4

Mr. Guggenheim, I think you may proceed when 5 you're ready now.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF MARTIN GUGGENHEIM, ESQ.

7

ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

8

MR. GUGGENHEIM: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
9 please the Court:

10

The issue before the Court today is whether 11 there is federal habeas corpus jurisdiction to challenge 12 a termination of parental rights order where the 13 challenge is based upon the claim that the state court 14 lacked constitutional power to order the children into 15 state custody because the statute under which it 16 purported to act is federally unconstitutional.

17

A related question is whether the Petitioner,
18 as the mother who gave birth to the children who are now 19 wards of the state and nurtured them through their 20 formative years, has standing to challenge on their 21 behalf the allegedly unconstitutional order in this 22 case.

23

QUESTION: The question is a little narrower,
24 I thought: whether she can do it by way of habeas 25 corpus in a federal court. Is it not that narrow?

1 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes, related to the first
2 question of whether there is federal habeas corpus
3 jurisdiction, whether the Petitioner as the mother 4 before the final order of the Pennsylvania courts has 5 standing in the federal habeas action to bring this case 6 on the children's behalf.

7 This case does not present any question
8 respecting the scope of federal review in such a habeas 9 corpus action or concerning the relitigation of facts or 10 the best interests of the children.

11 The court below, the en banc Third Circuit, 12 ruled in a split decision, two plurality decisions of 13 that court, against Petitioner; four interlocking, 14 interweaving, but we would submit mistaken bases for the 15 conclusion that jurisdiction does not lie in this case.

16 The first is that the mother does not have 17 legal capacity to bring the action on behalf of their 18 children. The second is that the children are not in 19 custody within the meaning of the federal habeas corpus 20 statute. The other two grounds are policy grounds: the 21 fear that according such jurisdiction would necessarily 22 lead to including intra-family disputes, such as child
23 custody disputes in the ordinary separation of a family
24 divorce context; and the fourth, general federalism
25 concerns and implications respecting the appropriate

1 role of a federal court in determining constitutional 2 norms in this area.

3 We submit that there clearly is jurisdiction 4 in this case, that that jurisdiction derives from the 5 literal language and the purpose and meaning of Sections
6 2241 and Section 2254 of Title 28.

7 The first issue for the court is whether the 8 children are in custody within the meaning of the 9 statute. We submit that this Court has resolved that 10 question numerous times in the past. Historically, of 11 course, it was the Act of 1867 which broadly expanded 12 the scope of federal habeas jurisdiction to all persons 13 in custody of the state in violation of the laws, 14 treaties or Constitution of the United States.

15 In 1886 this Court in Wales against Whitney
16 recognized that the term habeas, that the term custody, 17 is a term that applies to a great variety of restraints 18 for which it is used to get relief. Confinement under 19 civil and criminal process may be so relieved. Indeed, 20 wives restrained by husbands, children withheld from 21 their proper parent or guardian, persons held under 22 arbitrary custody by private individuals, may all become 23 proper subjects of habeas corpus.

24 Now, of course the question respecting the 25 definition and breadth of custody does not address

1 solely or conclude finally whether or not federal habeas
2 corpus lies. But it clearly shows that the term 3 "custody" in the statute is easily met by children in 4 this case who are wards of the state.

5 QUESTION: What were you just reading from?

6 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I am reading from the Court's 7 opinion in Wales against Whitney --

8 QUESTION: Is that in the brief?

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: -- at 114 U.S.

10 That exact language is not in the brief, but 11 the quote, the cite to Wales against Whitney is in the 12 brief.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Guggenheim, what was the exact 14 position of the children at the time the habeas corpus
15 action was brought? Were they in the physical custody 16 of the state or were they in a foster home?

17 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Both. They were in the 18 physical custody of foster parents. They were in the 19 legal custody of the state. They were temporary wards
20 of the state prior to the final order of the probate 21 court which made them permanent wards of the state, at 22 least until they might be adopted in the future.

23 QUESTION: Would you say that habeas corpus 24 extended to the recovery of custody of children who were 25 already adopted?

1 MR. GUGGENHEIM: In the brief we make the 2 point that there may well be equitable reasons to limit
3 habeas. I think -- it's a complicated answer. I think 4 that jurisdiction does exist to make the challenge, but 5 I think that a court may determine that the children are 6 no longer in custody in violation of the Constitution.

7 QUESTION: That would be a ruling on the 8 merits.

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No, no, not on the merits.
10 Even on the jurisdiction, after it made an inquiry into 11 where the children were at that moment. And the reason 12 is, Wales against Whitney, of course, as broad as the 13 language is that I've just cited back in 1886 was, if 14 not reversed by this Court in Jones against Cunningham,
15 clearly broadly expanded in Jones against Cunningham, 16 and that the test in the twentieth century has been that 17 a person must be subject to restraints not shared by the 18 public generally.

19 There can be no question that children who are 20 state wards, children who are parentless, children who 21 don't have relatives, children who are subject to the 22 discretion of the state to be moved about within the 23 state's care, as this Court recognized in the Smith 24 against OFFER case, are persons who are restrained of 25 their liberty in a manner which is not shared by the

1 public generally.

2 However, Justice Rehnquist, it may be -- and 3 this case does not raise that question -- that once the 4 children have been adopted they no longer meet the test
5 of Jones against Cunningham, because they are no longer
6 subject to these peculiar restraints. It may also be 7 that they do still meet the test, and I would commend
8 to this Court the Eighth Circuit's opinion in Syrovatka 9 against Erlich, which is cited in the brief, in which 10 that court ruled that children who had been adopted
11 already were not within custody --

12 QUESTION: Mr. Guggenheim, aren't all children 13 subject to restraint?

14 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes, they are. There's no 15 question that they are.

16 QUESTION: Where do you draw the line here? I
17 mean, why is it more restraint to be in a foster home
18 than to be in your own home, on the word "restraint"?

19 MR. GUGGENHEIM: The restraint that is 20 peculiar here is not merely that they're in a foster
21 home. Unfortunately, in this society today that's not 22 as peculiar as it once was. But it is combined with the 23 fact that they are permanent wards of the court. They 24 don't have parents. They aren't related to parents.

25 QUESTION: I'm just working on the word

1 "restraint."

2 MR. GUGGENHEIM: It is the quality of the 3 restraint that one must look to.

4 QUESTION: And what is the difference in the 5 quality?

6 MR. GUGGENHEIM: They are prohibited from 7 visiting --

8 QUESTION: Well, let's start with a one year
9 old child. What is the difference in the restraint in a 10 foster home from the restraint of a one year old child
11 in his own parents' home? I mean, he's not free to go 12 any place, is he?

13 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No. But that's not the only 14 question within the meaning of the term "restraint." As 15 Justice Blackmun for this Court only last week in the 16 Santosky case recognized, children who never get to know 17 their parents are subject to a peculiar, if not 18 restraint, at least deprivation.

19 QUESTION: I don't think he said restraint.

20 MR. GUGGENHEIM: He did not say restraint.
21 That wasn't the issue in that case.

22 QUESTION: Well, that's what I'm talking 23 about.

24 MR. GUGGENHEIM: The restraint here is the 25 prohibition from being visited by one's parents, from

1 being connected by roots with one's home.

2 QUESTION: Well, suppose you don't even know
3 your parents?

4 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, the question then is 5 --

6 QUESTION: I'm just worried about -- I'm 7 worried about you relying on the word "restraint."

8 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, there is an alternative
9 reliance, which is the technical word. The clear word 10 in the statute is "custody." The one year old who is in 11 custody of the court in violation of the Constitution 12 meets the test.

13 QUESTION: Well, on your theory if a husband
14 and a wife, divorced or separated, get into an argument
15 over the children, you could have -- one could bring a 16 habeas case in federal court against the other.

17 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I think not. I think not,
18 and I think that this Court has answered that question 19 several times. In In re Burrus and in Matters against 20 Ryan --

21 QUESTION: Didn't the Court answer it in Wales 22 against Whitney? Since you didn't discuss it in your 23 briefs, I hadn't looked at it until now. What I see 24 there from a quick look is that in order to make a case 25 for habeas in the federal court, you've got to show an

1 actual confinement of some kind.

2 Now, where is the actual confinement here?

3 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, the actual -- but that 4 language follows from the very language which I read.
5 The Court has recognized that there is no satisfactory
6 definition --

7 QUESTION: What page of the opinion was that,
8 if you have it?

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Unfortunately, I'm reading
10 from the Lawyer's Edition volume, and it's 279 of that 11 volume. But --

12 QUESTION: Well, that case was a wholly 13 different case, in any event. It was a naval officer 14 --

15 MR. GUGGENHEIM: That's right, and the Court
16 found he was not confined. This Court has really 17 overruled Wales in Jones against Cunningham. But my 18 point is that where it found the naval officer was not 19 confined, it found that wives and children were 20 confined.

21 The very language used by Representative
22 Lawrence --

23 QUESTION: Well, but this came out of the 24 District of Columbia, didn't it, Wales? I mean, it 25 didn't rely on the habeas statute of 1867.

1 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No, it did not.

2 QUESTION: So it's a totally different
3 analysis. The District of Columbia had full municipal 4 jurisdiction and this Court simply sat to review its 5 decision.

6 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I'm not relying on the Wales 7 case to indicate that that naval officer was -- had his 8 rights violated or vindicated, but only that this Court 9 has recognized in Jones against Cunningham again, that 10 at the common law both in English and American usage the 11 term "custody" -- and I must emphasize that that's not 12 dispositive of this case, but only that the term
13 "custody" has always included children being held 14 wrongfully by third parties.

15 QUESTION: Do you think Congress in 1967
16 intended to give the federal courts authority to review 17 court custody degrees?

18 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Not ordinary court custody
19 decrees, because -- but yes, I do think Congress gave 20 the federal courts authority to review this case. As 21 this Court recognized in Ex parte McArdle and again in 22 cases within the last two decades, the breadth of 23 federal habeas corpus was expanded by the 1867 Act as 24 far as constitutionally permissible to include -- and 25 what's the test? -- all persons held in custody in

1 violation of the Constitution, laws and treaties of the 2 United States.

3 What -- and this now answers both your 4 question, Justice Rehnquist, and Chief Justice Burger's 5 question. Ordinary court custody decrees in the 6 ordinary intra-family dispute are not cognizable under 7 this statute, not because the children are not in 8 custody within the meaning of the law, but because the 9 children are not in custody in violation of the 10 Constitution.

11 That's what this Court held in In re Burrus
12 and that's what this Court held in Matters against 13 Ryan. In both cases, the Court recognized plainly that 14 the custody requirement was met. That's not what was 15 lacking.

16 But there is within the Jones against 17 Cunningham test yet another reason to conclude that 18 children who are subject to one parent rather than 19 another's custody is not in custody -- are not in 20 custody within the meaning of the statute, because of 21 the Jones test, that they are not subject to restraints 22 not shared by the public generally.

23 Children must live with one or another of 24 their parents. If one parent to the dispute died, the 25 other parent would get custody automatically, and

1 certainly the children would be hard-pressed to claim
2 that the custody is in violation of the Constitution.

3 This is entirely different from court wards,
4 as these children are, entirely different.

5 QUESTION: Well, what if there were an 6 allegation that the custody decree were entered without 7 due process of law?

8 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, the kind of due process
9 of law that may raise the question might be the Culco 10 type case, where the court actually did not have 11 jurisdiction. I can see that that --

12 QUESTION: Or no fair hearing?

13 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, no fair hearing -- we 14 have the Court's analysis in the Flagg Brothers case, 15 where the Court recognized that private parties acting 16 pursuant to a statute -- every state has a statute that 17 says --

18 QUESTION: I'm talking about a judicial 19 proceeding which ends up with awarding a child to one 20 parent or the other, and the one who didn't get the 21 child says that the proceeding was conducted in 22 violation of the United States Constitution.

23 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Several federal courts have 24 allowed that jurisdiction, have found jurisdiction
25 exists in such a case, but summarily find that the claim

1 is frivolous. In almost every case --

2 QUESTION: What I'm trying to find out is,
3 does the theory of your case encompass that claim?

4 MR. GUGGENHEIM: The Court could interpret the 5 Jones against Cunningham test of restraints not shared 6 by the public generally to find that even where -- and 7 the difference is that we're not focusing on the in 8 violation of the Constitution clause. Let's go back to 9 the custody. Maybe they're not in custody within the 10 meaning of the federal statute, because the Court in 11 Jones defined that test in a way that fits very nicely 12 with this case.

13 If a colorable claim were made that they are 14 something in violation of the Constitution, I suppose 15 that's for a federal court to determine. But there are 16 very few types --

17 QUESTION: Well, take -- suppose in this very 18 case this had proceeded all the way to an adoption, but 19 determination of rights, in violation of what we held 20 last week in Santosky, was based on a preponderance 21 rather than a clear and convincing evidence test. Would 22 habeas lie in that case, if the adoption now has been 23 completed? It's gone -- here I gather it's pending 24 adoption, isn't it?

25 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes. The same question has

1 already been posed, and I think the answer is a hedged
2 answer: maybe, maybe not. The Eight Circuit in 3 Syrovatka said, we're going to find that the parents
4 waited too long to bring the case, the children are no 5 longer -- the case cannot be brought.

6 I think that the answer may be, because the 7 custody is of a very different type, the answer may well 8 be no.

9 QUESTION: In the -- would a 1983 suit lie in 10 that circumstance?

11 MR. GUGGENHEIM: We don't know, except that 12 Allen against McCurry --

13 QUESTION: It's a civil suit for violation -- 14 it's a civil suit for violation of constitutional 15 rights, if the termination was on the basis of 16 preponderance, rather than clear and convincing.

17 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, if the parents are 18 seeking the return of their children --

19 QUESTION: Suppose they're not. They want 20 damages.

21 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Prizer might require --
22 Prizer against Rodriguez might require --

23 QUESTION: That involved prisoners.

24 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, but if fact or duration
25 of custody was being challenged, is the test. We don't

1 know if it only involved prisoners. We certainly know
2 it did involve prisoners. There is a Prizer box here
3 that may require 1983 not to be used, that may require 4 habeas to be used.

5 But if we get beyond that, if the parents sued
6 for damages only, habeas corpus is the inappropriate
7 remedy. Habeas is our ideal remedy, Congressionally 8 imposed on the federal courts to change custody. But 9 Allen against McCurry is involved, too, because this 10 Court has ruled that res judicata and collateral
11 estoppel are applicable in Section 1983 cases.

12 In a case like the one before the Court today, 13 the issues were fully exhausted in the state court.
14 Indeed, we're proud of that. Within the framework of 15 the federal habeas law, that's what we're supposed to 16 do.

17 QUESTION: What is the conditional custody of 18 these children that brings it within the Jones against 19 Cunningham, where you had a prisoner who was paroled 20 from prison? What's the relevance of that case to your 21 case?

22 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I might turn the question
23 around and ask, how could we seriously claim that a 24 person who is merely on parole, that periodically has to 25 make a visit with a parole officer -- or if we move on

1 to Carafas against LaVallee or the other cases where 2 this Court has broadly expanded the term "custody" -- in 3 Strait against Laird, the reservist who has to report
4 for some future armed services duty.

5 In Carafas the Court found that the 6 disabilities of engaging in a type of business, of 7 voting, of serving as a labor official or a juror was a 8 sufficient restraint. The answer is, how are the 9 children restrained of their liberty: the state and not 10 the parent is empowered to consent to their marriage by 11 the statute. 23 Consolidated Pennsylvania Laws, Section 12 2521, provides that the parent -- that the state and not 13 the parent shall consent to the enlistment in the armed 14 forces, that the state and not the parent shall consent
15 to the major medical, psychiatric and surgical 16 treatment, and that the state and not the parent shall 17 exercise such other authority concerning the child as a 18 natural parent should exercise.

19 In short, as Justice Marshall indicated, it is 20 the totality of restraint, of conditions on the child
21 imposed by the state, which makes that person's liberty 22 different from that which the public shares generally, 23 even other children.

24 QUESTION: There's one other difference, that 25 in all of the cases you mentioned, including Jones, the 1 party involved wanted the change.

2 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes, that's a difference.

3 But children may not waive constitutional rights. We 4 know that from In re Gault. We know that from a host of 5 cases. Parham against J.R. is certainly an excellent 6 example.

7 QUESTION: You can go in any book and pull out 8 little statements like that.

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, the point, Justice
10 Marshall, is that we don't give children -- in a case
11 like Gilmore against Utah, we allowed the mother to come
12 to this Court and say --

13 QUESTION: There's a lot of difference between 14 the death penalty and child custody.

15 MR. GUGGENHEIM: This has been described as 16 the death penalty of parents. As this Court recognized
17 last week in Santosky, there are few more irreversible 18 or formidable actions the state can take than the 19 permanent destruction --

20 QUESTION: Well, murder is one.

21 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I agree, Your Honor.

22 QUESTION: I hope you do.

23 MR. GUGGENHEIM: And this Court recognized
24 that in Gilmore the reason the mother could not come 25 forward is because, as a knowing and intelligent adult,

1 Mr. Gilmore waived his constitutional rights. I suggest 2 it would be standing this Court's jurisprudence on its 3 head --

4 QUESTION: You compare that case with this,
5 and then we'll start comparing rocks with peanuts.

6 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I am only making the analogy
7 to the limited extent that this Court has never 8 recognized in its jurisprudence the principle that 9 children who are under the age of -- at least not yet
10 mature minors, in the Baird and Bellotti, and Planned
11 Parenthood and Danforth context -- have the discretion 12 to waive constitutional rights on their own.

13 It is the presumption of the parent and child 14 identity of interest that this case goes to. If the 15 mother's rights were permanently severed
16 unconstitutionally, she is the one to speak for them 17 because of this Court's presumption of identity of 18 interests. To presume that that presumption does not 19 continue to exist --

20 QUESTION: Then she can sue under 1983, can't 21 she?

22 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Not after Allen against 23 McCurry. And probably -- that's the interesting thing, 24 that this Court in Moore against Sims said, don't come
25 into court beforehand. In Allen against McCurry it

1 said, you can't come in afterwards, because of 2 collateral estoppel effect.

3 QUESTION: Maybe we wanted you to litigate in 4 the state courts.

5 MR. GUGGENHEIM: We did, Your Honor. That's 6 exactly what Congress wants.

7 QUESTION: I mean, you didn't petition for 8 certiorari here.

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: We did.

10 QUESTION: Was it denied?

11 MR. GUGGENHEIM: With three Justices
12 dissenting, and if Justice --

13 QUESTION: Why didn't you appeal?

14 MR. GUGGENHEIM: We didn't appeal for a couple 15 of reasons. The first is, we don't have to. We know
16 that. Brown against Allen and many cases have indicated 17 that you never have to exercise the appeal, even though 18 it exists.

19 The second is that the risk that this Court
20 would, in the parlance of this Court, DWFSQ without full 21 consideration of the case was a risk that was 22 concerning. But beyond that, there was the concern for 23 an as-applied and a facial attack of the statute that, 24 frankly confused me as the attorney in whether a full 25 appeal existed or whether it should be a hybrid appeal

1 and cert petition. And so the conservative route taken 2 was to file the certiorari petition.

3 QUESTION: You took your risk on the 4 certiorari and lost.

5 MR. GUGGENHEIM: We lost, but never made clear 6 to us that that was the final resolution of the matter, 7 and unclear to me that it was clear to any Justice of 8 this Court, when only three Justices voted to hear the 9 case. Indeed, Justice White only the next -- later that 10 same term, in a case cited in the brief, Brown
11 Transportation Corp. against Atcon, cited this very case
12 as an example of this Court's overburdened docket,
13 something that Justice --

14 QUESTION: Well, along with a lot of other 15 cases.

16 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Along with a lot of other 17 cases. But it goes to this policy question.

18 And the answer to Justice Blackmun's
19 suggestion that we took our chance and lost is, does 20 this Court want to make as a matter of policy that the 21 only avenue of federal review ever will be an appeal to 22 this Court?

23 Justice White in this very case --

24 QUESTION: Oh, I didn't imply that by any 25 means.

1 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, when you say we took 2 our chances and lost --

3 QUESTION: Well, sure.

4 MR. GUGGENHEIM: We took our chances and 5 didn't get review then, and now we're still struggling.

6 QUESTION: It's a lot easier, I would think,
7 to get a note of probable jurisdiction here than to get 8 a grant of certiorari.

9 Well, let me ask a practical question. This 10 probably has nothing to do with your case, but your 11 client surrendered these three boys eleven years ago?

12 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes.

13 QUESTION: And do we know what they would want 14 to do at this point?

15 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No, we don't. But we know
16 that Frank is now 18 and unless a federal court 17 reinstates his parental rights he's going to be, if we 18 know of a Tale of Two Cities, a stateless person. He is 19 an orphan made only by the state for no good purpose.
20 We don't know.

21 QUESTION: Well, under Pennsylvania law is he 22 an adult?

23 MR. GUGGENHEIM: He's probably an adult now.
24 But certainly under the collateral consequences
25 doctrine, he still has a colorable action in this Court,

1 in a federal court.

2 We don't know their views, but that is, I
3 think to answer your suggestion, irrelevant to the 4 limited point that that's the merits.

5 QUESTION: Under state law would your client
6 have the right to custody of him after age 18?

7 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No.

8 QUESTION: And the other two are how old?

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: 16 and 12. And the oldest 10 boy was in four different foster homes, another was in 11 three, and one was in only one.

12 This Court in a variety of types of cases has 13 recognized that habeas jurisdiction exists in other than 14 the criminal context, in other than the prisoner 15 context. This is clearly one where the Court should 16 accept jurisdiction. It is not for the Court in policy 17 grounds to consider whether or not to hear a case.

18 As Justice Brennan in the Fair Assessment in 19 Real Estate Association recognized, this Court through 20 policy and comity grounds may delay, but never deny, 21 permanent review. And in the Moore against Sims and 22 Allen against McCurry problem, this is the last 23 possibility for federal review at any level other than 24 appeal in this Court. And we submit that there are 25 sound reasons for allowing it in this way.

1 If there are no further questions, I'll 2 reserve the remainder of my time for rebuttal.

3 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

4 Mr. Greevy?

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CHARLES F. GREEVY, III, ESQ.

6 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

7 MR. GREEVY: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please
8 the Court:

9 As Justice Adams stated in his concurring
10 opinion in the Third Circuit, this present appeal
11 compounds the delicate nature of parent-child
12 relationship with the intricacies of federal-state court 13 comity. I might add to that also the historic statutory 14 and present decisional -- decisional balance of federal 15 habeas corpus.

16 Initially, I'd like to address several of the 17 questions or thoughts addressed by my brother Mr.
18 Guggenheim. The question was asked as far as Frank's 19 status now. The status of Frank now, who was 18 this 20 past December, he can consent to his own adoption now 21 without the consent of his parent, a right which the 22 court gave six years ago when they took the parental 23 rights from Marjorie Lehman.

24 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Could he consent to the 25 adoption by his mother?

1 MR. GREEVY: I wouldn't know why he could not 2 do that, Your Honor. Certainly he could consent to the 3 adoption by his mother.

4 The second question was as far as a direct 5 appeal. The basic foundation that Mr. Guggenheim is 6 seeking is a hearing again on the merits in this 7 matter. I would submit to the Court that if he indeed
8 wanted a hearing on the merits, he had that right back 9 in January of 1978 by pursuing his right to a direct 10 appeal to this Court.

11 He gave up that right. In fact, he 12 acknowledged in the Third Circuit that it was a 13 strategic decision of theirs to not seek a direct 14 appeal. It was sort of taking a second -- getting a 15 chance at a second bite at the apple. They were going 16 to try cert. If that didn't prevail, then they would 17 file the habeas corpus.

18 The question could be raised whether or not 19 that same strategy might have been looked to in the 20 Santosky case. As I see it there, the New York court 21 definitely did rule on the constitutional issue. I'm 22 wondering whether he was looking for a second bite at 23 the apple in Santosky if this Court had not accepted 24 cert.

25 Of the seven Circuit Courts of Appeals who

1 have addressed this jurisdictional issue directly, five 2 have directly found no jurisdiction, those being: the 3 First Circuit in the Sylvander case; the Third Circuit
4 obviously in this Lehman case; the Sixth Circuit in Anh
5 versus Levi; the Eighth Circuit in Syrovatka versus 6 Erlich; and the Fourth Circuit in the Doe versus Doe.

7 All of these above cases involved termination
8 and adoption matters. One circuit has vacillated, that 9 being the Ninth Circuit in the Yen versus Kissinger.
10 Where they did find jurisdiction where the federal 11 government was involved, where it involved Vietnamese 12 children who were here on what was known as a parole
13 status, the Tree Top versus Smith case in the Ninth 14 Circuit found no jurisdiction in an adoption case.

15 One Circuit, the Fifth, has said basically 16 okay in custody matters. Indeed, one of those is the 17 pending petition in this Court in the Chastain versus 18 Davis case, which also addressed the Lassiter issue of 19 lack of representation.

20 Mr. Guggenheim noted the question of 21 standing. I believe it's a very important issue for the 22 Court to look to. Here we have Marjorie Lehman, who has 23 alleged to be filing her petition as the next friend.

24 Goldstein in his book "Beyond the Best 25 Interest of the Child" states that a parent standing in

1 court as the real party -- a parent standing in court is 2 the real party in interest; however, they're liable to 3 be defeated by their own unfitness, and the demand from 4 society is that the child's interests prevail over the 5 natural rights of an unworthy parent.

6 Certainly children have a right to a number of 7 things --

8 QUESTION: But as I understand your law, you
9 don't really require a finding of unworthiness, do you?

10 MR. GREEVY: No, we do not. We --

11 QUESTION: So how does this line of cases --

12 MR. GREEVY: -- by clear and convincing 13 evidence had to show that there was an incapacity and 14 that incapacity would not be remedied.

15 Children require several things. They require 16 security, they require stability long-term and of a 17 continuous nature, and includes also physical care,
18 adequate food, shelter and clothing, emotional security, 19 and certainly sound intellectual and perhaps even 20 religious training.

21 The state has the responsibility to assure and 22 oversee these various rights of a child. As stated in 23 Santosky, a state's goal is to provide the child with a 24 permanent home.

25 A child has no voice in the continuing -- the

1 continuation of litigation in a termination matter.
2 Before termination there is an interest that the parent
3 and child, and even the state, shares --

4 QUESTION: Well, may I ask, does that mean,
5 Mr. Greevy, that -- here, of course, it's a permanent 6 termination. Therefore you say that the parent can't 7 assert any rights for the children. Would that be true 8 if it were only a temporary custody, she were deprived 9 temporarily of custody? Would she have standing then?

10 MR. GREEVY: Your Honor, certainly she would 11 have standing --

12 QUESTION: She would?

13 MR. GREEVY: -- because she would stand in the 14 stead of a natural parent at that point. That natural 15 parent would have that right. Here there was a decision 16 by the court --

17 QUESTION: So you make the distinction -- you
18 make the distinction, based on the fact that here there 19 was a permanent termination of parental rights?

20 MR. GREEVY: That is correct.

21 After grounds for termination are established 22 under state law, the child has a primary interest in not 23 only stability, but also finality of the litigation, and 24 the state has that same right in the well-being of the 25 child, looking not only to physical and emotional

1 well-being, but perhaps even efforts to foster good 2 citizens.

3 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Greevy, I gather that 4 your brother is arguing that if we decide this on the 5 basis of standing and say that she has none, then we've 6 assumed the validity of the very state court
7 adjudication that they're challenging.

8 MR. GREEVY: That is correct, Your Honor.

9 QUESTION: How do you answer that?

10 MR. GREEVY: I think that it brings up a 11 question that certainly after a termination there's a 12 realignment of interests, and in a real sense perhaps a 13 child needs a voice in that termination decision. The 14 argument we would make is that in delinquency cases, 15 which certainly the Court has recognized through habeas 16 corpus, the parent and the child would share an interest 17 either in a release from probation or release from even 18 the supervision of a probation officer, or in an extreme 19 case the child being held in an institution.

20 The child's need of continuity conflicts with 21 this absence of finality when a termination is 22 questioned and, as in this case, appealed.

23 Now, in Pennsylvania under the new 1980
24 statute representation through a guardian ad litem is 25 given to a child in an involuntary termination matter.

1 Heretofore, and certainly in this case, the agency was 2 overseeing the interests of the child in stability and a 3 long-term foster care.

4 The second question would deal, of course,
5 directly with habeas corpus. The stamp of criminal 6 sanctions certainly pervades the overwhelming majority 7 of habeas corpus petitions which are filed in the 8 federal courts. Indeed, Attorney General William French
9 Smith noted that last year alone there were 7800 habeas 10 petitions filed in the federal courts.

11 These issues in regards to state criminal 12 matters indicate the judicial and social perception of 13 the scope of the great writ, sweeps aside, of course, 14 the doctrine of res judicata, with no restriction or 15 perhaps even a statute of limitation in which the 16 petition can be filed. The statute looks to the 17 protection of individuals against the erosion of their 18 private rights. Certainly, it provides relief from 19 unlawful custody, as was noted in the several criminal 20 cases discussed by Mr. Guggenheim.

21 Simply stated, a single federal judge can 22 overturn the highest court of a state as it relates to 23 constitutional issues and the direct facts of the case.
24 The question is whether the restraints are suffered by 25 the public generally, which was discussed in the Hensley

1 case.

2 Congress found it appropriate to tailor this 3 present habeas corpus statute to meet an existing need
4 and concern back in 1867. It can be justifiably argued 5 that a major shifting in interpretation such as 6 advocated by Marjorie Lehman perhaps should await some 7 Congressional thought on the matter. Indeed, I think 8 there's been some suggestions made by Attorney General
9 Smith that the habeas corpus area should be approached
10 and discussed by Congress and decided what direction 11 they opt for here in our common age.

12 Justices Brennan, Marshall and O'Connor in the 13 Fair Assessment case talked about that, subject only to 14 constitutional restraints, Congress exclusively 15 determines the jurisdiction of federal courts. The 16 Pennsylvania statute was found not -- was found 17 constitutional back in 1978, and that has been embedded 18 in the law since.

19 Simply put, the wrongful restraint which is 20 talked about in habeas corpus is simply not the 21 circumstance when we're dealing with rights termination 22 matters. Parents' interests remain most strong in 23 preserving the family relationship after termination.
24 As we've talked, the child's right is in an end to that 25 litigation, the right to then be accepted into a stable

1 home.

2 The Lehman boys have stood in much the same
3 status as other children. They are looking to -- they 4 are subject, of course, to parental guidance, care, 5 control, which is necessary for their physical or mental 6 well-being.

7 Habeas corpus by its very nature is intrusive
8 in nature in a dual system of state and federal courts 9 and is uninhibited by traditional rules of finality and 10 federalism, and should be confined to cases of special 11 urgency, such as Hensley talked.

12 QUESTION: Mr. General Greevy, may I ask you a 13 question about -- if you're correct that the child is -- 14 that there's no custody here and therefore the habeas 15 corpus statute does not apply, what will your view be as 16 to the availability of a 1983 action?

17 MR. GREEVY: I believe that that is a proper 18 remedy here. That was discussed very thoroughly by 19 Justice Garth in the Third Circuit. Certainly it would 20 require a choice of courts. They would have to 21 determine that the constitutional issues would be 22 reserved for the 1983 and perhaps not submitted in the 23 state court through their procedures.

24 So it does not throw the litigant out of 25 court. It simply makes them --

1 QUESTION: You would not take the position
2 there's no such remedy. At least your view is 1983 is 3 definitely available?

4 MR. GREEVY: That would be my view.

5 QUESTION: If it is not time-barred.

6 MR. GREEVY: Excuse me?

7 QUESTION: If it is not time-barred.

8 MR. GREEVY: If it is not time-barred, that is 9 correct. Here certainly there was -- the essence of 10 time was looked at here, that they immediately upon the 11 Pennsylvania Supreme Court decision filed the writ of 12 certiorari within the time limitation. But 1983 could 13 have been pursued after an appeal.

14 Certainly they had contested all the 15 constitutional issues from the orphans court on up.

16 QUESTION: What makes you think -- if it had 17 been appealed in the state system and the judgment
18 affirmed, why wouldn't it be res judicata in a 1983 19 suit?

20 MR. GREEVY: It would, because the same issues 21 would be raised. They have raised the --

22 QUESTION: Well, it wouldn't be available, 23 then. 1983 wouldn't.

24 MR. GREEVY: 1983 would not be, in this 25 particular case.

1 QUESTION: Did you mean it was a choice of 2 remedies at the outset?

3 MR. GREEVY: It was a choice of remedies that 4 they had back --

5 QUESTION: Oh, I see.

6 QUESTION: They made their choice and that 7 foreclosed 1983.

8 MR. GREEVY: That foreclosed the 1983. It
9 certainly would not have foreclosed the direct appeal 10 which they could have pursued.

11 QUESTION: Well, they didn't choose the remedy
12 in the sense of initiating the original proceeding. You 13 chose to bring --

14 MR. GREEVY: We chose that, that is correct.

15 QUESTION: And are you suggesting that they 16 could have -- could they or could they not, in your 17 view, have filed a 1983 case before they appealed?
18 Could they have proceeded simultaneously with the two?

19 MR. GREEVY: It would be my position that they 20 could not have, unless they had another constitutional 21 issue that they were going to raise against the 22 Pennsylvania statute.

23 QUESTION: Well, then the only way they could 24 rely on 1983, if I understand you correctly, is to limit 25 all factual defenses and merely put their entire case on

1 the claim that the statute was unconstitutional.

2 MR. GREEVY: That is correct.

3 QUESTION: But if they're not willing to take 4 that chance, then they really had no federal remedy, 5 under your view.

6 MR. GREEVY: Other than the direct appeal to 7 this Court.

8 QUESTION: Right, yes. So really, then, the 9 answer is in your view 1983 wouldn't really be an 10 adequate remedy.

11 MR. GREEVY: Remedy in this matter --

12 QUESTION: No.

13 MR. GREEVY: -- it would not be.

14 QUESTION: Certainly in a number of cases, 15 such as Huffman against Pursue and Younger against 16 Harris, we've held that it's a perfectly adequate 17 federal remedy to have the right, ultimate right of 18 review here from a state proceeding.

19 MR. GREEVY: That is correct.

20 Another issue raised by Mr. Guggenheim is that 21 the granting of jurisdiction under the habeas corpus 22 would not open the gates to a full range of other 23 cases. It is my strong belief that it would open the 24 case for private litigants in particular fact 25 circumstances where the federal court would be looking

1 to constitutional issues, that we would have private 2 litigating parties continuing to fight while there was 3 still a forum that would hear their argument, which is 4 easily borne out in this Lehman matter.

5 Certainly, a core issue as recognized by the 6 Third Circuit and herein would be the question of 7 federal-court relationships. As recognized this term, 8 the principle of comity refers to the proper respect for 9 state functions that organs of the national government, 10 most particularly the federal states, are expected to 11 demonstrate in the exercise of their own legitimate 12 powers.

13 Justice Rehnquist last week in Santosky stated
14 that family law has been left to the states since time 15 immemorial, and not without good reason.

16 QUESTION: Well, you're not apt to get very 17 far if you rely on dissenting opinions.

18 (Laughter.)

19 MR. GREEVY: But certainly it -- but note, 20 Your Honor, that --

21 QUESTION: It depends on whose dissent.

22 (Laughter.)

23 MR. GREEVY: The issues here certainly are 24 very close, and certainly it is a matter that the Court 25 has to look to. Certainly, it's been often cited that

1 the whole subject of domestic relations belongs with the 2 state courts. They have the historic -- they've 3 historically decided the issues, they've developed 4 well-known expertise, and they have a strong interest in 5 disposing of the issues.

6 I think that Santosky does note --

7 QUESTION: Then you want Santosky overruled?

8 MR. GREEVY: I'm not saying that it should be 9 overruled. In fact, Your Honor, I was very happy to see 10 that the Lehman case was cited in the Santosky
11 decision. I believe that what Santosky does, does state 12 to us, is that this Court has given some guidelines.
13 They've indicated that there is concern when the family
14 is involved, not only natural parents but foster
15 parents.

16 You said last term in Lassiter that the 17 question of lawyers can be decided on a case by case, 18 but very firmly said that when you're looking to the 19 burden of proof look to clear and convincing, put the 20 presumption with the parents.

21 Pennsylvania has used the clear and 22 convincing. Examination of the -- even the orphans 23 court decision back in June of '76, Judge Raupt very 24 strongly stated that he was -- in fact, the only case
25 cited at the case is a case cited in my brief, In re

1 Geiger, which holds the clear and convincing burden 2 necessary.

3 Now that this Court has spoken to these issues
4 regarding family matters, I believe that this Court can 5 step back, perhaps is the word, and let the states
6 administer these cases, see how the states do with it.
7 There is certainly an overview by this Court, not only 8 through the direct appeal but through 1983 in 9 appropriate circumstances.

10 Let's give the states a chance to determine 11 how they are going to administer their statutes. Don't 12 impose the intrusive nature of habeas corpus into this 13 area.

14 I'd like to conclude that if this case was 15 ripe for decision on its merits, then it was in 1978
16 when this Petitioner chose not to exercise her direct 17 right of appeal. She should not be given a second bite 18 at that apple through the collateral remedy by 19 establishing federal habeas corpus jurisdiction.

20 This Court has the opportunity to speak very 21 firmly to the balancing of parental and child interests
22 in this matter by retaining the present basis of habeas
23 corpus jurisdiction. Affirmation of the Third Circuit 24 decision will promote finality and stability in the 25 realm of children's rights.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Greevy, I suppose you can lose
2 on the custody argument and still win this case, 3 couldn't you? That is, if the Court were to assume 4 there was habeas corpus jurisdiction, you could still 5 win the case?

6 MR. GREEVY: In what manner, Your Honor?

7 QUESTION: Well, as a matter of --

8 MR. GREEVY: Yes, we could. Custody is one of 9 the issues here. But this Court can decide that, 10 regardless of the literal interpretation of this 11 statute, that there are other reasons why this Court 12 should refrain from extending the habeas corpus 13 statute.

14 QUESTION: Prudential reasons.

15 MR. GREEVY: Right. Policy, as Mr. Guggenheim 16 noted.

17 The Court can help to guard against the 18 preservation of a child's uneasy status quo and the 19 limbo of foster care. We submit that, based upon the 20 very thorough and strongly held First and Third Circuit 21 positions, this Court should reject this extension of 22 habeas corpus statutes into the parental rights 23 termination area of family law, which is controlled and 24 administered by the states.

25 QUESTION: Mr. Greevy, Justice Blackmun's

1 question prompts me to ask you this. I guess you have 2 another defense, even though you lost here, on the 3 ground that the statute is in fact constitutional. So
4 if we ruled against you and sent the case back, I 5 suppose it's going to start it's way back up on the 6 basic constitutional issue.

7 So that I guess maybe the children will all be 8 in their thirties by the time --

9 MR. GREEVY: I would believe so, Your Honor.
10 Certainly the youngest boy, Mark, was less than one year
11 of age when this case -- when he was put into a foster 12 home. He was a little over the age of seven when the 13 court decided that he could be adopted by his foster
14 parents.

15 Certainly you've noted the exhibit attached to 16 my brief, where there was discussion as far as 17 visitation with these children pending the decision in 18 the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. Therein, all three boys 19 expressed a desire not to visit. Indeed, the two 20 youngest boys, Mark and William, were very anxious for 21 an adoption by their foster parents.

22 This interest and this desire has continued to 23 the present time. Certainly, as discussed initially,
24 Frank is too old at this point. In fact, the middle boy 25 has been in the same foster home since the day he was

1 put into foster care. And this is the real meaning of 2 the denial of federal habeas corpus, and that's to get 3 children like William and Mark and Frank Lehman out of 4 the limbo of foster care and into stable continuity and 5 stable homes.

6 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you.

7 Do you have anything further, Mr. Guggenheim?
8 You have two minutes remaining.

9 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF MARTIN GUGGENHEIM, ESQ.,

10 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

11 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Thank you.

12 This case is the paradigm of state action.
13 It's state-initiated proceedings which result in ongoing 14 state custody. It may be that the prudential concern of 15 this Court is in defining custody so it does not include
16 people already adopted. But there are strong policy 17 reasons for a boy like Frank, whose rights were 18 terminated for no reason, who never was going to be 19 adopted and never has been adopted, to have the 20 opportunity for federal review at some level.

21 This Court, however, has never countenanced

22 --

23 QUESTION: He had it, did he not, in '78?

24 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Had what?

25 QUESTION: Direct appeal here.

1 MR. GUGGENHEIM: He had the opportunity for it
2 and it was only a cert petition.

3 QUESTION: For strategic reasons, you decided 4 to forego that.

5 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Basically, and for the 6 complication that there was an as-applied and a facial 7 attack in the case, and only one of them would be 8 cognizable on direct appeal.

9 This is a challenge to the constitutionality 10 of a state statute. It is, in Justice Powell's words in 11 Stone against Powell, going to the heart of guilt or 12 innocence. It's not an extra question. In Justice 13 Stevens' words in Rose against Lundy, this is his fourth 14 kind of habeas claim. It goes to the validity of the 15 judgment.

16 This Court has never countenanced the denial 17 of Congressionally imposed jurisdiction for policy or 18 prudential reasons. Stone is the limit of this Court 19 interpreting what the meaning of "in violation of the 20 Constitution" was, to say that the illegal search didn't 21 meet that test. But it has never gone beyond that.

22 And finally, this Court -- the court below, 23 the majority of the Third Circuit judges believed that 24 federal review was appropriate and was necessary, but 25 peculiarly, thought it was better to reserve the federal

1 issues, contrary to Congress' desire of exhaustion in 2 the England type context, to reserve; in the first 3 place, litigate through the state court, then go into 4 federal court in 1983 and say the statute's 5 unconstitutional.

6 I submit that is not respecting basic 7 principles of comity. That is showing a greater 8 disregard for the intelligence and concern of state 9 judges than to require, as the habeas statute does, full 10 exhaustion of the remedies in the first place.

11 And finally, although I won't refer to a 12 dissent to rely on it solely, all of the Justices of 13 this Court in the Santosky case recognized that federal 14 courts should not and may not blink at unconstitutional
15 statutes. We submit that this is one and that this 16 Court should remand to the federal court for a full 17 hearing.

18 Thank you.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

20 The case is submitted. We'll resume at 1:00
21 o'clock with California against Grace Brethren Church.

22 (Whereupon, at 11:58 p.m., the case in the 23 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
