P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments first this morning in Murphy against Hunt.

Mr. Schaaf.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF TERRY R. SCHAAF, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANT

MR. SCHAAF: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court, in June of 1977, an individual raped a young lady at a resort in central Nebraska. One day later, that individual was arrested and bond was set at $10,000. In September of that year, that individual pled guilty. Bond was continued pending sentencing. Three days later, that same individual, while free on bond, raped again, and this time killed his victim.

In January of that very next year, in 1978, the Nebraska Legislature proposed an amendment to Article I, Section 9 of the Nebraska Constitution. Prior to the time of the proposal of that amendment, Article I, Section 9, had withheld from persons charged with murder and treason the right to demand bail pending trial. The amendment proposed the addition of the crime of forcible rape.

At the general election in November of 1978, the people of the state of Nebraska, by a vote of 356,000 in favor to 80,000 opposed, adopted this amendment.

In May of 1980, Mr. Hunt, the appellee herein, was

1 arrested and charged with multiple counts of forcible rape, 2 and the commission of that crime with the use of a firearm.
3 In September of 1980, he was convicted of a number of those 4 charges, and sentenced to consecutive terms of confinement
5 of a maximum of 50 years and a minimum of 29.

6           In June of 1980, he filed in the Federal District
7 Court of the District of Nebraska a habeas corpus action 8 naming the judge as the -- excuse me, the sheriff as the 9 respondent, and at the same time filed in that court a civil 10 rights action naming Judge Murphy, the appellant herein, as 11 the defendant.

12           In October of 1980, the United States District
13 Court for the District of Nebraska unanimously or -- excuse
14 me -- in both cases, one judge held that that Nebraska 15 constitutional provision was constitutional in all respects.

16           An appeal was taken to the United States Court of 17 Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, and in May of 1981, the 18 United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit found 19 that in the habeas corpus action the matter was moot, and 20 with reference to the civil rights action, reversed the 21 lower court, and held that the Nebraska constitutional 22 provision violated both the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments 23 to the United States Constitution.

24           This appeal was thereafter taken. In October, this 25 Court noted probable jurisdiction.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Schaaf, what is the status, if you
2 know, of the appeals in the state court on the convictions 3 themselves?

4 MR. SCHAAF: Your Honor, the convictions themselves
5 were appealed in both -- in all three cases to the Nebraska 6 Supreme Court, and all three of those appeals are currently 7 pending. Briefs have not yet been filed by the appellant.
8 It would be expected that that case would not be resolved 9 probably in the next 12 months.

10 Your Honors, a violent crime occurs --

11 QUESTION: Does the Nebraska Supreme Court not 12 clear its appellate dockets each term?

13 MR. SCHAAF: Not necessarily, Your Honor. They do 14 try to give priority to criminal appeals.

15 QUESTION: Would it be normal and usual for it to 16 take 12 months to hear this case?

17 MR. SCHAAF: It would not be normal and usual for 18 it to take another additional 12 months from this date to 19 hear this case.

20 QUESTION: That is what I mean.

21 MR. SCHAAF: This is a bit irregular, although I do 22 suspect that the Nebraska Supreme Court is extremely anxious 23 to learn of this Court's opinion of the constitutionality of 24 our constitutional amendment. It may be that that has some 25 bearing on the rapidity with which they are reaching this

1 particular case.

2           Your Honors, a violent crime occurs in this country 3 every 24 seconds.

4           QUESTION: Before you leave the Nebraska Supreme 5 Court opinion, the merits don't involve this provision, do 6 they?

7           MR. SCHAAF: Not at all, Your Honor.

8           QUESTION: Then why would they possibly be waiting 9 for us?

10          MR. SCHAAF: It very well might be that if they 11 ruled against the appellee in this case, we might have a 12 question of mootness, Your Honor. The Eighth Circuit
13 struggled with that problem. Under Nebraska Press
14 Association versus Stewart, it is our position that so long 15 as Mr. Hunt stands in a position where this matter is 16 capable of repetition, that being if the Nebraska Supreme 17 Court would reverse his convictions and put him back in a 18 position where he was at the inception, he would still be 19 subject to this constitutional amendment, and therefore it 20 is not moot.

21          QUESTION: Does the record tell us whether he would 22 be entitled to bail if there were no such constitutional 23 provision?

24          MR. SCHAAF: I don't know that --

25          QUESTION: How do we know the constitutional

1 provision has any effect on his bailability or whatever you 2 might call it?

3 MR. SCHAAF: I am not certain that the record
4 reflects whether or not he has the financial means to meet a 5 reasonable bail.

6 QUESTION: Well, even apart from financial means,
7 are there other grounds on which Nebraska might deny someone 8 who is convicted, or is charged with an offense such as this 9 bail?

10 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor. Article I, Section 9, 11 only permits the withholding of the right to bail in cases 12 of murder and treason.

13 QUESTION: And there are no provisions in any case 14 if a man is known to be extremely dangerous, or that he 15 still gets bail automatically in every case, unless it is 16 treason or murder?

17 MR. SCHAAF: Well, unless that amount of bail is 18 set beyond his reach. It very well may be in the case of an 19 extremely dangerous individual, an extremely high bail could 20 be justified, effectively thereby restraining him from being 21 dangerous.

22 QUESTION: Are you telling us that if a defendant
23 is brought before the court in whatever preliminary process 24 you have in the state of Nebraska, and it is clear that he 25 is awaiting trial on five indictments, let us say, all

1 serious felonies, violent crimes, that the judge may not 2 take that into account in denying bail totally?

3 MR. SCHAAF: Without the assistance of this 4 constitutional provision --

5 QUESTION: Without this.

6 MR. SCHAAF: -- I do not believe that he could.
7 Not under Nebraska's constitutional scheme nor statutory 8 scheme. There again, it may be that a $1 million bond would 9 be entirely reasonable in such a situation, and it may be 10 that a particular defendant could not make that bond. But 11 absent this statute, this constitutional provision, persons 12 charged with heinous crimes such as forcible rape are 13 entitled under our constitution to demand bail. With this 14 constitutional provision, the judge is still free to grant 15 bail.

16 QUESTION: Are you representing, entitled to be 17 released on a reasonable bail?

18 MR. SCHAAF: I am suggesting, Your Honor, that in 19 our situation the constitutional amendment merely withholds
20 the right to demand bail. It does not prohibit the trial 21 judge from granting bail in certain circumstances.

22 QUESTION: In other words, bailable in your 23 constitutional amendment, where applicable, not bailable.
24 That is not an irrebuttable presumption, you are telling us?

25 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor. We are suggesting --

1 QUESTION: Has your Supreme Court held this?

2 MR. SCHAAF: The Nebraska Supreme Court has not 3 directly considered that question. I can suggest to the 4 Court that that is in fact the practice. I suggest to the 5 Court that the constitutional provision covers murder, not 6 first degree murder, not murder where capital punishment is 7 appropriate, and with great regularity, and for scores of 8 years, persons charged with lesser degrees of murder have 9 been entitled to bail under the same constitutional 10 provision. There is some suggestion in the amicus briefs
11 that the decision in Parker versus Roth somehow holds 12 against this position.

13 Parker versus Roth was the first test of this 14 constitutional provision that was taken to the Nebraska
15 Supreme Court. The Nebraska Supreme Court unanimously 16 upheld the constitutionality of this constitutional 17 amendment. An appeal was -- petition for a writ of 18 certiorari was taken to this court which was not granted.

19 QUESTION: Now I gather you are telling us we 20 should decide this case on the premise that for any offense, 21 there is always judicial discretion to admit the bail?

22 MR. SCHAAF: That is correct, Your Honor. Whether 23 we are talking murder, treason, or one of the degrees of 24 first degree sexual assault, forcible rape. It is not an 25 irrebuttable presumption. I would direct this Court's

1 attention to the concurring opinion of Justice McCowan in 2 Parker versus Roth, wherein I think it makes it very clear 3 that it is not an irrebuttable presumption. I would also 4 direct the Court's attention to the actual language of Chief 5 Justice Krivosha, some of the language that has been cited 6 to you by the amicus, and in that situation we believe that 7 all the Chief Justice is speaking there is indicta. He is 8 talking about ineligibility for bail, not a prohibition 9 against bail. I think that is a critical element of this 10 case.

11           QUESTION: Well, has the Nebraska Supreme Court 12 reviewed any cases where bail is denied? If there is 13 discretion to grant it, has it reviewed any cases where it 14 is denied, and said that the discretion was abused by not 15 granting it? Or is it just a -- is it ever reviewed?

16           MR. SCHAAF: Well, bail certainly could be reviewed.

17           QUESTION: Has it been?

18           MR. SCHAAF: It has been in the context of 19 excessive bail, and it has been in one instance in the 20 context of whether or not the court is free to exercise some 21 discretion, and I guess the citation to that would be 22 Partin, P-a-r-t-i-n, versus Jensen, 203 Nebraska 441.
23 Partin versus Jensen, 203 Nebraska 441, wherein the Nebraska 24 Supreme Court held the inherent power of a court may be 25 exercised as to bail although it is not specifically vested

1 by statute.

2 QUESTION: But has it said what factors go into the 3 denial of bail?

4 MR. SCHAAF: Well, Your Honor, where --

5 QUESTION: If the Court has got discretion to grant
6 it, I would suppose there may have been some law grow up 7 down through the years, at least on the murder.

8 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor, not with reference to 9 that. Now, of course, we do have a statutory scheme for 10 setting bail once bail is to be set. In other words, to 11 determine, once we have cleared the hurdle of whether or 12 not --

13 QUESTION: As far as we know, the decision of the 14 trial judge is final with respect to whether bail should be 15 allowed at all or not.

16 MR. SCHAAF: It is not final, Your Honor. In this 17 particular case, bail was originally denied by a municipal 18 judge.

19 QUESTION: Right.

20 MR. SCHAAF: And that was reviewed by a trial level 21 district court judge.

22 QUESTION: Yes.

23 MR. SCHAAF: And thereafter, an appeal is possible 24 to the Nebraska Supreme Court, and that is what happened in 25 Parker versus Roth.

1           QUESTION: But in the course of -- was an opinion
2 written anywhere in this appeal on bail and whether bail 3 was --

4           MR. SCHAAF: There was an opinion written in --

5           QUESTION: -- was improperly denied?

6           MR. SCHAAF: There was an opinion written in Parker 7 versus Roth which upheld the constitutionality of 8 withholding the bail in this case.

9           QUESTION: Did they also say that bail was properly 10 denied?

11          MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor.

12          QUESTION: For what reason?

13          MR. SCHAAF: Because he was charged with first 14 degree sexual assault.

15          QUESTION: Well, is that just the end of it?

16          MR. SCHAAF: Well, of course -- yes, Your Honor, 17 presuming that the finding could be made that the proof is 18 evident and the presumption is great.

19          QUESTION: Then that is the end of it.

20          MR. SCHAAF: That is the end of the constitutional 21 scheme. Yes, Your Honor.

22          QUESTION: And also the decision to deny bail is 23 then affirmed.

24          MR. SCHAAF: As far as the requirement of a trial 25 judge articulating his reasons for denying bail even

1 thereafter, I am aware of no authority which requires him to 2 articulate those reasons. If, on the other hand, he elects 3 to make bail available, there is a statutory scheme wherein 4 he must determine what kind of bail, if bail at all is to be 5 imposed.

6 QUESTION: Yes.

7 QUESTION: I understood you to say earlier, 8 however, that the trial judge could have granted bail as a 9 matter of discretion in this case.

10 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor, as well as in cases 11 of murder.

12 QUESTION: Well, may I ask, is there an 13 individualized determination then in every case?

14 MR. SCHAAF: No -- well, I presume so, Your Honor.
15 There is no statutory --

16 QUESTION: One makes an application for bail. I 17 gather the state would come in, would it --

18 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor.

19 QUESTION: -- or perhaps I should ask the question 20 -- and say, this individual won't show up for trial, or may 21 be a danger to the community, something like that. Does the 22 state have that burden?

23 MR. SCHAAF: When we are talking about persons 24 charged with either murder or forcible rape, the first 25 obligation is to establish that the proof is evident and the 1 presumption is great.

2 QUESTION: What does "presumption is great" mean?
3 Presumption of guilt is great?

4 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor. I suspect it means 5 something considerably more than a preponderance of evidence 6 and something less than beyond a reasonable doubt. We 7 suggest to this Court that what the trial judge must find is 8 that the evidence is clear and convincing, and that the 9 defendant will probably be convicted.

10 QUESTION: And the question is whether or not the 11 accused is one who will or won't show up for trial, or 12 whether or not if released he will be a danger to the 13 community? Neither of them, then, is inquired into?

14 MR. SCHAAF: Both of those are factors which the 15 judge may or may not make an actual inquiry into.

16 QUESTION: Well, suppose he makes the 17 determination, presumption is great, as you tell it, meaning 18 that the evidence of guilt is very strong. Does he then 19 bother going on into whether or not the accused may show up?

20 MR. SCHAAF: There is no constitutional or 21 statutory requirement that he do so.

22 QUESTION: And he doesn't --

23 MR. SCHAAF: It is impossible to know what he may 24 articulate mentally in determining whether or not to 25 exercise his discretion --

1           QUESTION: Well, really what I am trying to get at 2 is whether the state makes any effort in addition to showing 3 that the presumption of guilt is satisfied.

4           MR. SCHAAF: On a case by case basis, they no doubt
5 do. They may bring to the court's attention that this man 6 has a long previous criminal record. They may bring to the 7 attention of the court that he has not responded -- returned 8 from bond on previous occasions. There is no requirement
9 that they make such a showing. If they wish to impose bond, 10 they must establish that his guilt is evident and the 11 presumption of his guilt great to the trial judge's 12 satisfaction. With regard to the irrebuttable presumption, 13 even if they do, the judge may still exercise his discretion
14 to grant bail. If he makes that election, then there is a 15 statutory procedure he must follow to determine the kind of 16 bail and the amount of bail which would be appropriate.
17 There is no requirement that he articulate the 18 decision-making process of whether or not he will exercise 19 that discretion.

20           QUESTION: And no requirement expressed, at least, 21 that he inquire into whether or not he has had a past record 22 of not showing up when he has been admitted to bond, or that 23 he is a danger to the community?

24           MR. SCHAAF: If he feels that he can find that the 25 proof is evident, the presumption is great, without doing

1 so, from the face of the evidence, he need not inquire 2 further.

3 Your Honors, in this --

4 QUESTION: Counsel, before you go on, I want to go 5 back to your first point, if I may. The defendant was 6 convicted of two of three counts, or --

7 MR. SCHAAF: Three of four, Your Honor.

8 QUESTION: Three out of four. Was that after jury 9 trials?

10 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: Factual trials on each of the counts?

12 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor. I believe that he 13 did actually confess to the crimes, but he then pled not 14 guilty. There was a jury trial. He was ultimately only 15 brought to trial on three of the four rapes. The reason he 16 was not brought to trial on the other, I understand, is that 17 the prosecutrix lived out of state. The prosecution was 18 satisfied that they could get convictions on the three, and 19 didn't bother reporting that prosecutrix for that fourth 20 trial.

21 He was also charged in each one of those three 22 rapes with the use of a firearm in the commission of a 23 felony. He was only found guilty of one of those charges.
24 Of course, those charges would not have been non-bailable 25 charges in any event. But he was found guilty of three

1 first degree sexual assaults, one upon a child, two upon 2 adults, and one count of use of a felony in the commission
3 of a firearm. He was given consecutive sentences that total
4 a maximum of 50 years, a minimum of 29. He will be eligible 5 for parole after 15 years.

6 QUESTION: And he filed appeals in each? Is that 7 correct?

8 MR. SCHAAF: There were -- Actually two of the 9 cases were combined on appeal. One was not. There are two 10 appeals pending before the Nebraska Supreme Court. And of 11 course at the same time he filed these two actions in the 12 United States District Court for the District of Nebraska.
13 Actually, before he was even found guilty, he filed these 14 actions.

15 QUESTION: So is there one conviction from which he 16 has not appealed at all?

17 MR. SCHAAF: No, ma'am. All of his convictions are 18 presently on appeal before the Nebraska Supreme Court.

19 QUESTION: All right.

20 QUESTION: Did I gather from an earlier comment, 21 counsel, that you don't agree with Judge Arnold's opinion on 22 mootness in the Eighth Circuit?

23 MR. SCHAAF: I don't have any question about it 24 with reference to the habeas corpus action, just for no 25 other reason than Mr. Hunt is no longer in the custody of

1 the sheriff of Douglas County, but with reference to -

2 QUESTION: How about the 1983?

3 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, with reference to the 1983
4 action, we believe that the standards of Nebraska Press 5 Association versus Stewart can be met, that it is capable of 6 repetition, and therefore it is not moot.

7 QUESTION: Well, is it very likely to repeat itself?

8 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor, it is not extremely 9 likely. The convictions in my opinion are sound.

10 QUESTION: Well, then you get beyond Nebraska Press
11 Association, don't you?

12 MR. SCHAAF: Well, of course, I am not the Nebraska 13 Supreme Court. They very well may find errors that have 14 been committed there. It is still theoretically possible.
15 It is still theoretically possible that Mr. Hunt can be 16 placed back in the same position he was at the inception of 17 these actions. Of course, this certainly is something that 18 is capable of evading review, if there were ever an issue 19 that would evade review, it would be an issue such as this.

20 QUESTION: Well, but it has to be, under Weinstein 21 against Bradford, it has to be the same person on each side 22 that has suffered from the inability to have a review.

23 MR. SCHAAF: We suggest in this case that it is.
24 Mr. Hunt is perfectly capable of being placed -- legally 25 capable of being placed back in the same position that he

1 was, and that would result from a finding of any kind by the 2 Nebraska Supreme Court of any kind of a deficiency in those 3 convictions requiring a remand and the potential for 4 recharge.

5 QUESTION: But you would agree that is very 6 unlikely, would you not?

7 MR. SCHAAF: Well, the success rate before the 8 Nebraska Supreme Court is extremely low in all cases.

9 QUESTION: And this was not filed as a class action.

10 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: How about, counsel, after conviction in 12 a criminal case, is anyone entitled to bail while his case 13 is on appeal?

14 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor.

15 QUESTION: Well, I suppose that this statute would 16 prevent bail while the case is pending on appeal.

17 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor.

18 QUESTION: So why is it moot until it is decided?

19 MR. SCHAAF: We suggest that it is not.

20 QUESTION: In this case. It doesn't need 21 repetition, does it?

22 MR. SCHAAF: Well, if he made application
23 tomorrow --

24 QUESTION: If this statute, if this constitutional 25 amendment was declared unconstitutional, he could apply for 1 bail now.

2 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor, and he could be 3 denied bail independent of this constitutional provision

4 QUESTION: Yes.

5 QUESTION: But in theory, at least, it could be 6 granted now by the same judge who denied by before on the 7 basis of perhaps the evidence that was submitted at the 8 trial.

9 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Schaaf, is there not a different 11 statutory provision covering bail after someone has been 12 convicted of a crime and pending appeal?

13 MR. SCHAAF: There is a --

14 QUESTION: Are you telling me that you would go 15 back to this same provision, or would there not be other 16 provisions in Nebraska law that govern that --

17 MR. SCHAAF: You could go back to this same 18 provision, or you could go back to a separate statutory 19 scheme. This, I would remind you, is a constitutional 20 provision, a constitutional provision granting an 21 affirmative right to bail in all cases, but withholding that 22 grant of the right to bail in some cases.

23 QUESTION: There are separate statutory provisions, 24 however, dealing with bail pending appeal. Is that 25 correct? Or release pending appeal?

1           MR. SCHAAF: I would be of the opinion that the 2 same statutory scheme dealing with bail generally would be 3 applicable to bail pending appeal. The same criteria would 4 remain applicable. It is not a separate section of our 5 law. The kinds of considerations, if there were bail 6 application made at the time of appeal, would be equally 7 applicable to those -- to applications made prior to 8 conviction.

9           QUESTION: Well, then, Mr. Schaaf, let me be sure I
10 understand you. Apart from the constitutional provision, 11 there is a statute governing the allowance of bail in most 12 cases. Are there exceptions in the statute itself? There 13 are some situations other than capital cases and the sex 14 offense cases in which the trial judge may pursuant to that 15 statute deny bail?

16          MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor. That statutory scheme 17 only deals with the amount of bail and the manner in which 18 bail would be imposed. For instance, the judge is free to --

19          QUESTION: Then I don't understand your answer to 20 Justice O'Connor earlier, then. I thought you said there 21 was a statute that was not limited to cases where people had 22 been convicted, which might operate to deny this man bail
23 entirely apart from the Constitution. Did I misunderstand 24 you?

25          MR. SCHAAF: Apparently we are not understanding

1 each other, Your Honor --

2 QUESTION: I guess not.

3 MR. SCHAAF: -- because that is not the case. If 4 bail is to be denied Mr. Hunt or anyone else, it must be 5 done pursuant to this constitutional provision. Period.
6 There are no other provisions of law which would permit the 7 denial of bail in any case, except --

8 QUESTION: Well, what about a person convicted of 9 robbery who appeals? Does he automatically get bail?

10 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: Why not?

12 MR. SCHAAF: There has to be some scheme there on 13 the judge's discretion to not release -- we are still not 14 communicating. When we get beyond the conviction stage, 15 then the statutory provision would permit the declination of 16 appeal pending -- bail pending appeal.

17 QUESTION: But that is a statute dealing only with 18 people who have been convicted.

19 MR. SCHAAF: The portion of that statute would deal 20 only with persons who have been convicted. It is one 21 statute dealing with the question of bail. One portion of 22 it deals with what criteria to be determined when we are 23 determining the amount of bail. Another section of it deals 24 with after conviction, what criteria might be considered 25 when determining whether bail should be granted while on

1 appeal once it has been denied or not met. In many 2 instances, it is a question of bail reduction applications.

3 QUESTION: But that is the statute that would 4 provide the basis for denial of bail to this man if we 5 disregarded the constitution?

6 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, and or the constitutional 7 provision that is before you today.

8 QUESTION: Let me sure I track that now, counsel.
9 A man is brought in, charged with embezzlement from a bank.
10 Could the judge on making appropriate findings with respect 11 to the likelihood of flight, assume that there was some 12 evidence, and he made findings that because of the 13 likelihood of flight for whatever reasons he describes, he 14 is denying bail. Could he do that?

15 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor, not on a bank robbery 16 charge. We are talking about prior to conviction? Is that 17 correct?

18 QUESTION: I beg your pardon?

19 MR. SCHAAF: Prior to conviction?

20 QUESTION: Prior to conviction, yes.

21 MR. SCHAAF: No, he might not deny bail on a bank 22 robbery charge. He might set bail at $1 million, if he 23 concluded that he was a dangerous individual or that he was 24 likely not to return.

25 QUESTION: Well, why can't he set bail?

1 MR. SCHAAF: He can, Your Honor.

2 QUESTION: Why?

3 MR. SCHAAF: Because there is no -- Article I,
4 Section 9, says all persons shall be bailable except murder, 5 treason, first degree sexual assault.

6 QUESTION: All are bailable. That is the section 7 you are relying on.

8 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor. That is the only 9 withdrawal of the right to demand bail. Once a person is 10 entitled to the right to demand bail, there is a statutory 11 scheme to determine what kind, if any, bail is to be 12 required. Once there is a conviction, then there is the 13 ultimate -- the other consideration. Now we are not talking 14 about a person accused, we are talking about a convicted 15 individual. His rights to liberties, et cetera, are 16 entirely different.

17 QUESTION: If it were not for that section, all are 18 entitled to bail, then a judge could deny bail.

19 MR. SCHAAF: There is no -- other than this 20 constitutional provision, there is no prohibition in our 21 constitution or our statutes to the denial of bail. The 22 judge would be free to do that which he wished. Our 23 constitution, however, takes that discretion from the judge 24 and gives all persons the right to bail except a select 25 group charged with certain crimes. So without that select

1 group being withheld, a trial judge would have no power to 2 withhold bail for anyone. He would have the power to set it 3 extremely high, but not to deny or refuse to set it in any 4 event.

5           What we have before the Court today is the effort
6 by the people of the state of Nebraska to balance the rights
7 of the society to be free from crime and the fear of crime 8 against an individual's right to liberty, and the people of 9 the state of Nebraska suggest that the people's right to 10 liberty -- that this means of doing that is reasonable, 11 especially in light of the fact that we are only withholding 12 the right to demand trial from those accused of heinous 13 crimes, where the proof of their guilt is evident, and the 14 presumption of their guilt is great.

15           If I may, Your Honor, I would prefer to reserve the 16 remainder of what time I have for rebuttal.

17           CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

18           Mr. Hornstein.

19           ORAL ARGUMENT OF BENNETT G. HORNSTEIN, ESQ.,

20                           ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLEE

21           MR. HORNSTEIN: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please 22 the Court, Eugene Hunt was held without bail for a period of 23 four months and three days between the time of his arrest 24 and the commencement of his first trial. He was held solely 25 because he was charged with the crime of forcible first

1 degree sexual assault, and upon a finding that the proof was 2 evident and the presumption great by two trial judges.

3           We have a survey that is contained in the joint 4 appendix that reflects the disposition of these no bail
5 cases during the first year that the constitutional 6 amendment was in effect. It reflects that there were 32 7 defendants held without bail during the first year that we 8 were able to identify, 20 of whose cases had been disposed 9 of. Two of these defendants were acquitted by juries after 10 having spent a total of 120 days in jail. Only one 11 defendant out of those 20 was convicted of the original 12 non-bailable offense. The remainder had their charges 13 dismissed, or they pled guilty to reduced bailable 14 misdemeanors or felonies.

15           We think this reflects the injustice of this law, 16 the unfairness of this law, the overinclusiveness of this 17 law.

18           The central issue in this case, we think, is not 19 whether the state of Nebraska has a legitimate governmental 20 interest in preventing the crime of rape, which we concede 21 it does, but whether Eugene Hunt and other defendants 22 charged with rape have a fundamental right or otherwise 23 constitutionally protected interest in pretrial liberty, 24 which we argue that they do, or even whether preventive 25 detention in general is constitutionally permissible, which

1 we believe is an issue that need not be reached in this 2 case, because Nebraska in fact has not provided for any 3 individual determination of dangerousness by a trial judge.
4 It is simply presumed dangerousness from the nature of the 5 charge, and the weight of the evidence at the time of the 6 initial charge.

7           The central issue is whether the means chosen by 8 the state to promote its legitimate interest. The means, 9 being denial of pretrial bail to all defendants merely 10 charged with rape where the proof is evident and the 11 presumption great, is substantially related to the 12 effectuation of the state's legitimate purpose. In other 13 words, does it closely fit, is it tailored, does it provide 14 for rebuttal --

15           QUESTION: What is the form of the proceeding at 16 which the determination is made that the proof is evident or 17 the presumption great?

18           MR. HORNSTEIN: There is no statutory procedure 19 that is completely clear. The --

20           QUESTION: What happened here?

21           MR. HORNSTEIN: Okay. What happened here is 22 typical of what happens. Nebraska's evidence code, which 23 was enacted a few years ago, provides that bail hearings or 24 summary proceedings to which the rules of evidence are not 25 applicable, the proceeding is contained in about five pages

1 of a transcript which is contained in the joint appendix.
2 The proceeding that is contained in the joint appendix was 3 an appeal from the initial denial of bail by a magistrate.
4           The typical proceeding is that the defendant
5 appears with his counsel and the prosecutor before a 6 magistrate initially. The charge is read. The court makes 7 -- sometimes the prosecutor will say a few words about the 8 nature of the case. The defense attorney may say a few 9 words about the background of the defendant. The court 10 summarily fixes bail.

11           According to the statutory scheme, our bail reform 12 statutes, which were enacted in the early seventies, and are 13 similar to the Federal Bail Reform Act, the defendant, if he 14 is unable to make the fixed bail within 24 hours after it is 15 initially set has a right of review to another judge, a 16 district judge. That was done in this case, and that 17 hearing is contained in the joint appendix.

18           At that time, I attempted -- I told the court that 19 the defendant had roots in the community. At that time we 20 told the court that he had a minimal criminal history, and 21 according to the statute, the only factor to be considered 22 in fixing bail is the risk of flight. The statute says 23 nothing about dangerousness. It says nothing about any 24 other factors to be considered other than the risk of 25 non-appearance. And those were the background factors that

1 I attempted to provide to the court.

2           The court ignored those, and said, according to the 3 constitutional amendment that was passed in 1978 and Parker
4 versus Roth, which was the Nebraska Supreme Court case 5 upholding the constitutionality of that provision, bail is 6 denied. That was the end of the hearing.

7           QUESTION: Well, counsel, here there was a 8 stipulation, was there not --

9           MR. HORNSTEIN: That's right.

10          QUESTION: -- that the proof was evident and the 11 presumption great?

12          MR. HORNSTEIN: That's correct. That's right.

13          QUESTION: Are those different things, proof 14 evident and presumption great?

15          MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, the argument that we make is 16 that that is a meaningless standard, if not 17 unconstitutionally vague under the rule under that we, you 18 know, we stipulated to. We concede that. But our position 19 is that the Nebraska Supreme Court has never defined that 20 standard. That is not a recognized, easily defined 21 standard. This Court in Addington v. Texas defined the 22 three ordinary burdens of proof.

23          QUESTION: Well, if you stipulate to something, are 24 you in any position to attack it later?

25          MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, I am aware of that rule, Your

1 Honor, but our position is, there are three different rules 2 in this country as to what that standard means, one of which 3 is that the charge itself constitutes an irrebuttable 4 presumption of proof evident and presumption great. The 5 Nebraska Supreme Court has never defined that standard.

6 QUESTION: But if you agree to it, by definition, 7 you have understood it, haven't you?

8 MR. HORNSTEIN: Even assuming -- well, again, I 9 think the Court still has the dilemma of determining what 10 does it mean. I mean, if it means that it is an 11 irrebuttable presumption that the proof is evident and 12 presumption great, whatever that means --

13 QUESTION: If you didn't know what it means --

14 MR. HORNSTEIN: -- of what effect was the 15 stipulation?

16 QUESTION: -- how do you account for having agreed 17 to it?

18 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, there were several --

19 QUESTION: What did you think it meant when you --

20 MR. HORNSTEIN: There were several reasons for 21 stipulating, Your Honor. We did feel at the time that there 22 was a fairly strong case against the defendant. In fact, he 23 had four charges against him where the likelihood of 24 acquittal on all charges was not very great. We were 25 fearful of a federal abstention problem, to be honest. Our

1 office has the largest criminal defense case load in the 2 state. We have the largest number of defendants who are 3 being held without bail. We felt these cases become moot 4 very quickly, as happened in the Parker case, which became 5 moot after the Nebraska Supreme Court ruled on it. We had 6 to wait for another defendant to come along to raise this 7 issue, and it has taken three years to get it to this Court 8 since we started, exactly three years ago this month.

9 QUESTION: Counsel, are you representing the 10 defendant in the appeal to the Nebraska Supreme Court?

11 MR. HORNSTEIN: Yes. Yes, Your Honor.

12 QUESTION: And have you delayed filing the briefs 13 there so that this Court can determine it in an effort to 14 keep it from being moot?

15 MR. HORNSTEIN: The Nebraska Supreme Court delayed 16 it for that purpose, Your Honor.

17 QUESTION: Okay.

18 QUESTION: You referred to the fact that you
19 represented to the judge on the bail hearing that he had a 20 minimal prior criminal record. What did that constitute?

21 MR. HORNSTEIN: At the time, the evidence that we 22 had available -- this was shortly after he was initially -- 23 and I was not his trial lawyer, I only function in an 24 appellate capacity, but the information from our office file 25 reflected that he had a misdemeanor record. He had lived in

1 Omaha for more than ten years, and that was the extent of 2 the record that was available. We have since learned that 3 he previously had a statutory rape conviction in another 4 state that had occurred 12 or 13 years before this. But 5 that information was not given to him by us, and we had no 6 criminal history record available to reflect that.

7 We think that that is really irrelevant, Your Honor.

8 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Hornstein, I can understand 9 your wanting to get a test case, which I guess motivates the 10 stipulation, but supposing this constitutional standard is 11 the equivalent of saying there is proof beyond a reasonable 12 doubt that the man is guilty? It may mean that, for all we 13 know.

14 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well -- okay. Our position is -- I 15 am glad you raised that question, because that leads to the 16 next step. Even assuming that it means high probability --

17 QUESTION: No, beyond a reasonable doubt. Then 18 couldn't they detain him if it means that?

19 MR. HORNSTEIN: I don't think any state has defined 20 it that way.

21 QUESTION: Well, but they haven't excluded the 22 possibility that that is what it means, and it seems to me 23 if that is what it means, you have no valid objection to 24 having the man held in custody.

25 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, our position that we have

1 taken in the brief is that it means -- if it means high 2 probability of guilt -- let's assume it means beyond a 3 reasonable doubt --

4 QUESTION: You mean the presumption or the proof is 5 evident? Which?

6 MR. HORNSTEIN: Proof evident presumption, whatever 7 that --

8 QUESTION: But the language is, where the proof is 9 evident or the presumption great. Are they different things?

10 MR. HORNSTEIN: I don't know. I mean, the cases 11 that have -- there are three different definitions that have 12 been adopted by the states, and to my knowledge they had not 13 split that down the middle and tried to define it 14 independently. It is defined together.

15 QUESTION: The problem with stipulating so you get 16 a test case in a hurry is that you ask us to decide 17 something before we know what it means, whereas if you 18 litigated these issues, then your courts would have to 19 decide what this means. You have rushed to get us a test 20 case, is what you have done here.

21 MR. HORNSTEIN: It has taken three years.

22 QUESTION: And we still don't know what this 23 standard means.

24 MR. HORNSTEIN: I am not sure -- you know, our 25 experience --

1 QUESTION: Has there ever been a contested hearing
2 in Nebraska at which the issue has been whether or not there 3 was this kind of proof?

4 MR. HORNSTEIN: No, to my knowledge that issue has 5 never been decided by the Nebraska Supreme Court.

6 QUESTION: How often could it --

7 MR. HORNSTEIN: The only time it could have been 8 decided before would be in a murder case or a treason case, 9 and to my knowledge we have never had a treason 10 prosecution. We've got a relatively small state. Even the 11 number of murder prosecutions is relatively small. And the 12 chance of a bail issue ever --

13 QUESTION: Well, in this very case, though, on the 14 review by the district court of the denial or whatever it 15 was by the magistrate, could you not have insisted that he 16 was entitled to bail because the state had not proved either 17 that the proof was evident or the presumption great, 18 whatever those things mean?

19 MR. HORNSTEIN: I suppose we could have tried. My 20 experience in these cases has been that they won't listen.

21 QUESTION: Well, but then you would have framed the 22 issue --

23 MR. HORNSTEIN: It is a summary hearing, and I have 24 never seen anybody -- in fact, I have never seen witnesses 25 called in a bail hearing. It is just unheard of. It just

1 doesn't happen. I mean, it is a summary proceeding. You
2 walk up in front of the judge and you say a few words --

3 QUESTION: Any legislative history where this came 4 from?

5 MR. HORNSTEIN: Absolutely -- where the 6 constitutional amendment --

7 QUESTION: No, where that, where the proof is 8 evident or the presumption great. Certainly those are not 9 novel. I have seen those other places. I don't know what 10 they mean, but I have seen them.

11 MR. HORNSTEIN: To my knowledge, I don't know the 12 exact source. I know that it appears in the Northwest 13 Ordinance of 1787. It appears in the Judiciary Act of 14 1789. It has been adopted. Practically every state 15 constitution has that language in it. And we have got a 16 summary of the different state rules in the brief, and there 17 are three different rules, one of which is that you can't 18 even put on any evidence because it is an irrebuttable
19 presumption arising out of the charge that it is. Another 20 is that the burden is upon the defendant to show that it is 21 not evident and great. And the third is that the burden is 22 upon the state to show some high probability of guilt.

23 QUESTION: How many states follow that 24 interpretation?

25 MR. HORNSTEIN: As I recall, the majority rule is

1 the middle one that I mentioned, the one that the burden is 2 upon the defendant. The other two rules are minority. I 3 don't know the number of states.

4 Now, our position is that even if it means high 5 probability of guilt, there is no logical or empirical data 6 to support the presumption by the state that all or even a 7 significant number of defendants who are probably guilty of 8 rape would commit rape if released on bail. Now, that is 9 the -- the legislative purpose of this legislation is to 10 prevent the crime of rape during the period of pretrial 11 release on bail.

12 QUESTION: Counsel --

13 QUESTION: Yes, but what if at the hearing the 14 defendant testified that he would if he were let go?

15 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, under this amendment, there 16 is no need to inquire into that.

17 QUESTION: Would it be unconstitutional to say, 18 well, we won't let you go then?

19 MR. HORNSTEIN: It is assumed.

20 QUESTION: No, no, but supposing you did have a 21 hearing, supposing you had a hearing --

22 MR. HORNSTEIN: Under this amendment.

23 QUESTION: -- under this amendment, and the man
24 denied his guilt as to this crime, but said, if I go free, I 25 intend to commit a rape as soon as I walk out the door.

1           MR. HORNSTEIN: I think it is irrelevant, because 2 they don't need -- I mean, it is presumed. They have to 3 deny him bail. Now, that is another issue. I don't want to 4 deviate from the question here, but our position, contrary
5 to the state's, is that once a finding is made of a charge 6 of rape, and the proof evident and the presumption great, 7 there is no discretion to deny bail.

8           QUESTION: Has that been determined by the Nebraska 9 courts?

10          MR. HORNSTEIN: Yes, and I quoted it at Footnote 18
11 on Page 37 of my brief. Chief Justice Krivosha, who wrote 12 the Parker opinion for what was a unanimous court, and I 13 hesitate to quote, but I will quote a little bit here. He 14 says, "It should be clearly recognized that the 1978 bail 15 amendment does not prohibit bail in every case where an 16 individual is charged with a sexual offense. In order for 17 one so charged to be ineligible for bail, it must appear," 18 et cetera. And then he goes on, and he says, "In any 19 instance in which the court is not convinced that either the 20 proof is evident or the presumption great, then the court is 21 not prohibited from granting bail."

22          And in the next paragraph he says that we are 23 therefore left with the question whether the legislature and 24 the people thereafter acted rationally and reasonably in 25 concluding that where the proof is evident or presumption

1 great, that an individual had committed a sexual offense, 2 "such person should not be free on bail pending trial."

3           We think that commits the state to the position
4 that once such a finding is made, there is no discretion,
5 and our survey, we think, reflects that, and the bail
6 hearing in this case reflects it. There was no inquiry made 7 into individual factors bearing on dangerousness. It is a 8 presumption --

9           QUESTION: Well, I gather your basic position is 10 that your 1978 amendment violates the federal Constitution.

11           MR. HORNSTEIN: That's right.

12           QUESTION: Tell me, you mentioned earlier the 1789
13 capital crimes exception in the 1789 statute. Do you think 14 that, under your submission as to the Nebraska provision, do 15 you think that also is unconstitutional?

16           MR. HORNSTEIN: No, our position is, the capital 17 crimes exception has existed since prior, even, to those 18 provisions that were adopted at the time of the Bill of 19 Rights, well, at the time of the Judiciary Act. Blackstone 20 is quoted in the circuit court opinion below in 1770 in his 21 Commentaries on The Laws of England, stating that the 22 rationale for that rule was that a defendant facing the 23 penalty of death could not be assumed to -- or he would not 24 appear regardless of what amount of bail was fixed, because 25 the penalty itself would deter his appearance, and that is

1 the rationale for that rule, which does not apply to 2 non-capital offenses.

3 QUESTION: It wasn't then the idea that he would go 4 out and commit another murder?

5 MR. HORNSTEIN: Absolutely not. Now, there is some 6 language in a Law Review article that John Mitchell wrote in 7 the late sixties where he claims that that was one of the 8 purposes, but I have read a lot of literature and I cannot 9 find any justification for that language.

10 QUESTION: Doesn't that cut in a little bit to your 11 idea that the forcible rape addition has to be justified by 12 a finding that the person would go out and commit another 13 rape?

14 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, we are assuming here only for 15 purposes of argument that the -- in other words, we don't 16 think it is necessary to decide the preventive detention 17 issue here, because this law is so overbroad that even 18 assuming for purposes of argument that it is constitutional, 19 it can't stand. We don't think the thin facts of this case 20 present the punishment issue that you discussed in Bell v.
21 Wolfish, and that that would be more appropriately heard in 22 a case like United States v. Edwards, which is pending on 23 certiorari from the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

24 QUESTION: But your client is one step beyond the 25 pretrial detention stage. He is now in the post-conviction

1 appeal stage.

2 MR. HORNSTEIN: That's correct.

3 QUESTION: Do you agree with your opposing counsel
4 that there is a separate system of setting bail for people 5 who have already been convicted?

6 MR. HORNSTEIN: It is unclear in Nebraska. My 7 recollection of the bail reform statute is that it does not 8 draw any distinction between pre- and post-conviction
9 standards for fixing bail. The only permissible
10 consideration is risk of non-appearance, and I don't recall 11 that there is any distinction between pre- and 12 post-conviction.

13 QUESTION: Wouldn't this constitutional amendment
14 be a basis for denying bail pending appeal?

15 MR. HORNSTEIN: Oh, I agree with that. Certainly.

16 QUESTION: However the factors might sort out under 17 the other statute, this would be independently a reason for 18 denying bail?

19 MR. HORNSTEIN: I think it mandates a denial of 20 bail.

21 QUESTION: Yes, and as long as the case is pending, 22 this case isn't moot, is it?

23 MR. HORNSTEIN: No, our position is that it is not 24 moot. I mean, I think both sides agree that it is not moot.

25 QUESTION: Well, I know, but we don't necessarily 1 take your word for that.

2 MR. HORNSTEIN: I realize that.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Hornstein --

4 MR. HORNSTEIN: I mean, under the Nebraska Press
5 Association standard, as I understand it, if it is capable 6 of repetition --

7 QUESTION: You don't even need to get to Nebraska
8 Press.

9 MR. HORNSTEIN: Okay. If -- right. I mean, he can 10 be denied bail as long as the --

11 QUESTION: If we overturned the statute, he could 12 apply for bail, pending appeal.

13 MR. HORNSTEIN: That's right. That's right.

14 QUESTION: He may not get it, but at least the 15 constitutional barrier to bail would be removed.

16 MR. HORNSTEIN: That's right. My recollection of 17 the statute is that he would be entitled to bail if you 18 overturn this law, subject to the flight consideration.

19 QUESTION: Yes.

20 QUESTION: Even though you stipulated that the 21 proof is evident or the presumption great?

22 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, that only applies if it is 23 one of --

24 QUESTION: If we turned that over, that would be 25 gone.

1 MR. HORNSTEIN: Yes, that only applies if it is a 2 non-bailable offense. If you decide that it is 3 unconstitutional to make rape non-bailable, then he 4 automatically becomes -- the proof evident, presumption
5 great is an irrelevant factor, because it has to go together 6 with the charge of rape.

7 QUESTION: So even if he has been convicted, then, 8 if we overturn this provision, he is out on bail. Is that 9 right? Is that your position?

10 MR. HORNSTEIN: No, I can't say that. I mean, the 11 court -- I think the court could find that -- I mean, the 12 flight risk, I think, increases following conviction.

13 QUESTION: Well, how about the danger to the public?

14 MR. HORNSTEIN: To my knowledge, there are no 15 Nebraska cases that say that that is a factor that can be 16 considered. The statute totally --

17 QUESTION: Do you think it should or shouldn't be?

18 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, I don't think that is really 19 relevant to the determination of this case. I mean, the man 20 has been convicted of three sexual assaults, and one weapons 21 use charge, and he has got long sentences. I think that 22 increases the flight risk. Traditionally, the sole purpose 23 or one of the few purposes of bail has been to ensure 24 appearance. I think that risk increases. But, you know, I 25 suppose a court could find that he might qualify.

1 QUESTION: In terms of the discretion that the 2 judge had on this record is it any different from what it 3 would be if he had three outstanding indictments, separate 4 indictments not being tried together for forcible rapes?

5 MR. HORNSTEIN: These were not tried together.
6 They were all -- there were three separate trials.

7 QUESTION: If he had had convictions of three 8 before he came before the court.

9 MR. HORNSTEIN: Oh. Under the amendment, I think 10 it would be irrelevant, if I understand the question. I 11 mean, if he has got any charge of forcible first degree 12 sexual assault, the proof is evident, and presumption great, 13 our position is, bail has to be denied, if there were a 14 conviction.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Hornstein, may I ask you another 16 question that relates to the Chief Justice's question?
17 Suppose there were no constitutional provision, again, you 18 merely have your bail statute, which as I understand you 19 says that there is an inquiry into the probability of flight.

20 MR. HORNSTEIN: That's right.

21 QUESTION: Supposing the judge had a bail hearing
22 without the constitutional provision before him at all, said 23 this man has been indicted on four serious charges, I think 24 he is sure to flee if he can, and the guy testifies he is 25 going to flee. Does he still get bail?

1           MR. HORNSTEIN: My understanding is that they 2 cannot deny bail. They have to fix bail. Now, I know what 3 would happen.

4           QUESTION: The way they prevent him from fleeing is 5 by fixing excessive bail? Is that what you do?

6           MR. HORNSTEIN: Yes. That is the standard --

7           QUESTION: Then you would be up on another 8 constitutional basis.

9           MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, that is an issue that has yet 10 to be decided, I suppose. I mean, that would present a pure 11 excessive bail.

12          QUESTION: It certainly violates the Eighth 13 Amendment.

14          MR. HORNSTEIN: What?

15          QUESTION: To give excessive bail.

16          MR. HORNSTEIN: Right. But we know that that is 17 the standard practice.

18          QUESTION: You know it, and you go right ahead and 19 do it.

20          MR. HORNSTEIN: We don't do it. The judges do it.

21          QUESTION: Mr. Hornstein, may I just get back to 22 the question I asked you? Do I understand now, based on 23 what you said about pre-Revolutionary history and Blackstone 24 and everything else, that you do think the capital crimes 25 exception in the 1789 statute is constitutional?

1           MR. HORNSTEIN: Yes. Our position is that that has 2 got deep historical roots. It has got a rationale that is 3 reasonable, and there is another exception for, you know,
4 defendants who threaten witnesses, juries. That is another
5 traditional exception. Other than those two --

6           QUESTION: Since you concede that, what real 7 difference is there between this Nebraska provision and that 8 one, in terms of constitutionality?

9           MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, the difference is that that 10 -- the rationale for that is the threat of capital 11 punishment causing a flight risk which doesn't exist in a 12 non-capital crime. This crime in this case, the charges 13 carry penalties of one to 50 years, and the weapons charge, 14 I think, was a consecutive one, 20. But we have a number of 15 other crimes in Nebraska that carry equal or higher 16 penalties, yet they are allailable.

17          QUESTION: So in a state which has abolished 18 capital punishment, it would be your view that then there 19 could be no denial of bail.

20          MR. HORNSTEIN: That's right. Our position is that 21 that rationale does not apply except in the case of a 22 capital crime.

23          QUESTION: Is it your view that the Eighth 24 Amendment is applicable to the states?

25          MR. HORNSTEIN: Yes. Now, we haven't really

1 touched on that issue. We spend half our brief discussing 2 that, because that determines the standard of review to be 3 applied.

4 QUESTION: I guess I am pushing you to get to those 5 issues.

6 MR. HORNSTEIN: I appreciate that, Your Honor. Our 7 position is that bail under the standards that were set down 8 in Duncan v. Louisiana in Justice White's opinion, which 9 sets out the test to be applied in determining whether a 10 criminal bill of rights protection is applicable to the 11 states, is equally applicable in this case here. The 12 essential test was whether the right that is being 13 considered as fundamental in the context of the criminal 14 process is maintained by the American states, and the court 15 has applied a number of criteria to determine that.

16 The state argues here that the excessive bail 17 clause should not apply, and does not mean that there is a 18 right to bail guaranteed against legislative abuse, because 19 it doesn't say that. Well, we cite a number of the 20 decisions which have found rights to be fundamental and 21 applicable to the states which aren't even mentioned in the 22 bill of rights, such as travel, appropriation, voting, 23 privacy, association, and in the criminal area, the 24 presumption of innocence, proof beyond a reasonable doubt.
25 None of those are mentioned in the Bill of Rights, and yet

1 they have been found applicable to the states.

2           One of the most recent rights in the Richmond
3 newspaper, the Virginia case that was written by Chief 4 Justice Burger, holding that the right of -- that there was 5 a fundamental right to public access to criminal trials that 6 was implicit in the First Amendment. Our position is that 7 if a right to bail guaranteed against legislative abuse is 8 not found to be implicit in the Eighth Amendment, then it 9 becomes meaningless, because if the legislature can take 10 away a right that the cause says bail cannot be excessive, 11 and yet if it can be denied by a legislature, that right 12 becomes eviscerated. If the legislatures are left free to 13 render any crime non-bailable, they can -- theoretically 14 they can choose misdemeanors like petty larseny, drunk 15 driving; any other charge could be rendered non-bailable, 16 which would totally eviscerate the Eighth Amendment 17 excessive bail clause.

18           QUESTION: May I ask you this, Mr. Hornstein? If 19 you are right that your constitutional amendment creates an 20 irrebuttable presumption as to people who fell between them, 21 wouldn't you argue, or do you argue that under a due process
22 analysis in any event the provision is unconstitutional, 23 without reaching the question of whether the Eighth 24 Amendment extends the excessive bail --

25           MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, I -- yes, we -- in fact, I

1 discussed it from sort of an intermediate scrutiny analysis, 2 assuming that the court finds that bail is not a fundamental 3 right. Now, we strongly urge that bail is a fundamental 4 right, a right to bail guaranteed against unreasonable 5 legislative denial under the Eighth Amendment is an 6 implicit, fundamental right that is applicable to the 7 states. However, if the Court finds that it is not, you can 8 still apply a due process or equal protection intermediate 9 scrutiny analysis.

10           In fact, it has been suggested to me that even 11 under a rational basis minimal scrutiny argument, you might 12 be able to invalidate this on the ground that the 13 legislature has offered absolutely no data to support its 14 position that all or most people charged with rape will 15 commit rape if released on bail.

16           QUESTION: Mr. Hornstein, doesn't that analysis
17 make the Eighth Amendment meaningless in this context?

18           MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, our preferred position is 19 that the Eighth Amendment itself can be used to invalidate 20 this, but --

21           QUESTION: What about Carlson and Landon?

22           MR. HORNSTEIN: The language in Carlson v. Landon 23 -- well, the circuit below distinguished that case on the 24 ground that that involved an administrative denial of bail 25 by the Attorney General to alien communists facing

1 deportation. It was not a criminal context. The excessive 2 bail clause appears in the context of an amendment that --

3 QUESTION: It addressed the Eighth Amendment, 4 though, as to how broad it was. And it said expressly that 5 it did not prevent the denial of bail.

6 MR. HORNSTEIN: That's right. Our position --

7 QUESTION: Just as clear as it could be.

8 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, our position is that it is 9 dictum. It relied upon the --

10 QUESTION: Why is it dictum? It was a holding, 11 wasn't it?

12 MR. HORNSTEIN: A holding, and the case was --

13 QUESTION: Well, it was -- one of the submissions
14 was that the Eighth Amendment prevented the denial of bail.

15 MR. HORNSTEIN: The language in the opinion says 16 that they were limiting the holding of the circumstances of 17 that particular case.

18 QUESTION: Well, I know, but if the Eighth -- it
19 could be the circumstances, but if the Eighth Amendment -- 20 but nevertheless in those circumstances the Eighth Amendment 21 permitted the denial of bail.

22 MR. HORNSTEIN: That's right, in a non-criminal --

23 QUESTION: And not just excessive bail, denial of 24 bail. It permitted making a non-capital case non-bailable.

25 MR. HORNSTEIN: In a non-criminal context.

1 QUESTION: Well, nevertheless, it did.

2 MR. HORNSTEIN: Well, we think that is an important
3 distinction. The court there -- there were four vigorous 4 dissents in that case. The court relied on --

5 QUESTION: How many of them took issue with the 6 Eighth Amendment dictum or holding? Only two. Justice
7 Frankfurter --

8 MR. HORNSTEIN: Burton and Black.

9 QUESTION: Burton and Black did. Douglas didn't 10 address it.

11 MR. HORNSTEIN: That may be right.

12 QUESTION: And if there is a difference, if there 13 is a difference between an administrative grant or denial of 14 bail and a judicial grant or denial, as to which do you 15 think the standards would be the higher?

16 MR. HORNSTEIN: I would assume that a stricter 17 standard would -- well, traditionally. I mean, I don't 18 think in a criminal context the individual rights would be 19 subject to more protection than they would be in an 20 administrative, civil situation. If I understand -- I am 21 not sure I understand the question, but --

22 QUESTION: An administrative denial of bail is more 23 readily granted than judicial denial of bail?

24 MR. HORNSTEIN: I would think so. I mean, I would 25 think the standards that protect the individual rights in a

1 civil situation would be lower than those in the criminal 2 situation, especially here where the Eighth Amendment was 3 directed at criminal cases.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

5 Do you have anything further, Mr. Schaaf?

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF TERRY R. SCHAAF, ESQ.,

7 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANT - REBUTTAL

8 MR. SCHAAF: If I may, Your Honor.

9 QUESTION: General, you have argued that Section 9 10 does not create an irrebuttable presumption. Is there any 11 authority for that in Nebraska cases?

12 MR. SCHAAF: I cite you to the concurring opinion 13 of Justice McCowan in Parker versus Roth. Parker versus 14 Roth is the closest case that we have on that point. It is 15 cited in our brief. It is found at 202 Nebraska 850. If 16 you will read Chief Justice Krivosha's remarks, those 17 remarks that have been quoted to you by Mr. Hornstein, I 18 think you will find, first of all, that that is purely 19 dicta, and secondly, if you actually read the language used, 20 I don't think you can conclude from reading that that he is 21 establishing an irrebuttable presumption.

22 Then when you read Justice McCowan's concurring
23 opinion, I think he makes it exceptionally clear that this 24 is not an irrebuttable presumption.

25 Mr. Hornstein would have us believe that this

1 non-capital exception has been historically recognized, that 2 being that there has always been a fundamental 3 constitutional right to bail. We suggest that as early as 4 the Petition of Right in 1628, going through the Habeas 5 Corpus Act of 1679 and the Bill of Rights in England in 6 1689, that those provisions were merely enacted to guarantee 7 the right to bail where it otherwise exists. It was not 8 meant to create a fundamental right to bail. It was being 9 abused in England, and thereafter provision was made so that 10 excessive bail could not be required where it was otherwise 11 permitted.

12           At the time of the adoption of our federal 13 Constitution, this particular provision was well known.
14 Many of the states at that time, at the enactment of the 15 Eighth Amendment, also had statutory rights to bail. The 16 inconsistency could not have been missed by the colonial 17 states at that time. The federal Judiciary Act --

18           QUESTION: What is your view of the applicability 19 of the Eighth Amendment, of this provision of the Eighth 20 Amendment to the states?

21           MR. SCHAAF: Your Honor, we have no quarrel with 22 the concept that that clause of the Eighth Amendment that 23 says excessive bail shall not be required is applicable to 24 the states, but merely the literal language contained 25 therein, excessive bail shall not be required, period,

1 comma, on with the clause. We have no quarrel with that 2 provision as being applicable to the states.

3 QUESTION: Do you think the Fourteenth Amendment, 4 if we were reviewing it from that aspect, imposes any 5 requirement for an individualized determination, apart from 6 the Eighth Amendment considerations?

7 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor, we do not. If in fact 8 it does, however, then we call your attention to the 9 numerous states that have, I believe there are 43 in number, 10 that provide for the withdrawal of the right to bail in 11 capital offenses, yet there is no individualized 12 determination as to the likelihood of their return in many, 13 if not all of those states. If in fact we are required to 14 determine the likelihood of the recommission of the crime, 15 then are we also required to determine the likelihood of 16 non-return?

17 One point that should be brought out here is that 18 the capital differentiation here, the idea that because it 19 is a capital offense persons are not likely to return, in 20 the state of Nebraska alone no one has been executed in the 21 state of Nebraska since 1959. The idea that the very fact 22 that it is a capital offense does not serve much of a 23 deterrent or provide much of a reason for fleeing when we 24 haven't put anyone to death since 1959.

25 QUESTION: How many do you have on Death Row?

1           MR. SCHAAF: I believe we have somewhere between 10
2 and 12 on Death Row at this time.

3           QUESTION: Then what is the significance of your 4 comment?

5           MR. SCHAAF: My comment is that it has not been 6 exercised. The most significant part of that comment is, if 7 we are required to have criteria for determining 8 dangerousness, I think it would also be incumbent, it would 9 follow necessarily then under the same constitutional 10 provision, we are still talking about the same criteria, to 11 have criteria for determining likelihood of return, and I 12 think most states' constitutional provisions would fail if 13 subjected to that analysis if in fact that analysis is 14 adopted by this Court.

15           Once again, we are balancing the rights of society 16 under the Fourteenth or any other federal Amendment with the 17 rights of individuals, and we suggest that at this point in 18 time that it is reasonable to conclude, we can examine -- 19 the best indicator of activity, the best indicator of 20 conduct is past conduct, and in closing, Your Honor, I would 21 like to quote from the remarks that you made in the --

22           QUESTION: May I ask you one question before you 23 give us you final quote, so it won't take it out of order?
24 Do you agree with the suggestion that I get from both of 25 you, or do I correctly understand now that if in this case

1 the trial -- say there had been a bail hearing, and we 2 didn't have the constitutional provision, and the trial
3 judge had determined that this man had been charged a number 4 of serious times with a substantial risk of flight, that he 5 could have prevented him from being released on bail by 6 setting a very high bail that he knew the man could not 7 meet? That would be something that would be done from time
8 to time in Nebraska?

9 MR. SCHAAF: Yes, Your Honor.

10 QUESTION: So that we don't really know, do we, 11 whether, although this man might have formally been entitled 12 to bail, say, $10 million or something, we really don't know 13 apart from this stipulation whether this man would have been 14 released, do we?

15 MR. SCHAAF: No, Your Honor.

16 QUESTION: So we don't know if we have a live case 17 here.

18 MR. SCHAAF: Well, I suspect that any bail to 19 certain defendants could have been excessive bail. That 20 is --

21 QUESTION: So we don't know about this particular 22 man. Really, from what we have heard about it, he has been 23 convicted of four crimes, or three crimes, very serious in 24 nature. The judge might well, apart from this stipulation, 25 have followed a procedure which would have denied him

1 release entirely apart from this constitutional provision.

2 MR. SCHAAF: He couldn't have denied him bail. He 3 very well might have set bail --

4 QUESTION: No, he could have granted him a bail, 5 but denied him release, because he --

6 MR. SCHAAF: Effectively denied him release.

7 QUESTION: Yes.

8 MR. SCHAAF: That is theoretically possible, yes, 9 Your Honor.

10 But in closing, Your Honor, last year in your State 11 of the Judiciary comment, you mentioned that states which -- 12 states and governments exist merely to protect people, and 13 while it may be admirable to attempt to do whatever we can 14 to protect the rights of accused, states fail in their 15 mission if they don't also protect the people of their 16 states from the fear of crime and from crime itself.

17 We suggest in closing that Nebraska has done what 18 it can.

19 QUESTION: Your friend has quoted the same material 20 in support of his position.

21 (General laughter.)

22 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen. The 23 case is submitted.

24 (Whereupon, at 11:06 o'clock a.m., the case in the 25 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
