MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next in Upjohn Company v. United States.

Mr. Gribbon, I think you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF DANIEL M. GRIBBON, ESQ.,

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

MR. GRIBBON: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

A writ has been issued in this case to review the decision of the Court of Appeals of the 6th Circuit in which both in applying the attorney-client privilege and the work product rule sharply curtails the ability of a client to obtain informed legal advice.

I shall devote the bulk of my argument to that part of the decision which limits the scope of the attorney-client privilege in the case of the corporation. And thereafter I will briefly discuss what is left of the work product issue in the light of the Solicitor General's concession that the 6th Circuit erred in holding that there was no such protection in response to a summons from the Internal Revenue Service.

The court below held in the case of a corporation, the attorney-client privilege protects only communications between a limited number of corporate officials and the corporation's lawyer, those officials being the ones who have the

1 authority to act for the corporation upon such advice as is 2 given by the lawyer. In so limiting the privilege the 6th
3 Circuit associated itself with with the 3rd and the 10th Cir-
4 cuits and disagreed with the decisions of the 7th and 8th
5 Circuits. Those circuits have adopted the so-called subject 6 matter test pursuant to which the attorney-client privilege 7 extends to communications between the corporation's lawyers 8 and employees of the corporation who communicate with the 9 lawyer concerning matters within the scope of their respon-10 sibilities for the purpose of obtaining legal advice or gui-11 dance.

12 The decision of the 7th Circuit adopting this sub-13 ject matter test, Decker v. Harper & Row, was affirmed here 14 almost ten years ago by an equally divided Court. It is 15 petitioner's contention that this test, the subject matter 16 test, is more consistent with the underlying purpose of the 17 attorney-client privilege in the administration of justice.

18 Now, this case arises in these circumstances.
19 Upjohn is a manufacturer and seller of pharmaceuticals in the 20 United States and some 150 foreign countries . Early in 1976
21 Gerard Thomas, Upjohn's general counsel, who is also a director 22 and officer of the Company, was informed by the Company's 23 independent accountants that there was reason to believe that 24 some of Upjohn's foreign affiliates had made payments to or for 25 the benefit of foreign governmental officials in the promotion

1 of Upjohn business. Mr. Thomas with the advice of outside 2 counsel and with the full support of the chairman of the board
3 set about conducting an investigation to put himself in a 4 position to render legal advice to the corporation concerning 5 all aspects of these payments, including the possibility of 6 civil and criminal litigation.

7 The investigation that Mr. Thomas and outside counsel
8 conducted consisted really of two parts. One was a question-9 naire prepared by them which was sent to some 53 managers 10 of Upjohn's foreign affiliates asking them to put down on 11 paper whatever knowledge they had about possible payments to 12 or for the benefit of foreign governments. Each of these men 13 was advised that his response would be treated as confidential 14 and to this day it has been so treated.

15 Now, the second part of the investigation consisted 16 of interviews conducted by Mr. Thomas and outside counsel of 17 some 86 employees of Upjohn and its subsidiaries which had 18 responsibility of one kind or another with respect to payments 19 made in foreign countries. Some of those were within the 20 United States and some of them were outside the United States.

21 The interviewing lawyers made handwritten notes
22 during the course of those interviews. The record shows that 23 those notes reflect factual information obtained from the 24 employees as well as the lawyers' impressions, conclusions, 25 opinions, and speculations at the time.

1 Shortly after this investigation was completed,
2 Upjohn filed a Form 8-K with the Securities and Exchange 3 Commission which described in generic terms without naming 4 countries or specific amounts that there had been some payments.
5 That was the last heard from the SEC. At no time did the SEC
6 investigate or charge any kind of Securities Act violations
7 on the part of Upjohn.

8 Now, a copy of this report was simultaneously sub-9 mitted to the Internal Revenue Service. Thereupon the Service
10 commenced an investigation of Upjohn --

11 QUESTION: By the SEC or by your client?

12 MR. GRIBBON: It was submitted by my client. Upjohn
13 submitted it to the Internal Revenue Service at the same time
14 or simultaneously with the submission to the SEC. The Revenue 15 Service very shortly thereafter commenced an investigation 16 of the tax years that were involved in this report and at the 17 very outset of its investigation, before any witnesses had 18 been interrogated, any documents examined, a special agent 19 served upon Mr. Thomas the summons in question here. That 20 summons specifically asked for production of the questionnaires 21 that had been obtained from Upjohn's employees and for all of 22 the notes of interviews conducted by Upjohn.

23 QUESTION: Is it your submission, Mr. Gribbon, that 24 both items requested were work product?

25 MR. GRIBBON: Yes.

1 QUESTION: I know we're not in that aspect of the 2 case now.

3 MR. GRIBBON: They're both work product and both 4 covered by the privilege. Both work product, because they 5 were done in contemplation of litigation. At this -- and one 6 of the magistrates so found on that.

7 QUESTION: I know we're talking now about the privi-
8 lege, not about work product.

9 MR. GRIBBON: Yes.

10 QUESTION: And since I've already interrupted you, 11 quite apart from what the scope of the privilege may be in this 12 context or any other, who is the beneficiary of the privilege?

13 MR. GRIBBON: The corporation is the beneficiary.

14 QUESTION: The client?

15 MR. GRIBBON: The client; the corporation.

16 QUESTION: Not the lawyer, the client?

17 MR. GRIBBON: Yes. It is the corporation and Mr. --

18 QUESTION: So only the client would --

19 MR. GRIBBON: Only the client can assert the privi-
20 lege. And the client can reject it, waive it, or do anything 21 he wants to --

22 QUESTION: But the lawyer is the beneficiary of the 23 work product?

24 MR. GRIBBON: The lawyer is the beneficiary of the 25 work product. There is that difference. I don't think there

1 is any dispute on that one.

2 QUESTION: Right. All right.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Gribbon, while we have you inter-4 rupted, does the record show how many of the interviewees have 5 been talked to by the Government?

6 MR. GRIBBON: The record shows it to this extent, 7 at the time the summons was issued some 25 of the 86 inter-8 viewees had been talked to by the Service. I am informed that 9 since that time approximately 20 more have been talked to, so 10 that a number, but less than half, have been interrogated by 11 the Internal Revenue Service.

12 QUESTION: So that the Service has found a way to 13 get to them?

14 MR. GRIBBON: Well, they should have. They appar-15 ently are not satisfied that they have found a way, and this 16 is really the point I want to make here, that during the 17 course of this investigation and before an action was filed in 18 court to enforce the summons, Upjohn cooperated with the 19 Internal Revenue Service and really gave them everything they 20 could reasonably ask for except the questionnaires and the 21 lawyers' notes, and responded to almost 300 document requests.
22 They gave them a list of the people who had been interviewed 23 and had submitted questionnaires, told them what their posi-
24 tions were, cooperated in permitting them to be examined.

25 On one point they did have a difference with the

1 Revenue Service. That is, Upjohn's lawyers took the position 2 that they instructed their witnesses not to respond to ques-
3 tions that did not have an impact on Upjohn's United States 4 income tax returns.

5 Now, the Revenue Service never did pursue that 6 matter. They never sought the summons directed to the 7 witness and indeed subsequently the Service in a published 8 opinion just really acquiesced, substantially, in that position, 9 that is, the scope of the inquiry of the Internal Revenue
10 Service, something that has to do with U.S. income taxes.

11 Ultimately, of course, this action was filed in 12 court seeking to enforce the summons directed at the ques-13 tionnaire and the interview notes.

14 QUESTION: Mr. Gribbon, one minor detail. Did you 15 give them the blank questionnaire?

16 MR. GRIBBON: Yes. They have the blank questionnaire 17 and the --

18 QUESTION: But no answers yet?

19 MR. GRIBBON: No answers. The District Court adopted 20 the view of a magistrate to whom he had referred this matter.
21 which held that the control group test should apply as far 22 as the attorney-client privilege was concerned, and further 23 that none of the people who had been interviewed or sent 24 questionnaires were within the control group. He also found 25 that there had been a showing of need on the part of the

1 Service for the work product and directed that all of the 2 interviews and questionnaires be turned over to the Internal 3 Revenue Service.

4 The Court of Appeals affirmed the finding of the 5 District Court and the magistrate so far as the control group 6 test was concerned. It did remand for a determination as to 7 whether any members of this group could be regarded as within 8 the control group. So far as the work product is concerned, 9 in a footnote it rather cursorily said, there is no work 10 product when it comes to answering a summons from the Internal 11 Revenue Service. Now, that is the portion of the opinion 12 which the Solicitor General has conceded is in error.

13 Now, on brief -- I'll treat this briefly -- the 14 Solicitor General has tendered two reasons why he says, 15 despite the grant of the writ the Court should not resolve 16 the scope of the attorney-client privilege. I submit that 17 neither of these, neither of which was mentioned in his 18 acquiescence in the grant of the writ that neither of them 19 has merit.

20 It is now urged that the investigation conducted 21 by Mr. Thomas, Upjohn's general counsel, with the assistance 22 of outside counsel, was not for the purpose of rendering 23 legal advice. Now, this contention was not even advanced by 24 any of the government people in the courts below. The magis-25 trate found, as did both the District Court and the Court of

1 Appeals, that the purpose of the investigation was to put 2 Mr. Thomas in the position to render legal advice to the 3 corporation with respect to all of these matters. And that 4 finding is amply supported by the record and there is no
5 evidence to the contrary.

6 QUESTION: If Mr. Thomas, even though he'd gone to 7 law school were, say, vice president in charge of personnel, 8 and had sent out this questionnaire, would --

9 MR. GRIBBON: I don't think the privilege would 10 apply.

11 QUESTION: So when does it apply?

12 MR. GRIBBON: When he's acting in his legal capacity.

13 QUESTION: Not to any --

14 MR. GRIBBON: Not in non-legal capacities.
15 Now: this -- he can have some non-legal duties. It 16 seems to me that in this case, when the chair-17 man says to him, look, this may be troublesome. Go out and 18 find out what you can about it and tell us what our legal 19 situation is.

20 QUESTION: Well, tell us what the factual situation 21 is. Or his personal situation is.

22 MR. GRIBBON: NO -- and advice.

23 QUESTION: That was the purpose of the inquiry,
24 wasn't it? And that could have been delegated, at least argu-
25 ably, just as well to the vice-president in charge of finance?

1 MR. GRIBBON: I think conceivably, at least as far 2 as human beings are concerned --

3 QUESTION: Even though that vice president might be 4 a member of the bar somewhere, he wouldn't be acting as a 5 lawyer. He was getting factual information.

6 MR. GRIBBON: But I think that Mr. Thomas as a 7 trained lawyer and the Company's chief lawyer, particularly 8 with the assistance of outside counsel, was in a far better 9 position to ask the right questions and to get the answers, and 10 to formulate what was necessary for him to give the corporation 11 truly decent legal advice.

12 QUESTION: Weren't they factual inquiries?

13 MR. GRIBBON: They were factual, largely, but inqui-14 ries as to when did you do it, who was present, were you aware 15 of the laws, things of that kind, the very things that a law-16 yer would do when a client walks into the office and says, 17 I may be in trouble here.

18 QUESTION: Other people might do it too.

19 MR. GRIBBON: But I don't think they do it as well, 20 Your Honor, and that's why the privilege has been given to the 21 lawyer and not to the financial adviser.

22 QUESTION: What did you do, and when did you do it?

23 MR. GRIBBON: No, that's a preliminary question, but 24 in asking him what he does he maybe comes up with something.
25 Well, I was there, I wasn't there, so-and-so was there, three

1 other people were there. In all legal investigations there 2 are factual inquiries.

3 QUESTION: Are you saying that the first thing a 4 lawyer should do when he is confronted with a problem by a 5 client is to get the facts?

6 MR. GRIBBON: I am, Your Honor.

7 QUESTION: And then he can't have any opinion about 8 the law until he has some facts to which to apply the law?

9 MR. GRIBBON: Or any opinion he has about the law
10 without the necessary facts isn't worth very much.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Gribbon, what if the general counsel 12 without the authorization of the board simply felt that 13 there's something wrong here and I'm going to blow the whistle
14 on this board because I think they're covering up some stuff, 15 and went around and conducted exactly the same interviews?
16 Would you claim the same privilege for him then?

17 MR. GRIBBON: If he was acting for the corporation 18 and I think in the case you have given he would be acting for 19 the best interests of the corporation, I think the corporation
20 would have the privilege. Now, he wouldn't be able to waive 21 it, but the corporation would have the privilege for whatever 22 materials and whatever opinions and whatever impressions he 23 gathered with respect to his inquiry.

24 QUESTION: What would happen if you get two corpo-
25 rations and one gets his general counsel to do it and another

1 one gets its vice president who is not a lawyer to do the 2 exact same thing? One's governed by one rule and the other 3 is not.

4 MR. GRIBBON: I think the indications are that in 5 that situation where a senior official not a lawyer did the 6 job that no privilege would attach.

7 QUESTION: And then the next corporation did the 8 exact same thing with a man who happened to be a member of the 9 bar?

10 MR. GRIBBON: More than a member of the bar?

11 QUESTION: The same question now.

12 MR. GRIBBON: A trained lawyer.

13 QUESTION: The same questionnaire.

14 MR. GRIBBON: But I say -- well, it might be or it 15 might not. That's --

16 QUESTION: To the client it would be the same.

17 MR. GRIBBON: Well, if you'd --

18 QUESTION: If you buy that, you're going to be in 19 trouble. I can't hold you to it. I can't hold you.

20 MR. GRIBBON: If a finance president can do exactly 21 the same job that a trained lawyer can do, then I have to 22 go along with your answer. But the theory on which the privilege 23 has been there, the theory on which lawyers work is that they 24 bring some insight, they bring some skill to this matter, in 25 developing the facts and in forming opinions that can't be

1 done by the personnel director or by the financial vice presi-
2 dent or even by the --

3 QUESTION: I'm glad to see somebody else recognize 4 the difference between a lawyer and a member of the bar.
5 Thank you.

6 QUESTION: Mr. Gribbon, supposing when he got all 7 through when his investigation, he said to the president, my 8 advice to you is to fire the ten branch managers. Would the 9 privilege survive?

10 MR. GRIBBON: I think the privilege would survive as 11 to the communications. I'm not sure that there's privilege on 12 the advice, fire the 10 managers. But I think on the communi-13 cations that the managers I presume you're speaking of, Your 14 Honor, may --

15 QUESTION: What I'm really inquiring is, how do we 16 know whether the advice that this executive, who is both a 17 lawyer and an executive, gives is properly considered legal 18 advice, because it may well be kind of a blend of management 19 and legal advice?

20 MR. GRIBBON: Well, I suppose that's probably true 21 even if an outside counsel had done it entirely. We're not in 22 airtight compartments. But in this case, where there clearly 23 were legal problems, not only domestic tax problems, SEC
24 problems, shareholder suits, but local problems in the country
25 in which they were operating, you clearly needed a trained

1 lawyer to find the facts and assess them. And that's what 2 Mr. Thomas did. I suppose the ultimate answer to what you're 3 suggesting is an in camera examination by a judge to see whe-4 ther the matters that were here are privileged or not.
5 I think most judges prefer not to do that and I think in this 6 case it wasn't necessary and it wasn't done. But on the face
7 of it, what Mr. Thomas assisted by outside counsel was doing 8 was a lawyer's job and not -- he's not a financial man anyway.

9 QUESTION: But this is -- this wasn't the rationale
10 below, I take it, whether it was legal advice or not?

11 MR. GRIBBON: No.

12 QUESTION: But the Government would like to make 13 it --

14 MR. GRIBBON: The Government now feels that they'd 15 like to back away from the scope question by saying it wasn't 16 legal advice. That's a rather late entry in the matter and 17 I submit that it is clearly on this record in both the 18 courts below and the magistrate, who were not particularly 19 sympathetic to Upjohn's position, assumed and found that it 20 was legal advice.

21 QUESTION: Do you think the Government is entitled to 22 make, as a respondent entitled to make this argument? Or would 23 it change their relief?

24 MR. GRIBBON: I think they're probably entitled.
25 I believe under the decisions of this Court they can make

1 almost any kind of an argument of this kind.

2 QUESTION: Unless it would expand their relief.

3 MR. GRIBBON: No, I don't think it would, necessar-
4 ily. It's just another ground. I raise it because I think 5 their tardiness in bringing it forth is a very good indication 6 of the validity of the argument that they're putting to you.

7 QUESTION: Well, they couldn't rely on it at all if 8 they had not preserved it on their appeal from the District
9 Court to the Court of Appeals.

10 MR. GRIBBON: Well, they didn't, they didn't preserve 11 the matter of whether it was legal advice or not. That came 12 into the case in the Supreme Court in the respondent's brief.
13 Now, the graver point, the second point, was made by the 14 Government below but it was rejected by the Court of Appeals.
15 The second reason they have suggested for not getting to the 16 scope of the privilege is that Upjohn by cooperating with the 17 Internal Revenue Service and giving them various facts 18 regarding these payments waived the privilege. And to that 19 one, the law is clear that it is only when you give up communi-20 cations that you are in a position to waiver, and not simply 21 when you give facts that may have been disclosed, may have been 22 obtained, even in the course of an investigation. But on 23 that one the Court of Appeals did find against them, and there 24 was nothing in their response to the Petition for cert. which 25 said anything about that point.

1 In that respect, the lower federal courts have re-
2 cently in a number of opinions said that where a corporation
3 or anybody else is voluntarily cooperating with the law en-4 forcement authorities, that that in and of itself would not 5 be regarded as a waiver of whatever privilege that they might 6 have.

7 But, basically, the waiver comes down to waiving 8 something that was communicated, and that wasn't done here.
9 I submit, therefore, that the Court should proceed to resolve 10 this matter of the scope of the privilege which has bred con-11 fusion in the lower courts for about 20 years now.

12 And while this case involves a corporation, I submit 13 there is no reason in principle why what is decided here should 14 not be equally applicable to any other organization whose 15 structure is such that many people can act for it and bind it, 16 but only a relatively few are able to make the decisions.

17 Now, examples of such organizations would be agencies
18 of the Federal Government, labor unions, fraternal organiza-
19 tions. This point is particularly emphasized in the brief 20 filed here on behalf of the Federal Bar Association, which 21 points out that agencies of the Federal Government will be 22 handicapped in their ability to carry on if this control group 23 test as adopted by the lower court is to be adopted by this 24 Court.

25 It's been generally agreed that the justification for

1 the privilege is to promote observance of the law and 2 effective administration of justice. It does this by permit-
3 ting attorneys to be and become fully informed of the relevant 4 facts. As this Court earlier this year in the Trammell case, 5 in discussing the attorney-client privilege, said, that the 6 basis for it is to permit the lawyer to know everything about 7 the client's reasons for seeking representation if his pro-
8 fessional mission is to be carried out.

9 Corporations -- certainly no less and I submit, to a 10 greater extent than individuals -- require legal advice.
11 Most of the business of this country is conducted by corpora-
12 tions. They are daily met with a maze of laws and regulations.
13 I would note that the interest of the bar which is shown here 14 by briefs filed in support of petitioners' position should not 15 be taken to mean that the scope of the attorney-client privi-16 lege is merely a convenience for lawyers in the practice of 17 their profession. If the control group test were to be 18 adopted, I am sure there will be a great deal of professional 19 frustration on the part of lawyers in trying to advise corpo-20 rations.

21 But the real losers, if that test is applied, is not 22 going to be the lawyers. It's the clients who need legal 23 guidance, corporations, government agencies, and other organiza-
24 tions of that kind where the authority is greatly diffused 25 and yet where individuals without authority can certainly bind

1 the corporation.

2 QUESTION: Do you think it would have a tendency to 3 lead lawyers to write less and have long distance telephone 4 calls more?

5 MR. GRIBBON: I think it would, Your Honor. I can't 6 say certainly that it would but it seems to me that if every-7 thing they do in advising their client is going to be turned 8 over to their adversary, it's just human nature that they're 9 going to be more careful, which is unfortunate. They should 10 be candid at all times. The ethics call for them to be can-11 did. And what's going to happen if their intimate conver-12 sations with clients and from the lawyer's point of view, these 13 employees, whether they're decision makers or not, are clients, 14 because they are giving them facts that are necessary for the 15 lawyer to have in order to advise the corporation.

16 Two reasons, basically, as I understand it in all 17 that has been written about the control group test since 18 Judge Kirkpatrick first set it out about 20 years ago, two 19 reasons appear to be what come forward as the reason why the 20 control group test should be adopted.

21 First of these is simply that there's no necessity 22 for it. It is argued that corporate employees, unlike 23 other individuals, will speak candidly, voluntarily, whether 24 there's a privilege or not. They don't have the apprehensions 25 of ordinary individuals, or if they do, they will subordinate

1 them to the will of the superior officer.

2 Now, I think one looks back at the privilege itself 3 insofar as an individual is concerned, it probably never could 4 be established that in fact the privilege is necessary in order
5 to encourage people to be candid and frank with their lawyers.
6 There are a lot of reasons apart from the privilege which would 7 indicate such candor. On the other hand experience shows that many 8 people do not speak candidly. For a couple of centuries we 9 have embraced the notion that it is helpful not to the indi-10 viduals involved but to the effective administration of 11 justice to encourage people, all kinds of people, to be com-12 pletely candid by letting them know that what they say to 13 their lawyer is not going to be used the next day against 14 them.

15 So therefore, I think the no necessity argument 16 really is without merit. It is true, as the proponents of 17 the control test urge, that the employee does not get complete 18 protection. The protection the client protects, the privilege 19 is not his, it's the corporation's. That is true, of course, 20 not only of the subordinate employees but also of the manage-
21 ment employees. And just because they're management today 22 doesn't mean that they're going to be management tomorrow, 23 because the directors are not going to waive that privilege.
24 The privilege is for the benefit of the corporation. But in 25 this respect the employees are in this position of tension

1 between their individual likes and dislikes and those of the 2 organizations to which they belong, but it's not at all 3 unique --

4 QUESTION: Well, isn't there tension in more ways
5 than one here, isn't there? Because the corporation as you
6 describe it is a very abstract entity and the board 7 of directors are human beings who may have tensions and con-8 flicting interests themselves.

9 MR. GRIBBON: I think that's right. I didn't mean to 10 suggest it was so abstract, but there are a lot of different 11 people that are involved and ultimately, I presume, the share-12 holders. And in some instances shareholders have come in 13 and waived the privilege. That isn't so likely in a big, 14 publicly held corporation, but it's not impossible. And cer-15 tainly the directors, certainly a new management can come in, 16 so that on this ground there is really no solid basis for 17 distinguishing between the subordinate employees who fairly 18 frequently will have the facts that are necessary to give 19 informed information, and the top management people. Neither 20 group has complete protection in the way that an individual 21 does. But they do have some protection, and experience shows 22 that it has been exceedingly helpful in obtaining their 23 cooperation and experience shows that in most instances the 24 corporation does not lightly waive that privilege. It behaves 25 as Upjohn is behaving here, zealously guarding the privilege

1 of some 80 employees throughout the world.

2 The second argument that is made for the control
3 group test is something in the nature of saying that it hides 4 facts from discovery and it also enables the top management to 5 close its eyes to disagreeable facts. Now, as to the discovery 6 argument, I submit, though it has often been made it is without 7 merit, because the privilege does not hide facts from dis-
8 covery. Indeed, Rule 33 of the Federal Rules requires that a 9 corporation go on out and get all the facts that all of its 10 employees have, so that if you work under the rules you can 11 get all these facts. All that is hidden, all that is kept 12 from disclosure, is the communication.

13 Indeed, in this case the Internal Revenue Service --

14 QUESTION: The privilege generally carries both the 15 communications from the client to the lawyer as well as the 16 advice that the lawyer gives the client, isn't that correct?
17 It's a two-way communication between the two, isn't it?

18 MR. GRIBBON: Generally speaking -- yes, on the 19 theory that the lawyer can't really give the advice without 20 incorporating some of the facts.

21 QUESTION: Without having factual knowledge. So 22 the privilege, quite apart again from the particular scope of 23 the privilege with respect to a corporate client, the privilege 24 generally covers the two-way communications between lawyer and 25 client?

1 MR. GRIBBON: Yes, Your Honor. And that is the way
2 that we would have it interpreted here. And I was going to 3 say that in this case, rather than hindering the Internal 4 Revenue Service in its efforts, what Upjohn has given to the 5 Internal Revenue Service as a result of this precautionary 6 investigation that it undertook, has given them an ideal 7 road map to the repositories of the information. It hasn't 8 given them the lawyers' analysis of the facts, or the impres-
9 sions they had but it has certainly given them everything 10 short of that, and in most instances that's one of the risks 11 that a corporation takes when it embarks on an investigation 12 of this sort.

13 Now, so far as insulating the top management from 14 disagreeable facts, I submit that that is sheer speculation.
15 There was no evidence of that in this case, there's no evi-16 dence in any other case that's been cited that that is likely 17 to be the fact. It's true that the top management doesn't 18 know all the facts of corporate actions. But that isn't the 19 result of the privilege or the lack of the privilege. That 20 reflects the breadth and complexity of the modern corporation's 21 activities. And surely there may be some changes in corporate 22 governments; it's been under discussion for a long time. But 23 I would submit that whatever changes are made in the rela-24 tions between shareholders, directors, public bodies, the 25 public interest is still going to require that observance of

1 the law and the efficient administration of the justice are 2 best served by having a corporation get a full opportunity to 3 have informed legal advice.

4 For all the reasons I've submitted, the subject mat-
5 ter test rather than the control group test stands the best 6 chance of achieving those objectives.

7 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Wallace?

8 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAWRENCE G. WALLACE, ESQ.,

9 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

10 MR. WALLACE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please
11 the Court:

12 The principal question before the Court is how to 13 accommodate the attorney-client privilege to the corporate 14 form of doing business.

15 Analytically, at one logical extreme, the privilege 16 would not apply at all to corporations, because it's only 17 the corporation who is the client and it is only to the entity 18 that the lawyer owes his professional responsibility and the 19 communications by necessity are with individuals to whom the 20 lawyer does not owe this kind of fiduciary responsibility.

21 We do not advocate this approach to it, but this is 22 one analytical, logical extreme. At the other logical extreme, 23 all communications between an attorney for the entity and any 24 employee of the entity would be privileged. Because the entity 25 can communicate only through its employees, this would result

1 in a much more expansive scope of the privilege in the corpo-
2 rate form of doing business than what we understand the privi-
3 lege to be with respect to employees of a proprietorship or 4 of a partnership and indeed, what the Court in Hickman v. Tay-
5 lor understood the scope of the privilege to be with respect 6 to employees of a partnership.

7 QUESTION: Doesn't the privilege extend to any agent
8 of a client who's acting as an agent of the client?

9 MR. WALLACE: Acting as an agent. But there is con-
10 siderable ambiguity in the law about that. I really planned 11 to get to that a little bit later on, but there's a difference 12 between acting as an agent and communicating what the client 13 knows and wishes to communicate. The graphic example is the 14 translator, or a communication from the agent who is --

15 QUESTION: Imparting his own impressions.

16 MR. WALLACE: -- himself -- imparting his own
17 knowledge that the client may not know.

18 QUESTION: Which the principal may not know.

19 MR. WALLACE: That is correct. And there has been 20 much confusion in analysis about this.

21 Between the two extremes that I have posed, no ap-22 proach to accommodating the privilege to the corporate form of 23 doing business is without some analytical inconsistency.
24 And yet we think that a reasonable accommodation should be 25 made, and that the privilege does apply, and the courts have

1 strained to make a reasonable accommodation.

2 QUESTION: We're dealing here only with a proposed 3 evidentiary rule in the federal courts. Is that correct?

4 MR. WALLACE: That is correct, Mr. Justice, under 5 Rule 501 of the Rules of Evidence this Court and the other 6 federal courts are to apply the common law interpreted in the 7 light of reason and experience to federal question cases.

8 QUESTION: And that's -- those are the metes and 9 bounds of our inquiry.

10 MR. WALLACE: That is the metes and bounds. Now, 11 there is an attraction for the legal profession, one might 12 even say a temptation, to take an expansive view of this par-
13 ticular privilege, a view that would encourage communication 14 as much as possible to attorneys and thus enable them to 15 improve their representation of clients, and incidentally 16 reduce the possibilities that they may have to be in the 17 capacity of witnesses at any time.

18 QUESTION: Can a lawyer from whom advice is sought 19 properly perform his function if there isn't a complete 20 and free flow of information, factual material from the 21 client to the attorney, whether it's a corporation, an indi-22 vidual, or whatever?

23 MR. WALLACE: Well, the lawyer has to get information
24 from whatever sources he can and of course --

25 QUESTION: But isn't the primary source the client

1 in most cases?

2 MR. WALLACE: It is the primary source, but the 3 point I was about to make, Mr. Chief Justice, was that indeed 4 the information that the lawyer is able to secure and the 5 services that he would be able to perform for the client
6 would be enhanced if the privilege were to extend to third 7 party witnesses that the lawyer wants to interview in doing 8 the client's business, and it has never been contended that 9 the privilege extends that far.

10 Our position is that the proper starting point in 11 approaching the question of how best to accommodate it is the 12 starting point that this Court has used with respect to all 13 privileges, and that is that the public has the right to 14 every man's evidence and that each privilege should be con-
15 strued no more broadly than necessary to protect the weighty 16 and legitimate competing interest. This is the approach that 17 has been used in construing the President's executive privi-18 lege and construing privileges asserted on behalf of the 19 press --

20 QUESTION: Well, you don't have to go outside of 21 the attorney-client field for a precedent, do you? How about 22 Cardozo's opinion in United States v. Clark, where he says that 23 if the information communicated suggests fraud or crime, it's 24 not privileged.

25 MR. WALLACE: Well, indeed, in a more recent opinion

1 this Court said that the same principle applies to this 2 privilege and to the legal profession, and that is an issue 3 against the United States. From this starting point, and with 4 a view toward the need to encourage legal advice to corpora-
5 tions and to encourage corporate self-regulation and with a 6 view toward concerns of the Federal Government itself, we 7 concluded after a survey of the views of a large number of 8 government agencies -- I might say, an unusually large number 9 in preparing the brief for this Court -- to ask this Court to 10 adopt the so-called control group test which has been the pre-11 valent approach in this area. And I might add that no agency 12 that we consulted dissented from this conclusion.

13 QUESTION: I suppose whatever evidentiary rule is 14 established in this case would be -- arguably, at least, 15 equally applicable to a governmental agency, wouldn't it, 16 federal governmental agency?

17 MR. WALLACE: Well, we understand this.

18 QUESTION: Well, wouldn't it be? That's a question.

19 MR. WALLACE: I'm not sure of that.

20 QUESTION: I'm not sure either.

21 MR. WALLACE: We're willing to make the argument 22 of whether or not that is the case.

23 QUESTION: But it wasn't in that connection that 24 you conducted an investigation or an inquiry among the various 25 agencies?

1 MR. WALLACE: It was about the position to take with 2 respect to corporations. There was some awareness that the 3 decision here might affect privilege within the Government, 4 but it -- that's affected by so many other laws at this point,
5 Mr. Justice, that we're not sure that it would have a meaning-6 full impact.

7 In any event, in all candor, the agency that showed 8 the most interest in the question, outside of the Department 9 of Justice, was the Securities and Exchange Commission, which 10 is not concerned about disclosures from itself.

11 Now, the advantages that we see in the control 12 group test include in no small measure its simplicity and its 13 flexibility, its adaptability to the situation of the particu-
14 lar legal advice being sought, and the particular information 15 being secured. And we regard it as a proper analog to the 16 application of the privilege in a non-corporate context.
17 Speaking of its simplicity, unlike the other tests that have 18 been proposed, where there seems to be constant discussion of 19 possible qualifications or refinements, the control group
20 test has remained unchanged since its original formulation
21 by Judge Kirkpatrick in 1962 in a case which we quoted, page 37
22 of our brief, the City of Philadelphia v. Westinghouse Corpora-
23 tion. It's the test that has been adopted by the Uniform
24 Rules of Evidence, which six states have adopted by statute
25 during the 1970s. And while some other states have taken a

1 different view in their judicial decisions, it has been the 2 prevalent view in the federal courts as well as perhaps the 3 prevalent view in the states. Many of the states -- some 4 specifically to this question.

5 QUESTION: Did the Proposed Rules of Evidence for 6 the Federal Courts prior to their amendment in Congress take 7 a position on this?

8 MR. WALLACE: The -- a draft originally had a 9 control group test but after this Court's 4-to-4 affirmance in 10 the Harper case, that was changed to not to try to resolve 11 it, just to leave the question unresolved.

12 QUESTION: So that's the way it went to Congress?

13 MR. WALLACE: That's the way it went to Congress.
14 I think directly because of this Court's decision.

15 Indeed, the 8th Circuit's en banc decision in 16 Diversified Industries in 1977 referred to the control group 17 test which that court was rejecting as the most widely used 18 test, and the test that predominates. That's on page 608 of 19 Volume 572 of the Federal Reporter, 2d, which is another way 20 of saying that perhaps that is the test that reflects the 21 common law at that time, which the Court of course is free to 22 interpret in light of reason and experience in applying Section 23 501. The main thing that has happened since that decision of 24 the 8th Circuit is that two more Courts of Appeals 25 have spoken on the subject. And both of them have adopted the control group test.

1 The court below is the second of these. The first 2 of the courts to do this was the 3rd Circuit in 1979 in an 3 opinion by Chief Judge Seitz, a former chancellor of the 4 State of Delaware, who is certainly one of the most informed 5 judges on the federal bench about the realities of corporate 6 life, and of corporate legal practice. In our view --

7 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, can I just ask one background
8 question? You suggest this is more or less the common law 9 test, by virtue of history, am I not correct in remembering 10 that Judge Kirkpatrick's opinion is the first announcement of 11 this test?

12 MR. WALLACE: You are correct, Mr. Justice.

13 QUESTION: And it was a replacement, or at the time
14 it was being considered as -- an alternative that was con-
15 sidered was the Radiant Burners test of no privilege at all.
16 So there isn't really any law in common law that supports it.

17 MR. WALLACE: There's not a law in common law but we 18 have to under Section 501 use whatever common law has been 19 developed.

20 QUESTION: Well, what was the test or was there be-21 fore that, before the control group test was invented?

22 MR. WALLACE: Other than what Mr. Justice Stevens 23 has suggested, the possibility that there was no privilege at 24 all, there really hadn't been developed any test in the 25 corporate context. Indeed --

1 QUESTION: Well, has it been denied?

2 MR. WALLACE: I'm not aware of it, Mr. Justice.

3 QUESTION: Well, in one case, the Radiant Burners
4 case, denied it, and that was rejected.

5 MR. WALLACE: Other than Radiant Burner I'm not 6 aware of early law on the question. The canons of ethics and 7 most legal writings have proceeded on the assumption that you 8 know who the client is and it's the communications from the cli-9 ent that are privileged and have given scant attention to this 10 problem of the client as an entity other than to say that the 11 lawyer's duties are to the entity.

12 QUESTION: Is it appropriate or necessary that we 13 fish or cut bait right at this moment in view of the wording 14 of the rules? I mean, do we have to choose for all time be-15 tween one and the other in every given possible situation?

16 MR. WALLACE: Not necessarily, but it's hard for me 17 to see how the rationale adopted won't cut one way or the 18 other.

19 QUESTION: Well, but common law developed over three 20 or four centuries and it certainly grew by accretion.

21 MR. WALLACE: Yes, that is correct. It's possible 22 that the Court's decision here could be distinguished in some 23 way in a future case, depending on how it's written, but 24 nothing has occurred to me that wouldn't require the Court to 25 consider the rationale of the two principal tests that have been developed, other than the alternative grounds for

1 affirmance, which we have raised. But we're not urging the 2 Court to avoid the principal question on which it granted
3 certiorari. We felt constrained to raise them in our analysis 4 of what was presented here.

5 Now, I'd like with the Court's permission to turn --

6 QUESTION: May I ask one other question -- two kind 7 of factual questions, if I may.

8 First of all, do you have the identity of the people
9 who received the questionnaires for the Government?

10 MR. WALLACE: I believe so.

11 QUESTION: Is there any reason why the Government
12 couldn't have -- it has the questionnaire, I understand.
13 It couldn't have just sent the same questionnaire to all these 14 people? I was wondering what --

15 MR. WALLACE: If we have the current addresses. I'm 16 not sure we have the current addresses. Some of them are no 17 longer employed by the Company, but we could send them. But 18 they would not be under legal compulsion to answer them, nor 19 would we have any way of knowing whether the answers are the 20 same as the answers that they gave to Mr. Thomas.

21 QUESTION: No, but presumably they'd be truthful 22 answers; that's all.

23 MR. WALLACE: If they were answered. There is 24 testimony to the effect that the Company has instructed them 25 not to disclose anything except with respect to those

1 transactions that the Company has decided bear on the Company's 2 tax liabilities.

3 The problem with these payments is that for the 4 most part they're to third persons -- and what the Company was 5 trying to -- rather than to government officials. And the 6 Company was trying to find out, according to its testimony, 7 whether those were legitimate commissions to non-governmental 8 persons or whether those persons were in effect a conduit for 9 payment to a public official.

10 And the Company having sorted out for itself, is 11 asking the Internal Revenue Service to accept its judgment 12 about which ones may be pertinent to its tax liability.

13 QUESTION: May I also ask, on the interview aspect 14 of the inquiry, it's the Government's view, I gather, that if 15 these people had been, say, grand jury witnesses or something 16 like that, but junior employees, but they were interviewed 17 after testifying before a grand jury for the purpose of 18 advising the corporation as to what position to take in 19 response to a pending indictment, something like that, there'd 20 be no privilege attached to those interviews? Because the 21 people, by hypothesis, were not -- the witnesses would not be 22 in the control group.

23 The fact that it's a tax investigation
24 isn't particularly important in your analysis. The relevant 25 test is what I'm asking.

1 MR. WALLACE: I think that is correct. That is 2 correct. The opinion of the 3rd Circuit, to which I want to 3 commend the Court's attention, is to us the most penetrating 4 opinion written in this field, because it refers to and 5 responds to all of the authorities on which the petitioners 6 rely here in advocating that it's time for the control group 7 test to be abandoned, and responds, we think, in a very con-8 vincing way. And if I may, I'd like to refer briefly to some 9 excerpts from Chief Judge Seitz's opinion for the 3rd Circuit, 10 interspersed with some comments of our own.

11 QUESTION: Does this direct itself to both the 12 privilege and to the work product?

13 MR. WALLACE: It does not relate to the work 14 product question, although work product is referred to in 15 the course of the discussion.

16 And the first thing that the Court of Appeals 17 recognizes is that criticism of the control group test usually 18 begins with the observation that in the corporate setting the 19 people who know the relevant facts and the people who make the 20 decisions are seldom the same. And if an attorney is to give 21 sound advice to the control group, he must secure information 22 from outside the control group.

23 And the Court says, "Although we agree that an attor-
24 ney often needs to secure information from lower echelon 25 employees, we are not convinced that extension of the corpora-

1 tion's attorney-client privilege would enhance his or her
2 ability to secure that information. The confidentiality offer-
3 ed to non-control group employees would be quite illusory 4 from their standpoint, because they have no control over the 5 privilege itself. Their communications remain confidential 6 only in the sense that they are not released to outsiders, and 7 only as long as the corporate control group desires to assert 8 the privilege.

9 "If the employees had engaged in questionable activity 10 the corporation clearly would have the power to waive the 11 privilege and to turn the employees' statements over to law 12 enforcement officials.

13 "Privilege or no privilege, lower level employees
14 would confide in corporate counsel at their own risk. Con-
15 versely, where no questionable activity is involved, non-con-
16 trol group employees have little reason not to relate informa-17 tion to corporate counsel, especially where a superior has 18 instructed them to do so."

19 Now, this seems to us to be directly relevant to 20 the usual approach of trying to determine whether a substantial 21 and weighty competing interest requires a privilege to be 22 more broadly construed than its applicability to those who 23 have the authority to seek the advice of counsel, to act on the 24 advice that is sought, and indeed to waive the privilege.

25 Ordinarily, in a lawyer-client relationship, the

1 attorney can disclose the confidential communication to no one 2 else. Here you start off on the premise that it's being 3 secured in order to be disclosed to other higher officials in 4 the corporation, or in this case, perhaps, to be acted on by 5 the general counsel himself in one of his other capacities.

6 QUESTION: Would you think that in some circum-7 stances, Mr. Wallace, the lawyer would be precluded from even 8 conceding or responding with an answer that he was representing 9 the client?

10 MR. WALLACE: Well, that is what the American Bar 11 Association is now struggling with in revising the Code of 12 Ethics that was adopted as recently as 1970, but one of the 13 shortcomings that the committee working on them now has found 14 is that it doesn't adequately address this problem of who is 15 the client, and the draft now being circulated includes a 16 provision for giving a so-called Miranda-type warning to the 17 employee when counsel is interviewing the employee so that the 18 employee knows that he's not really going to have the benefits 19 of the confidential communication.

20 QUESTION: Well, I'm thinking of a situation specifi-21 cally where a government agent would come to a lawyer and say, 22 I want to talk to you about this client, naming the client.
23 And first, I understand you are representing this man or this 24 company. Is the lawyer free or not free to say, I will not 25 discuss anything with you including whether I am or whether I

1 am not representing him?

2 MR. WALLACE: My understanding is that the attorney-
3 client privilege never has extended to the fact of representa-4 tion, that it did not protect from disclosure whether or not 5 the attorney represented the individual. That has been my 6 understanding. It isn't a matter that we looked into with 7 reference to this case.

8 QUESTION: Well, surely, many lawyers have acted on 9 that assumption that they would not respond to any questions 10 about whether they represented a given client.

11 MR. WALLACE: If they did, they were in error, 12 Mr. Chief Justice. But as I say, it's not a matter we looked 13 into with reference to this case. The attorney in this case 14 is the attorney for the corporation.

15 QUESTION: But it bears on how far the relationship 16 can be penetrated, does it not? They can be --

17 MR. WALLACE: I always thought that it did not extend 18 either to the identity of the client or to the fees, if I 19 recollect the law correctly.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, under the subject matter 21 test, if the lawyer makes the investigation and collects the 22 statements from the witnesses and then writes an opinion letter 23 to a member of the control group who asked him to do it, and 24 who had told the employees to cooperate, he writes a letter
25 but he attaches all the statements. Are those statements

1 privileged in the hands of the member of the control group
2 from discovery from that member by the Government?

3 MR. WALLACE: I think that's an arguable question 4 under the subject matter test. You posited the question under 5 the subject matter test.

6 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, suppose a member of the 7 control group himself had carried out the investigation and 8 had collected all the statements from the witnesses, surely 9 you could get them then? .

10 MR. WALLACE: Surely.

11 QUESTION: But instead he tells the lawyer to gather 12 them, and the lawyer gathers them and then gives them to the 13 control group member.

14 MR. WALLACE: Well, we would certainly want to argue 15 that using the attorney as a conduit in that fashion would not 16 insulate from discovery, what would otherwise be discoverable.

17 QUESTION: And you'd say that, Mr. Wallace, under 18 under either test?

19 MR. WALLACE: Under either test we would make that 20 argument.

21 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, this question arises, I sup-22 pose, most frequently, or at least frequently, not in the 23 international context of this case but rather in the more 24 mundane case of a truck owned by the corporation getting in-25 volved in an automobile accident or a products liability claim

1 or something like that, in which the lawyer is going to talk
2 to the employees of the corporation that are directly involved,
3 and probably the top officers or directors of the corporation
4 don't know or care anything about that particular lawsuit.
5 How would your test apply there? How would either test apply 6 there?

7 MR. WALLACE: Well, one has to inquire who it is 8 that has the authority to ask for the legal advice and to --

9 QUESTION: Well, a lawyer represents the corporation
10 and the corporation will be liable under respondeat superior 11 if it's found that its agent was liable in driving the truck, 12 or if its product was what caused harm.

13 MR. WALLACE: Well, I think the control group with 14 respect to that question is whoever in the corporation has the 15 authority to direct counsel as to what to do in the case, 16 whether to settle for a certain figure or to litigate, or 17 something.

18 QUESTION: Well, nobody directs -- the foreman, the 19 man's foreman just said, our lawyer is Joe Smith, call him, 20 Mr. Joseph Smith. Nobody who's very high in the corporation 21 ever knows about this, or cares about it.

22 MR. WALLACE: Well, someone has directed the foreman
23 about who will represent the corporation in these circumstances 24 so that the foreman knows what to say to the person on the 25 other side and it seems to me that the control group has to be

1 whoever can make the decision or contribute substantially to 2 the decision with respect to how the litigation should be 3 resolved.

4 QUESTION: Presumably somebody in the control group
5 or the control group generally decided to hire Mr. Joseph 6 Smith as its general counsel, Smith & Jones. But from then on, 7 the general counsel just does that kind of work for the corpo-8 ration. And many of these, much of its legal work, would be 9 in cases about which the higher echelon control group would 10 not know or care.

11 MR. WALLACE: Well, the --

12 QUESTION: But if you apply the test, Mr. Wallace, 13 would it not be true that say, you had an insurance manager
14 or somebody whose handled personal injury settlements.
15 Communications between him and the lawyer would be privileged 16 but the interview between the lawyer and the truck driver and 17 the man who loaded the truck about what happened at the acci-18 dent scene, all that would be open season. There would be no 19 privilege.

20 MR. WALLACE: Not open season. The work product --

21 QUESTION: But no privilege would apply.

22 MR. WALLACE: -- and that is a qualifying exception --

23 QUESTION: Oh, no, I see. There would not be 24 attorney-client privilege.

25 MR. WALLACE: That's -- the attorney-client

1 privilege is an absolute bar. The work product privilege is 2 what was involved in --

3 QUESTION: Qualified privilege.

4 QUESTION: -- Hickman v. Taylor, and that indeed was 5 interviews of witnesses. They were called in the opinion, but 6 they were --

7 QUESTION: But they would be just like third-party
8 witnesses as far as the test was concerned?

9 MR. WALLACE: They would be treated like third-party
10 witnesses. And indeed, at one point in the Hickman opinion 11 they were referred to as if they were third parties, even 12 though they were actually employees.

13 QUESTION: Of course, they're not treated as third-14 party witnesses in court, are they? In court they're treated 15 -- well, they'd have to be a managing agent, wouldn't they?

16 QUESTION: Well, if a corporation has a general
17 counsel and he's just simply authorized to settle or litigate 18 all personal injury actions against the corporation, and he 19 does the investigations and does the settling, and he just 20 sends something to the treasurer when he settles one. I sup-21 pose you would say the corporation has no -- there is no priv-22 ilege in that situation?

23 MR. WALLACE: There is privilege but only if he 24 communicated with someone who had authority to act on his 25 legal advice.

1 QUESTION: Yes, but although he is the sole person
2 who is authorized, who has been authorized to make these set-3 tlements and decide them on the part of the corporation, he 4 would not be a control group person as far as you are con-5 cerned, and you wouldn't recognize that he's communicating with 6 himself?

7 MR. WALLACE: That's right, Mr. Justice.

8 QUESTION: So you'll just say, in that circumstance 9 there just isn't any attorney-client privilege?

10 MR. WALLACE: Yes. It seems to be the implication, 11 and it isn't something that we've given attention to.

12 QUESTION: Yes, I just wanted to --

13 MR. WALLACE: Perhaps it's something that could be 14 reserved for another day, as Mr. Justice Rehnquist --

15 QUESTION: I wanted to find out what your position 16 was.

17 MR. WALLACE: Well, I have limited time. I do want 18 to mention that in the 3rd Circuit's opinion the court also 19 directed its attention to other asserted problems with the 20 control group test and answered them in ways that all we can do 21 is at this point commend to the attention of the Court.

22 The contention that in some way the use of legal 23 services will be diminished by a narrow privilege or a narrower 24 scope to the privilege should be reflected upon in light of 25 this Court's decision in Couch, which noted that there is no

1 privilege at all for communications between an accountant and 2 his client. My time has expired.

3 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything fur-
4 ther, Mr. Gribbon?

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DANIEL M. GRIBBON, ESQ.,
6 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS -- REBUTTAL

7 MR. GRIBBON: May it please the Court:

8 I should like to remark on two matters covered by 9 opposing counsel. First, Mr. Justice White, in answer to your 10 question, there was law before Radiant Burners and Judge 11 Kirkpatrick's opinion. In 1950 Judge Wyzanski in the United 12 Shoe Machinery case, a characteristically scholarly opinion, 13 enunciated the subject matter test, and as far as I know it 14 was never questioned. It was taken to be the law thereafter.

15 Judge Kirkpatrick in the early 60s articulated this 16 test, and I think the problem with it is that he made the 17 assumption that the subordinate employees are not part of the 18 corporation, they are witnesses.

19 QUESTION: Did he have Judge Wyzanski's opinion?

20 MR. GRIBBON: I don't think he had -- if it was 21 there? I'm not sure, Your Honor, whether he distinguished it 22 or not. He had Radiant Burners in front of him, but Judge 23 Wyzanski's opinion was well publicized and was really 24 hornbook law at that time until Judge Kirkpatrick's deci-
25 sion came along. What I'm saying is that he took the view

1 that anybody outside the control group was simply a witness or 2 an observer and should be treated that way. And I submit to 3 you that that is just an incorrect view. These people that 4 Mr. Thomas and outside counsel interviewed are the actors, 5 they're the participants. It isn't the control group back in 6 Kalamazoo that's going to know anything about this matter if 7 it's ever litigated.

8 QUESTION: Mr. Gribbon, when you talk about decisions 9 in the federal court. But I suppose that there must have been 10 a lot of state litigation involving these questions?

11 MR. GRIBBON: Your Honor, I believe there'd been very 12 little. I think it has simply been assumed that when you 13 spoke with a client, anybody who was a part of the client 14 was entitled to have the privileged communication. And the 15 employees were required to --

16 QUESTION: Did Judge Wyzanski treat it as if he 17 was writing on a clean slate, or --

18 MR. GRIBBON: Not really -- he more or less did. It 19 was put to him in the course of a discovery proceeding in a 20 major antitrust case, and then he resolved it, and I think 21 it was consistent with what had been in the law before then.

22 Now, it is this distinction of who is the client and 23 who is the witness or observer that I think is basically in-24 correct in the control group test, because I don't think it 25 meets the question that the lawyer has got to be completely

1 informed and the only way he's going to be informed is by 2 talking with those who were doing the questioned action --

3 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Gribbon, has there been some 4 litigation, either in the state or federal courts, where in 5 an individual proprietorship when the same question comes up 6 about employees of the individual proprietorship?

7 MR. GRIBBON: It has, Your Honor.

8 QUESTION: Or employees of a partnership?

9 MR. GRIBBON: Agents of an individual are covered 10 by the privilege.

11 QUESTION: Or agents' employees?

12 MR. GRIBBON: Employees? Yes.

13 QUESTION: Say there's an individual proprietorship
14 and he has an employee that drives a truck, who gets in a 15 wreck, and the individual proprietor tells a lawyer to go 16 out and investigate that, and he does. And the truck driver is 17 told to cooperate with the lawyer, and he does. Now, are 18 there cases like that around saying it's privileged?

19 MR. GRIBBON: There are cases, they do mix up the 20 work product with attorney-client privilege.

21 QUESTION: But are there attorney-client privilege 22 cases that say that's privileged?

23 MR. GRIBBON: Attorney-client privilege? Yes, Your 24 Honor. The ordinary master-servant relationship.

25 QUESTION: Well, how is it that the uniform rules

1 came out the other way?

2 MR. GRIBBON: The Code of Evidence came out that way 3 without very much discussion and has been adopted without very 4 much discussion. The reason cases in the state courts now 5 deal with this matter and tend very strongly to go to the 6 subject matter test as being more responsive to the purposes 7 of the privilege.

8 Let me finally comment, counsel's contention that 9 the control group test is simple and easy to apply couldn't be 10 more misleading. It is dreadfully difficult to apply, because 11 until after the fact you don't know who is in the control 12 group. There are cases that say a vice president is and 13 cases that say a vice president isn't. And as long as it is 14 unpredictable, like that, you've got to be on the safe side 15 and assume that very few people are going to be in there.
16 For predictability, the subject matter test has all the advan-
17 tages.

18 QUESTION: Is yours easy to apply?

19 MR. GRIBBON: I think it is, Your Honor. The 20 attorney-client privilege is a complex subject. There are a 21 lot of tantalizing questions, but I think as a test it is far 22 easier, far more predictable than the control group test.

23 In closing, Your Honor, I would just like to say that 24 I think Justice Stevens' questions about why the Internal 25 Revenue Service didn't go after the people who were interviewed

1 and who signed these questionnaires really discloses what 2 the Internal Revenue Service is doing here. They're not in-3 terested in the facts, they either have them or they can get 4 them. What they want is the lawyer's input. And that's what 5 we're fighting about here.

6 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
7 The case is submitted.

8 (Whereupon, at 2:59 o'clock p.m., the case in the 9 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
