MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We'll hear arguments next in Rodriguez et al. v. Compass Shipping Company.

Mr. Lassoff, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF MARTIN LASSOFF, ESQ.,

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

MR. LASSOFF: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
the Court:

This is an appeal brought as a result of a conflict in the interpretation of part of a federal statute. The conflict arises in the application of Section 933(b) of an act known as the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Act. This Act was last amended by Congress in 1972, at which time Section 933(b) was not amended. Section 933(b) was last amended in 1959 at which time it was amended to give the longshoremen an additional six months' period to sue from the date of a formal award in compensation.

QUESTION: Mr. Lassoff, might I interrupt you preliminarily there? I notice that there are three cases consolidated here, and that in the Rodriguez case as opposed to the other two, there was an order filed, and in the other two there were not. Does that have any bearing on the outcome in your view?

MR. LASSOFF: It does, but this was not one of the points I was given certiorari on. It is our view, in all

1 three of these cases there was never an order which triggered 2 this mechanism, but that was not one of the points that we 3 were given certiorari on. The American Association of Trial
4 Lawyers have raised that in their brief, but we didn't raise 5 it in our brief for today.

6 QUESTION: So it's not before us?

7 MR. LASSOFF: It's not before you. The point in-8 volved is, who was this statute designed to protect? Going 9 back to the original basis in law, at one point a longshoreman 10 had to elect before the first payment of compensation whether 11 or not he could sue a third party because if he accepted one 12 payment of compensation his rights to sue were assigned abso-13 lutely to his employer. That changed, until he was given the 14 right to accept compensation short of an award if he -- other 15 words, if there was voluntary payment of compensation for a man 16 who was out for six months and the employer voluntarily paid 17 that money, that would not give the case to his employer.
18 But if there was a hearing at which permanency was decided, 19 and an order was entered, that order gave the case to the man's 20 employer.

21 In 1957, I believe, this Court decided the Blazey 22 Czaplicki case which said that conflict of interest -- and 23 Blazey Czaplicki was a very strong conflict of interest case 24 and the insurance carrier represented both parties to the 25 litigation -- therefore, in 1959 Congress amended this Act and

1 said, you can keep your Act case, Mr. Longshoreman, until such 2 a point as six months after a formal award, because we have 3 several interests here. All of this is based on a quid pro 4 quo between the longshoreman and the employer. Nowhere are the 5 shipping company or the shipping corporations mentioned. They 6 do not belong in the statute and they have never been mentioned 7 until 1972 when an additional part of the statute was added
8 called Section 905(b).

9           What was the intent? All right. After the enactment 10 of this Act, by judicial law certain things applied. Prior, 11 there was the Sieracki case. The Court gave longshoremen 12 the right to sue vessels for a violation of the doctrine of 13 seaworthiness. Subsequent, the Ryan case gave the ship com-14 panies the right to sue the employer on a contract basis for 15 actual or implied warranties of workmanlike performance.
16 So the issue was sort of dead, because any employer of maritime 17 labor obviously had a conflict of interest between the em-18 ployee and the fact that they would immediately be brought into 19 the action by the shipowner.

20           Notwithstanding that, there were several cases in 21 that period, the Potomac Electric Power Company case and 22 McClendon v. Charente which interpreted the meaning of Section 23 933(b). Both of these cases say -- and certainly Pepco in 24 clear language -- say that anytime there is a failure by the 25 employer or the person subrogated to the employee's rights to

1 sue, then that case should go back to the employee and that 2 it is not up to the employee to prove a conflict of interest
3 with his employer. In 1972, as stated, there was sort of a 4 political arrangement made between the stevedoring companies 5 and the labor suppliers. The political arrangement was that 6 in exchange for a substantial increase in benefits the longshore-
7 men would have certain judicially created rights taken away
8 from them. They would have the right of the doctrine of sea-
9 worthiness taken away from them. The shipowner in exchange 10 for that benefit would have taken away from it the tradi-
11 tionally created application of Ryan.

12 QUESTION: Well, this political compromise that you
13 refer to that took place in 1972 had the full participation 14 of the longshoremen workers' union, did it not?

15 MR. LASSOFF: It had participation of the maritime 16 unions' non-sea unions, and of the stevedores. The shipping 17 companies had no part in this arrangement at all. It was 18 strictly the longshoremen, the ship repairers, the stevedoring
19 companies; this was not really a bill that was participated 20 in or abetted by shipping interests. This was strictly steve-21 doring interests. And I'm not sure that the longshore unions 22 were aware of what was happening. Because in 1972 there was 23 no application of a six-month assignment because, quite 24 clearly, Congress being in this circuit and Pepco, which is an 25 D.C. case, and District of Columbia workers, which are covered

1 by this very Act, since the Act is silent about the intent of 2 this section, it must be assumed that Congress believed the 3 law to be as it was in Potomac Electric Power, and that is, 4 there was no assignment, or if there was it would revert if 5 for any reason the right to bring this action was not under-6 taken properly. In Czaplicki, the Court talks about the 7 trustee situation which they didn't feel necessary.
8 Mr. Justice Frankfurter did think it necessary but it wasn't 9 done.

10 We have certain equitable proceedings here. The 11 only interest that the shipowner has in this litigation at all 12 is that he be sued by the real party in interest, one lawsuit.
13 There has not been more than one lawsuit brought since 1972, 14 since the decisions in Rodriguez, since the decisions in 15 Caldwell v. Ogden Steamship Company, since the Bandy cases.
16 No stevedoring company has brought a lawsuit to enforce its 17 statutory lien. We have been successful under the decision
18 in Rodriguez which indicated that ratification was a measure 19 that companies were willing to cooperate to get certain 20 insurance companies, not stevedoring companies but insurance 21 companies of stevedores, to ratify the longshoremen's cause 22 of action. The one time we tried the suggestion in Caldwell, 23 which was involuntary joinder, that was against the company
24 called International Terminal Operating Company, their attor-
25 neys opposed the involuntary joinder and it was denied.

1 But the fact is that no stevedoring company that I 2 know of anywhere has ever sued a ship to assert the claims of 3 the injured employee, and the decision that a longshoreman can 4 prove a conflict of interest, which is so apparent on the 5 face, never happened without means of extra protection. It 6 doesn't make sense to me.

7 QUESTION: Well, the -- of course, it could be that 8 logically, it could be that the injured longshoreman has al-9 ways sued.

10 MR. LASSOFF: Not quite, Your Honor, as --

11 QUESTION: Well, logically, it could be, but here's 12 one case where it didn't happen.

13 MR. LASSOFF: There are at least ten cases here, 14 Your Honor. There are five in Virginia and five here, all in 15 this one here.

16 QUESTION: But I would suppose in the vast majority 17 of the cases the longshoreman himself would sue.

18 MR. LASSOFF: Yes; yes. But there are hundreds of 19 cases affected by this particular -- there are hundreds of 20 cases in the district court now which are on a so-called sus-21 pense calendar because of this particular case.

22 QUESTION: Why, as a matter of practical fact, 23 doesn't the longshoreman sue in the six-month period given 24 to him?

25 MR. LASSOFF: Ordinarily, he does. There are

1 problems when you are dealing with foreign flag steamship 2 companies, as 92 percent of the ships coming to the United 3 States are. They are a difficulty in locating the company.
4 We can start an action by mail, but if we do not perfect ser-
5 vice the courts dismiss these actions. So that to say that it 6 is easy to start these actions within six months of an award 7 is usually so, but not always so.

8 QUESTION: Congress could -- or, I'll put it this way,
9 could Congress correct that and make some other form of ser-
10 vice possible so that it would eliminate the problem?

11 MR. LASSOFF: Congress could do many things. Con-
12 gress could compel the shipowners to post bond of insurance 13 on their coming here.

14 QUESTION: Or designate an agent for service.

15 MR. LASSOFF: Yes. Or an agent for service. None
16 of these things --

17 QUESTION: Or it could enlarge the time beyond six 18 months; make it a year, 18 months, two years.

19 MR. LASSOFF: The question is not a period of time.
20 The question is, what is the intent of Congress? Every bill --

21 QUESTION: Well, Congress could do that.

22 MR. LASSOFF: Every bill says, safety; this is a 23 hazardous occupation, eight times the national rate, four 24 times the national rate. Every bill says that. How is it 25 protecting the rights of these longshoremen by saying that if

1 the employer does not sue, a party not intended to be bene-2 fited, the negligent tortfeasor has an absolute indemnity from 3 suit, the stevedoring company is wasting its assets which are 4 intended to be used for the protection of longshoremen, and 5 we are --

6 QUESTION: The stevedoring company's assets are in-7 tended to be used for the benefit of longshoremen? I would 8 have thought, if it were a corporation, its assets were pro-9 bably to be used for the benefit of the stockholders.

10 MR. LASSOFF: That is true, but the statute says
11 that since this is such a hazardous occupation the only way 12 we know of is to make the employer responsible. We want these 13 benefits to be substantially increased, and we don't want the 14 employer to waste its benefits by not collecting them. That 15 is what would happen here. If the employer does not sue be-16 cause of a business reason, and I've got some that they've 17 never sued, they are wasting assets that properly belong to 18 the longshoreman, who has an 80 percent interest in the remain-19 der of the case.

20 QUESTION: And who has six months in which to assert 21 it.

22 MR. LASSOFF: He has six months in which to assert
23 it, but the question is equitably, equitably, does the purpose 24 of a statute -- is it perfected by giving a negligent tort-25 feator a right that it was never intended to have?

1 QUESTION: Well, what do you say to any statute of 2 limitations argument in a situation like this?

3 MR. LASSOFF: I say --

4 QUESTION: There must come a period of repose where 5 past things that have not been litigated can no longer be 6 litigated.

7 MR. LASSOFF: I have no objection to a statute of 8 limitations. There is a statute of limitations. This is not 9 the statute of limitations.

10 QUESTION: But it's the same type of principle.

11 MR. LASSOFF: It isn't, because every lawyer prac-
12 tising in this field knew of the various statutes of limita-
13 tions. As Your Honor pointed out to me, yourself, nobody knew 14 that this act could be triggered by an informal agreement of 15 a claims examiner when the statute specifically said that it 16 had to be the Deputy Commissioner or the Board. This is the 17 problem. We are making a statute of limitations out of an 18 assignment. The assignment wasn't intended to hurt the em-
19 ployee. It was intended, according to law, to give the cause 20 of action to the employer who had better assets to pursue it.
21 I don't believe that. But that was what Congress specifically 22 stated.

23 Now, what is the actual fact? The actual fact is 24 that employers may not choose to do this. One, for fear of 25 antagonizing their customers -- bad business; or, two, their

1 lawyers do not work the way plaintiffs' lawyers do, on a con-
2 tingency basis. They would expect to be paid whether they won 3 or lost. And I say to you that the best person to have these 4 rights is the plaintiff's lawyer. The plaintiff, the injured
5 worker, if he has a right, let him have the right that he al-
6 ways had, the statute of limitations. If an employer refuses 7 to sue, and we can give the employer the right to sue -- we 8 can send him a registered letter: if you don't sue, we're 9 going to sue, that protects the employer, does it not? But 10 why should this injured man who gets nothing for pain and 11 suffering, who gets nothing except two-thirds of his pay -- 12 and unless it's permanent, that two-thirds does not go up if 13 the union pay scale goes up.

14 In other words, the best that a longshoreman can 15 get here is two-thirds of his pay at the time of the accident, 16 regardless of whether the pay scale goes up. Nothing for pain 17 and suffering. And while you will hear argument that the 18 pay scale went up a great deal, in certain instances it 19 went down a great deal. I will save that for rebuttal, if I 20 may. Thank you.

21 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Stearns.

22 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOSEPH T. STEARNS, ESQ.,

23 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS COMPASS SHIPPING CO.

24 LTD., DJAKARTA LLOYD P.N. & ARYA NATIONAL SHIPPING LINE, LTD.

25 MR. STEARNS: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please

1 the Court:

2 My name is Stearns. I represent the first two 3 respondents named, Compass Shipping Company, Djakarta Lloyd 4 and Arya National Shipping line in this case, which involves 5 a question of Section 33 and also Section 5(b) of the Long-6 shoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

7 There has been a brief reference to some part of the 8 history of the Act. As I understand it, the Longshoremen's 9 and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act was adopted in 1927 in 10 response to a decision of this Court making longshoremen 11 Jones Act seamen. At that time there was a Section 33.
12 It provided that longshoremen have an election of either com-13 pensation or a suit for damages. In response apparently to 14 the concern for the possibility that someone who would unwit-15 tingly lose his right to a third party damage suit, Congress in 16 1938 amended Section 33 to expand the rights in a way which 17 this Court in 1947 in the American Stevedores v. Porello case 18 held to extend to longshoremen the dual right to accept volun-
19 tary compensation and thereafter sue for damages.

20 After Ryan, and perhaps before that, perhaps in the 21 contribution cases, the existence of the right to accept volun-22 tary compensation and sue for damages created a conflict of 23 interest. Unquestionably, there was a conflict of interest 24 which was raised by the Ryan indemnity right, which in in-25 stances where there was common insurance between a defendant

1 and a third party defendant, as in the Czaplicki case, it was 2 held by this Court that it was inappropriate to give effect
3 to the Section 33(b) assignment. In response to that, Congress
4 in 1959 in an attempt to overcome the conflict of interest
5 gave longshoremen an additional six months to sue following 6 receipt of compensation pursuant to an award.

7 As a result of this Court's efforts on behalf of 8 longshoremen, in part demonstrated by the Porello case, the 9 extension of the dual remedy of compensation and a right to 10 sue for damages, as a result of this Court's Ryan decision, as 11 a result of this Court's Sieracki decision, the situation 12 existed -- a situation existed whereby longshoremen were of 13 course by statute guaranteed compensation and in effect the 14 guaranteed a virtually certain right to recover damages. As a 15 result of these facts, and as a result directly of this Court's 16 efforts on behalf of longshoremen, there followed an explosion 17 of litigation in the years, according to the congressional 18 documents, between 1961 and 1972, to the point where in ports
19 such as New York virtually every longshoreman's reported acci-
20 dent resulted in a third-party suit. By virtue of Sieracki it 21 was virtually necessary only for the longshoreman to show that 22 he was hurt aboard the ship. As a result of the contest between 23 the shipowner and the stevedore as to who should pay the dam-
24 ages, the ultimate recovery of the plaintiff was further guar-25 anteed.

1 Congress in 1972 was therefore confronted with a 2 situation where this Court's efforts had resulted in a situa-
3 tion where longshoremen had a free access to suit and a free
4 access to recovery in their third party cases where, as a re-5 sult of those facts, there had been a tremendous increase in 6 litigation and took steps by enacting the 1972 amendments in 7 order to reduce the volume of litigation in exchange for 8 vastly increased compensation benefits.

9 As Mr. Lassoff has indicated, Congress in 1972 took 10 away from longshoremen certain things and this represents the 11 first instance since 1927 where either by this Court or any 12 other court or by Congress something was taken away. What was 13 taken away was two things, we submit. The first one, obvious-14 ly, being the right to recover for seaworthiness, and the 15 second thing, we believe, is that there was an additional re-
16 striction placed on the third party right in order to serve 17 the first purpose of the 1972 amendments, which was to reduce 18 litigation and relieve shipowners and the courts from the 19 enormous burden of case after case after case of personal 20 injuries involving longshoremen, some of which were of the kind 21 or the type or the apparent lack of seriousness of the cases 22 involved in this appeal. The additional step taken by Congress, 23 we submit, was to make the right of the longshoreman to sue 24 depend upon that suit being in accordance with Section 33, 25 which we read as indicating that suit can be maintained only

1 if authorized by the six months provision in Section 33(b), 2 which means, we submit, that no suit brought by a longshoreman
3 after six months can be maintained, since the six months provi-
4 sion is a constituent element of this cause of action.

5 In the congressional documents there is an indica-
6 tion in the Port of Philadelphia that the compensation insur-
7 ance rate for these accidents, including the cost of compensa-
8 tion and the stevedores' third party Ryan indemnity liability, 9 was approximately $40 a payroll hundred. According to the 10 New York State Rating Board, in New York today, for workmen's 11 compensation alone, in the category, "stevedoring-not otherwise 12 classified," the annual rate for stevedores is $87 and change 13 per payroll hundred. That is to say that the cost to the 14 stevedore both for compensation and third party Ryan indemnity 15 liability in 1972 was approximately half what it is today.
16 And these figures are not figures that are the product of in-17 flation. It's $40 per $100 and $87 per hundred, and it re-18 presents a doubling of cost in real terms, as a direct result 19 of the vast increase in benefits achieved by the 1972 amend-20 ments. It means in effect that the maritime industry -- and 21 since the stevedore has one customer, the shipowner -- since 22 the stevedore is in effect an agency of the shipowner, that the 23 shipowner pays these costs directly, usually as soon as the 24 ship sails. It means the cost of these claims before the 25 first complaint is filed has doubled.

1           It also means that if there is not relief from liti-
2 gation, that the purposes of the Act to achieve a reduction of 3 litigation will not be achieved and that in effect there will 4 be no so-called quid pro quo extended to the maritime industry
5 in exchange for a benefit structure which is of unprecedented 6 generosity. It is vital to the interests of the maritime 7 community that there be in one appropriate form or other a curb 8 on litigation involving cases like these, involving contusion 9 abrasions, abrasions and puncture wounds resulting in six and 10 seven weeks of alleged period of disability, where compensa-11 tion benefits of three, four, five, six, and seven thousand 12 are routinely paid based on the earnings and benefit struc-13 ture existing in 1973, which have been vastly increased.

14           It is essential to the vitality of the maritime indus-15 try that cases of these kind where and whenever appropriate be 16 handled as compensation matters.

17           As a result of this Court's recent decision in 18 Bloomer, a longshoreman who receives, for example, $5,000 in 19 workmen's compensation, benefits as a result of his third 20 party suit only when his verdict exceeds $7,500. As a result 21 of this Court's recent decision in the Norfolk & Western 22 v. -- the Liepelt case, the compensation liability, or rather, 23 the tax liability, of the injured employee must be reduced in 24 calculating his lost wages and loss of future wages.

25           As a typical matter, in longshoremen's personal

1 injury cases the total cause of action that is presented in 2 the guise of a longshoreman's suit against the stevedore is 3 the claim of the stevedore to recover its so-called lien. In 4 one case after another --

5 QUESTION: Say that again?

6 MR. STEARNS: That the entire cause of action which 7 is presented to a jury as a claim by a longshoreman against a 8 shipowner --

9 QUESTION: Shipowner? Third party. You said
10 "stevedore."

11 MR. STEARNS: I'm sorry. -- is in effect, that case, 12 in that form, is in effect a claim by the stevedore to recover
13 its compensation expenses. There's a case in New York, a case 14 in which Judge Meskill and Judge Friendly dissented -- Canizzo
15 v. Farrell Lines -- reported in 579 F.2d, which is an excellent 16 illustration of the point I'm attempting to make. The case 17 involved a man in his 50s who had sustained a knee injury. As 18 a result of the knee injury he'd had surgery; he had a heart
19 condition; and he was found to be by a district court judge
20 permanently disabled. There was a dispute about a reduction 21 in the award to him after the bench trial on the basis of 22 whether or not he was just industrially disabled, or whether 23 in fact he was totally disabled. In any event, there was a 24 calculation of damages with this reduction, which the Court of 25 Appeals found to be inappropriate, of damages in the range

1 of $110,000. And the case, after a clear clash between Judge
2 Friendly and Judge Meskill with respect to when and in what 3 circumstances a shipowner should be liable to a longshoreman, 4 the case was remanded for retrial on damages. The case was 5 settled. It was settled a little bit less than seven years
6 after the injury, at which point the lien was $63,900. It 7 was settled for $90,000 so-called fresh money in addition to 8 the lien. The stevedore waived his lien and $90,000 was 9 advanced by the shipowner to be disposed of to settle this 10 case. It makes the gross settlement $153,000. From that 11 $153,000, as a result of Bloomer, the attorney for plaintiff 12 takes, according to what we assume to be or what I assume to 13 be a third contingency retainer fee in the sum of $51,000.
14 For a trial and an appeal to the Court of Appeals to assume 15 that $2,000 was consumed in litigation expenses I think is 16 reasonable, reducing the recovery to $100,000, from which, of 17 course, must come the $63,900 lien. In round figures, the 18 recovery by the plaintiff is $36,000. But of course, that's 19 not his recovery, because he's entitled under Section 33(f)
20 and (g) to so-called deficiency compensation, and he goes 21 back on compensation when the net to him is exhausted. If he 22 was receiving workmen's compensation at the rate of $9,000 a 23 year, the net of $36,000 would mean that the stevedore's 24 compensation exposure would be suspended for a period of four 25 years. It means that the benefit of a third party suit where

1 a lawyer got a fee of $51,000 is interest on $36,000 figured
2 on the declining balance of $9,000 a year at bank interest 3 rates, a figure which might be in a range of $2,500 or $3,000.
4 That interest is a double recovery because he's entitled to 5 his damages or his compensation, whichever is larger.

6 QUESTION: But counsel, I think that all of us here
7 know of negligence cases that are just the same. But you 8 wouldn't throw the whole negligence law out, would you?

9 MR. STEARNS: Judge, it's not a question --

10 QUESTION: I'm trying to say, what has it got to do 11 with this case?

12 MR. STEARNS: Well, what I'm trying to show is --

13 QUESTION: Is this lawyer really going to get 14 $51,000?

15 MR. STEARNS: No, sir, he's not. What I'm trying to 16 get to is --

17 QUESTION: You're arguing before us.

18 MR. STEARNS: What I'm trying to do with the back-19 ground is to --

20 QUESTION: Could that case be brought here?

21 MR. STEARNS: It can't now, no.

22 QUESTION: Well, it wasn't, was it?

23 MR. STEARNS: It was not. That's correct.

24 QUESTION: So what good is it to us?

25 MR. STEARNS: Well, it's good for an illustration of 1 what the value of a third party case to a longshoreman is, and 2 in view of the fact that it is the position of the respondents 3 in this case that there is, as we have said, a constituent 4 element of suit within six months and since that may involve 5 policy decisions --

6 QUESTION: Well, under the Jones Act there was a 7 case where a man fell through a bar up in Times Square and 8 they found that the ship was unseaworthy and we didn't throw 9 out the whole unseaworthy statute, did we?

10 MR. STEARNS: No. That's true. What I was trying 11 to illustrate is some point about the value of the third 12 party case to a longshoreman and to suggest that the "accord-13 ance with" provision of Section 5 be interpreted liter-14 ally and be a basis for barring a longshoreman's suit after 15 six months from the time that they receive their award. And 16 there's an additional point made with respect to the safety
17 of longshoremen which is not by any means certainly guaranteed 18 or even advanced by the bringing in of longshoremen personal 19 injury cases. It is basically our position that this matter
20 of six months to sue is not a matter of Rule 17, it's a matter 21 of Section 33 and Section 5(b), it's a time bar, it prevents 22 absolutely the bringing of a suit by a longshoreman unless 23 there is compliance with the statute which authorizes his 24 suit.

25 QUESTION: Mr. Stearns, do you agree with

1 Mr. Lassoff that the Rodriguez case is precisely on the same 2 footing as the other two for purposes of our decision here?

3 MR. STEARNS: Judge, it's the Perez case where a 4 formal order is involved, and there were four questions posed 5 in the application for a writ. One of them had to do with 6 whether or not there had been a sufficient procedural step 7 taken by the Office of Workmen's Compensation Programs in 8 order to trigger the Section 33 assignment. Now, that was not 9 that question, the procedural sufficiency question was not 10 the subject of the writ. So it's irrelevant, I think, for 11 this case. Thank you.

12 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Byrn.

13 ORAL ARGUMENT OF FRANCIS X. BYRN, ESQ., 14 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT OVE SKOU, R. A.

15 MR. BYRN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 16 Court:

17 Twenty-five years ago I was admitted to the Bar of 18 this Court to work on the brief in the Czaplicki case, and I
19 find it rather fascinating that I have returned here now 25 20 years later to talk to the Court about the interpretation of 21 Czaplicki. Which makes me, I think, the historian on this 22 particular argument.

23 And if we could return for the moment to 1956
24 when the Congress decided to respond to the Ryan decision -- 25 and they did so very expeditiously, following the decision of 1 this Court in early 1956, there were extensive hearings held, 2 the conflict of interest argument was explored fully, the 3 Czaplicki was discussed. And at that time, while the hearings 4 were going on, it was between the argument and the decision in 5 the Czaplicki case. And the attorneys for Mr. Czaplicki tes-

6 tified in 1956, and they testified rather optimistically --

7 QUESTION: That is they testified before the con-
8 gressional committees?

9 MR. BYRN: That's correct. In 1956, in May and 10 June. And in June this Court decided Czaplicki. And as I 11 said, they were optimistic about the result, and it was war-12 ranted from their point of view.

13 The Congress then responded and began drafting 14 this six-month provision rule from the time of the award.
15 Now, we've talked about six months here, but frequently, as 16 in these cases before us, the time ends anywhere from a year 17 and a half to two years that the man himself has the right to 18 sue. He has the full opportunity to bring suit anytime during 19 that period. And that's the thrust of the Rodriguez case.

20 Now, in those hearings, the comment by, I think, the 21 representative of the Association of the Bar of the City of 22 New York, who said that these congressional adjustments were 23 the complete answer to Mr. Justice Black's objections in his 24 dissent in the Ryan case, that the stevedore would in effect 25 be suing himself. So this was all hashed over, way back when,

1 in 1956. And then we moved forward. Mr. Stearns has covered 2 the '72 amendments, but we move forward to a number of the 3 cases that this Court has had.

4 And in two recent decisions of this Court, Edmonds
5 and Bloomer, the Court itself has read this particular section, 6 933(b), in accordance with its plain meaning. That is, that 7 the cause of action is assigned after six months to the 8 employer. And in the 1972 amendments, when they added Section 9 905, the Court incorporated Section 933 into that section and 10 said he may sue in accordance with the provisions of 933(b).

11 Then we run into a consistent line of cases in re-
12 cent years by this Court where the Court follows the plain lan-
13 guage of the Act. I cite the Caputo case, I cite the Rasmussen 14 case where they discuss the plain language and legislative 15 history, the examination of the Congressional Record, and 16 reports of Congress. The Edmonds case also discusses that 17 point. We go on to the Pfifer case v. Ford, where the 18 point of rest question was considered, and the Court said it 19 was inconsistent with the congressional intent.

20 So, all throughout these cases, right down to the 21 Bloomer case and the most recent case, on December 15, the 22 Potomac Electric case, there again the Court defers to Congress, 23 to the plain language of the Act, to the unambiguous provi-
24 sions even where they may reach an anomalous result. And I
25 think that case involved a question of whether schedule awards

1 apply where the man could take his wages. And the Court said,
2 we might have done otherwise, perhaps, but Congress has said
3 this, and this is the way we have to rule.

4 QUESTION: But you think the result was anomalous?

5 MR. BYRN: I think the Court of Appeals said so, and 6 I think perhaps this Court and yourself said so.

7 I return again to the Czaplicki case. And there
8 the Court in discussing the conflict said, under the peculiar 9 circumstances, the peculiar facts of this case, we find a con-
10 flict. Now, as opposed to that, we have the Caldwell case, 11 which I think misinterprets Czaplicki and says, on page 1046, 12 "The fundamental point in Czaplicki is that notwithstanding a 13 statutory assignment of the longshoreman's right of action 14 the right of action may be revested in the longshoreman when 15 it becomes manifest that the assignee, with knowledge of its 16 exclusive right to control and prosecute the claim, neverthe-
17 less declines to do so for any reason." Not because of a con-18 flict, but for any reason.

19 And then it goes on to legislate certain procedures
20 that are followed, again taking over the congressional role 21 there. I think Congress has spoken, and the man has his sea-
22 son in which to sue. Thereafter Congress clearly intended, 23 I think, that the cause of action would then be assigned and 24 if the assignee didn't do anything about it, that's the end of 25 the case: two intentions not to sue, one manifested by the 1 man himself, and one by the employer. Thank you very much.

2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well, Mr. Byrn. Do
3 you have anything more, Mr. Lassoff?

4 MR. LASSOFF: Just a couple more minutes, Mr. Chief 5 Justice.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MARTIN LASSOFF, ESQ.,
7 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS -- REBUTTAL

8 MR. LASSOFF: May I point out to the Court that in 9 Edmonds, which is a decision of this Court in March, 1979,
10 the Court cautioned that this change in the statute was strik-
11 ing a delicate balance between the law as it was as created 12 by the judiciary and Congress, and as amended by Congress
13 taking away certain rights. Nowhere in the 1972 bill does it 14 mention the six-month statute as being intended to take any-15 thing away from the rights of the longshoreman. And Mr. Jus-16 tice White who wrote the opinion said, very clearly, that 17 "where Congress has been silent in this delicate balance it is 18 not up to us to act." Congress said not one word, in either 19 the Senate or House, about this section, and this section was 20 not changed in the '72 amendments.

21 One thing that isn't too vital but as Mr. Justice
22 Marshall noted, Mr. Stearns likes to roam far afield. I had a 23 recent situation with Mr. Stearns in New York before a federal 24 judge, Judge Pierce --

25 QUESTION: Now, you're going to wander further than 1 he did?

2 MR. LASSOFF: No. In fact, I just want --

3 QUESTION: I was just wondering.

4 MR. LASSOFF: I'll stop, Your Honors.

5 QUESTION: I was just wondering.

6 MR. LASSOFF: Thank you.

7 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

8 The case is submitted.

9 (Whereupon, at 2:50 o'clock p.m., the case in the 10 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
