ORAL ARGUMENT OF C. CLARK HODGSON, JR., ESQ.,

8

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

9

MR. HODGSON: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please 10 the Court, my client's petition to this Court raises for 11 review the question of whether or not taxpayers who are 12 unable to meet the criteria of Flast against Cohen and any 13 other Article III decision of this Court will nonetheless be 14 able to challenge the transfer of federal surplus property.

This, in short, is an Article III case. It is not 16 an establishment clause case. The constitutional and 17 statutory context is outlined by Article IV, Section 3, 18 Clause 2 of the Constitution, which is called the property 19 clause. Under that clause Congress has the power to dispose 20 of territory or other property belonging to the United 21 States. The Federal Property and Administrative Services
22 Act of 1949 was enacted pursuant to that power, and creates 23 a comprehensive program for federal property disposal, 24 particularly property which is surplus, that is, property no
25 longer needed by the United States.

1 The statute confers upon agencies of the executive 2 branch a variety of options for property disposal, including 3 the sale or lease to health or educational institutions.
4 Sale may be for cash, but the Act requires that the 5 Secretary consider any public benefit accruing to the United 6 States as a result of the sale, and an educational 7 institution may be entitled to a reduction in the purchase 8 price computed on the basis of benefits which may accrue to 9 the United States for the use of the property by that 10 institution. The regulations refer to that reduction as a 11 public benefit allowance.

12 Now, for the first time in the 32-year history of 13 this Act, a program over which Congress has given exclusive 14 if not plenary power under Article IV is subject to attack 15 and the intervention of the judicial process.

16 This particular transfer, the Valley Forge General
17 Hospital, originally about a 181 acre tract slightly outside 18 the city of Philadelphia, was acquired by the government in 19 1942. It served the military as a hospital facility for 20 nearly 30 years. In 1974, by order of the Secretary of 21 Defense, the facility was closed. The Secretary states
22 reasons of declining work force and economy as the reasons 23 for the closure of the facility.

24 As is required by the Federal Property and 25 Administrative Services Act, the following four steps took

1 place. First, the military departments determined that it
2 was excess to their needs and the needs of the United States
3 Coast Guard. Secondly, Congressional clearance was sought
4 and obtained from the Armed Services Committee of both 5 Houses. Thirdly, the General Services Administration, after 6 notifying all other Federal agencies and all other branches 7 of the government of the availability of this facility, 8 reported that there was no need, and it was declared under 9 the statute surplus to the needs of the federal government.

10 Finally, it was assigned to the Secretary of the 11 Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for disposition
12 to a health or educational institution. My client, Valley 13 Forge Christian College, applied for a portion of the tract, 14 and was ultimately selected to receive 77 acres and some 15 personal property. The value of the surplus facility was 16 $577,000.

17 The government, in connection with this sale, 18 allowed a 100 percent public benefit allowance based in part 19 upon my client's promises and representations to continue 20 the broadening of its offerings in the arts and humanities 21 and otherwise strengthen its academic position, conferring 22 benefits upon members of the public.

23 In August of 1976, a deed was executed by the 24 government transferring the real estate to my client. The 25 deed included restrictive covenants which forbid the college

1 from utilizing the property for anything other than 2 educational purposes and some other restrictions, and 3 included in the government the right at any time within 30 4 years to revert the title back to the Department in the 5 event of a breach of these conditions.

6 In the fall of 1976, as a result of a news release 7 that was issued following this transfer, Americans United, 8 the organization, and four paid employees on its executive 9 staff filed a lawsuit in the district court seeking a 10 rescission of the transaction, thereby effectively ousting my 11 client from its college campus.

12 After limited pretrial discovery, the district 13 court dismissed the complaint, finding that none of the 14 plaintiffs could comply with the standing criteria of Flast
15 against Cohen, and further holding that their complaint 16 alleged no more than a generalized grievance about the 17 conduct of government.

18 The United States Court of Appeals unanimously 19 agreed with the lower court's finding that these taxpayers 20 could not meet the Flast criteria, but nevertheless 21 reversed. The majority opinion of the Third Circuit
22 launched an unsupportable test for establishment clause 23 standing, wherein standing is now to be predicated upon the 24 violation of the shared, individuated right that each 25 citizen has to a government that obeys its Constitution.

1 QUESTION: Did the Third Circuit make any effort
2 to distinguish Frothingham against Mellon?

3 MR. HODGSON: Not really, Your Honor. The Third 4 Circuit spent most of its time on Flast against Cohen and 5 tried to steer its reasoning around Flast. I think it
6 finally concluded that under Flast, or this Court was bound 7 by limitations on the pleadings when it decided Flast. Had 8 the fact situation been presented to this Court that was 9 before the Third Circuit, namely the presence of citizen 10 separationists, the Flast Court would have decided that 11 differently. That was the general approach.

12 QUESTION: Do you think that the Third Circuit
13 opinion would extend so far that if B is the subject of a 14 wrongful arrest under the Fourth Amendment, A could complain 15 about it?

16 MR. HODGSON: Yes, I do, Your Honor. I agree that 17 the words of the opinion appear limited to the establishment 18 clause, but I think that the potential reach of this 19 decision, the implication of a personal right in every 20 citizen to enforce the Constitution at his or her demand is 21 limitless.

22 QUESTION: That would include a challenge, do you 23 think, to the recently approved sale of some aircraft to 24 Saudi Arabia if they didn't like the foreign policy?

25 MR. HODGSON: I would say that I could envision a

1 plaintiff, if this is Your Honor's question, making that 2 challenge. I am a little lost to think of what provision of 3 the Constitution, but I could see that easily. I think it 4 is limitless.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Hodgson, I expect you may already 6 have covered it, but I didn't catch it.

7 MR. HODGSON: Yes, sir.

8 QUESTION: Was this an outright transfer to your 9 client?

10 MR. HODGSON: I am sorry, I don't know what you 11 mean by outright.

12 QUESTION: The property that you received.

13 MR. HODGSON: Yes.

14 QUESTION: I mean, this is a fee simple transfer, 15 is it?

16 MR. HODGSON: Well, yes, it was fee simple 17 transfer, but it had conditions, restrictive conditions, 18 including a reverter clause. The college is --

19 QUESTION: Well, is there any rental arrangement 20 or anything like that?

21 MR. HODGSON: No, Your Honor. The college is 22 obliged to live up to the representations made in its 23 application for the property for a period of 30 years, and 24 any time during that 30-year period if the government 25 determines that there is non-compliance with those

1 representations, it may enter and revert the title.

2 QUESTION: Thank you.

3 MR. HODGSON: The law of this country on standing 4 until the radical reconstruction of this standing test by 5 the Third Circuit related to the finding of a personal stake 6 or injury in fact. That has been the construction of 7 Article III by this Court. As to taxpayer standing, Flast 8 has been the first and, until that opinion, the last word.

9 As Your Honors will recall, Flast allowed a 10 taxpayer to challenge on establishment clause grounds a 11 Congressional exercise of the taxing and spending power of 12 the Constitution, the Article I, Section 8 powers. It was 13 specifically limited by the text of the opinion to those 14 circumstances and to that type of a statute.

15 This Court has strongly and consistently resisted
16 any effort to expand Flast on taxpayer basis beyond Article 17 I, Section 8, the taxing and spending power. Specifically, 18 in Schlesinger, this Court rejected a taxpayer's challenge
19 that was brought pursuant to the incompatibility clause
20 under Article I. The same could be said of Richardson 21 wherein executive action was challenged by a taxpayer
22 pursuant to Article I, Section 9, Clause 7.

23 Here, of course, these taxpayers seek still a 24 further run around Flast and say that the property clause, 25 Article IV, and Congressional action taken pursuant to that

1 clause should become the basis for standing.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Hodgson, are there any citizens who 3 in your view would have standing to file a suit to challenge 4 this action --

6 QUESTION: -- in this case?

7 MR. HODGSON: Oh, excuse me. Although I would 8 call them persons rather than citizens to get away from the 9 concept of citizen standing, yes, I can imagine a number of 10 Article III type injuries which would give a plaintiff 11 standing to sue.

12 For example, an applicant for the property that 13 was denied the application. In other words, if Valley Forge 14 had been preferred over some other applicant, that 15 individual could bring an action to challenge --

16 QUESTION: How about people living in the near 17 vicinity?

18 MR. HODGSON: Adjoining landowners, I think, if 19 they could establish an injury that was causally related to 20 their estate, could equally bring a lawsuit.

21 QUESTION: Wouldn't you still have the tax
22 spending problem? You would concede, though --

23 MR. HODGSON: No, Your Honor, I --

24 QUESTION: That they could bring the suit?

25 MR. HODGSON: I would say that you don't have the

1 taxing and spending power because that is Article III
2 injury. It is injury in fact. There is aggrievement
3 independent of Flast, and you only need Flast and taxpayer 4 standing where there is an Article I challenge. And of 5 course any category of Article III plaintiff would have the 6 right to raise the establishment clause question.

7 QUESTION: And didn't we say either in Schlesinger 8 or in Reservists that the fact that there is no one that has 9 standing doesn't necessarily mean that we must create 10 standing for someone to sue?

11 MR. HODGSON: Yes. It said it is not a reason for 12 granting standing. I think it addressed this very question, 13 and Your Honor, it was both in Richardson and Schlesinger.

14 QUESTION: Mr. Hodgson, let me follow up on 15 Justice O'Connor's question if I may. The adjoining 16 landowner standing --

17 MR. HODGSON: Yes.

18 QUESTION: -- on review would depend on some kind 19 of adverse -- not the mere fact they were an adjoining 20 landowner.

21 MR. HODGSON: No, no, that adjoining landowner 22 would have to show, for example, that the utilization of the 23 property would impact in some manner on his rights as an 24 adjoining owner. Maybe a sewage system would be changed in 25 some fashion. I can't --

1 QUESTION: I see. And the other applicant for the 2 property, I can see the theory there. Of course, if the 3 other applicant were also a religious institution, I suppose 4 they wouldn't have standing there.

5 MR. HODGSON: No, I think they would. I guess the 6 question then would be whether under -- on the merits, 7 whether the successful applicant was or was not a
8 disqualified institution under Article I.

9 QUESTION: But if the theory of the claim is that 10 all religious institutions are disqualified --

11 MR. HODGSON: Well, of course, that is not what -- 12 at least not how this Court has interpreted Article -- or 13 the establishment clause. Pervasively sectarian seems to 14 have been disqualified, but not all religious institutions.

15 QUESTION: Let me put the question just a little 16 differently. Instead of it being a property disposition, 17 supposing the Secretary of HEW just decided to give your 18 client a million dollars.

19 MR. HODGSON: Yes.

20 QUESTION: Would anybody have standing to 21 challenge that?

22 MR. HODGSON: Well, I assume that a gift of 23 funds --

24 QUESTION: Right.

25 MR. HODGSON: -- would be an action, a

1 Congressional action, I assume, executive action taken 2 pursuant to the taxing and spending power.

3 QUESTION: Right.

4 MR. HODGSON: And so a taxpayer most assuredly 5 would have standing to challenge.

6 QUESTION: You would say that if it were a gift of 7 funds, because it is the spending power, that there would be 8 standing.

9 MR. HODGSON: Yes, and Flast so holds.

10 QUESTION: Economically, it is hard to see much 11 difference between the two. I understand the theory, but --

12 MR. HODGSON: Well, I think that there is a world 13 of difference for the reasons that this Court has set forth, 14 notably in Warth against Seldin and Simon versus Kentucky
15 Welfare Rights Organization, because you have the theory, 16 you have attenuated injury when you have a plaintiff of this 17 kind.

18 If you were to say $577,000 worth of real estate 19 is the equivalent of $577,000 worth of cash, and you are 20 saying the government should have taken the cash, for 21 example, instead of the real estate, that assumes an awful 22 lot. First of all, the government would have to maintain 23 the property, and the government's brief says it was 24 $250,000 a year. Secondly, the college clearly indicated on 25 the record it was going to move. It may well have moved to 1 a different location, used tax -- federal assistance funds,

2 such as those in Tilton versus Richardson, to support a
3 building. It would have raised a building fund.
4 Contributors would have taken tax deductions. That is all 5 cash.

6 QUESTION: Well, I can see on the merits that is 7 all relevant, but just in terms of the right of the 8 individual who objects to the transaction, the standing of 9 the person, it seems somewhat hard to differentiate between 10 the two other than you say, well, one is a spending power 11 and the other is a property disposition.

12 MR. HODGSON: Well, if you are saying that 13 conceptually this is a difficult area of the law, I agree, 14 Your Honor.

15 QUESTION: I suppose you would say that if they 16 are indistinguishable, that Flast ought to be overruled.

17 MR. HODGSON: I have great reservations about 18 Flast, Justice White. I know that other Members of the 19 Court have expressed those reservations. I find it 20 difficult --

21 QUESTION: Well, what if in the million dollar
22 case the government specified that, please use the million 23 dollars to buy a piece of property and use it precisely as 24 it is described in this case?

25 MR. HODGSON: It is still the use of the taxing

1 and spending power.

2 QUESTION: But that makes it even closer, doesn't 3 it?

4 MR. HODGSON: A little. The reason that I say
5 that is that these are the sort of grants that this Court 6 has considered in Tilton, Hunt versus McNair, Lemon, where 7 you have the actual transfer of funds and then the 8 utilization by the institution --

9 QUESTION: No, you interrupted.

10 MR. HODGSON: I am sorry.

11 QUESTION: On your adjoining landowner case --

12 MR. HODGSON: Yes.

13 QUESTION: -- why would the adjoining landowner, 14 just because his drainage system is being damaged, have any 15 standing to attack the transfer on the First Amendment 16 ground?

17 MR. HODGSON: Well, assuming that there is an 18 Article III injury, I just --

19 QUESTION: Well, there is an injury, all right.

20 MR. HODGSON: Okay. If there is an Article III
21 injury, this Court has said in Sierra Club and elsewhere
22 that once an individual has standing to sue, he may assert 23 basically any claim, including the public interest, 24 including a citizen's interest. You said that in Sierra and 25 other cases. So that once the threshold is crossed by an

1 Article III plaintiff, he has a veritable panoply of issues
2 that he can raise and argue, and which the Court can --

3 QUESTION: Well, there are some cases to the 4 contrary, too. But that is your theory, anyway --

5 MR. HODGSON: Yes, Your Honor.

6 QUESTION: -- on the adjoining landowner.

7 MR. HODGSON: Yes, Your Honor.

8 QUESTION: Are there not some cases in which, in 9 effect, cash grants made to religious colleges have been 10 sustained?

11 MR. HODGSON: Yes. Tilton, Roemer, Hunt against 12 McNair, are all college education grant cases, where money, 13 pursuant to the taxing and spending power, is appropriated 14 and delivered to the institution for the use -- for secular 15 uses, not for sectarian uses.

16 QUESTION: That is a question on the merits, not 17 standing.

18 MR. HODGSON: It goes to the merits, Your Honor.
19 It does not go to the question of standing.

20 The line of attack generally taken by the 21 Americans United in this case really relates to the merits, 22 claims that we are pervasively sectarian, claims that we 23 seek the perpetuation of formalism to this Court, claims 24 that this entire transaction is a sham, that the statute is 25 really an effort to bootleg federal surplus property around

1 the establishment clause and into the hands of a 2 disqualified, religiously sponsored institution are all the 3 kinds of claims which go to the merits, and as this Court 4 has said repeatedly, the standing inquiry focuses on the 5 litigant, not the issues which he seeks to have litigated, 6 and in Warth, very directly, standing in no way depends on 7 the merits.

8 Thank you, Your Honors.

9 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Solicitor General.

10 ORAL ARGUMENT OF REX E. LEE, ESQ.,

11 ON BEHALF OF FEDERAL RESPONDENTS SUPPORTING PETITIONER

12 MR. LEE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 13 Court, I agree with Mr. Hodgson that there probably are 14 other plaintiffs who could bring the suit in this case, but 15 it is correct, as he also pointed out, that this Court in 16 Schlesinger said that the lack of a better plaintiff does 17 not mean that this plaintiff has standing, and indeed it is 18 worthy of note that in the companion case, United States 19 versus Richardson, this Court went one step further, and 20 said that the fact that there is not a plaintiff who has 21 standing in the traditional Article III sense is a good 22 indication that it is the kind of case that ought to be left 23 to the political branches of government rather than to the 24 judiciary.

25 It is quite clear that since these plaintiffs

1 allege a harm that cannot be differentiated from the 2 hundreds of millions of other American citizens, and since 3 they do not fit the Flast versus Cohen standards for 4 taxpayer standing, the only way that the judgment of the 5 Court of Appeals can be sustained is to uphold the rationale
6 of that court, which was that the establishment clause
7 creates in each citizen a personal constitutional right to a 8 government that does not establish religion.

9 There are two basic theories on the basis of which 10 that could be accomplished. One is the one that Mr. Hodgson 11 suggested, which is that any citizen has a right to enforce 12 any provision of the Constitution, and frankly, it would be 13 difficult if the right were limited to the establishment 14 clause to distinguish it from many other provisions of the 15 Constitution, but the approach of the Court of Appeals 16 appears to have been to limit it to establishment clause to 17 distinguish it from many other provisions of the 18 Constitution.

19 But the approach of the Court of Appeals appears
20 to have been to limit it to establishment clauses. As I 21 say, it has been difficult to do that, but that appears to 22 have been the approach of the Court of Appeals.

23 We would urge that even that approach represents 24 neither good law nor good constitutional policy for several 25 reasons. One is that it would violate this Court's

1 consistent teaching which gives more deference to the 2 judicial article of the Constitution, Article III, that the 3 fundamental aspect of standing is that it focuses on the 4 party seeking to get its complaint before a federal court, 5 and not on the issues that he wishes to have adjudicated.

6 More specifically, requiring the precise 7 overruling of Doremus versus Board of Education, which was 8 an establishment clause case brought by a citizen and 9 dismissed because of the fact that there was no standing.
10 Doremus has been cited with approval both in Flast and also 11 Schlesinger.

12 Perhaps most important of all, the rulings of this 13 Court requiring first that the plaintiff be affected more 14 narrowly than members of the total populace, and second, 15 that standing focused on the plaintiff rather than on the 16 nature of the claim that the plaintiff is bringing lies 17 right at the heart of basic constitutional principles.

18 The feature of our constitutional system that 19 distinguishes courts from the other two branches of 20 government is that courts perform their law interpretive 21 function, including declarations of constitutionality, only 22 in cases or controversies, and interest of the kind that 23 these plaintiffs are pressing in this case, an interest in 24 seeing that a particular philosophy of government prevailed, 25 can be carried to the elected branches, and those branches

1 are free to entertain it.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Lee, wouldn't those same arguments
3 have called for a different result in the Flast case? And 4 aren't you really saying, then, that Flast was incorrectly 5 decided?

6 MR. LEE: I agree with what Mr. Hodgson said in 7 that respect. Flast can be distinguished. At least Flast
8 presents only a -- if not a principle, at least a practical 9 departure from the general proposition that there is no 10 general authority in private citizens performing the 11 function of Attorney General, because of its limitation to 12 Congressional action and taxing and spending.

13 I would shed no tears if Flast were to be 14 overruled.

15 QUESTION: And yet, Mr. Solicitor General --

16 MR. LEE: Yes.

17 QUESTION: -- Americans United, I take it, would 18 have had standing had rather than a transfer of property 19 there had been a transfer of $577,000 of cash, would it not?

20 MR. LEE: Yes. Under Flast, if done by Congress.

21 QUESTION: Well --

22 MR. LEE: Under the --

23 QUESTION: -- isn't this property transfer sort of 24 a Congressional act?

25 MR. LEE: Well, this is an executive branch

1 transfer pursuant to --

2 QUESTION: The Congressional statute.

3 MR. LEE: -- so if you had a Congressional action 4 pursuant to the taxing and spending clause, then your 5 statement is correct. Yes, Your Honor.

6 QUESTION: Really, the only distinction here is 7 that we have real property rather than cash.

8 MR. LEE: That is correct.

9 QUESTION: Under Doremus, both would have come out 10 the same way, would they not?

11 MR. LEE: That is correct. Under Doremus, both 12 would have come out the same way, and you really are at a 13 flat kind of crossroads. You either maintain that holding 14 that is not entirely principled but at least practical and 15 workable. A principle which this Court has cautioned on at 16 least two occasions represented only a slight departure from 17 Frothingham versus Mellon, or if you say that there is no
18 practical distinction, economic distinction between a 19 conveyance of money on the one hand and a conveyance of 20 property on the other hand, then you can forget about Flat
21 versus Cohen, you can forget about the taxpayer standing.
22 You don't need it any more, because if citizens have 23 standing, then any property owner also or any taxpayer will 24 also have standing.

25 And that really brings me to the fundamental

1 reason that that would be a bad idea, to decide the case
2 that way. In contrast to the political branches of 3 government, which are perfectly free under the Constitution 4 to entertain any advocacy for a particular form of 5 government, philosophy of government that is put to them, 6 the tradition ever since Marbury versus Madison has been 7 that courts decide only those issues as they arise in actual 8 lawsuits brought by persons who are injured in fact, and on 9 at least seven separate occasions, reaching all the way back 10 to the early parts of this century, this Court has said that 11 that injury in fact means an injury more specific than the 12 effect that is felt by the populace as a whole, and in our 13 separation of powers, check and balance constitutional 14 system, the most effective check on judicial power is the 15 case or controversy limitation.

16 The Court of Appeals suggested two possible bases 17 for distinguishing this case or for distinguishing 18 establishment clause cases from other cases. One was that 19 the establishment clause does have or is a guarantor of 20 individual liberties, and it is true beyond doubt that it 21 can be, but far from being an argument in support of the 22 Court of Appeals decision, it is squarely against it for 23 this reason, that in those instances where you do have that 24 kind of individualized harm, then that gives you a plaintiff
25 with traditional Article III standing, and where you don't

1 have it, then what you have is, as this Court said in 2 Richardson, the kind of case that by definition ought to be 3 handled by the Article III -- ought to be handled by the 4 Article I or the Article II branches.

5 The second proposition that was set forth by Judge
6 Rosen, whose vote was essential to the majority in the Court 7 of Appeals decision, was this matter that has already been 8 discussed, is there a better plaintiff, and this Court made 9 it very clear in both Richardson and Schlesinger that that 10 was not a relevant concern. To the extent it is relevant, 11 it cuts the other way.

12 Finally, setting aside establishment clause cases 13 as being something of a special -- would give -- would 14 unduly degrade the judicial article of the Constitution, 15 which should have an independent life of its own, because to 16 the already complex and difficult issues that surround 17 standing, we would be visiting another layer of complexity, 18 a layer of complexity that would incorporate into the 19 Article III inquiry the question of what is an establishment 20 of religion, presumably including the three-part test that 21 this Court has struggled so mightily with over the past 22 decade.

23 QUESTION: Is there anything in the Constitution, 24 Mr. Solicitor General, that would prohibit Congress from 25 enacting a statute that no property and no money would be

1 transferred or granted or given to a religiously controlled 2 college or school, and thus cut off any power in the 3 executive branch to make such a transfer as was made here?

4 MR. LEE: I would be reluctant, Mr. Chief Justice,
5 to give a categorical answer to that until I have thought it 6 through a little. My immediate temptation is to say no, and 7 yet if there were a categorical disqualification of religion 8 as religion from -- solely because they were religious 9 groups --

10 QUESTION: From receiving it for nothing.

11 MR. LEE: Receiving it for nothing, then clearly 12 where there was not adequate compensation, then Congress 13 would --

14 QUESTION: That, of course, would mean, then, that 15 that would be a modification in effect of the decision of 16 this Court, I think, in the Tilton case

17 MR. LEE: Oh, yes. Oh, yes.

18 QUESTION: They couldn't make grants to Catholic 19 colleges as were involved there.

20 MR. LEE: That is correct. That is correct. And 21 that brings up --

22 QUESTION: Does that relate to -- I assume that 23 relates to your argument --

24 MR. LEE: Indeed it does. Indeed it does.

25 QUESTION: -- as to the political question.

1 MR. LEE: Indeed it does. And it bears out also 2 the point that this Court has stressed on a number of 3 occasions, stated first by Justice Holmes a good part of a 4 century ago, that there are also, in addition to protections 5 that are built into the judicial system, but there are also 6 protections in Congress. The fear has been, well, what if 7 you simply gave away the War College, or gave away the Naval 8 Academy.

9 In the first place, there probably would be 10 someone who could challenge that, but even if there weren't, 11 our system has survived for two centuries without that ever 12 happening, and the most immediately responsive branches to 13 that kind of thing ever happening would be the branches that 14 are going to have to respond to the pressures of the people
15 who cast the votes, as this Court pointed out in its opinion 16 in Warth versus Seldin.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, I am not sure 18 that argument is controlling, because the phenomenon of 19 government support for private schools has become more 20 important in recent years, and the fact that it wasn't done 21 historically may not be a total answer, but suppose this 22 case had arisen in a state court, supposing a state 23 government did exactly what the federal government did here, 24 and a person who was not even a taxpayer sought to challenge 25 it, and the state court said, yes, we will entertain the 1 challenge, would we have the right to review such a decision?

2 MR. LEE: I think not. I think not.

3 QUESTION: That is Doremus, I guess, isn't it?

4 MR. LEE: I guess it is. Yes.

5 QUESTION: As I recall Doremus, the state court 6 said there was standing.

7 MR. LEE: Yes, that is Doremus. The decision of, 8 I believe it was a New York court --

9 QUESTION: New Jersey court.

10 MR. LEE: I certainly defer to your expertise on 11 that matter, Your Honor.

12 Let me just say in conclusion that I can conceive 13 of a constitutional system which gave to any citizen the 14 right to accede to the courts for the resolution of any 15 problem of public importance. Something like that, not that 16 kind of -- it would not be, in my opinion, the best kind of 17 system, because I believe that our separation of powers, 18 checks and balances system is a better one.

19 Something like that was proposed with the Council 20 of Revision, which was expressly rejected by the 21 Constitutional Convention.

22 The underlying premise of Marbury versus Madison, 23 the reason for judicial review is that judicial review is 24 necessary to the performance by the Article III branch of 25 its function of deciding real lawsuits between real parties,

1 and this Court clarified a half-century ago in Chicago Grand 2 Trunk Railway versus Wellman that the corollary to that 3 Marbury versus Madison principle is also true, that courts
4 perform that function only in those circumstances where it 5 is necessary in order to perform their Article III case or 6 controversy decisional process.

7 Perhaps the most revealing statement on the record
8 in this case is that of the plaintiff Setumbrini, who said, 9 I represent all American citizens, and indeed he does. That 10 is the kind of claim that under our constitutional system
11 and under traditional practice under this Court's precedents 12 must be taken to the political branches of government, and 13 not to the courts of the United States.

14 QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, may I ask you
15 one other question? If you recall in Justice Harlan's 16 dissent in Flast against Cohen he draws the distinction
17 between Hofeldian and non-Hofeldian cases

18 MR. LEE: Yes. Yes.

19 QUESTION: And he says that if Congress authorized 20 a non-Hofeldian standing, it would be all right. Do you 21 disagree with that view?

22 MR. LEE: I have serious problems with it, and 23 particularly in light of the subsequent holdings, probably 24 best spelled out in Warth versus Seldin, that there are 25 constitutional minima, that one of those constitutional

1 minima is injury in fact, so that the real issue becomes, is 2 the Richardson-Schlesinger type ruling, the citizen 3 standing, rooted in injury in fact, and in my view it is.
4 That is the only part of Justice Harlan's opinion that I
5 disagree with. Thank you.

6 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Boothby.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LEE BOOTHBY, ESQ.,

8 ON BEHALF OF NON-FEDERAL RESPONDENTS

9 MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
10 the Court, I believe that this is the first opportunity 11 which this Court has had to address the question of standing 12 as it impacts on the establishment clause since the landmark
13 decision which had been discussed here of Flast versus Cohen
14 some 13 years ago. This case also presents the first 15 establishment challenge to the Federal Property and 16 Administrative Services Act which the Court of Appeals has 17 suggested in this particular case that there is the 18 probability that no one -- that if these plaintiffs do not 19 have standing, no one perhaps has standing to challenge, and 20 I would suggest that if the Court should find that there is 21 no standing, that that particular Act, that particular Act
22 of Congress would be immune from the establishment clause 23 challenge, no matter how gross the violation might be.

24 QUESTION: Wasn't it said either in Reservists or 25 Schlesinger that the fact that there is no one who has

1 standing does not confer standing on someone?

2 MR. BOOTHBY: It says that it is an indication 3 that it does not, that perhaps it should be handled by the 4 political branch. However, I think in that particular case 5 the suggestion of then Solicitor General Robert Bork as he 6 argued that case before this Court is instructive, because 7 he in that particular case argued that the plaintiff
8 interest in CIA funding hardly rose to the dignity of a 9 constitutional right involved in Flast because, as he said, 10 First Amendment freedoms need breathing space to survive, 11 and there is a broader concept of standing appropriate in 12 that particular area.

13 That was the argument that was made in Richardson.
14 In the brief in Richardson, the Solicitor General argued 15 that the case did not involve core values involved in Flast; 16 it involved the statement and account provision not central 17 to the Constitution, and thus the circumstances rendered 18 doubtful the occurrence of substantial adverse interest.

19 QUESTION: But it was nonetheless a constitutional 20 provision.

21 MR. BOOTHBY: It was a constitutional provision, 22 but it was dealing with Article I rather than with the 23 establishment clause, and I think that brings us to really 24 the very heart of this particular case. The question is, is 25 the ultimate protection of values enshrined in the

1 establishment clause to reside with the judicial system, or 2 the judicial branch of government, or are there certain 3 establishment clause values that perhaps the political 4 branch has the ultimate authority in?

5 QUESTION: Well, how do you distinguish the 6 establishment clause in Article I, say, from the right to be 7 free from unlawful searches and seizures in Article IV and 8 the right to counsel in Article V or VI, or the right to 9 fair trial, that sort of thing? Isn't it true that if the 10 judgment of the Third Circuit would be affirmed, the Court
11 would, as the Solicitor General suggests, have to be grading 12 various provisions of the Constitution as to their 13 fundamentality?

14 MR. BOOTHBY: I think that the establishment
15 clause is different from even any other First Amendment
16 right for this reason. It is an amorphous type right. All 17 other First Amendment rights, right to free speech, free
18 exercise, to publish, have two aspects. One is protection 19 from certain government action, and the other one is 20 protection for, to do certain specific things.

21 That is not true necessarily with the 22 establishment clause, because basically that right is a 23 right to be free from certain governmental actions, and may 24 not directly impact specifically uniquely on any particular 25 person, and I think that presents a separate, specific

1 problem that must be addressed in a practical way.

2 QUESTION: Well, isn't that true, then, of any 3 taxpayer suit, that no -- we all pay taxes for many things 4 that we object to and perhaps wouldn't vote for if we were 5 legislators, but that we can't show any discrete impact on 6 our own tax bill for it. Would you say everybody had 7 standing to attack those sort of expenditures if they 8 claimed they violated the Constitution?

9 MR. BOOTHBY: No, I think there is a distinction, 10 which was in fact pointed out in Richardson and in 11 Schlesinger, where a distinction was made between certain 12 core value rights given by the Constitution and the type of 13 political situation that was involved in both the decisions
14 of Schlesinger and Richardson.

15 QUESTION: Well, are all constitutional provisions 16 core value?

17 MR. BOOTHBY: I think perhaps there are certain 18 core values which have to be protected in different ways, 19 and I think a lot of what we are discussing today deals with 20 the prudential concerns of the Court, the concerns of 21 self-restraint, and I would suggest that there is standing 22 from the constitutional standpoint in this particular case, 23 and what we are dealing with now are prudential concerns, 24 and the fact that if one accepts -- if one does accept the 25 view, which I suggest is an appropriate view under West

1 Virginia versus Barnett, that certain rights must not be 2 left in the political process, then prudentially we have to 3 look to the court enforcement of those rights.

4 QUESTION: But in Barnett, there was actual 5 standing in the sense that a particular school child was 6 forced to do something that he objected to on constitutional 7 grounds that he shouldn't have to do.

8 MR. BOOTHBY: That may be true, but it gets back 9 to the basic question as to whether establishment rights 10 should be subject to the political process, subject to the 11 vote of the majority, and I suggest that that basic core 12 value right under the theory of Madison and Jefferson when 13 they suggested the religion clauses be included in the Bill 14 of Rights was to commit that to the judiciary for protection.

15 QUESTION: Would you distinguish between the free 16 exercise clause and the establishment clause of the First 17 Amendment?

18 MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Chief Justice, both of those are 19 co-guarantors of religious liberty. The difference is that 20 the free exercise right always impacts on a specific 21 individual or group of people, so prudentially you have a 22 person with standing without much difficulty. When we are 23 discussing the problem with reference to the establishment 24 clause, we have a much different situation.

25 QUESTION: Well, on your theory, then, on your

1 theory members of Jehovah's Witnesses and other religious 2 people who sincerely are opposed to all forms of warfare and 3 defense, military establishment, would have standing to 4 challenge the levying of a tax on them to the extent that 5 tax was used to buy tanks and airplanes and other things.
6 Is that right?

7 MR. BOOTHBY: Well, perhaps they have standing.
8 The question then would be raised as to what the compelling 9 state interest might be, and how --

10 QUESTION: Well, all we are concerned here with 11 now, we are talking about standing, aren't we?

12 MR. BOOTHBY: Yes, the question in that case --

13 QUESTION: We are not getting to the merits of 14 this case.

15 MR. BOOTHBY: Under the free exercise clause, the 16 question would be, does that particular governmental action 17 impact or burden their religious freedom, and if they could 18 demonstrate under the free exercise clause that it does,
19 then they would have standing, I think, to bring the matter 20 before the Court as to whether what the decision would be 21 would be based upon the balancing test.

22 QUESTION: Do you agree with the Solicitor
23 General, whose response was that Congress would have the 24 power to forbid transfers of this kind and transfers, grants 25 to colleges on religious grounds?

1 MR. BOOTHBY: I would think that they would have 2 the power to do that. The question is as to whether they 3 should be the final authority to determine whether their own 4 actions are in violation of the establishment clause, which 5 I suggest has been committed to the judiciary.

6 QUESTION: Well, I don't follow that. If Congress
7 simply said, we are not going to give any money, we are not 8 going to transfer any property to a religiously sponsored 9 school or college, do you seriously question their authority 10 to do that?

11 MR. BOOTHBY: Are we discussing it now in the 12 context of the free exercise clause?

13 QUESTION: No, we are just discussing it in the 14 abstract. They just say no money, no money can be given to 15 any religious school, no property can be transferred except 16 for full value to any religious school. Do you question the 17 right of Congress to do that?

18 MR. BOOTHBY: I think Congress --

19 QUESTION: That avoids all your problems of the 20 establishment clause, doesn't it?

21 MR. BOOTHBY: It would avoid it if the Congress in 22 fact did that. The question is, we have here a 31-year 23 history where that has not been the situation, where the 24 benefit allowance has always been granted to the extent of 25 95 to 100 percent, and the question is whether anyone can

1 ever challenge what seems to us to be indistinguishable, the 2 question of whether you are giving cash, giving an 3 appropriation of dollars, or whether you are giving bricks
4 and mortar, and whether you are giving personal property, it 5 seems indistinguishable.

6 QUESTION: What was the government giving in the 7 Tilton case?

8 MR. BOOTHBY: Well, in the Tilton case, it was -- 9 it involved different items, but one of the items which was 10 specifically addressed by the Court was with reference to 11 buildings which 20 years -- there was a provision there that 12 at the end of 20 years, the restrictions were at an end, and 13 this Court invalidated a specific part of it dealing with a 14 facility that might be turned into a chapel or something for 15 a religious purpose.

16 Here, in this particular case, we don't have to 17 wait 20 years down the road to find some speculation as to 18 whether it is going to be used for a chapel. There was a 19 specific building which was in the nature of a chapel that 20 was given to the -- to the college and used directly and 21 immediately for a chapel, so what we have here in part was 22 the government giving a chapel to the college to be used for 23 pervasively sectarian instruction, which I can see no
24 difference between this and the decision in Tilton.

25 QUESTION: Which chapel was formerly used by the 1 government.

2 MR. BOOTHBY: That is correct.

3 QUESTION: With nobody's objection.

4 MR. BOOTHBY: That is correct, but of course we 5 have distinguished under the free exercise clause prisons 6 and chapels and chaplains in the armed services, because of 7 the restrictions that are placed upon servicemen and upon 8 prisoners, and as a means to accommodate because of the 9 restrictions that government has imposed, we have permitted 10 the furnishing of chapels in those instances, but --

11 QUESTION: I am not too worried about what you 12 permit. I am worried about what the Constitution permits.

13 MR. BOOTHBY: I believe that that has been the 14 theory under the chaplaincy and for chapels in the armed 15 services.

16 QUESTION: How about chaplains in the Senate and 17 House?

18 MR. BOOTHBY: That has, of course, been a long 19 tradition there, and perhaps under the decisions dealing 20 with the ceremonial decisions, those type of decisions, that 21 would be a basis for sustaining that.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Boothby, if the Court were to 23 affirm the Court of Appeals' decision, would you agree that 24 really any person could come in then as a plaintiff and 25 raise any establishment clause question, without any

1 practical limitation?

2 MR. BOOTHBY: I think the Court -- they always 3 impose certain prudential considerations. As this Court has 4 said as recently as last year, in the Geraghty case, that 5 the Court should view these cases on a case by case basis.

6 QUESTION: But wouldn't that be the danger or 7 concern we would have if we were to approve that decision?

8 MR. BOOTHBY: To the type of cases that directly 9 impact on specific individuals, I see no particular problem 10 with those requirements. In addition, I would suggest that 11 we are not dealing nor should we deal with a generalized 12 grievance or one where we are asking merely for an advisory 13 opinion. That is not the situation in this case. In this 14 case, where it is a plaintiff not attacking generally an Act 15 of Congress, but is attacking a specific transfer of 16 property, and so we have a factual context in which this 17 case is brought, and I would suggest that to the extent that 18 the injury that we are concerned with is an amorphous type 19 of situation where it is a step down the way towards the 20 establishment of religion than citizens should be.

21 Let me suggest this, because I think we are going 22 to the question of the locus of the injury. Does it make 23 any difference, for instance, whether the citizen who feels 24 aggrieved lives next door to Valley Forge Christian 25 College? It really doesn't. Now, it does make a difference

1 if we are talking about a public school engaging in 2 sectarian religious education within that school. Yes, the 3 people within that community have a more direct impact. But 4 that is not the situation here. We are talking about a 5 transfer of property, government property, to be used for 6 pervasively sectarian teaching, and I think the locus of it 7 is unimportant.

8 QUESTION: Didn't the framers of our constitution
9 really reject the idea of a roving commission to challenge 10 actions of the government, and didn't the framers really 11 contemplate the case in controversy requirement, which in 12 essence embodies standing, and isn't this opinion a 13 significant departure from that basic concept?

14 MR. BOOTHBY: I don't believe it to be a
15 significant departure. As I understand the Article III
16 requirements of standing, that is, that there must be injury
17 in fact, we are talking about a case presented in a manner 18 where it is an historical setting for judicial relief. We 19 are talking about a situation where the issues are presented 20 by adversaries in a factual context, and I believe that is 21 met in this particular type of case.

22 QUESTION: What is the injury in fact?

23 MR. BOOTHBY: Injury in fact in this particular 24 case is that type of injury which is experienced by many 25 people in this country, but the fact that government is not

1 being neutral and establishing an environment which prevents 2 a government operating with a separation of church and state.

3 QUESTION: Well, is that the sort of injury in 4 fact that Barlows or Associated Processing was concerned 5 with?

6 MR. BOOTHBY: Well, of course, those were 7 concerned with economic problems.

8 QUESTION: Yes.

9 MR. BOOTHBY: But in Data Processing the Court 10 specifically indicated that what it said in that case also 11 applied to spiritual values, and we are dealing here with a 12 spiritual value, not an economic value.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Boothby, along that same line, can 14 you argue your case on standing without getting into the 15 merits?

16 MR. BOOTHBY: Yes. I don't think one needs to get 17 into --

18 QUESTION: I don't see how you can argue your 19 standing without the merits, because you say that unless 20 this is a church school, you have no case.

21 MR. BOOTHBY: I don't think one --

22 QUESTION: Well, if this is a school that is 23 completely non-sectarian, do you have standing?

24 MR. BOOTHBY: I think that in order to reach the 25 standing question, as the Court said in Flast, to find out

1 if there is a nexus between the plaintiff and the injury,
2 that you have to look at the facts in that fashion, but you 3 do not need to cross the threshold and decide the merits of 4 the case. You do not need to determine whether in fact this 5 is a pervasively sectarian institution, merely look to see 6 whether there is an allegation --

7 QUESTION: Then you have to get to the merits.
8 You would rather call it facts, but I prefer to call it
9 merits.

10 MR. BOOTHBY: I think you have to look to see 11 whether there is an allegation raised by the plaintiff that 12 there is a pervasively sectarian institution involved, but 13 you need not decide that fact.

14 QUESTION: But you have to get to it.

15 MR. BOOTHBY: To that extent.

16 QUESTION: If this was a non-sectarian
17 institution, you would have no case.

18 MR. BOOTHBY: Well, there would not be the claim 19 of establishment violation.

20 QUESTION: You would not have any standing, would 21 you?

22 MR. BOOTHBY: You would not, and that would 23 probably be a political question at that point.

24 QUESTION: You wouldn't have any standing.

25 MR. BOOTHBY: That's true.

1 QUESTION: So that any person in the country can 2 file a complaint in any federal district court saying that 3 the transfer was to a pervasively sectarian institution, and 4 be entitled to a hearing on his allegation.

5 MR. BOOTHBY: Well, I think one of the ways of 6 handling that particular problem is the summary judgment
7 method of handling it, perhaps, but I think if there is a --

8 QUESTION: But it must nonetheless be considered.

9 MR. BOOTHBY: I think -- yes.

10 QUESTION: Under your theory, could an anti-war
11 group object to the selling of these AWACS?

12 MR. BOOTHBY: No, I think that comes under --

13 QUESTION: They are against war. Would they have 14 standing?

15 MR. BOOTHBY: I don't --

16 QUESTION: I didn't say when. I said, have 17 standing.

18 MR. BOOTHBY: I don't believe so. I think that --

19 QUESTION: Why not?

20 MR. BOOTHBY: Unless they are making out a free 21 exercise type of argument, it certainly --

22 QUESTION: I am saying that their religion says we 23 are against war, and we object to you selling AWACS to 24 anybody. Would they have standing? And when you get 25 through with that, you can ask about declaring war. There

1 is no limit to where you could go.

2 MR. BOOTHBY: Well, of course, to some extent that 3 was the issue that was argued here on Monday with reference 4 to the social security tax, and they were raising the 5 question, but they did have standing.

6 QUESTION: Was the standing point involved in that?

7 MR. BOOTHBY: No, but they --

8 QUESTION: We are talking about standing now. I
9 would like to leave it with standing. I have great problems 10 with where your line is drawn. I can allege that my 11 religion is against taxing, so I want to stop paying my 12 income tax. I don't have standing for that.

13 MR. BOOTHBY: I think then you reach the question 14 of whether it is a burden on the free exercise rights of 15 those people. I think you have to look to that issue, and 16 then the question of sincerity. Now, perhaps they would 17 have standing to raise the question.

18 QUESTION: And they could plead forma pauperis and 19 it wouldn't cost them a nickel to do it. Right?

20 MR. BOOTHBY: Basically, Sherbert versus Verner
21 dealt with somebody objecting to the impact of a particular 22 statute, state statute. The question was not standing. The 23 question that was disposed of was the question of the use of 24 the balancing test to determine whether there was a 25 compelling state interest to override the free exercise

1 rights.

2 QUESTION: I am trying to draw a line in my mind
3 between standing and the merits, and I can do it on your 4 argument, because your argument needs merits to get to 5 standing.

6 MR. BOOTHBY: Well, I think you have to look to 7 the facts briefly, as Flast said, in order to determine 8 whether there is a nexus between the individual's injury and 9 the constitutional provision.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Boothby, you have referred two or 11 three times to the free exercise clause. I had thought the 12 Third Circuit's opinion was limited to establishment clause 13 claim.

14 MR. BOOTHBY: That is correct.

15 QUESTION: Which is your view, that it should be 16 limited to establishment clause?

17 MR. BOOTHBY: Yes. It is only an establishment
18 question here, and as I indicated, I think the establishment 19 clause presents unique problems that are not experienced in 20 the free exercise clause, because of the nature.
21 Establishment problems are created, as the Chief Justice in 22 Lemon indicated, when the first step is taken respecting the 23 establishment of religion, and so, in order to protect 24 against that very first step, it is necessary to be able to 25 raise the question in a judicial forum when there is a case

1 presented in a historical way with specific facts asking for 2 specific relief directed against the -- what is perceived to 3 be the wrong.

4 QUESTION: And the specific allegations about 5 establishment.

6 MR. BOOTHBY: I think that you need to say that --

7 QUESTION: You have to have allegations.

8 MR. BOOTHBY: -- you are basing it upon an 9 establishment claim, yes.

10 I think there might be an illustration that would 11 demonstrate perhaps why the establishment question raises
12 separate questions, and let me suggest, what if Congress 13 would enact a law that would say, we are officially 14 recognized in a certain church as the official church, 15 Baptist church, Unitarian church, Presbyterian, or whatever 16 it might be, but we provide no sanctions and we grant no 17 money, we make no appropriation.

18 The question is, would anyone have a right to come 19 before a court and ask that that particular Congressional 20 act be voided, or is that something specifically that you 21 would have to go to the Congress and go through the 22 political proces in order to accomplish, and I submit that 23 those are the type of problems as it is particularly 24 highlighted in this case, where you must have, you need to 25 have access to the courts to prevent violations of the 1 establishment clause from occurring.

2 QUESTION: Would you be here, Mr. Boothby, if they 3 had sold it for $500,000?

4 MR. BOOTHBY: First of all, this really involves 5 $1,300,000 when you involve the personal property, but I 6 think the principle involved is important whether we are 7 talking about $500,000 or whether we are talking about $100, 8 the principle is. Now, obviously --

9 QUESTION: What principle would be involved if 10 they sold it for $500,000?

11 MR. BOOTHBY: Oh, if they sold it and received 12 $500,000?

13 QUESTION: Yes. Less than value.

14 MR. BOOTHBY: Less than the value?

15 QUESTION: Less than value.

16 MR. BOOTHBY: Then you would be perhaps -- I think 17 perhaps there would be standing, but the question would be 18 on the merits as to whether there was an actual gift made by 19 the government without consideration, whether it was in fact 20 a contribution or a donation to some extent.

21 QUESTION: Then what if they put it up for 22 auction, limiting the bidders to colleges and universities, 23 and this institution was the low bidder, and the bid was 24 $100,000, way below value. Would you have standing first?
25 Let's stay with standing.

1 MR. BOOTHBY: To the extent that you could make 2 out a claim of violation, I would say perhaps you would have 3 standing.

4 QUESTION: Doesn't that illustrate the practical 5 side of this situation, that you must leave the running of 6 the government to the people who were elected to run it?

7 MR. BOOTHBY: I think that is normally true, 8 except when you have this type of situation where we are 9 talking about a violation of such a basic core value, and I 10 don't believe that one should have to go to the political 11 processes in order to have that redressed.

12 One other -- perhaps one other matter which goes 13 to this particular problem is the fact that one of the 14 things that indicates that this is a case in controversy, 15 and this is a case for judicial relief, is, I would 16 seriously question whether the executive or the legislative 17 would have power to provide the relief which is requested.
18 We are requesting that a transfer which has been made be 19 voided. I would suggest that it would be difficult, if not 20 impossible, for the legislative branch or the executive 21 branch to perform that. That is the type of relief which is 22 uniquely within the power of a court to provide.

23 So, I don't think that the executive or 24 legislative branch can provide that type of relief.

25 QUESTION: Mr. Boothby, I have been looking at

1 your complaint. What provision of the complaint -- I am
2 looking at Page 10 of the Joint Appendix -- contains your 3 allegation of injury in fact? The Joint Appendix --

4 MR. BOOTHBY: Yes.

5 QUESTION: -- Page 10. Is that the complaint that 6 is before us?

7 MR. BOOTHBY: That is the complaint. However, as 8 was pointed out in the --

9 QUESTION: Well, before we --

10 MR. BOOTHBY: Pardon?

11 QUESTION: Before we leave that, could you 12 identify in the complaint the injury in fact language upon 13 which you rely?

14 MR. BOOTHBY: Paragraph 12 is the one that deals
15 with the claimed violation of the establishment clause. I 16 would like to, however, add to that --

17 QUESTION: Before you leave the complaint, what 18 about Paragraph 2, which is the one that speaks of the 19 injury to the plaintiffs?

20 MR. BOOTHBY: Yes. That describes -- that 21 describes the organizational plaintiff in this particular 22 case, and indicates the fact that these particular people
23 that are members of the organization are taxpayer members 24 affected by the use of the property.

25 QUESTION: Each individual member would be

1 deprived of the fair and constitutional use of his or her 2 tax dollar.

3 MR. BOOTHBY: That's correct.

4 QUESTION: Is there any allegation in here other 5 than that, which seems to relate to status as taxpayers, 6 that indicates an injury in fact to these particular 7 plaintiffs?

8 MR. BOOTHBY: Not in the complaint, Your Honor. I
9 might make reference to Page 13 of the brief that was filed 10 on behalf of the college, where they specifically stated, 11 which is correct, that Respondents were given the 12 opportunity through discovery to particularize the 13 allegations of the amended complaint in connection with the 14 district court's ruling of the college's motion for summary
15 judgment. The depositions and answers to interrogatories 16 were considered.

17 And I would suggest that the injuries that we are 18 talking about were particularized in those depositions, and 19 specifically Pages 28 through -- 27 through 30 of the 20 plaintiff Gunn's deposition, where he described in a very 21 particularized way those type of injuries with which he was 22 concerned, where, on Page 28, he stated, "When the 23 government establishes religion, that is, contributes to the 24 establishment of religion, my religious liberty is being 25 violated. It affects me in that my freedom of conscience is

1 being violated and my religious liberty is being trampled 2 upon because the government is taking -- is fostering and 3 promoting religion. It is not the business of government to 4 do this. The government is to remain neutral."

5 Then, "When the government gives over public lands 6 that belong to the public, and public buildings and personal 7 property, then it is promoting one religion over against all 8 other religions."

9 And further, "When the government takes sides on 10 matters of religion, it is taking a side against my 11 religion, and therefore is inhibiting me and violating my 12 freedom of conscience by forcing me as a taxpayer and as a 13 citizen to give support to someone else's religion."

14 QUESTION: Is that document before us, Mr. Boothby?

15 MR. BOOTHBY: The document is not in the 16 Appendix. It is part of the record, and as I have 17 indicated, was considered by the district court at the time 18 of the dismissal of the case.

19 QUESTION: The record here?

20 MR. BOOTHBY: Pardon?

21 QUESTION: Is the record here?

22 MR. BOOTHBY: I would assume that the record --

23 QUESTION: I mean, in this building. Was it filed 24 with the clerk? That's all.

25 QUESTION: I am sure it had to be.

1 MR. BOOTHBY: That is my understanding. And as I
2 say, that -- there are other -- there are several other 3 similar statements in other depositions, and I won't go in 4 great detail, but I might make reference to Plaintiff Doerr, 5 on Pages 15, 22, and 23, Plaintiff Binns, Pages 14, 15, 18, 6 and 19, 24, 25, 31, 32, and 36, and Plaintiff Gunn on Page 7 10, 11, 12, 27, 28, 29, and 30, all indicate what we would 8 suggest would be the particularized injuries complained of 9 in this particular case.

10 In United States versus Carolina Products Company, 11 Justice Stone, in Footnote 4 of his --

12 QUESTION: United States versus Carlolene Products?

13 MR. BOOTHBY: Carolina Products?

14 QUESTION: That is C-a-r-o-l-e-n-e?

15 MR. BOOTHBY: L-i-n-a. Carolina. Suggested that 16 exacting judicial scrutiny of state action is appropriate 17 when state action violates the Bill of Rights or frustrates 18 the political process.

19 I would suggest that we can't have exacting
20 judicial scrutiny when there is an absolute denial of all 21 judicial scrutiny, and one of the things that has been 22 highlighted in this particular case is that no one perhaps 23 might have standing if these particular plaintiffs do not 24 have standing.

25 It has been suggested that perhaps someone close

1 by in the area might have some standing about a drain or 2 something, but those people are not going to be specifically 3 concerned about raising establishment issues except to some 4 extent that it might assist their case. Also, it was 5 suggested that there might be another applicant for the 6 property, and again I would suggest that that concern is 7 more economic than one dealing with the values enshrined in 8 the establishment clause, and it would seem that if we are 9 trying to find the plaintiff to raise the establishment 10 issue in the most specific way to bring to the attention of 11 the court the issue, we should be looking at the plaintiff 12 that can best present the establishment clause challenge
13 from the standpoint of their own specific injury, the injury 14 being a violation of their rights under the establishment 15 clause.

16 In Warth versus Seldin, it was stated that the 17 standing question requires a determination as to whether the 18 constitutional or statutory provisions on which a claim 19 rests properly can be understood as granting persons in the 20 plaintiff's position judicial relief, and I would suggest 21 that the establishment clause does do just that. It grants 22 to a specific individual the right to judicial relief.

23 I question whether it is ever tolerable to expect 24 the establishment clause by the doctrine of standing to be 25 divided into enforceable and non-enforceable establishment

1 clause rights, and I suggest also that the precious aspects
2 of religious freedom should never be placed upon the barter 3 block of legislative debate, political tradeoffs, or 4 compromise.

5 QUESTION: Well, in Doremus they were.

6 MR. BOOTHBY: I think that is correct. I think in 7 Doremus it was. I think that Flast went a long way in 8 resolving the problem there.

9 QUESTION: But Flast cited Doremus with approval.

10 MR. BOOTHBY: That is correct, but it certainly 11 was a departure from what was said by the Court in Doremus.
12 I think that there has been also a substantial change in the 13 way the question of standing has been viewed since Doremus, 14 as far as this Court is concerned, in its most recent 15 expressions --

16 QUESTION: Well, there certainly was a substantial 17 change in view of standing in the Third Circuit's opinion as 18 compared to this Court's cases in Warth and Simon versus 19 East Kentucky.

20 MR. BOOTHBY: I think that this Court has never 21 really had to face this issue in this context before, and it 22 did face it to some degree in Flast, but it did not need to 23 go further than to find some taxpayer standing. This is a 24 situation which is somewhat different, but I would suggest 25 that as the establishment clause was deemed to be a

1 limitation of Article I, Section 8, it is equally a
2 limitation on Article IV provision granting to the Congress
3 the power to dispose of property. I don't see any 4 distinction.

5 QUESTION: Well, do you just read out Article III, 6 then?

7 MR. BOOTHBY: No, I think that there must be a 8 case in controversy. I don't think you can merely ask for 9 an advisory opinion, but when you have real parties 10 litigating real factual issues and asking for specific 11 relief, not merely an adjudication of a Congressional Act, 12 but asking for specific judicial relief, I think that the 13 case in controversy requirements of Article III have been 14 met, particularly where there is an allegation of injury in 15 fact of the character involved in the establishment clause 16 itself.

17 Your Honor, I believe I have a minute or two. If 18 the Court has any questions, I will do my best to attempt to 19 answer them. Otherwise, I am prepared to submit the case.

20 ORAL ARGUMENT OF C. CLARK HODGSON, JR., ESQ.

21 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER - REBUTTAL

22 QUESTION: I have a question that occurred to me 23 during the argument. Someone referred to the case we had 24 earlier this week that also came from Pennsylvania, 25 involving a religious group, some people who felt very 1 deeply that paying a certain tax would be a sin against 2 their religion.

3 Supposing someone living next door to this 4 institution felt that it would be a sin to live in a 5 community in which the government established a religion in 6 which they had no belief, or they just thought it would be a 7 sin even to live where the government established religion.
8 Would that person have standing?

9 MR. HODGSON: You seem to be positing the 10 existence of a free exercise injury in fact, Article III, 11 and I would say yes.

12 QUESTION: Well, supposing somebody said it is a 13 sin to live in a country in which the federal government 14 does this sort of thing. Would that still -- would you 15 think that would be standing?

16 MR. HODGSON: I think it alleges --

17 QUESTION: A deeply held belief.

18 MR. HODGSON: -- it alleges an injury in fact, an 19 alleged violation of the free exercise clause.

20 QUESTION: Well, the injury to him is continuing 21 to live there.

22 MR. HODGSON: Yes. I can't help but think of it
23 on the merits, thinking particularly of Reynolds versus 24 United States, the polygamy case, that believing as a matter 25 of religious conscience that the practice of bigamy was

1 appropriate, but of course that goes to the merits, but I 2 think that the allegations that you fashion, while they 3 appear at least to be frivolous, might fall within the free 4 exercise.

5 QUESTION: Well, supposing these people, instead 6 of stressing their taxpayer status, had just said they 7 believe very deeply that it will offend their conscience to 8 have their government do this. Is that really different?

9 MR. HODGSON: That it offends their conscience?

10 QUESTION: It offends their conscience.

11 MR. HODGSON: Yes.

12 QUESTION: Just as a matter of conscience.

13 MR. HODGSON: I think it is very different. Their 14 conscience as citizens of the United States. Because 15 matters of citizen conscience, I think, are not protected 16 under the Constitution. Matters of deeply felt religious 17 conviction are protected under the free exercise.

18 QUESTION: I see.

19 MR. HODGSON: Thank you, Your Honors.

20 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen. The 21 case is submitted.

22 (Whereupon, at 11:19 o'clock a.m., the case in the 23 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
