MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We'll hear arguments first this morning in McDaniel v. Sanchez.

Mr. Hall, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF RICHARD A. HALL, ESQ.,

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

MR. HALL: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the Court:

This is a case which presents the question of whether Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, which is 42 U.S.C. 1973c, requires the pre-clearance of a county reapportionment plan which was prepared after a trial at the Court's direction, after a previous plan had been invalidated, and after an evidentiary hearing upon the use of the proposed plan. And when the plan that was newly completed was declared by the trial court to be one which should be used for the 1980 elections. The original lawsuit was brought alleging an existing districting plan for four commissioners' precincts of Kleberg County to be unconstitutional first because the existing plan diluted the vote of the Mexican-American residents of the County, and secondly because it violated the one-man-one-vote principle of the Constitution.

The trial of the case was devoted primarily to the first question; that is, whether the existing plan diluted

1 the voting strength of Mexican-American residents. At the 2 conclusion of the trial the trial court held that there
3 had been no dilution of Mexican-American voting strength
4 but that there was a violation of the one-man-one-vote
5 principle and ordered that the County prepare a new plan
6 and submit it to the Court for consideration. The trial
7 court set a hearing date on the new plan, the parties 8 appeared at that time -- and incidentally, this was a 9 class action brought by Mexican-American residents of 10 Kleberg County.

11 At the evidentiary hearing on the plan, the trial 12 court heard evidence as to the statistical results and 13 also heard questions with respect to the effect of the 14 new plan on the voting strength of Mexican-Americans; how 15 Mexican-American residents and voters had been affected by 16 the particular plan that was presented. The plan was 17 actually prepared by a professor from Texas A & I University, 18 whose sole objective was to achieve an equality in number 19 between the four precincts. He was instructed however, on 20 one occasion, that the County would prefer that a boundary
21 line be withdrawn to include the courthouse in Commissioners' 22 precinct number 1, he was also asked to try to maintain the 23 integrity of existing voting or election precincts, rather 24 than to divide them up. He accomplished all this, although 25 he did have to divide or split a number of voting precincts.

1 And as we have pointed out in our brief, this 2 is an action which could only be taken by the Commissioners'
3 Court in July or August of a given year and it was not 4 done in the Texas Court -- it was not done in that time-
5 period and the Texas courts have held that a Commissioners'
6 Court, itself, is absolutely precluded from making a 7 division of Commissioners' precincts other than at the 8 stated time, and that is --

9 QUESTION: Your opposition disagrees with that, 10 don't they?

11 MR. HALL: I know they do, Your Honor, but I
12 disagree with my opposition, because I think that the 13 case of Wilson v. Weller makes it very clear, both 14 in its holding and its distinguishing of another
15 Texas Supreme Court case that where in fact election pre-
16 cincts -- and we're not talking about Commissioners' 17 precincts at this point, we're talking about election pre-
18 cincts, when election precincts are divided, or the boun-19 daries are re-drawn -- it can only be done in July or 20 August and at no other time.

21 In any event, it is a factor in this lawsuit
22 simply because of this Court's holding in East Carroll
23 Parish v. Marshall, in which the fact that a Louisiana
24 police jury had no authority to reapportion itself pur-
25 suant to an enabling statute which had been questioned

1 by the Attorney General was suggested to be dispositive
2 of the question whether the particular plan was a court-
3 ordered plan or was a legislative plan. In any event, 4 the trial court did review the plan and in its order stated 5 that he had considered the Plaintiff's objections to the 6 plan as well, and the Plaintiff did come forward with 7 evidence challenging the proposed plan on the basis that 8 it did dilute Mexican-American voting strength. The Court 9 concluded that the plan was acceptable and ordered that 10 it should be used in 1980.

11 QUESTION: Did the District Court in any way
12 alter the plan as proposed?

13 MR. HALL: No, Your Honor, the District Court
14 did not. And following his approval of the plan, there 15 followed a series of procedural steps which resulted in 16 the Fifth Circuit's summary determination that the plan
17 could not be used and should be submitted to the Attorney 18 General or to the District Court in the District of Columbia 19 for preclearance under the Voting Rights Act before it could 20 be put into effect. And of course, that raises the ques-21 tion presented-- the question presented here, whether 22 a plan conceived as this one was, in the course of liti-
23 gation which had been long since commenced was required 24 to be submitted for Section 5 preclearance or whether 25 the District Court could order such a plan into effect

1 without preclearance.

2 QUESTION: Did you argue to the Fifth Circuit
3 that the Commissioners' Court didn't have power to re-
4 apportion itself in accordance with this plan?

5 MR. HALL: We did in a motion for rehearing,
6 Your Honor. The truth of the matter is that the question
7 was presented to the Fifth Circuit in a series of briefs
8 that were directed toward a summary reversal of the 9 District Court's order.

10 QUESTION: Well because the per curiam in the 11 Court of Appeals says "by submitting a proposed reapportion-
12 ment plan to the District Court, the Kleberg County 13 Commissioners' Court complied with and fulfilled its 14 legislative responsibilities."

15 MR. HALL: Well I think, Your Honor, that the 16 legislative responsibilities of which the Fifth Circuit
17 was speaking was -- a one to which this Court has addressed 18 so many times, and that is simply the preparation of a 19 plan or the submission of a plan at the direction of the 20 Trial Court rather than the preparation of that plan by 21 the Trial Court itself. I think that's the fulfillment 22 of legislative duty which is suggested.

23 QUESTION: That isn't quite what this language
24 says, is it?

25 MR. HALL: I'm sorry?

1 QUESTION: That isn't quite what this language
2 says; you're saying -- all you're saying is that the 3 party to a lawsuit was asked to submit a plan and it did.
4 The Court of Appeals says it did it legislatively.

5 MR. HALL: Well, Your Honor, I can only suppose
6 what the Fifth Circuit was speaking to there, but I
7 think that all the Fifth Circuit was saying was that this 8 was not a plan which was a court-ordered plan; it was not 9 a plan which was prepared judicially it was prepared legis-
10 atively, in the sense that the trial court told the county, 11 one of the parties, to go out and prepare and return with 12 a plan and the county did return with a plan and in that 13 sense it was a legislative plan. In that sense only, it was 14 not a plan --

15 QUESTION: Would you make the same argument if 16 the Court had simply issued a declaratory judgment in-17 validating the old plan and giving the Commissioners' Court
18 a certain time to come up with a new ordinance or whatever 19 -- what is it you called it, an ordinance, or --

20 MR. HALL: It would be an order of Commissioners'
21 Court --

22 QUESTION: An order, yes. If that's all the 23 Court had done -- we'll give you time, like Courts usually 24 do, to reapportion yourself.

25 MR. HALL: Well, in truth, Your Honor, that is

1 what is done with the exception that the trial court didn't
2 not tell the Commissioners' Court to go reapportion 3 itself and --

4 QUESTION: It said -- submit a new plan, that's 5 what they said.

6 MR. HALL: They said submit a new plan to the 7 Court, not go out and prepare one and adopt it and follow
8 such procedures as might be appropriate if you were not 9 in the middle of a suit challenging the constitutionality 10 of the existing plan.

11 QUESTION: Well is it true that in order to comply 12 with the Court's view of what was wrong with the old plan,
13 that the Commissioners' Court would not have the power
14 under your view of their power, to reapportion themselves
15 constitutionally? In that they wouldn't have the power 16 at this time to split precincts?

17 MR. HALL: No, Your Honor. The Commissioners' 18 Court would have had the power to reapportion itself into 19 four Commissioners' precincts. The Texas Constitution says
20 that it may do so from time to time as it deems appropriate.
21 So there's no question about its power to do that.

22 QUESTION: So it could have complied with the 23 constitutional requirements on its own?

24 MR. HALL: It could have complied with that. The 25 question is whether it could have achieved a satisfactory

1 one-man-one-vote result without dividing election pre-2 cincts.

3 QUESTION: Well that's what I'm getting at. That's 4 what I'm getting at. Would it have had the power to bring 5 itself into compliance with the one-man-one-vote require-6 ment?

7 MR. HALL: Well, truthfully that question was 8 not litigated, and I know it is raised by the Respondent, 9 Your Honor, but the answer is it would not have had the 10 power to do it in the abstract, if there had been no 11 lawsuit, the Commissioners' Court would not have had the 12 power under Texas law to redrawn its Commissioner precinct 13 lines if, in order to do that, it had to split some existing 14 election precinct lines.

15 You see, a Commissioners' precinct might be 16 made up of 6 or 8 election precincts which are subdivis-
17 ioned within the Commissioners' precinct. And what I 18 understand the state statute to prohibit is the dividing 19 or splitting of one of those sub-divisions, one of those 20 election precincts, at any time other than in July or 21 August.

22 QUESTION: So if the Commissioners' Court had 23 responded to the court by saying in order to satisfy you 24 we would have to exceed our powers and we just can't, 25 we just are forbidden to propose the plan?

1 MR. HALL: If that --

2 QUESTION: Then the Court would have had to draw
3 up its own plan, I suppose. And that clearly wouldn't 4 have been subject to clearance, preclearance.

5 MR. HALL: That would be true. If the County
6 had come back with any excuse, which amounted to a refusal 7 to do it --

8 QUESTION: Or a claim of inability?

9 MR. HALL: That's true. It said it was unable 10 to do it, it just wasn't physically possible, as in this 11 case it might, it could have come back and said it's too
12 late we're almost to the 1980 elections --

13 QUESTION: Well you, are in essence claim that 14 they were forbidden under state law to give a legislative 15 response to the Court's request, which is a perfectly 16 legitimate argument.

17 MR. HALL: It's a legitimate argument, Your Honor, 18 but in all candor, that's not really what I am saying, 19 because I understand you to be asking me whether it would 20 have been physically possible to come up with some other plan 21 which would have achieved the one-man-one-vote result that was 22 desired without splitting any of the sub-precincts, these 23 election precincts.

24 QUESTION: And you think it wasn't?

25 MR. HALL: Sir?

1 QUESTION: You don't think it was possible?

2 MR. HALL: I don't know whether it was or not.

3 I know that the Respondent --

4 QUESTION: Well if it was impossible, the Commis-
5 sioners' Court wouldn't have had the power to achieve it.

6 MR. HALL: That's true. That's correct.

7 QUESTION: Well then, is what you're saying that 8 had these original plaintiffs simply come to the Commis-
9 sioners' court and said we don't think the present voting 10 lines conform to one-man-one-vote rule, we want you to 11 change them, that they would not have had the authority 12 under Texas law to change them and the plaintiffs would have 13 had to go into federal court to get them changed?

14 MR. HALL: No, Your Honor, that's not the case.
15 The Commissioners' Court would have had the authority to 16 change the Commissioner's precinct line, but not if in 17 order to achieve one-man-one-vote balance they had also 18 had to split or divide some of these voting precincts, if 19 in order to get the right number of people in each of the 20 four Commissioners' precincts it had been necessary for the 21 Commissioners' Court to break up an existing voting precinct
22 -- to say, okay, part of you who voted in voting precinct 23 21 are now going to be in a different precinct -- if they 24 had had to do that they would have been without authority
25 to do it under the Texas decision, but if they had not

1 been required to vote, to change voting precincts, to 2 alter the boundaries of those, then it would have been 3 within their power to make the change.

4 In any event, the Fifth Circuit concluded that the 5 plan which had been submitted to the trial court and which 6 had been approved by the trial court could not be used 7 because it had not been precleared under Section 5 of the 8 Voting Rights Act and directed that the trial court
9 -- and held that the trial court should not have considered 10 the constitutionality of the new plan before it had been 11 precleared, remanded the case, the petition for certiorari 12 was filed -- and that brings us to this moment.

13 QUESTION: Before you get into your argument, may 14 I ask a question about the legislative authority? If, 15 because the -- assuming it was necessary to break up the 16 voting precincts in order to satisfy the one-man-one-vote 17 requirement, could some other legislative body have had 18 the authority to do that?

19 MR. HALL: No, Your Honor. I don't know whether 20 the question has arisen. The only authority I am going 21 on is Article 2.041 of the Texas Statutes, which simply 22 provides that the election voting precincts may not be 23 altered other than by the Commissioners' Court -- other 24 than July or August. And there is no other authority in 25 Texas of which I am aware, that would have the power to 1 alter election precincts other than in July or August.

2 QUESTION: Well then, if there's that restric-3 tion on breaking up election precincts and if that would 4 prevent a one-person-one-vote satisfactory response would 5 it not necessarily follow that that restriction was invalid
6 as a matter of federal law?

7 MR. HALL: I haven't had the question, Your Honor,
8 and I don't know whether it would be or not. I don't really 9 see why that's not a reasonable requirement --

10 QUESTION: Well but it's a requirement that 11 would make it impossible to comply with the Equal Protec-12 tion Clause if it was faithfully followed, isn't that what 13 you're --

14 MR. HALL: No, not really, because in any July 15 or August the Commissioners' Court would have the auth-
16 ority to do that and the problem is simply one of timing 17 with respect to an upcoming election. The legislature in 18 Texas has simply said we don't want the Commissioners' 19 Court doing a lot of changing of voting precincts any 20 closer to an upcoming election than July or August and I
21 think that's a reasonable provision by the state legisla-22 ture.

23 QUESTION: But why July and August? Why not any 24 time prior to September 1? What if they do it in May or 25 June?

1 MR. HALL: I suspect, Your Honor, that -- 2 I don't know why at the particular time, I suspect that 3 almost any change could run afoul of the primary and 4 general election problems that we have in Texas. Generally 5 speaking, primary elections are held in May and the 6 general election in November, and I don't -- I don't 7 suppose that -- well a change even in July or August in 8 an election year would alter the voting pattern or the 9 place of votes between the date of the primary and of the 10 general elections.

11 So I can't answer your question. I don't know 12 why that particular restriction, I don't know -- it's not 13 been challenged, that I'm aware of, on constitutional 14 grounds.

15 QUESTION: But didn't the primary used to be held
16 at the end of July?

17 MR. HALL: Your Honor, I do not know.

18 QUESTION: Maybe it wasn't --

19 MR. HALL: For as long as I can recall, it has 20 been held in May and the Court may be correct about that.

21 QUESTION: I'm not sure.

22 MR. HALL: All right, sir. In any event, the 23 decision of the Fifth Circuit brings us here and we have 24 a number of reasons for believing that Section 5 of the 25 Voting Rights Act as it relates to preclearance should not

1 be applicable in a case which is already in a federal 2 district court and already subject to constitutional scru-3 tiny.

4 The first reason for this is that as we view the 5 Voting Rights Act, it assumes the existence and the contin-
6 uation of an existing plan, both the legislative history 7 and the decisions of this Court have referred to the 8 effect of the plan -- of the Voting Rights Act in Section 9 5 as in effect, freezing into use and existence an existing 10 plan, and if that were the case there would be no problem
11 or hardship so far as the election process in the County 12 is concerned because it would, as it went through the 13 machinery prescribed by the Voting Rights Act, have an 14 existing plan that could be used during the time required for 15 that procedure. But that is not the case where the catalyst 16 for the presentation of a new plan is an order of a federal 17 court striking down the old plan, there is no plan then to 18 be frozen into effect and there is no plan prepared or par-19 ticipated in by the local, political subdivisions which 20 can be utilized during the interim.

21 We also think that the language of the Voting
22 Rights Act which speaks to changes in procedure which a 23 subdivision, political subdivision "enacts or seeks to 24 administer" is not simply fortuitous language; we think 25 that the legislature meant what it said, that it was

1 speaking of changes that were voluntarily undertaken by 2 a political subdivision, that is, the political subdivision 3 enacted or sought to administer a particular plan which was 4 different from the one that had existed before and which 5 had been frozen into effect.

6 This is not a case in which the Commissioners'
7 Court enacted or sought to administer a new plan, it did
8 neither. It was told by the trial court it could not use 9 its old plan and that it should submit a new plan. So, for 10 that reason also, we think the Voting Rights Act does not 11 apply in a case involving these circumstances.

12 Third, the Voting Rights Act and the decisions of 13 this Court speak to the purpose of insuring that there is 14 a federal presence in the formulation of any plan which is 15 different from the one which had been frozen into effect
16 by the Voting Rights Act. And we have a federal presence 17 in this case, very much so; we have the most intense federal 18 presence that you could imagine, in the discarding of the 19 old plan and the formulation of the new plan. We had a 20 federal district judge in Corpus Christi, Texas, one county
21 over from Kleberg County, that was aware of all the facts.
22 He had already listened in detail to the plaintiff's class
23 action challenge of the existing plan, he knew intimately 24 what the circumstances and background were. And there was 25 no better forum anywhere to consider the changes which were

1 proposed than the local federal district court. So that 2 objective of the Voting Rights Act, we think, has been 3 squarely met in the case of a plan which is presented 4 following the striking down of an existing plan by a 5 federal district court.

6 QUESTION: If that's the objective. The -- I 7 suppose the other side of the coin is, that the federal 8 presence of which you speak is a specific federal presence, 9 namely, the Attorney General or the District Court of the 10 District of Columbia?

11 MR. HALL: Well that, I'm sure is the argument
12 in support of the applicability of the Voting Rights Act, 13 Your Honor, but certainly the legislative history didn't 14 speak to that. It does -- it does speak to the existence 15 of a body of expertise, and uniformity that is sought by 16 channeling all of these decisions through the Attorney 17 General or the District Court of the District of Columbia, 18 but for the life of me, I don't see that the Attorney Gen-
19 eral or the District Court of the District of Columbia, 20 now disparagement intended, has any greater expertise in 21 a case of this type where a local federal district court
22 has already considered in great detail in an adversary 23 proceeding, the various factors which would affect the 24 formulation of a new claim.

25 And finally, it seems to me that the Voting Rights

1 Act does not contemplate the existence of a pending suit 2 which already raises constitutional issues which the 3 -- with which the local federal court has grappled. And 4 that is perhaps a different facet of the suggestion that 5 where you do have a federal presence already involved with 6 a lawsuit there is no occasion to seek further federal 7 presence in the form of an Attorney General or the District
8 Court in the District of Columbia.

9 The decision, we think, of the Fifth Circuit
10 ignores completely this Court's decision in East Carroll Parish 11 Parish School Board v. Marshall, in which, in virtually 12 identical situation, the question was raised in an amicus
13 curiae brief by the United States and in which this Court 14 said that Section 5 preclearance was not required in the 15 case of a plan which was prepared at the instance of a 16 federal district court and submitted to a federal district
17 court.

18 The -- I would like to point out that I see more 19 problems with requiring preclearance of a plan conceived in 20 the course of existing district court litigation, than I 21 do in, in not requiring preclearance. First of these, of 22 course, is the tremendous delay and expense incident to a 23 preclearance procedure when you already have a pending law-
24 suit in a local district court. As I understand those cases, 25 in which the question might be raised and as I understand

1 the Voting Rights Act, if the trial court were required
2 in this case to remand the County to the Attorney General
3 of the District Court of Columbia, the County could go to 4 the Attorney General and proceed back and forth until a 5 plan had been approved there or disapproved. It could 6 then, if it were disapproved, it could go to the District 7 Court in the District of Columbia; I assume an appeal could 8 follow that, and then, the case could go back to the trial
9 court where, by the express terms of the Voting Rights Act, 10 the question of constitutionality could be litigated. And 11 if the trial court should determine at that point that 12 the plan was unconstitutional although it didn't violate 13 the provisions of the Voting Rights Act, we would start, 14 I gather, all over on this procedure. And I think that 15 is a -- I think that defeats the equitable jurisdiction of the 16 Court and I think it -- it insures a multiplicity of liti-
17 gations and perhaps harm to the voters themselves. I can 18 conceive that a political subdivision which does not wish 19 to get right on with a new plan could perpetuate its own
20 unconstitutionally elected officials in office indeterminate-
21 ly by playing the game of proceeding to the Attorney
22 General, of submitting half-hearted plans and so forth.

23 And I realize the answer to that is, well the trial
24 court could prepare his own plan and order it into effect.

25 But it seems to me that at that point we would come back to

1 the question then of why it should be that a district court
2 plan is not subject to Section 5 preclearance, why the 3 district court has sufficient ability and expertise to 4 prepare its own plan, but not to review a plan prepared or 5 submitted by a local political subdivision. We think every-6 thing about the Voting Rights Act and everything that relates 7 to the question of preclearance is directed towards volun-
8 tarily undertaken changes in voting procedures and not the 9 one which is taking place under the scrutiny of federal 10 court. Thank you.

11 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Parmley.

12 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ROBERT J. PARMLEY, ESQ.,

13 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

14 MR. PARMLEY: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
15 please the Court:

16 Before addressing the Defendant's argument, I'd 17 like to elaborate a little on some of the judicial decisions
18 and actions in this case. On October 2nd, 1979, approxi-
19 mately one year after the trial on the merits, the district 20 court found that Kleberg County was mal-apportioned and in 21 the October 2nd order the district court informed the defen-
22 dant that the initial burden of fashioning the constitu-
23 tionally acceptable remedy was on the Commissioners' Court, 24 the district court quoting Wise, then advised the defendants
25 that it would afford them a reasonable opportunity to meet

1 constitutional requirements by adopting a substitute measure
2 and that the Commissioners' Court was unwilling or unable 3 to present the Court with a substitute plan, then it would 4 become the unwelcome obligation of the District Court
5 to devise its own plan.

6 The District Court then directed the Commissioners' 7 Court to come up with a plan and a hearing was set on 8 that plan on December 10, 1979, approximately 60 -- two 9 months later.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Parmley, do you think that Wise
11 contemplated, when it spoke of the unwelcome responsibil-
12 ity of federal courts and the legislative responsibility
13 to comply with the one-man-one-vote rule, that it contem-
14 plated an action by a Commissioners' Court such as this 15 that was forbidden by state law, if in fact it was forbidden?

16 MR. PARMLEY: Well Your Honor, I don't believe 17 that the Commissioners' Court action in this case was 18 forbidden by state law.

19 QUESTION: Suppose it was, then answer Justice
20 Rehnquist's question.

21 MR. PARMLEY: Whether or not Wise would have -- 22 I'm not sure I understand the question.

23 QUESTION: Well, suppose that state statute
24 forbade the county court from doing what the District Court
25 asked it to do. Do you think that the District Court,

1 nonetheless, should have required it to do it, or should 2 it simply have devised a plan of its own, realizing that 3 the county court was prohibited by a state statute from 4 itself acting at that particular time?

5 MR. PARMLEY: I think the District Court was 6 aware that the legislative body had presented a plan
7 that it did not have legislative authority to present;
8 that the District Court should have instructed that legis-
9 lative body to go back and respond to its duty to present
10 a valid substitute.

11 QUESTION: As a party to the lawsuit, but not as a 12 legislative body, couldn't that be? I mean, as a legis-13 lative body, it is, I suppose, bound by Texas law, but as 14 a party to the lawsuit, it is bound by the orders of the 15 District Court.

16 MR. PARMLEY: Well, I guess it's just a question 17 of whether or not the District Court can defer twice to 18 the legislative body. If it's only given one shot, then I
19 would say if it came forward with a plan that was invalid
20 under state law, then I would say a second plan would not 21 be afforded legislative deference and it would be considered 22 as any other plan presented by a party to the lawsuit.

23 QUESTION: It's a pretty important question in 24 view of the dicennial census, isn't it? Because 25 presumably a lot of state and municipal subdivisions are

1 going to be subject to suit if they don't redistrict
2 themselves on the basis of new population figures and yet
3 if the District Court in which the suit is brought finds 4 that they are mal-apportioned and directs them to submit 5 a plan, they may be under some state law restraint as 6 to whether or not they can do the particular thing
7 that the District Court wants.

8 MR. PARMLEY: Yes sir, I understand that position, 9 but I believe that legislative history will show that 10 a correct application of Section 5 is that whenever -- 11 when the legislative body has received a judicial deferral, 12 to come up and present a substitute plan, when that 13 legislative body has finalized its plan which incorporates 14 public policy objectives and is preparing to submit that 15 plan to the District Court, it is in effect seeking to 16 administer that plan through incorporation in the court's 17 order. And by seeking to administer that plan, by incor-
18 poration in the court's order it falls under the opera-19 tional language of Section 5, which is whenever a political 20 subdivision seeks to administer a voting change then that 21 change must be precleared. Our position would be that 22 the legislative body in that particular case, as part of 23 its legislative duty to come forward with a valid plan,
24 would have had to have Section 5 preclearance. The issue
25 of whether or not it actually had legislative authority

1 does not matter because although -- because, the plan
2 could be implemented through the court order. Operational 3 language is to seek to administer, it doesn't necessarily 4 require that they have to enact it.

5 QUESTION: What if the census shows, the 1980
6 census figures show that this Kleberg County Commissioners'
7 Court is mal-apportioned, then the Commissioners' Court
8 simply sits on its hands and does nothing so that it
9 can't be accused of seeking to institute any new thing
10 that would be required -- preclearance under Section 5.
11 Nonetheless, Plaintiffs bring an action in the District
12 Court saying you're violating our constitutional rights 13 because it's not one-man-one-vote. They're kind of 14 between a rock and a hard place, aren't they?

15 MR. PARMLEY: Well, I think that the legisla-
16 tive history of Section 5 supports the application which 17 I just told you, that in Fourteenth Amendment cases, where 18 there is a violation that is found by the Court -- at the 19 1975 extension hearings, the Senate Judiciary Committee 20 Report specifically stated that after the invalidation of 21 a plan by the ~~le~~ and legislative deferrment, the Court
22 should defer its consideration of plans presented to it 23 until such times as these plans have been submitted for 24 Section 5 review. Only after such review should the Court 25 proceed with any remaining --

1 QUESTION: Well Mr. Parmley, what if in this 2 case the Commissioners' Court had said judge, we just 3 don't want to come up with a plan and -- it's too difficult 4 and we don't think we have the authority and even if we 5 did, we just don't agree with you that the old one is bad, 6 we're going to appeal and meanwhile, the -- if you want to 7 put in your own, fine, go ahead. You don't think the 8 judge would have held the Commissioners' Court in contempt,
9 do you? Do you think the Court has authority to order 10 the submission of a new plan? It can give the legislative 11 body time to submit a new plan, do you think they can order 12 it and enforce that order?

13 MR. PARMLEY: No, Your Honor. My reading of 14 Wise is that the --

15 QUESTION: Well what if --what then if the 16 Commissioners' Court just sits on its hands as Justice 17 Rehnquist says, and once the declaratory judgment is 18 issued it just doesn't do anything. The Court then is 19 going to prepare its own plan, isn't it?

20 MR. PARMLEY: Or invite the Plaintiffs to submit 21 plans and that may be an incentive for the legislative body 22 to come up with their own.

23 QUESTION: Well it may be, but if they don't, then 24 -- and the Court puts in its own plan, then under our -- 25 unless we overrule our cases, the Court plan isn't subject

1 to preclearance, is it?

2 MR. PARMLEY: That's correct. But the legisla-
3 tive body does not propose a plan --

4 QUESTION: So it may be that we're not arguing
5 about much here, in the sense that a Commissioners' Court
6 could just -- or any legislative body after a declaration
7 of unconstitutionality of an old plan is just going -- it
8 doesn't want to preclear, it just isn't going to submit a 9 plan. Of course, a lot of legislative bodies would rather 10 have their own plan in than a Court's plan. But never-11 theless, there is a way of avoiding preclearance, apparently.

12 QUESTION: Well if he's -- if you're -- if he's 13 right. Here, the District Court used the word directed; 14 with that in mind, the defendants are hereby directed to 15 submit a proposed new plan by the 13th day of November, 16 1979. Do you think that that should be read as requested?

17 MR. PARMLEY: Yes, Your Honor.

18 QUESTION: Though it's not the word he used.

19 MR. PARMLEY: Well he said directed but he also 20 said he was -- affording them an equal opportunity --

21 QUESTION: And that -- if the defendants didn't 22 comply with the direction they might be in contempt of 23 Court.

24 QUESTION: But you just suggested that probably 25 the Court didn't have power to order anybody to submit a

1 plan, a legislative body to submit a plan.

2 MR. PARMLEY: Well I think it could order -- I
3 think it should order a legislative body to come forward 4 with a plan.

5 QUESTION: And here it seems to have done so, by 6 use of the word directed. It didn't say requested.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Parmley, could it be --

8 QUESTION: Or given an opportunity to.

9 QUESTION: Could it be that whether he used
10 requested, directed or suggested, what it means is if you 11 won't prepare one I will?

12 MR. PARMLEY: That's my understanding.

13 QUESTION: Could not the legislative body
14 frustrate even the most mandatory direction by submitting 15 a plan that was, on its face, unacceptable? And then put 16 the Court in the position of having to do its own plan.

17 MR. PARMLEY: Yes, Your Honor, but I would say that 18 there would be an incentive not to do that because the 19 Court may adopt the Plaintiffs plan, and I don't think a 20 legislative body would want to have the plaintiff's plan 21 adopted, but --

22 QUESTION: Here did the Plaintiffs submit a plan?

23 MR. PARMLEY: Yes, Your Honor, they did. But it
24 was submitted at the trial on the merits, and I might add 25 that that plan did not split election precincts.

1 QUESTION: Of course, part of the Plaintiff's
2 case was the dilution of the votes of the Mexican-American 3 voters, a claim that was rejected by the District Court.

4 MR. PARMLEY: Yes sir, that's so.

5 QUESTION: Correct? And did the Plaintiff's plan
6 meet the Plaintiff's theory in that regard, that it diluted
7 the votes of Mexican-American voters?

8 MR. PARMLEY: No, but in our opinion, the Plain-9 tiffs plan tried to correct that.

10 QUESTION: Yes, well that -- and that claim was 11 rejected by the District Court.

12 MR. PARMLEY: The Court yes, the District Court
13 found there was no dilution in Mexican-American voting 14 strength.

15 QUESTION: Right. But that there was a violation 16 of the one-person-one-vote principle.

17 MR. PARMLEY: That is correct.

18 QUESTION: Maybe I missed something, but what 19 would be the constitutional objection to a District Court
20 ordering the party to a lawsuit who is found to have vio-
21 ated the law, from proposing a remedy? I don't under-22 stand why there would be any constitutional objection to 23 such an order.

24 MR. PARMLEY: Well, I believe they could. I
25 think that's what, in fact, happened in Burns v. Richardson.

1 I think the Court there ordered them to come up with an 2 interim plan and they in fact did. So I guess the answer
3 to that is yes, they can order them to come up with a 4 legislative plan.

5 QUESTION: That is, order them at the pain of 6 contempt, or order them and if they don't do so then the 7 Court does its own?

8 MR. PARMLEY: Well I guess they could put them 9 in contempt, if they don't follow an order, it seems to 10 me that the --

11 QUESTION: You mean an entire state legislature
12 as in Burns?

13 QUESTION: Well that's an issue that we don't 14 have directly.

15 QUESTION: Well what happens to the County in 16 the meantime then? How is it governed if the -- if the 17 prior statute it had was bad or the ordinance it had was 18 bad, and the Court is not satisfied with the plan proposed 19 by the Defendant, it is unwilling to adopt the Plaintiff's 20 plan, doesn't it have to simply impose a plan of its own?

21 MR. PARMLEY: Yes, I think it would impose,
22 probably an interim plan, and possibly request the Defendants 23 to come back with a satisfactory plan, -- if that's the 24 legislative body --

25 QUESTION: Well under our cases, it wouldn't

1 necessarily be reversible error if pending a new plan the 2 old plan stayed in use. Even the unconstitutional one, 3 we've sustained that.

4 MR. PARMLEY: Yes, that's correct. The District
5 Court could do that, under its power.

6 In relation to the legislative authority of the 7 Commissioners' Court redistrict, there is an authority that 8 I left out in my brief that I would like to bring 9 to the attention of the Court and that is an opinion from 10 the Texas Attorney General. That opinion is opinion number 11 M606, and the facts of the case are that Bailey County,
12 Texas redistricted their Commissioners' Court precinct
13 lines in January of 1970 and in the process of redistricting
14 their Commissioners' Court precinct lines they split 15 election precincts. Bailey County then sent a letter to 16 the Attorney General and said now that we've split election 17 precincts can we conform those election precincts with 18 the Commissioners' Court precincts? And the Attorney General
19 responded and said yes, I understand your situation, you
20 did split the election precincts, that's fine. But you
21 cannot now conform them; you have to wait until the July 22 or August term of Court. I have a copy of that opinion
23 here today if the Court would like me to leave it.

24 Additionally in that case the Attorney General
25 cited the various articles of the Texas Election Code

1 and the Texas Constitution that have been argued back and 2 forth here today. The Attorney General also cited the case
3 of Wilson v. Weller, which the Petitioners depended on for 4 their support, but they did not have legislative authority.
5 I might add that in the case of Wilson v. Weller, that involved 6 a single unitary order of Kleberg County; it involved the 7 same county, where they redistricted Commissioners' Court 8 precincts and election precincts at the same time, in the 9 same order. And the Court in that case found that they 10 could not redistrict election precincts, although they 11 could redistrict Commissioners' Court precincts they could 12 not redistrict election precincts, and they invalidated that 13 part of the order in reference to the redistricting of the 14 election precincts.

15 QUESTION: Leave the copy of that Attorney
16 General's opinion with the Clerk, will you?

17 MR. PARMLEY: Yes sir.

18 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Wallace.

19 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAWRENCE G. WALLACE, ESQ.,

20 ON BEHALF OF THE U.S. AS AMICUS CURIAE

21 MR. WALLACE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please
22 the Court:

23 Counsel for the Petitioners has correctly stated
24 that there was a federal presence to which the Commissioners' 25 Court submitted their proposal for reapportionment, but

1 that was wholly apart from who the federal presence was.
2 The District Court did not purport to apply the standards
3 of Section 5, did not make any inquiry about whether there
4 was a retrogression in the treatment of minority voters 5 within the meaning of this Court's decision in Beer, let 6 alone place the burden of proof on the covered juris-7 diction that it would have to sustain under Section 5 in 8 proving that the purpose or effect is not to discriminate.

9 The question before the Court is really a narrow 10 question of statutory interpretation about the meaning of 11 the words seek to administer. In Section 5, it's a question 12 that the Court has found recurringly troublesome in trying to 13 interrelate Section 5 with reapportionment litigation and 14 there is, as Mr. Justice Rehnquist has suggested, a need for 15 as much clarification as possible now, with all the re-16 apportionments that will be resulting from the 1980 census.

17 For the interpretation of this language to be 18 consistent with the statutory purpose, it is crucial in our 19 view that two very serious pitfalls be avoided. One is to 20 avoid an interpretation that gives jurisdictions covered by 21 Section 5 a dis-incentive to reapportion themselves. It 22 is settled by this Court's decisions and by the legislative 23 history that Section 5 does apply to reapportionments, and 24 this Court has reiterated time and again that reapportion-
25 ment is principally and ideally, a legislative function

1 and that legislative bodies should be given an opportunity
2 to undertake to do the reapportionment on their own.
3 But it's always easy in these situations for a legislature to 4 do nothing and to hold back as was the case of the 5 Commissioners' Court here until 8 years after the 1970 census.
6 And it's not uncommon in covered jurisdictions for 7 us to encounter this kind of holding back even under the 8 1970 census, particularly if there's hope that thereby a 9 reapportionment will eventually be achieved after someone 10 brings a lawsuit without the necessity to submit the legis-
11 lature's proposal for Section 5 preclearance.

12 And if the covered jurisdiction can avoid 13 submitting the proposal that way and still propose it to 14 the reapportionment court, under an entitlement to def-15 erence from that Court under this Court's decision in 16 Wise v. Lipscomb, the deference that would be afforded to 17 a legislative proposal. Then the way is open it seems to 18 us, to widespread evasion of this Court's decision in 19 Georgia v. United States; that the protections of Section 5 20 are going to be available for reapportionments and the 21 congressional purpose that's been strongly stated in the 22 legislative history and the reenactments of Section 5, that 23 reapportionment provides a special danger to minority voting 24 rights and it's important that the protection be afforded.

25 Now this brings me to the second interrelated

1 pitfall.that it is very important to avoid, and that is 2 creation of a gap or a loophole in the protection afforded
3 by one or the other of two lines of decisions of this Court.
4 One of those lines of decisions holds that efforts by 5 covered jurisdictions to reapportion themselves must be 6 precleared even if those efforts occur in the course of 7 reapportionment or other voting right litigation, that is,
8 Connor v. Waller and related writings in other cases.

9 And the second line of decisions is that judicially 10 imposed reapportionments need not be precleared, but they 11 are subject to special remedial standards and those 12 standards are protective of minority voting rights in 13 the application, even though they are not identical to 14 Section 5. And our principle submission is that the stan-
15 dards for what is a legislative plan and what is a court-16 imposed plan should be the same for purposes of both of these 17 lines of decisions. The Court's opinions have assumed that 18 the standard is the same --

19 QUESTION: Well, the substantive standards are a 20 little different when you come to multi-membered districts, 21 and so on.

22 MR. WALLACE: That's right. The substantive
23 standards are the same, but in defining what is a court-
24 ordered plan and what is a legislative plan, as we've set 25 out on pages 28 and 29 of our brief, opinions of this

1 Court have assumed that you arrive at the same answer
2 for both purposes and Congress has certainly operated on the 3 assumption that there is not going to be a gap in protec-
4 tion, whereby in a covered jurisdiction the reapportion-
5 ment can occur without either protection being afforded 6 minority voting rights, and so our proposed solution, the 7 interpretation that we espouse and that Mr. Parmley was 8 espousing is one that we have proposed to the Court before.
9 But happily, it's one that is consistent as we see it 10 with the statutory language and with the legislative his-11 tory to the extent that that legislative history specif-
12 ically addresses this question and it does, in the 1975
13 Senate Report.

14 And that is that seeks to administer does embrace
15 a proposal by the covered jurisdiction to a reapportionment
16 court, that that court order into effect the reapportion-17 ment plan that the covered jurisdiction is in the 18 course of litigation proposing. We don't think that this 19 really should turn on the niceties of state law, about 20 whether there is some limitation in the authority of the 21 covered jurisdiction's body making the proposal 22 to have enacted this change on its own in the absence of 23 the reapportionment litigation. This would raise many 24 uncertainties about the coverage and difficult questions 25 of state law to be resolved in federal court which have

1 no particular expertise about them, but the result either 2 way would be that the covered jurisdiction would be 3 seeking, through the approval of the reapportionment court
4 to administer a new apportionment, precise --

5 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Wallace, what if the 6 Commissioners' Court said that Judge, we just aren't 7 able to come up with a plan and we know you -- we disagree
8 with our old one and we're going to appeal, but meanwhile, 9 we can't get together on a plan and don't propose to 10 submit one? And then the Court gets Dr. Nash, or Professor 11 Nash, and -- the Plaintiffs -- and he puts in a plan of 12 his own?

13 MR. WALLACE: It would act with whatever other 14 assistance can be made available. The Plaintiffs 15 propose two plans here, and Dr. Nash or or other experts 16 might have been available and a court ordered plan would 17 then have to comply with the special remedial standards 18 that --

19 QUESTION: But if a --

20 MR. WALLACE: -- this Court has prescribed for 21 court-ordered plans.

22 QUESTION: But if a -- or a state party to 23 the lawsuit actually responds, then do you think that 24 any kind of a response is subject to preclearance?

25 MR. WALLACE: Well, we don't quite say any kind

1 of a response --

2 QUESTION: Suppose -- any response that purports
3 to respond to the request, or propose a plan?

4 MR. WALLACE: That proposes a plan, a proposal
5 of a covered jurisdiction to the reapportionment 6 court that this is what we'd like to put into effect as 7 our new apportionment raises the problem that Congress
8 was applying Section 5 to assure protection.

9 QUESTION: But you don't think that the respond-
10 ing legislative body has to purport to act legislatively
11 in the sense that it should have a meeting and have a -- 12 open to the public, and go through the procedures for the 13 adopting of an ordinance or of an order or not? Or can 14 he just sit down with his lawyer and say well that's all 15 right, why don't you just go ahead and write this up?

16 MR. WALLACE: Well all of that may be much
17 more desirable as a matter of state practice and state law 18 for them to do it in an open way and in a way that they 19 would ordinarily reapportion themselves. But there are 20 many changes that a covered jurisdiction seeks to 21 administer without the enactment of legislation, which have 22 to be precleared. There are many election officials who 23 have authority to change election precincts, there are 24 other steps that are taken and changes in the election 25 law which do not require specific legislation; they are

1 done under a general grant of enabling legislation, and 2 it's not unusual for submissions to be made -- or changes
3 if the covered jurisdiction is seeking to administer
4 that don't amount to legislation. It's only in this one
5 area that a question has been raised by this Court's opinion 6 about whether something that falls short of legislation is 7 something that the covered jurisdiction is not seek-8 ing to administer within the meaning of Section 5.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, what if you run into the 10 situation where the Commissioners' Court, after the census 11 information is distributed simply sits on its hands and 12 decides it is clear we are malapportioned -- but 13 we like it this way, and let them, someone come after us.
14 Then the plaintiffs come and file a malapportionment 15 suit in the District Court. What are the mechanics of your 16 plan that would proceed?

17 MR. WALLACE: Well if the jurisdiction does not 18 respond to the District Court's invitation to them, to submit 19 a proposal that the District Court should put into effect
20 on an interim basis hopefully, until there is actual legis-
21 lation enacted. If the jurisdiction does
22 not respond to that, then the District Court has no choice
23 but to go ahead and remedy the constitutional violation 24 without whatever help it can get from other parties to 25 the litigation --

1 QUESTION: And that would require no preclearance?

2 MR. WALLACE: That is correct. We don't see how 3 the language of the statute can be interpreted to say 4 that the covered jurisdiction in that circumstance is 5 seeking to administer a plan, and it's only if the covered 6 jurisdiction in answer seeks to administer a plan that 7 preclearance is required for what the covered jurisdiction 8 is undertaking to do. It's not the Court order that would 9 be precleared. It's supposed to be precleared before the 10 Court considers it, and the regulations --

11 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Wallace, --

12 MR. WALLACE: -- of the Attorney General qualify 13 for expedited consideration --

14 QUESTION: -- even if a Court has to draw up 15 its plan and puts it in its decree, and orders that the 16 next election be held in accordance with this plan, it's 17 the county or the political entity that's going to be 18 conforming to that plan; it's going to be administering 19 the plan but it's going to be administering the court's plan.

20 MR. WALLACE: That is correct, Mr. Justice.

21 QUESTION: And that is not subject to preclearance, 22 that kind of administering?

23 MR. WALLACE: I think if they did subsequently 24 have an enactment --

25 QUESTION: Well, let's assume that it did not.

1 MR. WALLACE: -- replicating the court's plan,
2 that enactment would, under Connor v. Waller, have to be 3 submitted.

4 QUESTION: Yes.

5 MR. WALLACE: If they felt that they had to do that 6 in order to actually administer the plan, but if they are 7 just doing it under the Court's order, our view has been 8 that that is not subject to preclearance. It seems to me
9 that that's the meaning of Connor v. Johnson, that the Court's--

10 QUESTION: Would you --

11 MR. WALLACE: -- order is not to be precleared.

12 QUESTION: -- Mr. Wallace, would you prefer it 13 were not that way?

14 MR. WALLACE: Well there was some suggestion in 15 the Senate Committee Report, in 1975, that there would be 16 preclearance even then. And you know, obviously, the 17 full protection of Section 5 might not be available in that 18 situation without preclearance, however there is consid-19 erable protection for minority voting interests in the 20 remedial standards that this Court has developed for court
21 ordered plans and it perhaps would not be amiss to say
22 in covered jurisdictions, the court in ordering such a 23 plan into effect also should consider whether there would 24 be a retrogressive effect, such as the Court spoke of in 25 Beer.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, may I ask you a question
2 about the burden imposed by Section 5 on the Attorney
3 General? How many applications for clearance were filed 4 last year?

5 MR. WALLACE: Well, I'm sure the number is very 6 large, Mr. Justice, but I don't have it at my fingertips.

7 QUESTION: In the Sheffield case, that was here, I
8 think in 1978 -- it was then indicated that they were coming 9 in at about the rate of 1000 a year?

10 MR. WALLACE: I think that's correct.

11 QUESTION: And that's four per business day, 12 approximately. And they must be considered and acted on 13 within 60 days. How much time per application at the rate 14 of four per day is the Attorney General able to give to 15 these applications?

16 MR. WALLACE: Well there is a considerable staff 17 that works on these matters. Many of the applications are 18 very routine changes that are precleared without much 19 problem, and about 99 percent of them are precleared. How-20 ever, that's not true of apportionments -- reapportionments--

21 QUESTION: Then many of the applications involve 22 multiple changes?

23 MR. WALLACE: Some of them do.

24 QUESTION: And the Act requires the Attorney
25 General to exercise his personal discretion.

1 MR. WALLACE: He has, for the most part, dele-
2 gated that authority to the assistant Attorney General
3 for Civil Rights.

4 QUESTION: At the rate of four a day, and a District
5 Court judge, presumably, spends a good deal more time on 6 questions of this kind than the A. G. could.

7 MR. WALLACE: He certainly does, Mr. Justice,
8 but -- as I pointed out at the onset, he is not applying 9 the same standards, he's not making the same inquiry at 10 all, even though he's spending more time, nobody has made 11 the inquiry if that's the only inquiry made. The inquiry 12 that Section 5 was designed to have made about whether 13 there's a retrogressive effect on minority voting rights.

14 QUESTION: Do you have anything further, Mr.
15 Hall? You have one minute left?

16 MR. HALL: I'll speak quickly, Your Honor.

17 ORAL REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF RICHARD A. HALL, ESQ., 18 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

19 MR. HALL: If there were ever a disincentive to 20 reapportionment it seems to me that the scheme proposed by 21 the Respondents would provide that disincentive. Why on 22 earth would a county submit a plan to a district court for 23 approval? Why would it give the District Court any assis-24 tance at all? If it knew that if it were lucky enough to 25 submit a good plan, one to be accepted, it was then going

1 to be sent off to the Attorney General, to the District
2 of Columbia, perhaps, and then come back for a subsequent 3 challenge on constitutionality by anyone who wanted to make 4 it, when the opposite choice would be to submit no plan at 5 all or perhaps submit one that was very artfully deficient,
6 that perhaps even the local federal judge could perceive 7 the shortcoming in, let him make the correction and then 8 it's his plan and you don't have to worry about it. I 9 think this proposal that the United States makes would 10 just compound the problems of our federal courts and our 11 political subdivisions.

12 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you gentlemen, 13 the case is submitted.

14 (Whereupon at 11:03 o'clock a.m. the hearing 15 in the above matter was submitted.)
