2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Lehman v. Nakshian. Mr. Kneedler, I think you may 4 proceed whenever you are ready.

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF EDWIN S. KNEEDLER, ESQ.,
6 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

7 MR. KNEEDLER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and 8 may it please the Court:

9 This case is before the Court on writ of certiorari
10 to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of 11 Columbia Circuit. The question presented is whether Congress
12 has granted a statutory right to trial by jury in suits 13 against the Federal Government under Section 15(c) of the 14 Age Discrimination in Employment Act. That Act prohibits 15 discrimination on the basis of age in employment by private 16 employers as well as by the Federal Government and state and 17 local governments. The first 14 sections of the Act con-
18 tain the substantive and remedial provisions generally appli-
19 cable to private employers and to state and local governments.
20 Section 7 of the Act deems age discrimination by these em-
21 ployers to be violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act and 22 provides for enforcement in accordance with powers, remedies,
23 and procedures contained in the Fair Labor Standards Act. Sec-
24 tion 7(c) then authorizes a person aggrieved by age discri-
25 mination by private employers and state and local governments

1 to bring civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction
2 for appropriate equitable or legal relief. Section 7(c) ex-
3 pressly provides for trial by jury in suits under that sec-4 tion.

5 The United States is expressly excluded from the 6 definition of the term "employer" as that term is used in the 7 first 14 sections of the Age Discrimination act. Instead,
8 age discrimination in federal employment is separately 9 addressed in Section 15. For example, Subsection (a) of 10 Section 15 states a distinct substantive prohibition providing 11 that all personnel actions in the Federal Government are to 12 be made free of discrimination on the basis of age. Subsec-
13 tion (b) then empowers the Civil Service Commission, now
14 the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission after the reor-
15 ganization plan, to enforce this prohibition through appro-16 priate remedies including reinstatement or hiring with or 17 without back pay. Section 15(c) then authorizes a person
18 aggrieved by employment discrimination in the federal sector 19 to bring a civil action in any federal district court of 20 competent jurisdiction for appropriate legal or equitable 21 relief. Section 15(c), unlike Section 7(c) applicable to the 22 other employers, does not contain an express grant of the jury 23 trial right.

24 Respondent brought this action under the Age Dis-25 crimination Act in 1978, alleging discrimination by the

1 Secretary of Navy and certain subordinate officials. Accord-
2 ing to the complaint, respondent's permanent position was abol-
3 ished in 1975 and she worked for the next three years in another posi-
4 tion on a continuing but temporary basis. She alleged that offi-
5 cials of the Department had denied her reassignment and promo-
6 tional opportunities on the basis of age during that three-7 year period.

8 To remedy that alleged discrimination she sought in 9 this case a retroactive promotion as well as an award of 10 back pay measured by the difference between what she actually 11 earned and what she would have earned in the Department of 12 the Navy in the absence of the alleged discrimination.

13 Respondent demanded a jury trial on her age discrimi-14 nation claim. The Government moved to strike that demand for 15 a jury trial. The district court denied the Government's mo-
16 tion to strike concluding that Congress intended to permit jury 17 trials against the Federal Government under Section 15. The 18 district court did however certify the jury trial issue for 19 interlocutory appeal under 28 USC 1292(b). The court of 20 appeals granted the petition for interlocutory review.

21 The court of appeals observed that the Seventh 22 Amendment guarantee of trial by jury does not apply in this 23 case because that guarantee does not apply in suits against 24 the Federal Government. The Court of Appeals also acknowledged 25 that there is no explicit statutory grant of the jury trial

1 right in Section 15. Nevertheless, the Court of Appeals con-
2 cluded that a right to jury trial could be inferred in Section 3 15. It relied on two factors. First, it concluded that the 4 jury trial right could be inferred from the fact that Congress
5 had provided for these suits against the Federal Government 6 to be brought in federal district court rather than in the 7 Court of Claims.

8 Second, the court found this inference from the 9 federal jurisdictional grant in the federal district courts
10 to be strengthened by the fact that Section 15 authorizes 11 the court to award legal or equitable relief.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Kneedler, how did the Court of Ap-
13 peals distinguish the Federal Tort Claims Act?

14 MR. KNEEDLER: As I recall, the Court of Appeals
15 did not expressly address the question of the Federal Tort 16 Claims Act.

17 QUESTION: Yet the Federal Tort Claims Act provides 18 for suits against the Government but does not allow jury trials.

19 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct.

20 QUESTION: But it's express in the Tort Claims 21 Act, is it not?

22 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, yes, what -- this is now codi-23 fied in 28 United States Code 2402, that suits against the 24 Federal Government under 1346 are to be tried without a jury 25 with one exception, that's in tax refund suits. But the

1 origin of that prohibition is in the Tucker Act of 1887 and 2 in the original Tucker Act one house of Congress had provided 3 that jury trials, had permanently authorized jury trials in 4 those claims that were brought in district courts at that 5 time and as well in the circuit courts, and that one house had 6 expressly granted it, the other house had expressly prohibited
7 it. So that it's not surprising that in resolving the dis-
8 agreement between the two houses that Congress expressly re-
9 solved it and barred jury trials in suits under the Tucker 10 Act. In fact, we believe that's strongly indicative of 11 Congress's intent in these matters. When its attention was 12 actually focused on the question, it resolved the question
13 against the availability of jury trial.

14 QUESTION: But is this a suit at common law in the 15 traditional terms? Was there a suit at common law against 16 the United States?

17 MR. KNEEDLER: No, there was not. No, in that sense, 18 no. It was not. This Court held a hundred years ago in the 19 McElrath decision that the Seventh Amendment has no applica-20 tion in suits against the sovereign because suits against the 21 sovereign were unknown at common law or at the very least, if 22 they could be analogized to common law, it could not have 23 been asserted that the jury trial right that was preserved
24 in the Seventh Amendment contemplated a jury trial right 25 against the Federal Government. So it is not a suit at 1 common law.

2 Just to complete my answer to Mr. Justice Rehnquist's
3 question, in the legislative history of the Tort Claims Act 4 Congress simply picked up the bar to jury trials that was 5 contained in the Tucker Act and decided to incorporate it in 6 the Tort Claims Act, and in fact in consideration of the Tort 7 Claims Bill in 1940 in the House there was a proposal to 8 amend the bill to allow jury trials and that was defeated, 9 again by reference to the Tucker Act.

10 So the provisions barring jury trials in our view 11 reflect that when Congress focuses on the question it decides 12 it does not want jury trials. We think that the court of 13 appeals plainly erred in finding the jury trial right in 14 Section 15 of the Age Discrimination Act. As I pointed out, 15 these suits are not suits covered by the Seventh Amendment.
16 Respondent concedes as much and the Court of Appeals so held.
17 Accordingly, there can be no right to jury trial unless 18 Congress has affirmatively recognized that right. Respondent
19 concedes this as well, and in fact this conclusion is compelled 20 by Rule 38(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure. Under rule
21 38(a) where the Seventh Amendment does not apply there is no 22 right to trial by jury in any civil action brought in federal 23 district court except as given by a statute of the United 24 States. There is nothing in the text, the legislative his-25 tory, or the background of Section 15 of the Age Discrimination

1 Act to suggest that Congress intended to grant a right to trial by 2 jury in suits against the Federal Government. To the contrary, all 3 the indicia of congressional intent point in the opposite direction.

4 QUESTION: Well, I gather the Government's position
5 anyway is that it has to be explicit, isn't it?

6 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes.

7 QUESTION: You can't find it by implication?

8 MR. KNEEDLER: That's right. Our position is that 9 it does have to be explicit and --

10 QUESTION: It could be implicit even among private 11 parties, as in Parklane Hosiery.

12 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, that's correct. A right to -- 13 of course, in a suit between private parties where the Seventh 14 Amendment applies. Right; right.

15 QUESTION: But the reason, it has to be explicit 16 when it's an action against the United States Government.

17 MR. KNEEDLER: That's right. That's right.

18 QUESTION: That's the only time in your argument 19 that it has to be explicit.

20 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct; yes. We're not ad-21 dressing the question of suits against private parties, nor 22 where the Seventh Amendment applies, or, for instance, the 23 application of principles of collateral estoppel. Well, in 24 looking at the --

25 QUESTION: May I ask you one question that's brought

1 to mind that, what would you say about a suit against an 2 officer of the United States, the Attorney General or some-3 one, in his official capacity, seeking damages of a Bivens 4 character, something like that?

5 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, if it's a Bivens-type action, 6 then that is a suit, that would be a suit while arising out 7 of his official duties; it's a suit in his personal capacity.
8 When an officer is personally liable under no situation is it 9 our understanding that the Seventh Amendment itself would 10 guarantee a right to trial by jury.

11 QUESTION: Is there -- maybe I'm just totally off 12 base. Is there a possibility of an action against someone 13 in his official capacity -- then it would be like a suit
14 against the United States?

15 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct it would be deemed 16 a suit against the United States, which would invoke all 17 normal rules as if the United States were the injured party.

18 QUESTION: And the doctrine coming from Ex Parte
19 Young was only in equity, it wasn't a suit for damages?

20 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct. In looking at the 21 congressional intent under Section 15 we must of course start
22 with the language of the Act itself. As I mentioned before, 23 Section 15(c) contains no reference to jury trials. Section 24 7(c) on the other hand, which applies to civil actions brought 25 against all other employers covered by the Act, expressly

1 provides for jury trials. Therefore, Congress has demonstrated 2 in the very statute that's under consideration here that it
3 knows how to provide for a right to a jury trial when it wants
4 to do so, and yet declined to grant that right in suits
5 against the Federal Government.

6 Under settled principles of statutory construction, 7 then, we submit, the conclusion to be drawn is that there is 8 no such right under Section 15(c).

9 QUESTION: You could turn that argument around,
10 could you not, and say that in the Federal Tort Claims Act 11 it knew how to bar the right to jury trials and when it has 12 not done so there is a right to jury trial?

13 MR. KNEEDLER: Mr. Justice Rehnquist, under Rule 38
14 certainly now the question we believe has to be whether Con-15 gress affirmatively granted it, granted the right, because 16 Rule 38 provides for trial by jury guaranteed by the 17 Seventh Amendment, whereas given by an act of Congress the 18 mere absence of a prohibition does not in our view constitute 19 the grant of a right to trial by jury, particularly when con-
20 sidered against the background of Congress's general practice 21 of not granting a right to trial by jury in, for instance, the 22 complete range of cases subject to the Tucker Act, which in-23 cludes all monetary claims under the Constitution under any 24 statute, under any contract, and all claims for liquidated
25 or unliquidated damages sounding in tort. That is a broad

1 jurisdictional grant.

2 QUESTION: Was Rule 38 or its predecessor, did it 3 say the same thing at the time of the enactment of the 4 Federal Tort Claims Act?

5 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, the Federal Tort Claims Act
6 was enacted in 1946.

7 QUESTION: In '46 or '47, I think.

8 MR. KNEEDLER: And the Rules of Civil Procedure
9 were adopted, I believe, in 1937 or 1938. But, as I say, 10 the committee reports on the Tort Claims Act do not really 11 discuss the question. For instance, in my quick looking at 12 them, there was no reference to the fact that if we don't 13 prohibit it, it's granted.

14 QUESTION: Well, under your argument, Congress
15 didn't need to provide, explicitly provide what it did 16 provide?

17 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct. It simply picked up
18 the preexisting provision in the Tucker Act because the last 19 phrase that I quoted was from the Tucker Act, referred to 20 suits for liquidated or unliquidated damages not sounding in 21 tort, and Congress in the Tort Claims Act was effectively
22 filling a gap in the Tucker Act and so it was natural that it
23 would also invoke the jury trial prohibition, but I don't think 24 any inference can be drawn that it thought it had to prohibit --

25 QUESTION: Mr. Kneedler, as I recall it, Lorillard

1 emphasized legal relief in 7(c), didn't it, as a basis for 2 the conclusion that jury trial was intended there. The words 3 "legal relief" also appear in 15(c), don't they?

4 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes, they do, Mr. Justice Brennan.
5 But in Lorillard the Supreme Court, this Court, emphasized the 6 use of the word "legal" by reference to its accepted connota-7 tion under the Seventh Amendment. The Court stated that in 8 suits for legal relief, when legal issues are to be decided,
9 the Seventh Amendment ordinarily requires a right to trial 10 by jury. The Court then concluded that Congress must have 11 been aware of this interpretation and intended that when it
12 used the word "legal" to receive into the Age Act the jury
13 trial right that ordinarily attaches because of the Seventh 14 Amendment.

15 That analysis, we submit, has no application here, 16 because the Seventh Amendment doesn't apply to suits against 17 the Federal Government, and therefore by using the word 18 "legal" Congress could not be expected to have attached any 19 significance to it for jury trial purposes. In fact, again,
20 against the background of the Tort Claims Act and the Tucker 21 Act, even in suits that are concededly of a type that would 22 entitle a private party to a jury trial, Congress has estab-
23 lished a different rule for suits against the Federal 24 Government and it's consistent with this practice for Congress
25 not to have affirmatively provided a jury trial right in suits

1 against the Federal Government under the Age Act.

2 QUESTION: And I notice we have an amicus brief
3 from a number of Senators and Congressmen, or all they all 4 Congressmen?

5 MR. KNEEDLER: I believe they're all Congressmen;
6 yes.

7 QUESTION: All Congressmen. They seem to think 8 that they meant by legal relief to suggest that there should 9 be a jury trial. It doesn't say whether they voted on this 10 bill or not. I don't find that.

11 MR. KNEEDLER: I didn't trace whether each of them
12 did. I think it's a familiar principle, though, that the 13 views of individual members post-enactment, as to the 14 meaning of a particular --

15 QUESTION: Even when there were that many?

16 QUESTION: This is one step removed, you suggest, 17 from the usual post-events legislative history?

18 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes, I would submit that it is.

19 QUESTION: How many years removed would this be?

20 MR. KNEEDLER: Oh, this -- the Act was extended to 21 the Federal Government in 1974 so this would be six years, 22 seven years.

23 QUESTION: Quite a few of these, I think, were there.
24 Claude Pepper, for example.

25 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes. Congressman Pepper certainly

1 was in office --

2 QUESTION: Rule 38, by its terms, certainly -- at 3 least the copy I have, is maybe outdated -- doesn't expressly 4 bar a jury trial in a claim against the United States.

5 MR. KNEEDLER: No, but it does say, in the basic 6 provisions dealing with jury trials, that there should be a 7 right to jury trial as guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment 8 or as given by a statute of the United States. Absent -- if 9 a party does not fall into one of those two categories, then 10 -- or if a case does not, then it would seem a party to that 11 case does not have a right to demand a jury trial.

12 QUESTION: Well, but then doesn't the Seventh 13 Amendment come into play?

14 MR. KNEEDLER: In a suit against the Federal 15 Government? I mean, in a suit against a private party it 16 certainly would and you wouldn't even have to get to the ques-17 tion of whether an Act of Congress had granted the right to 18 trial by jury if the suit is one that falls under the 19 Seventh Amendment guarantee.

20 QUESTION: You say, then, that 38 simply doesn't 21 apply to the Federal Government?

22 MR. KNEEDLER: Oh, it does apply, but what it re-
23 quires is that you find, not that the Seventh Amendment does 24 not apply to the Federal Government, so that part of the jury 25 trial right that's preserved in Rule 38(a) does not apply to

1 the Federal Government. But if Congress affirmatively grants
2 a right to trial by jury in a suit against the Federal Govern-
3 ment, then that comes in under the second provision in 4 Rule 38(a) that there's a right to trial by jury as given by 5 a statute of the United States. So, in that sense, Rule 38
6 certainly does apply. It just requires you to look outside 7 of Rule 38 to some statutes to find an affirmative grant of 8 jury trial.

9 QUESTION: Well, how about Curtis v. Loether and 10 the other, the District of Columbia case and the 7th Circuit
11 case where the right to trial by jury wasn't given by statute, 12 but this Court found it was given by the Seventh Amendment?

13 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct; yes. But those cases
14 would have no application here because the Seventh Amendment
15 does not apply to suits against the United States. We're only 16 speaking of suits against the United States, in which it has 17 been settled by this Court that there's no right given by 18 the Seventh Amendment to trial by jury.

19 QUESTION: But isn't your reading of Rule 38 just a 20 way of saying, the question is whether a right to trial by 21 jury is or is not given by a statute? That's the issue.

22 MR. KNEEDLER: That's right. That's right.

23 QUESTION: So that Rule 38 doesn't add or subtract
24 from anything as I see it.

25 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, I think that's basically

1 correct. The only reason I mention it is because the case
2 that seems to be principally relied upon for the proposition
3 that providing for suits to be brought in federal district 4 court implies a right to trial by jury against the United 5 States was a case by the name of United States v. Pfitsch, 6 which is, for instance, the only authority cited in the 7 Moore treatise for that proposition.

8 But Pfitsch arise prior to the adoption of Rule 38
9 and its analysis was not really that the Lever Act, which 10 was the statute involved in that case, itself contained a 11 grant of the jury trial right. It seemed to be more that 12 there was something in the nature of district court jurisdic-
13 tion that provided a right to trial by jury, and we think it's 14 clear, whatever the rule would have been before the adoption 15 of Rule 38(a), that there is no general inherent right to 16 trial by jury in civil actions in federal district court, 17 that Rule 38(a) establishes a mechanism for determining when 18 there is such a right, and, namely, whether the Seventh Amend-
19 ment applies, or you have to look to the statute for a grant 20 of the jury trial right. And so, to that extent I think that 21 whatever the application of Pfitsch may have been at a prior 22 time, Rule 38(a) requires that you look to a statute.

23 Aside from the face of the statute itself, which 24 as I mentioned distinguishes on its face suits against 25 the Federal Government, I think it's also significant that

1 there's not one mention in the legislative history of a 2 reference to trial by jury in suits against the Federal 3 Government. This is -- we think this silence is particularly 4 telling against the general practice of Congress not provid-5 ing for jury trials in those case. Indeed, the most recent 6 situation of which we are aware in which Congress has actually 7 granted a right to trial by jury is in tax refund suits
8 against the Federal Government brought in federal district 9 court. Congress affirmatively granted a right to trial by 10 jury in such suits in 1954.

11 But the House, at that time, for example, viewed 12 this as a harmful precedent if Congress was going to provide 13 for jury trial in suits against the Federal Government
14 generally, and the House's resistance was sufficiently strong 15 that it held up the reporting out of the conference committee 16 of a bill authorizing jury trials for almost a year.

17 The House finally acceded to the provision in the Senate bill 18 because of special situations involved in tax refund suits.

19 We think that this demonstrates that when Congress focuses 20 on the question, at the very least it generates controversy 21 within the Congress, and surely if Congress had intended to 22 depart from its normal practice in the Age Discrimination Act 23 we would expect some debate on it, instead we have silence.

24 QUESTION: That kind of argument is pretty well
25 foreclosed by what we said in the last term in the PPG opinion,

1 isn't it? You can't require Congress to have a controversy or 2 discussion.

3 MR. KNEEDLER: No, I'm not suggesting that that's 4 a hard and fast rule, but in terms of looking at the indicia 5 of legislative intent, if we look beyond the face of the 6 statute, which we submit isn't even necessary here.

7 QUESTION: Let's consider the face of the statute.
8 That's what PPG said. The argument was that if Congress had 9 intended to make the drastic change that it did make, on the 10 face of the statute, it would have talked about it. And we 11 said, that's nonsense. You can't pursue the theory of the 12 dog that didn't bark.

13 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, I'm not suggesting that it's 14 dispositive. I do think, though, that the background against 15 which Congress legislates in this area is at least of some 16 relevance. And I also think that the manner in which Con-
17 gress created a separate Section 15 also reinforces that con-18 clusion. When the Age Discrimination Act was extended to 19 federal employees in 1974, there was initially a proposal to 20 bring federal employees in under the provisions of the first 21 14 sections of the Act, which incorporate the Fair Labor 22 Standards Act procedures. As we point out in our brief, the 23 primary basis of this Court's holding in Lorillard, finding 24 as a matter of statutory construction a right to trial by jury
25 under Section 7, was the incorporation of the Fair Labor

1 Standards Act procedures. But when Congress finally enacted
2 the 1974 amendments, it did not bring the Federal Government 3 under the Fair Labor Standards Act procedures. As we 4 explain in our brief, Congress instead enacted a separate 5 Section 15 which was not patterned after the Fair Labor Stan-
6 dards Act, doesn't incorporate those enforcement procedures.
7 It's instead patterned after Title VII, after Section 717 of 8 the Civil Rights Act which prohibits other types of discrimi-
9 nation in federal employment, and that selection of the Title
10 VII model for federal employees rather than the Fair Labor
11 Standards Act model, is doubly pertinent on the jury trial 12 question. In other words, not only did Congress reject the 13 Fair Labor Standards Act model, upon which this Court had re-
14 lied in Lorillard, subsequently relied; it adopted the Title
15 VII model and the right to trial by jury has not been recog-
16 nized in suits brought under Title VII, even against private 17 employers.

18 So that the only inference that can be drawn from 19 the way in which Congress structured Section 15 is that it 20 did not intend for there to be a right to trial by jury. And 21 this inference drawn from the manner in which Section 15 was 22 formulated in 1974 was only strengthened in 1978, we submit,
23 when Congress amended the statute in a number of respects.

24 First, as I have pointed out, it was in 1978 that 25 Congress amended Section 7 to provide for the jury trial right

1 in suits under that section and didn't under Section 15.
2 Beyond that, Congress enacted a new subsection (f) in Section 3 15 dealing with federal employment, which provides that per-4 sonnel actions in the federal sector are not to be subject to 5 or affected by any other provision of the Act except one pro-6 vision in Section 12 dealing with the upper age limit for 7 federal employees. And the conference report states that 8 this new subsection (f) makes clear that Section 15 is inde-
9 pendent of any other provision of the Act.

10 Subsection (f) and the jury trial provision in 11 private sector cases were both considered by the conference 12 committee. They were both enacted by the Congress and we 13 submit that given this reminder, very vivid reminder in the 14 new Subsection (f), that Section 15 is entirely separate and 15 does not incorporate the types of procedures and remedies that 16 are available in suits against private employers under 17 Section 7. Given that reminder that it's separate, the fact 18 that Congress enacted a jury trial right under Section 7 and 19 not under Section 15, we again think is very telling. because 20 it could not have overlooked, given the separate nature of 21 these provisions, it could not have overlooked the need to 22 amend Section 15 if it had chosen to do so.

23 QUESTION: Doesn't Pfitsch turn almost entirely 24 on the court in which the case is authorized to be brought?
25 Doesn't Justice Brandeis's opinion there say, since Congress

1 authorized suit to be brought in the district court, and in 2 district court you get a jury trial?

3 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, there are several things
4 about Pfitsch. One, Congress had focused on the question of 5 jurisdiction. It had considered a provision to have these 6 cases brought under the Tucker Act and rejected it. And the 7 Court could conceive of no rational ground for doing this 8 except to provide for jury trial rights so the rationale of 9 Pfitsch is the Congress focused on the question, but beyond 10 that, as I mentioned, Pfitsch also seems to depend on the 11 notion that there is something inherent in district court
12 jurisdiction, not on the fact that the statute granted a 13 right, but there was a right that somehow attached because 14 the case was brought in federal court.

15 QUESTION: Well, it said so in so many words, didn't 16 it?

17 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, but it says, it said that the 18 trial would be according to the ordinary procedures of suits 19 of law in federal district court. Now, since Pfitsch was 20 decided under Rule 38(a), one of the ordinary procedures is 21 that there is not a right to trial by jury unless the Seventh 22 Amendment applies or the jury trial right is granted by a 23 statute of Congress.

24 QUESTION: What's your authority for that?

25 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, I think one explanation for

1 this is that at the time Pfitsch was decided there was the 2 former 28 United States Code 770 which provided a statutory 3 right for trial by jury in suits at law in the federal dis-
4 trict courts. This was repealed in 1948, so it's conceivable
5 that in Pfitsch the Court was relying on that statutory 6 ground. But that, as I say, that general statutory provision 7 was repealed in 1948. It was essentially unnecessary because 8 the Seventh Amendment, in large effect it then implemented the 9 Seventh Amendment. It was contained in the original Judiciary 10 Act of 1789. But Rule 38 made it largely unnecessary because 11 Rule 38 expressly itself protects the jury trial right.

12 QUESTION: Well, if this statute specifically said
13 there would be no jury trial in suits against the Government
14 which are consented to, I don't suppose Pfitsch would require 15 a jury trial?

16 MR. KNEEDLER: No, that's correct.

17 QUESTION: And you're simply saying that you read 18 the statute that way?

19 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct. I would like to 20 reserve the balance of my time if I could, please.

21 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Mrs. Barry.

22 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MRS. PATRICIA J. BARRY, ESQ.,

23 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

24 MS. BARRY: Mr. Chief Justice; may it please the 25 Court:

1 Parties are entitled to a jury trial in suits
2 against the Federal Government under the ADEA, the Age Dis-
3 crimination in Employment Act. Respondent has no quarrel
4 with Petitioner when he states that the Government must con-
5 sent in order to be sued.

6 QUESTION: Was this the kind of an action that 7 existed at the time the Seventh Amendment was adopted?

8 MS. BARRY: No, Your Honor, but I believe in the 9 Pernel case this Court indicated that often the common law 10 theory of a right to a jury trial as it existed in 1789 or in 11 1791 is often extended if it can be analogized. That is, if 12 the remedy that you have --

13 QUESTION: Did that case involve a situation with 14 sovereign immunity being waived?

15 MS. BARRY: No, Your Honor, I believe it was a 16 landlord-tenant case coming out of here out of the District
17 of Columbia.

18 QUESTION: Don't you think that makes some difference?

19 MS. BARRY: Your Honor, I don't believe so, for the 20 following reasons. I believe that the petitioner confuses 21 the doctrine of sovereign immunity with an unproved and an 22 unauthorized doctrine of sovereign immunity from jury trials.
23 Now, if the petitioner is correct that in order for a jury 24 trial to be obtained when the Government is sued and the 25 statute is silent, then the instructional guidance set out by

1 this Court in Pfitsch, Law, Wickwire, and the accord in 2 Galloway makes no sense, because in all of those instances
3 the analysis set out by the Supreme Court was that where you 4 had a case that was considered an action at law and there was 5 exclusive jurisdiction in the district court, at least with 6 respect to Law and Pfitsch, the conclusion was that Congress
7 intended a right to jury trial.

8 Now, this is precisely what the circuit court of 9 appeals found when it went to the language of Section 15. As 10 petitioner has indicated to you, there was heavy reliance by 11 the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia on the fact 12 that Section 15(c) talks about exclusive jurisdiction in the 13 federal district courts.

14 The second reliance is the fact that Section 15(c)
15 is identical in its language to section 7(c) and this Court re-
16 lied upon the language, legal relief. Mr. Justice Marshall 17 writing for the majority in Lorillard found that the Congress is 18 imputed with having knowledge of the well developed common law
19 meaning of the term, legal relief. And therefore concluded 20 that Congress knows what it's doing when it uses certain 21 terms and therefore on that basis as well as other bases this 22 Court concluded a right to jury trial under 7(c).

23 QUESTION: Ms. Barry, I suppose there was no Lever
24 Act, as involved in the Pfitsch case, at common law in 1791?

25 MS. BARRY: I don't think so, Your Honor. I think

1 that dealt with compensation, when the Government was setting
2 up requisitions for -- I think it occurred during World War I.

3 QUESTION: Right.

4 MS. BARRY: And I don't think that kind of writ
5 could be obtained in the common law courts of the King, back 6 in 1789 and 1791. Now, again referring to the language of 7 Section 15, to quote this Court in Pfitsch, "All difficulties
8 of construction vanish if we are willing to give to the words
9 of Section 15, 'deliberately adopted,' their natural meaning."

10 I have already addressed myself to the language of 11 the fact that legal relief is contained in Section 15(c).
12 And again I want to add that it states identically the same
13 statement that is found in Section 7(c), that is a person
14 aggrieved by age discrimination in the federal sector of em-15 ployment is entitled to bring a civil action in a federal 16 district court for such legal and equitable relief as will 17 effectuate the purposes of this chapter, this chapter being 18 the ADEA.

19 Now, petitioner claims that Section 15 is really 20 different, that it was really modeled after Title VII. Well, 21 as, again in Lorillard, as Justice Marshall noted, Section 4
22 of the ADEA which contains the prohibitions against age dis-23 crimination were lifted, or derived, in haec verba, from the 24 prohibitions found in 42 USC 2000(e)-2(a)(1). But this 25 Court said, aside from the fact that there is Title VII

1 overlay and that there is language found from Title VII,
2 you've got to go to the remedies and procedures. And in here, 3 in Section 15, as well as Section 15(c), there is a dramatic 4 departure from what is found in Title VII, just as there is a 5 dramatic departure from what is found in Title VII in the 6 Section 7 or the other portion of the ADEA.

7 And what is that? There is an opportunity to by-8 pass the administrative remedy set out in Section 15(b) for 9 the federal employee and there is significantly the right
10 to seek legal relief. That term "legal relief" is conspicu-11 ously absent in Title VII. The only mention you have in 12 Title VII of any description of relief is the equitable re-13 lief.

14 Now, the petitioner at page 38 of his brief says
15 that we should not ascribe or we should not impute to Con-
16 gress the common law meaning of legal relief when it is found
17 in Section 15(c) because Congress and the Seventh Amendment 18 have always treated the issue of jury trial differently in 19 the context of actions at law against the Government.

20 Well, the Seventh Amendment has no applicability 21 here because once sovereign immunity is waived that drops
22 out of the picture, and then the ordinary principles of sta-
23 tutory construction obtain. And you go to the statute --

24 QUESTION: At least that's what the court of appeals 25 majority said.

1 MS. BARRY: Yes, sir, and as I understand that this 2 Court has held in Pfitsch, Law, Wickwire, and Galloway. Also, in 3 the 3rd Circuit the Collins case, which I found to be a rather inter-
4 esting case. The 3rd Circuit found that the impact of the Seventh 5 Amendment was no longer present once the Government of the 6 Virgin Islands had waived immunity and allowed itself to be 7 sued in a tort action. Then it said it was free of the impact 8 of the Seventh Amendment. Then the ordinary principles of 9 statutory construction then became applicable.

10 And, furthermore, in the 3rd Circuit, in that 11 Collins case, that court of appeals concluded that there were 12 two critical determinants present, which were the two same 13 determinants found by the Court of Appeals here in the 14 District of Columbia and here in Miss Nakshian's case, con-15 cluding that there was the right to a jury trial.

16 Now, with respect to how Congress has treated the 17 issue of jury trials differently, I'm uncertain what is meant 18 by that language except that there have been instances, as 19 the petitioner has submitted in his argument, where Congress 20 has expressly denied a right to jury trial. One of them is 21 the Federal Tort Claims Act. Another is actions, all actions 22 tried under the Tucker Act, and there is another one which 23 is actions to quiet title found at 28 USC 2409(a).

24 Now, on the other hand, Congress has deemed fit to 25 expressly grant jury trials. Those are found in the tax

1 refund suit and in the National War Risk Insurance Act and 2 World War Veterans Act cases, and National Life Insurance Act
3 cases. But in those instances Congress was already respond-4 ing to a situation in which the case law had already estab-
5 lished a right to jury trial.

6 Now, with respect to the reliance of the Court of 7 Appeals on the fact that there was exclusive jurisdiction in 8 the district courts, again Pfitsch states that the nature
9 of the jurisdiction of the district court is of importance 10 not only because of the questions directly involved but 11 because the answer given to it will determine incidentally 12 whether plaintiffs who proceed under Section 10 are entitled 13 to a jury trial. And then it went on to hold that exclusive 14 jurisdiction in the district court establishes as an incident
15 a right to a jury trial, and that has subsequently been fol-
16 lowed by other courts of appeals including the Collins case, 17 Whitney v. United States, Hacker v. United States.

18 Now, the petitioner for the first time, before the 19 Supreme Court argued that the language found in Section 15(f)
20 means that the other rights, remedies, and procedures set out 21 on the other section of the Act do not apply to actions brought 22 by persons aggrieved by federal age discrimination.

23 Your Honors, if we follow the logic of what the 24 petitioner is saying, we will in effect have a situation where 25 courts will be completely left without guidance as to what

1 the rights, remedies, and procedures are with respect to 2 federal ADEA cases. And why do I say that? According to the 3 petitioner's arguments made in his brief as well as in his 4 reply brief, courts would not be allowed to turn to other
5 sections of the ADEA and to pertinent portions of the FLSA
6 for guidance. For example, Section 4 contains prohibitions
7 against age discrimination. However, if Section 15(f) is 8 interpreted the way the petitioner would have you interpret it, 9 the Court can't go over this to find out what would establish 10 a prima facie case of age discrimination. Furthermore, we 11 can't get -- according to the petitioner's argument -- we 12 cannot get liquidated damages. Federal employees or those 13 aggrieved by the federal sector of employment could not get 14 attorneys' fees and costs.

15 Now, petitioner has conceded that federal employees
16 are entitled to liquidated damages under the FLSA, as reaf-17 firmed in 29 USC 404(f). However, they're saying by the 18 logic of 15(f), you don't get liquidated damages under the 19 ADEA.

20 Furthermore, even if we can assume that Section 15(f)
21 means that the other provisions of the ADEA do not apply to 22 the federal sector, you still have, or one is confronted with, 23 the situation that you still have the phrase, legal relief,
24 found in Section 15(c). You still have Section 15(c) identi-25 cal to the language of 7(c), on which this Court primarily

1 based its conclusion that public employers and private sector
2 employers are entitled to a jury trial right. Now, we contend 3 that the reason that Congress didn't bother to amend 15(c) in 4 1978 -- well, it was probably an oversight, because the main 5 purpose of the '78 amendments was not being focused on the 6 right of a jury trial. That was, as you all know, was 7 incidentally raised October 19, 1977, when HR 5383 came over 8 from Congress over to the Senate for deliberation, and at 9 that time Senator Kennedy made this relatively small jury
10 trial amendment to Section 7. It is codified at Section 11 7(c)(2).

12 The reason, I contend, that Congress did not bother 13 to amend Section 15(c) at the same time is not because they 14 were deliberately going to deny a right of jury trial to par-
15 ties bringing actions involving the Federal Government, simply 16 because it would have been mere surplusage. Congress didn't 17 bother defining the prohibitions of age discrimination in 18 Section 15; didn't bother defining the statute of limitations 19 -- that's found in 29 USC 255; didn't bother instructing the 20 Court as to the specificity of legal and equitable relief 21 found in Section 7(b); didn't bother telling the Government
22 you have to post notices --

23 QUESTION: Well, Ms. Barry, you can see our diffi-
24 culty with the case is that it would have been so easily 25 resolved by Congress if it had said there will be a right to

1 jury trial or there won't be a right to jury trial. And here
2 we're left with a kind of fuzzy legislative history and impli-
3 cations and that sort of thing.

4 MS. BARRY: Which is exactly why I think we're be-5 fore this Court today is that the problem, I believe, that 6 came up in October of '77 was, first of all, the focus of the 7 '78 amendments was on the mandatory retirement age and then 8 eliminating the upper age ceiling for federal employees. They 9 wanted to expand the rights of federal employees and in fact
10 did so to a greater degree than they did for people covered 11 under the other sections of the Act.

12 For example, all you have to do is be 40 and you're pro-
13 tected under the ADEA if you're a federal employee or a per-14 son aggrieved by the federal sector of employment. However, 15 you do have restrictions, qualifications set out in other
16 portions of the ADEA that we contend Section 15(f) means you 17 don't apply it to federal employees. For example, having to 18 retire at 70 or if you're a professor, maybe teaching at NIH,
19 you're not going to have, I think it's Section 12(c) or 12(d)
20 applied to you. I think that was the focus.

21 Furthermore, the only cases coming up at that time 22 -- you have to keep in mind, I think, Your Honor, that in 23 1967 the Age Act had been around for a number of years. Peo-24 ple had ripened, the courts were getting a handle on how to 25 treat the private sector employment. Whereas, the public

1 employers, we attorneys in the public, you know, were just 2 getting into it. That provision, the ADEA was not amended
3 until '74, so by '77 federal employees weren't even thinking 4 of --

5 QUESTION: My point was that Congress in '46 in the 6 Federal Tort Claims Act when it had not been around at all, 7 so to speak, found itself perfectly able to say, there shall 8 be no right of jury trial. And it could have gone one way
9 or the other in this Act.

10 MS. BARRY: Your Honor, I think I can distinguish
11 that situation, because the Federal Tort Claims Act at 1346(b) 12 is simply that one section found under a general statute that 13 did not allow jury trials in the first place. I think it can 14 be distinguished here because there is the standard principle 15 of statutory construction that says acts are construed in 16 pari materia whenever that can be done. And in the same
17 fashion, I think that Congress automatically assumes that all 18 of the other sections of the Act, 1 through 14, 16 and 17,
19 would automatically be applied to Section 15 unless you end 20 up with absurd results --

21 QUESTION: But there's also a standard principle 22 that the Government waives its sovereign immunity only to the 23 extent that it is stated by Congress.

24 MS. BARRY: That is correct, Your Honor, but I 25 don't think that is the same thing as what the petitioner is saying that there is a doctrine of sovereign

1 immunity against jury trials unless there is an express grant,
2 at least, as I understand the case law precedent in this area
3 where courts have been called upon to construe the mode of 4 trial procedure where the statute is silent and the Government
5 is being sued, and the ordinary principles of statutory con-6 struction obtain.

7 I want to add, also, Your Honor, that while we have 8 approached both in our briefs that, and certainly because the 9 Court of Appeals relies on the language found in Section 15, I've 10 seen nothing in the legislative history that indicates that 11 Congress did not intend that the express grant found at 12 7(c)(2) would not apply to Section 15(f). In fact, the 1974 13 amendments stated that the purpose of extending the rights of 14 -- or rather, extending the ADEA protection to federal employ-15 ees was being done in the same fashion as what was being ac-16 complished for the private sector employees. Again, in 1978, 17 the jury trial amendment was an incident to a much more over-18 powering interest on the part of Congress, and that was the 19 mandatory retirement age, eliminating the upper age ceiling 20 for federal employees and also trying to straighten out the 21 4(f)(2) defense set up by employers under the -- you know, 22 with all the involuntary retirements that were occurring under 23 the pension benefits set out in Section 4(f)(2) of the Act.

24 With respect to the legislative history, in March 25 15, 1974, HR 93-9113, it stated that the committee expects

1 that expanded coverage under the Age Discrimination in Employ-
2 ment law will remove discriminatory barriers against employ-3 ment of older workers in government jobs at the federal and 4 local government levels, as it has and continues to do in pri-
5 vate employment.

6 Now, this is important because in '74 the law was 7 amended to include all public employers. However, public em-
8 ployers were included by simply amending the definitions, I
9 believe, found in 630. Section 15 came in to give jurisdic-
10 tion to the Civil Service Commission, not because there was 11 an absolute analysis of Section 15 to Section 717, but only 12 because the Civil Service Commission had historically had 13 jurisdiction over all kinds of matters regarding federal em-
14 ployees. It clearly at that time had Title VII jurisdiction 15 and then, simultaneously in 1974, was given jurisdiction of 16 FLSA claims.

17 Now, the Reorganization Act, I contend, to a certain 18 extent has mooted that distinction, because the Civil Service
19 Commission no longer has jurisdiction of the Title VII com-
20 plaints nor of ADEA complaints. That, along with the relin-21 quishment of the DOL jurisdiction over ADEA claims, has been 22 sent over to the EEOC. One of the purposes of the reorganiza-23 tion plan of President Carter was that he was very concerned with 24 the fact that there was not uniformity of result being ob-25 tained because of the different agencies' controlling or

1 trying to administer the antidiscrimination statutes for var-
2 ious employers. And he said, the reason we want to send it
3 over to EEOC is because EEOC has a long history and expertise
4 in administering and resolving complaints of discrimination.
5 If we use the reasoning of petitioner of Section 15(f), then 6 we will obtain wholly incongruous results in that that desire
7 of President Carter will not be met by the reorganization 8 plan. For the reasons that I've just stated, we will not be 9 able to get liquidated damages, we will not be able to get 10 attorneys' fees and costs, we will not be able to do -- we will 11 not have to do an opt-in class action, we have a different
12 way of going under, we will go under Rule 23 --

13 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We'll resume there at 14 1 o'clock, Mrs. Barry.

15 MS. BARRY: Thank you.

16 (Recess)

17 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: You may continue, 18 Mrs. Barry.

19 MS. BARRY: Thank you, Your Honor.

20 Your Honors, I believe one of the Justices asked 21 Mr. Kneedler whether or not all of the Congresspeople whose 22 names appear as amici on the brief had voted on the '78 amend-23 ments. It was brought to my attention that except for 24 Mr. Lantos, Mr. Wyden, and Mr. Frank, and possibly 25 Mr. Jeffords, aside from those three or possibly four, all of

1 the members who appear as amici on the brief --

2 QUESTION: What difference does it make?

3 MS. BARRY: Oh, only in response to that question,
4 Your Honor. I'm sorry.

5 QUESTION: You don't suggest it makes any difference
6 whether they express that view as members of Congress, later
7 members of Congress, or future members of Congress, do you?

8 MS. BARRY: Well, Your Honor, I thought that in 9 response to the Justice's question that perhaps the intent, 10 those who wrote up the '78 amendments, who were close to the 11 law and writing up the conference reports surrounding HR --

12 QUESTION: In order to do that, the best way would 13 be to take a poll of the Congress, wouldn't it?

14 MS. BARRY: Yes, sir; yes, indeed, the best kind of 15 legislative history is that that is contemporaneous with the 16 law. With respect to the petitioner's argument presented in 17 his brief regarding "deep pocket," I don't believe that that 18 theory is applicable to to the instant case for the following 19 reasons. In fact, an age case is the kind of case that is a 20 well set up kind of case for juries in that juries are limited 21 to amounts owing, which generally take the form of back pay, 22 and liquidated damages becomes the measure of that pecuniary 23 loss. The trend of the case law at this time, at least with 24 respect to the 3rd, the 4th, and the 5th Circuits, is that 25 there is no right to compensatory or punitive damages. And in

1 fact, at page 14 of the conference report, it states that the 2 ADEA as amended by this Act does not provide remedies of a
3 punitive nature, and that the liquidated damages become a 4 substitute to compensate for compensatory damages that are too
5 obscure to define in any other way. I might add that this 6 Court unhesitatingly applied the right of a jury trial in 7 1978 to state employers, or to other public employers, unhesi-8 tatingly where the theory of the "deep pocket" would have as 9 much applicability as it would in the instant case.

10 Now, on this --

11 QUESTION: Don't those cases involve the surrender
12 of sovereign immunity by the states?

13 MS. BARRY: Your Honor, in that one --

14 QUESTION: Or was it imposed on them from the out-15 side?

16 MS. BARRY: I believe it was imposed upon them from 17 the outside in 1974 when Congress amended 630 to 18 include the definition of state employers under the purview 19 of the Act.

20 With respect to the argument that Rule 38(a) -- with 21 respect to whether or not there was the statutory grant of 22 the right to a jury trial, I believe that what the petitioner
23 is arguing is that in order for 38(a) to apply in the instant
24 case there has to be an express grant of jury trial. Again,
25 I believe that that is based, as I understand the petitioner's

1 brief, on a presumption that there is no right to a jury
2 trial and that again is confused with the doctrine of sove-
3 reign immunity, which again, I'd like to emphasize, drops out
4 of the picture once the Government has consented to be sued.
5 And then, as the court of appeals held, and as the 3rd Circuit
6 held in the Collins case, as it was held in the Monolith case,
7 the statutory principles, or rather the principles of statu-8 tory construction become applicable and the doctrine of 9 sovereign immunity is no longer of any concern..

10 And again, I'd like to emphasize that I believe 11 that that was the instruction set out by this Court in Law, 12 Pfitsch, Wickwire, and Galloway.

13 In conclusion, Your Honors, I'd like to state that 14 based upon the language of the Act, as the court of appeals 15 found by analyzing Section 15, there is an implied right of 16 jury trial. And certainly, as has been indicated in prior 17 cases dealing with the Federal Torts Claims Act, dealing with 18 actions to quiet title to real estate in which the Government 19 is a party, Congress knows how to deny a jury trial, and 20 expressly chose not to take such a deliberate act in the case
21 of the ADEA.

22 QUESTION: Well, as Justice Rehnquist suggested this 23 morning, they know what words to use the other way too, don't 24 they?

25 MS. BARRY: In making an express grant of jury trial?

1 QUESTION: Yes, in saying what they mean, one way
2 or the other.

3 MS. BARRY: Yes, sir, which they did in Section 4 7(c)(2), probably operating under the --

5 QUESTION: Congress has done it both ways in dif-6 ferent settings, have they not?

7 MS. BARRY: That's correct, Your Honor. They have 8 allowed an express grant of jury trial as the petitioner con-
9 ceded for tax refund suits. But again, Your Honor, as I re-
10 call the history of that particular statute, it was already a 11 matter of case law under revised statutory --

12 QUESTION: Because the collector was the defendant
13 rather than the United States.

14 MS. BARRY: I note the petitioner raised that but I
15 think it's a very artificial one. For example, in the legis-
16 lative history surrounding, there was a Senate report that 17 came out and the Senators who signed off said that it was an 18 artificial, fictional kind of thing that really no longer 19 had an applicability because the Commissioner never paid the 20 bill. Everybody knew that the Federal Government really paid
21 it and the U.S. attorney defended it --

22 QUESTION: Wasn't that the reason assigned, at any 23 rate, even though it was concededly artificial or antiquated?

24 MR. BARRY: Well, Your Honor, I believe with -- 25 in passing in dicta, that I believe that this Court found in

1 Wickwire that it really came from a fair implication from the 2 statutory language, that is, it was an action at law. And in 3 fact it was noted that the petitioner in that case -- oh, I'm 4 sorry, the respondent, which was the Government, indicated
5 that, you know, the Seventh Amendment applied, and this Court 6 chastised the Government for making such an argument and,
7 said, no, it came from the implication of the statutory 8 language and that it was an action at law.

9 Thus, I would say, Your Honors, that the conclusion
10 of the district court is well grounded in precedent, when it
11 held that there is an implied right to a jury trial by the fact
12 that Congress vested exclusive jurisdiction in the district
13 courts and by the fact that it used the identical language 14 found in Section 7(c) when it developed Section 15(c) and 15 used the term "legal relief."

16 Now, as Theodore Roosevelt said, he asked the ques-17 tion, who is the Government? The Government is all of us in 18 this room. It is you and it is I, and to paraphrase the words
19 of Justice Sneed concurring in Franquez v. United States, 20 he states, "I am unwilling to assume that jury trials will 21 not adequately protect the interests of the United States, for 22 it is after all only placing the interest of ourselves in the 23 hands of ourselves."

24 QUESTION: What did Louis XIV say about government?

25 MS. BARRY: Being the Sun King, I'm sure he

1 identified the state with himself.

2 QUESTION: L'état, c'est moi.

3 MS. BARRY: I respectfully request that the decision
4 of the Circuit Court of Appeals be affirmed. Thank you for 5 your kind attention, Your Honors.

6 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
7 further, Mr. Kneedler?

8 MR. KNEEDLER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

9 ORAL ARGUMENT OF EDWIN S. KNEEDLER, ESQ.,

10 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER -- REBUTTAL

11 MR. KNEEDLER: Just one quick point. I'd just like 12 to emphasize that in 1978 when Congress affirmatively granted
13 the right to trial by jury in suits under Section 7(c), 14 and did not do so under Section 15(c), it also enacted the 15 new subsection (f) which says, "Any personnel action of a 16 federal department shall not be subject to or affected by any 17 provision of this Act," at Section 12, dealing with the upper 18 age limitation.

19 Given this reminder, and codified expression of 20 congressional intent in the statute, that Section 15 is dis-21 tinct from Section 7, we submit that Congress could not have 22 been under the impression that the same rule would be applied.

23 QUESTION: Well, now, Mrs. Barry says that this 24 argument, the logic of this argument would mean that none of 25 the other provisions of the Act are applicable at all.

1 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, Mr. Justice Stewart --

2 QUESTION: Liquidated damages or statute of limita-3 tions or --

4 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, of course, there is a standard 5 statute of limitations provisions for suits against the 6 Government under 28 United States Code 2401, for suits against 7 the Government generally.

8 Insofar as she was suggesting that the other provi-
9 sions of the Act wouldn't apply --

10 QUESTION: Right.

11 MR. KNEEDLER: -- Section 15 --

12 QUESTION: She said the logic of your argument would 13 lead to that conclusion.

14 MR. KNEEDLER: Oh, that's true, but we're not sug-15 gesting that the new subsection accomplished anything that 16 wasn't in the statute before. All it did was reiterate what 17 was implicit in the structure of the statute, because sub-18 section (f) contained separate substantive provisions. There's 19 no need to refer back to the other provisions that contain 20 separate remedial and enforcement provisions, and separate -- 21 authorizes the Civil Service Commission with a separate au-
22 thority to fashion bona fide occupational qualifications.

23 QUESTION: So you're content, and you say that the 24 logical conclusion of your argument is the correct conclusion.

25 MR. KNEEDLER: Is the correct conclusion, that

1 Congress deliberately chose to do that; yes.

2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Thank you,
3 counsel. The case is submitted.

4 (Whereupon, at 1:10 o'clock p.m., the case in the 5 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
