 If the Court is to say that Section 203 was intended 21 to preclude integration of any kind of benefits, then the 22 Court must in fact suggest that Congress intended in Section
23 203(a) which did not speak of integration, to overrule
24 and implicitly repeal Section 401(a)(5) under which integra-
25 tion exists and has existed for 40 years under which workers'

1 compensation benefit integration specifically had existed
2 for at least six years prior to the enactment.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Reich, I confess I had misunderstood
4 part of your argument. 401(a)(5) is not part of ERISA?

5 MR. REICH: 401(a)(5) --

6 QUESTION: Did you say it was reenacted in ERISA, 7 and in what section of ERISA is 401(a)(5)?

8 MR. REICH: 1021, I believe it is, in Title II.

9 QUESTION: Is there a 1016? Is that right?

10 MR. REICH: 1016. It's in Section 1016, which 11 merely --

12 QUESTION: Where is that?

13 MR. REICH: That was part of ERISA.

14 QUESTION: I know, but where in -- ?

15 MR. REICH: Oh, the 1016 is merely a --

16 QUESTION: Is it printed here somewhere?

17 MR. REICH: No, it is not, sir, the text of 18 401(a)(5) as it was amended. What Title II did, Section 1016
19 is a part of Title II of ERISA. What Title II of ERISA did --

20 QUESTION: Could you give me the code citation of 21 1016?

22 MR. REICH: The code citation is Section 401(a)(5).

23 QUESTION: No, I want the Code citation of the 24 statute, the part of ERISA that reenacts 401(a)(5).

25 MR. REICH: It is not in the Code, as far as

1 I understand.

2 QUESTION: Oh, I see.

3 MR. REICH: It is merely a part of the public law.
4 What it did was simply say, Section 401(a)(5) is hereby 5 amended to provide as follows. The codification of the 6 amendment appears within the Code. It is in the Code but 7 merely the enacting section is not in the Code. It was under 8 under --

9 QUESTION: Well, after lunch, will you tell me where 10 I can find 401(a)(5) in ERISA, if I can? In Title 29 of the 11 United States Code?

12 MR. REICH: Not in Title 29. It is in Title 26, 13 because it was an amendment --

14 QUESTION: Well, you said it was reenacted as part 15 of ERISA. You tell me after lunch where to look for it.

16 MR. REICH: Yes, sir, I'll be happy to do so.

17 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We'll resume there at 18 1 o'clock.

19 (Recess)

20 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: You may continue, 21 counsel.

22 MR. REICH: In response to Mr. Justice Stevens' 23 question before recess, the text of Section 401(a)(5) of the 24 Code as it was amended by ERISA is to be found in 26 U.S.C., 25 Section 401(a)(5). The amendment to it was accomplished by

1 Section 1012(b) of Public Law 93-406. I call the Court's 2 attention in this regard to page 18, Footnote 18, of the brief
3 of appellees in the Alessi case which describes the manner in 4 which Title I was incorporated into -- and also Footnote 6
5 of the same brief, which describe the manner in which Title I
6 was incorporated into Title 29, and Title I of ERISA incor-
7 porated into Title 29 of the U.S. Code; Title II, Amendments,
8 were incorporated into Title 26 of the U.S. Code.

9 In response to Mr. Justice Stewart's question 10 shortly before recess, we suggest that retirement has always 11 covered termination of employment for age, service, disability, 12 or any of those three, just as the Social Security Act bene-13 fits covered benefits for age and disability, just as the 14 Railroad Retirement Act covers benefits for age and dis-
15 ability.

16 QUESTION: But you can get workmen's compensation
17 without retiring.

18 MR. REICH: Yes, but when -- you can, but you can 19 also get workmen's compensation when you are retired. When 20 you are retired the workmen's compensation is providing an in-21 come relating to disability, and the normal retirement bene-
22 fit as defined in Section 3(22) of ERISA does include a re-
23 tirement benefit for disability within the normal retirement
24 benefit, so the normal retirement benefit subsumes within it --

25 QUESTION: You're talking about a retired person

1 getting workmen's compensation. Presumably he would have 2 retired and then taken another job?

3 MR. REICH: It is not necessarily to presume that 4 he would have. The concept of Section 401(a)(5) is that the 5 employer has funded two sets of benefits to provide income, 6 he's funded the plan benefit; he has funded the disability
7 benefit under the workmen's compensation law. They both are 8 providing income during his retirement, whether the re-9 tirement is occasioned by the disability or whether the re-10 tirement was occasioned by age and --

11 QUESTION: If a man retires by age, he gets work-12 men's compensation?

13 MR. REICH: He can under the laws of many states 14 and New Jersey is one of those.

15 QUESTION: How? If it's not arising in the course 16 of employment, if he had retired and wasn't working, that is?

17 MR. REICH: If he's retired and wasn't working he 18 can, and in fact as was pointed out, the General Motors plan 19 provision covers only cases in which he has applied after, 20 more than two years after he retired. He can under state 21 law, get benefits under workmen's compensation law for dis-
22 ability, even after he has retired.

23 QUESTION: Well, how much does he get?

24 MR. REICH: That would depend upon the award and 25 the particular state.

1 QUESTION: Well, I mean, if he retires at 65, he 2 gets a certain amount of money?

3 MR. REICH: Yes. Yes, Justice Marshall, he does.

4 QUESTION: Regardless of his condition?

5 MR. REICH: Well, regardless of his physical -- ?
6 It would relate to his physical condition, I would suggest.

7 QUESTION: Well, that's what I would think so,
8 but you say that automatically if he retired he gets workmen's 9 compensation?

10 MR. REICH: No, sir, no I did not. I did not mean 11 to say that.

12 QUESTION: That's what I understood you to say.

13 MR. REICH: I said he may get disability retirement 14 benefits -- disability benefits or workers' compensation after 15 he retires.

16 QUESTION: But the workmen's compensation is based 17 on the disability, not his age?

18 MR. REICH: That is correct.

19 QUESTION: Well, that's what I thought.

20 MR. REICH: No, I did not mean to say otherwise, 21 Justice Marshall. If I did, I --

22 QUESTION: May I ask you a question, though, that's 23 related to one I know that Justice Rehnquist asked?
24 In this case the reason the man gets workmen's compensation 25 as well as the retirement benefits is because his right to

1 workmen's compensation depends on an injury he suffered while 2 he was employed by the employer who also funded the retire-
3 ment plan?

4 MR. REICH: That's right, an injury or other dis-
5 ability.

6 QUESTION: What would the retirement plan and what 7 would the law be if after his retirement he went to work for 8 an entirely different employer and was injured and then be-9 came entitled to workmen's compensation as a result of that 10 injury? Would there be an offset there?

11 MR. REICH: No, there would not.

12 QUESTION: Because it's not funded?

13 MR. REICH: It's only where the same employer funds
14 both the workmen's compensation benefits and the pension bene-
15 fits, if he got the benefits from another employer, then --

16 QUESTION: There's no offset.

17 MR. REICH: -- the plan would take no offset.

18 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Casey.

19 ORAL ARGUMENT OF WARREN J. CASEY, ESQ.,
20 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLEES IN NO. 79-1943

21 MR. CASEY: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the 22 Court:

23 On the vesting question I'd like to address three 24 short points. I think it's important to keep in mind that 25 we're dealing with private contracts. Agreements by the

1 private parties deal in their own way with economic security
2 during retirement. In agreeing to set up a retirement plan
3 for its employees, the employer faces two competing interests.
4 The employees want the employer to agree to pay them and to 5 assure them some level of monthly income during retirement.
6 The employer as a businessman is willing to incur some level
7 of retirement costs for his employees but no more. The pri-
8 vate retirement contract reflects how these two competing 9 interests, retirement costs and monthly payments, were bal-
10 anced by the parties.

11 The benefit agreed upon under the Raybestos plan is 12 an integrated benefit. The plan takes into account any bene-
13 fits paid by Raybestos during retirement under the workers' 14 compensation program. This was the benefit decided upon by 15 the parties in collective bargaining as stated in the plan
16 document, both before and after ERISA.

17 The vesting rules, which are at issue here, operate on 18 that integrated benefit. The right to that integrated benefit, 19 whether the plan integrates with social security, railroad re-20 tirement, or as here, the benefits paid by Raybestos at the 21 same time during retirement under the workers' compensation 22 program, the right to that integrated benefit vests and is 23 nonforfeitable. The plan assure a defined level of monthly 24 income during retirement. There is never any moment when the 25 plan participant does not receive that monthly income

1 during retirement assured by the private plan.

2 When, for example, the plan member's also receiving 3 certain periodic income under the workers' compensation pro-
4 gram during retirement, and that statutory payment ceases 5 for whatever reason or is even taken away retroactively, the 6 private plan assures a defined monthly benefit. There is 7 never a moment when that assured monthly benefit is condi-
8 tional or not fully enforceable against the private plan.

9 QUESTION: Are you saying that the Raybestos col-
10 lective bargaining contract expressly contemplated workmen's 11 compensation payments as a part of the pension plan?

12 MR. CASEY: Exactly, Your Honor. The employer
13 takes into account any other periodic income under the workers' 14 compensation program. It did not, for example, offset with 15 social security, which was another permissible offset.
16 Rather, the employer took into account that a plan member may 17 also be receiving by Raybestos certain periodic income under 18 the workers' compensation program during retirement, and it
19 assures each plan member, it addresses the economic security
20 for each plan member. In setting up the plan it assures each 21 employee who vests this defined level of monthly income 22 assured by the private plan, and the right to that integrated 23 benefit; whether it's zero or $100 a month, it's an integrated 24 benefit. The right to that integrated benefit, to that 25 monthly income assured by the private plan is nonforfeitable.

1 This integration was approved prior to ERISA, first 2 in the 1968 Revenue Ruling, which Mr. Reich alluded to, and 3 also in the comprehensive guides for pension plan qualifica-
4 tion which were published and republished during Congress's
5 consideration of the ERISA bills. Those comprehensive guides
6 brought together in a simple approach the general requirements
7 of the Government for the qualification of retirement plans.
8 They stated what integration with what statutory income pro-
9 grams during retirement may be permissible under the Tax Code.

10 ERISA is a highly technical, highly specific stat-
11 ute, the result of a decade of study of the private retirement
12 system. When Congress intended to effect subsequent changes 13 in the existing rules, it acted with precision. Nowhere in 14 the statute or in the thousands of pages of legislative his-15 tory did Congress ever prohibit this integrated benefit or 16 did it ever suggest to the Treasury Department and to the 17 private parties who draft these contracts that the integrated 18 benefit should be prohibited under the vesting rules. It sim-19 ply never was, prior to ERISA, nor was there any time after 20 ERISA, was there any inconsistency between a private plan 21 agreeing to provide an integrated benefit during retirement, 22 fully financed by the plan's sponsor, and the entirely sepa-
23 rate requirement that the employee's property right to that 24 integrated benefit must at all times be unconditional and 25 fully enforceable against the private plan. There is never

1 any reduction in the monthly income assured by Raybestos
2 under the private plan, and all paid by Raybestos.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Casey, how do you -- do you have an 4 answer to Mr. Gettis's argument based on 4(b)(3)?

5 MR. CASEY: Your Honor, Mr. Gettis basically argues 6 that ERISA does not preempt and includes express relief from 7 preemption for any state law related to retirement plans so 8 long as it is part of the workers' compensation statute.
9 This simply misstates the statute. The statute relieves from 10 all the coverage provisions of ERISA, including the vesting 11 funding, any plan that's maintained solely to comply with the 12 workers' compensation law.

13 As Mr. Gettis stated and it has always been agreed, 14 that these plans simply are not maintained solely to comply
15 with the workers' compensation law. This 1977 New Jersey
16 statute directly prohibits a private plan from providing a 17 benefit during retirement integrated with other benefits the 18 private employer pays at the same time, concurrently, period-
19 ically, with that retirement income. It directly regulates 20 these private retirement plans and directly regulates the 21 terms and conditions of the retirement plans. It affects 22 nothing else other than retirement plans. For that reason it's 23 preempted under 4(b) assertion.

24 QUESTION: What kinds of plans, Mr. Casey, are main-25 tained solely for the purpose of complying with applicable

1 workmen's compensation laws?

2 MR. CASEY: Justice Brennan, under most state
3 workers' compensation laws, an employer may either pay into 4 a state fund an insurance premium which will then fund the 5 periodic income for the disability or it may make arrange-6 ments with a private insuror. The third possibility is for 7 an employer to be a self-insuror. In order to be a self-8 insuror he just can't say, I'm going to agree to pay these 9 benefits. He has to, I believe in just about every state, 10 have an approved plan, a plan approved by the state, which 11 specifies what, for example, the claims processing procedures
12 often are part of these things. But assuming --

13 QUESTION: Is there anything in the legislative 14 history of 4(b)(3) to show us that kind of plan and only that 15 kind of plan was in the reach of 4(b)(3)?

16 MR. CASEY: As I recall, the legislative history in 17 that provision is very scant. However, as I recall, the 18 legislative history does note that there was no reason to 19 worry about the vesting and funding of these plans, because 20 they're totally divorced from a private employer plan which is 21 voluntary, are going to provide a period income benefit during 22 retirement. This Raybestos plan was a collectively bargained 23 plan. This was a benefit, it was a voluntary plan between 24 the union and the employer, agreed to in 1967. And this is 25 the benefit it provides. Thank you.

1 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: You have about three 2 minutes.

3 MR. SACHS: Thank you, Your Honor.

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF THEODORE SACHS, ESQ.,

5 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANTS IN NO. 79-1943 -- REBUTTAL

6 MR. SACHS: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the 7 Court:

8 I would submit that it's an extraordinary mode of 9 interpreting a pension reform law to look at prior practices 10 which we submit Congress intended to end, because they were 11 abuses. Now, it's been suggested to you that nothing has 12 changed. I suggest to you that by this Act everything has 13 changed. In the first place, those practices which are 14 sought to be escalated here into justification for continua-
15 tion of the practices were never permissible before.

16 26 U.S.C. 401(a)(5) which appears at 1a of appel-17 lants' Appendix indicates that this word integration, which 18 doesn't appear in the plan, but it's the euphemism which now
19 permeates all the briefs -- 401(a)(5) says that the difference
20 may be permitted "because of any retirement benefits created 21 under state or federal law."

22 Now, the U.S. brief to the 3rd Circuit acknowledged 23 that the word retirement had to be read into the regulation 24 it was relying on. Unless the conclusion can be reached that 25 men suffer disabilities and occupational injuries and

1 occupational diseases as part of a claimed retirement plan, 2 it makes a mockery of this law. In fact, we demonstrated in 3 the brief, in our reply brief citing the legislative history 4 -- page 8 of appellants' reply brief, that Congress intended in 5 203(a) supplemental and additional requirements, in addition 6 to 401(a)(5), even a 401(a)(5) as a tax measure for anti-dis-
7 crimination -- totally unrelated purposes -- made any sense.

8 But I am constrained to point out to the Court
9 in the light of the argument made that there is a misquotation
10 in the appellees' brief, I'm sure inadvertent. But if you
11 will look at page 26 of the brief of appellees, which talks 12 about the alleged change, fact that there is no change, the 13 sentence reads, purporting to quote from the committee report:

14 "Moreover, the conferees intend that the anti-15 discrimination rules of present law are not to be 16 changed."

17 The legislative history, at 3 Legislative History
18 4544, inserts after the word "law" the phrase, "in areas 19 other than the vesting schedule." So the sentence should 20 read:

21 "Moreover, the conferees intend that the anti-22 discrimination rules of present law in areas other 23 than the vesting schedule are not to be changed."

24 QUESTION: Do you think this is what you would 25 call a typographical error or omission?

1 MR. SACHS: Yes, Your Honor.

2 QUESTION: If one were to turn to the original 3 source one would find the thing that you state it was?

4 MR. SACHS: The words I just read, Your Honor,
5 "in areas other than the vesting schedule." And of course, 6 the vesting schedule is 203(a). And that's precisely what 7 Congress was adding as a new and independent requirement
8 which did not previously exist. The problem with the argu-
9 ments of appellees is they make 203(a) a dead letter. You 10 don't need any exceptions for 203(a), as they do exist, if 11 their arguments hold any water, because those provisions would 12 be superfluous and they would be redundant. There's no need, 13 if you can put it all in the plan and write it off. These 14 men lost their benefits. They paid for them with their live-15 lihood, and those benefits should be restored.

16 Thank you, Your Honors.

17 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
18 The case is submitted.

19 (Whereupon, at 1:17 o'clock p.m., the case in the 20 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
