MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next in Kissinger v. Halperin.

Mr. Solicitor General.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF WADE H. McCREE, JR., ESQ., ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

MR. McCREE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the Court:

This case requires this Court for the first time in the history of the nation to determine the extent of the personal immunity of the President of the United States and his closest advisors from money damages arising from the claimed violation of constitutional rights resulting from the performance of his official duties.

In Butz v. Economou, decided during the 1977 term, the Court held that although a qualified immunity from damages liability should be the general rule for executive officials charged with a violation of the Constitution, there are some officials whose special functions require a full exemption from such liability. We submit that the President of the United States, the constitutional head of the second branch of government, is preeminently such an official, and that officers carrying out his express directions should be protected by an immunity derivative of his.

The facts in this case may be succinctly stated.

MILLERS FALLS
RECEIVED AUG 13 1969

1 Between February and April, 1969, when the nation was engaged 2 in armed conflict in Southeast Asia, the President and several 3 of his top advisors were deeply concerned about unauthorized 4 disclosures to the news media of confidential information, in-5 cluding foreign policy documents. The President feared that 6 the unauthorized disclosure of this material would jeopardize 7 the Government's foreign policy initiatives, and would ser-
8 iously undermine the confidence of our allies in our relia-9 bility about classified disclosures to us.

10 The nature of some of the unauthorized disclosures 11 made the National Security Council a likely source of the 12 security leaks. Accordingly, the President met with the 13 Attorney General, the Director of the National Security
14 Council, and the Director of the FBI, to discuss remedial mea-15 sures. Upon the advice of the FBI Director, that electronic 16 surveillance would be a method of discovering the source of 17 the leaks, the President authorized the use of wiretaps.

18 The FBI Director prepared a list of officials in 19 the office of the National Security Council Advisor who had 20 access to documents similar to those that were released, and 21 who possessed other characteristics that suggested that they 22 might be likely sources of the unauthorized disclosures.
23 This list included the name of Dr. Halperin, principal 24 respondent in this case.

25 The Attorney General approved the installation of

1 a tap on the residence phone of Dr. Halperin and that was ac-
2 complished in May, 1969. Summaries of information obtained 3 from this disclosure were prepared and disseminated, ultimately 4 through the Assistant to the President, Mr. Haldeman, another 5 one of the petitioners, who would bring pertinent data to the 6 attention of the President and to the Director of the National 7 Security Council.

8 The tap failed to reveal that Dr. Halperin was the 9 source of the leaks, and it was removed from the telephone on 10 his residence in February, 1971.

11 QUESTION: Was that 21 months after it had been 12 installed?

13 MR. MCCREE: Yes, Mr. Justice Stewart.

14 Two years later, when Dr. Halperin learned of the 15 tap, he, his wife, and children filed in the United States 16 District Court for the District of Columbia this action, 17 alleging that the wiretap was unlawful under the Fourth Amend-
18 ment and under Title III of the Omnibus Crime and Safe Streets 19 Act of 1968. Petitioners, other federal defendants, and the 20 telephone company were named as defendants and monetary damages, 21 declaratory and injunctive relief, were sought.

22 After extensive discovery, petitioner's motion for 23 summary judgment on the Title III claim -- that's the Omnibus 24 Crime and Safe Streets Act -- was granted, and that issue is 25 not before the Court in this appeal.

MILLERS FALLS
1 QUESTION: I notice, Mr. Solicitor General, that 2 the Respondents here are Morton Halperin, et al., and that's 3 the members of his family?

4 MR. McCREE: These are his wife and children, yes, 5 Mr. Justice Stewart.

6 QUESTION: And that's it? They were the plaintiffs?

7 MR. McCREE: They are the respondents.

8 QUESTION: The plaintiffs were all Halperins?

9 MR. McCREE: The plaintiffs are all Halperins. They 10 are respondents here.

11 Addressing the Fourth Amendment claims, although it 12 recognized that there was justifiably grave concern in 1969 13 over leaks and -- and I'd like to quote -- "even granting the 14 inapplicability of the general warrant requirement, the 15 district court held that the wiretap was constitutionally un-16 reasonable because it was continued for 21 months without an 17 effort to minimize the number or type of conversations over-18 heard." The court imposed liability in the following manner:
19 upon the former President for not imposing temporal or infor-20 mational limits on the taps; upon the Attorney General for 21 having failed to carry out review and renewal obligations over 22 the 21-month period; upon the Assistant to the President for 23 having reviewed the information for over a year without recom-24 mending termination, for disseminating information, and for 25 purposes unrelated to the original justification.

1 It found no liability --

2 QUESTION: Can I just clear up one point of confu-3 sion on my part? There is no Title III issue here, not because 4 the district court entered summary judgment, but rather 5 because --

6 MR. McCREE: We did not petition.

7 QUESTION: You did not petition that; right.

8 MR. McCREE: That's correct, Mr. Justice Stevens.

9 The district court found no liability on the part of 10 Dr. Kissinger. The district court also determined that the 11 President and the other petitioners were not entitled to an 12 absolute immunity for damages liability and although their 13 conduct was not -- and I would like to quote -- "a wanton, 14 reckless, or malicious disregard" of respondents' rights, never-15 theless they were not entitled to a qualified good faith im-
16 munity from damages liability because -- and I'd like to quote 17 again -- "their activities relating to the wiretap's con-
18 tinuance were unreasonable, and in violation of established 19 Fourth Amendment rights" and because "they are charged with 20 knowledge of established law."

21 Since respondents proved no actual injury, they were 22 given the relief of having certain exonerating material placed 23 in Dr. Halperin's file and they were awarded nominal damages, 24 one dollar.

25 The Court of Appeals reversed and remanded for

FBI - NEW YORK

1 further proceedings. It held, first, that the Fourth Amend-2 ment requirement of a warrant for electronic surveillance -- 3 and there was none here -- in national security cases would be 4 applied retroactively to establish a cause of action in 5 damages. It also concluded that petitioners' failure to 6 terminate the tap within a reasonable time also gave rise to 7 a damages action for violation of the Fourth Amendment. It 8 also concluded that petitioners are not entitled to an absolute 9 immunity from damages nor to a qualified immunity as a matter 10 of law with respect to the continuance of the taps, because 11 there were no reasonable grounds for believing that the sur-
12 veillance was in accord with the Constitution.

13 It remanded to the district court to determine when 14 the continuation of the wiretap became unreasonable, and whe-
15 ther petitioners acted in good faith in authorizing a warrant-16 less electronic interception for national security purposes 17 prior to this Court's decision in United States v. United 18 States District Court, a case that's known as the Keith case.

19 It held that respondents could be awarded damages 20 for emotional distress and for other intangible injuries, and 21 it reversed the award of summary judgment in favor of Dr.
22 Kissinger and remanded.

23 Now, at the outset, we contend that to subject the 24 President of the United States to personal damages for official 25 acts in his capacity as the nation's chief executive is

FEB 15 1968
1 contrary to compelling reasons of public policy as well as to 2 the design of the Constitution. We submit that absolute im-
3 munity is absolutely necessary to protect the decision-making 4 processes of the President in his conduct of the official busi-
5 ness. The risk of personal liability would inhibit the fear-6 less and decisive exercise of presidential authority which the 7 nation has a right to expect.

8 Just as a judge, who this Court has determined enjoys 9 absolute immunity, must make decisions in controversies fraught 10 with passion, and so must Presidents often make discretionary 11 decisions about controversial issues that affect the lives of 12 virtually every American, especially in areas of national 13 defense and foreign affairs which are involved in this liti-14 gation, the President's discharge of these duties should be 15 motivated solely by his concern for the good of the nation, 16 and not at all by the fear of damages awards.

17 And these fears, we submit, are not de minimis.
18 In Butz v. Economou, the ad damnum was $32 million. It is 19 manifest, we submit, that a qualified immunity is inadequate to 20 protect the public interest in the vigorous and fearless per-21 formance of a president's constitutional duties.

22 The skillful pleader can easily avoid a motion to 23 dismiss by alleging malice, bad faith, and unreasonableness, 24 and impose on the President the burden of the time, the ex-25 pense, the personal anxiety, and the inevitable distraction

1 of litigation. Judge Gesell, the only district judge who was 2 a member of the appellate panel in this case, directed our at-3 tention to what he called the increasing frequency by which 4 plaintiffs are "filing suits seeking damage awards against 5 high government officials in their personal capacities, based 6 on alleged constitutional torts." And he expressed grave 7 doubts whether the usual tests apply to determine the existence 8 of genuine issues of controverted fact would afford any pro-9 tection to a president from extensive discovery delving into 10 his innermost thoughts and probing his mind to determine whe-11 ther and how he acted in his official capacity.

12 We submit that in a subsequent matter, as we point 13 out in Footnote 34 on page 37 of our brief, that this Court's 14 expectation in Butz, that "insubstantial lawsuits can be 15 quickly terminated by federal courts," alert to the possibility 16 of artful pleading, and that "firm application of the Federal 17 Rules of Civil Procedure will insure that federal officials 18 are not harassed by frivolous lawsuits," has not been realized, 19 as a separate opinion of Mr. Justice Powell asserts in Hanrahan
20 v. Hampton, which has been characterized as the longest jury 21 trial in the history of United States courts, and must go back 22 again for several months of trial to determine whether a quali-23 fied immunity which was given to the federal defendants in that 24 case was available to them.

25 We next contend that absolute presidential immunity

EXHIBIT A SE

1 should extend to officials who acted at his direct and express
2 direction to carry out his authority. It is obvious that a 3 president can only act per alios and if his alter egos do not 4 enjoy the same absolute immunity which we submit he should re-5 ceive, then the public interest in his fearless discharge of 6 his constitutional duties will be utterly frustrated.

7 We also contend that an absolute immunity for damages 8 should attach to the giving of advice to the President pursuant 9 to Article II, Section 2, of the United States Constitution
10 by the heads of his departments. The fear of personal lia-11 bility on the part of a department head who is asked to render 12 advice to the President would deprive the chief executive of-13 ficer of exactly what the Constitution intended for him to re-
14 ceive, the best judgment, the honest, frank and considered 15 opinion of his subordinate.

16 However, in this case, to deny absolute immunity 17 would dry up the source of the kind of advice that would be 18 necessary for the discharge of the public's business.

19 QUESTION: Does this go for the entire staff of the 20 President?

21 MR. MCCREE: Mr. Justice White, we think that we can 22 avoid that question here, because we submit --

23 QUESTION: You'll just go no farther than necessary 24 down the line?

25 MR. MCCREE: That's right.

MILLERS FALLS
1 QUESTION: Well, is it your submission that it
2 works both ways, that if -- not only for advice to the Presi-3 dent, but the execution of acts or duties or statements that 4 the President directs a subordinate to commit?

5 MR. McCREE: We think, Mr. Justice White, that these 6 are separate things. One is the immunity derivative of the 7 President, which would shield a person who might not have it 8 in his own behalf.

9 QUESTION: Which one is that?

10 MR. McCREE: Well, we feel that that should be the 11 basis for the disposition of this litigation --

12 QUESTION: All right. But whether or not it's car-
13 rying out an order of the President or giving him some advice, 14 either one?

15 MR. McCREE: We think there should be an absolute 16 immunity for both.

17 QUESTION: For both -- either kinds of -- ?

18 MR. McCREE: For either or both, but we think the 19 Court can avoid determining whether the subordinate has an 20 absolute immunity at all.

21 QUESTION: I understand that; I understand that.
22 But which is it in this case? Is it carrying out the orders 23 of the President or giving him advice, or both?

24 MR. McCREE: It's executing the orders of the Presi-
25 dent and so therefore it would be derivative of his absolute --

ERASE

1 QUESTION: And so we don't need to get to giving 2 him advice?

3 MR. McCREE: We submit it; it is not necessary to 4 dispose of this case.

5 QUESTION: Well, how big a list does that include?

6 MR. McCREE: Well, we think, again -- I can't 7 answer that, Mr. Justice Marshall.

8 QUESTION: Well, don't we have to in an opinion, say, 9 that certain people have this great immunity and others 10 don't?

11 MR. McCREE: I think we can focus --

12 QUESTION: Or do we leave the same worry in their 13 minds?

14 MR. McCREE: I think we can focus on the petitioners 15 in this case and say that they have it, and we can wait until 16 another day to determine whether someone with lesser rank in 17 the executive department should enjoy it.

18 QUESTION: Well, they have in this case because of 19 the derivative immunity that they enjoy from the presidential 20 immunity. That's your argument, at least.

21 MR. McCREE: If we follow that approach, we needn't 22 reach the question, Mr. Justice.

23 QUESTION: Well, is that anybody the President asks?
24 Would that apply to a private individual whose advice is 25 sought?

IS 750 AS E

1 MR. McCREE: I would think not, Mr. Justice Marshall.

2 QUESTION: Well, should we say so?

3 MR. McCREE: I think it's not involved in this case.
4 If the Court wishes to express itself, of course it will.

5 QUESTION: I think the whole thing is -- I per-6 sonally think the whole thing's involved, as to how far a 7 president can go in authorizing individuals to violate people's 8 rights.

9 MR. McCREE: Well, the derivative immunity which we 10 claim for him would protect these persons here without deter-
11 mining what inherent immunity they themselves possess.

12 QUESTION: And this is true because they're acting 13 in effectuation of a specific program for which he, personally, 14 was specifically responsible?

15 MR. McCREE: Yes, Mr. Justice Stewart.

16 QUESTION: And because the same argument, I suppose,
17 could be made for any White House aide who's acting in accord 18 with general authority given by a president.

19 MR. McCREE: We submit, to focus on another branch 20 of government, it's clear that a judge acting in his judicial 21 capacity has an absolute immunity. We suggest that if he 22 directed a member of the staff of the court, specifically, to 23 do something which if he did himself would afford him the abso-
24 lute immunity, that that person would enjoy an immunity 25 derivative of him. The Clerk of the Court, for example.

1 QUESTION: What kind of derivative immunity have we 2 allowed to members of the Senate or the Congress?

3 MR. McCREE: Where the -- in the Gravel case, where 4 the legislator himself would enjoy immunity, if the chief coun-5 sel of a committee acted at his direction, he would be protect-6 ed by the derivative immunity. If, on the other hand, the 7 legislator would not under the Speech or Debate Clause, then 8 neither would the person who acted at his express direction.
9 We contend here that this is specifically within the President's 10 constitutional authority, the areas in which he acted, and that 11 he expressly authorized this step to take place. I don't 12 think there's any question about that. And therefore, that 13 he should have, these persons should have a derivative --

14 QUESTION: Would that also apply to the FBI agents 15 who did the actual listening?

16 MR. McCREE: I think it should. I think, analyti-17 cally, it should, if expressly directed.

18 QUESTION: And the phone company?

19 MR. McCREE: Well, the telephone company is out of 20 the case, Mr. Justice Marshall, and I would prefer to let them 21 speak for themselves if I don't have to.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, you have mentioned
23 the Speech and Debate Clause. Does the absence of something 24 similar to it in the Constitution so far as the Executive 25 Branch is concerned have any significance?

MR. McCREE: I don't think so, Mr. Justice Blackmun.

MILLERS FALLS
1 although the opinion in this case and the Court of Appeals for 2 the District of Columbia dwelled at some length on the absence
3 of a specific constitutional grant of immunity. We submit that 4 the third branch has no express grant of immunity, yet 5 every judge, justice enjoys an absolute immunity acting in his 6 judicial capacity; but there's nothing in the Constitution that 7 speaks of that. This Court has also decided in Imbler v.
8 Pachtman that a prosecuting attorney functioning qua prose-9 cuting attorney also enjoys an absolute immunity and there's 10 nothing in Article II of the Constitution that affords him
11 that immunity either. So we think it's not of consequence --

12 QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, I have a vague
13 recollection that Chief Justice Warren addressed this question
14 in some case; that is, the derivative immunity. Do you recall 15 off the top of your head what case that was?

16 MR. McCREE: It may have been the Gravel case.

17 QUESTION: No, he wasn't here then.

18 MR. McCREE: He would not have been -- that would 19 have been after.

20 QUESTION: Well, no matter. No matter.

21 MR. McCREE: I do not. It may occur to me, and if 22 it does, I would like the privilege of calling it to the Chief 23 Justice's attention.

24 We also suggest that even if the Court should decide 25 that petitioners are entitled only to a qualified immunity,

EXHIBIT A SE

1 they are nevertheless entitled to a qualified immunity as a
2 matter of law. Qualified immunity occurs, as we understand it, 3 when two elements are satisfied: first, there must be the 4 absence of malice or bad faith; and second, there must be an 5 objective test that the conduct is reasonable, that there was no 6 settled or clearly established law relating to the alleged 7 violation.

8 Now, the Court here did not hold that there was 9 malice or bad faith. The Court instead claimed that there was 10 clear established law violated which we contend, and we believe 11 we demonstrate in our brief, is erroneous. We submit that in 12 1969 when these taps were established, it was far from being 13 clear and established what the requirement was, either for 14 warrants or reasonableness in national security wiretaps.

15 As a matter of fact, it was only two years before 16 these wiretaps were initiated that this Court first held that 17 electronic surveillance was covered by the Fourth Amendment, 18 and the first case to impose a warrant requirement for 19 electronic surveillance of this sort was the so-called Keith 20 case which was decided after the taps were terminated here, 21 and that concerned surveillance for domestic security, and not 22 foreign national security surveillance. And it wasn't until 23 after that that any court first spoke to the question of the 24 application of the Fourth Amendment to the national service 25 surveillance for foreign security purposes.

MILLERS FALLS

1 And as this Court itself said in the Keith case, 2 it was addressing a matter which had never been addressed be-3 fore by this Court. And we believe that in the light of this 4 demonstration, for the court below to have said that this was 5 in violation of settled or clearly established law is highly 6 erroneous, that it is erroneous as a matter of law.

7 QUESTION: The new question involved in the so-called 8 Keith case, as you call it, U.S. v. U. S. District Court, was 9 whether or not a warrant was required. Wasn't that the new 10 question?

11 MR. McCREE: That's correct. Well, but that's in-12 volved in this case, too. We're just saying that the law was 13 developing in this area of what is required for electronic 14 surveillance, what is required for electronic surveillance for 15 national security reasons involving domestic persons, and 16 what is involved in --

17 QUESTION: Well, certainly it was never contended 18 that an unreasonable search or seizure was a constitutional 19 search or seizure, was it?

20 MR. McCREE: Well, that's --

21 QUESTION: There was a difference of opinion as to 22 what was reasonable.

23 MR. McCREE: That's correct, Mr. Justice Stewart.
24 And we submit that in the field of the area of national 25 security, it may not be appropriate to take the test of 1 reasonably from criminal cases, and apply it.

2         For example, I say it without knowing this to be the 3 fact, but I believe that there is a basis for it, that we may 4 be conducting national security wiretaps that have had several 5 years' duration, in some areas; and it may be reasonable in the 6 context of foreign surveillance for national security reasons.
7 Whereas to conduct surveillance for a criminal law purpose of 8 a domestic person, might be unreasonable if it's more than a 9 matter of a few days. And so we submit that this is an 10 evolving area of the law, and that it certainly isn't settled 11 or clearly established law, and that the court below erred in 12 asserting that it was, in denying even a qualified immunity,
13 which it would have in the absence of malice, and in the ab-
14 sence of bad faith, in the absence of violation of clearly 15 established law.

16         We also suggest that, as Butz v. Economou suggested, 17 the Doctrine of Qualified Immunity is not rigid, it's also an 18 evolving doctrine, being a court-made doctrine. And that it 19 varies with the scope of discretion and responsibility of the 20 office. And although the form it took in Butz v. Economou 21 was a bad faith, the existence of bad faith or the violation 22 of settled or clearly established law, we suggest that for the 23 President and his closest advisors, a much more useful formu-
24 lation of qualified immunity would eliminate the subjective 25 element of bad faith or malice, and hold only the objective

1 test of a violation of settled or clearly established law.

2 And we suggest this for the following reason. This 3 would permit a court to determine the question of damages
4 liability as a matter of law, and make unnecessary the depos-5 ing of the President and his closest aides, the submission to 6 them of interrogatories to answer, and possibly the necessity 7 of trial. And still it would afford protection, because any 8 violation of settled or clearly established law which could be 9 determined objectively would curb the kinds of excesses that 10 this Court should be concerned about in balancing the right 11 of the citizen to recompense against the interest of the 12 entire nation in the conduct of the office of the President, 13 which we submit is seriously undermined by either the absence
14 of an absolute immunity or the failure to construct the kind 15 of qualified immunity that he might have, which could be de-16 termined as a matter of law rather than as a matter of fact.

17 Finally, we argue that judicial decisions establish-18 ing constitutional standards for national security surveillance 19 which were announced after the Halperin wiretap should not be 20 applied retroactively to permit an award of personal damages
21 for federal officials. Clearly, those decisions are all
22 subsequent to the termination of the tap on Dr. Halperin's 23 phone, and yet the Court of Appeals applied them retroactively, 24 mistakenly, we believe, under the standards expressed in 25 Chevron.

MILLERS FALLS
1 The standards in Chevron were three. The first was 2 whether the new rule was foreshadowed by existing law, or whe-
3 ther it established an overruling of a longstanding precedent.
4 And we suggest that this Court's opening language in the Keith 5 case indicates that this certainly is not an area that was 6 foreshadowed. We also suggest that the second test in Chevron
7 is whether it serves the purpose of the new rule. The purpose 8 of the new rule, as we understand it, is to deter conduct, and 9 this Court has said many times -- in Linkletter, for example -- 10 that conduct that has already occurred is not deterred by im-
11 posing personal liability after the fact. And the third stan-12 dard is whether the retroactive application would be unfair, 13 and we submit it would be eminently unfair because the entire 14 genius of our legal system is not to hold a person to a stan-15 dard of conduct of which he had no notice.

16 QUESTION: Do you think, Mr. Attorney General, 17 there's really much difference between deciding the good faith
18 immunity question and retroactivity? If the law wasn't settled 19 it isn't retroactive in the case then?

20 MR. McCREE: They're certainly related, and --

21 QUESTION: Well, what's the difference, I wonder?
22 Has there been a remand here?

23 MR. McCREE: In making the determination, Mr. Justice
24 White, I think there is no difference. It just depends upon 25 which analysis you wish. I'd like to -- and there has not been

EXETER, N.H.
COTTON COURT
1 a remand yet. I would like to suggest that if this Court de-2 cides that there should not be a retrospective application of 3 the decisions creating damages liability for violation of the 4 Fourth Amendment, that it would be possible to avoid an expres-
5 sion at all upon the matter of absolute immunity, if the Court
6 desired to reach that point. And we feel that these two areas 7 afford the people of the United States the protection that 8 they require under these circumstances. Thank you.

9 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Mr. Lynch.

10 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MARK H. LYNCH, ESQ.,

11 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

12 MR. LYNCH: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 13 Court:

14 I'd like to say a word more about the facts of this 15 case against which petitioners' legal argument must be mea-16 sured. To begin with Petitioner Kissinger, our case against 17 him is not based on any advice. Indeed, our case against any 18 of the petitioners is not based on the giving of advice. In 19 fact I'd be hard pressed to frame a complaint under Bivens that 20 was based on the giving of advice.

21 Our case against Petitioner Kissinger is based on 22 his role in selecting Morton Halperin as a surveillance target.
23 I believe the Solicitor General misspoke when he said that 24 FBI Director Hoover assembled the list of wiretap targets.
25 In fact, the list was assembled by Dr. Kissinger at the

EX-100
CONFIDENTIAL

1 National Security Council, that put Halperin on the list to be 2 wiretapped. He put Halperin on the list to be wiretapped
3 despite the fact that Dr. Kissinger knew that Halperin did not 4 have access to the information related to the B-52 bombing 5 story, which was the leak that triggered the wiretaps. And in 6 fact, Dr. Kissinger also knew that Mr. Halperin had very little 7 access to the information which appeared in previous leaks.

8 In fact, when Dr. Kissinger asked his aide, General
9 Haig, to prepare a list of people who had access to the B-52
10 bombing story, Haig did not put Halperin's name on the list, 11 but instead, at Kissinger's direction, Halperin's name was put 12 on the list and it was transmitted over to the FBI.

13 QUESTION: That was Colonel Haig at that time?

14 MR. LYNCH: I'm sorry. Well, it was Colonel Haig 15 at that time, and later he was promoted to general.

16 Furthermore, with respect to our case against 17 Kissinger, it is based on his role in keeping the wiretap on.
18 There were a number of instances when the FBI suggested that 19 the wiretap be taken off, in the very early days, because it 20 was not revealing any indication that Halperin was a leaker.
21 Yet, Kissinger persisted through Haig in keeping a tap on 22 Halperin.

23 QUESTION: To whom was that information conveyed by 24 the FBI?

25 MR. LYNCH: In some instances it was related by

MILLERS FALLS
1 Assistant Director Sullivan through Haig. And there is one
2 point, on June 4th, when Haig prepares a memorandum for Kissin-3 ger to serve as the basis of a discussion with Hoover, and 4 Kissinger testified that he followed the outlines for that 5 memorandum, and Haig suggested to Kissinger and Kissinger in 6 fact spoke to Hoover about the fact that although there is no
7 indication that Halpirin is a leaker, we should keep his wire-8 tap on for at least two more weeks to establish a pattern of 9 innocence. So he was very directly involved. And the testi-10 mony from the FBI officials indicates that they regarded 11 Kissinger as the person who would put the taps on, and indeed 12 make the decisions to take the taps off.

13 There is also testimony from Attorney General
14 Mitchell that Kissinger was the person who had the authority
15 to finger targets and to decide when it was time to take them 16 off.

17 QUESTION: Who had possession of the logs? The FBI
18 or the White House?

19 MR. LYNCH: Excuse me, Your Honor?

20 QUESTION: The logs of the wiretaps. Who had posses-21 sion of those?

22 MR. LYNCH: The actual logs were kept at the FBI and 23 summaries were made and sent over to the White House. Early 24 in the surveillance Haig went to Sullivan's office and liter-25 ally sat down and read the logs. Sullivan also testified at

MILLERS FALLS
1 one point Kissinger came over to read the log. Kissinger
2 disputes that; we're not sure. This is all on summary judgment.

3 But later on this took too much of Haig's time to 4 come over and read the log so the FBI began preparing summary
5 letters and sending them over to the White House. They were 6 delivered to Haig, who was then to furnish them to Kissinger.
7 They were also delivered first to Ehrlichman, who would give 8 them to Haldeman, who then took them in to the President, and 9 there is testimony that he actually did take them in to the 10 President and discuss them with him.

11 QUESTION: Could I ask, at some point in this pro-12 cess there was a presidential authorization or an order for 13 the imposition of wiretaps?

14 MR. LYNCH: Yes. Let me get to the theory of our 15 case against Nixon.

16 QUESTION: Well, now, there was an order like that?

17 MR. LYNCH: There was an order.

18 QUESTION: And he didn't do it out of the blue.
19 I suppose someone recommended to him that he -- ?

20 MR. LYNCH: That's right.

21 QUESTION: And they advised him to do it? Including 22 Dr. Kissinger, I suppose?

23 MR. LYNCH: No, no. So far as the record shows, 24 Nixon authorized a program to investigate leaks that would 25 include the use of wiretapping, if necessary. Less intrusive

1 means were supposed to be used initially, interviews and phy-2 sical surveillance and so on.

3 QUESTION: He never ordered it?

4 MR. LYNCH: But so far as we know, Nixon did not 5 target Kissinger at the beginning of the wiretap.

6 QUESTION: I know. But did he ever order it, or 7 just authorize it?

8 MR. LYNCH: The wiretapping of Halperin?

9 QUESTION: No, just any wiretap, for this purpose?
10 Did he order it or not?

11 MR. LYNCH: He said, use it if necessary. And I
12 think it's fair to say that he said, go ahead and wiretap.

13 QUESTION: All right. And so that he said that to 14 whoever had the responsibility to make those decisions?

15 MR. LYNCH: He said -- yes, he said that to -- well, 16 he very simply said, I want it done.

17 QUESTION: So, if Kissinger participated in the im-18 position of the taps, it isn't -- you aren't suggesting that 19 he was acting without authority?

20 MR. LYNCH: In the selecting of people? No. He was 21 told to do that.

22 QUESTION: So he was exercising the authority that 23 the presidential order anticipated that he carry out?

24 MR. LYNCH: Yes. But now, it's important to under-25 stand that Nixon gave him three criteria for selecting people.

1 QUESTION: I understand you have --

2 MR. LYNCH: And Halperin fit within none of 3 those. QUESTION: But nevertheless, Kissinger was acting

4 QUESTION: But nevertheless, Kissinger was acting 5 within the scope of his authority? --

6 MR. LYNCH: Yes, except that he -- the order

7 QUESTION: And within the scope of the order?

8 MR. LYNCH: Yes, subject of course to the limitation 9 that the Fourth Amendment places on the exercise of this 10 authority.

11 QUESTION: Oh, I understand that; yes.

12 MR. LYNCH: I didn't want to lose that. I want to 13 reiterate that our case against Nixon is not based on telling 14 his subordinates to go out and investigate leaks. We wouldn't 15 sue him if that's all he did. Our case against Nixon is based 16 on his very personal and direct and continuing involvement 17 in the use of this information for partisan political activi-
18 ties. This point is probably best demonstrated by the meeting
19 that he had with Hoover --

20 QUESTION: Well, that per se is not a constitutional 21 violation, is it?

22 MR. LYNCH: No. This --

23 QUESTION: I thought your lawsuit was based upon a 24 violation of the Constitution?

25 MR. LYNCH: That's our cause of action --

MILLERS FALLS
1 QUESTION: The order. The order. The order you say
2 was unconstitutional. They ordered the wiretap.

3 MR. LYNCH: Yes. Without warrants. We say that is 4 unconstitutional, and even if you could get away with wire-
5 tapping without a warrant in 1969, to wiretap for this length 6 of time, to wiretap people for whom there was no good reason 7 to wiretap under the purported purpose of the wiretap, would --

8 QUESTION: Now, what you've told us might be a rea-9 son that it was a constitutional violation.

10 MR. LYNCH: Yes.

11 QUESTION: And it wasn't a bona fide foreign security 12 tap.

13 MR. LYNCH: Yes. Yes, sir.

14 I'm explaining now why Nixon is in this 15 case. And I think this demonstrates why qualified rather than 16 absolute immunity is an appropriate rule to apply to the 17 President, quite contrary to the Government's position.

18 On May 12, 1970, Nixon met with Hoover. This was 19 the height of the controversy over the President's decision 20 to insert troops into Cambodia. Hoover prepared a brief of 21 the highlights of the surveillance that had been gleaned in 22 the two weeks since the Cambodian invasion decision, and he 23 reviewed those with the President at this meeting.

24 With respect to Halperin, the highlights of the sur-25 veillance included the information that Halperin planned to

5-14-70
COTTON CONFIDENTIAL

1 resign his consultant status with the National Security
2 Council in order to protest the invasion; that Halperin planned 3 to go to work for Senator Fulbright to work against the war;
4 and that Halperin and other individuals were setting up an 5 organization to oppose the war.

6 At that meeting Nixon directed Hoover to no longer
7 send reports, the summary letters, to Kissinger but to direct 8 them exclusively to Haldeman, the President's alter ego. And 9 at that point the information reported in the summary letters, 10 the political content of that information, becomes much, much 11 more pronounced. You get information such as the fact that 12 Halperin is lobbying with the Republican Senators with respect 13 to legislation that was pending then to cut funds off for the 14 war, and the White House wonders, for example, if Senator 15 Cotton is marginal on this issue. You get information about 16 Halperin's attempts to set up this organization that I men-17 tioned earlier. Halperin then began cooperating with John 18 Gardner in Common Cause. The White House learned the nature 19 of the foreign policy positions --

20 QUESTION: At this period was Dr. Halperin still on 21 the staff?

22 MR. LYNCH: No. He had been a consultant. Let me 23 give you the chronology. May 1969, the wiretap was put on.
24 He's cut off from access to classified information. September 25 1969 -- he can't do much without classified information at the

1 NSC, so he resigns, over Kissinger's objection. Kissinger
2 offers to try to persuade him to stay on, so they compromise
3 and agree that Halperin will be a consultant. Halperin main-4 tains that consultancy from September, 1969, although it was 5 minimal, until May, 1970, when he resigns altogether from the 6 Government in protest of the Cambodian invasion.

7 QUESTION: And did he ever thereafter return to 8 government employment?

9 MR. LYNCH: No, he hasn't. He -- well, he's had some 10 other consulting contracts, I think, with the Atomic Energy 11 Commission. But that may even have been before May, 1970. But 12 he never returned to full-time government service.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Lynch, for purposes of the President's 14 immunity, is there a difference between the period from May, 15 '69, to May, '70, and the period after May, '70?

16 MR. LYNCH: Our case gets -- clearly gets much 17 stronger after May, 1970.

18 QUESTION: But legally, is there a legal difference 19 between the two?

20 MR. LYNCH: With respect --

21 QUESTION: The difference is one just of motive, and 22 motive would be irrelevant under absolute immunity.

23 MR. LYNCH: That's right. It goes to the showing
24 you have to make under the qualified immunity. And our posi-
25 tion --

1 QUESTION: So if you're right after May '70, you're 2 also right before May, 1970?

3 MR. LYNCH: Yes.

4 QUESTION: And of course, if there's absolute presi-5 dential immunity, there's absolute presidential immunity, and 6 that would apply if a President should go out and put his hand
7 over the mouth of a private citizen so the private citizen 8 couldn't speak.

9 MR. LYNCH: Sure. He could have decided the way to 10 find out about these leaks was to go pick Halperin up in the 11 middle of the night and torture him, and under the Government's 12 position he's absolutely wrong.

13 QUESTION: Exactly.

14 MR. LYNCH: We think that's no way to run a govern-15 ment.

16 QUESTION: Is that a fair statement of the Govern-17 ment's position, because they argue there should be a func-
18 tional analysis of what the President does, just as the judge 19 would not be immune if he went out and wrestled somebody to the 20 ground in something totally unrelated to judicial proceeding.
21 Don't they make the same --

22 MR. LYNCH: They haven't suggested any limiting fac-23 tor that I can discern, Your Honor.

24 QUESTION: They do make this functional analysis --

25 QUESTION: Well, so long as he's carrying out the

MILLERS FALLS
1 presidential office, and that was true in Stump v. Sparkman.

2 MR. LYNCH: But if -- yes, yes. But, you see, the 3 presidency, as they say -- correctly, I think, although for 4 the wrong purpose -- the scope of the President's office is 5 so broad, it's not limited like the judicial function of a 6 judge, where he would wrestle someone down in the courtroom.

7 QUESTION: Well, would you say he's absolutely 8 immune when he signs a bill into law, for example?

9 MR. LYNCH: Yes. I think he probably --

10 QUESTION: So, you would agree there is some abso-
11 lute immunity for the President?

12 MR. LYNCH: I would. I think analytically a more 13 precise way to say it is that the scope of his discretion is 14 so wide in some areas that qualified immunity tends to merge
15 into absolute immunity. I would prefer to call it --

16 QUESTION: Well, there's no cause of action there?

17 MR. LYNCH: A district court would throw the case out 18 very quickly.

19 QUESTION: Well, it could very quickly, but is he 20 entitled to absolute immunity, which would mean he's entitled 21 to win on a motion to dismiss without any showing of facts 22 other than that all he did was sign a bill? Seems to me, if 23 you admit that, you're admitting the Government's functional 24 analysis approach.

25 MR. LYNCH: And it's a slippery slope, to try to

P. 2 E. 1 A. 5 E
COTTON CONTENT

1 decide where to draw the line. And that's why I would prefer
2 to call it qualified immunity --

3 QUESTION: And I know you'd prefer not to, but --

4 MR. LYNCH: -- with a very broad expansion in some 5 areas.

6 QUESTION: But do you seriously contend that he has 7 no absolutely immunity? Say he orders troops into battle or 8 something like that? It's still just a qualified immunity?

9 MR. LYNCH: Practically, I don't contend that; no.
10 And I think ordering troops into battle, negotiating treaties, 11 that sort of thing. But where he comes down and intrudes him-
12 self into the life of one family of five people and starts 13 listening to their most private telephone conversations for 14 partisan political purposes, that --

15 QUESTION: But didn't you just admit the partisan 16 political purposes are only relevant to motive? They're not 17 relevant to whether or not there's an absolute immunity.

18 MR. LYNCH: That's true. Well, I think that's an 19 aspect --

20 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Lynch, is there any decision 21 in this Court or any other court that you know of that in 22 talking about executive immunity that suggests that it ever 23 has extended or should extend to criminal immunity -- immunity 24 from crime?

25 MR. LYNCH: I don't think so, Your Honor. I think --

1 QUESTION: Aside from the Speech or Debate Clause,
2 which is of constitutional dimension?

3 MR. LYNCH: And which is very limited to legislative 4 activity.

5 QUESTION: So, you don't think the Government's 6 suggesting that the President's absolutely immune under the 7 criminal laws, do you?

8 MR. LYNCH: No, I don't think they do suggest that.
9 But criminal action --

10 QUESTION: Then don't say that they are suggest-11 ing it, that their immunity is unlimited.

12 MR. LYNCH: Well, it's unlimited with respect to 13 civil suits.

14 QUESTION: And even within the area of performing 15 his presidential duties, I don't see any suggestion that he's 16 immune from violating the criminal laws.

17 MR. LYNCH: I didn't mean to suggest that, Mr. Jus-18 tice White. My whole discussion is within the context of 19 civil suits, to redress violations of -- civil rights.

20 QUESTION: Well, then, but you said a minute ago the 21 Government was suggesting that the President could go out and 22 torture someone into making a confession and that he would be 23 immune under their theory. Do you think they really suggest 24 that?

25 MR. LYNCH: If, for a civil suit by the victim?

1 QUESTION: No, I said, you said he would be immune 2 from having subjected someone to torture.

3 MR. LYNCH: Under the Government's argument --

4 QUESTION: You mean under civil liability?

5 MR. LYNCH: Civil liability would be immune.

6 QUESTION: Not criminal?

7 MR. LYNCH: Not criminal. And as I say, I didn't 8 mean to suggest that this whole discussion relates to civil 9 suits for constitutional violations.

10 QUESTION: Then, on the civil side, would you say 11 that that automatically excluded any recovery against the 12 Government as such? Civil?

13 MR. LYNCH: That depends on the vagaries of whether 14 you can recover under the federal tort claims actions. And 15 that is a --

16 QUESTION: There may or may not be a recovery there, 17 under the civil side?

18 MR. LYNCH: Yes. And there are lots of problems in 19 proceeding under the --

20 QUESTION: And, Mr. Lynch, do you think the 21 Government suggests that a course of conduct by the President
22 is not subject to an injunction suit or a declaratory 23 judgment?

24 MR. LYNCH: No, they don't suggest that.

25 QUESTION: So that it's just damages we're talking

1 about, not just immune from civil suit, but from damages?

2 MR. LYNCH: They want to --

3 QUESTION: That's what we're talking about?

4 MR. LYNCH: That's right. Turning to the policy
5 rationale for the qualified immunity applying to the President, 6 which is the position we urge, in favor of qualified immunity,
7 of the policies which this Court recognized in Butz v.
8 Economou, the first of all is the importance of enabling a 9 citizen to recover for the violation of his constitutional 10 rights. Secondly is the interest in deterring officials from 11 undertaking actions which violate the constitutional rights of 12 citizens.

13 And in Butz the Court stressed that the higher an 14 executive official is, the greater his power and the greater 15 his capacity to inflict harm, and therefore the need for deter-16 rence is correspondingly great. We submit that under that 17 analysis that the deterring interest is at its peak when you're 18 dealing with the President, because he of course is the chief 19 executive officer with the greatest degree of wherewithal to 20 inflict harm on people.

21 And third, and most fundamentally, the principle that 22 in this country no man is above the law, and all executive 23 officers should have to face suit if in fact they clearly 24 have engaged in a violation of constitutional rights.

25 QUESTION: But you seem to concede that judges are

1 above the law.

2 MR. LYNCH: Yes, Your Honor. Well, they're not above
3 the law. They're in an area -- yes, they have absolute immu-4 nity. I don't want to quibble about that.

5 But the policy justification for that is much differ-6 ent. As the Court said in Butz, the cluster of immunities that 7 attach to participants in the judicial process arises from the 8 nature of the judicial process. It's open, it's adversarial, 9 and above all, errors are generally correctable on appeal.
10 And therefore the balance has been struck in favor of absolute 11 immunity.

12 When you're dealing with the executive branch, fre-13 quently the actions are not open, and when you're dealing with 14 violations of constitutional rights, there is no appeal. As 15 Mr. Justice Harlan said in Bivens, for people in the Halperin 16 shoes, it's damages or nothing.

17 Against these interests, the Government identifies 18 a number of countervailing interests which in our view are not 19 sufficient to alter the balance that was struck.

20 QUESTION: Number one, you couldn't go publicly out 21 in a courtroom or anyplace publicly and ask for permission to 22 tap somebody's phone. That wouldn't be very helpful, would it?

23 MR. LYNCH: Of course not. That's a big problem.

24 QUESTION: Case number one, which makes it a little 25 different.

MILLERS FALLS

1 QUESTION: And could you hold your meetings in pub-2 lic if you were trying to decide whether you were going to take 3 some particular military action or diplomatic sanction against 4 another country?

5 MR. LYNCH: No, generally that has to be conducted 6 privately.

7 QUESTION: So that, while all of our proceedings 8 and all other judicial proceedings can be conducted in the 9 open, you concede that all the executive functions cannot be 10 in the open?

11 MR. LYNCH: That's right. And that's one of the 12 distinctions between executive and judicial proceedings that 13 argues against absolute immunity for executive officers.

14 QUESTION: does it not also argue equally for?

15 MR. LYNCH: Well, I think if you're worried about 16 the disclosure of state secrets, for example, that privilege 17 is absolute, and if a damage claimant runs into a properly 18 claimed state secret privilege assertion, he may well lose
19 the suit. The suit will be dismissed. In fact, there's a 20 case in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, Halkin v.
21 Helms, 598 F.2d 1, where that precise result obtained, and I
22 was involved in it and unhappily lost. We couldn't overcome 23 the state secrets privilege. So those interests will be pro-24 tected, Mr. Chief Justice.

25 The principal countervailing interest which

GENERAL
COTTON CONTENT

1 the government identifies to argue against the qualified
2 immunity, is the inhibition on the President's time that de-3 fending such suits will occasion. Bearing in mind -- and it 4 has to be borne foremost in mind, the President enjoys the 5 greatest degree of protection of any official under the quali-6 fied immunity doctrine. The qualified immunity doctrine, as 7 was spelled out in Scheuer v. Rhodes, which in fact involved 8 the chief executive officer of a state -- which while not ob-9 viously on all fours is similar to the situation -- very 10 clearly spelled out the principles that the greater an offi-
11 cial's responsibilities, the wider the scope of his discretion, 12 the greater the exigencies under which he must make decisions, 13 the greater his opportunity to prevail under qualified immunity 14 will be. And for that reason we think that the President is 15 likely to escape suits in all situations except where it is 16 shown that he is directly and personally involved on a con-17 tinuing basis in the violation of constitutional rights, such 18 as is demonstrated in this case.

19 QUESTION: What areas of the function of a governor 20 must be conducted with great secrecy and privacy as compared 21 with a President or the Secretary of State, and Secretary of 22 Defense, for example.

23 MR. LYNCH: Well, for example, the government of 24 Governor Rhodes in Scheuer was dealing with an insurrection
25 at Kent State University, and he had to decide how to deploy

1 the National Guard.

2 QUESTION: That was a question, whether he was deal-3 ing with an insurrection, was it not?

4 MR. LYNCH: Well, it was -- it was a very violent
5 and turbulent situation. Whether it could be legally defined 6 as an insurrection, I may have overspoke on that.

7 QUESTION: Do you consider that comparable to deal-8 ing with some of our active adversaries in the world?

9 MR. LYNCH: No, I think the President, because the 10 President's responsibility in dealing in foreign policy is 11 even more complex, more difficult to put your finger on the 12 optimum right course, as Judge Leventhal called it, the 13 President's immunity is very great at that level. And gets to 14 the point, where as I was speaking with Mr. Justice Stevens, it 15 was probably alive with absolute immunity, as a practical 16 matter.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Lynch, let's think about World War II.
18 Assume that President Roosevelt had reason to believe that one 19 of his personal staff members who was conscientiously opposed 20 to any war was leaking information with respect to military 21 operations. Would the President's efforts to locate or iden-
22 tify that individual be political, as I think your argument
23 suggests, or would they be in connection with national security 24 and foreign policy?

25 MR. LYNCH: If it was -- if the effort was solely to

1 identify the source of the leak during World War II, I would 2 say that's a national security foreign policy problem. But if 3 the wiretaps continued for 21 months and no information, no
4 evidence of leaking had come in, then you'd begin to suspect 5 that the purpose had shifted.

6 QUESTION: So the purpose could shift, even though 7 it started out quite properly, could it?

8 MR. LYNCH: That's entirely possible. And the theory
9 of our case depends very heavily, as the Court of Appeals 10 recognized, on the various time sequences over this 21-month 11 period. It may be in fact very difficult for us to recover for 12 the first week. The petitioners may be able to make a very 13 strong good faith showing at that point. But when you get out 14 to the end of the 21 months, we think we should have a much 15 easier time to recover, assuming we get over this absolute 16 immunity hurdle.

17 One of the other interests that the Government 18 has identified as militating in favor of an absolute immunity 19 is the artfulness, or the danger of artful pleading, and the 20 fact that the President will be ensnared in insubstantial 21 lawsuits. Again, this is, the empirical evidence does not 22 support this argument, and in this case we have very solid 23 evidence to support our claims, and I think it's worth noting
24 that Judge Gesell in his concurrence proposed a higher stan-25 dard for a plaintiff's overcoming summary judgment, while he

1 advocated that higher standard he certainly didn't suggest that 2 we hadn't met it in this case.

3 The courts in our view have such, the district courts 4 have such great discretion in the timing and scheduling of 5 suits that they can use their ingenuity and the flexibility
6 that's vested in them under the Federal Rules to make accommo-7 dations for the President's time, so that if you get one of 8 these situations where the President is deeply involved in a 9 clear violation of constitutional rights and it is necessary to 10 procure this evidence, that can be done with a minimum of 11 imposition on his time.

12 If contrary to our submission the Court decides that 13 absolute immunity is appropriate for the President, we of 14 course urge the Court to reject the contention that the peti-
15 tioners Kissinger, Mitchell, and Haldeman enjoyed derivative
16 immunity. If the Court were to accept this doctrine 17 it would substantially erode the system of deterrence that 18 the Court has sought to foster in Butz. In other words, if 19 the President is free to violate constitutional rights with 20 impunity, it's essential and absolutely important that his 21 associates be constrained from doing so.

22 I think, unless the Court has further questions, I
23 don't have anything further I need to say.

24 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
