MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next in Payne v. Chrysler Motors.

Mr. Reeves, I think you may proceed whenever you ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF C. LEE REEVES, ESQ.,

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

MR. REEVES: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

I represent Petitioner J. Truett Payne Company. We filed this secondary line Robinson-Patman Act price discrimination case, resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the petitioner. After a motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict was denied, in the 5th Circuit it was appealed and the 5th Circuit reversed on the grounds that the plaintiff, petitioner in this instance, must prove the specific lost sales or lost profits. And that is the only method of proving the fact of the injury. And a second and underlying factor in the reversal was that the petitioner failed to prove a reasonable estimate of the amount of the price discrimination or damage and that the actual amount of the discrimination was not sufficient by which the court could estimate the damage, or by which the jury could estimate the damage.

This Court is faced with the damage issues under the

1 Robinson-Patman Act and Section 4 of the Clayton Act, which 2 bring into focus the 5th Circuit's requirement of a plaintiff
3 proving specific lost profits or lost sales as the only means 4 of recovering under the Robinson-Patman Act, and whether or 5 not that requirement imposes an inflated standard of proof 6 thereby effectively denying private attorney generals the 7 ability to enforce the Act and recover for a 8 wrong; and secondly, whether or not the amount of the price 9 differential is sufficient evidence to give a reasonable and 10 proper estimate of the amount of the damage.

11 The 5th Circuit in its opinion misconstrues not 12 only the law but I believe in misconstruing the law underlying 13 the problem was misconstruing Payne's position. It stated 14 that Payne claimed that in a total vacuum price discrimina-15 tion alone was sufficient to give rise to an injury under 16 Section 4 of the Act, of the Clayton Act.

17 And I submit that that is the basis upon which the 18 court totally ignored this Court's findings and holdings in 19 Bruce's Juices case, in 1947, and the FTC v. Morton Salt 20 case in 1948.

21 QUESTION: Well, do you concede that findings of 22 discrimination under the Act, without any evidence suffi-23 cient to survive a motion for a directed verdict, dealing with 24 causation and damage, would be insufficient to support a 25 monetary award?

1 MR. REEVES: Mr. Justice Rehnquist, I would say
2 that if price discrimination alone with absolutely no other 3 evidence is the only evidence before the Court, then I would 4 say that that's true; that price discrimination in a vacuum
5 cannot be found to cause injury.

6 QUESTION: Well, what about price discrimination
7 plus the fact that the two customers are competitive?
8 Is that enough?

9 MR. REEVES: I think you have got to go farther.
10 I would not mind that finding.

11 QUESTION: Well, I wouldn't think you would; yes.

12 MR. REEVES: But I would submit to Your Honor, 13 Mr. Justice White, that in this case there was substantial 14 corroborating evidence supporting an inference of injury 15 resulting from substantial price discrimination taking place, 16 occurring in a market where there was keen competition and 17 in the face of tight profit margins, and where the substan-18 tial price discrimination could have been reflected in the 19 retail sales price. Now, under those circumstances the 5th 20 Circuit didn't address that, it just said, the only way that 21 you could prove injury is to show proof of lost sales and 22 lost profits, but under the circumstances in this case the 23 jury, the fact finder, whether it be a jury or a court, could 24 have inferred injury from the existence of those factors, plus 25 the price discrimination itself.

1           So, in answer to your question, I think that this 2 Court need not address whether or not price discrimination
3 standing alone in a vacuum gives rise to injury or competi-
4 tive injury. Because the facts of this case show a substan-
5 tial supporting -- substantial corroborating evidence sup-6 porting not only the proof of actual competitive injury, not 7 just a finding of a likelihood or probability of injury, 8 but testimony that competition itself was harmed, and sup-9 port an inference that would support the jury's finding which 10 could give rise to an inference of damage to the disfavored 11 purchaser.

12           QUESTION: Do you think that Mr. Payne's testimony
13 itself without the testimony of Dr. Ignatin would have re-14 quired the district court to submit the case to the jury on 15 the issue of damages and required it to accept an award of 16 damages that was within the range of his testimony?

17           MR. REEVES: Under the -- no other rebutting evi-18 dence whatsoever, yes, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, I do. Because 19 that would then be a case where you would have price dis-
20 crimination, not in a vacuum, but disregarding Mr. Payne's 21 testimony, which the 5th Circuit discounts by saying that 22 this is a conclusion of one of the injured parties, I still 23 say that it is corroborating evidence which put together 24 with the vast amount of other corroborating evidence would 25 permit at least, at the very least, the jury to determine

1 the fact of whether or not there was damage. And the 5th
2 Circuit says, it doesn't address these other --

3 QUESTION: Well, what if you have only these two 4 questions on the damage issue, and they're put to Mr. Payne
5 by Mr. Payne's counsel, "Mr. Payne, were you damaged by this 6 price discrimination?" Answer: "Yes." Question: "How 7 much?" Answer: "$75,000." End of direct; no cross. Is that 8 submissible to the jury on the damage issue and sustainable?

9 MR. REEVES: I believe, under even the standards
10 that this Court has established on proof of damage and proof 11 of amount of damage, that you would have to go farther than 12 just mere self-serving conclusions in the absence of any other 13 supporting evidence.

14 However, if -- like in this case -- the amounts of 15 the price discriminations which resulted -- Chrysler, in a 16 rebate program -- let me just go into the background just a 17 moment, if it please the court.

18 Rebate programs were formulated by Chrysler whereby 19 the amount of money that was paid to the competing dealers 20 in the Birmingham market was determined by a quota that was 21 reached, or not reached, by the competing dealers. The quotas 22 were different for each dealer, and the price rebate would 23 thereby lower the price and cause the discrimination, if 24 everybody were not rebated the same price on the same model 25 automobile.

1           And in this case there was evidence of substantial 2 amounts of discrimination occurring, sometimes several hundred 3 dollars per automobile, in a period -- we're talking about 4 50 or more automobiles a month, and these rebate programs
5 lasted two and three months in duration. So, when you put 6 that, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, together with Mr. Payne's testi-
7 mony, the actual fact of the price discrimination, the dura-8 tion of the substantial nature of it, and the amounts of it, 9 then I say that that would be an issue that should be sub-10 mitted to the trier of fact, as to whether or not the trier of 11 fact could infer damage without proof of specific lost sales 12 or lost profits.

13           The testimony in this case showed that during a 14 3-1/2-year period from approximately December, 1970 --
15 November, 1973 -- May, 1974, when Payne went out of business, 16 that the price discrimination totalled about $81,000.
17 There were 16 rebate programs which caused the price discrimi-
18 nation, and of those 16 programs 13 caused damage to Payne, 19 and that damaged -- that Payne was not favored, he was a dis-
20 favored dealer in those 13. Of those other three programs, 21 one of the programs was a program that had a quota established 22 by Chrysler by which the dealer had to reach that quota in 23 order to get paid and Payne reached that one quota and did 24 not get injured in that program. The other two programs 25 where there was no discrimination were an across-the-board

1 percentage rebate to everybody on a per car basis, so there
2 was no discrimination at all. So, out of those 16 programs
3 over a 3-1/2-year period, Payne was injured, was a disfavored 4 dealer in 13 of them.

5           There was testimony not only by Payne that this 6 company lost business in the form of lost sales, but also 7 that his company in order to maintain sales had to overallow 8 on the used car tradein, and that was a factor in the testi-9 mony of Dr. Ignatin and in the testimony, as a matter of 10 fact, of Chrysler's witnesses which analyzed the used car
11 business of Payne, saying that, one, that the main problem
12 with Payne was its used car business was losing money.

13 So you've got the fact that Payne testified that he was over-14 allowing in order to get business coupled with the corrobo-15 rating testimony that there was a real problem in the used 16 car business, coupled with a factor of substantial, sustained
17 price discriminations over 3-1/2 years. There was testimony
18 of an actual decline in the market, percentage of the market
19 that Payne had from 1971 and 1972.

20           There was also testimony that the price discrimina-
21 tion adversely affected competition and injured competition 22 because it had a two-pronged effect. The first thing was that 23 it did not permit Payne to compete on an even and equal 24 basis. He was at a trade disadvantage because his cars cost 25 more than the other competing dealers.

1           Secondly, the price of a new car is determined by 2 the discounting off of the list price, and everybody knows 3 that, and the economist that analyzed the industry in 4 Birmingham determined that because the competing dealers, 5 the favored dealers, did not have to discount off list price 6 quite as much as they otherwise would have since they were 7 favored and Payne was not favored with the rebate, with the 8 price discrimination, and because Payne could not discount off 9 list price as much as he otherwise would have done because 10 of the lack of the price rebate, that that raised the price, 11 the ultimate retail price to the consumer in the market to 12 a slight degree.

13           And the 5th Circuit in its opinion did not consider 14 all of this evidence as giving rise at least to the submis-15 sion to a jury as to whether or not injury in fact under 16 the antitrust laws could be caused. The 5th Circuit said 17 that the only way you can prove injury is to prove lost 18 profits or lost sales.

19           This Court considered the same issue in a different 20 context in Bruce's Juices v. American Can Company, and in that 21 case, although the ultimate finding was much narrower, the 22 Court was faced with an analysis exactly the same as in this 23 case, because the plaintiff in that case had said that the 24 price discrimination statute ought to void the contract in-25 volved in the transaction where there was price discrimination.

1           The court said, and the plaintiff also said, that 2 the treble damage remedy under the Robinson-Patman Act was 3 ineffective. This Court said, no, because all that there 4 would be normal, or all that would be necessary in the 5 absence of extraordinary circumstances would be to prove the 6 substantial price differential, and that would be damage, and 7 the amount of that damage would be that differential.

8           In that finding, and it's more than mere dictum -- 9 I know that Chrysler characterized it as dictum -- but this 10 court had to analyze how you would prove price discrimination, 11 how you would prove damage under the Act that would be an 12 effective remedy. And it recognized that, it recognized what 13 Chrysler ignores, and what the 5th Circuit ignores, and that 14 is that the defendant in a price discrimination case would 15 always have the chance of rebutting the inference of injury.
16 It's not an automatic injury rule, despite their characteriza-17 tion of it; it gives rise to an inference of injury.

18           The factfinder should be allowed to determine 19 whether in fact there was injury or not. And if substantial 20 evidence is introduced by the defendant showing that these 21 "extraordinary circumstances" exist in the marketplace, then 22 price discrimination, whether it be substantial or sustained, 23 is not going to give rise to the damage. But it is a jury 24 issue.

25           QUESTION: Do you agree with all of the Bruce's

1 Juices language on page 746, 330 U.S., where the Court says
2 that the plaintiff here is not complaining of the high price 3 of the object sold, but it's complaining that he didn't get 4 enough of what he wanted, in effect? In other words, that 5 to analogize to your case in my mind at any rate you're com-6 plaining not of the discount and rebates as such but that 7 other people got more of them than your client?

8 MR. REEVES: Only in the context, Mr. Justice
9 Rehnquist, of the competition in the market, because that 10 in effect reduced the price. There was testimony by both the 11 expert witnesses that that reduced the price of automobiles
12 and that the automobiles, originally, each model was priced 13 the same. Therefore, the product that was being sold in 14 the market was costed, cost more to Payne than it did to the 15 other dealers who were competing in that very same time frame 16 under that very same program for the sale to the very same 17 customers in that market, and that put Payne at a total dis-18 advantage in sales.

19 Now, there are several things that can happen when 20 that occurs. The disfavored purchaser could keep his same 21 price and eat the higher cost, and reduce the profit. Or he 22 could have passed the price increase, the higher cost, along 23 to the customer, in which there's an expectation of lost 24 sales.

25 But this Court has said in Hanover Shoe case

1 and in the Illinois Brick case that it is insurmountable al-
2 most to predict the effect of the higher cost of a product 3 upon, or measure the effect a higher cost will have on the 4 sales of a company. And therefore, to require proof of an 5 actual loss in sales volume traceable directly to the price 6 discrimination as the only means of proving the fact of 7 damage, flies in the face of what this Court has said is the 8 policy behind enforcing the antitrust laws.

9 QUESTION: In Bruce's Juices, on page 746 the Court
10 is discussing the refusal to outlaw these discounts flatly, 11 and it says, at the top of the page, "They become illegal 12 only under certain conditions and when they are illegal it is 13 as much a violation to accept or receive as to allow them.
14 Bruce, in one of the years included in its balance of 15 account, purchased more than a half-million dollars of cans
16 on which it received precisely the kind and amount of dis-
17 count that now it asserts to be illegal."

18 Isn't that to a certain extent true of your client?

19 MR. REEVES: To a certain extent it's true that 20 Chrysler's rebates lessened the price, the ultimate price of 21 the car to my client. But it didn't, it put our client at a 22 disadvantage, because our client had a higher cost on those 23 very same cars than the favored dealers. I think that what 24 you may be getting at is whether or not the fact that there 25 was a benefit to my client, does that countervail away against

1 the fact that there was a larger benefit to his competitor?
2 And I submit that the answer is an unqualified no; it doesn't 3 matter that Payne received a benefit, because ultimately 4 the other people, the competing dealers, received a less-5 priced automobile and were able to take away either sales
6 either profits, or either use more customer-attracting ser-7 vices and get the business and let Payne not withstand the 8 difficult times in the market that eventually caused its 9 demise.

10 QUESTION: Well, counsel, suppose before a discrimi-
11 nation takes place, two competitors are each selling 500 12 cars a year and then the manufacturer lowers the price to 13 one of the dealers but not to the other. Afterwards, they 14 are both selling 500 cars a year, and the only thing that's 15 happened is that the disfavored dealer is not making the 16 same profit as his competitor, and he has lost profits, but 17 he hasn't lost any sales. He's lost profits. Now is that 18 enough to give rise to injury?

19 MR. REEVES: Yes, Mr. Justice White, it is.

20 QUESTION: Well, is that an injury to competition?

21 MR. REEVES: It's an injury to competition; yes, 22 it is.

23 QUESTION: Did the Court of Appeals here assume an 24 injury to competition but then just say, the injury to com-25 petition, there's no proof that it caused any injury to 1 your client?

2 MR. REEVES: The Court of Appeals, if I read their 3 opinion correctly, stated that the proof of price discrimina-4 tion by itself does not prove competitive injury, nor does 5 it prove --

6 QUESTION: It began its opinion by saying that it
7 didn't need to decide whether or not there had been a viola-
8 tion of the Robinson-Patman Act.

9 MR. REEVES: That's correct.

10 QUESTION: And if there had been a violation of it 11 -- but I guess it proceeded to assume that there had been one, 12 and if there had been one, then there was an injury to com-13 petition.

14 MR. REEVES: It did not --

15 QUESTION: So it necessarily said that even if 16 there was a violation there was not causation.

17 MR. REEVES: That's -- right. They never addressed 18 whether or not under the elements of Section 2(a) of the 19 Act were met. But it simply went off on the fact that no 20 injury, according to it, was proved, because no lost profits 21 and no lost sales were shown.

22 QUESTION: Well, if -- why didn't you just take 23 the -- if you really are prepared to support your answer to 24 my question of a while ago, I suppose you would say that 25 whether your client lost sales in this case or not, he paid

1 more for his cars, and therefore he lost some profits.

2 MR. REEVES: Absolutely.

3 QUESTION: That's all you have to say.

4 MR. REEVES: I think that the 5th Circuit recog-5 nized that.

6 QUESTION: Well, but they didn't. They said that --

7 MR. REEVES: Well, they distinguished paying more
8 for cars and lost profits. They distinguished that by saying 9 under the enterprise doctrine that just means that my client
10 was not as well off as the more favored dealers. It did not 11 -- this is their rationale, this is the 5th Circuit rationale
12 -- that it didn't damage Payne because he had to pay a higher 13 price, it merely made the other competitors in a better posi-
14 tion. Well, that's turning the whole theory of price dis-15 crimination on its head, as it were, because the evil that 16 price discrimination is designed to remedy is the difference, 17 the lower cost, to the favored dealer.

18 It doesn't matter whether you say it's an overcharge 19 or an undercharge, it's still an injury in the form of even-20 tually --

21 QUESTION: Well, my example to you, though, the 22 500-car example, the disfavored dealer is making the same 23 profit, after the discrimination. He just isn't making the 24 profit his competitor is. Can you say he lost profits?

25 MR. REEVES: Yes, you can, Mr. Justice White.

1 That ignores the economic reality of the marketplace in that 2 had the disfavored dealer received a lower cost, it might 3 have and could have theoretically in a competitive market 4 reduced its sales price, retail sales price, maximized its 5 volume, keeping the same profit margin, and thereby, since it 6 had more volume and more profit -- more volume times the 7 same profit margin, it lost profits. And that is the whole 8 theory of our economic system.

9 QUESTION: The fact is, though, that after the 10 discrimination, in my example, the favored dealer didn't 11 pick up any sales.

12 MR. REEVES: Well, the favored dealer may not have 13 wanted to pick up sales. It could have kept its same price.
14 I believe that's what your hypothetical envisioned. And 15 therefore it could have done a lot of things. It could have 16 cut back on its advertising, it could have pocketed the addi-17 tional profit, it could have done a lot of things. But the 18 end result is that because the favored dealer has a lower 19 cost the economic opportunities, the position in the market 20 of the disfavored purchaser is injured.

21 That's what this Court said in Morton Salt. And it
22 used the words, "There is an obvious inference of damage" to a 23 merchant that pays a higher price for the same product than 24 its competing merchants and the competing seller.

25 QUESTION: Mr. Reeves, is there any evidence in

1 this record of injury to competition other than the injury
2 to your client?

3 MR. REEVES: Yes, Mr. Justice Stevens, I believe 4 I mentioned just briefly that the economist testified that 5 the price discrimination resulted in a two-pronged effect.
6 Number one, it made my client less able to compete, less able 7 to have as much profit. Secondly, it raised slightly the 8 retail sales price to the ultimate consumer in the market.
9 Therefore you have two types of injuries to competition.
10 Certainly competition is supposed to envision the most effi-11 cient use of resources to get the lowest price to the ultimate 12 consumer.

13 QUESTION: He testified that the market price as a 14 whole was raised by reason of the discrimination?

15 MR. REEVES: As, in his view, that was the effect 16 of that type of rebate program.

17 QUESTION: I see.

18 QUESTION: Well, and the very fact that your client 19 went out of business resulting in three competitors for 20 selling Chrysler-Plymouths instead of four would be an injury 21 to competition, wouldn't it?

22 MR. REEVES: That's another piece of corroborating
23 evidence that supports --

24 QUESTION: But that's only corroborating if you 25 assume that he went out of business because of the price

1 discrimination.

2 QUESTION: That's the allegation that the Court
3 of Appeals disagreed with.

4 MR. REEVES: That's true, but the Court of Appeals 5 again took the position, Mr. Justice Stevens, that despite 6 the expert testimony by Dr. Ignatin that the price discrimi-7 nation -- if there had not been any price discrimination, 8 Payne would not have gone out of business. They said that's 9 just not supportable.

10 Why? I don't know. It may have been that in a 11 footnote to the opinion in the 5th Circuit they said 12 that Dr. Ignatin prefaced his testimony about that 13 by saying that it was speculation.

14 Well, that is an inaccurate statement and 15 I mentioned that in my brief on the merits, and the 16 5th Circuit just made an error, because I cited to the 17 record where he answered a question, that it's speculative.
18 He answered in that fashion, to a question from counsel for 19 Chrysler that, is there any way to formulate a rebate program 20 that does not discriminate? He said, well, it's speculative, 21 but I can tell you this, had there not been any discrimina-
22 tion, absent that, Payne would not have gone out of business.

23 And that was the testimony, and how that can be dis-24 counted when an expert economist -- that's the only way we 25 can try to prove injury is to get someone other than conclusory

1 statements which the 5th Circuit has said is not permissible.

2 QUESTION: Is this much true, that if the Court of 3 Appeals is correct in believing there was a violation, or at 4 least assuming there was a violation, it must have assumed 5 that at least some of the expert's testimony was truthful,
6 at least the part about raising prices? If it disregarded 7 all the testimony about hurting your client, because injury 8 to competition is an ingredient of a statutory violation, so 9 they apparently believed part of what -- were willing to 10 assume that part of his testimony was credible and part 11 may not have been.

12 MR. REEVES: I think that's a good inference, if 13 you will, from the reading of the 5th Circuit's opinion but 14 I would like to say also that the statutory requirements 15 under Section 2(a) are even less than showing injury to 16 competition. All you need to show is a probability of injury 17 to competition.

18 QUESTION: That may be so to show a violation.

19 MR. REEVES: To show a violation --

20 QUESTION: But you don't -- doesn't a treble-damage 21 claimant have to prove an actual injury to competition?

22 MR. REEVES: Not the competition, Mr. Justice 23 White. I think he could prove injury to the business, the 24 disfavored purchaser, because he is -- competition.

25 QUESTION: That is, you say even if it were found

1 that there actually was not, or even if -- you could say,
2 even though there's no proof of actual injury to competition,
3 the plaintiff could recover?

4 MR. REEVES: I don't think so. I don't think, in 5 your way of saying it, because proof of injury to the business 6 is proof of injury to competition.

7 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will resume there at 8 one o'clock, counsel.

9 (Recess)

10 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Forman, you may 11 proceed any time you are ready.

12 ORAL ARGUMENT OF J. ROSS FORMAN, III, ESQ.,

13 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

14 MR. FORMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
15 the Court:

16 The issue in this case is what must a private plain-17 tiff prove in order to be entitled to recover treble damages
18 for an alleged violation of Section 2(a) of the Robinson-19 Patman Act?

20 The 5th Circuit in its holding in applying the 21 teachings of this Court in the Brunswick decision held 22 that more than a mere threat of anti-competitive injury had 23 to be shown to entitle recovery of treble damages. It held 24 that the plaintiff had to go further and show that it had in 25 fact suffered antitrust injury as a result in this case of

1 the sales incentive programs, and provide some useful measure
2 of the amount of such injury.

3 The court analyzed what the Robinson-Patman Act was 4 designed, or the injury it was designed to prevent, and held 5 that in order to prove a case of damages the petitioner, or 6 the plaintiff, had to show that competitive use was made of 7 a price advantage by a favored competitor, and that as a 8 result of this competitive use competition was injured by 9 profits being drawn, or sales being drawn from the injured 10 or from --

11 QUESTION: Well, don't you think we have to judge 12 this case on the assumption there was a violation of the Act?

13 MR. FORMAN: I think the 5th Circuit said they had 14 not decided that issue. I think what they were saying was 15 that, well, he really had to go further.

16 QUESTION: Yes; even if there was. So there wasn't 17 causation?

18 MR. FORMAN: There was not causation.

19 QUESTION: However, there was an injury.

20 MR. FORMAN: I think that the significance is that 21 to show the substantive violation of 2(a) you only, at least 22 under Morton Salt and that FTC action, you only have to show 23 a reasonable possibility that injury might result from a 24 price discrimination. The court said at that showing, even 25 if such a showing had been made in this case, that that was

1 not significant or substantial enough to allow recovery of 2 injury. You had to go forward and show that the injury to 3 competition had in fact occurred and that the plaintiff was 4 injured because of this injury.

5 QUESTION: Well, what about in my example of the 6 two dealers with each selling 500 cars? Suppose I vary that.
7 Each of them is selling 500 cars before a discrimination takes 8 place. And then the manufacturer raises the price to the 9 disfavored dealer, keeps the price the same to the favored 10 dealer, and afterwards they both sell exactly the same number 11 of cars; the only thing is, the disfavored dealer isn't mak-
12 ing the same unit profit, net profit, that he was before.
13 Is that proof of injury to his business?

14 MR. FORMAN: Not necessarily, if it didn't affect 15 the competition, it if was no -- it seems to me there may 16 not have been competition in that hypothetical, but I say, 17 if you --

18 QUESTION: Well, they were both competing with one 19 another. I certainly will put that in, in it. But the only 20 thing that happens, they both sell the same number of cars 21 afterwards, but the disfavored dealer isn't making -- he's 22 just lost profits, that's all.

23 MR. FORMAN: Well, I would think that under the 24 structure of the Robinson-Patman Act, there probably would 25 not be a violation. I think the Act is not designed to --

1 QUESTION: There would not be injury, you think, 2 or what -- ?

3 MR. FORMAN: I think it would not be under 2(a) 4 because the Act is not designed, I think, to insure that 5 everybody is going to pay the same unit price for what they 6 purchase. I think the Act is only there to remedy a situa-
7 tion where the competition between the favored and the dis-8 favored dealer is disrupted because of a payment of a lower 9 price. But some competitive use has to be made by the 10 favored dealer.

11 QUESTION: But if his -- the lowering of his profits
12 certainly makes him less effective, threatens his effective-13 ness as a competitor?

14 MR. FORMAN: It may threaten his effectiveness, but 15 until something actually happens I don't believe he has a 16 cause of action. Plus, I think in this case he would have to 17 go ahead and prove that it did threaten his ability to com-18 pete. I know Mr. Reeves used the example that, well, if he's 19 paying more, it may have inhibited his ability because he 20 couldn't lower his price and thereby draw more sales, and 21 so forth. That's purely hypothetical. There's no proof in 22 this case that Mr. Payne would have lowered his price, there's 23 no proof of what would have happened if he had lowered the 24 price of his cars, whether he would have attracted new sales.
25 There's no evidence as to what profit he may have realized

1 if he had done that. There's simply no proof in this case
2 that he did suffer any antitrust injury.

3 QUESTION: Therefore, in answer to my brother White's 4 question, your answer would be that in his hypothetical case
5 there wouldn't be a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, 6 because there would not be injury to competition, since each 7 dealer continued to sell the same number of cars as he had 8 in the past.

9 MR. FORMAN: I think that's correct, sir.

10 QUESTION: Therefore, you wouldn't get to the next 11 step of whether or not the plaintiff had shown injury?

12 MR. FORMAN: To himself.

13 QUESTION: Because there wouldn't be a violation of 14 the Act.

15 MR. FORMAN: Correct.

16 QUESTION: Let me ask you, Mr. Forman, supposing 17 that the two dealers handled both the Chrysler cars and also 18 General Motors cars, and General Motors and Chrysler agreed 19 to charge a higher price to one than the other. And they did 20 that, and they nevertheless continued to sell 500 cars
21 apiece. Would there be any violation of law?

22 MR. FORMAN: I think then you've got a price-fixing 23 conspiracy.

24 QUESTION: You've got a violation of the Sherman Act.
25 Would you have any injury to either one of them?

1 MR. FORMAN: Well, I think you would because that 2 case is an overcharge case. I think it's important to keep 3 in mind that price discrimination --

4 QUESTION: What assurance -- whether you call it an 5 overcharge or price discrimination, how does it differ in 6 terms of its impact on the person who makes less money than 7 if the illegality had not been present?

8 MR. FORMAN: I think the difference is in the 9 design of the two acts. In the overcharge cases it's always 10 assumed that the person is paying more than the competitive 11 price. He's paying more than he would have if there had been 12 no conspiracy. If there was no conspiracy he would have 13 paid less. In a price discrimination case -- and this is a 14 good example, in this case, when Mr. Payne and the other 15 dealers in the Birmingham area purchased their cars, they 16 were paying the same price, there'd be no violation or alleged 17 violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. All right, only when 18 a car is later sold under one of these sales incentive pro-19 grams can there even be any arguable price discrimination.
20 Now, if there had been no incentive programs the fellow would 21 not have been paying a lower price, Mr. Payne would not have 22 been paying a lower price for his cars.

23 QUESTION: Well, how can you say that? If there had 24 been no incentive programs, maybe we would just would have had 25 a uniform price reduction to both. Instead of charging

1 initially a higher price followed by rebate, you might start 2 out with a lower net price in the first instance to avoid the 3 violation.

4 MR. FORMAN: So if Chrysler had lowered the --

5 QUESTION: I suppose instead of initially charging 6 $5,000 and later rebating $500, you might initially just 7 charge $4,500. That would be -- and if you did that, instead 8 of having a rebate program, I suppose that the disfavored 9 purchaser would have been better off.

10 MR. FORMAN: Well, he'd have been a little bit 11 better off, but I think the key in the Section 2(a) case is 12 how much worse off you are because somebody else received a 13 lower price than you did. I think if the Act was structured 14 purely to look at the benefits to one dealer, it probably 15 would have been worded differently. You probably would not 16 have had the injury to competition.

17 QUESTION: Would the case be different if instead 18 of a rebate you originally had a list price of $4,500 and then 19 without announcing it publicly they wrote a letter to Payne
20 Payne that said that we've decided to charge you $5,000 a 21 car from now on, and they just raised the price to Payne 22 without -- Payne never did know what his competitors were 23 getting, anything like that? Secretly, he had to pay a higher 24 price. Would he have a cause of action? He still sold the 25 same amount of cars, just made less money on each one.

1 MR. FORMAN: Just made less money out of it.

2 I would think you have not really shown any injury to com-
3 petition because he's paying more.

4 QUESTION: But if they raised the price by agreeing 5 with their competitor to do it, why then, of course he would 6 have an injury?

7 QUESTION: And in the first case there would not be 8 a violation of the basic substantive statute. In the second 9 case there would be, because you'd have a conspiracy to fix 10 prices, which is a violation of the Sherman Act. In each 11 case there might be proof of injury.

12 MR. FORMAN: Well, I think in the Sherman Act case
13 you don't have to show any competition.

14 QUESTION: First of all, you have to show a violation 15 of the law.

16 MR. FORMAN: Is maybe the answer, you don't have 17 to show that Mr. Payne was competing with anybody. If they 18 raised the price by fixing it, he has a cause of action there, 19 but by the Robinson-Patman Act you've got to have two sales.
20 You've got to have two sales to compare, and somebody has to 21 to have received a lower price and made some competitive 22 use of that lower price.

23 QUESTION: Well, I understand the argument how one 24 may be a violation of law and the other is not. I'm just 25 -- because this case turns on whether there is an injury to

1 the plaintiff. I'm just questioning in terms of injury to 2 the plaintiff, is there really a difference, a meaningful 3 difference between the two cases?

4 MR. FORMAN: I think there is in terms of antitrust
5 injury, which is the injury that is defined in Brunswick 6 that flows from the anticompetitive effects of the violation.
7 And I think you could perhaps look at the reasoning behind
8 the enactment of Robinson-Patman, and what was Congress try-9 ing to do? And I think the answer is, they were trying to 10 prevent an underselling. What they were concerned about was 11 the growth of the chain stores at the expense of the 12 independent retailer. They were concerned about their 13 ability to undersell the independent retailer and draw sales 14 from the independent retailer or draw profits if the fellow 15 tried to compete, match that competition.

16 Now, if they designed the Robinson-Patman Act, I 17 think, to remedy that situation where profits were being drawn 18 away from the disfavored competitor. And I think that has to 19 be kept in mind when reading the statute. They were not 20 concerned necessarily with fixing a uniform price. I think 21 that's important also. Congress only wanted to remedy a situa-22 tion where there had been or possibly would be competitive in-23 jury. And under Brunswick you had to go forward and prove 24 that there was in fact competitive injury to be entitled to re-
25 cover. Plaintiff's reliance on Morton Salt does not help him

1 in this case, because that was not a damage case. Section 4
2 of the Act was not involved in any manner. All the Court 3 held there was there was sufficient evidence to allow the 4 FTC to infer that there was a reasonable probability that 5 there might be injury to competition.

6 It is true that the Morton Salt case showed, or 7 said, you didn't necessarily have to show injury to competi-
8 tion or that competitive use was actually made of the price 9 advantage. However, that case is not applicable because 10 Brunswick has held that you've got to go further than that.

11 QUESTION: But it is applicable to suggest that 12 my hypothetical, or maybe Justice White's hypothetical, that 13 sales to two different prices, where there is no transfer of 14 business back and forth, would violate the Robinson-Patman
15 Act in a proceeding brought by the Commission?

16 MR. FORMAN: It would bar him proceeding.
17 But there you're not concerned with treble damages. I would 18 suggest to the Court there's an awful difference between an 19 injunctive action to prevent future violations, or even future 20 injury, than in a treble-damage case where you actually are 21 recovering substantial amounts of damage. And to do that 22 you've got to prove that you were in fact damaged. I think 23 that's an important distinction there.

24 Petitioner has stated in his argument that there 25 was substantial proof, corroborating proof of antitrust injury

1 in this case. He talked about underselling, proof of under-2 selling by the other competitors, he talked about lost sales, 3 he talked about forcing business -- Mr. Payne was forcing 4 business, he talked about having to overallow on used cars.
5 The only evidence in this record to substantiate those accu-
6 sations are Mr. Payne's bare allegations to that effect.

7 QUESTION: Well, you can say that they're just bare 8 allegations but he did say he lost sales.

9 MR. FORMAN: And I would suggest that he had to go
10 forward and show that he lost sales. To prove you lost sales 11 is something that's done every day in antitrust.

12 QUESTION: Well, he says, I own the business, I 13 know how many cars I've been selling lately, and I know that 14 I haven't been able to sell as many cars as I used to.

15 MR. FORMAN: I think he'd have a number, then, to 16 give you, but he's submitted no number here of the number 17 of automobiles --

18 QUESTION: Well, if he had just said, by the way,
19 and what I mean is, I lost 20 sales. That would be enough?

20 MR. FORMAN: Well, I think he should have some-21 thing --

22 QUESTION: Or does he -- should he have to go to 23 call an accountant and get out his records, that sort of 24 thing?

25 MR. FORMAN: I would submit that you probably do.

1 You should have some evidence there to corroborate what he 2 says.

3 QUESTION: Well, why do you need corroboration?
4 You need corroboration in some rare kinds of cases but-- 5 kinds of. MR. FORMAN: Because if you don't, I don't think 6 you have any protection for the defendant.

7 QUESTION: Well, the court could say, I just don't be-8 lieve you. But are you going to say, well, we believe you, 9 but you need some corroboration, or what?

10 MR. FORMAN: Pardon me?

11 QUESTION: Well, what if the court believes him, 12 that he did lose sales? Could they give judgment?

13 MR. FORMAN: I don't see how. We don't measure in 14 this case, of what that damage was; unless he shows some 15 lost sales or some measure of it.

16 QUESTION: Well, he says, I lost sales in the amount 17 of $80,000, out of which I could have have made $80,000 in 18 profit. Is that enough?

19 MR. FORMAN: He said, I would have made $80,000 in 20 profit? I would hope he could substantiate that by some 21 records. I think that's the only protection a defendant has.
22 Otherwise the plaintiff could say anything.

23 QUESTION: Well, if the judge were to say to him, I 24 believe you all right, but you have to prove it with some 25 papers? Is that what you suggest?

1 MR. FORMAN: I think that's right. I think you
2 have to prove it with some evidence, some statistical evi-3 dence.

4 QUESTION: Well, why isn't his testimony evidence?

5 MR. FORMAN: It isn't evidence because there is 6 not enough there to protect a defendant. He is free to say 7 anything he wants to say, and unless -- where you're attempt-8 ing to recover treble damages, you ought to have to really 9 prove what in effect you're saying.

10 QUESTION: Well, you're not saying it's not evi-
11 dence, you're saying it's insufficient evidence?

12 MR. FORMAN: It's insufficient evidence to sub-13 stantiate the verdict.

14 QUESTION: Even though you may believe him?

15 MR. FORMAN: I think he has to have some substance 16 behind it. I think if he's got some way to correlate what 17 he says --

18 QUESTION: You're just saying that it's 19 conclusory?

20 MR. FORMAN: Correct. He's saying nothing other than 21 what he says in his complaint, really, is a complaint enough 22 to establish a case?

23 QUESTION: Conclusory is something that one usually 24 hears applied to pleadings rather than evidence. Suppose in 25 a personal injury action, a plaintiff gets on the stand and

1 says, I paid out of pocket $2,500 in medical bills, and he's 2 not cross-examined about it and it's a bench trial and the 3 judge makes a finding of fact, the plaintiff paid out of 4 pocket $2,500 in medical bills. The plaintiff has never 5 produced a single bill.

6 MR. FORMAN: I think you may have the best evidence 7 rule there would be applicable, to show the bills rather 8 than showing his pure testimony of what he claims he paid.

9 QUESTION: Do you mean the judge couldn't rule 10 with it?

11 MR. FORMAN: Provided you didn't object on best 12 evidence, or demanding best evidence. I think there the 13 bills would be the best evidence.

14 QUESTION: Well, suppose he didn't object?
15 Could the judge give him damages? Of course he could.

16 MR. FORMAN: He might in that case. Yes, Your 17 Honor.

18 QUESTION: What records, if any, did Mr. Payne 19 produce?

20 MR. FORMAN: He didn't produce any records other 21 than his financial statements which were submitted to 22 Chrysler.

23 QUESTION: Did you demand any records, any of the 24 records you are now talking about? Did you try the case?

25 MR. FORMAN: Parts of it, Your Honor.

1 QUESTION: Well, did counsel for Chrysler demand --

2 MR. FORMAN: I think we demanded all the documents 3 that he had.

4 QUESTION: And how did the court rule on that?

5 MR. FORMAN: At trial we didn't. It turned out 6 we didn't get them all, but --

7 QUESTION: Did the trial court sustain your request
8 that all documents be produced?

9 MR. FORMAN: Well, it was not -- no, he overruled 10 us, Your Honor. He allowed that document into evidence which 11 is one of our, another grounds on appeal in this case.
12 But it says to me basically that if Mr. Payne can merely say 13 without even giving any figures of any kind that he was 14 undersold by his competitors, that he lost sales, that he 15 forced business, that he overallowed on used cars, well, you 16 can just read in his complaint, and that would substantiate 17 a finding. In fact, I think in this case it's clear that 18 he didn't overallow, that he didn't force business, and he 19 didn't lose sales. And I think that's borne out by the 20 statistical evidence that I have on page 8 of my brief -- 21 page 10; I'm sorry, a chart that compares the sales of the 22 various dealers, compares the gross profits of the various 23 dealers. There Mr. Payne was realizing the highest average 24 gross profit of any of the dealers, of the four dealers, 25 with whom he alleged he competed.

1           That certainly is not evidence of him having to force 2 business, plus it appears that his --

3           QUESTION: Do those figures relate to the models
4 on which he claimed there was a price discrimination?

5           MR. FORMAN: Well, he claimed in his brief that, 6 every sale, there was a discrimination.

7           QUESTION: I understand him to say there was a 8 price discrimination on some at some periods of time, and 9 some models, but not constantly?

10          MR. FORMAN: It did vary among styles.

11          QUESTION: And I thought he said some of the rebate 12 programs were lawful and some were unlawful?

13          MR. FORMAN: Well, he determined that on about 14 whether he was the most favored dealer, is what it boils 15 down to. In fact, I think that's an important issue or 16 point in this case, is that under these programs there was 17 no one favored dealer. The programs lasted only some three 18 months at a time, and who was the favored dealer varied 19 between all four of them, including Mr. Payne. And I think 20 the -- if I can make reference to the joint appendix, I would 21 refer the Court to page 271 which shows the average difference 22 per unit over a three-year period that was realized by the 23 incentive payments. The difference worked out to be only 24 $11 among the most favored, so-called most-favored dealer, 25 which was Central, and the least-favored, who was Roebuck,

1 $51 per car. I think that shows the inherent fairness of 2 these programs, how everything did tend to equalize out
3 and that there would not have been any competitive injury.

4 QUESTION: Of course, that goes to the question of 5 violation, doesn't it?

6 MR. FORMAN: Well, I think he also has to show that 7 there was in fact actual competitive injury, and that --

8 QUESTION: He did go out of business, didn't he?

9 MR. FORMAN: Well, he claimed -- the violation had 10 to occur prior to that time.

11 QUESTION: That's a fact that's consistent, at 12 least, with his testimony, isn't it?

13 MR. FORMAN: Right, but the violation had to occur
14 prior to him going out of business.

15 QUESTION: Right, but the fact that he did not 16 survive in the competitive market is consistent with his 17 theory that he suffered some harm that caused him some --

18 MR. FORMAN: Well, I think there's also evidence 19 in the case that the reason that -- and I think this average 20 gross profit on the retail sales demonstrates that his new 21 car sales was not hurting. He was realizing the best profit 22 of any of the dealers on the new car sales, and that's the 23 area where the sales incentive programs would have affected 24 him. What his problem was as demonstrated by the statistical 25 evidence in here, is in his used car operation.

1 QUESTION: I still am not sure you answered my 2 question, whether those profit margins on the new car sales 3 on page 10 of your brief related to the models and the 4 periods of time when the price discrimination claimed to be 5 illegal was in effect? Or do they cover his sales -- ?

6 MR. FORMAN: They cover his sales for the entire 7 year, but as counsel for the plaintiff indicated, I think, 8 on footnote 3 of his brief, he says, "it is obvious that 9 there were rebates paid on almost every single car sold at 10 retail by the various dealers."

11 I submit in that instance that the averaging ~~ing~~
12 is a fair way to look at it. In fact, he tried to make use 13 of averaging in his brief when he tried to show a tight 14 profit margin. He averaged the profits over an entire year.
15 And if he should have broken that down by the sales incentive 16 programs, if we should have, he should have also.

17 QUESTION: There is some discussion in the briefs
18 about the used car business and how much they made on over-19 allowances, or something like that, on each used car trans-
20 action. Is there record evidence supporting his arguments 21 on that?

22 MR. FORMAN: It shows that his used cars was low
23 and that's on page 269. However, Mr. Payne himself -- there 24 was no evidence in this case to relate that low used car
25 profit to these sales incentive programs. Mr. Payne indicated

1 that the reason for that low profit was that he was forced to 2 wholesale his used cars. And that was the reason for low
3 profit. And I think that Mr. Payne's testimony there cer-
4 tainly ought to make that point clear, or certainly require 5 him to come forward and show some actual transaction where 6 he actually did overallow on a used car, if in fact he ever 7 did. That's really evidence that Chrysler can't produce, 8 whether he overallowed. That's something that's in his 9 peculiar knowledge, that's something that he has to --

10 QUESTION: If it's within his peculiar knowledge 11 and he gives testimony that's based on his peculiar knowledge, 12 would that be sufficient to support a conclusion on the testimony?

13 MR. FORMAN: I would think he'd have to come 14 forward with some documents to show, and there shouldn't be --

15 QUESTION: If there's documents, then it's just 16 not within his peculiar knowledge. Then you're saying it's 17 available?

18 MR. FORMAN: Well, if it's within the company, it 19 certainly is, within his accountant -- they certainly could 20 have shown a transaction and said, look, this car, we over-21 valued it, at this price. And in fact there's no way you 22 can say from these used car profits, or things of this weight, 23 to show an overallowance. You would have had to have some 24 testimony as to what value they entered the used cars on 25 their books at, whether it was at the inflated value, or

1 whether it was at the retail value. There was no evidence 2 to that effect, no showing to that effect.

3 And I might go on to show, even if this Court should 4 feel that there was some proof of an antitrust injury, that 5 the plaintiff still is not entitled to recover, because there
6 is no evidence as to the amount of that injury. The plain-
7 tiff's case rests entirely on this Court allowing price 8 discrimination to be the proper measure of damage.

9 QUESTION: Was there a verdict in this case?

10 MR. FORMAN: There was a verdict, Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: And did you object to any of the in-12 structions?

13 MR. FORMAN: Yes, Your Honor, we did object to some 14 instructions.

15 QUESTION: Of course, you don't argue now that 16 there are any instructional problems?

17 MR. FORMAN: Well, the 5th Circuit didn't reach 18 that issue. There were several issues raised before the 19 5th Circuit which were not decided by the Court because they 20 decided on failure to prove antitrust injury.

21 QUESTION: I take it that the jury must have decided 22 not only that there was proof of injury but they knew how 23 much it was?

24 MR. FORMAN: Well, the only evidence in this case 25 that was submitted, which is evident from a review of the

1 record, is this mathematical calculation of what they 2 considered was the price discrimination.

3 QUESTION: Well, you think the jury departed from 4 its instructions?

5 MR. FORMAN: They would have had to, Your Honor, 6 because there was no other evidence.

7 QUESTION: But you don't complain about the in-8 structions about causation and the fact of injury and the 9 amount? The instructions are all right in that regard?

10 MR. FORMAN: We did object to some instructions, 11 yes, Your Honor.

12 QUESTION: On those particular ones or not?

13 MR. FORMAN: I don't think we did --

14 QUESTION: In any event, the jury did not --

15 MR. FORMAN: We did not on the math because he said
16 that the price discrimination is not a proper measure.

17 QUESTION: But the jury certainly thought there was 18 some evidence of -- I know you say there wasn't, but --

19 MR. FORMAN: That's our point, here, that there 20 wasn't any. The only thing they could have based it on 21 was the price discrimination, that's what the plaintiff ar-
22 gued in his closing argument.

23 QUESTION: Do you say that the jury's rendition of 24 a money judgment for you is inconsistent with the doctrines 25 of RKO v. Bigelow, and Story Parchment where you're talking

1 about business damages and their inherent difficulty of 2 proof?

3 MR. FORMAN: Yes, Your Honor, but those -- they 4 allow some reasonable means of reflecting the antitrust
5 injury. Here there is no -- they didn't reflect any lost 6 sales or the amount of any overallowance or the amount of 7 profits that were drawn from him in forcing business. He 8 merely said, here's a mathematical calculation, this is 9 the price discrimination, and we should be entitled to it.
10 In fact, I think the --

11 QUESTION: Well, he went on, then. You agree he 12 went on and said, and said that he lost sales.

13 MR. FORMAN: That's right, but he offered no showing 14 of what the profit would have been in a normal 15 everyday --

16 QUESTION: Yes, I know, but he testified as to 17 that, didn't he?

18 MR. FORMAN: He stated purely --

19 QUESTION: Didn't he testify in court on that?

20 MR. FORMAN: He said we lost --

21 QUESTION: And the jury must have believed him.
22 Or they could have.

23 MR. FORMAN: But there was no measure of what the 24 profits would have been from losing those lost sales. There 25 was no measure whatsoever, there was no number of lost sales.

1 There is no way they could have determined the amount of 2 the damage. In fact, I think the very way they computed 3 the price discrimination in this case shows that it couldn't 4 reflect any antitrust injury. What they did was simply 5 divide the number of cars they sold during a program period 6 into the amount of money that was received by the dealer.
7 When Mr. Payne didn't receive the highest per-unit rebate
8 he took the difference between what the highest dealer re-9 ceived and what he received, and multiplied that by the 10 number of cars that he was selling. In that instance, he 11 stated he was injured more by the more cars he sold, not by 12 the less cars. I say that no way that type evidence is 13 reflective of any antitrust injury. In fact, I would submit 14 to the Court that if you were to overrule or reverse the 5th
15 Circuit, you would in fact be adopting the automatic damage
16 rule which I thought the plaintiff was advocating; at least I 17 thought he was in his initial brief.

18 It would be absolutely no burden on the plaintiff 19 to prove a Robinson-Patman Act. All he'd have to do is to 20 by some mathematical calculation to show a price difference, 21 come in and say, these are my competitors. They allowed,
22 because of this price difference, they could undersell me, 23 I lost business, I overallowed on used cars. Here is the 24 difference. Award that to me.

25 QUESTION: Didn't you -- I suppose you asked the 1 judge not to take the case to the jury, give the case to the 2 jury at all?

3 MR. FORMAN: Yes, Your Honor.

4 QUESTION: And after verdict you asked for judg-5 ment notwithstanding verdict?

6 MR. FORMAN: Yes, Your Honor.

7 QUESTION: And the judge disagreed with you?

8 MR. FORMAN: That's correct, Your Honor.

9 QUESTION: So he didn't buy your argument of 10 no evidence?

11 MR. FORMAN: He did not, Your Honor, because --

12 QUESTION: And he didn't buy your argument there 13 wasn't evidence about amount?

14 MR. FORMAN: No, Your Honor, he didn't, but there
15 wasn't any, that's the point. I think review of the record, 16 he was in error. And that's what the 5th Circuit found 17 after reviewing his transcript. They found no supporting 18 evidence to support the --

19 QUESTION: I know, but they had to do away with 20 his own testimony as sufficient evidence to prove anything.

21 MR. FORMAN: Correct. For they had to say that 22 was not sufficient evidence --

23 QUESTION: What if they were wrong on that?

24 MR. FORMAN: I would hope, without arguing -- this 25 is evidence that they could indeed -- he should have been

1 able to produce them. This plaintiff is asking for treble 2 damages.

3 QUESTION: Well, that may be so, but what if we 4 disagree with you on that? What if we say, well, that was 5 evidence, and if the -- and -- it was entitled to be credited 6 by the judge or the jury. Then what? Then what?

7 MR. FORMAN: Well, then, you will come to the 8 measure of, did he --

9 QUESTION: I know you think we'd be wrong, but 10 what should we do if we are so grossly erroneous?

11 MR. FORMAN: Well, then I think you can tell them 12 that he provide a reasonable measure of the amount of his in-13 jury. He didn't. He relied purely on the amount of price 14 discrimination, which Congress -- they have considered that 15 matter, and they simply rejected it when they adopted the 16 Robinson-Patman Act, as set forth in our brief in some de-17 tail. And I think, when you're dealing with a statutory 18 offense like this, this Court must consider what Congress 19 did, and if Congress rejected that remedy, this Court should 20 not come forward and provide such a remedy.

21 QUESTION: The trial judge rejected that remedy too, 22 didn't he, in his instructions?

23 MR. FORMAN: He did, Your Honor, and --

24 QUESTION: He gave the instruction on that precise 25 point that you wanted?

1 MR. FORMAN: That's correct, Your Honor. He said
2 it was not the measure of damage, but the -- as the 5th
3 Circuit said, there wasn't any other evidence in the case.
4 Thank you.

5 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Reeves.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF C. LEE REEVES, ESQ.,
7 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS -- REBUTTAL

8 QUESTION: Mr. Reeves, may I ask you a question at 9 the outset? In the summary of your argument, the first 10 sentence states, "The plaintiff in a private price discrimi-11 nation action must only prove sufficient price discrimination 12 from which a jury can infer injury to competition."

13 And in the Court of Appeals, the opinion, as I 14 read it, proceeded on the theory that you were arguing and 15 relying on the automatic damage concept. Have you changed 16 your position on that?

17 MR. REEVES: I don't think so, Mr. Justice Powell.
18 We contend that injury to a business is in fact injury to 19 competition. If you have less competitors, if one is put 20 out of the market, if one is less able to compete, or for 21 whatever reason, then that in itself weakens competition and 22 is injury to competition as well under Section 2(a) of the 23 Act, as well as the injury under Section 4 of the Clayton Act.

24 QUESTION: So that if you prove discrimination, 25 you're entitled to damages?

1 MR. REEVES: If you prove discrimination that is 2 sufficient to show or allow a jury to reach the inference of 3 injury, yes, Mr. Justice Rehnquist. Not just -- for instance, 4 this is not a per se, this is not an automatic, it's got to 5 be sufficient discrimination to permit the reasonable in-6 ference. That's exactly what this Court was holding in 7 Morton Salt.

8 QUESTION: Well, are you saying that even if this 9 owner hadn't got on the stand and said he lost sales or 10 profits, that you should win?

11 MR. REEVES: I am. I'm saying it both ways. There 12 is adequate evidence, statistical evidence of tight profits, 13 testimony of lost sales, testimony that people came into the 14 shop and were shopping competition saying that they couldn't 15 buy at Payne because it was high, or wouldn't buy at Payne.

16 QUESTION: Would you defend the 9th Circuit's 17 view of the Robinson-Patman Act?

18 MR. REEVES: I do, and the 8th Circuit's, and the 19 7th Circuit's, in Bargain Car Wash, Mr. Justice White, as 20 not permitting -- or not saying automatic damage, because 21 it is, there's always the possibility of rebuttal by the 22 defendant if the extraordinary circumstances this Court 23 talked about in Bruce's Juices are present. For instance, if 24 there is such an inelastic market that it really doesn't 25 matter --

1 QUESTION: What do you do with the congressional 2 history, where they had a presumptive damage provision and 3 they eliminated it during the course of enacting the 4 Robinson-Patman Act?

5 MR. REEVES: That is the presumption -- the pre-6 sumptive damage rule was in the Senate's version of the 7 bill. It was eliminated in conference due to legislative 8 bargaining without comment. And I say to Your Honors that if 9 you utilize that negative inference just because it was 10 originally in there, without finding out the real reason 11 behind why it was eliminated, then you totally disregard 12 the purpose of the Act.

13 QUESTION: Well, then you say there is a presump-14 tion of damage?

15 MR. REEVES: I say that this Court should reaffirm
16 the minimum damage rule that it indicated in Bruce's Juices 17 and in Morton Salt which permits an inference of damage, at 18 least in that amount, subject to rebuttal, and that the mere 19 fact that there was at one point a provision of presumptive 20 damages does not mean that that, the elimination of it by 21 Congress meant that Congress didn't want that type rule, be-22 cause that rule was redundant. It was always extant under 23 the Clayton Act, Section 4 of the Clayton Act, as is pointed 24 out in our original brief and reply brief; I think the 25 Ladoga decision permitted it. Thank you.

1 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
