CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next in Oregon against Kennedy.

You may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID B. FROHNMAYER, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

MR. FROHNMAYER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court, this case is here on a writ of certiorari to the Oregon Court of Appeals. That Court reversed defendant's theft conviction despite the fact that defendant's earlier trial was terminated by defendant's own successful mistrial motion. The Oregon Court of Appeals held that reprosecution itself was barred because of jeopardy grounds due to the events preceding defendant's successful mistrial motion in the aborted trial.

At issue in this case is whether a convicted thief ought to be able to escape the occasion of that conviction through the consequence of his own deliberate trial strategy.

The relevant facts, we believe, are few and simple. Early in defendant's first trial, the prosecution asked an admittedly improper seven-word question. Before the witness answered, defense counsel objected, moved for a mistrial, and asked that the

1 matter be reset for trial. The trial court granted 2 defendant's motion over the strenuous objection of the 3 prosecution. Prior to his retrial, defendant then asked 4 a different judge to dismiss the case on double jeopardy
5 grounds. The trial court declined to do so after making 6 explicit findings that the prosecutor's conduct was not 7 intentional, that the question was not asked in bad 8 faith, and that it was not grossly negligent.

9 The Oregon Court of Appeals, however, reversed
10 defendant's subsequent conviction, finding that there 11 was nonetheless a Fifth Amendment jeopardy bar because 12 the prosecutor's question constituted something, to wit, 13 called overreaching.

14 The proposition we would put to this Court is 15 simple, and that is that a defendant who elects to move 16 for a mistrial cannot raise a jeopardy bar to his 17 retrial except in one narrow circumstance, and that is 18 where the prosecutor's conduct itself is intended to 19 provoke that very mistrial, and we note at the outset
20 the anomaly that under the settled law of this Court, 21 had defendant merely objected to the question, been 22 convicted, and then secured successful reversal upon 23 appeal, he could be retried. So, the issue is whether 24 the defendant, by himself, shortcircuiting the trial 25 process in a full trial on the merits, can be allowed to

1 achieve a different result because his well-taken 2 mistrial motion was granted.

3 We contend that the defendant cannot create 4 these anomalous results and cannot complain except in 5 the narrow circumstance where the prosecutor intends 6 that the trial not be completed, and where the 7 prosecutor's conduct was intended to provoke that very 8 mistrial.

9 We believe that our proposed test would assist 10 both the public and criminal defendants, and we believe 11 that to affirm this case would do grave injury to both.
12 An affirmance would clog court calendars. It would 13 multiply appeals about the precise degree of 14 prosecutorial misconduct or error which should lead 15 under a blameworthiness standard of some kind to a 16 double jeopardy finding. It would also, we believe, 17 deter trial judges from granting mistrials in cases 18 where they are appropriate, because they would know for 19 certain that the defendant would go scot free.

20 Under those circumstances, the delay, the time, 21 the anxiety, the multiplication of appeals, and the cost 22 to the public of hearing clearly meritorious appeals 23 would be, we think, a prohibitively high cost for such a 24 different rule.

25 We believe that the rule for which we argue is

1 compelled by an understanding of the history and 2 purposes of the double jeopardy clause, that it is 3 implicit, at least, in the dicta and holdings of prior 4 decisions of this Court that a Draconian sanction of 5 barring retrial altogether when the prosecution makes an 6 error ignores the fact that there exist equally 7 effective sanctions against prosecutorial misconduct, 8 and that as a matter of policy the ease and certainty of 9 application of our rule make it a justifiable and 10 appropriate one.

11 We note at the outset, of course, that one of 12 the pieces of the history and purpose of the double 13 jeopardy clause is to prevent against repeated 14 harassment of a defendant by the prosecution when the 15 prosecution suddenly realized that the case is going 16 badly. In that sense, this Court has spoken of the 17 defendant's valued right to decision by a first tribunal.

18 On the other hand, we can find no decision of 19 this Court which has ever found that the double jeopardy 20 bar applies where a mistrial motion on behalf of the 21 defendant is granted at the defendant's request, and 22 that, we believe is for a good reason, and that is 23 because, as this Court has explicitly recognized, in Lee 24 and in other cases, a mistrial declaration, when it is 25 properly made, serves the constitutional prohibition

1 against double jeopardy. It is a deliberate election
2 on the part of the defendant to avoid a jury verdict
3 which it is his right to achieve, and to challenge 4 whatever error there may be in the record on appeal.

5 At the same time, that very mistrial motion
6 ordinarily acts as sufficient and complete punishment
7 for whatever prosecutorial error or unfair advantage 8 there might have been, and of course, this Court has 9 also recognized that there is and must be balanced 10 against whatever right there is to a first tribunal, or 11 policy there is in favor of a first tribunal, an 12 important social interest in the completion of criminal 13 proceedings against a defendant once and for all, a 14 rationale which was re-emphasized as recently as the 15 decision of this Court in United States versus Scott.

16 We think the policies that lie behind this and 17 behind this Court's earlier dicta on the question make 18 an enormous amount of sense, because ordinarily mistrial 19 is itself a very significant sanction against the 20 prosecutor. It is very easy, I think, to envision the 21 displeasure of the prosecutor's supervisor and the 22 public at the expense of a new trial, let alone the fact 23 that a new trial probably for the prosecution will be 24 more difficult to carry through.

25 However, the limited exception to the rule,

1 which we believe is implicit in this Court's dicta, at 2 least, is that if the prosecutor wishes that very 3 sanction in this trial to be imposed, then of course it 4 loses its character as a sanction for misconduct, and 5 under those circumstances, a more serious sanction would 6 be called for, because if it is not, then the 7 consequence is the deliberate harassment of the 8 defendant within the central meaning of the double 9 jeopardy clause itself.

10 In this case, of course, none of the factors 11 that would call forth that rule exist. We have already 12 noted that under the facts, the error of the prosecutor
13 occurred early in the trial. Two perfunctory witnesses
14 were heard. The third had testified not to essential 15 elements of the defendant's guilt or innocence, but was 16 merely testifying as to the value of the rug that was in 17 question.

18 QUESTION: Didn't your court say he was a key 19 witness?

20 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes. There is no question, 21 Justice Marshal --

22 QUESTION: Well, can't we take his word over 23 yours?

24 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes, you certainly may. I did 25 not mean to intimate that any witness was not a key

1 witness. I am simply saying that the witness was not 2 testifying directly to the guilt or innocence of the 3 defendant, which is one of the points which earlier
4 decisions of this Court, I believe, place special 5 emphasis upon.

6 The point is that the trial judge did make 7 findings, Justice Marshal, precisely with respect to the 8 nature of the conduct in which the prosecutor had 9 engaged.

10 QUESTION: May I ask you on that point, General 11 Frohnmayer, the hearing on the double jeopardy issue was 12 conducted by a different trial judge than the first one.

13 MR. FROHNMAYER: That is correct, sir.

14 QUESTION: Is that the normal -- maybe these 15 things don't arise that often, but was that pursuant to 16 any special rule?

17 MR. FROHNMAYER: It was not to my knowledge 18 pursuant to any special rule, although it would not be 19 atypical for Oregon's largest county for a different 20 judge to hear the motion calendar than had heard the 21 case.

22 QUESTION: What would be your view of the case 23 if the same trial judge, the judge who was conducting 24 the trial had conducted the hearing on the double 25 jeopardy issue, and you had exactly the same record at

1 the original trial, and the same testimony, and the 2 judge said, well, my impression is that the case was 3 going badly for the prosecutor, and so the prosecutor
4 took a few chances, and was trying to -- hoping to get a 5 better result, so although there was not a subjective 6 intent to provoke a mistrial, it is tantamount to that, 7 and therefore I will find that it was the equivalent of 8 an intent to cause a mistrial, and that is unfair to the 9 defendant? Would that be a different case?

10 MR. FROHNMAYER: I am not sure that it would.
11 It would go mainly to the issue of who evaluates the 12 record. It is our view that this rule should give 13 appropriate deference to the trial judge's finding, 14 whether it is a different judge who evaluates the first 15 conduct or the one who was there. In the example that 16 you posit, it seems perfectly appropriate that the judge 17 who was even closer to the actual conduct of the 18 criminal trial and therefore who might be able to judge 19 and know of his own observation of the nuances of 20 defendant's and prosecutor's demeanor might be an even 21 better place to make such a decision.

22 QUESTION: Well, then, supposing the first 23 trial judge said, I understand that the prosecutor 24 testified she didn't intend to, but I really don't 25 believe her, I think that she was pretty desperate, she

1 wanted a second chance, and so I will find on the very 2 facts we have in this case that it was deliberately done
3 to provoke a new trial. Then I take it there would be 4 double jeopardy.

5 MR. FROHNMAYER: That is correct.

6 QUESTION: So that on this record it could have 7 gone either way.

8 MR. FROHNMAYER: That is a possibility.

9 QUESTION: Depending on what the trial judge 10 found.

11 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes. Of course, it is, and we 12 believe that it is within the purview of the trial judge 13 to evaluate not merely the testimony of the witnesses, 14 the --

15 QUESTION: The court of appeals didn't rule on 16 that point. It ruled on flagrant.

17 MR. FROHNMAYER: The court of appeals --

18 QUESTION: Isn't that right?

19 MR. FROHNMAYER: The court of appeals accepted 20 the findings of the trial court.

21 QUESTION: That's right.

22 MR. FROHNMAYER: Which, Justice Marshal --

23 QUESTION: And said, however, this case of 24 flagrant overreaching lies outside that rule.

25 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well --

1 QUESTION: Isn't that the ruling of the court?
2 It is the last -- next to the last sentence.

3 MR. FROHNMAYER: We understand that that is in 4 fact what the court of appeals said, and we have no
5 quarrel with the characterization of the prosecution's 6 conduct as being improper. What we simply state --

7 QUESTION: Flagrant? Do you agree with 8 flagrant?

9 MR. FROHNMAYER: That is a characterization
10 that --

11 QUESTION: That is -- your court used that word.

12 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, that is a
13 characterization of the court of appeals by which I
14 assume that we are bound. However, it does differ, I 15 must say, in at least emphasis or epithet from that 16 which was given to it by the trial judge whose findings 17 the court of appeals accepted.

18 QUESTION: Perhaps stupid would have been a 19 better characterization.

20 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, we come to this Court
21 with no apologies for the prosecutor's conduct, and I 22 hope that is clear to this Court. What we are simply 23 saying is that however flagrant the conduct may be, 24 whatever epithet had been attached to it, it was not of 25 the character and kind which this Court's prior

1 decisions and dicta, at least, quite properly indicate
2 should be the occasion for finding that the mistrial
3 motion was one into which the defendant was goaded 4 without any real option or without any real choice.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Frohnmayer, even if we were to 6 agree with you in your argument here today as far as the 7 federal rule is concerned, if the case were to go back 8 to Oregon, would Oregon apply a more stringent test, as 9 has been suggested in one of the amicus briefs, so that 10 under the Oregon constitution and under Oregon law, for 11 example, in the Rathbun case, is a stricter standard 12 applied?

13 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes. I am glad that you asked 14 the question, because it does give me a chance to point 15 out that the amicus' brief which raises the Rathbun case
16 raises the wrong Rathbun case. It refers to the Oregon 17 Supreme Court case in the Rathbun case, but in fact the 18 court of appeals whose decision we are contending today 19 is erroneous cited deliberately its own opinion, and 20 pointed out that the Supreme Court Rathbun case was 21 decided on other grounds. The other grounds on which 22 the Oregon Supreme Court case was decided were in fact 23 state constitutional grounds.

24 QUESTION: So you think that the court of 25 appeals, when it cited its Rathbun decision, meant the

1 decision of the court of appeals in Rathbun, and not the 2 later decision of the Supreme Court of Oregon?

3 MR. FROHNMAYER: There is no question in my 4 mind, Justice Rehnquist. In fact, it is difficult to 5 see how more clearly other than stating it explicitly 6 the court of appeals could have been saying that it was 7 deciding the case on federal grounds, because it cites
8 its own opinion, says that the other opinion is reversed 9 on other grounds. the other grounds on which it was 10 reversed were state constitutional grounds, so there is 11 no question but that we are here on federal grounds.

12 But to address your question, Justice O'Connor, 13 it is not clear what the Rathbun case would dictate, 14 because at the time the Supreme Court decided Rathbun, 15 it noted that there was no state or federal 16 constitutional authority precisely on point on the 17 double jeopardy question where a bailiff attempts 18 improperly to influence a jury, and there still is no 19 such federal case, so we would have to know whether or 20 not this Court, for example, would extend double 21 jeopardy protections to a defendant where a bailiff 22 engaged in improper conduct.

23 We did note that in the Rathbun case decided --

24 QUESTION: Well, is there a possibility that 25 Oregon law would apply a different standard than that

1 which you are arguing should be applied by us?

2 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes, it is a possibility, and 3 what we represent to this Court, however, is that the 4 Oregon court of appeals chose deliberately to determine 5 the case on federal grounds, apparently believing, since 6 the state constitutional grounds were argued to it at 7 least in the briefs of both defendant and state, that 8 the federal ground was the appropriate and dispositive 9 ground.

10 QUESTION: But would not the proper disposition
11 be, if we agreed with you, to send it back to that court 12 to be sure that they do not think there is a state rule 13 that adequately supports their determination?

14 MR. FROHNMAYER: No, I don't believe so at all,
15 because the Oregon courts know when they wish to cite a 16 state ground. In fact, I think that's really explicit 17 in the brief of the American Civil Liberties Union 18 citing other cases.

19 QUESTION: Well, even so, Mr. Attorney General, 20 if we were to reverse, our mandate is for further 21 proceedings not inconsistent with our opinion, so I 22 should suppose if your court of appeals wanted then to 23 determine a state constitutional ground, it would be 24 free to do so under our mandate, would it not?

25 MR. FROHNMAYER: I suppose that it would,

1 except that the court of appeals made it explicit in our 2 judgment that it rejected the viability of any state
3 constitutional grounds because, had it wished to address 4 those --

5 QUESTION: It may have, but we have no choice 6 after we decide the federal question, if we do, in your 7 favor, but to remand for further proceedings not 8 inconsistent with our opinion.

9 MR. FROHNMAYER: That is correct.

10 QUESTION: And I would suppose that would leave 11 your court of appeals open to -- if it wants to change 12 its mind, to apply a state ground.

13 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes. However, Your Honor --

14 QUESTION: Your state supreme court declined to 15 review this case, did it not?

16 MR. FROHNMAYER: Our state supreme court had a 17 crack at this case and did decline discretionary review, 18 and that is why we believe it is appropriate to take 19 this issue directly to you.

20 Mr. Chief Justice, I wish --

21 QUESTION: As I understand, the court of 22 appeals says the law of Oregon gives two reasons for 23 applying double jeopardy. One, the trial court found 24 didn't apply, and the second one was the one that the 25 court of appeals ruled on, and you haven't -- I mean,

1 aren't we to give deference to their holding that this 2 was overreaching?

3 MR. FROHNMAYER: Their --

4 QUESTION: Didn't they specifically say it is 5 overreaching?

6 MR. FROHNMAYER: Overreaching is an epithet,
7 Your Honor, which is taken directly from Fifth Circuit
8 Court of Appeals federal cases purporting to construe 9 this Court's precedents in double jeopardy cases. That 10 is a line of cases which we believe to be erroneous, and 11 one which I will respectfully address on rebuttal, as 12 will the Solicitor General.

13 QUESTION: But he says, this is a case -- well, 14 do you deny that there was overreaching?

15 MR. FROHNMAYER: No, we have never contended 16 that the nature of the prosecutor's conduct was 17 appropriate. We are merely saying it does not fit the 18 characterization of intentional misconduct designed to 19 abort a trial because the prosecution wishes a more --

20 QUESTION: Well, is the law of Oregon that 21 overreaching is a ground?

22 MR. FROHNMAYER: No, it is the law of the 23 Federal Constitution which the Oregon court is 24 purporting to construe.

25 QUESTION: Is it the law of the court of 1 appeals?

2 MR. FROHNMAYER: It is the law of the case of 3 State versus Kennedy, which we are asking this Court to 4 reverse.

5 QUESTION: And that's the court of appeals.

6 MR. FROHNMAYER: That's correct.

7 QUESTION: And you say their finding that -- 8 you admit that this man was overreaching.

9 MR. FROHNMAYER: That is correct. That is the 10 characterization of the court of appeals, the findings 11 of the trial judge.

12 QUESTION: My question is, do you agree with 13 it, that it is overreaching, end of quote?

14 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes.

15 Mr. Chief Justice, I wish to reserve the 16 balance of my time.

17 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Alito.

18 ORAL ARGUMENT OF SAMUEL A. ALITO, JR., ESQ., 19 ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE

20 MR. ALITO: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it 21 please the Court, the United States agrees with the 22 state of Oregon that the double jeopardy clause does not 23 prevent retrial of the defendant after a mistrial is 24 declared at his request or with his consent, provided 25 only that the prosecution did not deliberately provoke

1 the mistrial request or the defendant's consent.

2 In the federal system, most of the courts of 3 appeals now adhere to that rule. However, some have 4 held or stated that reprosecution may be barred where 5 the mistrial request is caused by prosecutorial 6 overreaching or gross negligence or bad faith or 7 intentional misconduct.

8 In the brief time allotted to me this morning,
9 I will attempt to show that none of these alternative 10 standards is workable, and that all would produce highly 11 undesirable practical consequences.

12 First, all these terms are simply too vague to 13 provide any real guidance to courts or litigants.
14 Overreaching, for example, is simply a conclusory
15 terms. It means conduct that reaches or goes too far.
16 It is not a question of fact. Since it means conduct 17 that reaches or goes too far, virtually all 18 prosecutorial or judicial error that causes a mistrial 19 would appear to constitute overreaching, because by 20 definition it is conduct that went too far. It caused 21 the mistrial.

22 Gross negligence is an equally vague standard.
23 This Court's decision in Lee in 1977 stands for the 24 proposition that simple negligence on the part of a 25 prosecutor or a judge is not sufficient to bar retrial,

1 and no one has ever adequately explained the distinction
2 between gross negligence and simple negligence. In the 3 field of torts from which that term was borrowed, the 4 concept has now been generally repudiated.

5 The terms bad faith and intentional misconduct 6 have similar flaws. Apparently these terms refer to any 7 conduct that is not inadvertent, and that the prosecutor 8 or judge knows is wrong or improper.

9 QUESTION: Let me give you a hypothetical case 10 to test your -- Supposing you had a case in which the 11 prosecutor toward the end of his case knew he didn't 12 have enough evidence to convict, but he had had an 13 interview off the record with some witness that was not 14 admissible, and he thought, well, the only possible way
15 -- I know justice demands that we convict this man -- 16 would be to get this evidence before the jury, so he 17 deliberately told the jury about some inadmissible
18 evidence, and then the other side moves for a mistrial.
19 Would that be permissible? He didn't even think about 20 the consequences of a mistrial. But a rather flagrant 21 example.

22 MR. ALITO: In that case the remedy would be 23 the declaration of a mistrial --

24 QUESTION: And a new trial?

25 MR. ALITO: -- or if a mistrial was not

1 declared, reversal on appeal.

2 QUESTION: Could he do anything bad enough to 3 justify a final determination of innocence if he didn't 4 really think about the mistrial problem and double 5 jeopardy?

6 MR. ALITO: Under other provisions of the 7 Constitution, he might, if he took some action that 8 irreparably prejudiced the defendant's ability to obtain 9 a fair trial.

10 QUESTION: Well, just in this particular 11 trial. He just did everything that you can think of 12 that would make the trial unfair, but he just was very 13 inexperienced and very zealous and very eager to get 14 justice done in the particular case.

15 MR. ALITO: The remedy there is simply a 16 mistrial reversal of a conviction.

17 QUESTION: And a second trial.

18 MR. ALITO: That's right. The defendant has a 19 valued right to have his trial completed by a particular 20 tribunal, but it is important to emphasize that he has 21 no right to a single errorless trial or even a single 22 trial that is free of highly prejudicial reversible
23 error. That proposition was effectively settled more 24 than 80 years ago, when this Court held in Ball that a 25 retrial was permitted following reversal of conviction

1 on appeal, and there are sound reasons for that rule.
2 It would simply be impossible as a practical matter to 3 guarantee criminal defendants a single errorless
4 proceeding. Criminal trials are simply too
5 complicated. Too many things can go wrong. Things 6 happen spontaneously and unexpectedly. Prosecutors and 7 judges are required to say and do many things without 8 the opportunity for leisurely reflection, and requiring 9 a single -- requiring the --

10 QUESTION: Yes, but granted all that, maybe you 11 don't joint the Attorney General's concession, but on 12 these very facts, if this young lady had deliberately 13 intended to get a mistrial by asking that question, you 14 would agree that then there would be double jeopardy?

15 MR. ALITO: Certainly. If she deliberately
16 intended to provoke a mistrial, then double jeopardy
17 would have barred reprosecution, but the trial level 18 court found that she did not have such an intent, and 19 that has not been disputed by -- that was not reversed
20 by the Oregon court of appeals.

21 QUESTION: How does one prove the subjective 22 intent of the prosecutor? Could you ever do it if the 23 prosecutor denied that intent?

24 MR. ALITO: Yes, I doubt that there will be 25 very many cases in which a prosecutor will admit that he

1 set out to cause a mistrial, but I think that there will 2 be circumstantial evidence from which an experienced 3 trial judge could determine without great difficulty 4 whether the prosecutor deliberately provoked a mistrial.

5 QUESTION: But not in the hypotheticals I gave 6 you. That wouldn't be adequate.

7 MR. ALITO: Well, as I understood your 8 hypothetical, Justice Stevens, there the prosecutor did 9 not have the intent to provoke a mistrial.

10 QUESTION: Well, he got on the stand before the 11 judge and said, well, I just didn't think about this 12 consequence, and I haven't had much experience.

13 MR. ALITO: Well, if the Judge believed him, 14 and based on the circumstantial evidence, how was the 15 case going for the prosecutor, what was his manner when 16 he made the fatal error, what is his background, what 17 was his reaction to the defense mistrial request, based 18 on all of those and other factors, if the trial judge 19 believed that he lacked the intent to provoke the 20 mistrial, then double jeopardy would not bar 21 reprosecution.

22 As I was attempting to show, these alternative 23 standards that have been adopted by some of the lower 24 federal courts and by some state courts are simply too 25 vague to provide any real guidance to courts or

1 litigants. They will produce inconsistent and 2 inequitable results. They will result in confusion on 3 the part of trial judges who must decide whether to 4 grant defense mistrial requests. Because those judges
5 will be fearful that granting a request will bar future 6 prosecution, they will probably be more reluctant to 7 grant defense mistrial requests, and that, of course, 8 will work to the disadvantage of defendants.

9 It will also lead them to be more inclined than 10 they are at present to permit the completion of tainted 11 proceedings, knowing that a reversal on appeal would not 12 bar reprosecution, and that would result in more 13 appellate reversals, needless appellate litigation, and 14 many wasted days of trial while tainted proceedings are 15 permitted to run their course.

16 QUESTION: What you are saying is that with a 17 subjective rule that almost requires psychoanalyzing the 18 prosecutor, the safe thing for a trial judge to do is 19 simply say, let it go, and then let them go the regular 20 appeal route, correct the error on appeal, and then they 21 will be retried?

22 MR. ALITO: I think that's -- that's absolutely 23 correct. I have no idea what overreaching means. It is 24 simply a conclusory term. It is not a finding of fact 25 which in the federal system would be governed by the

1 clearly erroneous rule. It is simply a conclusion that 2 the judge draws, and I would venture to say that in any 3 arguable case, there are many -- there is room for many 4 opinions as to whether the conduct at issue constituted
5 overreaching.

6 In sum, we don't think that any of these 7 alternative standards is workable. They would all 8 produce highly undesirable practical consequences, and 9 we therefore respectfully urge that the judgement of the 10 Oregon court of appeals be reversed.

11 QUESTION: And you stand, I take it, on the 12 fact that the trial court found and the reviewing court 13 did not disturb the finding that there was no invidious 14 or improper intent.

15 MR. ALITO: Yes. We think that is the finding 16 of fact that wasn't disturbed and decides this case 17 under the rule that we advocate and that this Court has 18 adopted repeatedly at least in dicta in recent decisions.

19 QUESTION: Are we bound by that finding, do you 20 think?

21 MR. ALITO: I think -- I don't believe this 22 Court would disturb such a finding made by a trial level 23 state court.

24 QUESTION: Can we also take the finding of the 25 court of appeals?

1 MR. ALITO: Justice Marshal, I would not regard 2 the court of appeals' statement that the prosecutor's 3 conduct constituted flagrant overreaching as a finding 4 of fact. That was simply a conclusion that the court -- 5 a conclusion --

6 QUESTION: Well, are we bound by that 7 conclusion?

8 MR. ALITO: No, I don't believe you are.

9 QUESTION: And the reason we are bound by one 10 and the other is what?

11 MR. ALITO: There are two reasons. One is a 12 finding of fact, and the other is simply a conclusion of 13 law. One was made by a trial level court, and the other 14 was made by an appellate court.

15 QUESTION: And the trial level is above the 16 appellate level.

17 MR. ALITO: No, but the trial level court took 18 testimony on this issue, and was able to observe the -- 19 QUESTION: Did it take testimony?

20 MR. ALITO: Yes, it did.

21 QUESTION: It doesn't say so in the opinion.

22 MR. ALITO: The trial level court took 23 testimony from, I believe, from the prosecutor.

24 QUESTION: And of course the prosecutor didn't 25 say I violated the laws.

1 MR. ALITO: No, she didn't, and the trial level 2 judge believed her, and made a finding of fact to that 3 effect.

4 QUESTION: I understood that the appellate 5 court did accept the finding of fact by the trial court 6 that there was no intent to bring about a mistrial.

7 MR. ALITO: That's correct, Justice Powell. It
8 said under Oregon --

9 QUESTION: I didn't think you had mentioned 10 that. So you have a two-court rule, don't you, on that 11 finding of fact?

12 MR. ALITO: That's correct.

13 Thank you.

14 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Walker.

15 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DONALD C. WALKER, ESQ.,

16 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

17 MR. WALKER: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
18 please the Court, I would like just to say a few things 19 on the facts of this case which I think have been 20 stepped over a little lightly. On the prosecuting 21 witness, the defense counsel of the trial had shown 22 certain bias on the prosecuting witness, and then on 23 redirect the deputy district attorney tried to 24 rehabilitate the state witness. The attorney -- Mr.
25 Attorney General stated that the deputy DA was goaded

1 into it.

2 Now, there was a recess the day of the trial, 3 so the deputy district attorney had all evening, and the 4 testimony is that she met the witness in the hall and 5 discussed it, found out -- it came out in the facts of 6 the case that the prosecuting witness did not know the 7 defendant, had never done business with him, and they 8 like to go over the fact that it was a seven-word 9 question. It was a commenting statement more than a 10 question, and then it goes more to an objection as to 11 the proprieties of a question on hearsay or the fact 12 that the question could have been asked another way.

13 She knew that she had no basic testimony to 14 extract from the prosecuting witness, and went ahead 15 anyway. So, I think that it is more than a technical 16 breach. The district attorney should be able to go 17 maybe a lifetime without making such, I think, an 18 overreaching and flagrant statement.

19 Now, one thing, too, that should be pointed 20 out, that when this happened, the trial judge did not 21 even seek argument. He said, granted. So, I mean, I 22 think we have to take in the circumstances, the 23 surrounding circumstances more than just the written 24 word that was taken down in the transcript. There was 25 no question, and then where the trial judge says, well,

1 you went over the line, it was overreaching.

2 One other thing that I think is important to 3 know here is the history of the decision by the court of 4 appeals, Judge Gillette. Judge Gillette had this case 5 before him, and before that was the Rathbun case, which 6 is cited in his opinion. The Rathbun case was the 7 misconduct on the part of the bailiff. When that case
8 came up, Judge Gillette is the one that heard that case 9 in the court of appeals and held that it was more like 10 jury bias rather than overreaching or that sort of 11 thing, and so he overruled the trial court.

12 That went up to the Oregon Supreme Court, and 13 the Oregon Supreme Court overruled Judge Gillette. So, 14 when Judge Gillette in the Oregon Court of Appeals then 15 has the Kennedy case, he has the latest decision in 16 Oregon stating that a bailiff's misconduct, and that is 17 the rationale of the case, where -- is abhorrent, is the 18 case that was used in that decision.

19 So, if the rationale and the bailiff's
20 subjective intent was not important, so Judge Gillette
21 had that precedent. So he followed that case. I 22 disagree that he was following his own court of appeals 23 decision.

24 QUESTION: Well, if you are correct, Mr.
25 Walker, why does he cite the Rathbun case first to the

1 court of appeals decision and then simply say reversed
2 on other grounds, and cite the Supreme Court decision?

3 MR. WALKER: Well, I think, regardless of how 4 he says that, Justice Rehnquist, I think that the Oregon 5 rule and the rationale, I think he might have been 6 trying to show some face-saving interest in his own 7 court of appeals decision, but the thing that is 8 interesting in the Kennedy decision by Judge Gillette is 9 that he cites as dictum U.S. Jorn and Dinitz, but then 10 he says, the court, Oregon, or State versus Rathbun, 287 11 Oregon, so what is in the court? The only case that is 12 really in point is State versus Rathbun, and the Oregon 13 rule is that an officer of the court, a bailiff, 14 misconduct that goes to that point where it did is 15 flagrant and is overreaching.

16 QUESTION: You disagree, then, with the 17 Attorney General as to the purpose of the use of the 18 term "reversed on other grounds."

19 MR. WALKER: Definitely. I think that the 20 bottom line is, what is the Oregon rule, and the Oregon
21 rule is the Supreme Court rule of State versus Rathbun, 22 and that is what he was following, I think, in that case.

23 Now, I would like to go into the question about 24 this case being before this Court. First is that I
25 think the Oregon Kennedy case is not ambiguous, and I

1 think it is founded on state law, because when you say a
2 court, that is -- I looked it up in Black's Law
3 Dictionary. It says that, as a judge would say, I 4 concur, I accord, and therefore, I think we are -- we 5 look back then to State versus Rathbun. It definitely 6 states, we are not deciding this, we are not going to 7 speculate what the United States Supreme Court will do.
8 We are deciding this on Oregon constitutional grounds, 9 and that, I think, is the rationale of State versus 10 Rathbun, which was, I think, adopted in State versus 11 Kennedy.

12 QUESTION: But he also relies on Jorn, the 13 decision by this Court, several times.

14 MR. WALKER: Yes. True. I think --

15 QUESTION: Well, we can't ignore that.

16 MR. WALKER: You can't ignore that, but I think 17 that when the state judge is trying to uphold a 18 constitutional guarantee, he has to be concerned with 19 what is the state law that is involved, and then he 20 can't ignore the federal law, but the -- so he has to 21 reconcile both.

22 QUESTION: Well, I would think if the Oregon
23 law is tougher on the prosecution in the area of double 24 jeopardy, he would first go to Oregon law.

25 MR. WALKER: Well, I think that's the correct

1 procedure, and I think that it would be -- perhaps we 2 wouldn't be here if he had done that.

3 QUESTION: But he didn't. He cites, as Justice
4 Marshal said, Jorn. Then he cites Dinitz.

5 MR. WALKER: That's true.

6 QUESTION: Doesn't Justice Lindy, at least, of 7 your Supreme Court write opinions all the time 8 encouraging reliance on your state constitution rather 9 than on the federal constitution, doesn't it?

10 MR. WALKER: That's right, and he had a --

11 QUESTION: But he counsels doing it very 12 explicitly, doesn't he?

13 MR. WALKER: That's right, and I think probably 14 that that message will get through to the court of 15 appeals, and I think that that might make the job for 16 everyone --

17 QUESTION: Well, but has your Supreme Court yet 18 told the court of appeals that's the procedure to follow?

19 MR. WALKER: Yes, I think --

20 QUESTION: Put it if possible on the state
21 constitution?

22 MR. WALKER: The State versus Cupp, which I
23 think is a recent case in 290 Oregon -- it's in one of 24 the briefs -- why states, first you look to the Oregon 25 law, and if you look to the Oregon law and decide it on

1 the Oregon constitution, that's the first analysis, and 2 that's one, and if you follow your state constitution --

3 QUESTION: But can we say that was done by your 4 court of appeals in the Kennedy case?

5 MR. WALKER: Well, I think, Justice Brennan, I 6 think that my second point is at most that the court of 7 appeals decision is ambiguous, and if it is ambiguous, 8 then it should be reversed and remanded for 9 clarification, but I think, though, that sometimes, you 10 know, when things move --

11 QUESTION: Well, tell me, if we were to 12 disagree with you and think this is on a federal ground, 13 and were to affirm it, or reverse it, rather, going back 14 to my colloquy with the Attorney General, wouldn't your 15 court of appeals still be free to follow Justice Lindy's 16 counsel?

17 MR. WALKER: By all means. And --

18 QUESTION: Then they are making, in that case, 19 they are making the decision on their own 20 responsibility. They are accountable to the state of 21 Oregon and the voters, if you have an elective system 22 there.

23 MR. WALKER: That's right. And I think that 24 restraint should be exercised, and I think the fact that 25 state courts should be more innovative, and I think they

1 should exercise that responsibility.

2 QUESTION: By innovative, do you mean ignore
3 the opinions of this Court?

4 MR. WALKER: No, I don't mean -- no. I think 5 that they should -- I think that due process, part of 6 due process is following your own state constitution, 7 and since the defendant Kennedy has basic rights under 8 the Oregon constitution, and neither of the counsel here
9 have suggested the fact that maybe his state due process 10 rights haven't been taken care of by their argument.

11 I would say this, and my third point on the 12 question -- my first point being, I think that when it 13 says the court -- State versus Rathbun, I think that's 14 the case that's -- that Jorn and Dinitz don't really 15 take care of Kennedy. The dictum is referrable all 16 right, but State versus Rathbun is right on point. If a 17 bailiff is a court officer, certainly a deputy district
18 attorney is a court officer, and that case, I would say, 19 was practically on all fours.

20 But the third point that even though this Court 21 thought it was not ambiguous and it was decided on 22 federal law, it still should be reversed and remanded 23 for Oregon to accept the responsibility of deciding 24 their own law first, as Justice Lindy has stated, and 25 then make that decision, but in that process, then, the

1 state of Oregon would -- certainly the scope of it would 2 be to see that if Kennedy's due process rights, both 3 under the Fourteenth Amendment and under the Oregon 4 constitution, were protected, and it is not enough just 5 to look at the Fourteenth Amendment, but also the Oregon
6 constitution.

7 QUESTION: Now, addressing -- if you will agree 8 with me on the premise that this does rest on an 9 interpretation of federal constitutional law -- just 10 assume that with me. Then what do you say?

11 MR. WALKER: I say that even if it is based on 12 that, that it is in line with Jorn and versus Dinitz, 13 and in substance, it is the basis for a double jeopardy 14 bar, and I think that --

15 QUESTION: Well, how do you phrase the test 16 whether or not the mistrial was a second prosecution?

17 MR. WALKER: Well, I think the fact that in the 18 second prosecution that there was the harassment, there 19 was threatened multiple trials, and bad faith, and I
20 think those are the terms, I think, used both in Jorn 21 and Dinizt, and they -- both of those cases, the 22 footnotes refer to U.S. versus Tateo, that the converse 23 of the rule -- I think we all realize that we are on the 24 exception to the general rule. Where the defendant 25 moves for a mistrial, usually that is not a bar. The

1 exception being is what is discussed in Jorn and Dinitz,
2 and both footnotes of those cases refer to Tateo.

3 QUESTION: Well, I take it that your position 4 is based on the proposition that the question which had 5 been referred to and described somewhere here in one of 6 the briefs as stupid, that that question was a 7 deliberate effort, a calculated effort to provoke a 8 mistrial. Is that your position?

9 MR. WALKER: I -- Yes. I think -- I think that 10 it is implicit in that statement, that commenting 11 question, and I think that that is the end result, and I 12 think to say, and to put the prosecutor on the stand and 13 say, well, was that your intent, I don't think that is 14 practical.

15 QUESTION: Well, what if the judge, the trial 16 judge, now, had simply said that to the jury, that 17 remark was not a question, it was a remark, it was 18 wholly unprofessional and out of line, has no place, and 19 you will disregard it, and then reprimand the prosecutor 20 in open court, and then go on with the trial? Then, if 21 a conviction had occurred, then what?

22 MR. WALKER: Of course, then, I think it would 23 be the basis for reversal, and I agree that it wouldn't 24 be a bar, but there is one --

25 QUESTION: Then what you are saying is that the 1 best thing to do is let the trials go on --

2 MR. WALKER: No.

3 QUESTION: -- never declare a mistrial.

4 MR. WALKER: I don't agree with that, and I 5 think that counsel have been shown a lack of faith in 6 trial judges, and they say that the term "overreaching"
7 is vague. The word "manifest necessity" can be vague
8 also. What does that mean? But I think it is a 9 guideline, it is a tool, and I think it was in Jorn
10 where the Court has said, we've declined the invitation 11 to place these in nice little categories of what the 12 conduct will be.

13 QUESTION: Was that in the plurality opinion in 14 Jorn? There wasn't a Court opinion, was there?

15 MR. WALKER: It seems to me --

16 QUESTION: There was no Court opinion.

17 QUESTION: There was no Court opinion.

18 MR. WALKER: -- there was -- I think the 19 language that we are not going to use the bright line 20 rule, and that -- in other words, they -- it would be 21 pretty difficult for this Court to make certain 22 refinements that would take care of every situation, and 23 I think that a trial judge who sees the method of -- the 24 behavior of the prosecuting attorney, maybe the raising 25 or lowering of voice, and the temperament of the whole

1 situation, is in that position, and I wouldn't say that 2 trial judges are that flimsy in their decision-making
3 power. There comes a time, you take in the Perez 4 decision, where you say that a hung jury, that is the 5 basis for a mistrial, and no bar to reprosecution.
6 Everybody would agree with that, because that is an easy 7 example of the manifest necessity rule.

8 But what if you had a ten-day criminal trial, 9 and then the judge, trial judge declared a mistrial
10 after the jury had been out an hour and a half, for no 11 really apparent reason. I think the defendant would 12 certainly jump to the conclusion and jump to his feet 13 after that say that would -- he had a right for the 14 double jeopardy bar.

15 So, any rule that the Court may make has to 16 stand eventually on its own two feet, in common sense of 17 a trial judge, and this trial judge, you see, there's -- 18 like has been mentioned here before, the trial judge 19 immediately granted the mistrial. Then another trial 20 judge, when it was going to be up for the trial the 21 second time, then hears the statement of the prosecutor, 22 and I would say in answer to the questions of the 23 finding of fact, you can find the trial judge can make 24 certain findings of the fact, but it's the 25 constitutional impact or the consequences of those facts

1 that the appellate court can say, well, those facts
2 warrant this. We're not changing the facts, but we're 3 saying that the constitutional consequences of those 4 facts lead us to this legal conclusion.

5 QUESTION: Isn't the trial judge who has been 6 watching this whole proceeding the best person to make 7 an evaluation of whether there was or was not an 8 improper intent without relying on what the prosecutor 9 claims is his intent?

10 MR. WALKER: I couldn't agree more, and -- but 11 the point of it is that the finding of facts that they 12 are relying on is a second trial judge who was different 13 than the first one who granted the mistrial just 14 spontaneously, and so I think that the findings by the 15 second trial judge is one thing, but when the appellate 16 judge, Judge Gillette, says, we are saying that in spite 17 of those findings, the consequential impact of those 18 findings are that it is still flagrant overreaching, and 19 remember, he had State versus Rathbun right before him, 20 and State versus Rathbun says that the conduct of the 21 bailiff was abhorrent, so what -- now, if you say the 22 state of Oregon rule is that the bailiff's conduct is 23 abhorrent by talking to the jurors, I think there's a 24 greater duty on the prosecuting attorney, and so then he 25 comes along and doesn't use the word "abhorrent" but I

1 think it is synonymous, "flagrant", and so I think that 2 those situations are very similar.

3 QUESTION: How does one distinguish between 4 flagrant conduct and abhorrent conduct, and as the Court
5 of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the Dinitz 6 characterized the prosecutor's conduct as "improper" 7 conduct?

8 MR. WALKER: I think that -- there again, I 9 think that decision-making power has to be with the 10 trial judge. You know, when these cases come up and no 11 trial judge probably prepares himself basically ahead of 12 time, maybe it's a criminal case on questions of search 13 and seizures and all that. He is probably not thinking 14 about double jeopardy and a mistrial. So then somebody, 15 some counsel might cite him this case, and he reads it 16 over. He hasn't read it maybe over in depth like we do 17 in preparing for an argument, and so he has to be guided 18 by certain common sense guidelines. The term "bad 19 faith," "overreaching," "manifest necessity," 20 "deliberate intent," and all that. It would be -- and I 21 think the most vague one and the most difficult is the 22 word "deliberate intent." I think "bad faith" and 23 "overreaching" are much easier to arrive at.

24 QUESTION: Well, "deliberate intent" certainly 25 isn't imprecise. It may be hard to arrive at.

1 MR. WALKER: Well, yes, I know, but if it is 2 hard to arrive at, Justice Rehnquist, and this is 3 subjective, I can't imagine -- and I think we could go 4 through many, many cases, and -- to find that the 5 prosecuting attorney would say, yes, that was my 6 deliberate intention.

7 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Walker, I thought this 8 footnote in the court of appeals opinion, Footnote 1, 9 indicated the court of appeals was very -- had real 10 reservations about subjective intent. "We are not sure 11 that the subjective intent of the prosecutor should 12 necessarily play a pivotal role in the decision as to 13 whether or not prior jeopardy forbids retrial." What 14 does that mean?

15 MR. WALKER: Well, I think that what that means 16 to me, Justice Brennan, is that you have to take the 17 objective remarks and what is the objective conduct of 18 the --

19 QUESTION: So deliberate intent, to the extent 20 that is subjective, the Court of Appeals at least 21 thought was not too good a rule.

22 MR. WALKER: Well, that's right, but in 23 following State versus Rathbun, State versus Rathbun 24 just before this case on the conduct of the bailiff, the 25 Supreme Court of Oregon says, we can't speculate on the

1 mind-reading of the bailiff, and so I think Judge 2 Gillette had that in mind when he wrote that.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Walker, even if subjective 4 intent is the standard to which we address ourselves, 5 the trial judge can make the determination on factors
6 other than the prosecutor's admission of intent. Isn't 7 that true? The trial judge can look at the whole
8 circumstances, and regardless of what the prosecutor 9 says was intended, make that determination.

10 MR. WALKER: Yes. But I think that the 11 defendant Kennedy is, perhaps, on this procedure that 12 was followed in Oregon, is only getting half a loaf, 13 because the real person that can make that judgment 14 better than anybody else is the trial judge who declared 15 the mistrial, and he said granted, right away, so 16 several weeks after then another judge who hasn't had 17 the atmosphere of the first case firsthand, and then 18 just listens to the prosecutor, that was the only 19 witness, and then says, well, I don't find any 20 deliberate intent, I don't think that takes us away from 21 bad faith or overreaching or even the deliberate intent, 22 getting back to the subjectiveness of it.

23 In the first place, the trial judge might say, 24 I don't find by her testimony that she had the 25 deliberate intent.

1 QUESTION: Well, the fact-finding of deliberate 2 intent in this setting is not different, is it, from the 3 fact-finding that the triers or trier must make on the 4 intent in a criminal act, is it?

5 MR. WALKER: I think it's different in the fact
6 that we have two different trial judges.

7 QUESTION: Well, did you ever object --

8 QUESTION: Never mind two different trial 9 judges. Let's stay on the one question. Is it any 10 different from the problem of finding intent which 11 judges and jurors do not find from express admissions, 12 they find it from a series of objective facts, do they 13 not?

14 MR. WALKER: That's right.

15 QUESTION: And then decide that all of these 16 facts taken together either do or do not show an 17 intent. Now, I notice here that there is, in one of the 18 opinions, I think the second one of the court of 19 appeals, there's a footnote admonishing judges to see to 20 it that their bailiffs are instructed not to talk to 21 jurors, and so forth. If you were to prevail here, 22 perhaps that would invoke or provoke an admonition to 23 trial judges, in view of this fog bank of meaning on the 24 difficulty of making the subjective determination, we 25 commend to trial judges the idea of never granting a

1 mistrial, let it go to its determination, and let it be 2 corrected if error on appeal, and then you won't have a
3 double jeopardy question. That might be the result, 4 might it not?

5 MR. WALKER: I --

6 QUESTION: It wouldn't be a unanimous opinion.

7 QUESTION: It might be a result of such a 8 holding.

9 MR. WALKER: I think that puts trial judges 10 down a little bit. I don't think that trial judges are 11 going to be that weak in making decisions. I think they 12 have an equal responsibility under the United States and 13 the Oregon Constitutions to say when a person's prize 14 guarantee has been violated, and to respond to the 15 question of the trier of the fact might decide 16 something, we know all types of situations where they 17 might decide a fact, and it might require gross 18 negligence. Well, the court will say, in spite of your 19 finding that is a fact, as a legal consequence, that is 20 not gross negligence.

21 So, what I am saying is that the constitutional 22 consequences of a finding of fact are still up to the 23 appellate court on the legal consequences. And when the 24 Solicitor General -- I think it puts a heavy burden in 25 this case on Kennedy to use this case, which should be

1 decided on Oregon law, as a basis for reconciling
2 conflicts maybe in the various circuits, and I'm not so 3 sure there is that much conflict. I mean, there's -- 4 because every case has its own facts, and any proposed 5 test, we are still going to get down to somebody can 6 say, well, that's too vague, and no matter what you do, 7 whether you say bad faith, overreaching, deliberate 8 intent, whatever.

9 And I think that it is safer to leave the 10 decision-making to where you have a common sense 11 guideline, and I think Jorn and Dinitz do that.

12 QUESTION: If a trial judge in a hearing
13 outside the presence of the jury after some dubious 14 conduct on the part of the prosecutor then made a 15 finding that this was deliberate and calculated conduct, 16 misconduct on the part of the prosecutor, that would be 17 the equivalent then under the rule you propose and 18 perhaps the rule of the Oregon Supreme Court to 19 dismissing the indictment with prejudice, would it not, 20 because there could not be another trial?

21 MR. WALKER: I think that would be -- I would 22 agree with that. But I don't think that -- I don't 23 think it might be a 100 percent situation where that the 24 appellate court couldn't review it if it was just a 25 misconstruing of the law as to those -- what he said was

1 deliberate intent.

2 QUESTION: But what if the judge making the 3 finding that this was deliberate and calculated,
4 inexcusable, unprofessional conduct, whatever terms you 5 want to use, then said on that basis, in light of the 6 decisions, I dismiss the indictment with prejudice.
7 That would be the end of the case, wouldn't it?

8 MR. WALKER: I think most likely.

9 QUESTION: Don't you think a trial judge ought 10 to do that if he knew that the consequence was to create 11 a double jeopardy situation? That is, bite the bullet, 12 and take the ultimate decision?

13 MR. WALKER: Well, I think -- I'm not sure I 14 understand the question fully, but if --

15 QUESTION: Well, if he is saying it is 16 calculated, deliberate misconduct on the part of the 17 prosecutor, under the theory you advance and the theory
18 of the court of appeals in this case, that is equivalent 19 to saying he cannot be tried again, and so then why not 20 do it directly and openly, and say, the indictment is 21 dismissed with prejudice on this ground?

22 MR. WALKER: Well, the point there, I think, in 23 some of these cases that involve a faulty indictment, I 24 don't that is probably embraced in your question.

25 QUESTION: No, no, just conduct.

1 MR. WALKER: Well, maybe I can answer it this 2 way. In Dinitz, if it had been the prosecutor who had 3 made those contemptuous remarks in the opening 4 statement, and then was admonished by the trial judge, 5 and he went on, and the trial judge finds that on those 6 set of circumstances there was deliberate intent, I 7 think definitely it would be under the rule that would 8 be a bar to retrial.

9 But getting back to, I think, the -- so in 10 substance I still think that the Oregon court is not out 11 of line with Jorn or Dinitz, but getting back, I think, 12 to a very fundamental proposition on the case being -- 13 how this case should be disposed of, first, that -- I 14 don't think you can ignore a court in State versus 15 Rathbun and its opinion, and certainly what does that 16 mean? It isn't meaningless, and you can't find -- and 17 that case is on point. But even if it is ambiguous, 18 then we reverse and remand. But on the cases that -- 19 and this Court has -- in Herb versus Pitcairn and other 20 cases, I think that the Oregon court certainly, if it
21 went back to the Oregon court, I think Judge Gillette 22 would end up with the same decision, and then if it went 23 to the Oregon Supreme Court, the Oregon Supreme Court is 24 going to follow the rule of State versus Rathbun, and 25 follow Justice Lindy's statements and policy that we

1 first look to our own, and we cited the Oregon
2 constitution in our briefs originally in the appellate 3 -- in the court of appeals.

4 So, I think that Kennedy is entitled to due
5 process, which includes an analysis of the Oregon law, 6 first by the Oregon court in that sequence.

7 If there are no more questions, why, I have 8 tried to cover the waterfront.

9 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

10 Do you have anything further, Mr. Attorney 11 General?

12 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID B. FROHNMAYER, ESQ., 13 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER - REBUTTAL

14 MR. FROHNMAYER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, 15 and may it please the Court, several points.

16 First of all, in my colloquy with you, Justice 17 Marshal, the term "overreaching" arose. The origin and 18 pedigree, of course, of that term comes from a dictum in 19 the Jorn decision by this Court which was construed in 20 aberrant ways by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. So 21 it's clear from the very use of that term by Judge 22 Gillette in the court of appeals in Oregon that in fact 23 he was referring to a line of aberrant federal cases.

24 That leads us to the second point, which is 25 really a combination of questions and concerns raised by

1 Justice Stevens and Justice Rehnquist, concerning 2 intent, various kinds of epithets used to characterize 3 the prosecutor's misconduct. What is at issue is the 4 importance of giving a predicate to those particular 5 epithets. That is, not misconduct in the abstract, but 6 misconduct which is deliberately designed to accomplish 7 something, i.e., aborting the trial. That seems to be, 8 to us, the critical question, and the one on which this 9 Court's decision --

10 QUESTION: Of course, if that is the test, and 11 if we make it the test, every prosecutor presumably 12 would know that, and therefore every time a prosecutor 13 intended to abort the trial in that way, he would also 14 intend to acquit the defendant, because that would be as 15 a matter of law the consequence that would follow, isn't 16 it? So it has to be an intent to acquit in effect.

17 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, an attempt at least to 18 abort the trial. Perhaps he would also intend not to be 19 discovered doing it, Your Honor.

20 QUESTION: I see, so it would have to be a 21 secret intent by definition, because if he did it 22 overtly, he would be acquitting the man.

23 MR. FROHNMAYER: I suppose that is true.

24 QUESTION: So you have to presume the situation
25 in which the prosecutor is prepared to testify falsely

1 that this was not his real intent.

2 MR. FROHNMAYER: No, I don't think so, and that 3 really raises another point, and that is that there is a 4 strong analogy to the rule that we are advancing in this 5 case in the pre-indictment delay cases and 6 discriminatory prosecution cases. This type of inquiry
7 is not unknown to this Court or to the federal courts.
8 It is perfectly appropriate by circumstantial evidence 9 indeed in a criminal trial by circumstantial evidence
10 and inference to conclude what the intent was of a 11 defendant who never took the stand in his own defense.

12 So, I don't think that it's quite the paradox 13 or the dilemma or the difficulty for a trial court 14 making those findings as might appear at first blush.

15 QUESTION: No, but the ultimate inquiry is, 16 what did he really intend to accomplish, and if he 17 really did intend to accomplish a deliberate mistrial, 18 and if he presumably knows the law, he then was 19 intending to accomplish an acquittal. It is a very 20 strange combination of circumstances.

21 MR. FROHNMAYER: But one has to bear in mind
22 that this is at best a very narrow exception to a 23 general rule that the issue ought not ordinarily to be 24 before the court at all, because by choosing to move for 25 the mistrial, the defendant normally is electing not to 1 go to the first jury at all.

2 QUESTION: Sure. Something sufficiently
3 prejudicial could have happened. You don't think there 4 should never be a mistrial, do you?

5 MR. FROHNMAYER: No, I do not. In fact --

6 QUESTION: You don't take the --

7 MR. FROHNMAYER: In fact, it's the very purpose 8 of the rule that we are announcing to make it clear that 9 where an egregious error has been committed in the 10 trial, that the defendant and the trial court will feel 11 free to start the trial process over again if initiated 12 by the defendant.

13 QUESTION: Do you agree that the Oregon Supreme 14 Court in the Rathbun case expressly rejected the notion 15 of subjective intent? They there said the bailiff 16 intended merely to help get a conviction, didn't intend 17 at all to get a hung jury.

18 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, they rejected it at 19 least in the sense that it -- under the Oregon statutes, 20 which were also part of the decision setting forth what 21 it is that the bailiff's duties were, that was the case,
22 but let's bear in mind here that in Rathbun there was a 23 hung jury --

24 QUESTION: Well, they went on. I happened to 25 get the opinion. "There is nothing to suggest the

1 bailiff sought to cause a mistrial. We dare say that 2 nothing was further from her mind than causing a hung 3 jury. On the contrary, her apparent purpose was to 4 assist the state in securing a conviction." And then 5 they say, but nevertheless we just have got to apply an 6 objective standard. That would seem to be the rule in 7 Oregon. You don't look to subjective intent.

8 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, at least in the context 9 of the Rathbun case, but the Rathbun case had been 10 decided at the time this case was decided by the court 11 of appeals.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Attorney General, you know,
13 seriously, the missing witness in this case is the trial
14 judge, and I want -- my question is, suppose the hearing 15 was held before him. You would be pretty well bound by 16 his ruling, wouldn't you?

17 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes, I think that one of the 18 appropriate things that stems from the rule that we 19 advance is that the trial judge is in a position to make 20 those findings, and we will accept those findings.

21 QUESTION: Right, but you didn't have a trial
22 judge. The trial judge didn't make this decision.

23 MR. FROHNMAYER: A different trial judge made 24 the decision.

25 QUESTION: That's right.

1 MR. FROHNMAYER: It was a trial judge panel.

2 QUESTION: By trial judge, I am talking about 3 the original trial judge. I think we have to explain 4 that.

5 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, I suppose under unusual 6 circumstances, of course, it would be appropriate for 7 one to seek an affidavit from that judge if it were a 8 matter on which they felt strongly.

9 Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

10 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Thank you,
11 gentlemen. The case is submitted.

12 (Whereupon, at 11:51 o'clock a.m., the case in 13 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
