MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments first this morning in Gulf Oil Company v. Bernard.

Mr. Duck, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF WILLIAM G. DUCK, ESQ.,

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

MR. DUCK: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

This case is before you on a writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit. The grant of certiorari is limited only to the issue respecting communications. The issue in the case is whether the district court can enter a monitoring order recommended by the Manual when potential abuses of the class action device have actually taken place.

The 5th Circuit held that such an order could not be entered, that it was a prior restraint, and therefore unconstitutional. Before getting into the facts, I would like to briefly state our position. Our position is that under Rule 23 the district court has a unique responsibility to monitor the actions of the parties before it, to protect the interests of absentees, to insure compliance with that fiduciary obligation that attorneys have to the courts in the administration of justice. We submit to the Court that in this case the district court properly exercised its discretion under Rule 23

1 and more importantly, he properly accommodated the First
2 Amendment rights of all parties in a fair and equitable man-3 ner.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Duck, is the actual order that was 5 entered in the record here somewhere?

6 MR. DUCK: It is, Your Honor, it's on page 124 of 7 the Joint Appendix.

8 QUESTION: Thank you.

9 MR. DUCK: The facts in this case are very simple.
10 The action was commenced on May 18, 1976, as a class action.
11 The plaintiffs sought to represent a group of employees, pre-
12 sent and former employees, at the employer's Port Arthur
13 refinery. They also sought to represent a group of appli-
14 cants for employment nationwide, without restriction as to geo-15 graphic location. The applicants, the plaintiffs in this 16 case, are being represented by three members associated with 17 the Legal Defense Fund, and two private attorneys, 18 Miss Morrison and Mr. Cotton.

19 Now, one month prior to the commencement of this 20 action, the employer in this case entered into a conciliation
21 agreement with the EEOC and the OEO. And that agreement pro-22 vided for back pay awards to about 616 employees at the plant.
23 It's important for the Court to know that the group of indi-
24 viduals who were going to receive conciliation benefits 25 was much smaller than plaintiffs' proposed class.

1 At the time the employer was served with the com-2 plaint, already 430 of the 616 individuals entitled to 3 conciliation benefits had received those benefits, so there 4 was only about 180 people left to sign up.

5 At the time the employer was served it voluntarily 6 suspended contact with all potential class members and the 7 reason for this is because under Rule 23(e) the employer felt 8 that by settlement it might be interpreted to be approved by 9 the court, and the employer wanted to wait until the action 10 got before the court and the court could get control of the 11 litigation.

12 Now, four days after suit, just four days after 13 suit, a meeting was called by respondents and attended by 14 three of their attorneys.

15 QUESTION: When you say "after suit," do you mean 16 after the filing of the complaint?

17 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice Rehnquist, that's right; and 18 prior to the time that Gulf was served. It was attended by 19 three attorneys: one attorney, Mr. Thibodeaux, who is asso-
20 ciated with the Legal Defense Fund; and two private attorneys 21 Miss Morrison, and Mr. Cotton. In that meeting, as we see 22 from affidavits of opposing counsel that are in the Appendix 23 on page 111, 114, and 117, it was shown that they discussed
24 the issues in this lawsuit, they discussed the conciliation
25 agreement, and they talked about the hazards of fair

1 employment litigation.

2 Now, it was disclosed to Gulf by an attendee at the 3 meeting, and Gulf so reported to the court in its brief, that 4 the attorneys also stated to the group not to sign the con-5 ciliation agreement, if they had received checks from the 6 employer to send them back, because they could recover double 7 the amount in this by prosecuting this lawsuit. At that point 8 in time the employer was put in a very difficult position.
9 It sought an interim order --

10 QUESTION: Mr. Duck, let me just be sure I under-11 stand, did the affidavits represent that they could recover 12 twice as much in the litigation?

13 MR. DUCK: No, it didn't, Your Honor.

14 QUESTION: Where does that show up in the record 15 then?

16 MR. DUCK: That shows up in our brief to the court 17 where we represented to the court that that had taken place.

18 QUESTION: And what was the source of that represen-19 tation?

20 MR. DUCK: Your Honor, this is outside the record, 21 but one of the attendees, one of the black attendees at the 22 meeting, voluntarily came forward and reported what took place 23 to the employer. It was reconfirmed by the employer, but 24 but the individual who made the representations 25 to Gulf would not sign an affidavit for

1 personal reasons. For personal reasons.

2 QUESTION: Well, what it boils down to is it's not 3 in the record then?

4 MR. DUCK: Your Honor, we submit for purposes 5 before the court and what the district court had to look at 6 it was part of the record, it was in the brief, it was a 7 representation by counsel.

8 QUESTION: But a representation you were unable to 9 substantiate?

10 MR. DUCK: Your Honor, it's our position in this 11 case that the district court must be able to look at every-12 thing that's before him when trying to decide whether to enter 13 such a monitoring order. He must look at the entire atmos-14 phere. He shouldn't be required to resolve conflicts between 15 attorneys or between --

16 QUESTION: If you rely on a fact that isn't estab-17 lished as a fact, maybe there's a possibility that that might 18 happen, but you can't really say that the record demonstrates 19 that it did happen.

20 MR. DUCK: Your Honor, it's really not our position.
21 We are not here advocating -- although we believe it happened
22 -- we're not advocating that the district court should resolve 23 that conflict. We're simply saying that the totality of the 24 situation that the district court looked at at that point in 25 time gave him sufficient discretion to enter this order.

1 QUESTION: Do you regard that as an essential part 2 of what he would need in order to enter such an order?

3 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice Stevens --

4 QUESTION: Shall we assume it happened or not 5 happened for the purpose of deciding the case?

6 MR. DUCK: I don't think it's essential for this 7 Court to resolve the conflict either. In other words, I think 8 that the facts --

9 QUESTION: It seems to me you should not be relying 10 on it here.

11 MR. DUCK: We submit, Your Honor, that it in fact 12 did happen, that the district court could in fact take that 13 into consideration.

14 QUESTION: Well, but you can't submit as a fact 15 something and say we don't have to decide whether it's a fact 16 or not?

17 MR. DUCK: Yes, sir. I would like to submit,
18 Justice Stevens, that here we had a situation that the district 19 court was looking at the fact that the meeting took place, 20 the fact that the affidavit stated certain representations 21 or comments were made to the potential class members in 22 attendance. At that time these potential class members were 23 making very basic decisions about their rights, whether to 24 sign up in a conciliation agreement or whether to join in 25 this lawsuit. And we think those factors weigh just as

1 heavily as the conflict that exists between counsel as far 2 as what the district court had to do and the action he had to 3 take.

4 QUESTION: It seems to me there's quite a differ-5 ence between a lawyer saying that the claim that would be 6 filed would be for an amount twice as much as the settlement 7 or something like that, which presumably might be an accurate 8 description of the claim, and a statement by the lawyer that 9 if we file such a claim we guarantee that you will recover 10 twice as much. And you're suggesting that they said the 11 latter rather than the former?

12 MR. DUCK: That's true, Your Honor. We do --

13 QUESTION: It's very possible that a person attend-14 ing the meeting reporting it might not have the distinction 15 between those two kinds of statements very clearly in mind.

16 MR. DUCK: Your Honor, it's not our position that 17 any misrepresentation actually took place. It would be im-
18 possible to know if it was a misrepresentation until the law-
19 suit was tried and a final verdict was entered, whether it 20 was --

21 QUESTION: Well, shall we decide the case on the 22 assumption that there were no misrepresentations at that 23 meeting?

24 MR. DUCK: No, Your Honor, as I again urge the 25 Court, to look at the entire circumstances that were before

1 the district court, I submit to the Court that it's not --

2 QUESTION: You're saying that some things outside 3 the record should be treated as though they were before the 4 district court.

5 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice Stevens, I submit to the 6 Court that the district courts, acting in their discretion, 7 under the federal rules, decide matters that are before them
8 but may be not technically in the record all the time:
9 motions to compel, discovery orders, all these types of 10 matters.

11 QUESTION: What kind of an affidavit would be suf-
12 ficient in connection with -- would an information and belief 13 affidavit be all right, or not?

14 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, to support the state-15 ments that the employer represented to the court?

16 QUESTION: Yes. If an affidavit that the employer
17 had been informed by so-and-so; this is hearsay?

18 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, I think that that 19 would again be appropriate for the district court to consider 20 as far as what action he's going to take based upon his dis-21 cretion.

22 QUESTION: But that kind of an affidavit wasn't 23 presented, was it?

24 MR. DUCK: That's true, indeed, Your Honor. We do 25 submit that this case shouldn't turn on exactly what was said

1 or resolved in the differences between counsel in this case,
2 but look at the total circumstances before the district 3 court, the unique position that he was in when he saw the 4 meeting that took place, when he saw the conflict between 5 counsel --

6 QUESTION: Of course that -- even if you're right 7 that might not justify the order that was entered; or that 8 if, and even if you're wrong and we -- doesn't mean that the 9 order was bad. Suppose we won't take your -- suppose we 10 judge the case without this claim of misrepresentation, you 11 don't say you've lost the case?

12 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, we certainly do not.
13 And the reason for that is, consider the type of order that 14 was entered here. This was not an entered, suppressed com-15 munication. This order simply monitored what took place in 16 that class action setting. It didn't say you couldn't speak, 17 because the order specifically exempted a number of types of 18 communication.

19 QUESTION: Suppose in this case that counsel had 20 thought that something he wanted to send out was constitu-21 tionally protected and he then sent it out. And then he knew 22 that the order supposedly required that he summarize it, at 23 least, and notify the court that he had sent it out. Suppose 24 he had done that. Would the court of appeals have then 25 held that that counsel's constitutional rights had been

1 violated?

2 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, it's our position --

3 QUESTION: I know, but what did the court of appeals 4 hold? Did it also invalidate the order to the extent that 5 it required reporting to the court a communication that 6 counsel sent out because they thought it was constitutionally 7 protected?

8 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, apparently it did; 9 it invalidated the entire order. It held that the entire 10 order, and they looked at it, was a prior restraint of First 11 Amendment freedoms, and was unconstitutional.

12 QUESTION: But there was a provision per -- that 13 counsel would not have been in contempt if he had thought, 14 any statement he thought protected, if he sent it out, he 15 would have been in contempt if he hadn't reported it after-16 wards?

17 MR. DUCK: That's true, Mr. Justice White. The 18 exemption said this, that any counsel or party may make a 19 constitutionally protected statement to the potential class 20 members, his only thing he had to do was report it five days
21 later. So this exception really ate up the rule, and it 22 might come to mind, didn't that destroy the purpose of this 23 order?

24 QUESTION: The rule, actually, was that that he 25 asserted was constitutionally protected, not that it was in

1 fact constitutionally protected?

2 MR. DUCK: Exactly, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, that he 3 asserted it. And once he asserts it under the exemption, it 4 is our position that very free communications can take place.
5 If it was -- now, it might come to mind immediately, well, what 6 was the purpose of the order if he could make these kind of 7 communications? And I submit to the Court, the purpose 8 of the order was to monitor and detect, it wasn't to suppress.
9 It allowed the judge --

10 QUESTION: Do you think the 5th Circuit held that 11 that kind of an order would be a prior restraint?

12 MR. DUCK: I think they did, Your Honor, in this 13 case. They held that this was a prior restraint of First 14 Amendment freedoms and we think this is a particularly 15 inappropriate case to hold the prior restraint doctrine ap-16 plicable. We're talking about ongoing litigation and the 17 courts enter orders all the time affecting the basic First 18 Amendment rights of parties and attorneys during ongoing liti-
19 gation. I was told this morning to be here at 10 o'clock 20 and to speak for only 30 minutes. It might have been I could 21 explain my position better this afternoon after more thought 22 or that I could speak better to you for an hour, I could ex-
23 plain my position better. But the administration of justice 24 requires limitations upon my rights and upon rights of 25 counsel, and that's the kind of right we're looking at here,

1 is the protection of the ongoing administrative --

2 QUESTION: Are you saying, are you suggesting that 3 there aren't any constitutionally protected communications in 4 a piece of ongoing litigation? The district court apparently 5 thought there might be.

6 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, it's our position that 7 when you have to resolve the right of the district court to 8 administer his proceeding, that the constitutional rights of 9 parties and of their attorneys become lesser, they must bow
10 to that kind -- it's like Cox v. Louisiana, which extended 11 that right even outside the courtroom, where you said picket-12 ing could be limited outside the courtroom, just like the 13 Supreme Court's own Rule 7, which says that clerks cannot 14 discuss matters that are pending before the Court even after 15 they've left the Court.

16 QUESTION: In the Geders case, though, we did say 17 that there was at least in the federal system a right of a 18 client to discuss a matter with his attorney.

19 MR. DUCK: That's right, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, and 20 this order specifically allowed the attorney to consult his 21 client. It even allowed potential class members to consult 22 the attorney if the potential class member wanted to. What 23 it really restricted him, what it really looked at, was the 24 ex parte attempt by an attorney to contact the potential class
25 member. And even then they could have done it if they asked

1 to do so under the exception. It was constitutionally pro-
2 tected; all they had to do was report it to the court five 3 days later.

4 We submit that because of this, it's inappropriate
5 to apply labels to this situation.

6 QUESTION: When you say, if they had asked to do
7 so, as I have read the order, they didn't even have to ask 8 to do so. They simply had to report that they had in fact 9 done it.

10 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice Rehnquist, you're correct; 11 that is, all they had to do was assert the right. There was 12 no prior approval of the court. You do it and then report it 13 later. That's exactly right.

14 QUESTION: You would concede, I take it, that any 15 time a rule of a court even dealing with activities of a 16 lawyer in litigation imposes a prior restraint, that it's 17 something that gets very careful examination by the courts?

18 MR. DUCK: Mr. Chief Justice, no, our position is 19 that especially during ongoing litigation the court must be 20 able to exercise control over the parties and over the counsel.
21 As Mr. Justice Brennan said in Nebraska Press, counsel have 22 the fiduciary obligation not to make communications that 23 redound to the detriment of the accused and which supports 24 the administration of justice. And that's why we think that 25 it's particularly inappropriate to look at this as a prior

1 restraint case. It's a balancing case, and the interest
2 to be balanced, the court's rights to administer that case, 3 a unique class action case. It's a case where all of the 4 parties are before the court, it's not a 23(b)(3) case where 5 you opt in or opt out. This is a 23(b)(2) case where all 6 those potential class members are right before the court.

7 QUESTION: Could I ask you this question? This 8 order runs both against the parties and their counsel as I 9 understand it?

10 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice Stevens, that's correct.

11 QUESTION: Do you think the same standards apply 12 to the court's power to monitor communications between 13 counsel and potential class members, as would apply to com-
14 munications between class members and, say, a friend or a 15 relative who was interested in perhaps joining the class?

16 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice Stevens, I'm sorry, I don't 17 quite understand your question.

18 QUESTION: Well, you pointed out that the lawyer 19 has a special fiduciary obligation both to the court and his 20 clients and therefore that may justify greater monitoring of 21 the lawyer's communications to potential clients or his 22 client. My question is, do you apply the same standard for 23 purposes of analysis in this case to potential communications 24 between a member of the class who is a layman and some one 25 he may know who is a potential person who might be persuaded

1 to join the class or join the litigation?

2 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice Stevens, I don't think the 3 same standard would apply in this case. The order did apply 4 to both counsel and the parties.

5 QUESTION: Right.

6 MR. DUCK: This was pre-class certification, so
7 there were no class members. The only --

8 QUESTION: No, but there were parties, there were 9 multiple parties.

10 MR. DUCK: There were six parties; yes, sir. So it 11 applied to the six parties and to counsel, but didn't apply 12 to anyone else.

13 QUESTION: I'm asking, does the same standard apply 14 to those six parties as applies to their lawyers?

15 MR. DUCK: It does indeed, Your Honor, and the rea-16 son for that is because those parties are before the court and 17 they could be used indirectly to accomplish what the court was 18 trying to prevent directly. Once you submit yourself to the 19 jurisdiction of a court, you too have obligations to the 20 administration of justice and a court can tell you if you're 21 going to be a witness or if you're not going to be a witness.
22 The court can sequester you. And that certainly touches on 23 the First Amendment rights of the parties. But we don't call 24 that a prior restraint. We say that it's necessary in order 25 to administer the case.

1 QUESTION: Why isn't it a prior restraint? What is 2 the source of the court -- just because a person has become a 3 party to litigation, he gives up some First Amendment rights 4 he would otherwise have, you say?

5 MR. DUCK: Your Honor, in this case --

6 QUESTION: If he wants to discuss the issues in the 7 case, give a speech, whatever it might be, he can't do that?

8 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice Stevens, we don't suggest 9 that the parties or counsel check their constitutional rights
10 at the courthouse door. What we're suggesting here, and this 11 order points out, that still freeflowing communications were 12 allowed. A lot of contact was allowed under this order.

13 QUESTION: I understand, but anytime a person did give 14 a speech or talk to a friend about the lawsuit or something, 15 he had to summarize that and tell the court about it within 16 five days?

17 MR. DUCK: Yes, that's true, Mr. Justice Stevens.
18 We contend that that is not an overbroad statement, because 19 as the Manual points out you're, here, you're reconciling 20 again the administration of justice and the control of the 21 court and the protection of those absent class members who 22 had to make very important rights at that particular time, 23 whether they were going to sign the conciliation agreement or 24 whether they were going to join the lawsuit. And any misrep-
25 resentation or even inaccuracies that would be given to them

1 at that particular time could have been extremely detrimental.

2 QUESTION: Well, the order was certainly a lot
3 broader than misrepresentation.

4 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, the order --

5 QUESTION: It barred absolutely truthful communica-
6 tions as well.

7 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, we submit that the 8 order did not in fact bar communications. Again, I'd point
9 out to the Court on page 124 of the Appendix that that order 10 allowed the attorneys to speak to their clients, it allowed 11 potential class members to speak to the attorneys, and allowed 12 any other communication that was constitutionally protected
13 as long as it was reported to the court. It was not restric-14 tive; it allowed freeflowing communications.

15 QUESTION: Well, I'll just put it again, it purport-16 ed to affect, or to bar, unless you were going to report it to 17 the court, absolutely truthful communications originating 18 with counsel to someone who was not his client.

19 MR. DUCK: If, Mr. Justice White, you're entirely 20 correct in this respect, that would only be with regard to 21 solicitation of funds or solicitation of membership. I think 22 I should call the Court's attention to --

23 QUESTION: Well, would this order bar a communica-
24 tion, a circular put out by (a) a named party to the litiga-25 tion, or the counsel to the named party to the litigation,

1 putting out a circular to all potential class members includ-
2 ing many people who haven't hired this lawyer, urging them
3 not to take the settlement?

4 MR. DUCK: Mr. Justice White, such a circular could 5 have been distributed under this order if they had claimed 6 the constitutional right to do so.

7 QUESTION: I know; that isn't my question. Unless 8 they did report it to the court, that kind of a communication 9 would have been barred?

10 MR. DUCK: That's correct, Mr. Justice White.

11 QUESTION: That's all I wanted to know.

12 MR. DUCK: The order, we believe, was very narrowly 13 tailored to accomplish its intended purpose. It's important, 14 I think, to look at the purpose of the order. It was to 15 detect inaccuracies or misstatements that were sent to poten-16 tial class members. Respondents urge in this case that there 17 were other reasonable alternatives that could have been used 18 to correct the situation. In fact, they suggest that the 19 disciplinary procedures of the bar association could have been 20 brought to bear and remedial notices could have been sent 21 out. But that obscures the intent of this order. The intent 22 is to find out about it. If the court can't find out about 23 it, he can't discipline the attorney and he cannot sent out
24 remedial notices. And because we're dealing with such a 25 large group of people, hundreds and hundreds of people,

1 nationwide, the court's going to have to know what's going 2 on out there. Otherwise he can't control the litigation and 3 protect the rights of absent class members. This Court said
4 This Court said, just last term, in Deposit Guaranty 5 v. Roper, that the district court has a responsibility to 6 protect absent class members and to protect the administration 7 of justice by monitoring the actions of the parties before it.

8 QUESTION: Mr. Duck, may I ask, suppose counsel 9 did assert that constitutionally he was entitled and he sent 10 something out and then within the five days he reported it 11 to the court, the judge looked at it and didn't like the looks 12 of it. Obviously counsel couldn't be held in contempt, he 13 hadn't violated the order. What could the court do?

14 MR. DUCK: Well, Mr. Justice Brennan, I think under 15 the order the court could do nothing; the individual complied 16 with the order, in that case.

17 QUESTION: Well, I suppose the court could, if he 18 thought it had misrepresented the facts, it could send a 19 notice of its own out.

20 MR. DUCK: Well, yes, Mr. Justice White, that's 21 correct.

22 QUESTION: Or it could permit the employer to send 23 out something?

24 MR. DUCK: That's true, Mr. Justice White. In re-25 sponse to your question --

1 QUESTION: Would Gulf have to get the permission of 2 the court to send its own out?

3 MR. DUCK: Absolutely, sir. The court --

4 QUESTION: Permission?

5 MR. DUCK: Yes, sir.

6 QUESTION: Well, suppose that Gulf thought that con-
7 stitutionally it was entitled to respond and sent out a re-8 sponse and simply advised the court that it had sent it out?
9 It could do that, couldn't it?

10 MR. DUCK: Well, Mr. Justice Brennan, the order
11 applied to both sides.

12 QUESTION: That's what I mean. You didn't have to 13 get permission to send it out, as I understood it. Anything 14 that you wanted to send out that "you" asserted constitu-15 tionally you were entitled to, either side could send it, so 16 long as it filed a copy with the court.

17 MR. DUCK: That's true, Mr. Justice Brennan.

18 QUESTION: It seems to be conceded, Mr. Duck, that 19 the order, at least down to paragraph No. 3 thereof -- the 20 copies are almost haec verba -- the proposed order worked out 21 in the Manual, is that correct?

22 MR. DUCK: That's true, Mr. Justice Stewart.

23 QUESTION: Where does the Manual model appear, if 24 it does appear, in the papers before us?

25 MR. DUCK: In the papers? It is in the Appendix,

1 and it's attached to, it's on page 97 of the Appendix.

2 If it please the Court, regardless of what action this Court 3 takes in this case, this matter is going back to the federal 4 district court. We submit to the Court that it's going to be 5 very important for the district court to know how to control 6 this litigation. We submit to the Court that there is still 7 a very real possibility that notices inaccurate will be sent 8 to potential class members in this case. We submit to the 9 Court there's still a real possibility that meetings will be 10 called by both sides. And we submit to the Court that the 11 discretionary power of the district court must be affirmed in 12 order to control this type of litigation.

13 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Greenberg.

14 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JACK GREENBERG, ESQ.,

15 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

16 MR. GREENBERG: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
17 the Court:

18 We submit, first, that the order prohibiting commu-
19 nication with members of the class violates the First Amend-20 ment, and second, that those orders were issued in violation of 21 Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

22 QUESTION: What if Rule 23 had by its terms provided 23 that after the filing of a lawsuit of this kind such an order 24 be entered?

25 MR. GREENBERG: It did not provide that such an

1 order be entered. It provided --

2 QUESTION: Well, what if it did?

3 MR. GREENBERG: What if it did? Well, then, it 4 would be --

5 QUESTION: You'd still have your constitutional ar-6 gument.

7 MR. GREENBERG: You would still have a constitu-8 tional argument; certainly.

9 QUESTION: But not your second argument, obviously.

10 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, certainly -- no, we would not 11 have the second argument, but our position is that Rule 23 12 provides only for the entry of appropriate orders and this 13 is --

14 QUESTION: What if there were no Rule 23? There 15 would be no class action?

16 MR. GREENBERG: If there were no Rule 23 or its 17 equivalent, there would be no class action.

18 QUESTION: Right. And you think the Constitution
19 requires that there be a rule 23?

20 MR. GREENBERG: Certainly not. No.

21 QUESTION: But you think a Rule 23 that provided 22 for the entry of an order such as was entered in this case would 23 be unconstitutional?

24 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, I do. At least insofar as it 25 provided for that.

1 QUESTION: Incidentally, Mr. Greenberg, is Rule 23
2 the source of the authority for what appears at 97 in the 3 Manual?

4 MR. GREENBERG: It purports to be as an appropriate 5 order for the conduct of class action litigation; yes.

6 QUESTION: Under 23?

7 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, in the old days when I 8 used to practice, it was customary in some courts for the 9 court to not exclude witnesses from the courtroom who were 10 planning to testify, but simply instruct them not to discuss 11 their testimony or any testimony they had heard with any other 12 potential witness. Do you think that sort of an order would 13 be a prior restraint?

14 MR. GREENBERG: No, I don't. I think there is a 15 compelling reason for that order and a similar order to ju-16 ries. It's a classical kind of thing which is necessary for 17 the conduct of the trial before, occurring right before the 18 judge. So I think that that would certainly be permitted.
19 It is not our position that the judge has no power to enter 20 orders governing the conduct of class actions or other liti-21 gation. The judge does have power, but there has to be some 22 reason for it, there has to be some evidence. In a case like 23 this there has to be a hearing and a finding; the order must 24 be narrow. For, example, in the example you gave, Mr. Jus-25 tice Rehnquist, I don't think an order by the Court would be

1 upheld if it were in the terms of the Manual, that you are 2 forbidden to discuss with anyone matters tending to reflect 3 adversely upon the administration of justice, or tending to 4 reflect adversely upon any parties; that order would not be 5 upheld, I would hope.

6 QUESTION: Let me carry this one step further, 7 Mr. Greenberg. Some judges -- I think this Court has never 8 had occasion to pass on it, that I'm aware of, but it is not 9 uncommon in the trial of a case, when a recess is about to 10 occur, for the judge to instruct the witness who is on the 11 stand that during the recess he may not discuss the case with 12 anyone, including the lawyer who is examining him, who might 13 or might not be his attorney. Such orders have been entered 14 with respect both to independent witnesses and party wit-15 nesses. Would you think that would be a violation of the 16 First Amendment?

17 MR. GREENBERG: Certainly not. Entirely permissi-18 ble and entirely appropriate.

19 QUESTION: It's not a violation of the First Amend-20 ment?

21 MR. GREENBERG: It is not a violation of the First 22 Amendment, quite different from this case. And as I said to 23 Mr. Justice Rehnquist, I don't think a court would uphold 24 under the First Amendment an order to a witness, do not discuss 25 anything that tends to reflect adversely upon the

1 administration of justice or misrepresents the status of the 2 case. Of course, a witness wouldn't understand what that 3 meant; no one would. But an order to not discuss this with 4 anyone during the recess, that's, I think, conventional and 5 it would --

6 As a preliminary matter, we think it important to 7 emphasize certain facts about the record. First, there is 8 no evidence, no evidence that plaintiffs' counsel did or said
9 anything which would constitute violation of any rule of law
10 or any ethical norm or abuse in any other sense. The only 11 evidence in the record on the communications issue consists 12 of three affidavits by plaintiffs' counsel and the handbill 13 which they desired to circulate, which appears on the last 14 page of plaintiffs' brief.

15 The affidavits describe the meetings of plaintiffs'
16 counsel with the workers at the Gulf plant, and directly con-
17 tradicted the assertion, the unsworn assertion in Gulf's 18 brief, unsworn even on the basis of information and belief.
19 Mr. Thibodeaux's affidavit on 115 and 116 of the record, which 20 is corroborated by Ms. Morrison's affidavit, states, "I did 21 not at any time during the course of the meeting advise 22 actual or potential class members not to accept the defen-
23 dant's offer of settlement nor did I say to the assembled 24 group that counsel for the plaintiffs could obtain twice the 25 amount of back pay for the class as had been offered to them

1 under the conciliation agreement." Unless the --

2 QUESTION: The Manual suggests, as I understand it,
3 at least, that an order such as this be entered promptly,
4 whether or not there has been any evidence of actual abuse.
5 It's labeled "Prevention of Potential Abuses of Class Action"
6 and it says, "to be promptly entered in actual and potential 7 class action orders unless there is a parallel local rule."

8 MR. GREENBERG: Our position is that the Manual --

9 QUESTION: Some courts have done that, have they 10 not?

11 MR. GREENBERG: Our position is the Manual suggests 12 a course of action contrary to the First Amendment.

13 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Greenberg, in my earlier ques-
14 tion and I think, perhaps, in the Chief Justice's question, 15 the instruction to the witnesses who were presumably going to 16 testify in the future or the interruption of cross-examination
17 by a recess, no finding of fact is made that the witnesses 18 are about to discuss testimony that they have heard, it's 19 just a kind of a hornbook instruction.

20 MR. GREENBERG: Well, that is in the course of the 21 litigation and directly before the court and is a classical 22 kind of restraint necessary to protect the factfinding pro-
23 cess in the conduct of the trial. I could imagine an admoni-
24 tion to a witness not to discuss anything with anyone months 25 before the trial might run afoul of this rule also. I think

1 it's a question of the circumstances of the particular situa-
2 tion. But in any event, the defendants talk about the record 3 in the case. The record is unequivocal. There is nothing in 4 the record other than flat contradiction of the unsworn as-5 sertions in the defendants' brief.

6 And moreover, plaintiffs' affidavits were filed 7 in June. Gulf was still submitting papers on this issue as 8 late as July 17 and there was ample opportunity to submit 9 contesting or contradicting affidavits or other evidence that 10 they had and they didn't.

11 Moreover, the trial court made no finding that 12 plaintiffs' counsel had engaged in any misrepresentation or 13 any abuse and indeed, on this record, it could not have made 14 any such finding.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, you don't contend -- or 16 do you? -- that a finding of misrepresentation or abuse of 17 some kind is a necessary predicate for any order of this 18 character?

19 MR. GREENBERG: We do contend that an order limiting 20 communications, which would have to be a proper order, narrow-21 ly drawn and focused -- and the least restrictive order possi-22 ble, has to be made upon a record of some violation of law or 23 ethical norm or perhaps other abuse, or a clear and present 24 danger that one is about to occur.

25 QUESTION: So you take a position that there is no

1 is no form of order whatsoever that can be entered more or 2 less automatically when a class action is filed pertaining 3 to --

4 MR. GREENBERG: -- communications with the class?

5 QUESTION: Yes?

6 MR. GREENBERG: Not as an abstract proposition; no.
7 I cannot think of one, and counsel for defendants haven't 8 suggested one.

9 QUESTION: Not even an order saying, report to the 10 court every time you communicate with potential members or 11 giving just a general --

12 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I would -- that is indeed in 13 the order --

14 QUESTION: I realize.

15 MR. GREENBERG: -- in this order along with many 16 other things, and we suggest that, (a) that it's burdensome, 17 and (b) has a chilling effect upon communication among laymen 18 and between lawyer and client. And so we would say that our 19 position is that --

20 QUESTION: Well, the members of the class, the 21 members of the hoped-for class were not the clients of these 22 lawyers, were they?

23 MR. GREENBERG: Well, as a matter of fact, there 24 were six named parties and 34 --

25 QUESTION: Yes, and there was no -- the order didn't

1 affect communications between the named parties and their 2 counsel, did it?

3 MR. GREENBERG: No, it didn't, but it affected com-
4 munication between the named parties and their fellow workers.

5 QUESTION: Yes, but they were nobody's clients at 6 that time, were they?

7 MR. GREENBERG: No, they were nobody's clients at 8 that time. But --

9 QUESTION: I just wanted to be sure I understood 10 those facts.

11 MR. GREENBERG: There were six named plaintiffs and 12 34 formal parties altogether, 28 of whom were not named.

13 QUESTION: Well, I wonder, Mr. Greenberg, if what 14 you're saying doesn't add up to the proposition that the 15 Court cannot have a prophylactic rule, if it has the effect 16 that they must let the court know what communications are 17 going on?

18 MR. GREENBERG: That is indeed our position; yes.

19 QUESTION: Then the rule itself is a violation of 20 the First Amendment, in your view of the case?

21 MR. GREENBERG: Our position is that the rule 22 suggested by the Manual violates the First Amendment; yes.

23 QUESTION: Suppose the rule suggested by the Manual 24 was based on some kind of experience by the members of the 25 group that fashioned the rule in the Manual, that there had

1 been these kinds of abuses in case after case after case, and 2 therefore the time had come when we felt it necessary in the 3 interests of the administration of justice to have a prophylactic 4 rule? Suppose we had something like that?

5 MR. GREENBERG: Well, first I would like to say 6 that the Manual itself expressly says that the kinds of 7 abuses they're dealing with are rare, and do not occur with 8 any frequency and that is in the Manual itself as a predicate
9 to the rule. Secondly --

10 QUESTION: Is that in what we have here?

11 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, we've cited it in our brief 12 and the --

13 QUESTION: I mean, is it in the Appendix, 14 Mr. Greenberg? I know the Manual is.

15 MR. GREENBERG: The Manual -- the textual material
16 supporting the Manual's proposed rule is not in the Appendix 17 but it's cited in our brief.

18 QUESTION: But it was published with the Manual, 19 wasn't it?

20 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, yes; it was published with the 21 Manual.

22 QUESTION: Which is a matter of public --

23 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, I have the pages here.

24 QUESTION: Which is a matter of public record?

25 MR. GREENBERG: Oh, yes; yes. It's been published,

1 and I have the pages here if anyone wants them.

2 QUESTION: And what's the gist of it? What you 3 just said, that -- ?

4 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, that's it's minor. It's quite 5 unusual to have the kind of abuse that the rule is dealing 6 with, but nevertheless they feel it's necessary to have the 7 rule. Secondly, if there were pervasive misrepresentation 8 and abuse and overreaching in the sense that it occurred in 9 the Ohralik case, for example --

10 QUESTION: Before you go on, Mr. Greenberg, don't 11 you think it's important to remember that when this Manual 12 was being set up this was at the beginning of the class action 13 and the frequency or rarity of these occurrences would be 14 something largely guesswork except as to the events beginning 15 with Rule 23, or the use of Rule 23. Isn't that correct?

16 MR. GREENBERG: Well, yes, the answer is yes
17 and no. It was coterminous with the adoption of Rule 23
18 as we know it in 1970, but when I went to law school in 1949 19 we still had Rule 23; it was in a rather different form and 20 the same considerations applied.

21 QUESTION: And the potentialities of Rule 23 were 22 not immediately recognized by the profession, is that not so?

23 MR. GREENBERG: Oh, no. I mean, I -- well, all I 24 know is that I was in scores of class action cases and saw 25 many other hundreds of lawyers doing the same thing.

1 Class actions have been a commonplace under the federal rules
2 at least back to, certainly, to the '40s. And I don't know
3 how far back beyond that, but the rule was then reformulated 4 and refined and embodied new experience not relating to this 5 point and then the Manual was written with regard to this.
6 But we've had class actions for at least 30 or 35 years.

7 But, returning to pervasive abuse, let's say all 8 lawyers were acting like Mrs. Ohralik, in Ohralik v. Ohio, 9 one perhaps might then think it was necessary to have a pro-
10 phylactic rule, but in that instance it should be precise, it 11 should be focused at the abuse, it should, unless the viola-
12 tion were epidemic, be based upon a hearing that some abuse 13 of this sort had occurred, and it should not be a prior 14 restraint unless absolutely necessary but be corrective or 15 perhaps punitive, and prior, if that's the only way of 16 dealing with it. But I don't think that's what --

17 QUESTION: Would you limite abuse to what?

18 MR. GREENBERG: Misrepresentation, overreaching --

19 QUESTION: What's overreaching? Different --

20 MR. GREENBERG: Well, interviewing someone in the 21 hospital bed while in traction and under sedation and contrary 22 to -- that's overreaching; what this Court has held.

23 QUESTION: Yes. What else?

24 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I don't know --

25 QUESTION: Misrepresentation, overreaching --

1 MR. GREENBERG: Misrepresentation, lying. But I
2 don't think many lawyers do that. In fact, extremely few.

3 QUESTION: No, what I'm trying to find out,
4 Mr. Greenberg, what would you limit this to?

5 MR. GREENBERG: If one could adopt such a rule?

6 QUESTION: Yes, yes.

7 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I would limit it to bribery, 8 a violation of any law, a violation of some explicit ethical 9 norm --

10 QUESTION: How about changing the placecards at a 11 charitable banquet so that the lawyer sat next to someone who 12 was looking for a lawyer?

13 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I personally would find that 14 mildly amusing. I don't know that the --

15 QUESTION: Well, it's the way the big firms solicit.

16 MR. GREENBERG: I have not been privileged to tra-
17 vel in that company so I don't know that I --

18 QUESTION: My knowledge is only hearsay.

19 MR. GREENBERG: Have I answered your question, 20 Mr. Chief Justice?

21 QUESTION: Well, you've addressed it.

22 MR. GREENBERG: We would like to and I believe I've 23 done this in court, call attention to the sweeping, vague, 24 and onerous nature of the order prohibiting communication.
25 It was full of language like "including but not limited to

1 the following." Communication which "tends" to "misrepre-
2 sent." It dealt with "impressions tending" to "reflect ad-
3 versely."

4 Indeed, the only -- I had a lingering memory that 5 I'd seen the word tendency in some First Amendment case and it
6 took me a long time to find it, and there it was in Bridges
7 v. California. And in Bridges v. California, the Court dealt 8 with the issue of a tendency. Rule -- it says, "The basis 9 for punishing the publication as contempt was by the trial 10 court said to be its 'inherent tendency' to interfere with the 11 orderly administration of justice in an action then before a 12 court for consideration."

13 In accordance with what we have said on the clear 14 and present danger cases, neither "inherent tendency" nor 15 "reasonable tendency" is enough to justify a restriction of 16 free expression. And so, this is the kind of language and 17 communication that the order prohibited.

18 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, your time is running. Are 19 you going to get to the significance of the exception?

20 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, or -- there were two excep-21 tions: one is you might apply for permission to communicate in 22 advance; and the other is, you might communicate if you had 23 a constitutional belief that you could not be restrained in 24 prior fashion and then you'd have to within five days file it 25 with the court.

1 As to applying in advance, as to the parties, I 2 think it's simple. I don't think a layman, a worker at the 3 plant, would know how to apply. He'd have to go to counsel.
4 It would become an absolutely impossibly cumbersome method
5 of dealing with it. So far as counsel is concerned, counsel 6 in the ordinary course of preparing a case interviews, sifts, 7 checks facts, rejects assertions. To have to go back and 8 forth to the court all the time would be nearly impossible.
9 To have to report to the court what was said, in our exper-
10 ience, the two questions most frequently asked by a client 11 whom you're interviewing in this kind of case is, one, is how 12 much do you think I'm going to get; and two is, what do you 13 think of the judge?

14 As to the first question, it's --

15 QUESTION: How about, what's it going to cost me?

16 MR. GREENBERG: What's it going to cost me? In 17 this particular case it was being handled by a charitable 18 organization and it would cost him nothing. Unless counsel 19 had a flattering opinion of the judge, he'd be extremely re-20 luctant to impart it to his client because then it would have 21 to be filed with the court. And, indeed, all sorts of things 22 that he might be saying with his client -- and if the client 23 wanted to report that a certain foreman had done something, 24 or there was some practice in the plant, or that you ought 25 to speak to so-and-so and he'd give you the proper information,

1 that would have to be filed with the court. The whole thing
2 would really not only impede First Amendment rights but -- since 3 I don't have much time to discuss it I'll go into my Rule 23 4 argument -- make it impossible for counsel to conduct the 5 class action proceedings in a way commensurate with his fidu-6 ciary responsibility to the class. He would have to -- he 7 has to find out about typicality, the numbers of people, the 8 relationship between the common claims and the claims that 9 are peculiar to particular class members, and whether he would 10 be an adequate representative to the class or the class be 11 split into subclasses, does he have a conflict with a particu-12 lar class member because of some other litigation? And in 13 order to have to keep going back and forth to this judge who 14 did not answer the one request for distributing the handbill 15 and to interview the class for 35 days until the time that 16 it would do any good had expired, would be so onerous a burden 17 that counsel's hands would be handcuffed and rather than be 18 an adequate class representative he would be a completely 19 inadequate class representative.

20 And so that's my response concerning the exceptions 21 to the rule. The exceptions are no exceptions at all. There's 22 a chilling effect which makes it impossible for counsel to 23 function effectively. Thank you.

24 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Wallace.

25 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAWRENCE G. WALLACE, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES ET AL. AS AMICI CURIAE

1 MR. WALLACE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
2 the Court:

3 What Mr. Greenberg has just said supports our con-
4 tention that the order was an inappropriate one under Rule 23.
5 We agree with 21 of the 22 judges who sat on the en banc
6 court in that regard and we believe the judgment of the court 7 can and should be affirmed on this nonconstitutional ground.

8 QUESTION: But we don't ordinarily take cases just 9 to decide whether it was a proper abuse of discretion, and 10 proper discretionary review by the court of appeals, do we?

11 MR. WALLACE: No, Mr. Justice, but in this case
12 the constitutional issue on which the Court granted certiorari 13 is so closely interrelated with the question of what should 14 the courts appropriately order under Rule 23 that the same
15 guidance can be forthcoming from this Court without neces-16 sarily basing that guidance on a constitutional holding.
17 That's our point. The guidance really wouldn't differ that 18 much.

19 Class actions have played an important role in the 20 enforcement of federal civil rights laws and of other statu-
21 tory and constitutional rights and this Court has recognized 22 that they constitute a form of constitutionally protected 23 freedom of association and petitioning of the Government for 24 redress of grievances. And the Court --

25 QUESTION: We don't ordinarily think of -- or do you

1 suggest we should think of the suits brought in federal courts
2 as exercising the right of petition for grievances?

3 MR. WALLACE: Well, I believe that underlies many 4 of this Court's decisions, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v.
5 Virginia and NAACP v. Button, and some of the others on the 6 development of class claims, that this is a form of peaceable
7 petition. Many of those arose at a time when many persons 8 were advocating getting the assertion of civil rights out of 9 the streets and into the courts where grievances can be re-
10 dressed by the Government.

11 QUESTION: So, as I understand it, Mr. Wallace,
12 unlike Mr. Greenberg, you would say that some form of class 13 action is constitutionally required?

14 MR. WALLACE: I believe that's the implication of 15 those decisions of this Court, all of which have been based on 16 constitutional grounds and in particular, the Court has recog-17 nized a substantial measure of constitutional protection for 18 communications involved in the development of the class 19 claims.

20 QUESTION: Well, couldn't you sever it there and 21 say that the Constitution extends its protection to 22 generating interest in filing in court and so forth, but not 23 to the actual -- beyond the complaint stage?

24 MR. WALLACE: Well, I think what the Constitution
25 protects beyond the actual complaint stage differs. I agree

1 with that. That does create some change, but it seems to me
2 that the recognition most recently in the Primus case in this 3 Court of the constitutional protection for communications in-4 volved in the development of the assertion of class claims 5 of this sort goes far toward deciding this case, whether or 6 not the case itself need be decided on constitutional grounds.

7 Our basic point on this is that while Rule 23 does 8 prescribe certain safeguards against unfairness in the use of 9 class claims and authorizes the district courts to enter 10 orders that are appropriate for standing upon those prescribed 11 safeguards, the basic purpose of Rule 23 after all is to per-12 mit the assertion of class claims and the maintenance of class
13 actions. And for an order to be appropriate under the rule, 14 therefore, it must not unduly interfere with the assertion of 15 the class claims and the development of the class suit. And 16 it must --

17 QUESTION: So, do I understand correctly then that 18 you would assert that Sample Pretrial Order No. 15 of the 19 Manual is contrary to Rule 23?

20 MR. WALLACE: Well, that's the conclusion we have 21 come to. It's also the conclusion that the 3rd Circuit has 22 come to in two cases cited by the court below, and it's the 23 conclusion that 21 of the judges below came to. I think the 24 3rd Circuit actually articulated this part of the argument
25 with greater relation to the purposes of Rule 23.

1 QUESTION: Are you really saying that a preventive
2 or prophylactic rule inherently runs into the First Amendment
3 because it will reach some cases unnecessarily?

4 MR. WALLACE: Well, we don't say there's no room
5 for prophylactic rules. This one is too sweeping. As we put 6 the argument, it unduly interferes with the assertion and 7 development of class claims, which is the basic purpose of 8 Rule 23. It's to enable persons to assert and develop their 9 class claims. And any order to be appropriate under the 10 rule has to be formulated with that in mind and with sensi-
11 tivity to the constitutional rights that have been recognized 12 in this Court's cases. That's the failing of the rule here 13 and of the proposal.

14 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, under Rule 23, do you think 15 it would be appropriate for the judge simply to require that 16 counsel for both sides submit copies of all communications 17 with class members and potential class members?

18 MR. WALLACE: Well, when you say "copies,"
19 Mr. Justice, that suggests written communications.

20 QUESTION: Right. I'm talking, not about any 21 prior restraint, but just copies after they have been sent.

22 MR. WALLACE: It's difficult for us to take a posi-23 tion on a hypothetical. I think that in order for it to be 24 appropriate, it would likely have to be related to certain 25 topics such as settlement proposals, the kinds of things that

1 have caused sensitive problems to arise and possible abuses
2 of the class action to have arisen. There are other communi-3 cations that are part of the work product of developing the 4 case, that --

5 QUESTION: What about communications soliciting
6 support, inviting people to join the class? It'd be per-7 fectly all right, wouldn't it?

8 MR. WALLACE: Well, written -- it's a sensitive 9 area. It is a constitutionally protected area under the 10 Primus decision.

11 QUESTION: Well, let me ask you a question about 12 the First Amendment. Would you suggest, if we reach that 13 question, that we apply the same standard of review that 14 is applicable to what might be called a genuine prior 15 restraint such as in Nebraska Press?

16 MR. WALLACE: What's involved here is a form of 17 prior restraint.

18 QUESTION: But it's limited and you might focus on 19 it in this regard, it's limited to a pending litigation and 20 to counsel before the Court in Nebraska Press, a more classic 21 type of prior restraint. You have a vast public interest 22 involved and you also have people who are not necessarily 23 before the Court.

24 MR. WALLACE: Yes, all of those are factors to take 25 into account. I don't think I can improve on the approach

1 that this Court itself adopted and it was succinctly stated
2 by Justice Black for the Court in the United Transportation 3 Union case against the Michigan Bar. I'm looking at page 581 of 4 401 U.S., saying that "a decree must relate specifically and 5 exclusively to the pleadings and proof" -- which wasn't true in 6 that case any more than in this case. "If not so related 7 the provision because of its vagueness will jeopardize the 8 exercise of protective freedoms. This injunction, like a 9 criminal statute, prohibits conduct under fear of punishment.
10 Therefore we look at the injunction as we look at a statute, 11 and if upon its face it abridges rights guaranteed by the 12 First Amendment it should be struck down."

13 This suggests that at least there should be some 14 specificity about an area of particular potential abuse un-15 less an order has been formulated on the basis of findings
16 that abuse has occurred, which requires some remedial con-17 straint, which is not the situation here.

18 It seems to me that the Court has been sound in 19 adopting that approach under the First Amendment. While there 20 are some differences between that case and this one, the ap-21 proach seems right to us and there is a problem of overbreadth 22 and vagueness in this order, as in that one.

23 QUESTION: Let me just follow up with Justice
24 Powell's question, if I may. What about an order entered 25 immediately when the class action is filed which simply said,

1 if any written communication is sent out to all potential class 2 members or fleet of class members describing the pros and 3 cons of joining the class, class action, and the pros and 4 cons of accepting the settlement that's now available, a copy 5 shall be filed with the court. Would that violate the First 6 Amendment in your judgment?

7 MR. WALLACE: I don't know that I can take a firm 8 position but it certainly is far less of a problem than this 9 order, and less of an intrusion into the ability of counsel 10 to develop the case through interviews, oral communications, 11 learning of --

12 QUESTION: What would be the argument against such 13 an order? Presumably, the author would expect it to become -- 14 he's not going to write these and, you know, carry them in 15 secret pouches or anything, I don't suppose. There are 16 usually a couple of hundred class members around. Just a 17 routine filing with the court, you think, might violate the 18 First Amendment?

19 MR. WALLACE: Well, I'm certainly not asserting that 20 it would. Your question really isn't before the court.

21 QUESTION: Your cocounsel would take the position that 22 it does, as I understand it. He says, no order unless 23 there's a finding of abuse, and apparently you share 24 that view?

25 QUESTION: But how can the court determine whether

1 or not there has been abuse, unless it has access to what has 2 been sent to potential class members?

3 MR. WALLACE: Well, it can through the hearing of 4 evidence.

5 QUESTION: But it may not have any cause to suspect.

6 MR. WALLACE: Well, in this case, one of the par-
7 ties made assertions of abuse but didn't present any substan-8 tiating evidence. But the abuse that was asserted was not in 9 the form of a written communication. Nor is it likely to do 10 a great deal of good if only written communications are to be 11 monitored. Other communications could be calculated so that 12 the written communication would appear innocuous.

13 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Do you have 14 anything further, Mr. Duck?

15 MR. DUCK: Mr. Chief Justice, we stand on our brief
16 and our oral argument. Thank you very much.

17 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
18 The case is submitted.

19 (Whereupon, at 11:04 o'clock a.m., the case in the 20 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
