P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next in Mills against Rogers.

Mr. Schultz, I think you may proceed when you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF STEPHEN SCHULTZ, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

MR. SCHULTZ: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court, in argument today I would like to focus on what the defendants believe to be the two fundamental reasons that there is no constitutional right to refuse treatment.

First would be that allowing one patient to refuse treatment is necessarily going to negatively impair the state's ability to perform its legitimate objective of maintaining order in its hospitals, and second of all, of treating those patients who are not themselves refusing treatment. In other words, what I am saying is that to allow one patient to refuse treatment, there will necessarily be an increase of violence in our institutions.

The First Circuit talks about allowing forced medication for emergency situations, but they simply do not focus on the fact of the unpredictability of violence in mentally ill patients, the impulsivity of violent acts, the fact that mental patients are acting upon irrational thoughts, and that this simply cannot always be predicted.

1 The second --

2 QUESTION: Well, they did give you a broader 3 mandate than Judge Toro had done, didn't they?

4 MR. SCHULTZ: There is no doubt that the First 5 Circuit opinion in our mind is less wrong than the district 6 court opinion. I could say that maybe less people will be 7 hurt under the First Circuit opinion than would be hurt
8 under the district court opinion. I hardly feel that 9 justifies the opinion.

10 The second point that I want to make as to this 11 first fundamental reason is that if you allow one patient to 12 remain in your hospital in a deteriorated state, this is 13 going to affect the health of other patients, whether or not 14 there is violence. A hospital is a milieu setting, and if 15 you have patients who are deteriorated, this will set off 16 the illnesses of other patients, and I will talk about this 17 more later.

18 The second major point that I want to discuss in 19 argument today which we believe to be a second fundamental 20 reason is that we suggest that the original decision to 21 commit an individual against his will for treatment purposes 22 when it is known at the time that the patient is committed 23 that antipsychotic medications are a necessary part of the 24 treatment of the vast majority of the seriously mentally ill 25 acts as a sufficient predicate for the later administration

1 of this medication against the patient's will after the 2 commitment.

3 In other words, let me just reword what we consider 4 this basic argument to be all about. There is no 5 determination of incompetency at the time that a patient is 6 committed, yet the state is empowered, despite this lack of 7 a finding of incompetency, is empowered to commit an 8 individual against his will for treatment. We suggest 9 similarly without any finding of incompetency the state 10 should be empowered to carry out that treatment against the 11 patient's will which was ordered at the time of commitment.

12 In order to fully understand these two fundamental 13 arguments that we believe necessitate there being a finding 14 of no right to refuse treatment, I think it is first 15 necessary to focus very, very briefly on what exactly is the 16 role of antipsychotic medications in our state hospitals.
17 The record in this case is clear that antipsychotic 18 medications are a necessary part of the treatment for the 19 vast majority of seriously mentally ill patients.

20 QUESTION: Do those drugs have a component of 21 tranquilizer in them?

22 MR. SCHULTZ: They do, but they are not very good 23 tranquilizers. You shouldn't use them and it wouldn't be 24 proper practice to use them as a tranquilizer. They are a 25 poor tranquilizer, and to the extent that they do

1 tranquilize, the sedative effects wear off in two or three 2 weeks. If you want to tranquilize, there are other drugs 3 which are tranquilizers.

4 We are talking about a specific group of patients, 5 and it must be recognized, and that group of patients are 6 patients who are so seriously mentally ill that they could 7 be committed, plus it is acceptable medical practice to use 8 antipsychotic medications for those patients.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Schultz, do you disagree with the 10 district court's findings about the drugs themselves, that 11 they are mind-altering and they have significant side 12 effects and so forth?

13 MR. SCHULTZ: I certainly disagree with the finding 14 that they are mind-altering. What they do is restore a 15 chemical imbalance in the brain to the original balance. It 16 is the psychosis that is mind-altering, as I think a very 17 cogent article points out. The non-conformist treated of 18 his illness, the psychotic non-conformist will remain a 19 non-conformist. A conformist treated of his illness will 20 remain a conformist. They don't alter the mind. The 21 psychosis alters the mind.

22 As for the effects, the side effects, there are 23 side effects, but simply put, the state's position, and I 24 think the First Circuit so found, is that the dangers of 25 psychosis untreated are far greater than the dangers of any

1 of these side effects.

2 The one other point that I can point out about the 3 side effects is that there has sort of been a pendulum in 4 the knowledge of these side effects. At first there wasn't 5 much knowledge of them. Then everybody thought everything 6 was a side effect, and now they are finding that the side 7 effects are more limited than they thought, and are 8 certainly more treatable.

9 Let me turn back to the question of what these 10 medications are all about. A point which the defendants 11 want to emphasize is not only is the record clear that these 12 medications are effective when taken voluntarily; the record 13 is also overwhelming that these medications are effective 14 when forcibly administered, the district court's finding 15 notwithstanding.

16 There is no way -- To argue that these drugs are 17 not administered -- are not effective when administered 18 forcibly simply ignores the tens of case histories in this 19 case of patients who refused antipsychotic medication and 20 deteriorated, and then against their will were forcibly 21 medicated and improved, and there is simply no explanation 22 for that other than the fact that these are chemicals, and 23 they make the brain -- they restore an imbalance, and this 24 balance is restored whether or not a person voluntarily 25 takes these medications or whether a person is forced to 1 take these medications.

2 Let me turn to what the Commonwealth feels is 3 another very important point in this case, and that is the 4 recognition that we are talking about seriously mentally ill
5 individuals, as the patients who have been given the right
6 to refuse medication, and specifically, what do we know 7 about the serious mental illness which is sufficient to 8 commit an individual?

9 We know that an acutely psychotic patient is 10 terrorized, in a state of panic, unbearable agony, pain, and 11 distress. That is undisputed in the record. We know that 12 schizophrenic patients, which are the majority of patients 13 for whom it would be a proper practice to give antipsychotic 14 medications, don't think rationally, that they think on 15 their own autistic terms.

16 We know that a classic symptom of mental illness 17 which leads these patients to being committed is 18 ambivalence, including ambivalence to treatment. We know 19 that -- it is undisputed in the record that many, many 20 patients who were forcibly medicated in the past, after they 21 were forcibly medicated, thanked the doctors for forcibly 22 medicating them when they weren't speaking their own true 23 mind.

24 Now, despite --

25 QUESTION: Could I ask you one question --

1 MR. SCHULTZ: Certainly.

2 QUESTION: -- about the basic facts that I just 3 didn't recall as you are developing your argument. The 4 institution houses both voluntarily committed and 5 involuntarily committed persons. Is that correct?

6 MR. SCHULTZ: That's correct.

7 QUESTION: What is the rough proportion of the two?

8 MR. SCHULTZ: I believe it is 90 percent voluntary 9 and around 10 percent involuntary. The reason for that is 10 that in Massachusetts the laws changed in 1970 requiring you 11 to, even if you could commit somebody, ask them if you 12 wanted them to come in voluntarily, because they felt there 13 would be a benefit to patients being voluntary patients.
14 There is not necessarily much of a difference in the 15 illnesses between the two.

16 QUESTION: Do I correctly recall that those who are 17 voluntarily committed do have a right to refuse this 18 treatment?

19 MR. SCHULTZ: Or leave the hospital, or face a 20 petition for their commitment.

21 QUESTION: But as a matter of fact, is something 22 comparable to the district court or the court of appeals 23 procedure being followed with respect to the 90 percent who 24 are voluntarily committed?

25 MR. SCHULTZ: Yes, except that many of them -- it

1 used to be felt that you could ask them to leave the 2 hospital and if you didn't you could forcibly medicate
3 them. Now what is happening is, after this opinion, if you 4 feel they have to be forcibly medicated, they are making 5 them involuntary patients. So when the patient refuses 6 medication now, there could well be a shift in this 7 percentage, given if the kind of opinions that the First 8 Circuit and the district court issued would have become the 9 law.

10 I simply don't know the statistics as to whether or 11 not there has been a change over the last several years.

12 QUESTION: In any event, basically what is at issue 13 here is whether you must follow with respect to the 10 plus 14 percent, because presumably the number would grow by reason 15 of the circumstances you describe, whether you must follow 16 the same procedure with respect to them that you follow with 17 the other patients in the hospital.

18 MR. SCHULTZ: I am afraid I don't understand your 19 question.

20 QUESTION: Well, the court has ordered you to 21 follow certain procedures before you involuntarily 22 administer these drugs to the 10 percent who have been 23 involuntarily committed.

24 MR. SCHULTZ: That's correct.

25 QUESTION: And as I understand it, you are applying

1 those procedures, or substantially those procedures, as to 2 the 90 percent of the people in the hospital. So the 3 question is whether the 10 percent must be treated like the 4 rest of the patients.

5 MR. SCHULTZ: Well, what they are doing with the 90
6 percent is saying, you have a choice of leaving, if you 7 want, and if you don't, we are going to make you an 8 involuntary patient.

9 QUESTION: Well, I know, but if they don't leave.

10 QUESTION: If you could. If you could. You may 11 not be able to.

12 MR. SCHULTZ: That is correct. That is correct.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Schultz, I would like to pursue 14 something that may be somewhat similar to Justice Stevens'
15 question. As I understand it, the court of appeals required 16 that an individualized estimation be made by the physicians 17 in attendance of the possibility and type of violence in 18 which the patient might engage, and the likely effects of 19 the particular drugs on the patient, and an appraisal of the 20 alternative means of treatment, and then if the physicians 21 determine, having applied that standard, that the drug 22 should be given, it may be given involuntarily.

23 Now, I think that is what the court of appeals has 24 said. I also believe that that is the procedure that you 25 have outlined in your brief that you assert the state

1 follows anyway. Is that right?

2 MR. SCHULTZ: No, that is not right, because what 3 they -- first, what the court of appeals has done is, they 4 set up two procedures for what they call dangerous patients 5 and non-dangerous patients. What happened before the 6 temporary restraining order, there was no decision about 7 dangerousness. It was recognized that this was not 8 something which was predictable necessarily for these 9 patients. It was decided whether or not the medication was 10 medically necessary on an individual basis, but there was 11 never a decision made on, do I believe that because the 12 possibility of dangerous outweighs the individual's private 13 rights, which is what the individual decision has to be 14 according to the First Circuit, that decision wasn't made.

15 Yes, it was an individual determination, but the 16 questions that were asked were quite different.

17 I want to go back to the point of who these 18 patients are, because I want to talk briefly, because the 19 state, I think, has been misconstrued on this point in both 20 courts below, on who is this competent mentally ill patient 21 that is talked about by the two courts below.

22 The district court found that a majority of the 23 committed patients are capable of appreciating the benefits, 24 the risks, the side effects of these medications. The 25 Commonwealth suggests simply there is absolutely no basis in

1 the record for that finding, but putting that aside, the 2 major problem with both the district court opinion and the 3 First Circuit opinion in this respect is that nobody 4 discusses what they mean by such terms as appreciate, 5 benefits, competent, or capability.

6 And it is quite one thing to say that a patient is 7 able to understand that there may be risks to medication and 8 to understand that he has been told he will get better if he 9 is given the medication, and it is quite another thing to 10 say that a seriously mentally ill patient can appreciate the 11 benefits of being well when by definition part of his 12 illness is that he doesn't understand that what he is is not 13 well, and let me make the Commonwealth's position clear here.

14 We are not stating that a petition of commitment is 15 the same as a legal finding of incompetency. We recognize 16 that people may be delusional in some aspects, but 17 clearheaded in other aspects of their life.

18 QUESTION: What does Massachusetts require to be 19 found in the case of a commitment?

20 MR. SCHULTZ: At a commitment there must be a 21 finding of mental illness, there must be a finding of a 22 serious risk of harm to an individual by reason of mental 23 illness. Serious risk of harm is defined as three types of 24 patients, danger to others, danger to yourself, or 25 incapability of taking care of yourself.

1 Let's look at those three kinds of patient. You 2 talk about the kind of patient who is a serious risk to 3 himself. This patient by definition, if he is going to be 4 committed, is seriously depressed, his affect is impaired, 5 he feels that there is really -- he doesn't understand that 6 there is a better world. He feels usually that the only way 7 out is by killing himself. Now, certainly, this patient is 8 not going to be able to understand the benefits of what it 9 means to be well, because in his world the whole world is 10 bleak.

11 Look at the second kind of patient. The second 12 kind of patient is a patient who is a danger to others.
13 This person by definition has basically -- has a distorted
14 view of interpersonal relations with somebody. Classically, 15 he is either in a state of rage or he is in a state of 16 panic, a rage at somebody or a panic that somebody else is 17 going to hurt him. Yes, the rage and the panic may wax and 18 wane on a given day or in a given period, but the basic 19 underlying problem of his illness is that he doesn't 20 understand that his rage or panic is unreasonable, and there 21 is no way that patient can weigh the benefit of what the 22 medication is going to be --

23 QUESTION: Well, counsel, under the court of 24 appeals opinion, if the physician determines that there is 25 this element of violence which is a possibility, and as you

1 have indicated, to commit the person in the first place the 2 court had to decide that violence was a substantial
3 possibility, I don't understand why the court of appeals
4 requirement adds anything in addition to what the doctors 5 would be looking at anyway.

6 MR. SCHULTZ: What the court of appeals does is 7 require -- they say that the fact of violence at the time of 8 commitment is not enough to later forcibly medicate the 9 person in the hospital. They say that dangerous on the 10 outside may not mean dangerousness on the inside. And they 11 set up this arbitrary distinction of, you can forcibly 12 medicate some people if you think they are violent, and 13 forcibly medicate other people if what you want is treatment.

14 What the Commonwealth says is, everybody is 15 committed for treatment. It is simply not accurate to say 16 that there is anybody in Massachusetts hospitals because 17 they are dangerous. That is not why they are there. They 18 are there because they are dangerous by reason of mental 19 illness.

20 QUESTION: Well, here, the court of appeals gave 21 alternative standards. It said that the petitioner -- the 22 hospital may forcibly administer drugs without a finding of 23 incompetence if it is reasonably believed to be necessary to 24 prevent further deterioration in the patient's mental health 25 or the other standard that I have been talking to you about.

1 MR. SCHULTZ: That's right.

2 QUESTION: Now, isn't that enough to encompass the 3 patient's needs and the hospital's needs as well?

4 MR. SCHULTZ: No, absolutely not. Under the first 5 standard -- it is more than that. They require that they go 6 to a court to get a finding of incompetence, and the 7 question is, why --

8 QUESTION: In addition to the initial finding on 9 commitment.

10 MR. SCHULTZ: That's right. This is the First 11 Circuit and the district court. They say the mere fact that 12 you have to treat the patient, that in your mind treatment 13 may be necessary, unless you can find these exceptions that 14 you gave, you are going to have to go to a court for a 15 finding of competence, and --

16 QUESTION: But I thought one of the exceptions that 17 the court of appeals found and modified the district court 18 was that the patient could be forcibly medicated without a 19 finding of incompetence when it is reasonably believed to be 20 necessary to prevent further deterioration of the patient's 21 mental health.

22 QUESTION: Well, what they say is for the 23 significant deterioration, and you run into two situations.
24 First of all, what does significant mean? You take the 25 Rennie versus Klein case. I will use that as an example of

1 the facts. This is an individual who slowly, when the 2 district court told him he couldn't be forcibly medicated, 3 he slowly deteriorated. Where was the significant 4 deterioration? It was on a daily basis, until his life was 5 endangered. Because of the district court opinion that you
6 had to have a determination of incompetency, Mr. Rennie's 7 life was unnecessarily endangered. So why not focus on 8 significant?

9 Second of all, you have the problem of, we are 10 talking about a milieu setting. What about the patient who 11 is seriously ill, who is suffering, who is in agony and 12 distress, but isn't deteriorating? He is already so 13 deteriorated. What about that particular patient? I think 14 it is important to maybe look again at some of the 15 examples. Maybe I can help answer your question by looking 16 at some specifics of what is in the record of this case.

17 I have an example of one of the plaintiffs in this 18 case. Her name is Betty Bybel, and the testimony is that 19 when Betty Bybel was deteriorated, not only could she become 20 violent, but one thing she would do is sadistically taunt 21 the other patients about their personal lives, causing a 22 deterioration in their health. That wouldn't fall under any 23 of these exceptions, yet under the First Circuit Betty Bybel 24 is going to continue to cause the other patients to 25 deteriorate.

1 The record is that when Betty Bybel would start
2 yelling, everybody would start yelling. That is not covered 3 under either of those exceptions. There is no significant 4 deterioration in Betty Bybel. There is nothing about 5 dangerousness, but the hospital is going wacky, and going -- 6 the hospital is going up at that time, because of the effect 7 in the milieu, which is not discussed in either of the 8 opinions.

9 You have an example of another patient, James 10 Colleran. He would sadistically taunt female patients 11 sexually. All right. For the female patients, you might 12 have the question of dangerousness, but what happens is that 13 he set up some of the male patients who had their own sexual 14 hangups, and couldn't stand James Colleran taunting the 15 female patients, and the male patients' illnesses 16 deteriorated, and there are just example upon example of 17 example of these kinds of situations, and you must recognize 18 that we are talking about a milieu here, we are talking 19 about the state's ability to perform its legitimate 20 objective of maintaining order in these hospitals, and 21 neither opinion deals with this very fundamental reason that 22 there should not be a right to refuse treatment.

23 QUESTION: Mr. Schultz, you say that treatment with 24 antipsychotic drugs is the standard fare with maybe 90
25 percent or at least the great majority of your patients.

1 There is a group of patients that you don't use drugs on.

2 MR. SCHULTZ: That's correct.

3 QUESTION: So you must have some criteria, some 4 criterion for separating out those you use them on and the 5 ones you don't.

6 MR. SCHULTZ: Medical judgment.

7 QUESTION: Medical judgment. Well, if the courts
8 had said to you, well, you have two groups, the ones you use 9 them on and the ones you don't, if you decide that a certain 10 person belongs in the group that you are going to give drugs 11 to, you should go through a procedure to decide that.

12 Now, do you say that those -- nothing about the 13 commitment helps you decide which group you give the drugs 14 to and which you don't. They have all gone through this 15 process of being involuntarily committed.

16 MR. SCHULTZ: What they were all involuntarily 17 committed for was appropriate treatment, we would suggest.
18 We would suggest --

19 QUESTION: I know, but there had to be some 20 findings before there was an involuntary commitment, either 21 danger to themselves, to others, or they couldn't take care 22 of themselves. The reason you have committed them is for 23 treatment maybe, but nevertheless you had to make those 24 findings.

25 MR. SCHULTZ: Well, let me answer that in two ways,

1 if I can, and I think I can deal with the questions you are 2 raising. This case is not a procedural case, is my first 3 answer. This is not a case where you are simply talking 4 about the First Circuit setting up additional procedural 5 safeguards. The First Circuit is talking about changing the 6 substance of law, of setting up a different class of 7 patients within the hospital, a group which, procedures 8 aside, is going to be called your mentally ill competent 9 patient, who is allowed to stay in the hospital, as the 10 defense puts it, demand hotel service instead of treatment, 11 and refuse their medication.

12 They are talking about another group of patients 13 that is going to be set up that just didn't exist before, 14 which is a group called incompetent patients but for whom 15 there is going to be a substituted judgment that if they 16 were competent they should be allowed to refuse, and those 17 patients are going -- somebody else is going to be allowed 18 to say, they should be allowed to refuse their medication.
19 It has nothing to do with setting up -- this is not the 20 procedural question.

21 The First Circuit opinion doesn't even mention
22 procedural due process. This isn't an opinion which talks 23 about the state's rights and the individual rights and the 24 need to have some type of mechanism which will lead to an 25 accurate assessment, which we would suggest in our brief the

1 hospitals do have, which is the second half. We believe the 2 type of review that takes place at these hospitals is 3 constitutionally adequate, but what I want --

4 QUESTION: Could you be specific on what type of 5 review the hospitals do employ? Could you describe --

6 MR. SCHULTZ: At these hospitals, there are rounds 7 every day in which medications are discussed, at which a 8 doctor must be present.

9 QUESTION: Is it discussed with the patient?

10 MR. SCHULTZ: At team meetings twice a week, it is 11 discussed with the patient. At one of the units at the team 12 meetings, the medical supervisor attended the team meetings.

13 QUESTION: Are the patients' desires concerning 14 medication considered then?

15 MR. SCHULTZ: The record shows that they are. That 16 that was always a factor. That they would listen to the 17 reasons that the patients gave as one factor they would take 18 into account.

19 QUESTION: And do the physicians consider the 20 dangerousness of the patient or the propensity for violence?

21 MR. SCHULTZ: Before, not -- not really. I mean, 22 dangerousness is part and parcel of the mental illness.
23 Yes, they considered it to the extent that because these 24 people are mentally ill, because some of them certainly have 25 a history of dangerousness, that these patients need

1 treatment, but I cannot honestly say that dangerousness was 2 one of the factors that they took into account.

3 What they took into account was whether or not 4 these particular patients needed the antipsychotic 5 medication.

6 QUESTION: And they consider the alternative forms 7 of treatment for medication?

8 MR. SCHULTZ: There is not an alternative form of 9 treatment for most of these patients. I mean, I cannot 10 honestly tell you that they went through -- we have proposed 11 remedies in this case, where the other side suggests under 12 the doctrine of least restrictive alternative there are 12 13 other alternatives that must always be considered, one of 14 them being seclusion, which they suggest is less restrictive 15 than forcible medication. The doctors did not do that.

16 Would the doctors prescribe antipsychotic
17 medication if they didn't believe that was the best 18 treatment? No. And to that extent, it is a consideration 19 of the alternatives, but it was not a matter that they said 20 to themselves, which is the least restrictive form of 21 treatment that could be given. Instead, what they would say 22 to themselves is, what is the best form of treatment that 23 they could be given.

24 Let me go back on --

25 QUESTION: When you say they consider in these

1 rounds or in these meetings whether the patient needed the 2 medication, what do you mean by need?

3 MR. SCHULTZ: Well, it would be a consideration of, 4 one, what are the side effects this patient is having, are 5 the side effects so serious that we should -- first of all, 6 one of the units had specific meetings simply where the 7 patients could raise complaints about the medication. Now
8 it is the full purpose of the meeting every week. So 9 obviously in that situation they consider what the patient 10 complained about.

11 QUESTION: What do you mean, that they need the 12 medication? Need it for what? Need it for treatment?

13 MR. SCHULTZ: Need it for treatment, and does the 14 need outweigh whatever side effects this particular patient
15 might be experiencing at this time. Is the patient's health 16 changed sufficiently? It may be one can start other 17 therapies in addition to medication. These were teaching 18 hospitals, both of these hospitals that we have here. So 19 there were residency programs. The residents, as in any 20 teaching facility, would regularly be meeting with their 21 supervisors. They would be regularly meeting with the 22 patients. And these are hospitals that had a lot of 23 feedback, that had a lot of periodic review of the various 24 medications.

25 One other point that I want to emphasize that I

1 think both courts below simply have misinterpreted what 2 parens patriae power and what police powers are all about.
3 Police power is talked about in terms of a policeman's 4 ability to prevent dangerousness, and the defendant suggests 5 that simply is not what the police power is. The police
6 power, according to past cases in this Court, is the ability 7 to protect the general welfare, including to protect the 8 public health of its citizens.

9 The Commonwealth would suggest that this ability to 10 protect the public health is clearly implicated when you are 11 talking about the need to treat patients against their will 12 who have already been committed against their will for 13 treatment purposes. As to the parens patriae power, I 14 simply want to say that this notion of competency seems to 15 have been invented by the First Circuit to justify its 16 opinion. You will find nothing in the opinions of this 17 Court that ties this variable competency that can change in 18 one day, where one day you are competent and one day you are 19 not competent, to the parens patriae power. The state is 20 the sovereign, as a sovereign is the guardian over all 21 idiots and lunatic, according to the opinions of this Court.

22 This Court has never mentioned incompetency. This 23 notion of incompetency, the Commonwealth would suggest, is 24 one that has been brought in from the rear to justify the 25 opinion. It simply is not necessary. The parens patriae

1 powers and the police powers are more than adequate to 2 justify the actions taken by the doctors in this case.

3 Thank you very much.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Schultz, does the record show
5 anything about the adequacy of staffing in these hospitals?
6 We hear a lot of complaints over the country about 7 understaffing, insufficient number of psychiatrists and 8 other attendants. Does the record show anything here?

9 MR. SCHULTZ: It shows that they were half of what 10 you might find in a private hospital, where they were 11 compared to McLean Hospital in Boston for the comparison in 12 staffing. They were far above the minimum standards that 13 were set out in such cases as Wyatt.

14 QUESTION: I gather from your remarks, these 15 frequent sessions and the like, that there was no problem 16 with staffing.

17 MR. SCHULTZ: The staffing could have been better, 18 but it is not a question of there were not doctors, there 19 were not good registered nurses, there were not residents.
20 I mean, that kind of staffing was there.

21 QUESTION: Before you sit down, let me put one at 22 you that we have got you stopped. I get a feeling reading 23 this record, the massive record, this case went on how many 24 weeks?

25 MR. SCHULTZ: It was a year and a half of trial and

1 74 -- I guess 72 trial days and two days of closing argument.

2 QUESTION: I get a feeling, and I wonder what your 3 reaction is, whether I am being led astray, that the judges, 4 as we judges tend to do, were reading this testimony in this 5 record as though mental illness, psychiatric problems, are 6 like physical illness, that you can take someone's 7 temperature or pulse or blood test and then you know 8 something about what is going on inside that person. Is 9 that a strange reaction that I get, or would you --

10 MR. SCHULTZ: No, I think that is certainly there, 11 and I think that goes to this problem of the inability to 12 predict the violence of some patients, the unawareness that 13 people who do not think rationally are going to act 14 impulsively on those irrational thoughts. There is simply 15 no recognition by either judge of those particular problems.

16 QUESTION: A diabetic patient, for example, if he 17 is getting near diabetic coma, they can find that out by a 18 blood test, can't they? But you are saying that you can't 19 do that with the psychotic or the schizophrenic.

20 MR. SCHULTZ: I don't want to overstate it. There 21 are certainly many patients you cannot do that for. There 22 are some patients that might have a clear history that if 23 they do something, they do something first. Then you know
24 that something else almost always follows. Then you have a 25 history showing you for those psychotic patients that when

1 they start winding up you have got to look out, the next
2 thing they are going to do is punch somebody. But if you 3 don't have that kind of history, certainly you have that 4 problem.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Schultz, I take it there is a
6 regular procedure at these hospitals for periodically
7 determining if the grounds for commitment still exist.

8 MR. SCHULTZ: That is correct.

9 QUESTION: So that presumably in between -- just 10 take a particular patient, Mr. A. In between the times that 11 his case is reviewed for that purpose and the next time it 12 is reviewed for that purpose, presumably he still fits the 13 definition of a proper committee, that he is either 14 dangerous to himself or to others or can't take care of 15 himself.

16 MR. SCHULTZ: That's correct. There is an 17 affirmative obligation on the superintendent to release a 18 patient who is no longer mentally ill or felt no longer
19 mentally ill and dangerous. In addition to that, there is a 20 six-month periodic review and then another six-month 21 periodic review at the beginning, then they are yearly after 22 the first six months, and in addition, there is what is 23 known as a Section 9 petition, where any time the patient 24 himself wants to petition the court, he can do so.

25 QUESTION: So we are talking about -- the court of

1 appeals is talking about saying you must determine -- you
2 must get the consent of someone who right now is dangerous
3 to himself or to others or can't take care of himself.

4 MR. SCHULTZ: That is correct. I mean, what they 5 say, without, we suggest, any real support, is that once you 6 are in the institution, they say the finding is 7 dangerousness on the outside, not necessarily what is on the 8 inside. We say the finding is dangerous because of mental 9 illness, and that they are just missing the point of what 10 the mental illness does to the individual.

11 QUESTION: Well, if they don't qualify any longer 12 for commitment, they should be turned loose.

13 MR. SCHULTZ: That's correct.

14 QUESTION: Mr. Schultz, the opinion in this case is 15 based, of course, in part on the fact that in Massachusetts 16 someone can be an involuntarily committed patient and under 17 Massachusetts law is still competent legally to make a 18 variety of decisions. Is that not true?

19 MR. SCHULTZ: All Massachusetts law says is that 20 you are competent to do some very specific things, write a 21 will, manage your affairs.

22 QUESTION: Dispose of property.

23 MR. SCHULTZ: That's right. It says nothing about 24 that you are competent to make treatment decisions. That is 25 a gloss that the First Circuit and the district court

1 opinion have put on the Massachusetts law.

2 QUESTION: Can they vote in Massachusetts?

3 MR. SCHULTZ: Yes, they can. But again, this goes 4 to -- we accept that somebody may be delusional in some 5 areas and not delusional in other areas.

6 QUESTION: Well, part of the decision here may be 7 affected, may it not, by this provision of Massachusetts law 8 providing that they continue to be legally competent, right?

9 MR. SCHULTZ: I don't think it should be. I don't 10 think -- one, competency is relevant, as I have discussed, 11 competency is a variable thing, so that you can be more 12 competent one day than the next day, and really what is 13 relevant is why you are committed. Beyond that, 14 Massachusetts law, I think, is clear. It does not recognize 15 a right to refuse treatment. It sets out in the law
16 specifically that there is a right to refuse electric shock
17 and lobotomy, and does not mention antipsychotic 18 medication. I think under normal rules of statutory 19 interpretation the right interpretation of Massachusetts law 20 is that it does not recognize the right to refuse treatment 21 with antipsychotic medication.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Schultz, may I ask you one other 23 question? Apart from procedures that have been adopted in 24 response to this litigation -- just assume we didn't have 25 the case -- does the record tell us whether the hospital

1 draws any distinction in its day to day administration
2 between voluntarily and involuntarily committed patients?

3 MR. SCHULTZ: They did not before this suit except 4 to the extent that for the voluntary patient they would say, 5 you can leave, but if they didn't, then they treated them 6 like involuntary patients, without bothering to commit.

7 QUESTION: The voluntary patient always had the 8 right to leave. Is that right?

9 MR. SCHULTZ: Yes, Your Honor.

10 QUESTION: I see. But other than that, in terms of 11 medical decisions and the like, they are treated alike?

12 MR. SCHULTZ: That's correct.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Schultz, we have been taking your 14 time that you wanted to reserve to reply, and perhaps the 15 Court will give you additional time.

16 You have not responded to the motion of the other 17 side that we dismiss this case in light of the court's 18 decision in your state in Roe.

19 MR. SCHULTZ: Well, I have certainly responded by 20 brief.

21 QUESTION: You did briefly, but that is a rather 22 important issue, at least for me.

23 MR. SCHULTZ: Well, I can do no more than really 24 repeat what I think are the basic points in our brief, so I 25 will do that very briefly, if you would like. I think the

1 Roe decision, first of all, they went out of their way to 2 say that they weren't deciding this case. On four different 3 occasions they said, we are not --

4 QUESTION: Without going into that detail, let me 5 ask you this.

6 MR. SCHULTZ: Okay.

7 QUESTION: Do you think the Roe decision changed
8 the law of Massachusetts in any way?

9 MR. SCHULTZ: It is hard to say, because the Roe 10 decision deals with a moot situation which is never going to 11 come up again, and I really don't think the Roe decision is 12 going to have any impact whatsoever in Massachusetts.

13 QUESTION: You think it is totally irrelevant to 14 this case?

15 MR. SCHULTZ: Absolutely.

16 Thank you.

17 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Your time for rebuttal will 18 be reserved as you undertook to reserve it, which is five 19 minutes.

20 Mr. Cole, you may proceed when you are ready.

21 ORAL ARGUMENT OF RICHARD WAYNE COLE, ESQ.,

22 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

23 MR. COLE: Thank you.

24 Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court, I 25 would like to try to clear up two comments that were made at

1 the end of the argument in terms of commitment. The Roe 2 case specifically dealt with whether or not merely because 3 someone is being committed for dangerous in the community,
4 dangerousness in the community, whether it means that a 5 person would be necessarily dangerous in the hospital, the 6 Supreme Judicial Court said specifically it does not mean, 7 and I will give an example of that.

8 Someone may be dangerous to their family because 9 they are having problems with their family, and they are 10 dangerous, and they are put in the hospital. Now, they 11 cannot be discharged, because if they are again discharged 12 into the community, they would be dangerous in the 13 community, does not necessarily mean that they would be 14 dangerous in the hospital.

15 In fact, the district court found as a matter of 16 fact, based on the evidence presented by the defendants, 17 that only 25 percent of the patients in the hospital are in 18 fact potentially dangerous, and I will address that later.

19 Second of all, in terms of the practice dealing 20 with voluntary patients, they were treated specifically like 21 involuntary patients. What happened was that patients
22 weren't told that they had a right to leave. They were told 23 that if they refused their drugs, they would be forcibly 24 medicated, and that if they tried to leave, they threatened 25 them with commitment. So there wasn't such a thing that

1 -- they are called conditional voluntary patients, where 2 the patient has to give three day notice to the hospital, 3 and during that period of time the hospital has the right to 4 petition, and the record was consistent in the patients who 5 testified and staff who testified that patients were 6 threatened that if they did refuse and they tried to leave, 7 that they would attempt to commit them.

8 I would like now to go to certain brief points 9 concerning this case.

10 QUESTION: Well, let me ask you one question about 11 the record. Does the record indicate what happened in the 12 event that there were commitment proceedings? Were the 13 patients who refused treatment invariably committed?

14 MR. COLE: There was nothing in the record 15 concerning that. Most patients, at least the testimony that 16 we have from staff and patients was that the patient would 17 not sign the voluntary -- or withdraw the voluntary under 18 the threat of commitment. But there was no record 19 concerning what was the rate of those individuals who 20 refused and whether or not they would be committed.

21 First of all, I would like to make the point that 22 respondent in this case had never sought to restrict the use 23 of antipsychotic drugs on individuals who were able to weigh 24 the risks and benefits of these drugs and who voluntarily 25 agreed to take them.

1 QUESTION: You say they are able to weigh it.

2 MR. COLE: That is correct.

3 QUESTION: Who says they are able to weigh it?

4 MR. COLE: The district court found, based on the 5 evidence that was presented below, that most patients in the 6 hospital as a matter of fact were able to weigh the risks 7 and benefits of the drugs, specifically and particularly 8 those patients who had experienced antipsychotic drugs 9 before. Now, 85 percent of the patient population were 10 either patients who were chronic patients or patients who 11 had been rehospitalized previously, and one can assume by 12 both the evidence in the case and as petitioner says that 13 almost all those patients had antipsychotic drug experience 14 in the past.

15 Secondly, this is not a situation in which if 16 patients are provided with the right to refuse antipsychotic
17 drugs, that many patients will be without treatment. Now, 18 the petitioners have here asked for de novo review of a 19 number of facts found by the district court after a 72-day 20 trial, a voluminous record with testimony which -- some of 21 it was in dispute, but which the district court found -- but 22 the district court found, and based on -- by statements made 23 by the defendants themselves, that the vast majority of 24 patients after the district court order accepted some form 25 of antipsychotic drug, though not necessarily the drug or

1 dosage the doctors originally prescribed, as long as the 2 doctors tried to use discourse to discuss with the patient 3 the risks and benefits rather than the previous practice of 4 using force on the patients.

5 Now, this was a different practice, and the 6 defendants admitted, there are admissions in the record that 7 the defendants' practice in the past was for patients, some 8 patients who were able to make rational decisions, that they 9 would ignore or disregard patients' complaints about the 10 adverse side effects, and medicate them anyway because the 11 doctors believed that it was in their best medical interest.

12 Secondly, the district court found that a number of 13 effective alternatives are available to the hospital for 14 those competent patients who refuse antipsychotic drugs.

15 QUESTION: What does the district court know about 16 these things, any more than most judges know about the 17 processes that go on in a medical hospital?

18 MR. COLE: Well, Your Honor, there was substantial 19 testimony from a number of national experts on both sides 20 concerning alternatives --

21 QUESTION: And this should be ultimately relegated 22 to the decision of one district judge, or of a court of 23 appeals, or, for that matter, this Court?

24 MR. COLE: Well, the fundamental question in this 25 case is, we perceive as a fundamental historic right in our

1 society that an individual, a competent adult individual has 2 a right to refuse treatment recommended to them by a doctor, 3 even if they --

4 QUESTION: What percentage of these people are 5 competent adult persons, of these inmates?

6 MR. COLE: Well, Your Honor, first of all, the Roe
7 case, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, the highest 8 state court, specifically said that patients are competent 9 to make treatment decisions even though committed, so in 10 their interpretation of state law --

11 QUESTION: All of them? All of them?

12 MR. COLE: No, Your Honor. We don't believe that 13 all of them are, but as the Roe case said, and as the 14 district court and the court of appeals said, that for those 15 patients who are unable to weigh the risks and benefits, 16 there is a state procedure present, and in fact, the 17 petitioners followed that same state procedure for medical 18 treatment for those same patients, the surgical treatment 19 for those same patients, and for psychosurgery and 20 electroshock.

21 That means that if -- that they either have to get 22 the consent of those same patients who are in the hospital 23 who they say they don't have to get for antipsychotic drug 24 treatment, and if they believe they are incompetent, that 25 they have to go to the probate court to get an adjudication

1 of legal incompetency before they can be forcibly treated 2 for medical treatment, surgical treatment, electroshock and 3 psychosurgery, and this treatment could be ongoing also.

4 For example, medical treatment could for the same 5 patient be ongoing and involves drugs also, the drug, for 6 example, dilantin, phenobarbital, dealing with seizures.
7 They are ongoing. And they need the consent of the patient 8 in those circumstances.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Cole, I understand your view that 10 there is a great difference between being committed for 11 statutory reasons and being mentally incompetent. Is it 12 your view that the test of incompetence for things such as 13 making wills and voting and entering into contracts should 14 be precisely the same as the test for competence to make 15 this medical decision?

16 MR. COLE: Your Honor, the answer is, each type of 17 situation for competency to vote, for contracting, are all 18 individual legal determinations that are made by courts of 19 law in Massachusetts traditionally. In fact, dealing with --

20 QUESTION: But are there grades of incompetence in 21 Massachusetts? You could be incompetent to vote, but not to 22 enter into a contract or not to make a will?

23 MR. COLE: There is a belief in -- there is law
24 that in Massachusetts someone can be specifically 25 incompetent in one area and not legally incompetent in

1 another area. But in terms of medical treatment, the same
2 procedure follows the state case that we cited in court
3 dealing with Lane versus Candura, where a doctor believed 4 that a patient who was going to -- refused surgery, and the 5 doctor believed the patient was incompetent, and they went 6 to court, and the court says, even though the doctor 7 believed that the decision by the patient was unwise and 8 foolish, and maybe even incompetent, that in fact she was 9 still legally competent under Massachusetts law. And the 10 Roe --

11 QUESTION: Under Massachusetts law, is the test of 12 competence merely one of the intellectual ability to know 13 what is best for oneself, or does it also require something 14 to do with the kind of self-discipline that might be 15 necessary to make the decision?

16 MR. COLE: I think the Massachusetts law, though, 17 it is not clear, is that if a person understands and is able 18 to weigh the benefits and risks of the type of treatment, 19 even though --

20 QUESTION: Some people weigh the benefits and risks 21 of stopping smoking, but then they go ahead and smoke.

22 MR. COLE: Our society believes that an individual 23 has a fundamental liberty interest in making certain 24 decisions except for in certain extraordinary situations.

25 QUESTION: The test is really an intellectual test.

1 MR. COLE: That is correct.

2 QUESTION: Could I ask you, say here is a 3 particular person who is involuntarily committed, and there 4 has been the proper finding that he is either dangerous to 5 himself or to others or he can't take care of himself by 6 reason of mental illness, and so he is committed, and the 7 judge has found that he is in that condition.

8 MR. COLE: The finding is only that the person is 9 mentally ill and dangerous if the person remains in the 10 community, but there is not a finding that the person is 11 mentally ill and dangerous in general. That means it will 12 follow the person.

13 QUESTION: What if it is found that he cannot take 14 care of himself by reason of some mental illness?

15 MR. COLE: That is the third category.

16 QUESTION: Yes.

17 MR. COLE: That is the inability to care for 18 themselves in terms of the basic necessities of life.

19 QUESTION: That is the same, in or out.

20 MR. COLE: Excuse me?

21 QUESTION: That is the same, inside or outside.

22 MR. COLE: That's correct. That's correct.

23 QUESTION: And if you are dangerous to yourself, I
24 suppose it is the same inside or outside.

25 MR. COLE: That is not necessarily so.

1 QUESTION: Nevertheless, the day after he is 2 committed, and he goes into the institution, the doctor 3 says, I want to treat him, I want to give him an 4 antipsychotic drug. Now, you say at that point the doctor 5 must go through some -- he must decide whether the person is 6 competent or not.

7 MR. COLE: That is correct in terms of the use of 8 drugs for treatment for parens patriae circumstances.

9 QUESTION: Well, now, if the doctor decides in his 10 own mind that -- he says, this person right this very minute 11 is either -- is dangerous to himself or to others or he 12 can't take care of himself by reason of mental illness.
13 Now, suppose he says, of those three, this person is 14 dangerous to others, right now. Now, does he -- is that 15 mutually exclusive to being competent to decide whether to 16 take a drug?

17 MR. COLE: No, it is not.

18 QUESTION: That is what I have very great 19 difficulty understanding. He might be very competent, but 20 can you be competent to refuse treatment that the doctor 21 wants to administer to keep you from hurting others?

22 MR. COLE: Okay. In that situation, the court of 23 appeals directly addresses that circumstance. In a 24 situation where a person -- and the respondents have always 25 conceded this -- that even if a person is competent in a

1 situation where there is a threat to the institution, that 2 there are institutional needs that have to be taken into 3 consideration, and in that circumstance the individual's 4 fundamental liberty interest can be overridden.

5 QUESTION: Well, any time then -- the court of 6 appeals judgment will be no barrier to any doctor who says, 7 this person is dangerous to others, or this person is 8 dangerous to himself, or he can't take care of himself by 9 reason of mental illness right this very minute? Then 10 competency is beside the point?

11 MR. COLE: Under the -- what the court of appeals 12 is saying is that because a patient is not necessarily 13 dangerous in the institution, in fact, in terms of violence, 14 there are only, according to the petitioner's testimony, 15 approximately 25 percent had the potential for violence, 16 that all the doctor has to do is, if the doctor makes an 17 individualized assessment -- that is all we are asking -- 18 that that particular patient creates a danger to self or 19 others at that time, then the state has a legitimate 20 interest in overriding the competent individual's right to 21 refuse.

22 And so that is correct. The fact is, if that was 23 the issue, and all they had to do was that, the petitioner 24 wouldn't be here today.

25 QUESTION: You wouldn't either.

1 MR. COLE: We wouldn't either, because that would 2 end the --

3 QUESTION: You wouldn't have brought the suit if 4 that was all that was involved.

5 MR. COLE: That's right. The fact is there are a 6 large percentage of patients who do not fit into that 7 category.

8 QUESTION: Who if they were out might be 9 committable, but if they are in, they are not necessarily 10 dangerous to anybody or themselves.

11 MR. COLE: That's correct. An example, as I said, 12 was an individual who may have shown violence to his family, 13 and has a pathology with his family, but you separate them 14 from the family, and they are in the environment of the 15 hospital, they are not dangerous to anyone else, their 16 danger was specific. They were dangerous to the family 17 themselves. And they can't discharge them because that 18 danger continues if they are released, and society has 19 decided -- I mean, the patient didn't ask to be there in the 20 first place. Society has decided that they have an 21 interest, a police power interest in taking that individual 22 off the street.

23 QUESTION: Tell me what you object to in the 24 medical decision. I don't suppose the doctors involved are 25 just interested in giving medication willy-nilly. There is

1 a range of reasons that they use, I suppose. What reasons 2 do you particularly object to?

3 MR. COLE: Well, if I can first begin to answer by 4 saying that the first thing we take is that these drugs are 5 extremely dangerous drugs.

6 QUESTION: I understand that.

7 MR. COLE: These are not relatively risk-free 8 drugs. And what we are saying is, in an individual who is 9 not dangerous, that means, the doctor does not believe there 10 is a potential for harm in the institution, number one, and 11 who is not causing the kind of security problems which 12 belong to the police power --

13 QUESTION: So why is he giving it?

14 MR. COLE: Then he is only giving it in order to 15 what they believe to benefit the individual, to have them 16 improve their health in the institution, and it is our view 17 that the state --

18 QUESTION: And you suggest that even if those are 19 the reasons, and valid ones, nevertheless the patient should 20 be, if he is competent, should be able to say, sorry, I 21 don't care to take it?

22 MR. COLE: That's right. That is particularly 23 important in this case, because we are not talking about 24 relatively risk-free drugs. We are talking about a drug 25 which the district court found that 30 to 50 percent of the 1 patients are getting a syndrome called tardive dyskinesia,

2 which is the deforming, often irreversible and untreatable 3 symptom that causes patients to have facial contortions and 4 grimaces, to have lip-smacking and tongue protrusions that 5 can't be controlled by the patient, that when this syndrome
6 gets fully manifested patients find that they cannot speak, 7 that -- and speech becomes incomprehensible, swallowing and 8 breathing are impaired as well as all motor activity.

9 Now, if this was only 1 or 2 or 3 percent of the 10 patient population involved --

11 QUESTION: So the patient, if he is competent, 12 should say, well, I would rather be the way I am than be 13 that other way.

14 MR. COLE: That's correct, and we are saying that 15 -- we are not saying this for all treatment. We are saying 16 that there are particular types of treatment, such as 17 psychosurgery, electroshock, that raise such fundamental 18 interests in terms of what these drugs can do. The 19 petitioners say these drugs don't affect the mind. Well, 20 the district court found -- there was substantial evidence 21 in this case -- that these drugs can blunt the 22 consciousness, impair cognition, learning ability, 23 problem-solving ability.

24 MR. COLE: Mr. Cole, none of the plaintiffs in this 25 case suffered any of these effects, did they?

1 MR. COLE: That is not correct, Your Honor. There
2 were admissions given -- the distinction that is being drawn 3 is between the main plaintiffs and the class of patients, 4 where there was substantial evidence dealing with both, and 5 there was admissions concerning the effects of these drugs, 6 and doctors admitted that some patients had from these drugs 7 in the class, had clouded consciousness.

8 QUESTION: Not 25 to 50 percent of the class. You 9 didn't mean to say that, did you?

10 MR. COLE: No, in terms of tardive dyskinesia, 11 which is the side effect, the only -- they agree that many 12 patients had tardive dyskinesia in admissions. The only 13 specific evidence they had --

14 QUESTION: What do you mean by many?

15 MR. COLE: There was no -- in the --

16 QUESTION: Because I got the impression from the 17 district court's finding that this is a very serious 18 possible side effect, but the actual litigants, at least the 19 named plaintiffs, you are right, had not suffered that.

20 MR. COLE: We only raised it for one named 21 plaintiff, Your Honor.

22 QUESTION: That it is a danger, but one that didn't 23 materialize very often within this class.

24 MR. COLE: On one ward, the testimony they had in 25 specifics of one ward in the hospital during one period

1 where a defense witness, a doctor who worked there, 2 testified that 10 to 15 patients out of 70 to 75 patients on 3 that ward had clear cases of tardive dyskinesia. That is a 4 20 percent rate of patients who have tardive dyskinesia, 5 clear cases. We are not talking about subtle signs of 6 tardive dyskinesia. The testimony was clear cases of 7 tardive dyskinesia. So that there was evidence for the 8 district court. The district court also used the medical 9 literature and the expert testimony, and there was a lot of 10 national experts who testified about what is the general 11 rate of patients who are getting this deforming, disabling 12 syndrome, and --

13 QUESTION: Would it not be correct that when a 14 patient gets that -- is in that unfortunate group, that 15 somebody has made a medical misjudgment?

16 MR. COLE: No, Your Honor. Any patient who gets 17 antipsychotic drugs is at risk. The problem with these -- I 18 mean, one of the problems is, not only do the drugs cause
19 tardive dyskinesia, but they can also mask the development 20 of the syndrome, that means, the manifestations of the 21 syndrome, initially, so often by the time the doctor finds 22 out, even using the best medical standards, by the time the 23 doctor finds out that the patient has the syndrome, it is 24 often irreversible, often untreatable. Not always, but 25 often.

1 So, we are not talking about if there is bad
2 practices.

3 QUESTION: The difficulty with your argument that I 4 see, at least, is that the more difficult it is to 5 accurately appraise the risk, it seems to me the less wisdom 6 there is in saying that the layman should make the medical 7 judgment.

8 MR. COLE: What we are saying is, is that the 9 patient is the one who has to assume the risk of this 10 irreversible side effect, and a competent individual should, 11 just like other competent adults in our society --

12 QUESTION: But even a competent doctor apparently 13 can't appraise it accurately.

14 MR. COLE: Well, the question is not whether -- one 15 can competently say that 20 to 50 percent of patients over 16 the long term who are taking these drugs are getting tardive 17 dyskinesia. That is a risk that one can understand. One 18 can't selectively say that this particular patient is going 19 to get it. Just like when someone has an operation and the 20 doctor says there is a one in 100 chance of death, they 21 don't know if specifically that one person is going to be 22 the person who is going to die. Of course, that person 23 wouldn't take the therapy.

24 QUESTION: Well, and of course this doesn't show up 25 until there has been medication over a prolonged period of 1 time, as I recall.

2 MR. COLE: Well, the record reflects that within 3 three months of antipsychotic drug treatment, there have 4 been reports that patients have had tardive dyskinesia.
5 Within a year of antipsychotic drug treatment, the patient 6 is at high risk. Now, you have to remember that a number of 7 these patients have been on antipsychotics in the past. We 8 are not talking about one year straight. We are talking 9 about one year. Eighty-five percent of the patient 10 population are either chronic patients or patients who are 11 being readmitted to the hospital who have had prior 12 hospitalizations, and therefore have taken antipsychotic
13 drugs, so the risk is great for that 85 percent immediately 14 if they have had any history of antipsychotic drugs.

15 QUESTION: But you would apply the same procedures 16 Justice White asked you about where the man is dangerous to 17 himself and so forth, you would apply the same procedure 18 whether the patient has ever had the drug before or whether 19 he has been using it for ten years.

20 MR. COLE: That's correct, because that is not the 21 only side effect that a patient experiences.

22 QUESTION: No, but this is the more serious one, as 23 I understand.

24 MR. COLE: Well, it is the one that in terms of 25 permanent effect is there, but there are a number of other

1 -- a patient can experience a number of side effects that 2 last the course of being on antipsychotic drug treatment, 3 very painful syndromes, disabling, not only of the body but 4 also of the mind. And what we are saying is that the 5 tradition in our society has been a competent individual has 6 the right, even if we believe it is wrong, to refuse 7 treatment as long as -- and in this situation we are talking 8 about extremely dangerous treatment, and we believe that 9 there is a liberty interest involved, and the court of 10 appeals attempted to weigh the strong patient's interest and 11 the institutional interest, and we feel that the weighing 12 was responsible, giving due deference to the state and the 13 institutional needs, but at the same time recognizing the 14 dangers of these drugs and the important patient's interest 15 in being able to refuse, especially considering that we are 16 really talking about and focusing on patients who the 17 Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts says are competent 18 to make these rational treatment decisions.

19 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Cole, suppose the doctor says, 20 well, the reason I am interested in giving these drugs is, I 21 think I can maybe restore you to the community, maybe even 22 cure you, or at least get you stable enough that I can turn 23 you loose, and the state has a major interest in doing that, 24 no matter what you think. Now, is that an improper 25 consideration?

1 MR. COLE: No. We recognize that it is a
2 legitimate state interest. The question is whether or not 3 that interest when it is the state that initially had 4 decided on putting him into the hospital in the first 5 place. And that interest, for example, is under the police
6 power to protect society in general. And we are saying, 7 does that interest standing alone for competent individuals 8 dealing with these dangerous drugs outweigh the patient's 9 interest.

10 QUESTION: Well, at least it is a consideration 11 that the state has a legitimate interest in trying to remove 12 these people from the institution if they can by curing them.

13 MR. COLE: Your Honor, the evidence demonstrated 14 that the vast majority of patients did not refuse 15 antipsychotic drugs over the long term when the doctors 16 responded to the patients' complaints about adverse side 17 effects, maybe changed the drug or the dosage.

18 QUESTION: Is anyone in this whole universe of 19 patients ever released because they have gotten better or 20 not?

21 MR. COLE: I assume that there have been patients 22 who have been released because they have gotten better.

23 QUESTION: But not many?

24 MR. COLE: No, I think there was -- we don't 25 dispute the fact that these drugs have some efficacy. We

1 challenge the --

2 QUESTION: Enough that some people are released.

3 MR. COLE: Enough that some people are released.

4 That is correct. But the question is, the state has decided 5 to commit the individuals, and has the interest -- and their 6 interest has been satisfied by committing them. In a 7 committing hearing --

8 QUESTION: Well, but their interest isn't 9 satisfied. Their interest is, they don't want to keep the 10 people there. That is a great expense to the taxpayer.
11 They want to get them out if they can. What is wrong with 12 that as an interest?

13 MR. COLE: As I said, we concede that that is a 14 legitimate state interest, and the district court and the 15 court of appeals reviewed that. The evidence doesn't bear 16 out that --

17 QUESTION: You say the person should be able to 18 say, sorry, no, I would rather stay here, and live on you 19 for --

20 MR. COLE: Well, the thing is, the misperception
21 about that is that the state has decided to put the person 22 in the hospital, especially under the police power, that has 23 nothing to do --

24 QUESTION: Well, they have decided to get him in to 25 treat him, that he is dangerous, they want to treat him, and

1 perhaps he will no longer be dangerous.

2 MR. COLE: There is no finding nor necessary
3 finding in a commitment court to find whether or not a 4 patient has -- whether or not treatment is available,
5 whether or not treatment will be effective. If you take a 6 look at --

7 QUESTION: Well, I understand that.

8 MR. COLE: So patients who cannot be treated at 9 all, the state still commits.

10 QUESTION: Would you agree that the state, if it 11 came -- if push came to shove in a situation like this, 12 would be free to release the person --

13 MR. COLE: If the person --

14 QUESTION: -- if they felt the person were so 15 disruptive and still refused to submit to what the doctors 16 thought was proper medication?

17 MR. COLE: If the doctors in their medical judgment 18 believed that that person is no longer dangerous in the 19 community, they can --

20 QUESTION: No. If he is just such a disruptive 21 force in the hospital that although all the reasons for 22 commitment were still there, his right to refuse treatment 23 is producing such a disruptive effect that the state says, 24 we would rather have one guy like this on the outside rather 25 than have him on the inside, so to speak.

1 MR. COLE: The response is, they can't release
2 them, but on the other hand, the police --

3 QUESTION: Why can't they?

4 QUESTION: Why can't they?

5 MR. COLE: Well, they would probably have to go to 6 the committing court to ask for permission, but let me --

7 QUESTION: Well, what if the committing court gave 8 them permission? Is there any constitutional argument 9 against their doing it?

10 MR. COLE: No, absolutely not. Let me just mention 11 that the individual who is wreaking havoc on the 12 institution, the police power standing of the First Circuit
13 takes care of that individual. If the risk of institutional 14 security, if the doctor believes that it is affecting other 15 patients, significantly deteriorating other patients, then 16 the hospital can do that if there are no other 17 alternatives. They can --

18 QUESTION: And restrain him

19 MR. COLE: Well, they can use medication to deal 20 with that situation. That is correct, Your Honor.

21 QUESTION: Doesn't the doctor run some risk of 22 being second-guessed in a 1983 action?

23 MR. COLE: If the doctor in good faith and honestly 24 complies with the standard, they can make a mistake and 25 still not be held liable. In the situation of this case --

1 QUESTION: They are still subject to a jury trial.

2 QUESTION: They may have to litigate forever.

3 MR. COLE: Well, Your Honor, that is a risk.

4 However, an example of this situation was in our case, where 5 the court, district court found the defendants violated the 6 state seclusion statute, and knew or should have known that 7 they violated it, but they were not held liable because the 8 court said they couldn't have anticipated that they violated 9 the statute, and even though they made a mistake, the court 10 found that they were not liable.

11 So, we are not talking about a situation -- 12 whatever standard we are going to use, whether or not -- if 13 we are going to use a standard of that doctors can only 14 treat when they think it is necessary, the doctors can be 15 sued by patients if the patient believes it is not 16 necessary. That is always the risk. Whatever the standard, 17 as long as they act in good faith, even if they are 18 mistaken, they can't be held liable.

19 Now, Massachusetts, dealing with malpractice, has a 20 malpractice tribunal to deal with frivolous complaints and 21 to screen them out, but --

22 QUESTION: Mr. Cole, can I ask you a question about 23 the -- of course, this is a constitutional case. We are 24 trying to decide what the Constitution requires 25 Massachusetts to do, and if I understand you correctly, if

1 Massachusetts passed a statute and said that a commitment of 2 this kind, even if accompanied by a finding that this kind 3 of treatment may be in the best interest of the patient, and 4 the finding specifically authorized the doctor to administer 5 this treatment whenever it was found to be, after a full 6 hearing and all the rest, in the best interest of the 7 patient, he still couldn't -- that would be unconstitutional.

8 MR. COLE: Our belief is that that would be 9 unconstitutional.

10 QUESTION: Because your standard is that as long as 11 the individual is mentally competent to make the decision, 12 he has a constitutional right to refuse, notwithstanding 13 medical judgment that it would be in his best interest 14 otherwise.

15 MR. COLE: Except in circumstances where the 16 institutional security or --

17 QUESTION: I understand that. I am talking about 18 the non-violent, the non-violent person but does have an 19 illness of some kind that there is a reasonable difference 20 of opinion on whether he could be cured, and a medical 21 judgment, the state could not provide that the medical 22 judgment would ever prevail over his will if he is 23 intelligent enough to weigh the --

24 MR. COLE: That's correct. In fact, that is the 25 procedure that the defendants -- the petitioners use in a

1 situation --

2 QUESTION: I just wanted to make it clear.

3 MR. COLE: -- in situations of electroshock and 4 psychosurgery.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Cole, you have been talking about 6 the right of patients in Massachusetts to refuse treatment.
7 Does that right extend in your state to the right to die?

8 MR. COLE: You are asking whether or not the 9 patients in the hospital --

10 QUESTION: Suppose a patient is in a condition that 11 is terminal. The doctor so advises him, and says, we can 12 keep you alive for another year or two or three by these 13 treatments, and the patient says no, the illness is 14 terminal, I have a right under Massachusetts law to refuse 15 treatment. Is that the law of Massachusetts?

16 MR. COLE: Yes, that is the law of Massachusetts.
17 The Secowitz case, which dealt with an institutionalized
18 mentally retardive individual, was specifically that case.

19 QUESTION: The right to refuse treatment in 20 Massachusetts includes the right to die?

21 MR. COLE: Well, it includes that the state does 22 not have to use extraordinary -- in that case, it was a 23 situation where whether or not the patient could refuse 24 treatment that may extend their life a year, maybe two 25 years, that they had a right to refuse that kind of

1 treatment.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Cole, would you clarify for me your 3 position as to the constitutional right that may exist for 4 the patient who is committed and who is incompetent by court 5 finding?

6 MR. COLE: Our view is that this Court need not 7 reach the constitutional issue because there is a state
8 procedure that is available and the Supreme Judicial Court 9 of Massachusetts in Roe says that that is the procedure to 10 follow in that situation. Our view is that this Court 11 should apply the state procedure dealing with that.

12 In terms of what we believe is constitutionally 13 due, our view is that competency is a legal determination.
14 It has been in every context in our society, including 15 medical care. It has been in Massachusetts, certainly, both 16 in the Secowitz case, Lane versus Candura, and the other 17 cases we have cited, has always been a legal determination.
18 Number one, we believe that even if state law didn't apply 19 and require a competency proceeding, that constitutionally 20 an individual would be required to have it, and once again, 21 it emphasized the defendants follow that procedure for 22 medical, surgical treatment, electroshock, and psychosurgery.

23 QUESTION: Do you know how many states have 24 commitment laws that incorporate a finding of incompetence?

25 MR. COLE: I don't believe --

1 QUESTION: Or have the effect of incompetence by 2 virtue of the commitment?

3 MR. COLE: I believe the American Psychiatric 4 Association tries to indicate -- indicates in its brief that 5 there are certain states -- I don't think there are a lot of 6 states that have that finding, and they recognize that 7 Massachusetts is not one of those states that actually have 8 that finding in their brief.

9 QUESTION: What happens, laying aside for a moment 10 the mental illness problem, what happens if a patient 11 develops an attack which the hospital physician diagnoses as 12 possible ruptured appendix that should be operated on 13 immediately. Do they have to get the consent of the patient?

14 MR. COLE: No, Your Honor. That is an emergency
15 situation, and the Attorney General of Massachusetts wrote 16 an advisory opinion to the Department of Mental Health and 17 said that surgery of individuals who are committed, that 18 except for cases of an emergency, that you must get the 19 consent of the individual in order to treat, so that would 20 be just like we are saying, that there are emergency 21 exceptions to the rule, but that the general rule is that 22 when there is not that kind of an emergency, that the 23 competent individual --

24 QUESTION: Well, competent. You have used that 25 phrase so much, but how many of the people in this 10

1 percent are competent in the sense that they are capable of 2 making the day to day decisions of life that presumably the 3 rest of us outside are capable of making?

4 MR. COLE: The district court didn't give a
5 number. What the district court said was that most patients 6 who are involuntarily committed are competent to make that 7 -- to weigh the risks and benefits.

8 QUESTION: Was there any expert testimony as to the 9 percentage of serious schizophrenic patients who ever get 10 well?

11 MR. COLE: I don't believe there was -- there was 12 medical articles dealing with comparing patients who were on 13 antipsychotic drugs versus not using antipsychotic drugs.
14 But there wasn't any percentage of the number of patients --

15 QUESTION: Wouldn't it be very important for any -- 16 if judges are going to get into this business, wouldn't it 17 be important to know whether certain categories of mental 18 illness are treatable and have any possibility of recovery
19 and some are not? That is certainly known, isn't it?

20 MR. COLE: That's correct. There was testimony
21 concerning the rate of improvement with antipsychotic drugs 22 and without, dealing generally, not dealing with the 23 particular wards here, in general, and it was -- for 24 example, the chief of pharmacology of the Department of 25 Mental Health testified that at most, 50 percent of 1 schizophrenic patients benefit from antipsychotic drugs, 2 benefit, improve at all.

3 QUESTION: That is different from being cured.

4 MR. COLE: Improve at all. And in our brief we 5 indicate what the different kinds of -- what improvement
6 means, and that improving could be limited to the extent 7 that someone may at that point be able to cloth himself.
8 That is considered improvement, but as this doctor said, who 9 was the chief psychopharmacologist, that approximately 50 10 percent of patients with schizophrenia improve at all on 11 antipsychotic drugs.

12 QUESTION: Was there any expert testimony that 13 pointed out that a great many patients who show improvement, 14 not a cure, but an improvement in the protected environment
15 of a hospital nevertheless are not subject to release 16 because if they are out of that protected environment, with 17 all the stresses of outside life, they would regress? Was 18 there any testimony along that line?

19 MR. COLE: There was testimony concerning that, 20 Your Honor, that even though someone may improve, it doesn't 21 mean that they would be released necessarily. Improve in 22 the limited sense that they would be released.
23 Approximately 50 percent of the patients in this hospital
24 were long-term patients, were long-term chronic patients.
25 That was testified by one of the -- Dr. Gill, I believe,

1 that approximately 50 percent were long-term patients.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Cole, may I ask just one other 3 question about your constitutional theory? I take it your 4 claim of a constitutional liberty interest here is limited
5 to the case in which there is this kind of very serious 6 permanent damage? But you make the same claims, to the 7 patient, assuming a competent and non-dangerous person, to 8 refuse less severe treatment, such as flu shots or an 9 exercise program or something he just didn't want to do.
10 You wouldn't contend he had a --

11 MR. COLE: No. I think there is a distinction.

12 QUESTION: But a non-committed person would have a 13 right to refuse those things, I suppose.

14 MR. COLE: Well, I think we are talking about a 15 balancing test that this Court has used with institutions, 16 and what we are saying is that situations which deal with 17 conditions of confinement, that there is a different test 18 than dealing with fundamental intrusions.

19 QUESTION: Used as non-punishment.

20 MR. COLE: Used as non-punishment, but that involve 21 fundamental liberty interests. What we are saying is that 22 it is --

23 QUESTION: For it to be a constitutional violation, 24 are you taking the view that it has to be viewed as a form 25 of punishment?

1 MR. COLE: No. Absolutely not, Your Honor.

2 QUESTION: What is the difference between what you
3 object to and a man refusing flu shots?

4 MR. COLE: It is the significance of the 5 intrusion. I am not saying that with a flu shot -- the fact 6 is, the petitioners say that someone with a flu shot has the 7 right to refuse in the hospital, so they do have.

8 QUESTION: Well, I am asking, is that what you are 9 asking us to hold. Say he doesn't want to go on an exercise 10 program, he is overweight or something.

11 MR. COLE: I think that would be termed a condition 12 of confinement, where as long as there was a rational reason 13 for the state to do that, that -- what I am trying to 14 distinguish between those -- there is a balancing test in an 15 institutional setting, and that when a treatment crosses the 16 line, electroshock, psychosurgery, maybe antipsychotic
17 drugs, cross that line --

18 QUESTION: Crosses what line?

19 MR. COLE: Crosses a line in terms of raising a 20 fundamental liberty, a fundamental liberty interest. And 21 our view is that wherever the line is going to be drawn in 22 the future --

23 QUESTION: Well, I think it is a fundamental 24 liberty interest if I don't want flu shots.

25 MR. COLE: The question is, it is a fundamental

1 liberty. The question is, does the state have the ability
2 to override that in an institutional setting. That -- the 3 analysis is, our view is that in a situation where it is so 4 intrusive that the state in many situations doesn't have the 5 legitimate interest to overcome that general right, we are 6 saying there are certain other situations where the state 7 may have that interest, but that is not as significant an 8 intrusion as we have with antipsychotic drugs.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Cole, just give me in a word what 10 you think the decision -- what is the name of the decision?

11 MR. COLE: In the matter of Guardianship of Richard 12 Roe III.

13 QUESTION: In a word, what is the impact, if any, 14 of that case on this one?

15 MR. COLE: Our view is that it disposes of this 16 case under state law.

17 QUESTION: Because?

18 MR. COLE: Because the court attempted to analyze 19 -- it is hard to say briefly. Under parens patriae the 20 court said that the state does not have a parens patriae 21 justification for forcibly drugging --

22 QUESTION: Just competent persons?

23 MR. COLE: That is correct.

24 QUESTION: It is a competent person, so that if a 25 person is competent, the state foreswears any parens patriae

1 interest in treating him?

2 MR. COLE: That is correct.

3 QUESTION: Over his objection.

4 MR. COLE: Without an incompetency determination.

5 Second of all, dealing with --

6 QUESTION: So that means that under state law

7 necessarily you are going to have to sort out the competent

8 from the incompetent.

9 MR. COLE: That's correct.

10 QUESTION: And that is exactly what you want done.

11 MR. COLE: That's correct.

12 QUESTION: And also if he is competent, that case

13 provides exactly what you want done.

14 MR. COLE: That is correct. And secondly, in terms

15 of the police power, what the Supreme Judicial Court said

16 is, when drugs are used to protect safety, they are being

17 used as a chemical restraint. The Massachusetts legislature

18 and the Department of Mental Health have their regulations

19 dealing with drugs when they are using restraints, when they 20 are used for restraints.

21 QUESTION: Well, do you think we should -- did you

22 move --

23 MR. COLE: Yes, we did. We filed a motion to -- 24 QUESTION: To what, remand?

25 MR. COLE: To either --

1 QUESTION: Dismiss as moot?

2 MR. COLE: To either dismiss it or certify the 3 questions to the Supreme Judicial Court --

4 QUESTION: What about -- perhaps the court of 5 appeals ought to decide whether this case is mooted out by 6 the decision of the Massachusetts court.

7 QUESTION: If you are right, we should vacate the 8 judgment of the district court. You don't need it.

9 MR. COLE: Exactly.

10 QUESTION: Your judgment should be vacated.

11 MR. COLE: Well, before we do that --

12 (General laughter.)

13 MR. COLE: Before we do that, I would say that I 14 think it is important that patients --

15 QUESTION: Well, if you mean what you say, that is 16 exactly what we should do. That would be our normal 17 practice, is to vacate the judgment and order the dismissal 18 of the case.

19 MR. COLE: Well, I think that there is sufficient 20 uncertainty about the police power situation, and the 21 problem is, the case said, it was talking about 22 institutionalized. It talked specifically about the Rogers 23 case for institutionalized.

24 QUESTION: Well, perhaps we should vacate the 25 judgment in the court of appeals and send it back to the

1 court of appeals to decide whether there is anything left of 2 the case or not.

3 MR. COLE: Our view is that it would be appropriate
4 to certify certain questions to the Supreme Judicial Court.

5 QUESTION: Should we do that or should the court of 6 appeals do that?

7 MR. COLE: Well, we feel as a matter of judicial 8 economy, this case has been going on for seven years.

9 QUESTION: I mean certification. We may, of 10 course, under Blotty, we may certify.

11 MR. COLE: That's right. The Court has in the 12 past. We --

13 QUESTION: Why should we? Why shouldn't we leave 14 that to the court of appeals? You say there is some 15 uncertainty about the police power aspect.

16 MR. COLE: That's correct. Because we believe that 17 as a matter of judicial economy, it would be faster, so we 18 don't have to come back up if in fact there is any issue 19 left open.

20 QUESTION: Well, except that perhaps the court of 21 appeals could do a better job of it than we can.

22 MR. COLE: And you won't have to travel this far.

23 (General laughter.)

24 QUESTION: Certainly the Roe case is factually 25 distinguishable from this in the sense that it involved

1 non-institutionalized patients. Am I not correct?

2 MR. COLE: That's correct, though it did discuss 3 the rights of institutionalized in the context of that 4 decision, and that is the confusion that is part of the 5 case, and while -- we felt that it could be certified
6 questions to the Judicial Supreme Court and get clarity
7 about which way -- whether or not those -- the state law 8 applies.

9 QUESTION: Do I correctly get from your position
10 that if judges are going to be running your institution, you 11 would rather have Massachusetts judges doing it? Is that 12 right?

13 (General laughter.)

14 MR. COLE: We believe that Massachusetts has a 15 system to deal with this situation after Roe. Now, prior to 16 Roe there wasn't any clarity about what the rights were, and 17 the fact is that both parties here intervened in Roe and 18 were a party in Roe.

19 QUESTION: What was your motion filed here?

20 MR. COLE: A motion to either dismiss or to certify 21 questions to the Supreme Judicial Court to clarify these 22 issues.

23 QUESTION: So if we granted your motion to dismiss, 24 it would be on the grounds of mootness, wouldn't it?

25 MR. COLE: That's correct.

1 QUESTION: So you don't want us to grant your 2 motion.

3 MR. COLE: No, we believe that you could -- we 4 still hold to that. My understanding is that it has been 5 denied.

6 QUESTION: That it is moot?

7 QUESTION: Do you think the case is moot?

8 MR. COLE: Well, as I said, I --

9 QUESTION: Because then that is the end of the 10 lawsuit. That satisfies everything.

11 MR. COLE: We would -- what we would ask for is 12 this Court to certify --

13 QUESTION: Do you think the case is moot?

14 MR. COLE: I --

15 QUESTION: Your motion was to dismiss as moot.

16 MR. COLE: I suppose -- That is correct, Your 17 Honor, but I would say that what we are interested in is 18 more certification.

19 QUESTION: Do you think it is moot?

20 MR. COLE: I would say that it is too confusing to 21 know whether or not it is moot at this time. Seriously, it 22 is based on the Supreme Judicial Court opinion. What we 23 would have to do then --

24 QUESTION: You don't know whether it is moot.

25 MR. COLE: We don't know. That is correct.

1 QUESTION: So you withdraw your motion?

2 MR. COLE: We withdraw that part of the motion, 3 Your Honor, I suppose, and ask that the questions be 4 certified.

5 Thank you.

6 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Schultz, you have five 7 minutes remaining.

8 ORAL ARGUMENT OF STEPHEN SCHULTZ, ESQ.,

9 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS - REBUTTAL

10 MR. SCHULTZ: I would like to briefly discuss the 11 significance of the Roe case, because there simply is none, 12 and I just want to make it clear that this case should not 13 be vacated and should not be certified. In Roe, the 14 court --

15 QUESTION: Should it be affirmed?

16 MR. SCHULTZ: Excuse me? No, it should not be 17 affirmed either, in our view.

18 (General laughter.)

19 MR. SCHULTZ: I started today by saying there were 20 two fundamental issues in this case. The first issue is, 21 what does it mean when you are committed for treatment.
22 Does that necessarily act as a sufficient predicate for the 23 later treatment against a person's will. I said the second 24 fundamental issue in this case is, what is the effect on the 25 hospital of allowing some patients to remain in the hospital

1 refusing treatment?

2 Well, Roe simply didn't say, we are not discussing 3 institutionalized patients. They specifically said one 4 thing we are not going to discuss is what is the effect and 5 what does it mean that you have already had a commitment 6 hearing, and what does that allow the state to do? That was 7 my first fundamental issue that they say in a footnote, we 8 are not discussing.

9 The second fundamental issue is, they say the one 10 thing we are not going to discuss is, what is the effect on 11 the institution if you allow people to refuse treatment?

12 Certification makes absolutely no sense for 13 answering these kinds of questions. There is no way --

14 QUESTION: Well, is it possible -- I am sorry. Is 15 it possible that although they haven't squarely decided it, 16 that Massachusetts law might require the very procedures 17 that the court of appeals has ordered? Do we know that 18 Massachusetts law does not require these procedures?

19 MR. SCHULTZ: Massachusetts law is constitutional
20 law, is all I can tell you. The Roe decision --

21 QUESTION: Did Roe rest on the United States
22 Constitution at all?

23 MR. SCHULTZ: Excuse me?

24 QUESTION: Did the Roe decision rest on --

25 MR. SCHULTZ: Roe turns on the United States

1 Constitution.

2 QUESTION: Did it rest on it?

3 MR. SCHULTZ: Excuse me?

4 QUESTION: Did the Supreme Judicial Court rest the 5 decision on it?

6 MR. SCHULTZ: In our opinion, yes. They say --

7 QUESTION: On what provision of the federal 8 Constitution?

9 MR. SCHULTZ: On the -- I believe they hit the 10 right to privacy, and I don't know if they tied it to the 11 Ninth or the Fourteenth Amendment. In Roe, they said there 12 are three factors that they are deciding that case on. They 13 said, on the Constitution, on the power over guardians.
14 Now, certainly that is not relevant in this case, because we 15 are discussing whether or not a guardian has to be appointed 16 in the first place. And then they said, on the common law, 17 and quoted one New York case for the common law talking 18 about what are basic liberty interests, which is the exact 19 same question you would ask as to what constitutionally 20 under the Fourteenth Amendment is a basic liberty interest.
21 Roe is a constitutional case. Roe doesn't decide 22 on any statutes or on any Massachusetts regulations. It is 23 a constitutional case which is reviewable by this Court, 24 which didn't have the record that this Court has to decide 25 what is the effect on an institution of allowing patients to 1 refuse treatment.

2 If one were to certify, one would have to send down 3 the entire 74-day record, and have the SJC look at that 4 record to decide what the effect on institutions would be.

5 QUESTION: Didn't Roe expressly disavow any intent 6 to decide an involuntarily committed patient's right to 7 refuse medication?

8 MR. SCHULTZ: Absolutely. They say it four times, 9 and why -- the other side is saying it is definitive, but if 10 a court ever went -- they are right, we intervened in Roe, 11 and what did the Commonwealth do when they intervened in 12 Roe? We said, don't interfere with this case. This case -- 13 Roe does not involve institutionalized patients, and I wrote 14 half of my brief saying don't interfere with this case. And 15 they bought it. Four times in their opinions, they say, we 16 are not interfering with the Rogers case. And I just don't 17 know how it could be any clearer under the circumstances.

18 I briefly want to mention just, I think, a very 19 basic issue that Justice O'Connor raised, and that is, how 20 many states determine incompetency at the time of 21 commitment? According to the psychiatric brief, they state 22 one, and I will take it as true. Utah. And what the 23 Commonwealth asks is, if you have to determine competency to 24 treat a person against his will, why can you commit that 25 person against his will for treatment without that same

1 determination of incompetency? And what is really being 2 challenged in this case is the commitments in those 49 3 states, because those people were not committed for 4 dangerousness. You can't commit anybody because he is 5 dangerous. That is preventive detention.

6 They were committed because they were dangerous by 7 reason of mental illness, which the mental illness means 8 they are either subject to care or treatment. We don't 9 necessarily say everybody is treatable, but we are saying 10 that to the extent that they are treatable, that that is why 11 they were committed. Dangerous by reason of mental 12 illness. Not dangerousness. It doesn't make sense to talk 13 about police power commitments, to say that the state's 14 interest is satisfied when they are taken off the street.
15 The state's interest is not taking people off the street.
16 The state cannot go around saying, you are dangerous, you 17 are dangerous, you are dangerous, you should go off the 18 street.

19 They have to show beyond a reasonable doubt in 20 Massachusetts that they are dangerous by reason of mental 21 illness, or that they are incapable of taking care of 22 themselves by reason of mental illness. The state can't 23 send somebody to a mental hospital simply because they are 24 incapable of taking care of themselves. I think the parens 25 patriae power might let them send them some place else, but

1 why are they sent to a mental hospital? Because they are 2 mentally ill, and we suggest that this is a fundamental 3 question which has been overlooked by both lower courts.

4 Thank you very much.

5 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen. The 6 case is submitted.

7 (Whereupon, at 2:30 o'clock p.m., the case in the
