1 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: You may proceed
2 whenever you are ready.

3 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAURENCE H. TRIBE, ESQ.

4 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

5 MR. TRIBE: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and 6 may it please the Court.

7 This case brings to the Court a judgment of 8 the California Court of Appeal upholding an amendment to 9 the California Constitution. Proposition One enacted a 10 special statewide election to, and I quote from the 11 analysis of the Legislative Analyst, "limit the power of 12 California Courts to require desegregation."

13 Proposition One expressly linked --

14 QUESTION: That was written in terms of 15 limited as between the California standards or the 16 federal standards?

17 MR. TRIBE: Clearly they wanted to link it to 18 the federal standards. What is intriguing about the 19 case is whether it is permissible for a state, in its 20 constitution which provides generous protection for 21 educational equality across the board, to single out the 22 right not to be subject to what the California Courts 23 have called racial isolation, and to single it out by 24 saying that as to that right, the only remedies
25 available are those that a Federal Court, in the same

1 circumstances, would order.

2 We submit that that is not permissible, and the 3 Petitioners in this case --

4 QUESTION: Isn't the corollary to that that 5 states must have the same standards as the federal?

6 MR. TRIBE: No, not at all, Mr. Chief Justice.

7 QUESTION: It is a ratchet that only goes one 8 way?

9 MR. TRIBE: If the states wanted to cut back on 10 their equal protection clause in a neutral way, and to 11 say, in general, they will not go beyond the federal 12 Constitution, that would surely be permissible. The 13 State of California has not done that.

14 The State of California, as the decision below 15 expressly holds, continues to create rights to be free 16 of racially segregated schooling regardless of cause 17 broader than the rights that are conferred under federal 18 law. The rights, substantively, have been completely 19 unchanged by Proposition One. Moreover, the court below 20 held that the duty on the school board to take 21 affirmative steps, including mandatory pupil 22 reassignment if and when necessary, remains.

23 What is now different, and it is different only 24 with respect to desegregation, not with respect to 25 school finance or any other area. What is different is

1 that with respect to school desegregation now, after 2 Proposition One, one cannot use the Courts of California
3 to get any and all necessary remedies. One must limit 4 oneself to those remedies that a federal court, with all 5 of the institutional limits on federal courts, would 6 order in that very case.

7 QUESTION: Is it analogous to a State
8 Norris-LaGuardia Act?

9 MR. TRIBE: It is analogous, I think, to a 10 state racially specific Norris LaGuardia Act that says 11 in, for example, racial labor disputes, as opposed to 12 other labor disputes, the state courts cannot enter 13 certain remedies unless federal courts would do so.

14 It seems to me that the closest analogy is 15 really in this case clearly Hunter v. Erickson, but in a 16 way this case is a lot worse than Hunter v. Erickson for 17 this reason: What is important in this case is not the 18 sort of education that the petitioners, the minority 19 students of Los Angeles, are receiving or will receive 20 as a result of Proposition One. That matters in the 21 world, but the legal issue here is somewhat narrower.

22 The legal issue here is not even the degree of 23 racial isolation and separation to which petitioners 24 will be fated by virtue of Proposition One. The issue
25 is the special way in which Proposition One creates a

1 two-track judicial system in California, a dual court
2 system in which only those seeking redress from racial 3 isolation in violation of state law must be satisfied 4 with less than full relief from a state court.

5 They must, instead, persuade the school board,
6 which is typically the defendant in the case, the entity
7 said to be in default of their continuing obligations
8 under state law, that the school board has been remiss 9 in not ordering certain remedies.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Tribe, the proposition doesn't 11 forbid a school board from voluntarily desegregating?

12 MR. TRIBE: No, and indeed, Justice White, that 13 is one of the reasons it is so plain that it is a racial 14 specific classification.

15 QUESTION: So it is different from the 16 Washington.

17 MR. TRIBE: It bears almost no resemblance, in 18 our view, to the Washington case.

19 QUESTION: But if the school board hasn't any 20 duty to desegregate, you agree with that I gather, if 21 there isn't de jure.

22 MR. TRIBE: Under state law, Justice White, it 23 may have a duty even without de jure and that 24 continues.

25 QUESTION: Except for the proposition.

1 MR. TRIBE: Although the court below --
2 QUESTION: The proposition removes the duty
3 that the Supreme Court of California said was -- 4 MR. TRIBE: Justice White, I don't think so.
5 If I may quote from the court below at page 510 of the 6 California Reporter version -- 7 QUESTION: Where is it in the petition for 8 certiorari--
9 MR. TRIBE: In the petition for cert. in 10 the -- could I have that for a moment?
11 QUESTION: I agree, it -- 12 MR. TRIBE: If I could just read, it is a very 13 brief passage, Justice Renquist, so let me read it.
14 "This right," the court is talking about the 15 broader right, "recognized in Crawford has not been 16 removed by Proposition One, which does not purport to 17 change the duty --
18 QUESTION: I agree with you, under state law.
19 MR. TRIBE: -- under state.
20 So what we have here is not the destruction of 21 a right or the changing of a duty, as this court held 22 only last month in Laverne. The fact that a state may 23 be free to remove a right or remove a duty, does not 24 mean that it has the same freedom to leave the right in 25 place but simply, in a discriminatory way we argue,

1 provide less than full judicial remedy.

2 The way Proposition One is written, it 3 distinguishes -- it singles out, let me quote from the 4 Solicitor General, I think there is an accurate
5 rendition of it in this brief, "It singles out a right 6 afforded California school children under state law, 7 admittedly, to attend schools free of racial isolation,
8 whatever the cost, and subjects that right to an unusual 9 judicial process that makes its protection substantially 10 more difficult than protection of other state rights.
11 For example --

12 QUESTION: What you would say, Mr. Tribe, if 13 the proposition had said that it just removes all the 14 duty that was found in Crawford to desegregate, even if 15 it was de facto?

16 MR. TRIBE: It cuts the right back completely.
17 It would be a very different and more difficult, Justice
18 White. There would still be one argument --

19 QUESTION: It is really a lot different -- That 20 is a lot different than what they did. They say, you 21 may have a duty but it is just completely unenforceable 22 in the court.

23 MR. TRIBE: You are supposed to try to enforce 24 it by going to the other side. The referee is replaced 25 with the other team.

1 QUESTION: The way it reads, you think now, if 2 the Crawford and the Crawford rule still stands, there 3 is nothing that a school board can do but to 4 desegregate?

5 MR. TRIBE: They are under an obligation, a 6 duty to desegregate.

7 QUESTION: Exactly.

8 MR. TRIBE: But there is nothing one can do to 9 review in the Courts of California.

10 QUESTION: To say that they are voluntarily
11 doing it is beside the point. They have a duty to do 12 it.

13 MR. TRIBE: They supposedly have a duty to do
14 it. But now, unlike other state duties, this one can't 15 be enforced in the Courts of California.

16 QUESTION: As a practical matter, isn't it 17 sensible to say that a right without a remedy really 18 isn't a right, and that the conclusion Justice White 19 suggests is true, that the right is gone for all 20 practical purposes?

21 MR. TRIBE: Justice Renquist, there are two 22 answers that I have to that. The first is that in this 23 court's approach, for example, to procedural due process 24 cases, it has drawn a sharp distinction between the 25 state's destruction of an interest and the state's

1 statement to someone, "You have this interest property," 2 let us say, "but we will not give you any hearing to 3 protect it."

4 This court has said, it is a matter of 5 Fourteenth Amendment law -- Once the state confers and 6 continues to protect the right by saying that you have 7 it, it is a matter of Fourteenth Amendment law what 8 remedies are adequate for its enforcement.

9 I want to make this second point. Even if it 10 were true that the State of California had taken the 11 further step, which it denies it has taken and which the 12 court below denies, and had surgically removed racial 13 segregation from the list of wrongs in the educational 14 world as to which California law provides a more 15 generous standard by not inquiring into cause, and by 16 allowing a broad range of remedies, including 17 inter-district remedies, that would truly have been the 18 withdrawal on a race specific basis, not on a neutral 19 basis, of one right and one right only. That seems to 20 me, under Hunter v. Erickson, this court is not 21 necessarily prepared to countenance.

22 QUESTION: Then it really is a ratchet because 23 the state can give more and more consideration to 24 desegregation policies going beyond the requirements of 25 the Constitution, but it can never go back.

1 MR. TRIBE: I think that is not right, Justice
2 Renquist, it can go back. If the state were to do
3 something specially for race, we do not deny that it 4 could take that back.

5 If the state were to say, equal educational 6 opportunity across-the-board is crucial, so that when it 7 is denied, we don't care if it is de facto or de jure, 8 and were to give that broad panoply of rights, and then 9 were to say, but now we are going to take it back from 10 one group, racial minorities, that would raise a 11 different problem.

12 It is not a one-way ratchet. It is simply that 13 if the state decides to take something back from 14 minorities only, when it has given on a broader basis, 15 that raises a facially racial classification.

16 QUESTION: How can you say that Crawford gave 17 on a broader basis? What it gave was a right to 18 minorities, was it not?

19 MR. TRIBE: No, I don't think so because 20 Crawford relied also on Serrano v. Priest in which the 21 California Court had compared its approach expressly in 22 the areas of inequality of school finance and racial 23 inequality. It had said that it saw no reason to treat 24 them differently.

25 The federal court, out of reason of deference

1 to the states, the federal court might, for example, not 2 want to provide inter-district remedies, but there is no 3 reason for the states to worry about deferring to 4 themselves. The federal courts might worry about proof
5 of causation, but as far as state law was concerned 6 equality of educational opportunity, when education was 7 made a fundamental right in California, was so basic 8 that it really didn't matter whether there was a 9 deliberate decision to deny equality.

10 So the earlier Crawford decision, building on a 11 decision that the California Supreme Court called 12 Jackson --

13 QUESTION: Jackson was before Serrano?

14 MR. TRIBE: That is right, and then Serrano
15 relied on Jackson and said, "We think that it is a broad 16 principle of California's fundamental rights law with 17 respect to education."

18 But in any event, I think it is important to 19 get back to the point that here it is not just a denial 20 of a right. Indeed, the court below rejected the 21 petitioner's attempt to show that one of the things that 22 was wrong here was that a vested right might have been 23 taken away. The court below said, "No, the right is the 24 same. It is just that this right, unlike other rights, 25 can't be fully enforced."

1 In Hunter v. Erickson, the crucial racial 2 distinction that was drawn, as the court pointed out, 3 was not between blacks and whites, not between various 4 groups of people, religious or racial. The crucial 5 distinction that was drawn, the court said, was between 6 racial housing matters and other racial and housing 7 matters.

8 So that the example that this court gave was 9 that those people, for example, who wanted to pass rent 10 control laws, or laws increasing protection from 11 negligent landlords or building codes, had an easier 12 time vindicating their goals through the state's legal 13 system than did those people who wanted to end racial 14 discrimination in housing.

15 What this measure does, without any doubt, on 16 its face since it refers to school integration, when 17 talking about what school boards can voluntarily do -- 18 what it does without any doubt is create a special 19 obstacle, not just to translating goals of racial 20 equality into not yet existent law that doesn't apply 21 elsewhere, but a special obstacle to vindicating state 22 created rights of racial equality which does not apply 23 when one is trying to vindicate state created rights of 24 educational equality in the financial area, in decisions 25 like Serrano.

1 I do not think that it is right to say that 2 racial animus must be shown in a case like this.
3 Indeed, in Washington v. Davis itself, this court
4 approvingly cited Hunter v. Erickson for the proposition
5 that when a law on its face creates a racial 6 classification that imposes a greater obstacle to racial 7 minorities, or to minority rights, than it does in other 8 analogous areas, at that point one doesn't need to take 9 the next step and show discriminatory intent.

10 Indeed, Justice Powell in his Bakke decision
11 distinguished Arlington v. Heights from an explicit 12 racial classification. The only relevant intent for 13 Fourteenth Amendment purposes is the intent to treat 14 race differently.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Tribe, isn't it at least 16 possible that the Proposition One could affect other 17 types of plaintiffs who would seek busing to remedy a 18 problem?

19 For instance, if California recognized some 20 right of the handicapped to have an equal educational 21 opportunity, and there were only one school that 22 provided that kind of benefit, and plaintiffs might seek 23 busing to afford that remedy, would this proposition 24 affect that possibly?

25 MR. TRIBE: Justice O'Connor, my view is, based

1 on the decision below, that it would not. At least 2 seven times, the Court of Appeal in this case said that 3 Proposition One restricts the use of California's Courts 4 for pupil reassignment only for purposes of 5 desegregation.

1 The school board itself its opposition to 2 certiorari in this Court said at page 9 that Proposition
3 One addresses but one narrow area, the power of a state
4 court to order student assignment as a desegregation 5 remedy. The other Respondent in this case puts that as 6 the question presented, whether a race specific remedy
7 is even permissible under the Constitution.

8 QUESTION: Mr. Tribe, I gather the judgment of 9 the court whose judgment we are reviewing said that they 10 set aside the findings of discriminatory intent?

11 MR. TRIBE: There were no findings below, 12 because the trial judge in this case thought that since 13 a federal court would have ordered desegregation 14 Proposition One didn't matter.

15 QUESTION: In any event, the Court of Appeals 16 thought there was no discriminatory intent.

17 MR. TRIBE: That's right. The Court of 18 Appeals didn't conduct any hearings --

19 QUESTION: So that you must convince us that 20 such findings are not necessary in this case.

21 MR. TRIBE: Well, there are two ways that we 22 can win in this case, Justice White. One is to convince 23 you that since this is an explicit racial classification
24 which imposes an obstacle to the vindication of minority 25 rights, intent is irrelevant. We believe that's clearly

1 right and I want to refer to it.

2 QUESTION: Even -- you wouldn't even say that 3 that is equivalent to discriminatory intent?

4 MR. TRIBE: Well, discriminatory in the sense
5 of intent to have a disparate and adverse impact on a 6 racial minority, not necessarily out of animus and not 7 simply as opposed to sleepwalking, but in the sense that 8 it's not just a statistical connection with race.
9 Obviously, when race is present on the face of the law
10 -- we're not dealing with an Arlington Heights situation 11 or a Washington v. Davis situation, in which a seemingly 12 innocent act happens to have an adverse impact on a 13 racial group.

14 When you have explicit racial classification, 15 as you do here, the relevant purpose is already 16 conclusively demonstrated.

17 QUESTION: What is the racial classification
18 that you have here?

19 MR. TRIBE: The racial classification here is 20 between rights to reduce racial inequality in California 21 schools and other rights relating to the educational 22 system in California.

23 QUESTION: Where do you find that in the 24 initiative?

25 MR. TRIBE: The initiative specifically says

1 that it shall not be construed to prevent a school board
2 from engaging voluntarily in integration. So that this 3 initiative deals with integration on its face, 4 integration and desegregation.

5 At the same time, the official legislative 6 analysis that accompanied it stated that its concern was 7 desegregation. The Solicitor General says it is indeed 8 race specific in the sense that it's focused on the 9 problem of racial isolation in California's schools.

10 But even if it were true that by accident a 11 law plainly designed on its face, since it speaks to 12 integration, to create special limits on the use of 13 California's courts in the desegregation area might 14 happen to have a spillover effect and might happen, I 15 would submit quite inadvertently, to interfere with 16 racial -- with school assignments in the area of 17 handicapped or overcrowding, even if that were to happen
18 that would not in any way affect the proposition that a 19 clear and explicit line is nonetheless drawn between 20 racial inequality in California schools and, for 21 example, economic inequality, something the California 22 courts had treated as entirely analogous.

23 Justice Rehnquist asked in the Seattle case
24 whether it wasn't true, in Hunter v. Erickson, that only 25 fair housing ordinances were subject to the referendum

1 requirement. Well, indeed, it wasn't quite true. It
2 was argued by the City of Akron in its brief and it was 3 undisputed, in its brief in this Court, that some other 4 ordinances, including taxation ordinances, for example, 5 ordinances raising taxes, also had to be subjected to 6 referendum.

7 So it couldn't be said literally that the line
8 put race and only race on one side and everything else 9 on the other.

10 QUESTION: Well, this particular charter
11 amendment did, though.

12 MR. TRIBE: This particular charter amendment
13 did, and we submit that the correct way of reading 14 Proposition One is that it doese and the court below so 15 read it.

16 But I was suggesting earlier that there was 17 another way to win this case, and I would like to turn 18 for a moment to that before I amplify the, we think, 19 serious and rather unique constitutional defect in 20 Proposition One. And that is, with respect to Arlington
21 Heights, not only was there no determination of any kind 22 about racially impermissible impact and purpose by the 23 trial court, because it didn't think Proposition One was 24 even an issue in the case, but the Court of Appeals
25 conducted no inquiry remotely resembling what the Court

1 required in Arlington Heights.

2 The Court of Appeals said that it was a 3 sufficient answer to all of our allegations and all of 4 the evidence that we had yet to introduce to any 5 tribunal, but that is in this record, a sufficient 6 answer that in its face there was written into 7 Proposition One a non-racial purpose.

8 Well, my goodness, if that's all it takes to 9 satisfy Arlington Heights, if all you have to do is say 10 in the law, we're not trying to do this because of race, 11 then Arlington Heights becomes a meaningless 12 precedent.

13 The Court of Appeals went on to say that 14 because the proposition could have been motivated by 15 considerations other than race, it would necessarily be 16 too speculative to conduct a hearing on how in fact it 17 was motivated. Surely that's not the standard that this 18 Court laid down in Arlington Heights.

19 At a minimum, therefore, if the Court were not 20 to agree that this is an impermissible explicit racial 21 classification violative of Hunter, there would have to 22 be either a remand under Arlington Heights or a 23 determination that on this record this is so plainly 24 designed to restrict desegregation, not just to restrict 25 racial balance but to restrict the use of California's

1 courts to achieve desegregation, that it on its face is 2 impermissibly motivated, or that the evidence so clearly 3 shows it to be impermissibly motivated that you don't 4 need a further hearing. But at least we would have been 5 entitled to a remand.

6 QUESTION: You say that in face of the fact 7 that compliance with federal standards and federal 8 courts' orders was implicit in the California No. 1.

9 MR. TRIBE: I say it not so much in the face
10 of that fact, but because of that fact. What is so 11 unusual, Mr. Chief Justice, is that, as this Court has 12 emphasized again and again, typically it is when the 13 federal courts that are unavailable, for whatever 14 reason, for lack of standing or because of deference to 15 the state courts, what is important is that when federal 16 courts are unavailable typically one can vindicate one's 17 rights, state as well as federal, in state court.

18 Now, when does Proposition One limit the 19 ability of a state court fully to vindicate one's rights 20 under state law? Precisely when one couldn't get 21 vindication from a federal court. In other words, this 22 revolving door begins to operate in a race specific way 23 exactly when you need the state courts the most.

24 QUESTION: Well, the reason you can't get 25 relief in the federal court, by your hypothesis, is 1 because no federal right is violated.

2 MR. TRIBE: But Mr. Justice Rehnquist, in the 3 Valley Forge decision you did emphasize that even though
4 there might be a federal right, Article III imposes 5 independent and important limits on the federal courts.
6 The fact that you can't get relief from a federal court 7 may not in itself mean there's no substantive 8 violation.

9 QUESTION: Well, certainly people who claimed 10 they were the victims of de jure segregation have had no 11 difficulty getting relief from the federal courts in the 12 past.

13 MR. TRIBE: Certainly that's right, Justice
14 Rehnquist. But, number one, it might well be that the 15 only effective relief from de jure segregation is an 16 inter-district remedy that this Court under Milliken, 17 partly out of deference to the state courts, would not 18 be willing to give. And yet a California court prior to 19 Proposition One would have had no reluctance to do it.

20 QUESTION: That's an example of a case where 21 you don't have any federal right.

22 MR. TRIBE: But the reason perhaps that you
23 don't have any federal right is deference to states' 24 rights. And it seems to me perverse to make that 25 deference to states' rights the reason for states to 1 close their doors.

2 But what about de facto segregation?

3 California has chosen in the area of education to say 4 what this Court, partly out of institutional and 5 federal-state concern, was unwilling to say in 6 Rodriguez, that education is a fundamental right, 7 therefore that you don't need to show deliberate denial 8 of equality as a matter of California law.

9 The failure to show that would prevent one 10 from getting federal relief in school finance cases and 11 in desegregation cases. But it's only in desegregation 12 cases that it would have the further effect of now 13 requiring that in order to get relief from the 14 illegality you have to persuade the other side, the 15 school board that is in default of its duties under 16 state law, that it must do something for you, and if you 17 don't persuade them that's the end of it.

18 It's very much like what the Court observed 19 was unconstitutional in Boddie v. Connecticut. That is, 20 when the state makes it impossible for you to vindicate 21 your rights without full resort to the state judicial 22 system, but then cuts off that resort to the state 23 judicial system, it is violating your rights under the 24 Fourteenth Amendment.

25 Now, that was true in Boddie v. Connecticut

1 partly because a fundamental federal right was 2 involved. The analogue in this case of that fundamental 3 federal right is that the limitation on access to courts 4 is race specific. The line surely is drawn between 5 desegregation and school finance even if it turns out 6 that there's no line drawn between desegregation and 7 problems of handicapped.

8 But we submit that the belated suggestion by 9 the school board, for the first time in this entire 10 litigation, that perhaps Proposition One wasn't directed 11 just to desegregation, that perhaps it was directed at 12 problems of handicapped and overcrowding as well, is 13 utterly and facially incredible.

14 Never in the history of this litigation until 15 the filing of the most recent round of briefs in this 16 Court has it been suggested by the school board, by any 17 other Respondent, that Proposition One has nothing to do 18 with race. Indeed, if that were true there would have 19 been a very simple answer for the Court of Appeals to 20 give to the Hunter v. Erickson argument.

21 When we argued to the Court of Appeals that 22 this was a race specific obstacle to the enforcement of 23 rights, in violation of Hunter versus Erickson, it would 24 have said presumably, no, we don't construe it as being 25 race specific at all. But instead the court below said,

1 how could it be a violation of your federal rights when 2 it explicitly embraces the Fourteenth Amendment? That 3 was the only answer to the Hunter versus Erickson 4 argument below.

5 We submit that when rights of racial equality
6 are reduced in a state's law to what the Fourteenth 7 Amendment as enforced by federal courts would do, while 8 analogous rights are more generously treated, it is no
9 answer to say that the Fourteenth Amendment is good 10 enough for the federal courts and it had therefore 11 better be good enough for minorities as well.

12 QUESTION: Doesn't that add up to the 13 proposition that once the state has given some right it 14 can't take it away?

15 MR. TRIBE: I don't think so, Mr. Chief
16 Justice. It can take it away as long as it does not do 17 so on a race specific basis. For example, if the State 18 of California had taken a view analogous to that of this 19 Court in Rodriguez about school finance and had just 20 said in the one limited area of race that we will no 21 longer worry about whether something is de jure and de 22 facto, we will give a broader set of rights, and had 23 then taken that back either by judicial decision or by 24 constitutional change, we would not be in this Court 25 arguing that that was a race specific change.

1 It might be race specific in the trivial sense
2 that when you give something to members of a minority 3 race and then take it back that's race specific by 4 definition. But this Court has not, as the Dayton 5 decisions show, equated that with a racial 6 classification.

7 That's very different from saying across the 8 board in the educational realm, we will confer broader 9 rights and now we'll take them back from minorities 10 alone. This law clearly at least does that, and we 11 submit it does more, because what it does is say, you 12 all have all of these rights, they're wonderful, they're 13 like a teasing illusion -- a munificent bequest in a 14 pauper's will, Justice Jackson once called it -- because 15 although you have these rights the only way you can 16 vindicate them is by persuading the person who's in 17 default of its obligation with respect to these rights, 18 the school board, that it should voluntarily confess 19 error and make correction.

20 QUESTION: Well, what if California had 21 construed its constitution more liberally in a number of 22 respects, say the rights of criminal defendants, 23 property rights and that sort of thing, and then decided 24 that it would retreat in the area of education, which 25 did involve the Crawford type right, but also involved

1 the Serrano type right?

2 MR. TRIBE: I think education is a broad and 3 neutral enough category that it would not be race 4 specific.

5 QUESTION: Even though that was the only one 6 where minorities were involved?

7 MR. TRIBE: It seems to me that would be a 8 statistical overlap, as between veterans and males in 9 Feny, and we would then have to prove discriminatory 10 intent. But when it is race specific in the sense that 11 it draws a line between integration -- that word, I
12 remind the Court, is present in Proposition One itself 13 -- when it draws a line between integration and other 14 forms of equalization within education, then we don't 15 have to worry about why in the world did they pick 16 education, was it because minorities are involved 17 there?

18 Clearly, the focus of this law on its face is 19 desegregation.

20 But I want to say, before reserving some time 21 for rebuttal, that it's important to put this case in 22 its right context. This is not a case, it seems to me, 23 about desegregation or schooling as such. It is a case 24 about the fundamental question of whether a state may 25 structure its court system so that we have a system of 1 dual courts, courts fully capable of remedying, with the 2 full panoply of necessary remedies, rights that relate 3 to education, unless those rights involve claims of 4 racial equality.

5 This Court in 1963 in the case of Johnson
6 against Virginia held that racially segregated
7 courtrooms are per se unconstitutional. This courthouse
8 itself was segregated for some years after Brown v.
9 Board of Education.

10 Bad as it was to relegate minorities to the 11 back of the bus under the Jim Crow laws of the old
12 South, we submit that it is even worse to relegate 13 minorities to the back of the courthouse under the more 14 subtle laws of the new North. We believe that this law 15 does just that.

16 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Shea?

17 ORAL ARGUMENT OF G. WILLIAM SHEA, ESQ.

18 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

19 MR. SHEA: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please
20 the Court:

21 Throughout the course of this lengthy 22 litigation, the Petitioners have always asserted that 23 the decisions of this Court and the lower courts in the 24 federal system, as well as the equal protection clause
25 of the Fourteenth Amendment, should be controlling.

1 Proposition One accepts that argument by making all of 2 those the governing standard in California.

3 I submit that the key to the constitutionality 4 of this Proposition One is the very adoption of the 5 requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment equal 6 protection clause in the decisions of this Court. All 7 the provisions of One -- and I'll take them up in a 8 minute -- yield to the supremacy of the federal 9 Constitution, and Proposition One has no racial 10 classification in it.

11 Now, let me first of all turn, because of the 12 remarks of counsel for the Petitioners -- I want to 13 explain. He said specifically that the court below did 14 not address itself to the issue of whether it was race 15 specific. I can understand that a new argument is being 16 made here, and it is a new argument, and that is, and 17 that's the only reason I bring it up, that is why the 18 Court of Appeals did not address itself when the case 19 was argued below to any charge of being race specific.

20 There were two issues argued below. One was 21 that the findings of the court, the trial court in 1970, 22 which contrary to the statement that has just been made 23 were incorporated by the trial judge in the decision 24 which led to the Court of Appeal decision. The 1980
25 decision on Proposition One, incorporated those same

1 1970 findings.

2 And I call the Court's attention to the fact
3 that from pages 11 to 49 of the opinion of the court
4 below in the appendix to the petition for certiorari, 5 that's an entire discussion of those findings, with the 6 conclusion being set forth that those findings did not 7 constitute a de jure violation by this school board 8 under the decisions of this Court.

9 So that was the point that was first made
10 below. The balance of that opinion, commencing on page 11 50, solely dealt with the constitutionality of 12 Proposition One. So the argument of racial 13 classification is new and being raised for the first 14 time in this Court.

15 And I submit that if you look at the language 16 of Proposition One -- and I'm referring particularly to 17 the response that counsel for Petitioners made to 18 Justice O'Connor's question -- it is the position of the 19 school district that Proposition One in its language 20 does not limit, does not limit its reach either in the 21 constitutional restraint on the state and the invoking 22 of the Fourteenth Amendment or in the provision 23 restraining the state courts unless there's a Fourteenth 24 Amendment violation and a decision which would support 25 the remedy involved.

1 It is not limited to school desegregation
2 cases. Nowhere -- and I'm looking at the first page of 3 the proposition as it appears in the appendix to our 4 brief in this Court -- nowhere is there any limitation 5 that, for example, would not involve overcrowding of 6 schools or handicapped children, in the illustration 7 given.

8 And then Petitioners' counsel finds what in 9 Proposition One to establish it's race specific? He 10 turns to the proviso clause, which says that nothing in 11 it, nothing in One, shall prevent a school board from 12 using, any California school board, from using mandatory 13 busing or reassignment of students in a school 14 segregation problem.

15 So he takes that and lifts it to the whole 16 Proposition One and says, there is your race specific.
17 Or he goes another way and he says, look at the court 18 section, the restraint on the court section. Only to 19 remedy - a court in California can only use mandatory 20 assignment of students or transportation of those 21 students to remedy a specific violation of what? A 22 violation of the equal protection clause of the 23 Fourteenth Amendment, and impose a remedy which would be 24 permitted under a federal court interpreting that 25 violation and applying a remedy.

1 From that he urges this Court to say that this 2 is a racial classification because it sets up a 3 two-tier, a second class court system in California.

4 If California in Proposition One does so, I 5 submit, only gives the courts in that one instance the 6 same powers that you give the lower federal courts, that 7 is hardly creating a second class judicial system, 8 because that has been created by the decisions of this 9 Court under the Fourteenth Amendment.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Shea, in your view if Congress
11 should take away federal jurisdiction to use busing as a 12 remedy would the California courts be deprived of the 13 power to do the same thing, even when there's a 14 violation of the federal Constitution?

15 MR. SHEA: Justice Stevens, I would have to 16 look at that bill, but I would have grave doubts as to 17 the constitutionality if Congress tried to take away a 18 decision -- the right of the federal courts to redress a 19 Fourteenth Amendment violation, if that was needed under 20 the circumstances, as was said in the Swann case, needed 21 in order to bring about the desegregation.

22 QUESTION: As I read Proposition One, the 23 measure of the power that's left to the California 24 courts is it's equal to what a federal court could 25 order.

1 MR. SHEA: I so agree.

2 QUESTION: So any cutting back on the federal 3 court power it seems to me would automatically also 4 affect the power of your courts, even if there were a 5 federal constitutional violation.

6 MR. SHEA: Well, I would say yes, because the 7 parity would be there. I can't deny that.

8 QUESTION: But you question whether --

9 MR. SHEA: But I question the propriety under 10 the Constitution and the separation of powers. I 11 wouldn't want to get into that big problem, but I would 12 question whether that could be properly done. So in 13 evaluating whether we have got an inferior court system, 14 I just don't think that's a real possibility.

15 But I would go one step further in my position 16 on the state courts as to where they stand now under the 17 Proposition One. They are still in a position to do 18 more than the federal courts can, because the other 19 tools that this Court well knows that are used in 20 desegregating schools, in relieving racial imbalance -- 21 magnet schools, voluntary transfers, changes in 22 teacher-pupil ratios, enriched curricula -- those are 23 still obligations.

24 They are still obligations and, as we have 25 pointed out in our brief, at the present time in Los

1 Angeles we have Plan Four working which was put into 2 effect in the fall of last year, after the decision 3 below had been made and the California Supreme Court on 4 March 11, 1981, the same court, made up of almost the 5 same personnel that decided Crawford One, declined to 6 review those two key points in the decision below, that 7 there was no de jure violation and that Proposition One 8 was constitutional.

9 QUESTION: Are you saying that the courts can 10 do more, that the state courts can do more, or that the 11 state school boards can do more?

12 MR. SHEA: Well, the state school board can do 13 even more, because they can use the transportation 14 assignment under the proviso clause.

15 QUESTION: Well, can a state court do anything 16 in the absence of a finding of de jure segregation?

17 MR. SHEA: I think they can, because contrary
18 -- and I would agree with counsel for the Petitioner, I
19 think the question was asked what the Court of Appeals 20 did and that's where we stand now below -- it did not 21 say that Crawford One, the decision which first carved 22 out the state right for de facto relief of racially 23 imbalanced schools. In the decision below at page 54 in 24 the same reporting in the appendix of the petition for 25 certiorari, they did say that that obligation remained.

1 Justice Rehnquist, if that obligation remained 2 then the courts could order the establishment, if they 3 did need to, establishment of a magnet school, or they 4 could order other things, as long as it did not involve 5 the reassignment or transportation on a mandatory basis 6 of the pupils.

7 QUESTION: So that when you qualify it that 8 way it seems to me that it is almost entirely left up to 9 the school boards, because of the language in 10 Proposition One that in enforcing this subdivision or 11 any other provision of this constitution, no court of 12 this state may impose upon the State of California or 13 any public entity, board or official any obligation or 14 responsibility with respect to the use of pupil school 15 assignment or pupil transportation.

16 Now, what can a court do in the light of that 17 prohibition?

18 MR. SHEA: Well, I assume, for example, if 19 they did not -- we have established magnet schools. But 20 assume that a school board did not establish them and a 21 parent or somebody wanted a magnet school, and so they 22 asked the school board to do it and they did not do so.
23 And that being recognized as a tool, they could sue and 24 ask the court to enforce the --

25 QUESTION: Well, wouldn't that be concerning

1 pupil assignment?

2 MR. SHEA: No, because magnets are all
3 voluntary. The school could be established, but the 4 attendance would not have to be compelled.

5 QUESTION: The court would order a school
6 established, but it --

7 MR. SHEA: It could do so. I'm not saying so, 8 because I would hope that other school districts would 9 emulate us, where we have established magnet schools and 10 where we now have an ongoing program. But all I meant 11 to bring out is that there is implicit in Proposition
12 One a broader power in the state courts in that sense 13 than even a federal court would have.

14 But the attendance would be simply voluntary.

15 The racial classification argument, which I 16 think as I heard counsel is relying primarily under the 17 Hunter against Erickson situation, I think is readily 18 distinguishable because there was clearly there, just as 19 we go back in the older case of Yik Wo or in Gomillion 20 against Lightfoot -- it was too clear that there, when 21 you were interfering and putting a special premium on 22 the getting a charter amendment in Akron that required
23 to go out and get a majority vote, when up to that time 24 the minorities involved were only obliged to get what 25 any other ordinance would be, the councilmanic reading,

1 instead of going to the electorate -- that you've got a 2 clear case for violating a race and making a racial 3 classification.

4 But you cannot take that and lift it, and it
5 seems to me this Court in almost a comparable problem in 6 James against Valtierra later declined, where the 7 obvious impact or character was lessened by the fact 8 that you only had low cost housing involved in that 9 case, and you refused then to follow and extend the 10 Hunter doctrine.

11 I would like to conclude by discussing what I 12 interpreted was their second effort to persuade you to 13 reverse the court below, and that is that this 14 proposition had a discriminatory purpose. Now, in 15 support of that argument -- they even seem to concede 16 that it doesn't say so on its face. And they can't 17 point to -- they point to no evidence below of that 18 purpose to establish that.

19 What they really point to is a collection, a 20 miscellaneous collection of newspapers, campaign 21 literature, and historical treatises. I have made the 22 point in our brief that none of that was admitted 23 below. It wasn't considered.

24 Now, there is a suggestion in this latest 25 reply brief on the part of Petitioners that the least

1 you should do with this case, the very least, is send it 2 back and give them a chance to prove that intent, that 3 discriminatory purpose. And they say there was no 4 remand, therefore you should remand.

5 I submit if you look at the very last words of 6 the opinion below, as it appears at the end on page 70A
7 of the same appendix, and I quote: "The orders of May 8 19, 1980" -- and that is the one below on Proposition 9 One -- "and July 7, 1980" -- and that is the one that 10 was made moot by the ruling on the Proposition One -- is 11 "remanded to the trial court for further proceedings 12 consistent with this opinion."

13 But not only was the court below remanding, 14 but a remand was held and there was another trial.
15 There was a trial in the summer of 1981, where the 16 Petitioners in face of that remand with notice had every 17 opportunity to offer evidence of this discriminatory 18 purpose. And they offered none, no evidence.

19 And I call to the Court's attention that this 20 was in effect the fifth trial, and if they had this 21 purpose in mind, this discriminatory purpose, when 22 Proposition One -- and the chronology is that the long
23 trial involving Plan Three started in October of 1979 24 and continued to April of 1980. But by 15 days after 25 the trial started, Proposition One had been passed by

1 the people. And we asked the court then now to apply 2 Proposition One.

3 That trial lasted for six months and if there
4 was any thought by then that this had a discriminatory 5 purpose, that was their first opportunity to prove it.
6 And they had a second opportunity in the second trial 7 after the remand by the court below.

8 It seems to me, Your Honors, with all due
9 respect, that what Petitioners are asking you to do here 10 is to in effect overrule your decisions where you have 11 required under the Fourteenth Amendment in school cases 12 a deliberate discriminatory intentional purpose, and 13 establish that rule in California. And I urge you that 14 in this case Proposition One should be upheld because it
15 does match the requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment, 16 and I respectfully close by urging you to affirm the 17 decision below.

18 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Solicitor General?

19 ORAL ARGUMENT OF REX E. LEE, ESQ.

20 ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE

21 MR. LEE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please
22 the Court:

23 Petitioners' attack on the constitutionality
24 of Proposition One is a very narrow one. It's narrow 25 because it has to be, and it turns on whether

1 Proposition One really means what it says. The argument
2 is that under Hunter v. Erickson there is a
3 constitutional inequality in access to the courts.

4 Because of this Court's holding in James v.
5 Valtierra, which was very closely observed, that 6 argument is foreclosed unless the Petitioners can 7 persuade this Court that, contrary to the clear language
8 of Proposition One itself, it prohibits court-ordered 9 busing only for integration purposes and not for any 10 other purposes as well.

11 Petitioners' contention that this case is 12 governed by Hunter v. Erickson is insufficient for two 13 reasons: First, this is not a Hunter v. Erickson case, 14 for the same reason that James v. Valtierra was not a 15 Hunter v. Erickson case.

16 In Valtierra this Court upheld a California
17 voter amendment to the state constitution which provided 18 that no federally funded low rent housing project could 19 be developed by a state body without approval by a 20 majority of those voting in a community election. The 21 parallel to Hunter v. Erickson was remarkable.
22 Nevertheless, the Court held that it could hold that 23 California voter amendment unconstitutional only by 24 extending Hunter v. Erickson, which, in the language of 25 this Court, "we decline to do." And the reason was

1 that, and I'm quoting again, "The article requires
2 referendum approval for any low rent public housing 3 project, not only for projects which will be occupied by 4 a racial minority."

5 In order to get over the Valtierra hurdle, 6 therefore, the Petitioners have to show that 7 court-ordered busing applies only to busing for racial 8 balance purposes. This they cannot do and this they 9 have not done. The reason is that the relevant language 10 simply will not yield to their rewriting efforts.

11 It prohibits, in relevant terms, judicial 12 imposition -- and I am quoting -- "of any obligation 13 with respect to . . . pupil school assignment or pupil 14 transportation." What the Petitioners would like it to 15 prohibit is any obligation with respect to pupil 16 transportation for the purpose of achieving racial 17 balance. But that is not what it says.

18 QUESTION: General Lee, are we bound by any 19 characterization of the proposition in the Court of 20 Appeals, for example, on page 50A of its 21 characterization?

22 MR. LEE: If counsel's characterization of 23 what the Court of Appeals said in its opinion below were 24 correct, then you would have the difficult problem of 25 the language saying A and the Court of Appeals saying

1 not A, and I've always wondered what this Court would do 2 under those circumstances.

3 In fact, you don't have that case. I'm sure 4 that this was just a slip in the exuberance of the 5 moment. But there is nowhere, absolutely nowhere in 6 that Court of Appeals opinion, that says that the only 7 purpose for which court-ordered busing is prohibited is 8 for racial balance purposes.

9 Now, it is true that on five or six different 10 occasions the Court of Appeals does refer to the fact 11 that this prohibits the use of court-ordered busing for 12 desegregation purposes. But nowhere does that court 13 opinion say or does any other authoritative 14 interpretation by the California authorities say that 15 it's only for those purposes. The only authoritative 16 ruling that you have on that subject comes from the 17 California Attorney General, and his view is, as it must 18 be, that the amendment means what it says.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Lee, do you have the petition 20 for cert there with the appendix?

21 MR. LEE: I think I can give you --

22 QUESTION: I'm looking for page 55A.

23 MR. LEE: Yes.

24 QUESTION: 54A, at the bottom it says: "The 25 board remains" -- this is after the passage of the

1 amendment.

2 MR. LEE: Right.

3 QUESTION: "The board remains subject to its 4 constitutional duty under state law to undertake
5 reasonable feasible steps to alleviate school 6 segregation, regardless of cause."

7 MR. LEE: Right.

8 QUESTION: Then it says: "In carrying out its 9 duty, the board may utilize any and all desegregation 10 techniques, including pupil assignment and pupil
11 transportation."

12 MR. LEE: Absolutely right.

13 QUESTION: Well, what did the amendment
14 forbid?

15 MR. LEE: The amendment forbade the use of 16 either the court's ordering pupil transportation or the 17 school board's utilizing busing as one of their means 18 for -- excuse me. Well, it forbade the use of 19 court-ordered busing. It did not forbid the school 20 board itself from --

21 QUESTION: I'm going down to the next 22 paragraph.

23 MR. LEE: Yes.

24 QUESTION: "In the absence of a board plan 25 that provides meaningful progress, the trial court is

1 authorized to implement a desegregation plan that may 2 utilize all available desegregation techniques, except 3 that of pupil school assignment and pupil
4 transportation."

5 Now, what techniques are those?

6 MR. LEE: Well, they're the ones that Mr. Shea 7 referred to, techniques such as magnet schools or the 8 assignment of higher quality teachers and staff to 9 particular minority schools, techniques such as spending 10 more money in minority schools.

11 This they not only have the opportunity to do;
12 this they have the obligation to do, because California 13 still has requirements over and above those that the 14 federal Constitution has. It's just that what 15 California has done is to cut back to one extent one 16 remedy or one duty, if you want to call it that. And I 17 don't think you get much sustenance out of whether it's 18 one or the other. It has cut back to one extent the 19 interpretation of its constitution that California 20 previously experimented with.

21 And that brings me --

22 QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, is there any 23 respect in which the California constitution gave 24 broader protection to any group that's relevant here 25 other than racial minorities?

1 MR. LEE: Not that I know of, not that I know
2 of, because --

3 QUESTION: Well then, necessarily does the 4 amendment have any affect on court matters except those 5 involving pupil transportation to correct racial 6 imbalance?

7 MR. LEE: Indeed it does. If you read it
8 carefully, Justice Stevens, I don't see any way that you 9 -- for example, I am informed that there may be a 10 statutory obligation --

11 QUESTION: But this refers only to 12 constitutional obligations. The Proposition One relates 13 only to the California constitution as I understand it.

14 MR. LEE: All right, all right. But assume 15 that there were -- that someone came into -- assume that 16 someone came into court and asserted that there were a 17 constitutional obligation, for example, say they had a 18 budget-balancing amendment or whatever. This would 19 prevent the courts from ever enforcing any court-ordered 20 busing remedy for the purpose of achieving any 21 constitutional amendment in the State of California.

22 QUESTION: Well, perhaps one can think of 23 hypotheticals, and I'm not sure yours really fits. But 24 is it not true that the only real life problems that the 25 amendment addresses concern busing for racial purposes?

1 MR. LEE: I don't know whether that's true or 2 not, because I'm not that acquainted with the California 3 experience.

4 QUESTION: At least there's nothing in the 5 record that identifies anything else?

6 MR. LEE: There is nothing in the record that 7 I am aware of. But the fact of the matter is this, that 8 California has structured this about as carefully as it 9 can be structured. It is not race specific. I agree
10 certainly with counsel for the Petitioners that in order 11 to get over the Valtierra hurdle they have to persuade 12 this Court that it really does on its face exclude any 13 other kinds of busing, and that they simply have not 14 done and cannot do.

15 QUESTION: Would you agree it would be invalid
16 if it were race specific in the sense they argue?

17 MR. LEE: No, and that brings me to my second 18 point. I agree that they lose unless it is race 19 specific. I do not agree that we lose if it is.

20 QUESTION: Before you go to your second point

22 MR. LEE: Yes.

23 QUESTION: -- let me pick up where your 24 response to, I think, to Justice White left off. The 25 next sentence is: "Thus, the effect of the 1 constitutional amendment is to withdraw one

2 desegregative technique from the state courts' arsenal
3 of remedies available to alleviate unintended 4 non-purposeful segregation, but to leave all other 5 available techniques intact."

6 MR. LEE: That is correct.

7 QUESTION: That sums up, or at least the court 8 was attempting to sum up, the consequence of its 9 holding, was it not?

10 MR. LEE: That is correct, and that brings me 11 to my second point. The California courts have held 12 that the constitution of that state imposes an 13 obligation to alleviate de facto segregation and it 14 still does even after Proposition One.

15 QUESTION: Are you suggesting that the matter
16 that the Chief Justice read to you requires you to reach 17 your second point?

18 MR. LEE: No, not at all. I'm just saying 19 that it's a nice introduction into my second point, 20 which I've been trying to get to.

21 QUESTION: That means you really haven't 22 answered the Chief Justice yet.

23 MR. LEE: Not at all. I have answered the 24 Chief Justice, but I will now answer you.

25 QUESTION: Why shouldn't we accept this as the

1 -- as the -- as the only real life reason for adopting 2 this amendment? That's what the court said.

3 MR. LEE: It does not say, Justice White, that 4 it was the only one. As Mr. Shea has pointed out, the 5 James v. Valtierra argument --

6 QUESTION: Well, what if it wasn't? What if 7 you said it was half of it. Would you be any better 8 off?

9 MR. LEE: Excuse me. I missed the question.

10 QUESTION: Well, you say it wasn't the sole 11 reason. What if it was one of two reasons? You have 12 two equal reasons. Then you're still in trouble, aren't 13 you?

14 MR. LEE: No, I think we're not in trouble at 15 all.

16 QUESTION: Why? Why is that?

17 MR. LEE: Because what this Court held in 18 James v. Valtierra, that Hunter v. Erickson does not 19 apply in those circumstances where there are other 20 reasons other than racial reasons for what the court -- 21 what the state has done.

22 QUESTION: You mean even if it's half and 23 half?

24 MR. LEE: Even if it's -- well, I don't know 25 whether it was half and half or whatever it was.

1 QUESTION: Or a quarter, or ten percent, or 2 what?

3 MR. LEE: So long as it is not race specific 4 and race specific only.

5 QUESTION: Sort of a Mt. Healthy test.

6 MR. LEE: That is correct.

7 If California loses this case, then the real 8 losers are going to be not only the constitutional 9 allocation of authority in our federal system between 10 national and state governments, but even more 11 specifically the effort by states and individuals all 12 across the country to achieve racially integrated 13 schools.

14 If California had originally chosen to limit 15 its efforts to deal with racial imbalance to the 16 requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment, then its 17 decision would clearly have raised no constitutional 18 issue, and the Petitioners do not contend otherwise. In 19 fact, California went further. It took upon itself the 20 obligation to deal not just with the problems of de jure
21 segregation, but de facto as well. And now, almost 20
22 years later, all ethnic groups in all parts of the state 23 agree that one aspect of that experiment has not worked, 24 at least for California.

25 QUESTION: You did say "all", didn't you?

1 MR. LEE: In the sense, Justice Marshall, that 2 this amendment --

3 QUESTION: I mean, I know a few out there that 4 don't agree.

5 MR. LEE: There is no disadvantage to anyone 6 from permitting states to try something beyond the 7 bounds of the Fourteenth Amendment demands and then back 8 off if it doesn't work. The successes from that kind of 9 experimentation redound to everyone's benefit. The 10 failures harm only the particular state that undertook 11 the experiment.

12 It would be a great disservice not only to 13 federalism generally but specifically to the cause of 14 relieving racial segregation if states such as 15 California were not permitted to try the waters beyond 16 the Fourteenth Amendment barrier reef, with the 17 assurance that the Fourteenth Amendment will permit them 18 to come back to a safer harbor if the experiment does 19 not work.

20 Now, my opponent says that that's true, but 21 you can't do it where it's race specific. That is only 22 saying that you can't ever back off from efforts at 23 racial imbalance, because by definition you have to use 24 racial imbalance efforts; they have to be saying that 25 racial balance efforts are race specific. And as a

1 consequence the interests of school desegregation, 2 whether de jure or defacto, would scarcely be served if 3 the one state, the one state whose legal requirements go 4 the farthest in dealing with segregation and clearly go 5 beyond the demands of the Fourteenth Amendment, were to 6 be the only state whose efforts to deal with de facto
7 segregation were held to violate the Fourteenth
8 Amendment.

9 Justice Brandeis in his classic statement on 10 the values of experimentation pointed out that this 11 Court has the power to prevent an experiment, and that 12 it is one of the happy incidents of the federal system
13 that a single courageous state may, if its citizens 14 choose, serve as a laboratory. In this case, we submit 15 the Court should not stop experimentation. If it does, 16 every state will know that its reward for experimenting 17 beyond the bounds of the federal Constitution will be a 18 Hunter v. Erickson requirement that experiments which 19 fail must nevertheless be continued.

20 It is not a sufficient answer to that argument 21 to say that it is race specific in that instance, 22 because all that that is really saying is once again
23 that it really is a ratchet wrench, that you can't 24 really back off once you've tried something and it 25 doesn't work. Because by definition any effort at

1 racial imbalance must fit the Petitioners' definition of 2 what is a race specific classification, because there is 3 nothing in this particular case to differentiate it from 4 any other.

5 For this reason, we join with the Appellees in 6 urging that the judgment of the Court of Appeal be 7 affirmed.

8 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
9 further, Mr. Tribe? You have five minutes remaining.

10 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF LAURENCE H. TRIBE, ESQ.

12 MR. TRIBE: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

13 To begin with, I suppose I should note that no 14 argument is any longer being made by the board in this 15 case that there is some compelling justification for 16 this measure. Unlike the Seattle law, for example, 17 there's no suggestion that this is genuinely a 18 neighborhood policy. Students can be forcibly bused out 19 of their neighborhoods if the school board realizes or 20 agrees that that's what it ought to do.

21 So what we're left with is the question of 22 whether either on its face or under Arlington Heights it 23 is a racial classification.

24 QUESTION: Mr. Tribe, do you agree or do you
25 not that Valtierra said that even if half the purpose os

1 racial that the law is constitutional?

2 MR. TRIBE: No, I certainly don't, Justice
3 White.

4 QUESTION: It just said it might have some 5 impact on --

6 MR. TRIBE: It says if it's a statistical 7 coincidence that that's not race specific. Indeed, in 8 Hunter what Section 137 added was race and religion to a 9 list that already included taxation. It can't make a 10 difference whether it's in one law or two. It seems to 11 me very clear that if an obstacle is put in the way of 12 racial minorities as such, even if a couple of other 13 obstacles are thrown in for good measure, that does not 14 invoke James v. Valtierra by any stretch of the 15 imagination.

16 A word about Arlington Heights. It's simply 17 not the case that opportunities have been bypassed to 18 try to show racially discriminatory purpose. Proof was 19 introduced, but its admissibility was never ruled on 20 because the trial court thought that the validity of 21 Proposition One was immaterial. And there was a remand 22 from the Court of Appeal, but expressly limited to the 23 question of what to do now that the Court of Appeal had 24 decided Proposition One was constitutional.

25 No evidence was allowed on remand on the very

1 question on which no evidence has yet been heard in this 2 case, namely whether Proposition One was motivated by 3 desire to impose greater obstacles to racial 4 minorities.

5 So I do think that at a very minimum the 6 failure to apply Arlington Heights was fatal below.

7 QUESTION: But surely the Court of Appeals 8 disaffirmed the trial court's previous findings of 9 purposeful racial discrimination. Did it or not?

10 MR. TRIBE: They did.

11 QUESTION: Well --

12 MR. TRIBE: They said that --

13 QUESTION: -- are you suggesting nevertheless 14 it turned right around and said Proposition One 15 nevertheless indicates a racial purpose?

16 MR. TRIBE: No. What I'm saying is that those 17 are two wholly unrelated issues in this case.

18 QUESTION: Well, I agree with that. But I'm 19 asking what you're submitting.

20 MR. TRIBE: Well, the Court of Appeals said, 21 number one, that the 1970 findings didn't establish any 22 purposeful discrimination by the board.

23 QUESTION: By the board, exactly.

24 MR. TRIBE: And then as to Proposition One it 25 said that, because it has a disclaimer on its face and

1 because it could have been properly motivated, it
2 follows that there need be no inquiry under Arlington
3 Heights. That is surely a misstatement of the law.

4 But we don't even need to reach Arlington
5 Heights, because I think it is very clear, as Justice
6 White has pointed out, that even if something hits 7 explicitly race plus something else the explicit 8 attention to race imposing an obstacle to racial 9 minorities independently triggers the strictest 10 scrutiny, which can't be satisfied here because there's 11 no compelling justification.

12 More than that, the suggestion of the 13 Solicitor General that we have here one of these very 14 difficult cases where the law on its face is simply 15 incompatible perhaps with what the Court of Appeals 16 said, and then you try to figure out what to do, is 17 untenable. The law on its face, as Justice Stevens 18 points out, clearly suggests in light of the fact that 19 the California constitution when it comes to pupil 20 assignment had added nothing outside the area of race, 21 clearly suggests that it's only race that's being spoken 22 of.

23 But if there were ambiguity the Court of 24 Appeals would have settled it. On page 59A of the 25 appendix to the petition for certiorari it is

1 specifically said by the Court of Appeals that 2 Proposition One merely -- and they use the word "merely"
3 -- removes court-ordered school assignment to cure 4 state-prescribed racial imbalance.

5 The court says on page 67A, all the amendment 6 does -- despite the Solicitor General's suggestion that 7 they never said "all", they never said "only" -- all the 8 amendment does is remove from courts this remedy to end 9 racial isolation. Nothing could be clearer than that 10 this Court is bound by the authoritative interpretation 11 of the state courts on this.

12 QUESTION: That isn't really an authoritative 13 interpretation on the point you're making, though, is 14 it? It wasn't put to them then that this applies to 15 handicapped, pupil assignment for handicap purposes, and 16 they say, no, it doesn't apply for handicaps, it's just 17 for racial imbalance.

18 MR. TRIBE: Well, it was -- Justice Rehnquist, 19 it was suggested by counsel for the board that it wasn't 20 put to them that it was race specific. On the contrary, 21 it was. That was half the argument in the Court of 22 Appeals.

23 QUESTION: Well, was this -- was the 24 proposition that Proposition One had an effect on 25 assignment for handicap purposes put to them in oral

1 argument?

2 MR. TRIBE: No, of course not, because no one
3 would have imagined that it did.

4 QUESTION: Did you argue orally?

5 MR. TRIBE: No. But what we argued in the 6 case below, what was argued in the case below, was that 7 the only thing it covers is race. And the court
8 addresses that issue. It's not a new argument. It 9 addresses it and, instead of denying it, it says, no, it 10 embraces the Fourteenth Amendment.

11 That is not enough under the Constitution when 12 it puts an obstacle specifically in the way of 13 vindicating racial rights, it creates a forbidden system 14 of courts that inadequately protect minorities.

15 Thank you.

16 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
17 The case is submitted.

18 (Whereupon, at 3:10 p.m., the above-entitled 19 matter was submitted.)
