CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next 3 in New York Mercantile Exchange against Leist and others on 4 the consolidated case.

Mr. Hegarty, I think you may proceed when you are

ORAL ARGUMENT OF WILLIAM E. HEGARTY, ESQ.,

8

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

9

MR. HEGARTY: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
10 the Court, let me begin by going back to 1936, to the era
11 that Justice Powell referred to. In the Congressional 12 debates, the Senate debate concerning the 1936 amendments to 13 the Commodity Exchange Act, a decision of this Court was 14 read into the record. That decision had held that the 15 pre-existing Act could not provide a remedy against someone 16 who was accused of having manipulated the market because the 17 statute was framed in terms of is manipulating, present 18 tense.

19

This Court said that the proceeding could not go
20 forward. It affirmed the lower court, which it so held. It 21 said, and this, as I say, was read into the record, the 22 entire decision by Justice Brandeis, a unanimous decision of 23 this Court, to supply omissions transcends the judicial 24 function.

25

I don't believe that the perception of the role of

1 the Congress and of the judiciary in 1936 and earlier, and 2 even since has been -- has gone through the sea changes that 3 are suggested by the Respondents and by the CFTC. Indeed, 4 much mention has been made of Rigsby. In that decision, it
5 seems to me, as I read it, that Justice Pitney was very,
6 very careful to have two bases for his decision. One indeed
7 was for the use of the remedium, but immediately thereafter
8 he said the inference is made irresistible by the language
9 of the statute, and I don't think that is very different 10 from Cort v. Ash, if one thinks about it.

11 Now, the argument in the earlier case is different 12 in two respects from the questions presented presently.
13 That case involves a section of the Commodity Exchange Act,
14 Section 4b, which is for the benefit by claim of a customer
15 and it provides that his broker may not defraud him. That 16 language might suffice for the first factor in Cort.
17 Representing a contract market, I am addressing different 18 sections, Sections 5d, 5a(8), and perhaps 9b, which is the 19 general criminal statute against manipulation.

20 5d is the licensing statute. It says that boards 21 of trade will be designated as contract markets if they 22 satisfy certain criteria, one of which is to have a system 23 to prevent manipulation -- not to prevent manipulation, but 24 to have a system to prevent it. 5a(8) is prescriptive. It 25 says that one of the things the contract market must do is

1 enforce its rules.

2 These are quite patently for the general benefit
3 of the -- well, it certainly goes far beyond the futures
4 market. It goes to the cash market, as it is called, the 5 production, the handling, the use of commodities.

6 The other very significant distinction between the 7 4b question and the question posed as against a contract
8 market is a practical distinction. It is a question of 9 practical consequences, and implicit, if I can use the word 10 in this general context, holding of the Second Circuit or 11 the court below was that a cash trader, that is, a person
12 not trading in the futures market at all, but holding cash 13 potatoes, had a claim against the contract market because of 14 an alleged failure on its part to act in an emergency.

15 That opens up, it seems to me, the picture of not 16 only which we would have in the Securities Acts functioning 17 on the trading in a particular security or something of that 18 sort. It goes beyond that. It is trading in a futures 19 contract, but then the impact of that trading, that alleged 20 manipulation might have on the cash product. In other 21 words, manipulation in wheat in the Chicago Board of Trade, 22 the price fixed in the Chicago Board of Trade is used, as 23 they call it, for price discovery by those who are actually 24 delivering wheat to mills.

25 This is, as Judge Mansfield said in dissent below,

1 what is involved is literally hundreds of millions of 2 dollars. Now, I don't cite that in a kind of interorum
3 way. I cite it for this purpose. It seems to me that when 4 the consequences are such, when the possible result is such, 5 it bears very directly on whether one can assume that 6 Congress intended such a result or chose not to say so,
7 which after all is the fundamental question.

8 I regret that the Solicitor General's office did 9 not choose to argue in this case, to deal with questions of 10 that sort, although they briefed them, I suppose.

11 Now, the three sections that interest the contract 12 markets are Section 5d, as I said. That was enacted in 13 1921. At that time, a companion statute enacted the same
14 month was the Packers and Stockyards Act, which provided 15 both for reparations and private damages against the 16 stockyard and others, and I think it is suggested that te 17 two statutes go in tandem, and no such remedy is provided in 18 the Commodity -- as it was then called, the Grain Futures
19 Act, I think.

20 9b was enacted in 1936, and as I say, in Wallace
21 against Cutten, a case which I quoted from, it was before
22 Congress, very much before Congress at that point.

23 5a(8), as I say, Subdivision a(8) was added to 5a
24 in 1968, at a time when Congress did not enact a bill which 25 would have provided an action against contract markets.

1 Now we come to 1974, and a unanimous panel of the 2 Fifth Circuit said that the legislative history was 3 emphatically equivocal in that that was not a sufficient 4 basis to predicate a private right of action.

5 QUESTION: That is an interesting expression,
6 isn't it?

7 MR. HEGARTY: It is. I think it was very well 8 chosen.

9 QUESTION: Interesting expression, "empatically" --

10 MR. HEGARTY: "Equivocal."

11 (General laughter.)

12 MR. HEGARTY: They said also, to substantiate 13 their point, Justice White, that the evidence as to whether 14 or not Congress was aware of the one appellate court
15 decision --

16 QUESTION: It is like saying the Congressional 17 silence was very loud indeed.

18 MR. HEGARTY: That is what the court below said,
19 Your Honor, but the Fifth Circuit thought that the evidence 20 was dubious, if you will, that Congress as a whole had any 21 awareness of the one decision, one appellate decision that 22 upheld a cause of action against a contract market. They 23 said there was no evidence that Congress had approved it.

24 In the opinion from the majority below, it was 25 described as implicit approval by Congress, and I think to

1 premise an implied right of action upon an implicit approval
2 by Congress in emphatically equivocal legislative history
3 piles too much on too shaky a foundation.

4 In 1974, if you look at objective evidence again
5 as to contract markets, they did not enact a private action
6 against contract markets. They did enact the reparations
7 remedy from which contract markets are excluded. They did 8 specifically authorize the CFTC to bring injunction for 9 suits in district courts against contract markets, and they 10 added to the penalty provision the direction to the CFTC to 11 consider whether the amount of the penalty would materially 12 impair the contract market's ability to carry on its 13 operations and duties, and I don't think a possible exposure 14 to hundreds of millions of dollars could be said to be 15 consistent with that.

16 If there was a dramatic overhaul of the statute in 17 1974, it is similar to that which occurred and was the 18 subject of this Court's decision in City of Milwaukee.
19 There had been a federal common law cause of action for 20 nuisance. The Seventh Circuit had held here that there was 21 a common law cause of action against contract markets, the 22 one appellate decision. I think it would follow that such a 23 contract -- common law cause of action had been supplanted 24 by the legislation.

25 Finally, let me say this. The question posed is,

1 is there a private right of action, is there an implied
2 private right of action, but that is a very, very narrow 3 question. The question really should be, is there a private 4 right of action having certain dimensions?

5 For example, there is no guidance whatsoever in 6 this statute for a determination, as was present in the case
7 of Ocville, as to what standard of liability should exist, 8 what measure of culpability is required for this action. If 9 we go back to the District Court in this case, where 10 negligence is alleged, I would move to dismiss on the 11 grounds that bad faith had not been alledged. But I have no
12 guidance. The District Court will have none. It is too 13 simplistic a question to ask whether a private right of 14 action is implied, I submit.

15 I will say one final point, if I may, in answer to 16 the question posed by Mr. Justice White earlier on. I think 17 there must be affirmative evidence to create the action. We 18 cannot invert the burden of inquiry, as occurred here.

19 I don't wish to intrude upon the time of counsel
20 to argue for the brokers, unless there be any questions.
21 Perhaps I should say further intrude.

22 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Sandweg?

23 ORAL ARGUMENT OF GERARD K. SANDWEG, JR., ESQ.,

24 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

25 MR. SANDWEG: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please

1 the Court, the question to be decided by the Court is in 2 what forum under the Commodity Exchange Act as enacted by 3 Congress can a private party obtain redress for alleged 4 violations of the Commodity Exchange Act?

5 QUESTION: Against whom?

6 MR. SANDWEG: Against, in this case, a futures 7 commission merchant, and in the consolidated cases that we 8 have here also an exchange.

9 QUESTION: Right.

10 MR. SANDWEG: Otherwise stated, the issue is 11 whether Congress created a private right of action for 12 violation of the particular sections of the Commodity
13 Exchange Act.

14 I think first we have to focus on the statute as 15 it now exists, and see its application to the facts here at 16 issue.

17 QUESTION: Could I just make sure --

18 MR. SANDWEG: Yes, sir.

19 QUESTION: -- with these parties involved, was 20 there a reparations remedy?

21 MR. SANDWEG: No party filed for reparations.

22 QUESTION: But is there one under the statute or 23 not?

24 MR. SANDWEG: Your Honor, we believe that there is 25 one.

1 QUESTION: Your colleagues on the other side are 2 to the contrary, I take it.

3 MR. SANDWEG: My colleagues are to the contrary.

4 QUESTION: All right. Thank you.

5 MR. SANDWEG: The statute here expresses 6 Congress's decision as to how to regulate the nation's 7 commodities and markets. To put its decision into effect,
8 we have the Commodity Exchange Act. It is a multi-faceted
9 regulatory system. The exchanges regulate their members, 10 including the broker petitioners, through their bylaws,
11 rules, and disciplinary proceedings.

12 Over everything, however, is the Commodity Futures
13 Trading Commission. It can compel the adoption, 14 modification, or repeal of an exchange's rules and 15 regulations. It exercises oversight and appellate 16 jurisdiction over the self-regulatory entities. It is 17 empowered to participate directly in regulatory and 18 enforcement matters, and indeed, it routinely does so.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Sandweg, excuse me for 20 interrupting, but on the reparations point -- you say there 21 is a reparations remedy -- am I right in believing that the 22 Commission takes the position there is none?

23 MR. SANDWEG: The Commission takes the position
24 that there is none.

25 QUESTION: Well, if they take the position there

1 is none, and they deny all claims of this kind, and there is 2 no review of it, how can it be an effective remedy?

3 MR. SANDWEG: Your Honor, I think that it is not 4 fair to say that there is no review. The provisions of the 5 administrative --

6 QUESTION: Well, if they say there is no remedy,
7 that is a reviewable decision if somebody filed there?

8 MR. SANDWEG: Your Honor, we believe it is. We 9 think that a decision that there is no reparations right is 10 appealable to the courts under both the Administrative 11 Procedure Act and under fundamental notions of due process,
12 if the Commission were to take that view, which it 13 apparently does.

14 The Commission here has been highly visible in 15 what it has done. The exchange, acting in its 16 self-regulatory role, held price and penalty hearings to 17 compensate those persons who had defaulted, and penalized 18 the defaulting parties. The Business Conduct Committee of 19 the exchange held hearings regarding violations of the 20 exchange rules. The CFTC conducted an extensive 21 investigation and instituted disciplinary proceedings 22 against the exchange and the short sellers, but not against 23 the brokers.

24 Our position is that the Respondents, had they 25 been so inclined, could have instituted reparations

1 proceedings, and upon proof of the claimed violations,
2 obtained an award for their damages.

3 In short, the regulatory scheme enacted by 4 Congress and in place provides a comprehensive system for 5 discipline of wrongdoers and compensation of victims.

6 Now, let us turn to the Respondents who 7 participated in the market and here claim damages. They 8 claim they are entitled to damages in a federal lawsuit not 9 only on the basis of the antitrust violations which they 10 claim, but also on the basis of an implied private right of 11 action which they contend are implicit in the Commodity
12 Exchange Act.

13 We submit the implied right of action does not 14 exist on two bases. The first and the controlling basis is 15 that it simply was not created by Congress. We believe, 16 however, in case one questions does this make sense, that 17 the fact of the reparations remedy explains but does not 18 control over our position.

19 The burden here is on the Respondents to 20 demonstrate affirmative Congressional intent to create the 21 remedy. None of the Respondents have done this, because 22 they can't.

23 QUESTION: Mr. Sandweg, let me ask you a question 24 somewhat akin to what Justice Powell asked previous 25 counsel. There is much talk in the record and in the

1 statute itself about "manipulative devices". What is a
2 manipulative device? How do you prove it? Is it
3 negligence? Is it bad faith?

4 MR. SANDWEG: The court decisions on the question
5 of the existence of manipulation are numerous and generally 6 they refer to it as anything that the mind of man can 7 imagine. Therefore, the question of what is manipulative is 8 not at all well defined. It is not a scorecard where you 9 can go to to check off the indicia and say that you have or 10 do not have manipulation.

11 QUESTION: Well, how does a judge charge a jury, 12 then, as to whether or not they should find on the evidence 13 that this was or was not a manipulative device?

14 MR. SANDWEG: I have not seen the jury
15 instructions in the cases that have come out.

16 QUESTION: Well, but in a typical case.

17 MR. SANDWEG: I am not sure. I think it is most 18 difficult to actually prove a manipulation of a commodities 19 market, because of the fact you have so many forces of 20 supply and demand meeting. There can be simple questions of 21 manipulation. For example, the corner, where someone 22 controls the entire supply, and controls that supply other 23 than through a legal way.

24 QUESTION: To a certain extent, everybody is 25 trying to manipulate, aren't they?

1 MR. SANDWEG: That's true, Your Honor. Everyone
2 is attempting to participate in the price discovery process
3 by buying or selling for a price they determine to be 4 appropriate.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Sandweg, the description Judge
6 Friendly gave us of the transaction here, would that fall 7 within your definition of a manipulative device? On the 8 potatoes?

9 MR. SANDWEG: Your Honor, I think the question of 10 manipulation of the potatoes market is a very difficult 11 factual question which isn't here. Certainly the --

12 QUESTION: I know it is not, but I am just asking 13 whether the description Judge Friendly gave us in page after 14 page after page --

15 MR. SANDWEG: From Judge Friendly's description, 16 there were two major forces moving in the marketplace. Our 17 client fortunately was not one of them. It would appear 18 that they could be characterized as manipulation, but 19 whether or not that is a proper legal conclusion, I don't 20 speak to today. I think it is a very difficult fact 21 question, and one of the reasons we think the CFTC exists is 22 to resolve that very difficult fact question, where they 23 have the advantage of the particular knowledge of what can 24 and cannot be manipulative in commodities markets.

25 In 1936, Congress passed a comprehensive law to

1 regulate a marketplace which has, had, and continues to have 2 a major effect on interstate commerce. Its concern was 3 protecting the nation's economy. The language of the 4 Commodity Exchange Act in 1936, when the operative sections 5 at issue were passed, has not one word suggestive of an 6 intent to create a right of action. The legislative history 7 likewise has not one word.

8 Because of Congressional concern that federal 9 pre-emption might occur with respect to individual conduct,
10 it preserved under Section 4c the right to bring actions
11 under state law in state courts. In 1974, the Commodity
12 Exchange Act was amended, but it was not re-enacted. None 13 of the amendments created a private right of action.

14 The legislative history of the 1974 amendments
15 tells us nothing about any 1974 amendment which would create 16 a private right of action. The twig on which the CFTC has 17 asked this Court to hang its hat is a jurisdictional savings
18 clause which, as the Touche case teaches us, cannot create a 19 right of action.

20 The remaining legislative history, ambiguous at 21 best, tells us nothing except for perhaps a limited 22 knowledge of what courts had done between 1936 and 1974, 23 but courts cannot create private rights of action. At best,
24 they can examine statutory language and legislative history
25 and find that Congress implicitly created the right. No

1 court had done that prior to 1974.

2 This Court has asked whether or not Cort v. Ash
3 compels a different analysis. I think the Court --

4 QUESTION: You suggest, then, that Rigsby was just 5 way out of bounds?

6 MR. SANDWEG: I think Mr. Hegarty's presentation
7 of Rigsby is correct, but I think that Rigsby no longer 8 speaks to the current situation.

9 QUESTION: So your answer is, yes, Rigsby was just 10 wrong?

11 MR. SANDWEG: I think it was wrong. The 4b here, 12 the Court also asked whether or not 4b was limited, and I 13 think that is very important to this case. 4b speaks to 14 broker-customer relations. It does not speak to the kind of 15 relationship between the broker members here and the 16 claimants. They are not customers of any brokers. And as 17 Judge Friendly pointed out, the crabbed language of 4b is 18 difficult to interpret, but I think the only proper 19 interpretation is, it reaches a broker-customer claim.

20 We have mentioned that we think that reparations 21 are important not because they upheld the decision, but 22 rather because they respond to the argument that is here 23 that there should be a remedy, but our system is one which 24 Congress gives the remedy. Equally important, the factual 25 predicate for that argument is not here. We think the 1 remedy of reparations is available to these people.

2 Reparations reaches persons registered and 3 required to register, and affords a comprehensive remedy 4 system for violations. Section 13a of the Act, which 5 already existed, reaches deeply into those associated with 6 wrongdoing and allows them to be proceeded against as 7 principals.

8 As our brief discusses, we believe full relief is 9 available to those injured by a violation of the Commodity
10 Exchange Act.

11 If the Court has no questions, I will reserve the 12 remaining time and use it if necessary. Thank you.

13 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

14 Mr. Toboroff.

15 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LEONARD TOBOROFF, ESQ.,

16 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

17 MR. TOBOROFF: Mr. Justice, Mr. Chief Justice, and 18 may it please the Court, so far in the presentations so far,
19 facts have been withheld by the defendants, understandably 20 so because they are crucial to the application of this 21 Court's standards to this statute determining legislative 22 intent. The facts are these.

23 In a limited and perishable commodity, potatoes, 24 manipulators named Simplot and Taggares oversold the entire 25 crop threefold. They never intended to liquidate it. Their

1 contracts -- to take delivery of their short sales, and as a
2 result they artificially depressed the price, irrespective 3 of the normal supply and demand factors, which are what the 4 commodity futures markets have the right to expect.

5 In short, they and their brokers fixed the market
6 and ultimately destroyed it, in full view of the exchange, 7 which knowingly permitted it.

8 The plaintiffs are entitled to deal with a free 9 and fair futures market pursuant to the Congressional 10 purpose and in accordance with the legislative scheme.
11 Instead, they were thrown into a fixed market manipulated by 12 Simplot, Taggares, and others who are not before this Court 13 in this process, and not subject at all to reparations,
14 incidentally, and who have carefully and tactically absented
15 themselves from this Court here, but their conduct is not 16 absent.

17 No one challenges that the conduct violated the 18 statute. No one challenges that the market was polluted in 19 violation of the Congressional purpose. Those facts 20 delineating that conduct by those people are set forth in 21 exhaustive detail by Judge Friendly below in the record, at 22 Pages 95 through 105 of the Joint Appendix, and I will 23 refrain from repeating any of them, but will rely on that 24 exposition, and note that if Judge Friendly is reversed, 25 those major manipulators will go scot free, leaving their

1 victims behind them, and if the purpose of the Congress, the 2 purpose that Congress expressed when it amended or 3 re-enacted the statute will also be frustrated, and the 4 legislative scheme will be robbed of one of its crucial
5 pieces that make up its symmetry, which is the private right
6 of action.

7 I think at this point I should first briefly
8 address the question that Mr. Justice Powell asked with 9 respect to the 1936 statute. In 1974, sir, Congress 10 switched its theory. They changed from allowing the 11 exchanges to regulate themselves through self-regulation to 12 compulsory regulation at the behest of the newly created 13 CFTC. One Congressman described the self-regulation as "fox 14 in the chicken coop" regulation, and switching the theory 15 brings us right up to speed with 1974. We have to look at 16 the legislative intent in 1974.

17 When that happened, when they switched their 18 theory, the exchanges promptly went to Congress and said, 19 well, give us immunity. We want immunity from the private 20 right of action. Congress didn't grant them that immunity.
21 That is the theory that came into being in 1974, so we have 22 a turnover from 1936 into 1974, compelling us to examine 23 1974, and we would concede that that is the legislative 24 history that needs to be examined.

25 QUESTION: Would you say that if there had never

1 been any court cases on private causes of action prior to 2 1974, and the question arose first after 1974 as to whether 3 the exchanges were subject to suit in a private cause of 4 action, would you say that you win or lose?

5 MR. TOBOROFF: Are you asking, sir, if this case
6 arose, the statute came down in 1974 --

7 QUESTION: Suppose this very case that we have 8 arose, and the only thing that is different is that there
9 never had been any judicial judgments about private causes 10 of action prior to 1974.

11 MR. TOBOROFF: We would still have the private 12 right of action, because we had something else in addition 13 to the unbroken chain of eleven to fourteen decisions. We 14 have 50 years of Congressional experience, starting in 1921, 15 as to major market manipulations. This is not like the 16 Curran situation, the customer-broker. We have a situation 17 where from 1921 on Congress focused concern on the major 18 market manipulators. They named some of them in some of the 19 Congressional testimony. I can't remember their names. I
20 remember one, Arthur Cutten, I think. But they named a 21 bunch of them, and they focused their concern on that 22 person, or that group of persons, who through large 23 concentrations of money could throw an entire market out of 24 whack.

25 Congress was not writing on a blank slate. It had

1 all kinds of experience. I submit that that is what the 2 recent cases hold. The defendants would have us believe 3 that you have to look at the statutory language and stop.
4 If there is not any explicit statutory language, that is 5 it. Transamerica teaches differently. Transamerica says 6 you can go to the structure of the statute and to the 7 circumstances of its enactment, which is the legislative 8 history.

9 Judge Friendly had the Transamerica, Touche Ross, 10 and Cannon in front of him when he went through this, and he 11 used those cases, that 1979 triad of cases, to support, very 12 painstakingly, support his inevitable conclusion that there 13 was a private right of action in accordance with the 14 standards set forth by this Court.

15 Now, there have been about six, I think -- I will 16 take a guess and say six -- decisions since the 1979 triad.
17 They don't change the standards.

18 QUESTION: But your theory is, as I understand it, 19 that because of the unbroken line of judicial precedent you
20 refer to, and because of the legislative history of the 1974
21 amendments, that Congress thereby expressed its intent with 22 respect to a private cause of action. Isn't that your 23 theory?

24 MR. TOBOROFF: Well --

25 QUESTION: And that there should be a private

1 cause of action against the exchanges.

2 MR. TOBOROFF: There should be --

3 QUESTION: Isn't that what you say Congress said 4 in 1974?

5 MR. TOBOROFF: That there should be a private 6 right of action?

7 QUESTION: So that it is completely irrelevant
8 since that time how you would come out under Cort v. Ash or 9 Transamerica or anything else. The question was settled in 10 1974. Congress said the courts have said this was our 11 intention, they were quite right, we refuse to disturb it, 12 that is the end of it.

13 MR. TOBOROFF: A bit more. Congress justifiably 14 could and justifiably did assume that the private right of 15 action was in place --

16 QUESTION: And did not disturb it.

17 MR. TOBOROFF: -- and did not disturb it, but more 18 than that. I say a bit more because I am returning, I 19 think, to Mr. Justice Rehnquist's question. He asked, was 20 there a Supreme Court decision, and there was, and it was 21 Deaktor, and it was explained, the Deaktor case. Now, 22 everybody has made light of the Deaktor case. I think 23 Deaktor deserves a bit more attention. Not whether or not 24 Deaktor was wrong. Deaktor implicitly recognized the 25 private right of action. Not whether or not it was wrong,

1 but it was a United States Supreme Court decision decided on 2 December 3rd, 1973, just ten days before Representative Poge
3 opened the Congressional hearings with the statement that --

4 QUESTION: Deaktor was not a Supreme Court of the 5 United States case. It was cert denied, wasn't it?

6 MR. TOBOROFF: No, Deaktor -- there was a
7 memorandum opinion in Deaktor on December 3, 1974, I
8 believe. I am sure.

9 When that case came down, ten days later, Chairman
10 Poge opened the hearings and emphasized to the entire House, 11 and I am quoting, "Courts have implied a private remedy for 12 individual litigants under the Commodity Exchange Act."

13 Now, even if Deaktor was wrong, and I don't think 14 it was -- I think it was right -- but even if it was wrong, 15 Congress understood that the courts, including the United 16 States Supreme Court, had the question before it, and 17 everyone had recognized, without a hint of a dissent, that 18 there was a private right of action, and that is when 19 Congress set down --

20 QUESTION: But you must take the next step from 21 that and say that Congress also must be understood in 1974 22 to have said, and the courts have been quite right as to 23 what our intention was, that there is a private cause of 24 action.

25 MR. TOBOROFF: Congress had -- pardon me --

1 QUESTION: In 1974, Congress in effect said, I
2 think you submit, that the courts have correctly understood 3 what our intention was in 1936, that there is a private 4 cause of action available.

5 MR. TOBOROFF: I didn't put it that way. I will 6 agree with you, but I didn't put it that way.

7 QUESTION: Well, it might be even better for you 8 if you did.

9 (General laughter.)

10 MR. TOBOROFF: In that case, I will take the next 11 question.

12 QUESTION: Because aren't you saying that Congress 13 not only didn't disturb what the courts have said, but 14 recognized the validity of the courts' approach?

15 MR. TOBOROFF: Right. As Judge --

16 QUESTION: You submit the question is over with.

17 MR. TOBOROFF: All the remedies were in place 18 then, in 1936.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Toboroff?

20 MR. TOBOROFF: Yes, sir.

21 QUESTION: Let's get back to the hypothetical that 22 Justice White asked, which was, let's assume that there had 23 been no federal court decisions prior to the Act of 1974.
24 On that assumption, where would the burden of proof have 25 lain in this litigation? On you or on your friends over

1 here?

2 MR. TOBOROFF: On my friends over here on my left.

3 QUESTION: What have our cases said about that? I 4 have understood up until today that certainly absent the 5 sort of line of judicial decisions you rely on, if one 6 claimed there was an implied cause of action, that he had 7 the burden of establishing Congressional intent. Didn't 8 Justice Friendly say that in his opinion?

9 MR. TOBOROFF: Yes, sir. My fire and fall back 10 position on that question is this. It depends -- When 11 Congress sits down, it depends what they are writing on, the 12 slate that they are writing on. Even without that line, 13 that chain, that unbroken chain of decisions, even without 14 that, they had the experience. There was a reason that they 15 sat down, 50 years of experience, to protect -- and the 16 purpose was to protect the American consumer through the 17 operation of a fair and free market for the benefit of the 18 investors, the traders that come into that market. There is 19 no market without traders like that. The market simply 20 doesn't exist without speculators.

21 Now, to have -- I think it is quite a fire and 22 fall back position. There were 50 years of experience, more 23 than 50 years. These markets had been polluted many, many 24 times. The proof of the pudding of what I am stating is as 25 follows. After July 8, 1980, after Judge Friendly's

1 decision on July 8, 1980, there has not been another major 2 market manipulation. Up until then, they were legion. Even 3 between -- even after the District Court dismissed the 4 complaints in 1979, bang, along came the silver manipulation.

5 QUESTION: May I try another hypothetical?

6 MR. TOBOROFF: Surely, sir.

7 QUESTION: Let's suppose there were no prior 8 experience whatever, that this was a de novo attempt to 9 regulate the commodities market, and no prior judicial 10 decisions. Where would the burden of proof lie if you filed 11 this complaint?

12 MR. TOBOROFF: I will finally retreat to the 13 recent decisions, but I say that our case is sui generis and 14 miles distant from those decisions, because of those two 15 experiences.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Toboroff, the Deaktor case was an 17 antitrust case, was it not?

18 MR. TOBOROFF: The Deaktor case was -- there were 19 two cases. In the Seventh Circuit, it was recognized that 20 there was a violation of the Commodity Exchange Act, and I 21 can quote you to the section, or the analysis of it which 22 appears in Judge Friendly's decision in the record below, 23 which seems the easiest place to get it.

24 May I come back to that, sir? I have it
25 somewhere, but I --

1 QUESTION: Well, I am looking at the bottom
2 paragraph on Page 14 in 414 US, where it says that, Richey
3 versus Chicago Mercantile Exchange, which was the primary 4 case, "held that an antitrust action against the exchange 5 should have been stayed to afford the Commodity Exchange
6 Commission an opportunity to determine if the challenged
7 conduct of the exchange was in compliance with the statute 8 and with exchange rules. Because administrative 9 adjudication of alleged violations of the CEA and the rules 10 lay at the heart of the task assigned the commission by 11 Congress, we recognize that the court, although retaining 12 final authority to interpret the CEA and the relationship of 13 the antitrust laws should avail itself of the abilities of 14 the commission to unravel the intricate technical facts of 15 the commodity industry and arrive at some judgment as to 16 whether the exchange had conducted itself in compliance with 17 the law."

18 MR. TOBOROFF: That is my point, sir. The very 19 words -- I tried to jot them down fast as read, were 20 "alleged violations of the CEA", which was in the record 21 below, was in the Seventh Circuit, and the repetition of 22 that language by the Supreme Court on December 13 -- 23 December 3 -- pardon me -- 1973, is crucial to the 24 consideration of that case by the House ten days later.

25 That is why I say that it is an important

1 consideration, and that this Court implicitly recognized
2 that, but even if this Court didn't implicitly recognize it,
3 Congress must have understood that it was implicitly
4 recognized by this Court. Therefore, when Congress sat down
5 ten days later, with Deaktor in front of it, they recognized 6 the prior right of action.

7 QUESTION: But the Deaktor case doesn't talk about 8 a private right of action.

9 MR. TOBOROFF: I understand that. My point is a 10 little bit short of that. My point is that Congress
11 understood from a whole line of decisions that there was a 12 private right of action, and then you have Deaktor, which 13 doesn't refute that, where in the Seventh Circuit the 14 allegation is violations of the Commodity Exchange Act 15 against an exchange.

16 QUESTION: Well, but then you say Deaktor is a 17 Supreme Court case.

18 MR. TOBOROFF: The memorandum decision --

19 QUESTION: Which says nothing about an implied
20 right of action.

21 MR. TOBOROFF: I tried to preface that, sir, by 22 saying I wanted to make a bit more of that case than what it
23 is, because of the time frame in which it came down. If I
24 didn't articulate that properly, I would like to do it now.
25 My reason for bearing in on that a little heavy was the time

1 frame that it came down and what Congress could have 2 reasonably been given to understand as to whether or not 3 there is a private right of action.

4 QUESTION: Well, they presumably could read it for 5 themselves, couldn't they?

6 MR. TOBOROFF: Yes, sir, and the Seventh Circuit
7 decision as well.

8 QUESTION: And which would they have taken to be 9 the law?

10 MR. TOBOROFF: They would have taken to be the 11 law, I respectfully submit, that there was a private right
12 of action --

13 QUESTION: Well, they would have taken to be the 14 law the Supreme Court decision, not the Seventh Circuit
15 decision.

16 MR. TOBOROFF: The Supreme Court decision did not 17 overrule the allegations of violations against the -- under 18 the Commodity Exchange Act against the exchange that were in 19 the Seventh Circuit.

20 QUESTION: Well, it does more than that. It
21 implicitly sustained them, because it remanded and said
22 abstain rather than dismiss, and if there was no private 23 cause of action, they would have dismiss. Isn't that right?

24 MR. TOBOROFF: Yes, sir.

25 I would also like to meet head-on, as Judge

1 Friendly did in the question raised by Mr. Justice Powell 2 where the statute doesn't utter a single word in its 3 language. As I say, you must go through that language. You
4 must look at everything, and concluding from that language
5 that there is a private right of action.

6 The exchange in its reply brief wants to stop at 7 the front door of the language in the statute, and they wind 8 it up by sort of a little bit of a scare tactic, saying that 9 if we don't stop here, we are going to have a lot of clogged 10 dockets. There are going to be a lot of lawsuits. They are 11 asking for, it seems to me, a little bit of judicial 12 legislation today, something they couldn't get in 1974 when 13 Congress switched the theory from self-regulation to 14 compulsory regulation, and I rather think that isn't 15 entirely true.

16 I rather think that the way to empty the dockets
17 is just to affirm Judge Friendly's decision. There are no 18 more major market manipulations, and there won't be a lot of 19 cases because there won't be any manipulations. I think 20 that is the best way to do it, and I think that is what 21 Congress intended, and I think that in the Congressional 22 scheme, the legislative scheme and the Congressional 23 purpose, the private right of action was one of the 24 principal spokes in the wheel that Congress always 25 understood to be there.

1 QUESTION: Do you think that 10b(5) Cardon
2 decision in 1946 emptied the docket?

3 MR. TOBOROFF: I would say, first of all, the 4 commodity markets are a great deal different than the 5 security markets. The security laws are the closest 6 analogue, and I agree to that, but I would say or I would 7 ask Lord knows how many manipulations in the securities 8 markets we would have if manipulators of those markets were 9 not responsible in United States courts.

10 I can't see any kind of a -- if they had a 11 reparations provision under the securities laws, I would 12 presume that the same thing would happen there that is 13 happening here. It is a limited, small claims type of 14 remedy that doesn't reach the people like Simplot and 15 Taggares. They go away scot free to do other manipulations 16 in other markets. They are not liable to any redress from 17 the victims that they plucked, and if you affirm Judge
18 Friendly today, Simplot and Taggares, for instance, will not 19 manipulate another potato market. Other manipulators of 20 soybeans, silver, porkbellies, orange juice, they won't 21 manipulate those markets, because they will be subject to 22 the only true economic incentive redress that can be brought 23 to bear against him, and that is by the private litigant.

24 QUESTION: Why then don't these private litigant 25 suits stop manipulations? Cardon was decided in 1946, and

1 the suits have been legion since then.

2 MR. TOBOROFF: I think in 10b(5), as I say, the 3 securities markets are a little different from the 4 commodities markets. I am not arguing in the customer 5 account here. Most of the legion of cases under 10b(5) are 6 these customer account cases. They are not broad market
7 manipulations where, for instance, the price of coffee goes 8 up from 80 cents to $5.40 a pound inside of two months, or 9 where the price of silver goes from $4 an ounce to $52 an 10 ounce inside of five or six months.

11 QUESTION: And then back.

12 MR. TOBOROFF: Right, and almost taking down the 13 securities markets and brokerage firms with it. That -- 14 What is at stake here in Leist against Simplot, in this 15 case, these three consolidated cases, is the manipulation of 16 a vast national market, affecting the national economy, if 17 you will, not the squabble between the customer and his 18 broker. I submit that most of the legion of cases that you 19 will find in the securities laws are the squabbling type, 20 where somebody has lost $50,000 or $100,000 and goes and 21 gets a lawyer, and there is a private right of action.

22 Here, that is basically the Sixth Circuit case,
23 that is basically the Fifth Circuit case, but it isn't this 24 case. This case deals with what is really at stake in this 25 statute. These are the very evils that Congress tried to

1 prevent in 1974 and had a 50-year history of. I am
2 practically giving you 1974 facts in 1976. It is 3 practically in materia, in para materia, and it is not 4 sleight of hand. It actually happened. Congress didn't 5 know that these people would go out and manipulate the 6 potato market in 1976, but they knew from 50 years of 7 experience that other markets had been manipulated all along 8 the line.

9 QUESTION: They saw all that going on and they 10 didn't express one word about creating a private right of 11 action.

12 MR. TOBOROFF: Because in 1974, when they sat down 13 to write the law, they had every reason to expect, 14 justifiably expect, and did justifiably expect that the 15 private right of action was in place. Exchanges, brokers, 16 futures commission merchants asked them about it, and it
17 stayed in there. All kinds of testimony -- in the closing 18 statement, I think, on September 9, 1974, Chairman Talmadge, 19 the head of the Senate Committee, said that -- he was 20 talking about the various remedies that were provided by the 21 new Act. He said, they will not interfere with the courts 22 in any way. That alone, if you followed the recent 23 decisions of this Court, that alone seems to me to be fatal 24 to the proposition that there is not enough legislative 25 intent to find a private right of action here.

1 If you get into the legislative intent, the 2 defendants are swamped, and they lose. It is full of 3 legislative intent, and talking about the standards that 4 have to be applied, I believe --

5 QUESTION: Mr. Toboroff, can you tell me why you 6 don't pursue your reparations remedy?

7 MR. TOBOROFF: Reparations remedies, sir, are 8 meaningless as to us, probably as to Mr. Curran as well, but 9 certainly as to us. Simplot and Taggares are non-registered 10 persons. They are not amenable to the reparations procedure.

11 QUESTION: And the exchange isn't?

12 MR. TOBOROFF: The exchange isn't, either, but the 13 exchange stood there and watched this happen. The facts are 14 in Judge Friendly's record. They could have stopped it nine 15 days earlier, and so could the CFTC, but they let it go on, 16 and --

17 QUESTION: Well, Friendly thought there was no
18 reparation available against the exchange then.

19 MR. TOBOROFF: There is not. There is not. Mr.
20 Leist could not go and sue the exchange for the half a 21 million dollars or so that he lost. He could not go to 22 reparations and sue Simplot and Taggares. That is a laugh, 23 as far as they are concerned. They are sitting around,
24 waiting to see how this decision comes down. They haven't 25 manipulated any potato markets since Judge Friendly's

1 decision, but they did manipulate one back in 1971, on the 2 Chicago Mercantile Exchange, in the same fashion.

3 The fact of the matter is that given all of the -- 4 there was no lawsuit brought for that one, but given all of 5 these circumstances, the slate that Congress was writing on,
6 and the reparations question is a heavy question because it
7 has been decided up and down. It is a remedy that supplants 8 private right of action. Actually, it was an addition to 9 it, and that is clear from the testimony in the House and 10 the Senate, the hearings in the Senate.

11 The fact of the matter is that if the only thing 12 that the plaintiffs had were access to reparations, they 13 would have nothing. Simplot and Taggares, any major market
14 manipulator could manipulate a market and just go away scot
15 free, and nothing could be done. There would be no right -- 16 if there were no right of action against them in the United 17 States court under the Commodity Exchange Act, there would 18 be nothing left.

19 QUESTION: That is because they are not 20 registered. Is that the reason?

21 MR. TOBOROFF: That is because they are not 22 registered, and that is because Congress didn't choose to 23 register them, because there was a private right of action 24 against them. Congress chose to register people and 25 supplier registration -- reparations remedy much in what the

1 Solicitor General's brief for the CFTC calls a small claims
2 procedure, quick, to the point, expeditious. That hasn't 3 happened, either, but that is not the point.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Toboroff --

5 MR. TOBOROFF: Yes, sir.

6 QUESTION: -- in your brief, one of the main 7 points -- Page 22 is where it commences -- you state that 8 Congress did not by today's standards know how to imply a 9 private remedy even if it wished to. If it wished to 10 provide a remedy, would it not have done so exclusively?

11 MR. TOBOROFF: My point is, they applied a private 12 remedy in 1974 the way the private remedies were applied.
13 They couldn't know in 1974 that there would be the 1979
14 triad, and that the Court would now be wrestling at the end
15 of the 1981 term -- 1980 term, pardon me, and the beginning 16 of the 1981 term with the question. Fortunately or 17 unfortunately, this is the first commodity case. This is a 18 sui generis case. This does not go to the -- has no close
19 analogue to the six or seven recent decisions since the 1979 20 triad.

21 They have some analogue in that they are 22 securities cases, although there was no -- there was a blank 23 slate on those and they were considering Acts in 1934 or 24 1940 that were well prior to the expansion era of 25 undertaking the judicial implication which started, as I

1 think Justice Rehnquist pointed out, in 1946 with the Cardon
2 case, and reached full flower with Borak, but if you take 3 Borak as the starting point, 1964, and go from Borak to Cort 4 against Ash in 1975, those eleven years, you have those 5 eleven years, and you have a situation like the modern 6 statute, where you have a 50-year history, and where you 7 have an unbroken chain of decisions -- whether they are 8 right or wrong, Congress is aware of those decisions, and 9 you have those two items when Congress sits down in those 10 eleven years. It is a sui generis case. It is just, as I 11 said, miles apart from the recent decisions. This is the 12 only chance that the Court has to apply its standards to 13 this particular Act, naturally, because this is the only 14 case, these two cases, but -- these consolidated cases for 15 which I am arguing here have broader questions than simply 16 4b.

17 QUESTION: In other words, you are saying Cort v.
18 Ash and its progeny changed the law.

19 MR. TOBOROFF: I -- changed the law? They 20 narrowed the standards, is what they did. Yes, if Congress
21 sat down -- not Cort v. Ash specifically, because after Cort 22 v. Ash, Your Honor noted in Cannon in your dissent that 23 there were, I think 20 was the number, circuit courts of 24 appeals that had implied private rights of action. It
25 really wasn't until 1979. Certainly in 1975 after the Cort

1 against Ash decision, some smart Congressional staffers 2 could have perked up their ears and written a little better,
3 but I think if I were standing here and talking about a 1976
4 statute, I would be trying to stretch it to 1979, is what I 5 am saying, but I don't have to do that. I got -- I am in 6 before Cort against Ash.

7 In conclusion, I would just like to emphasize that 8 the exchanges are here today really asking for a little bit 9 of judicial exculpation -- exculpation by way of judicial 10 legislation from something that Congress wouldn't give them 11 in 1974 when it switched its theory from self-regulation, 12 from fox in the chicken coop self-regulation to compulsory 13 regulation, and I think that based on all of the cases, 14 based on the standards as they exist today, enunciated here, 15 the Court has to conclude that Judge Friendly should be 16 affirmed.

17 Thank you.

18 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Sandweg, you have eight 19 minutes left.

20 ORAL ARGUMENT OF GERARD K. SANDWEG, JR., ESQ.,

21 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS - REBUTTAL

22 MR. SANDWEG: Thank you, Your Honor.

23 Justice Stevens, you asked about the Deaktor
24 case. I think it is important to this Court to understand
25 first, as has been ably pointed out, this Court's decision

1 had nothing to do with the private right of action. That wa
2 the Seventh Circuit's decision.

3 QUESTION: It is true that the remand by this 4 Court wouldn't have made any sense unless this Court assumed 5 there was a private cause of action.

6 MR. SANDWEG: It remanded it first to the agency 7 to determine whether or not it was an action, presumably 8 that would have followed from that remand.

9 QUESTION: But it didn't order dismissal.

10 MR. SANDWEG: It did not order dismissal. That is 11 correct. But the use of Deaktor here is to illuminate what 12 Congress knew when it enacted the 1974 Act, and our point is 13 that the 1974 Act and Congress's knowledge of Deaktor in 14 1974 is not relevant to this Court's inquiry about this.
15 The question here is what the Congress did in 1936 when it 16 enacted the operative language alleged to give rise to the 17 right of action.

18 When Deaktor was cited to the Court -- to the 19 Congress in 1974, it was not cited to Congress to show the 20 existence of a private right of action. The purpose of it 21 being cited was to show the application of the antitrust 22 laws. Thus, whatever the Seventh Circuit may have held, or 23 whatever the implications of this Court's decision may have 24 been, they do not give rise to Congressional knowledge in 25 1974 even if that knowledge were relevant, which we claim

1 that it is not.

2 Secondly, the question of reparations
3 availability. We believe Section 13a of the Act must be 4 considered with care in analyzing whether or not reparations 5 are available to persons in this case. My own client has 6 had a reparations claim filed with the Commodity Futures
7 Trading Commission which the commission has forwarded to us,
8 which is the way the commssion initiates the proceeding,
9 having determined that the claim, so to speak, states a 10 claim. That is by a non-customer, just as Mr. Toboroff's 11 clients are non-customers.

12 The reparations availability as to Messrs Simplot
13 and Taggares have to be read under 13a, which talks about 14 anyone who commands, induces, et cetera, a violation of the 15 Act is liable in an administrative proceeding as a 16 principal. We submit that reparations are an administrative 17 proceeding under the Act quite clearly, and therefore a 18 person in the character of Messrs. Simplot and Taggares, who 19 were alleged to have violated the Act, would be liable on 20 reparations.

21 In addition, much has been made as if Mr. Simplot 22 and Mr. Taggares had not been punished by this Act. Quite 23 the contrary is true. The exchange imposed massive 24 penalties against them, in addition to CFTC imposed 25 long-term suspensions from trading on these individuals.

1 Moreover, Mr. Toboroff continues under Judge Mansfield's 2 decision to have available his antitrust claims against 3 them, which remain pending in the District Court. Thus, 4 they were severely penalized under a statute designed by 5 Congress to accomplish exactly what it accomplished.

6 If there are no further questions, we thank the 7 Court for its indulgence.

8 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen. The 9 case is submitted.

10 (Whereupon, at 2:59 o'clock p.m., the case in the 11 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
