2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 first this morning in Schweiker, Secretary of Health and 4 Human Services v. Gray Panthers.

5 Mr. Jones, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF GEORGE W. JONES, ESQ.,
7 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

8 MR. JONES: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
9 the Court:

10 The issue in this case is whether Congress' use of 11 the term "available income" in the Medicaid statute was 12 intended to preclude the consideration of the income of an 13 institutionalized applicant's spouse for the purpose of making 14 Medicaid determinations.

15 Respondent filed suit in the United States District
16 Court for the District of Columbia, challenging the regula-17 tions of the Secretary of Health and Human Services on 18 statutory and constitutional grounds. The regulations re-19 quired all participating states to consider the income of 20 an applicant's spouse in limited circumstances, but also 21 permitted some states to consider the income of an applicant's 22 spouse more broadly. The District Court held the regulations 23 invalid on statutory grounds, and therefore did not consider 24 the constitutional arguments.

25 On appeal, the D.C. Circuit affirmed on the ground

1 that the Secretary had failed to consider certain factors and 2 policy concerns that the Court thought relevant. One judge 3 dissented.

4 Pursuant to the order of the District Court on 5 remand, the Secretary has now published new regulations based 6 on the analysis of the Court of Appeals. While it is difficult
7 to determine precisely what the Court of Appeals held, it
8 is nevertheless clear that the Court erred in invalidating
9 the Secretary's regulations. Congress expressly authorized 10 the Secretary to define the term "available income" for pur-
11 poses of the Medicaid statute.

12 QUESTION: Could I ask, that new regulations have 13 been issued finally?

14 MR. JONES: Yes.

15 QUESTION: And if you win this case what happens 16 to them?

17 MR. JONES: The regulations may be modified. In the 18 preamble to the regulations the Secretary pointed out that 19 the regulations were based solely on the analysis of the 20 District, the D.C. Circuit, and -- which had, in effect, 21 rejected the Secretary's legal analysis --

22 QUESTION: Well did he need to issue the regulations
23 Under the -- was he ordered to issue them?

24 MR. JONES: Yes. In fact, the District Court --

MR. JONES: Several times. And denied.

QUESTION: Including here, I suppose?

MR. JONES: No stay was asked for in this Court.

QUESTION: Will these new regulations be rescinded if you prevail in this litigation?

MR. JONES: The Secretary has indicated that depending on the nature of this Court's disposition of this case, the regulations would probably -- may have to be revised and of course, rescinded first and then revised.

QUESTION: You mean, if there's a reversal there will have to be a revision?

MR. JONES: Yes.

QUESTION: There wouldn't have to be, would there?

MR. JONES: There wouldn't have to be, but since the Secretary was in effect ordered to disregard his own analysis of the statutory provisions, and instead, published regulations based upon the analysis of the Court of Appeals, if that -- if the analysis in the Court of Appeals is held to be wrong, the Secretary would of course have to reconsider the regulations.

QUESTION: Well, all he says, and this is in that footnote on page 2, it may be necessary to revise them.

MR. JONES: Depending on the nature of this Court's disposition.

QUESTION: Well, if there's a reversal, I suppose --

MILLERS FALLS

ON-SENT

1 MR. JONES: That's right.

2 QUESTION: He still wouldn't require -- having a
3 reversal wouldn't require him to do anything.

4 MR. JONES: That's right. But the Secretary was in 5 effect ordered --

6 QUESTION: Well he says if I win this case I may 7 revise these regulations.

8 MR. JONES: Well, no. He says if --

9 QUESTION: He says it may be necessary, whatever 10 that is supposed --

11 MR. JONES: -- the Supreme Court grants --

12 QUESTION: Well when would it ever be necessary to 13 -- I suppose if the Secretary loses the case, but on a ground 14 that's different from the Court of Appeals, maybe he would 15 have to issue some different regulations, is that what he 16 means?

17 MR. JONES: That's right.

18 QUESTION: Well what if the Court of Appeals is 19 just reversed, outright, and say the Secretary is told 20 that you were right the first time? What happens then? Do 21 you know? Does the Secretary say what he would do then, or 22 not?

23 MR. JONES: No, the Secretary doesn't. And the 24 Secretary didn't know whether the Court was going to grant --

25 QUESTION: Well, did he make these new regulations

1 under the coercive impact of the Court of Appeals' decision?

2 MR. JONES: Yes.

3 QUESTION: So the odds are that he will re-examine 4 them at the very least, and see whether he wants to stay with 5 them if you prevail here?

6 MR. JONES: That's right.

7 QUESTION: And whether or not he does, he's assert-8 ing the right to do so, that's what you're here for, why you're 9 here?

10 MR. JONES: Sure. And that's the purpose of the 11 statement in the preamble to the regulations.

12 QUESTION: And we can't rewrite them?

13 MR. JONES: Excuse me?

14 QUESTION: And we can't rewrite them?

15 MR. JONES: That's for sure. Congress has expressly 16 authorized the Secretary to define the term "available income"
17 for purposes of the Medicaid statute. And this Court's 18 decision in Batterton v. Francis makes it plain that an 19 agency's exercise of such express statutory authority may 20 only be set aside if it is inconsistent with the statute on 21 which it is based, arbitrary, capricious, or otherwise unlaw-22 ful.

23 Disagreement with the judgment necessarily implicit
24 in such an exercise of authority is insufficient. The Court
25 of Appeals first agreed with the Secretary that the Congress'

SUPERIOR COURT
SECTION 100.01

1 use of the term "available income" was not intended to preclude
2 consideration of the income of the applicant's spouse. Al-3 though there is nothing in the statute or the legislative 4 history that distinguishes between spouses who are living 5 together and those who are separated by institutionalization,
6 the Court of Appeals inferred from the legislative history,
7 a congressional intention to create such a distinction.

8 The basis for this inference was a statement in 9 the legislative history indicating that the states would 10 be precluded from assuming the availability of the income 11 of an absent father, or on the basis of a court support 12 order. In the view of the Court of Appeals, this statement 13 suggested a general intention to treat spouses living together 14 different from those who are separated by institutionalization.
15 The statement provides only the most tenuous support for 16 the Court's inference, and it is plainly insufficient to 17 support invalidation of the Secretary's regulations. As the 18 Court of Appeals acknowledged, Congress has stated that it 19 is the primary responsibility of the Secretary and not the 20 courts, to determine whether and to what extent the income of 21 the Medicaid applicant's spouse will be considered for the 22 purposes of determining Medicaid eligibility and the amount 23 of assistance.

24 Without substantially more support than that relied 25 on by the Court of Appeals in this case, the Secretary's

ERASE
COMMON SENSE

1 exercise of that responsibility should be upheld. The 2 Secretary has consistently interpreted the term "available
3 income" to include the income of the applicant's spouse 4 whether they live together or not. Both the language and 5 the legislative history of the statute support the Secretary's 6 interpretation of the statute.

7 In the provision of the Medicaid Act dealing ex-
8 clusively with state eligibility criteria, Congress provided 9 that only available income should be considered. In this 10 same provision, Congress also stated that the states could 11 consider the financial responsibility of the applicant's 12 spouse for the purpose of making Medicaid determinations 13 and for the purpose of determining the amount of assistance 14 an applicant might be entitled to.

15 In the legislative history, Congress expressly 16 stated its view that spouses should be expected to support
17 each other. Congress did not distinguish between spouses
18 living together and those who are separated by institutional-19 ization, or for some other reason, nor was the Secretary 20 required to do so.

21 Respondent contends that the states may only con-22 sider the income of the applicant's spouse by filing an 23 independent lawsuit under generally applicable civil or 24 criminal support statutes. This Court should reject that 25 interpretation of the statute for at least three reasons.

1 First, it is inconsistent with the language of the statute 2 which provides that the states may consider the income of an 3 applicant's spouse for the purpose of determining Medicaid 4 eligibility and for the purpose of determining the amount of 5 assistance an applicant may be entitled to. This is an 6 initial step. Respondent has never attempted -- or, never 7 explained how filing an independent lawsuit under a generally 8 applicable civil or criminal statute can be said to be con-
9 sidering the income of the applicant's spouse for the purpose
10 of making Medicaid determinations.

11 Second, this interpretation of the statute would 12 require the filing of thousands of tiny lawsuits, sometimes 13 perhaps several against the same individual, since the payments 14 are made by the state monthly or quarterly and the spouse --
15 and, at the same time the state would be continuing to pay 16 benefits to an individual who may or may not be eligible for 17 benefits.

18 And finally, if Congress intended to create such 19 a distinction or such an administrative scheme which would 20 have required the states to spend a great deal of money filing 21 all of these lawsuits, trying to recover money that they 22 shouldn't have had to pay out in the first place, one would 23 expect that something in the legislative history would have 24 been said about this. There is absolutely no support in 25 the legislative history suggesting that Congress intended

1 for the states to consider the income of the applicant's 2 spouse for the purpose of determining Medicaid eligibility by 3 filing an independent lawsuit.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Jones, while you are on the legis-
5 lative history -- although I understand you are directing your-6 self now to this question of spouses, what about the House
7 Report that is quoted on page 42 of your opponent's brief, 8 which says that another provision that is included that 9 requires states to take into account "only such income and 10 resources as are actually available to the applicant." And 11 then they also quote a comment by Senator Ribicoff that says 12 the bill will require only income and resources actually 13 available to the applicant to be considered in the -- does 14 that, what is your comment on those --

15 MR. JONES: Well, the omission from the quotation
16 here is that the states were to take into account income 17 that was -- as determined in accordance with standards pre-18 scribed by the Secretary, actually available to the applicant.

19 QUESTION: But can the Secretary pass standards 20 that include the deemed income to be available when it is 21 not actually available? Isn't that the issue?

22 MR. JONES: Well, to put the question that way is 23 almost to assume the answer, because the available, for 24 purposes of the Medicaid statute, is determined by the 25 Secretary and income that the applicant's spouse actually

1 receives is actually available. The Secretary and Congress, 2 have always interpreted the term "available income" for 3 purposes of the Medicaid statute to include the income of 4 the applicant's spouse.

5 QUESTION: Would you -- is it your view that if 6 the statute included the words "actually available" we'd 7 still have the same case?

8 MR. JONES: If the statute also said "actually 9 available" as determined in accordance with --

10 QUESTION: We've just inserted the word "actually" 11 in the statute, which is not there, but the word "actually" 12 is in the legislative history. Would that make any differ-13 ence to your argument?

14 MR. JONES: I think not. Respondent also contends 15 that the word "available" --

16 QUESTION: Mr. Jones, do you think that this 17 case is controlled by Batterton v. Francis?

18 MR. JONES: Yes. The language of the two provisions, 19 in Batterton v. Francis -- the Secretary was authorized to 20 prescribe standards for determining unemployment, for defining 21 the term "unemployment". In this case, in almost identical 22 language, the Secretary is authorized to prescribe the 23 standards for determining what is "available income".

24 QUESTION: Of course, the Court in that case was 25 closely divided.

1 MR. JONES: But the majority opinion is controlling
2 here. The Respondent contends that the term "available 3 income" includes the income of the applicant's spouse only 4 if it is actually contributed in some sense.

5 Congress however, used the term "available income"
6 and not contributed. Furthermore, Congress expressly author-
7 ized the states to consider the income of the applicant's 8 spouse. In further answer to your question, Mr. Justice 9 Stevens, it might be said that Congress clearly did not intend 10 the term "available" to be interpreted to exclude the income 11 of the applicant's spouse since there would have been no need 12 for the further provision that the states could consider 13 the income of the applicant's spouse that was prohibited in the 14 preceding section.

15 In addition to authorizing the states to consider 16 the income of the applicant's spouse, Congress delegated 17 responsibility to the Secretary for giving further content
18 to that term. The Secretary has never construed the term 19 to exclude the income of the applicant's spouse simply because 20 the spouse refused to turn it over to the applicant; nothing 21 in the statute or the legislative history even suggests that 22 interpretation of the language and there's certainly nothing 23 that requires the Secretary to adopt that construction.

24 Absent compelling evidence that the Secretary has 25 grossly misconceived Congress' intent, this Court should

1 decline Respondent's invitation to disregard the interpretation
2 of the agency Congress has expressly authorized to define the 3 statutory term.

4 The last part of our brief is devoted to explaining 5 the analysis that led to the particular regulations in this 6 case. And we recognized, as Respondents point out, the com-
7 plexity of that analysis. And I would like to try briefly 8 to explain what the analysis was that led to the regulations.

9 Following the enactment of the Supplemental Security 10 Income program for the aged, blind and disabled in 1972, the 11 Secretary published regulations reflecting the impact of 12 this new legislation. All participating states were required 13 to consider the income of a Medicaid applicant's spouse to 14 the extent that it would be considered in determining SSI
15 eligibility. The states that exercised the 209(b) option
16 were permitted to consider the income of the applicant's 17 spouse to the extent that they did so in 1972 even if it 18 would not be considered in determining SSI eligibility.

19 And thus, the Secretary's regulations established 20 a kind of maximum and minimum extent to which states may 21 consider the income of an applicant's spouse for purposes of 22 determining Medicaid. The Secretary's regulations are based 23 on the very careful analysis of two exceedingly complex 24 social welfare statutes. They are not based on the notion
25 that Congress' reasons for adopting the particular SSI

1 provisions are directly applicable in the Medicaid context, 2 nor did the Secretary assume that Congress intended in 3 some sense to prescribe rules for determining what income 4 is available for purposes of the Medicaid program. Rather, 5 as I said, the regulations are derived from an analysis of 6 the interlocking provisions of the Medicaid and SSI statutes.
7 These regulations cannot reasonably be characterized as 8 arbitrary or capricious.

9 Section 1902(a)(10) of the Medicaid statute estab-
10 lishes the basic scope of the Medicaid program. More impor-11 tant for present purposes, that provision establishes or 12 provides the key to understanding the analysis that led to 13 the regulations challenged here. Because of the relationship 14 between the two statutes the Secretary requires the states
15 to consider the income to the extent that it would be con-16 sidered in determining SSI eligibility. Because of the 17 purpose of the 209(b) option, the Secretary permits the 18 states to consider the income of an applicant's spouse to 19 the extent they did so in 1972.

20 Under the first provision of Section 1902(a)(10), 21 all states, all participating states, are required to provide 22 Medicaid benefits to every aged, blind, disabled individual 23 receiving benefits under the SSI program. Now putting to 24 one side for the moment the 209(b) option, it is clear that 25 the Secretary could not permit any state to consider the

BUREAU OF
CHILD SUPPORT

1 income of an applicant's spouse if it would not be considered 2 in determining SSI eligibility. Otherwise, individuals who 3 were receiving SSI benefits could be found ineligible for 4 Medicaid contrary to the very clear command of Section 5 1902(a)(10)(A) that all SSI recipients be covered.

6 Now, on the other hand, aged, blind or disabled 7 individuals who are ineligible for SSI benefits are 8 also ineligible for Medicaid, unless the state -- unless 9 they meet the requirements of one of the very carefully 10 circumscribed optional group provisions and the state has 11 decided to provide Medicaid benefits to that particular 12 group. Now again putting aside for the moment the 209(b)
13 option, it follows that the Secretary cannot -- it follows
14 that the states must consider the income of all applicants
15 and their spouses to the extent that it would be considered 16 under the SSI statute. Otherwise, even if an individual 17 is ineligible for SSI benefits he could be found eligible 18 for Medicaid, even if the state doesn't provide benefits to 19 any of the optional coverage groups; a result that is mani-
20 festly contrary to the terms of the statute. The Secretary 21 obviously cannot redetermine the eligibility of every person 22 covered under every state plan.

23 There are certain optional coverage provisions and 24 it is unnecessary to describe them in detail here -- it should 25 be emphasized however, that each of them is subject to its

1 own set of very carefully drawn limitations. Because of the 2 inequity of permitting the states to use one method for deter-
3 mining the, for calculating the income of the optional 4 coverage groups, and another method for calculating the 5 income of the mandatory coverage groups, the Secretary has 6 required the states to use the same method for calculating 7 the income of both.

8 Neither the Court of Appeals nor Respondent
9 challenges that aspect of the Secretary's regulations. Thus, 10 unless the 209(b) option requires a different kind of analysis, 11 the relationship between the Medicaid and SSI statutes not 12 only supports the reasonableness of the Secretary's regula-13 tions but virtually compels those regulations.

14 The language, the legislative history and the 15 purpose of the 209(b) option all support the Secretary's 16 conclusion that the provision does not require a different 17 analysis. By its terms, the provision simply gives the 18 states an option to deny Medicaid coverage to those individuals 19 the states would otherwise be required to cover. As I pointed 20 out however, the only individuals the state is required to 21 cover are SSI recipients, under Section 1902(a)(10)(A).

22 The primary effect of the 209(b) option then is 23 simply to give the states a partial exemption from the other-
24 wise applicable requirements of that provision. The legisla-
25 tive history makes virtually indisputable what seems apparent

1 from the terms of the provision. In explaining the purpose
2 and intent of the provision, both the Senate Committee and 3 the House Committee pointed out that the provision was simply 4 intended to allow the states to exclude from mandatory 5 Medicaid coverage those individuals it would not have been 6 required to cover before the SSI program was adopted.

7 The states were to be permitted to exclude from 8 coverage those individuals who were newly eligible, that is,
9 those who became eligible for mandatory Medicaid coverage 10 because the scope of coverage under the SSI statute was 11 broader than that of the old Categorical Assistance Programs 12 that it replaced. With one arguable exception, 209(b) states 13 like SSI states are only entitled to federal financial 14 assistance for providing Medicaid benefits to an individual 15 who is ineligible for SSI if the state provides benefits 16 pursuant to one of the optional provisions.

17 Thus, all states must consider the income of an 18 applicant's spouse at least to the extent that it would be 19 considered in determining SSI eligibility. Otherwise, the 20 Secretary would be obliged to redetermine the eligibility of 21 every person covered under every state plan in order -- or 22 before he could determine whether the state was entitled to 23 federal financial assistance, an impossible administrative 24 burden and surely not one Congress intended to impose.

25 QUESTION: Mr. Jones, could I ask you another

1 question? Am I correct in believing that the basic issue
2 here would have been the same if -- I guess the regulations 3 has been the same ever since 1965, is that right?

4 MR. JONES: No. They've gone through a series 5 of --

6 QUESTION: But on this particular issue, on the 7 deeming issue?

8 MR. JONES: The regulations have always permitted 9 the states to include or consider the income of an appli-10 cant's spouse, whether they live together or not.

11 QUESTION: And some states have done that since 12 the beginning evidently?

13 MR. JONES: That's right.

14 QUESTION: How do you explain the fact that this 15 issue wasn't litigated somewhere between 1965 and 1972?

16 MR. JONES: Well --

17 QUESTION: Because it could have been, couldn't it?

18 MR. JONES: It could have been. There were 19 several, a number of District Court decisions which aren't 20 very carefully analyzed, but the -- the problem apparently, 21 was that when the Secretary published these new regulations 22 the provision was explicitly put in that the states would 23 be obliged to use the SSI standards, and that brought home
24 to everybody, I presume --

25 QUESTION: But as I understand it, some of the 1 states had, although hadn't been using SSI standards because 2 there was no SSI, they had been using the same approach 3 to the joint income.

4 MR. JONES: Right. And in fact, the Secretary, 5 in the preamble to the regulations, indicates that in large 6 part, or most of the states, the SSI states, would be limited 7 in the extent that they would be considering the income of 8 the applicant's spouse. So it was a benefit for Medicaid
9 applicants in all of those SSI states. Congress' purpose 10 in --

11 QUESTION: It's a good thing in the 209(b) states, 12 I don't understand why it wouldn't have been litigated there?

13 MR. JONES: Right. Because the 209(b) option
14 wasn't adopted until 1972.

15 QUESTION: Well no, I know, but wasn't the effect
16 of that to say there are a group of states that can follow 17 the same rules they used to follow from '65 to '72?

18 MR. JONES: That's right.

19 QUESTION: It's those states we're now concerned
20 with, and I don't understand why this issue didn't arise 21 somewhere along the line a lot earlier?

22 MR. JONES: Well --

23 QUESTION: I mean, it's not -- I'm not, no reason 24 to blame you for it, I'm not -- don't mean that, but I just 25 don't understand it, why it takes so long for such a -- what

1 seems to me to be a fairly obvious problem, about which --

2 MR. JONES: Well I think --

3 QUESTION: -- reasonable men could differ.

4 MR. JONES: As Justice -- as the dissenting judge
5 in the Court of Appeals pointed out, the real problem here 6 and the thing that has caused the commotion, I guess, is 7 that Congress has allowed the 209(b) states to use the 1972
8 levels, and over the course of the years, since 1972, infla-9 tion has increased substantially. And although all of the 10 states, all the 209(b) states I think have raised the level 11 somewhat since 1972, they are still lower in many cases than 12 the SSI standards. And I think it's the inflation factor 13 that has generated the controversy surrounding the regulations 14 now.

15 As I pointed out, the purpose of the 209(b) option 16 was to permit the states to consider the income -- or to 17 exclude from Medicaid coverage, all of those individuals who 18 wouldn't have been eligible in 1972, and if the states were 19 validly considering the income of the applicant's spouses in 20 1972, the Secretary has no power to require them to ignore 21 that income today and provide Medicaid coverage even if the 22 individual is receiving SSI benefits.

23 QUESTION: Well unless it was a violation of law in 24 1972?

25 MR. JONES: That's right, if they were validly

1 considering --

2 QUESTION: Right.

3 MR. JONES: -- the income. I would like to reserve 4 the balance of my time, if there are no further questions, for 5 rebuttal.

6 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Deford.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF GILL DEFORD, ESQ.,

8 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

9 MR. DEFORD: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
10 the Court:

11 Before I begin, I would like to clarify two points 12 which were raised in the questioning of Mr. Jones. First, 13 I'd like to note that the preamble to the regulations which 14 were finally promulgated in December, 1980, pursuant to the 15 Court of Appeals decision, has been misinterpreted. They 16 did not require that the Secretary only consider the policy
17 factors outlined by the Court of Appeals in its decision.
18 I'd like to read briefly from the end of the Court of Appeals' 19 majority decision, to make that point.

20 This appears on page 12(a) of the government's 21 petition for a writ of certiorari: "In issuing regulations 22 implementing the 209(b) option, the Secretary is required to 23 consider those policy concerns outlined in part above, which 24 Congress intended would guide for discretion in determining 25 under what circumstances and to what extent deeming would be

1 permitted." What the Court of Appeals did, was to outline
2 two factors, at least, which the Secretary should take into 3 account in promulgating new regulations. But the Secretary's 4 regulations, as the preamble indicates, took into account 5 several other factors. And so it is not fair to say that the 6 Court of Appeals decision told the Secretary what she had 7 to do. All the Court of Appeals did was to say, go back, look 8 at this issue again, take into account policy factors which 9 you've never considered before and then promulgate new regula-10 tions in light of those policy considerations.

11 QUESTION: But the Court of Appeals did set aside
12 the existing regulations of the Secretary, did it not?

13 MR. DEFORD: The Court of Appeals did affirm the 14 District Court's invalidation of those regulations, that's true.

15 QUESTION: And that was under the Administrative 16 Procedure Act?

17 MR. DEFORD: Yes, that's correct.

18 QUESTION: Well where you have to show they 19 are either arbitrary or capricious or contrary to law?

20 MR. DEFORD: Well, Your Honor, I assume you refer to 21 the Batterton standard which is quoted -- which quotes the 22 APA --

23 QUESTION: Well I'm referring to the Administrative 24 Procedure Act.

25 MR. DEFORD: I would say that the Court of Appeals

1 must have been acting under that aspect of the Act.

2 QUESTION: We often don't know, of course, with this 3 Court of Appeals.

4 MR. DEFORD: Well, assuming since they referred 5 throughout the decision, both to Batterton and to Overton 6 Park, Citizens for Overton Park, I assume that the Court of 7 Appeals was using the APA standard in making its determination.

8 QUESTION: Well may I ask what --

9 QUESTION: Mr. Deford, do you -- excuse me -- do 10 you read the Court of Appeals' opinion as rejecting your basic 11 theory; because they in effect held, as I understand it, that 12 deeming is permitted under certain circumstances.

13 MR. DEFORD: What the Court of Appeals held was, 14 in certain circumstances deeming was not permitted and in 15 certain circumstances it was permitted, specifically where 16 the spouses were still living together, but in certain 17 circumstances especially where they were separated, and 18 especially where they were separated under certain conditions, 19 deeming was not permitted. The Court of Appeals did not tell 20 the Secretary what regulations, at that time, she had to come 21 up with. It only outlined those factors and said deeming is 22 a different ballgame when the spouses are separated, and it 23 should not be permitted at that time.

24 QUESTION: May I ask, what is the significance of 25 what you just said to the issue we have to decide?

1 MR. DEFORD: Well the issue was raised before as 2 to whether the Court of Appeals had told the Secretary what 3 exactly --

4 QUESTION: I know, but what's it's relevance?

5 MR. DEFORD: Your Honor, I simply wanted to clarify
6 what I consider a point which was made --

7 QUESTION: You don't suggest the case isn't a 8 live case?

9 MR. DEFORD: No, I certainly don't, Your Honor.
10 One other point which was raised at the end of the other 11 discussion was the reason why this issue was not raised until 12 1974, I believe, was the first case. We speculate that the 13 major reason was not just inflation, but the inflationary cost 14 of nursing home care. And since that has gone up dramatically 15 in the last six or seven years, it has cost the nursing homes
16 much more to take care of people and therefore, there's a 17 much greater need for the government at least -- there's been 18 much more expenses for the government, both state and federal; 19 and therefore, there's been a greater need to attempt to deem 20 income from a non-institutionalized spouse.

21 QUESTION: Is it not generally true that under 22 state law, take a hypothetical case, a man and wife are separ-
23 ated but not divorced, and the wife is affluent, has millions, 24 and the husband falls on evil times and can't take care of 25 himself, under state law in most states cannot the one spouse

1 be required to --

2 MR. DEFORD: Absolutely, Your Honor. That's 3 exactly what I consider --

4 QUESTION: No question about it, is there?

5 MR. DEFORD: No question that this -- I think 6 virtually every state has spousal responsibility laws, which 7 allow the state to force the contribution, an appropriate 8 contribution from the wealthy spouse, if that's what it is, 9 and to go into state courts and demand that contribution 10 be provided; the same way a state can obtain a contribution 11 from an absent father.

12 QUESTION: My hypothetical was wealthy, even if not 13 wealthy, whatever the other spouse has must be employed to --

14 MR. DEFORD: Not whatever, the other spouse has 15 to have sufficient income --

16 QUESTION: I see. So that they can maintain their 17 own support.

18 MR. DEFORD: Exactly. So that they may maintain 19 their own support.

20 QUESTION: But if there's enough for both it must 21 be shared, is it?

22 MR. DEFORD: That's correct. We do not contest
23 the fact that non-institutionalized spouses have an obliga-
24 tion under state law to support the individual in the insti-
25 tution. The only issue --

1 QUESTION: Non-institutional, I guess, why do you
2 make the difference between institutionalized and non-insti-3 tutionalized?

4 MR. DEFORD: For purposes of support. Because when 5 spouses are living together as a general practice, one spouse 6 is going to almost automatically have to take care of the 7 other spouse. The payment for a mortgage or for rent, the 8 payment for food, the payment for utility costs, will auto-9 matically be available to the other spouse.

10 QUESTION: What if they are separated first and 11 then after the separation one of them becomes institutionalized 12 and the other one has resources, those resources may be 13 reached?

14 MR. DEFORD: Through the state's judicial processes, 15 that's correct.

16 QUESTION: Well, isn't it true also that under 17 the statute, 49 U.S.C. 1396a, Appendix H, in the petition 18 for certiorari, these numbers and letters are kind of diffi-19 cult to cope with, but Section 17(B) in the middle of the 20 page of 35(a) says "a state plan for said medical assistance 21 must provide for taking into account only such income and 22 resources as are -- as determined in accordance with standards 23 prescribed by the Secretary, available to the applicant or 24 recipient in determining his eligibility for such aid, assis-25 tance or recipience." Now, you have to show, don't you, that

1 that portion of the Secretary's regulations promulgated 2 pursuant to that congressional directive was either arbi-
3 trary, capricious, or contrary to law?

4 MR. DEFORD: That's correct, Your Honor. That 5 that -- that the regulations are inconsistent with that 6 statute, as is fleshed out by the legislative history.

7 I'd like to reiterate what the issue is of this 8 case, because I believe it was misstated by the government.
9 The issue here is whether Congress intended that an arbi-
10 trary portion of a non-institutionalized spouse's income 11 can be conclusively presumed available to the institutionalized 12 spouse who is applying for Medicaid without regard to whether 13 in fact that income is available.

14 Without the requirement that the income be actually 15 available, be in the hands of the institutionalized spouse, 16 before it is considered by the state, the spouses are placed 17 in an impossible dilemma. Their choice is between the 18 denial of necessary health care to the individual in the 19 institution and a sub-poverty standard of living for the 20 other.

21 QUESTION: But what Congress said was that the 22 Secretary shall issue regulations that shall define this --

23 MR. DEFORD: Shall define what is available.

24 QUESTION: --distribution-- and you, to say that 25 spouses are placed in an impossible situation, may

1 lead one court or this Court to conclude that the regulation
2 is arbitrary or capricious or contrary to law. But Congress
3 did authorize the Secretary to define what shall be available.

4 MR. DEFORD: That's correct, Your Honor; that is 5 right in the statute, there's no dispute about that. But I
6 would also like to emphasize that Congress did not leave us
7 with the word "available" in the statute. It provided a 8 rather extensive background for that in the legislative 9 history which goes into considerably greater detail.

10 QUESTION: Are you referring to the use of the 11 term "actually available"?

12 MR. DEFORD: That's one instance, Your Honor.

13 QUESTION: But isn't that a term that could have 14 so readily been put into the statute that if Congress 15 intended that they would have said it?

16 MR. DEFORD: I think Congress' thinking was that 17 available meant "actually available".

18 QUESTION: Well, how do we know that?

19 MR. DEFORD: Well, because of other instances in 20 the legislative history. For instance, Congress also says 21 that the income must be in fact available, that also appeared 22 in the legislative history.

23 QUESTION: Where did they say that?

24 MR. DEFORD: In the same portion of the legislative 25 history.

1 QUESTION: Legislative history, not in the 2 statute?

3 QUESTION: Not in the legislation.

4 MR. DEFORD: Not in the legislation itself, that's 5 correct.

6 QUESTION: But Mr. Deford, I think you have still 7 another hurdle, because as I understood your opponent, he 8 conceded for purposes of argument that even if the word 9 "actually" could be considered to be a part of the statute, 10 and it wouldn't change his basic argument. That even if it 11 read "actually available", still, what is actually available 12 must be defined by the Secretary's regulations.

13 MR. DEFORD: I think the Department of Health and 14 Human Services itself, has in some senses recognized what 15 I believe most people would believe actually available and 16 income in fact mean, which is income actually in the hands 17 of, in the control of, the institutionalized spouse. In the 18 guidelines and regulations which preceded the regulations
19 which were challenged in this case, the Secretary himself 20 used the expression actually available from 1966 through 1977, 21 in the medical--in supplement (B) to the handbook of medical 22 assistance, the Secretary said that only income in hand or 23 under the control of the institutionalized spouse could be 24 taken into consideration.

25 I think HHS in some sense, the Department of Health

1 and Human Services, understood what Congress had in mind.
2 Moreover, I think when Congress expects that there will be 3 deeming, that it can differentiate that. For instance in the 4 SSI statute, there's an indication that it understands that 5 deeming is the contrary to available income. I believe it's 6 42 U.S.C. Section 1382c(f)(1), which we cited in our brief, 7 points out that although the income -- that income between 8 spouses in certain situations should be deemed even if it is 9 not available to the other spouse. So I think Congress 10 sees available to mean what I assume most people would 11 assume it to mean, which is that spouse who is going to have 12 Medicaid eligibility determined, must have that income in 13 hand or available to her. And if the income is still in the 14 hands of the other spouse, and for whatever reason, either 15 because that spouse does not want to contribute or feels that 16 he or she simply cannot contribute, that income will not be 17 in the hands of the individual in the institution. She 18 will not have access to it, in order to afford to pay for the 19 costs of care.

20 QUESTION: Do you think there's a difference between 21 in hand and available? Isn't there a wide difference? I'll 22 give you one that comes to mind, you are left 10 million 23 dollars in a will and that's available, isn't it, but it's 24 not in hand?

25 MR. DEFORD: That's correct, Your Honor. And --

1 QUESTION: You have to go through a little something to 2 get it?

3 MR. DEFORD: Until that will -- is probated, the 4 income is not available or is certainly not in hand of the 5 individual who might have access to it at some point later 6 in the future.

7 QUESTION: So there is a difference between the 8 two?

9 MR. DEFORD: There's a difference, but I think the 10 Secretary --

11 QUESTION: Is it significant, that's what I want 12 to know?

13 MR. DEFORD: Well I think the Secretary has under-14 stood that in this context, given the legislative history, 15 Congress intended that available meant in hand, because it 16 was the Secretary who repeatedly interpreted the word "avail-17 able" to mean in hand or under the control of the applicant 18 spouse.

19 QUESTION: May I ask you one other question while 20 you are stopped, what is your view of the sort of standards
21 he should write under Clause (b)? If he can't write standards 22 that say when income shall be deemed attributable to one spouse 23 or the other, what kind of standards -- are those -- is it 24 that just a procedural concept in your view?

25 MR. DEFORD: As to what the regulation should look

1 like?

2 QUESTION: Yes, what should -- what kind of 3 standards should he be writing to determine what income is 4 available if he isn't adopting some rather arbitrary rules,
5 saying well, if the husband makes $X, why certain percentages --

6 MR. DEFORD: I think the Secretary has, in fact, 7 promulgated those regulations. That was done back in 8 November of 1979, after the District Court decision, before 9 the Court of Appeals decision. Those regulations were never 10 finally -- were never published in final form. They were 11 promulgated.

12 Those regulations said that only income which is 13 actually being contributed to the institutionalized spouse
14 can be taken into consideration.

15 QUESTION: But if the statute means what you say, 16 you didn't even need those regulations, it would have been 17 obvious on the face of the statute.

18 MR. DEFORD: Well I must say that the words "actually 19 available" in the statute and the regulations, when I first 20 read them, suggested to me that the Secretary was not, himself, 21 following his own regulations. If "actually available" and 22 "income in hand" and "income under the control of", does not 23 mean income which the institutionalized spouse, him or herself
24 actually has. I really do not know what it meant.

25 In fact, it's our position that HEW and HSS have

1 been inconsistent in dealing with this statute. For 11 years,
2 the regulations --

3 QUESTION: My question though, is directed at what 4 do you think Congress meant? I mean, it seems to me you
5 wouldn't even need a regulation to implement (b) if it means,
6 and I certainly understand your very persuasive argument,
7 it means that it's got to be actually available. But I don't 8 know why the statute wouldn't take care of it and why do you 9 need a regulation that says yes, we mean it's got to be 10 actually available.

11 MR. DEFORD: I can't think of an example off the 12 top of my head, Your Honor, but I suppose there would be 13 instances in which income might ultimately be considered 14 available to someone and should be considered available, 15 which that individual does not have. Maybe the example is 16 as -- that Justice Marshall suggested, of money that ultimately 17 will be probated -- maybe in some circumstances that might be 18 considered available. I don't think it should, but I think 19 there could be instances in which available might be stretched 20 somewhat. I don't think this is one of those instances and 21 I think Congress made that clear in the legislative history.

22 I think we've been discussing this morning a rather 23 dry situation, but I think it's important to bring it into 24 some human terms. In the record below we did introduce 25 affidavits indicating how deeming actually operates with

1 flesh and blood people. I'd like to briefly illustrate,
2 by going through the fact situation of one of the individuals 3 described in the amicus brief, how deeming does in fact
4 operate. In that particular case, which I said is discussed
5 in greater detail, as are other cases, in the amicus brief, 6 the husband was extremely sick, had organic brain syndrome,
7 and the wife was attempting to care for him at home and did
8 so for about 8 or 9 months. Finally because of his illness --

9 QUESTION: You're talking about the amicus brief --

10 MR. DEFORD: I'm talking about --

11 QUESTION: There's more than one?

12 MR. DEFORD: Yes, Your Honor.

13 QUESTION: You're talking about the one filed by 14 John H. Ford, Lana Carter and others?

15 MR. DEFORD: That's correct. That's the one.

16 The wife was finally, after 8 or 9 months, unable to care for 17 her husband at home and was forced to put him into a nursing 18 home. And it was at that point that the deeming regulations
19 took hold. The wife's total income was only $241 per month 20 in Social Security disability benefits. As the record in 21 that case reflected, this was just barely enough for her to 22 get by, at a subsistent standard of living. The State of 23 North Carolina determined that she should be allowed to keep 24 only $162 per month and about 1/3 of her total income was 25 then to be deemed available to the individual in the institution.

1 It then became impossible for her to get by, and she was 2 faced with what we think is the common and regular dilemma
3 faced by individuals in which deeming -- against whom deeming 4 is applied. The wife had the choice of paying the deemed 5 amount and then herself living without sufficient food, shelter, 6 utility, or of not paying the deemed amount and having her 7 husband evicted from the nursing home, which is the ultimate 8 effect of that non-payment of the deemed amount.

9 QUESTION: Well, are you claiming as the result of 10 examples like that, that deeming is totally improper under 11 the statute, or that a hearing has to be held in every case?

12 MR. DEFORD: Claiming, Your Honor, that in order 13 for the state to demand a payment from the spouse outside of an 14 institution, if that spouse refuses to cooperate voluntarily, 15 that the state would have to use its relative responsibility
16 laws which the Medicaid statute specifically allows it to do 17 in Clause (d) of subsection 17, and go into Court, and at that 18 point a determination would be made as to what a reasonable 19 contribution should be.

20 QUESTION: Well, then what do you make of the 21 subsection (b) of 17, where it says "available" in accordance 22 with the regulations that the Secretary shall prescribe.
23 Don't you think the Secretary can prescribe general regulations 24 that may -- hit an occasional person very hard, but in the 25 interest of administrative convenience follow the Congressional 1 line?

2 MR. DEFORD: I think as a general rule, the 3 Secretary obviously has a right to promulgate fairly general 4 regulations. But this is not an isolated instance. This is 5 happening regularly throughout the country to a large number 6 of people.

7 QUESTION: Well, why don't they ask Congress to 8 change the law?

9 MR. DEFORD: I don't know, Your Honor. I think the 10 law as it is now set up takes into account this situation.
11 Congress itself --

12 QUESTION: What it does, Mr. Deford, on the very 13 example you give -- let me just be sure what your view is -- 14 your view is that under the statute the husband is entitled 15 to be institutionalized, but the state could nevertheless 16 bring a lawsuit against the spouse and --

17 MR. DEFORD: Absolutely, Your Honor.

18 QUESTION: -- get an order requiring her to turn 19 over $80 a month.

20 MR. DEFORD: I don't think --

21 QUESTION: It may end up in the -- economically in 22 the same harsh position, is what you're saying?

23 MR. DEFORD: I don't think the state would be able 24 to go into a state court of law and get a judge to order 25 a woman whose income is only $240 a month to pay a third of

1 that income to the institution, if that's going to force
2 her to live in a sub-poverty standard of living. I think 3 that's the key point, that deeming is an arbitrary system --

4 QUESTION: But is the deeming -- is it arbitrary 5 then because it imposes a greater financial burden on the 6 spouse than state law would impose, is that your argument?

7 MR. DEFORD: It's arbitrary in the sense that it
8 is administratively convenient to the state, as Mr. Justice
9 Rehnquist has pointed out, but that administrative conven-10 ience is far outweighed by the terrible burden it places on 11 both spouses. And that was the burden that Congress sought 12 to avoid.

13 QUESTION: Well, I was under a misapprehension, 14 because I was under the impression that you were assuming 15 that the Secretary could not deny the medical benefit to one 16 spouse but would nevertheless have a remedy in state court to 17 collect the $80 a month. But you're not, you're saying 18 there is --

19 MR. DEFORD: I'm saying that in many instances, the 20 non-institutionalized spouse would have sufficient income --

21 QUESTION: Well, let's take the hard cases, let's 22 take this very case. Is it your view that the Secretary not 23 only must accept the incapacitated spouse, but may not 24 recover the $80 from the other spouse in a subsequent pro-25 ceeding?

1 MR. DEFORD: I'm saying that the state could go
2 into court and might be able to get some money out of her.
3 But I doubt that a state court would order someone to pay 4 one-third of their income, in that instance. Whereas 5 deeming automatically allows the state to do that, without 6 going to any of the necessary expenses of the non-institu-7 tionalized spouse might have. I think in a state court the 8 judge would evaluate what the necessary expenses of that 9 person were, have them prove what they needed to get by, some 10 sort of basic standard of existence. But I don't -- I think 11 the more common example would be someone who perhaps had 12 $400 a month income. Now the state -- under deeming, that 13 person would be forced to give up, in this state, $240 a month, 14 down to $160. I think the state court might order that 15 person to pay $50 or $60 or $80 or $100. But I don't think they 16 would force them into poverty as the price for obtaining 17 necessary health care for the other individual.

18 QUESTION: Well do you think the federal statute 19 places some limit on what a state court might do under your 20 theory as to allowing recovery by the state from one spouse or 21 another?

22 MR. DEFORD: No, the federal statute simply gives 23 the state the right to use its responsibility laws for spouses.
24 It takes that right away for virtually every other relative
25 except parents, in Clause (d). But the federal government

1 does not impose on the state how much it might ultimately 2 recover from that individual through the regular judicial 3 process.

4 Our argument here is that deeming is an entirely 5 arbitrary process, which precludes the individual from show-6 ing, the non-institutionalized spouse from showing what his 7 or her necessary basic expenses are. The normal judicial 8 process would allow that individual to make a proof as to 9 what income that individual needs to get by.

10 QUESTION: But in cases like Weinberger v. Salfi, 11 we've said that the -- you don't have to have an individualized 12 determination in every case. The Secretary may propound a 13 general regulation that is adequate for most cases. There 14 may be some hard cases, but when you are administering a 15 complex system of social insurance, you are not required to 16 have an individualized hearing.

17 MR. DEFORD: Well first, Your Honor, if I am not 18 mistaken, Salfi was a statutory case; I think there was a sta-19 tute which was challenged, not a regulation. We say that 20 the statute here requires that available income only be taken 21 into consideration. I believe in Salfi it was a statute
22 which was challenged on constitutional grounds, and this Court--

23 QUESTION: But here, the statute says available as 24 prescribed by the Secretary's regulations.

25 QUESTION: In effect, you are challenging the 1 statute to -- for not having included the adjective "actually".

2 MR. DEFORD: Your Honor, I think that is not only 3 implicit, but explicit in everything Congress has said in the 4 legislative history of this case, both by individuals --

5 QUESTION: You are challenging -- you are in 6 effect challenging the statute here?

7 MR. DEFORD: No, Your Honor. We're simply saying 8 that the word "available" in the statute must be interpreted 9 in at least this context, to mean only income which is actually 10 there. When the spouses are separated, when the spouses are 11 no longer living together, the logical basis for deeming
12 which is couples, spouses contributing to each other, no 13 longer exists -- they are living at different places and one 14 of them is living in an institution. It's simply illogical 15 and irrational to pretend that the income of one spouse is 16 necessarily and automatically available to the other indi-17 vidual. There is no longer any logical basis for deeming in 18 that context.

19 QUESTION: Then you don't distinguish between 20 whether it is $500 a month or $5000 a month, that the spouse 21 has, apparently?

22 MR. DEFORD: I don't distinguish, but I think in 23 the great majority of cases, and I'd like to emphasize this, 24 spouses do want to contribute to each other, they do not want 25 to leave the other hanging in the nursing home and say, good

1 luck. A person with $5000 is likely to make the best contri-
2 bution that he or she can make. I'd also say that a person 3 who has $5000 a month income, the spouse probably would not 4 be eligible for Medicaid, if that's the person making the con-5 tribution.

6 If the spouse with $5000 -- if that person simply 7 refuses to make the contribution, then the state has the 8 right to go into state court and obtain a necessary contri-9 bution, and a reasonable contribution.

10 I'd like to point out also, that this Court in 11 similar cases involving the AFDC program has apparently shown 12 some disenchantment with exactly the procedure used here, and 13 in Van Lare v. Hurley and Lewis v. Martin, this Court empha-14 sized that states cannot include income available to an 15 applicant for AFDC which is not in fact available. One of 16 those cases, the Court stated that the bread can only be 17 counted when it is actually set on the table. There's another 18 important aspect of those two cases.

19 In Van Lare, the Court noted that deeming in that 20 context, directed against a lodger living in the house, who 21 might not be contributing to the support of the applicant 22 child, that the state could not move against the lodger by 23 essentially holding that child blackmail. And that is exactly 24 what deeming in this context amounts to. The state is using 25 the guilt or whatever of the non-institutionalized spouse

1 -- about the institutionalized spouse, in order to force
2 a support payment. And that support payment, we submit, can 3 only be obtained through the regular state judicial process.
4 The state cannot say to the non-institutionalized spouse, well, 5 you can either contribute the $150 a month, or ultimately 6 your spouse is going to be evicted from the nursing home.
7 The purpose of the Medicaid program was to guarantee that 8 individuals who needed necessary health care and did not 9 have sufficient income regardless of the reason why they 10 didn't have sufficient income, would obtain needed health 11 care. In this instance, that health care is ultimately going 12 to be denied because the state is trying to force the other 13 spouse to cooperate. It's trying to put -- is putting and 14 is holding the institutionalized spouse, essentially a hostage, 15 in this game in an effort to obtain support from the non-16 institutionalized spouse.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Deford, would you comment just 18 very briefly on the government's second argument which, as I 19 understand it, is that deeming is permitted under SSI and it's 20 not realistic to assume Congress intended the 209(b) option 21 to prohibit deeming if it is permitted in the more liberal 22 option.

23 MR. DEFORD: Your Honor, I don't agree with the 24 government's interpretation of 209(b) option. The 209(b) 25 option is not necessarily a more restrictive or a less liberal

1 program than the SSI procedure. 209(b) option is essentially 2 an effort to give the states the flexibility --

3 QUESTION: Can I interrupt you just for one pre-
4 liminary? Do you agree that deeming is permitted in the SSI 5 situation?

6 MR. DEFORD: No. I don't, I don't agree with that.
7 I think there's a stronger argument in that instance, because 8 of the relationship between the Medicaid statute and the SSI
9 statute. But I think there's also a strong argument that sub-10 section 17 of the Medicaid statute precludes deeming in 11 either kind of state.

12 But I'd like to say that the 209(b) options
13 essentially gives the states the right to choose whatever 14 Medicaid rules they want, with only one proviso -- that they 15 cannot be any more restrictive than those in effect in 1972.
16 It was an effort to give the states some flexibility; they 17 could choose to go with SSI, as about two-thirds of the 18 states have done. That gives the states much more administra-
19 tive convenience because the Social Security Administration 20 will then determine Medicaid eligibility for them and they 21 don't have to go through that process.

22 If the states want to use more restrictive rules, 23 they can by choosing a 209(b) option. They then have the 24 administrative burdens which comes with that. At the same 25 time, however, they are required to use the spend-down

1 mechanism, which is probably the most liberal element that 2 Congress has included in the Medicaid statute. And that 3 allows individuals whose incomes might be slightly over the 4 cash assistance levels to spend-down and obtain eligibility.

5 The 209(b) option was a choice that Congress gave 6 the states. It set no maximum eligibility levels for those 7 states which chose the 209(b) option. Therefore, we don't 8 believe that the SSI statute is in any way related to this 9 particular case involving 209(b) --

10 QUESTION: Well, you differ with government counsel 11 as to --

12 MR. DEFORD: Absolutely, Your Honor.

13 QUESTION: -- what the statute says, don't you?

14 MR. DEFORD: The statute does not say anything 15 about maximum eligibility levels. It begins by saying that 16 notwithstanding --

17 QUESTION: Well it also says that an option 18 state can go back to the regime that it administered from 19 1965 to 1972, if the dates are right.

20 MR. DEFORD: As long as it was in effect in 1972.

21 QUESTION: Yes, in '72, so long as it was lawful.
22 But that, it need not give Medicaid to anybody who is not 23 eligible under SSI, that is, I think that's the government's 24 position.

25 MR. DEFORD: That is the government's position, but

1 the statute does not say that.

2 QUESTION: And you disagree? And you disagree as 3 to what the statute provides.

4 MR. DEFORD: The statute has no language about 5 using the SSI rules as the most liberal which a state can 6 use. Any other questions? Thank you.

7 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Mr. Jones, 8 you have about three minutes left.

9 ORAL REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF GEORGE W. JONES, ESQ.,

10 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

11 MR. JONES: The first point that I want to make 12 in my three minutes is that Respondent's emphasis, one, the 13 levels with the hypotheticals of Mrs. Ford or Mr. Ford, I 14 guess, is inappropriate in this case because the level of 15 benefits or the levels -- or the amount of the contribution 16 the state requires the spouse to make is not at issue in 17 this case. The Court of Appeals held that the Secretary's 18 regulations were invalid for failure to distinguish between 19 spouses living together and those who were separated by insti-
20 tutionalization. The level, the amount of the contribution 21 is not at issue here. The Secretary's regulations did not 22 prescribe the amount of the contribution, and the Court of 23 Appeals didn't invalidate the regulations because of the 24 amount of the contribution asked. Now, in response, my 25 own hypothetical might be useful. Respondent's position is

1 that it doesn't matter how much money the spouse has, as long 2 as he refuses to contribute it. Now, if a spouse has 3 $100,000 of income, Mr. Deford says most of these people don't 4 have $100,000 of income. But as he pointed out, in response
5 to the Chief Justice's question, it wouldn't make any differ-6 ence if he did, as long as he refuses to contribute it, the 7 applicant is eligible for Medicaid and the state is obliged 8 to pay out benefits while, or in the interim, while it tries 9 to collect this money from the spouse who may or may not have 10 money available for the state to attach, assuming of course, 11 that the state has such a statute under which it could pursue 12 the spouse.

13 We are informed that there are some states who 14 don't. Now, it's conceivable that the states could adopt a 15 statute that would allow them to do this, but it's not clear 16 that all states do have those programs, those statutes.

17 The final point I'd like to make is that Respondent
18 has suggested that the 209(b) option doesn't do what we say 19 it does. I'd like to just read briefly from the Senate 20 Report describing that option. "The 209(b) option gives 21 states the option of covering under Medicaid, aged, blind and 22 disabled persons made newly eligible for cash assistance as 23 a result of the increases in payment levels to these persons 24 provided under the bill, the SSI statute. No state would be 25 required to furnish medical assistance to any individual

1 receiving aid as a needy aged, blind or disabled adult,
2 unless the state would be required or would have been required 3 under its 1972 plan." There's no other way to read that 4 language. My time is up.

5 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
6 The case is submitted.

7 (Whereupon at 11:06 o'clock a.m. the case in the 8 above matter was submitted.)
