2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Jackson Transit Authority against the union.

4 I think you may proceed whenever you're ready.

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOSEPH S. KAUFMAN, ESQ.,

6 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

7 MR. KAUFMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
8 please the Court:

9 This case directly brings before the Court
10 today the provisions of the Urban Mass Transportation 11 Act of 1964 for the first time. The issue presented to 12 the Court today is whether by enacting UMTA, and 13 particularly Section 13(c) thereof, Congress silently
14 required federal courts to federalize municipal transit 15 labor relations over federal grant recipients by 16 creating a federal common law to resolve public sector 17 transit labor disputes and thereby preempt state law.

18 In the first instance, the District Court in 19 this case answered that question negatively. the Court
20 of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in a two-to-one 21 decision reversed. It implied a federal private right 22 of action by default.

23 Since the decision of the Sixth Circuit,
24 another Circuit Court has reviewed this matter 25 comprehensively and ruled to the contrary, that being

1 the Eleventh Circuit in the MARTA case.

2 This controversy that reaches the Court today
3 is between two private parties, Jackson and the union.
4 There is no federal interest in the outcome of this 5 litigation. There are no federal parties presently 6 before this Court, and the substantive outcome of this 7 controversy requires neither construction,
8 interpretation nor vindication of UMTA.

9 Additionally, in this case there is no 10 conflict between any federal interest and the law of 11 Tennessee. Tennessee law clearly establishes collective 12 bargaining between municipalities and its transit
13 workers. The outcome of this case will have no 14 substantive -- will have no effect on the substantive 15 rights or duties of the United States.

16 UMTA --

17 QUESTION: Well, that's true in a lot of 18 cases, Mr. Kaufman, where nonetheless a federal right of 19 action has been implied, isn't it? J. I. Case v. Borak 20 and cases like that?

21 MR. KAUFMAN: Well, yes, sir, but the J. I. v.
22 Borak has been somewhat cut back by your more recent 23 decisions.

24 QUESTION: But even in some of our -- those 25 cases where a private right of action has been implied,

1 say Cannon v. University of Chicago, there there was no
2 federal party or the United States wasn't a party.

3 MR. KAUFMAN: But there was a direct command
4 in the statutes involved in those cases which is not 5 true here, as I will point out in a moment.

6 I might point out, sirs, that UMTA was on the 7 books for some 12 years before the union sought to 8 utilize the federal courts to bring actions such as this 9 nature. This was one of the first attempts. If the 10 decision of the Sixth Circuit is affirmed, municipal 11 transit labor relations will be decided in two courts, 12 in state courts as well as federal courts.

13 Now, the events in this case are somewhat 14 unique. Prior to 1966, for approximately 20 some odd 15 years, there was a private transit operator in Jackson, 16 Tennessee. The union represented the transit workers in 17 that community. In 1966 the Jackson Transit Company, as 18 was happening throughout the country with other transit
19 systems, went defunct. The city, in its judgment, as a 20 public function, took over the operation of a bus system 21 containing 12 buses and 18 unionized employees.

22 Jackson filed for and received an Urban Mass 23 Transportation Act grant in the amount of $275,000 to 24 assist in acquiring 12 new buses and rehabilitating its 25 maintenance facilities. As part of the grant

1 application process Jackson entered into what is 2 commonly known as a Section 13(c) agreement whereby the 3 rights of the workers and the interests of the workers 4 are protected. That 13(c) agreement was certified by 5 the Secretary of Labor as creating fair and equitable 6 arrangements for the protection of the interests of the 7 employees.

8 From 1966 through 1975, Jackson and the union
9 entered into three collective bargaining agreements 10 which were obviously honored since there was no 11 litigation between the parties.

12 In 1975 a fourth collective bargaining
13 agreement was negotiated. It contained a COLA 14 provision, a cost-of-living escalator which is the 15 underlying basis of this suit. The city, after the 16 execution of the agreement, found that it had never been 17 properly ratified by the Board of Commissioners and 18 refused to honor the COLA, and sought to renegotiate the 19 collective bargaining agreement with the union.

20 The union declined. It first demanded of the 21 Secretary of Labor that he decertify Jackson for future
22 UMTA grants. The union, in its wisdom, decided to try 23 to make a federal case of the matter.

24 Now, did Congress, in light of the foregoing, 25 intend for the federal court in Tennessee to create and

1 apply federal common law to this contract dispute
2 between Jackson and its 18 unionized employees as a
3 result of this single UMTA grant made some ten years 4 previously? It is Jackson's position that the answer to 5 this must be emphatically no. Congress, through UMTA, 6 and particularly Section 13(c), did not intend to 7 displace the traditional public policy enunciated in 8 both the Wagner Act and the Taft-Hartley Act excluding 9 by definition state and political subdivisions from all 10 obligations of the Labor-Management Relations Act in 11 order that local governments and communities regulate 12 and manage their affairs and arrangements with their own 13 employees free from federal interference, control and 14 federal court jurisdiction.

15 What is UMTA? It is a typical federal funding 16 statute which requires at the time of federal assistance
17 certain conditions be met. They include long range 18 transit plans and public hearings thereon, special 19 efforts for the elderly and handicapped, environmental 20 impact statements, charter bus assurances so there will 21 be no competition, and maximum participation by 22 operators in the private sector.

23 One of the conditions is the conditions to 24 protect the interests of the workers, and that is to be 25 determined by the Secretary of Labor, and he must

1 certify that fair and equitable arrangements have been 2 made to protect the interests of the workers. Section 3 13(c) did not create federal collective bargaining 4 rights, and only required the Secretary of Labor during 5 the application process to look at state law and 6 determine if it was hostile to collective bargaining.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Kaufman, to what extent is the 8 continuance of state law a binding obligation? Suppose 9 after the grant is made the state changes its law, wipes 10 out collective bargaining.

11 MR. KAUFMAN: If that were to happen, Your 12 Honor, there is adequate provision in UMTA itself, in 13 Section 1602(f) and (g) of the law, the Secretary is 14 instructed to bar further grants to those communities
15 which do not comply with their grant contracts. There 16 is a cutting off of funding mechanism built right into 17 the act itself.

18 QUESTION: Is that the end of it?

19 MR. KAUFMAN: No, sir. There is a provision 20 that the Secretary can enforce agreements. He could sue 21 on his agreement.

22 QUESTION: So the Secretary could go into 23 federal court.

24 MR. KAUFMAN: Yes, sir. But this is where we 25 have a private party attempting to go in.

1 QUESTION: What would be the law governing if 2 the Secretary went in?

3 MR. KAUFMAN: The law would be govern --

4 QUESTION: There might be jurisdiction, but 5 what would be the governing law?

6 MR. KAUFMAN: The governing law would be the 7 law of contracts, Your Honor, which essentially is state
8 law. There is no federal common law of contracts.

9 QUESTION: Well, there's a lot of contracts
10 that federal law requires or specifies that are governed 11 by federal law.

12 MR. KAUFMAN: Some are governed by -- but this 13 contract, I think, would be governed by state law, and 14 let me explain why I say that.

15 QUESTION: What about an ordinary collective 16 bargaining contract subject to the labor laws?

17 MR. KAUFMAN: Those are expressly governed 18 because Congress created federal court jurisdiction and 19 mandated federal law apply.

20 QUESTION: Well, it didn't mandate it. We 21 said it did, but that isn't what the statute said.

22 MR. KAUFMAN: Well then, this Court said it
23 did, Your Honor, and I will accept that correction.

24 QUESTION: So it might as well have said it, 25 might as well have said it.

1 QUESTION: May I ask a question about Section
2 13(c) agreement?

3 MR. KAUFMAN: Yes, sir.

4 QUESTION: Right on this point. I think it is 5 quoted in -- at 17a of the Joint Appendix. There's a 6 sentence in the agreement that says any public body or 7 agency shall comply with the requirements of 10(c) in 8 such manner as is necessary not to reduce or impair any 9 rights, privileges and benefits which such employees of 10 such transit system would have received or be entitled to 11 had the system continued under its former private 12 management.

13 Now, had it continued under the former 14 management, the rights would have been federal rights, 15 wouldn't they?

16 MR. KAUFMAN: Your Honor, if it had -- in this 17 particular case that is true, but that wasn't the 18 situation under which UMTA was --

19 QUESTION: But this is the agreement we are 20 talking about.

21 MR. KAUFMAN: That's true, and there's also 22 provisions I believe you will find in that agreement, if 23 it is unenforceable, that you go back to the Secretary 24 of Labor for new types of arrangements.

25 QUESTION: Well, I don't understand, in

1 response to Justice Blackmun's question, if this -- they 2 would have had federal rights before and those are 3 preserved, and after all the money is spent so there is 4 no remedy in cutting off further funding, why couldn't 5 the state, under your view, why couldn't the state 6 simply pass a statute that says, well, municipal bodies
7 don't have to abide by collective bargaining agreements 8 because there is a public interest in management and so 9 forth?

10 MR. KAUFMAN: I think it's highly impractical
11 that that could happen, Your Honor. Nobody --

12 QUESTION: Well, your opponents in effect
13 contend it happened here.

14 MR. KAUFMAN: It did not happen here. We 15 negotiated three collective bargaining agreements. We 16 have a state law that mandates that we collectively
17 bargain. The Tennessee law makes a positive mandate 18 upon us to do so. The only thing that we did here is we 19 said that this agreement had not been properly 20 ratified.

21 QUESTION: Right, by the municipality.

22 MR. KAUFMAN: If it hadn't been properly
23 ratified, there's no contract. It's a typical common 24 law issue of whether or not there has been the proper 25 formation of a contract. There is no great issue here.

1 QUESTION: Well, what if the state passed a 2 new statute on what it takes to ratify a contract or 3 something of that kind? Then that would control under 4 your view.

5 MR. KAUFMAN: Your Honor, I know of no state
6 action anywhere that that has ever happened, and why I
7 believe it would not happen, that although Jackson is a 8 small community in Tennessee, the other communities in 9 Tennessee that are not so small such as Memphis and 10 Nashville and Knoxville and Chattanooga are not going to 11 have their federal funding cut off because Jackson 12 decided it didn't want to collectively bargain anymore.

13 As a practical matter what happens is that 14 state laws have been adjusted to accommodate the 15 situation under Section 13(c), not the reverse, the 16 cutoff situation.

17 The federal --

18 QUESTION: As a practical matter, perhaps it 19 wouldn't happen, but you say as a matter, conceptually, 20 there's really no federal objection to it if the state 21 should decide to do so.

22 MR. KAUFMAN: Your Honor, if you look at the 23 whole UMTA act, the one thing that comes out clear in 24 the legislative history was that once a grant was made, 25 there should be as little federal interference as 1 possible.

2 There were two concepts before the Congress at 3 that time, to have loan guarantees on one hand which 4 would require continuous federal monitoring, and on the 5 other hand to have a situation where all the documents
6 are forwarded and judgement is made whether this was a 7 good or bad project to be funded. Once it was funded,
8 they would go on and look at the next project. There 9 wasn't to be that type of -- and it was intentionally 10 not to be that continuous type of monitoring as is in 11 certain other programs that have proved disastrous to 12 the government.

13 Your Honor, we can always speculate it could 14 have happened.

15 QUESTION: Well, I'm not -- that's right, and 16 I'm troubled, frankly, the thing that troubles me is the 17 language in the agreement itself here, which seems to 18 contemplate no difference in the substantive rights of 19 the parties before and after, and I think you suggest 20 there's a rather significant difference.

21 MR. KAUFMAN: Yes, sir.

22 And I think you also have to look at what the 23 legislative history was because time and again both the 24 sponsor of the bill, the Kennedy administration, the 25 floor leader of the bill, Senator Williams, the Chairman

1 of the Committee that handled the bill, Senator
2 Sparkman, and the Floor proponent of the bill, Senator
3 Morse, said time and time again that this was not 4 intended to supersede state law, that it was not 5 intended to override state law or preempt state law in 6 any way. It was truly to encourage states to adjust 7 their laws, modify their laws to have collective 8 bargaining, and if they didn't, they wouldn't get the 9 funding.

10 I think probably the best example of how the 11 law was intended to work is in the City of Macon case
12 which is cited in our brief. When the City of Macon 13 refused to make the necessary adjustments to make its 14 laws compatible with collective bargaining, after the 15 Secretary used all kind of jawboning, they didn't get 16 their money. And that's exactly how this act was 17 intended to work. It wasn't intended to create federal 18 collective bargaining rights. I have serious doubts 19 whether it could have. The states have been exempt from 20 the federal labor relations laws ever since the 21 inception of the Wagner Act. Time after time there have 22 been proposals before the Congress to change that. And 23 they have been defeated. And it has been the consistent 24 national policy to leave the states' handling of their 25 own labor relations to the states without federal

1 interference by either federal administrative bodies
2 such as the NLRB, or the federal courts.

3 QUESTION: Well, that's a little bit of an 4 overstatement, isn't it, because in the Macon case, for 5 example, in order to get the federal funding they would 6 have had to modify, adopt new state laws.

7 MR. KAUFMAN: That's correct, but --

8 QUESTION: And so the condition of the grant 9 is a change in state law.

10 MR. KAUFMAN: It would be governed by state
11 law. That's the critical point, sir, that state law 12 covers --

13 QUESTION: But it's the state law after the 14 grant rather than before the grant.

15 MR. KAUFMAN: No, sir, before the grant is 16 approved the state law would have had to have been 17 modified in order to make it compatible with the 18 continuation of collective bargaining and therefore to 19 get the money.

20 QUESTION: But no obligation to make it
21 continue to be compatible.

22 MR. KAUFMAN: Your Honor, I don't know how you 23 make people comply with the law that sign documents that 24 they are going to comply with the law, that pass laws.
25 We are dealing with situations that have never happened,

1 to the best of my knowledge, where a state has 2 absolutely repealed its law.

3 Now, we do have situations where states have 4 modified their laws, and there's a matter that's pending
5 before you on cert right now at MBLA where they modified 6 their laws regarding interest arbitration, but it didn't 7 end collective bargaining.

8 Now, as I said, UMTA is, must be viewed as a 9 typical federal funding statute such as the Court had 10 before it in Pennhurst, and its purpose was not to 11 create federal transit relations. Its purpose was to 12 salvage, and yes, it was the survival of a badly 13 deteriorated urban mass transit industry in this 14 country. It was structured to require local solutions 15 to local problems. 13(c) arrangements were to be the 16 product of local negotiation and bargaining.

17 Neither UMTA nor Section 13(c) contains any 18 express private remedy. If one exists, it exists only 19 by implication, and then I respectfully submit, not 20 warranted under the circumstances here.

21 It is clear from the language of the statute 22 itself that UMTA was to meet the requirements of local 23 needs, and it was to improve the mass transit facilities 24 in order to facilitate desirable urban renewal. The 25 labor protections were either secondary or ancillary to

1 the main purpose of this act.

2 Interestingly, as you read the legislative 3 history, the reason that 13(c) even became an issue was 4 a happening that you suggest, Justice Stevens, in Dade
5 County, Florida. Dade County had a private transit 6 operator in the early '60s. It, too, went bankrupt, and 7 Dade County took over the system. Because of state law, 8 the employees lost whatever collective bargaining rights
9 they had. They were required to become merit system 10 employees, and they couldn't be represented by a union.
11 It was in that type of factual background that the 12 unions came to the Kennedy administration and said we 13 don't want federal funds to be used to defeat the 14 workers' rights as happened in Dade County.

15 Congress and the administration had three 16 choices in that light. The first was to have full 17 federal involvement akin to the railroad and airline 18 industries, under the Railway Labor Act, in other words, 19 federalized local transit labor relations. The second 20 option was to keep hands off and do nothing. And the 21 third option, the one that was eventually adopted, was 22 the carrot and stick approach, to make federal funding 23 attractive so as to have the states that had hostile
24 collective bargaining laws to either modify those laws 25 or work out some innovative arrangement in order to be

1 able to qualify and be eligible for federal assistance.

2 I want to tell you why that is particularly 3 important in the light of what was happening in 1963.
4 In 1963 the major transit systems had already gone from 5 the private to the public sector. New York City,
6 Chicago, L.A., Boston, Seattle, Oakland, California, 7 Cleveland, just to name a few, had already made the 8 transition. They were already governed by state law 9 procedures.

10 Now, if that was the case, we would have two 11 classes of systems, those who were later going to fall 12 into the same trend and who were still governed by 13 federal law at that time, and those that had already 14 made the transition, the major systems that needed the 15 money most of all.

16 I don't think Congress ever intended to have 17 two classes. They intended to have a situation to make 18 it, as Justice Rehnquist said in the Pennhurst case, to 19 have a nudge, an ability to try to get an accommodation
20 with state law so it would not be hostile. At no time 21 in this case was Tennessee law antagonistic to what was 22 intended here.

23 QUESTION: Are you suggesting that all that 24 was intended by Congress was to see that the workers 25 would be no worse off?

1 MR. KAUFMAN: Yes, sir, no -- and that is the 2 word that is used in the statute itself, a worsening.
3 They would be no worse off.

4 You know, this is the fourth collective 5 bargaining agreement that was executed between Jackson 6 and its workers. It wasn't something that just was an 7 attempt to defeat any of their previously existing 8 rights or benefits. They'd had collective bargaining.
9 They had a longstanding collective bargaining
10 relationship.

11 QUESTION: Well, but isn't it true that if you 12 prevail on your position in this case, that will be the 13 last?

14 MR. KAUFMAN: No, sir.

15 QUESTION: Legally it could be the last.

16 MR. KAUFMAN: No, sir. At all times Jackson 17 has wanted to go back to the table, and the record in 18 this case shows that they urged the union to come back 19 and renegotiate a collective bargaining agreement, and 20 that is the only evidence in this record. It's part of 21 the complaint.

22 QUESTION: Well, let me put it differently.
23 Assume that the arbitrator, if it goes to -- I guess it 24 goes -- if it goes to an arbitrator. I don't know 25 exactly whether it would or not, but there's a ruling

1 that the ratification was not proper. Therefore the 2 agreement's no longer in effect. As a matter of law you 3 would be under no obligation to bargain, would you?

4 Maybe as a matter of policy you would do so.

5 MR. KAUFMAN: I think we are under an 6 obligation under Tennessee law to do it.

7 QUESTION: To --

8 MR. KAUFMAN: To collectively bargain. The 9 Tennessee law is explicit on that.

10 QUESTION: I see.

11 MR. KAUFMAN: Sure we're under an obligation
12 to, and we've never backed off that obligation.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Kaufman, I wanted to ask you 14 whether it's your position that the union could force 15 you to collectively bargain under -- by virtue of 16 Section 13(c).

17 MR. KAUFMAN: No, ma'am. Section 13(c) creates 18 no rights. It is not like the Labor Railway Act that 19 mandates that there be collective bargaining agreements 20 between the railroads and their unions.

21 And that also brings me to a very interesting 22 point.

23 QUESTION: Could I ask you just one more 24 question to follow up Justice O'Connor's question?

25 You say 13(c) creates no rights, but certainly

1 th agreement entered into pursuant to 13(c) between the 2 transit authority and the union creates rights, doesn't 3 it?

4 MR. KAUFMAN: It creates contract rights.

5 QUESTION: And if it creates contract rights 6 to collectively bargain, those could be enforced in 7 state court.

8 MR. KAUFMAN: Yes, sir. State courts
9 traditionally handle dispute --

10 QUESTION: Or in a federal court if there were 11 jurisdiction.

12 MR. KAUFMAN: If there were jurisdiction.

13 QUESTION: And it would be a question of 14 contract enforcement, not a question of a cause of 15 action under a statute.

16 MR. KAUFMAN: That is correct. That's the 17 absolute bottom line of this dispute. It's the 18 enforcement of a contract.

19 I'd like to point out before I sit down and 20 reserve my time one very important element. When this 21 matter was before the Congress the union, through its 22 representatives, presented to both the House and Senate 23 committee a proposal, a proposal which would have -- and 24 I'm going to quote -- "required protective arrangements 25 which shall include, without being limited to,

1 enforceable provisions requiring," and I'm skipping,
2 "the right of the employees to bargain collectively 3 through representatives of their own choosing concerning 4 wages, hours and conditions of employment, and ensuring 5 the right and duty of the employees' bargaining agent 6 and the employer to make and maintain collective 7 bargaining agreements, and ensuring the existence of 8 authority for any employer and the bargaining 9 representatives of the employees to enter into 10 enforceable arbitration agreements," very rigid,
11 mandatory requirements, similar to the Railway Labor
12 Act.

13 The Congress rejected this proposal. It 14 wanted not to impose these type of requirements on the 15 municipalities. It wanted state law wherever it was, 16 where it existed, if it was not hostile to federal law, 17 to govern the situation. And that is our position
18 before this Court today.

19 I would like to reserve the remaining time,
20 Mr. Chief Justice.

21 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mrs. Hirshman.

22 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LINDA R. HIRSHMAN, ESQ.

23 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

24 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
25 please the Court:

1 Your Honor, the Section 13(c) preserves
2 rights. That language is right in the statute. If you 3 look at Section 13(c)(2) you see that it says the 4 continuation of collective bargaining rights. There is 5 no distinction between create, for our purposes here, 6 between creating rights and preserving the rights as 7 they existed before.

8 QUESTION: Why not? Why not?

9 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Because when these employees 10 were in the private sector they had rights to collective 11 bargaining including enforceable collective bargaining 12 agreements which could not be torn up months after they 13 were concluded. And what Congress did in 13(c) was look 14 at that situation and say we're going to preserve those 15 rights for you. We are not going to all federal funding 16 to be the vehicle by which you are transferred out of 17 that right-laden position.

18 QUESTION: Well, they said if you want a 19 grant, if you want a grant, you have to make some 20 arrangements to preserve them.

21 MRS. HIRSHMAN: The statute is phrased as a 22 condition on the receipt of federal funds.

23 QUESTION: Yes, yes.

24 MRS. HIRSHMAN: That's correct.

25 QUESTION: And so if you want a grant, why

1 you, for example, must adopt the contract that was in 2 existence before.

3 MRS. HIRSHMAN: There are --

4 QUESTION: Does that create a right?

5 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, it preserves -- let's -- 6 the question before us today is whether it continues 7 collective bargaining rights. It said you must make 8 arrangements to continue collective bargaining rights.
9 It doesn't need to create rights in order to do that.
10 It preserved them from the prior status.

11 QUESTION: You mean it said you had to agree
12 to be subject to the National Labor Relations law?

13 MRS. HIRSHMAN: No. Your Honor, the Congress
14 made it I think quite clear what it was intending to do
15 in this case. Without amending the National Labor 16 Relations Act it was requiring the recipients of federal 17 transit grants to make binding commitments to their 18 employees and also to the United States that they would 19 not divest the employees of their labor rights, and they 20 are enumerated in the statute.

21 QUESTION: So you think the condition was that 22 they subject themselves to the National Labor Relations 23 Act?

24 MRS. HIRSHMAN: No. I think that the 25 condition was that they continue collective bargaining

1 rights as tht --

2 QUESTION: What rights? What rights?

3 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, in this case it's the 4 right to a binding collective bargaining agreement. If 5 there's one thing that we --

6 QUESTION: Under what?

7 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Pardon me?

8 QUESTION: Under what, what right to a
9 collective bargaining agreement, the federal right?

10 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Yes, Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: So you say yes, they were agreeing 12 to subject themselves to the National Labor Relations
13 Act?

14 MRS. HIRSHMAN: To the rights that were 15 created by the Labor Act which by virtue --

16 QUESTION: So your answer is yes, they just, 17 that's the way you construe the act.

18 MRS. HIRSHMAN: It was preserved to them
19 through the vehicle of Section 13(c).

20 QUESTION: All right. So in order to get the 21 grant they had to agree to be bound by the National 22 Labor Relations Act.

23 Is that what you're saying?

24 MRS. HIRSHMAN: What I'm saying is that the 25 substantive rights that we understand when we use the

1 phrase collective bargaining rights includes certainly 2 the years of history under the National Labor Relations
3 Act, including binding collective bargaining
4 agreements.

5 QUESTION: Well, let me ask, let me ask you
6 this. Suppose there was a collective bargaining 7 agreement in effect and the city says, well, sure, we'll 8 continue that collective bargaining agreement for as 9 long as it lasts. Well, the contract expires, and so 10 there's no more contract rights right then, and then you 11 say, well, now you must bargain for another one.

12 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Right.

13 QUESTION: Now, what right is there to do 14 that? I mean, what -- is the basis for it the National 15 Labor Relations Act?

16 MRS. HIRSHMAN: The basis for it is Section 17 13(c) of the Urban Mass Transportation Act which obliged 18 them --

19 QUESTION: Well, it just continued rights that 20 they had, and so what right was it?

21 MRS. HIRSHMAN: They would have rights whose 22 substance and understanding is derived from the years of 23 experience under the National Labor Relations Act but 24 whose actual legal, enforceable source is Section 13(c)
25 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act, and that came up

1 in Congress. I mean, that came up in the debates in 2 Congress, and I think it was Senator Morse who said they 3 would retain their rights, not by virtue of the National 4 Labor Relations Act, but by virtue of the arrangements 5 which 13(c) will oblige them to make.

6 QUESTION: Forever?

7 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, the National --

8 QUESTION: Once having, once having taken the 9 money, you are forever subject to the National Labor 10 Relations Act.

11 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, you're subject to the 12 commitments that you make as a condition of the receipt 13 of federal funding.

14 QUESTION: Well, so what that -- so yes, you 15 say yes.

16 MRS. HIRSHMAN: And I say, Your Honor, that if 17 you take your employees out of the private sector and 18 transfer them into the public sector whereby they are 19 not covered by the strict terms of the National Labor 20 Relations Act, Congress intended to bind you to deal with 21 them in the ways set forth in Section 13(c).

22 Your Honor, since the mid-1940s --

23 QUESTION: May I ask you a question?

24 MRS. HIRSHMAN: -- the union repre -- the 25 employees in Jackson had a union.

1 QUESTION: Excuse me, Mrs. Hirshman. May I
2 ask you one question about that precise point?

3 MRS. HIRSHMAN: I'm sorry.

4 QUESTION: Supposing the contract expires and 5 there's bargaining for a new contract, and the 6 municipality commits an unfair labor practice in 7 connection with the bargaining. You don't have a remedy
8 under the National Labor.

9 MRS. HIRSHMAN: No.

10 QUESTION: What remedy, if any, would you 11 have?

12 MRS. HIRSHMAN: The 13(c) agreements commit
13 the recipients of federal funds, as Congress intended 14 them to be committed, to bargain collectively with us.

15 QUESTION: Yes.

16 MRS. HIRSHMAN: And I think that we would be 17 seeking to enforce the 13(c) agreement which has a 18 provision for arbitration of disputes over its terms.
19 So that if, for example, the transit authority said no, 20 it's not an unfair labor practice, or we were bargaining 21 in good faith, whatever, then we would have, as the 22 13(c) agreements provide, a dispute over whether they 23 were violating the terms of the 13(c) agreement, and we 24 would arbitrate over that.

25 But that's not what they did here. They took

1 a collective bargaining agreement that they had signed, 2 the same way that they had signed ordinary collective 3 bargaining agreements for ten years, and wrote a letter
4 to the union informing us that the collective bargaining 5 agreement was personal to the personnel director whom 6 they had discharged.

7 Now, if there's one thing that collective 8 bargaining rights means, it means that when you sign a 9 collective bargaining agreement, it is binding on the 10 parties and enforceable by them. That was certainly 11 Congress' understanding in 1964. That is certainly the 12 only reasonable understanding of the language of the 13 act. And that is what the sponsor of the act said about 14 collective bargaining rights when he amended the 15 preparatory language of encouragement to make collective 16 bargaining rights mandatory. Senator Morse said if we 17 only wanted to nudge the recipients of federal grants 18 with language of encouragement, then, he said, under the 19 committee's indefinite language, collective bargaining 20 agreements could be ignored or set aside by systems of 21 public ownership.

22 QUESTION: Where is the language you are 23 referring to, on what page?

24 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Page 15 of our brief, Justice
25 Burger.

1 So that we know I think from the passage of 2 the act through Congress, we know two things. First of 3 all, we know that Congress was not intending to nudge 4 transit authorities. Congress was intending -- and they 5 had that option. They had the language of encouragement 6 of collective bargaining in an early version of the 7 bill. They took it out and they fought hard over taking 8 it out. And one of the justifications that Senator 9 Morse gave to the Congress for strengthening the law to 10 make collective bargaining rights mandatory, not just 11 encouraging them, was that the scenario that you have 12 heard today would, under the old language, have taken 13 place.

14 QUESTION: What is at issue here, the 15 enforceability of the collective bargaining contract 16 that was entered into pursuant to 13(c)?

17 MRS. HIRSHMAN: We have both issues, Your 18 Honor, whether the collective bargaining rights
19 preserved to the employees through the vehicle of 13(c) 20 includes the common understanding that collective 21 bargaining agreements are enforceable by the parties to 22 them in federal court.

23 QUESTION: All right.

24 MRS. HIRSHMAN: And whether --

25 QUESTION: You mean, and that federal law

1 would apply?

2 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Federal law would apply, Your 3 Honor --

4 QUESTION: And why would it?

5 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, the second option that 6 Congress had in front of it when it was considering 7 Section 13(c) was whether to subordinate the protections 8 of Section 13(c) to state law, and they rejected that 9 option five times. It was proposed in committee.
10 Senator Tower proposed it twice on the Senate floor.
11 After Senator Morse --

12 QUESTION: Well, that doesn't necessarily -- 13 it doesn't necessarily follow from that that a 14 collective bargaining agreement entered into pursuant to 15 13(c) would be governed by federal rather than state 16 law. Obviously there's a binding contract that's 17 enforceable. It's just a question of whether state law 18 or federal law would apply.

19 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Okay.

20 Your Honor, what happens, the situation that 21 Congress was facing was the Dade County scenario where 22 the state law not only prohibited collective bargaining, 23 but also did not provide the employees with an action to 24 enforce their collective bargaining agreement, so that 25 when, you know, to understand how the law is supposed to

1 function you have to look at the problem that Congress 2 was trying to solve. Congress was trying to solve the 3 Dade County situation, and in that case the state law 4 simply did not provide the employees with an action to 5 enforce their collective bargaining agreement. Congress
6 said if there's one thing we're going to do with Section 7 13(c), it's make sure that federal funds do not fuel
8 repetitions of the Dade County scenario.

9 The fact that the law of a particular state at 10 the moment that the grant issues is or is not hostile to 11 the federal rights that Congress sought to protect, it 12 seems to me, is largely irrelevant.

13 Should this Court require an example of a 14 situation in which a transit authority signs 13(c) 15 agreements under then satisfactory state law and the 16 law -- the state then changes its law, the First 17 Circuit's decision in Division 589 v. The Massachusetts 18 Bay Transportation Authority is a classic example of 19 that. The State of Massachusetts did what Your Honors
20 were asking the Petitioner about. They took the money 21 and they changed their law in a way which affected the 22 rights set forth in our 13(c) agreement.

23 The legislature of the State of Georgia has 24 passed a similar law. It is awaiting the Governor's 25 signature.

1 When the 13(c) agreements are remitted to 2 state court for enforcement, a host of unexpected state 3 law defenses surfaces. For example, in Georgia, where 4 the Eleventh Circuit's ruled that although 13(c) 5 agreements must be honored, the honoring of them must be 6 honored, and that their contents, the federal contents
7 are assured by the supervision of the federal Secretary
8 of Labor, actions to enforce them belong in the state 9 courts.

10 QUESTION: When you say 13(c) agreement, are 11 you talking about the collective bargaining contracts 12 entered into, or the agreement entered in between the 13 recipient and the government?

14 MRS. HIRSHMAN: There are actually three 15 agreements at issue here, Your Honor. There is a grant 16 contract with the United States.

17 QUESTION: Well, which one are you referring 18 to?

19 MRS. HIRSHMAN: I was referring to the labor
20 protective agreement entered into between the grant 21 recipient and the union representing its employees which 22 Congress required to be made as a condition of the 23 receipt of federal funds.

24 QUESTION: Is that Exhibit C in the Joint 25 Appendix?

1 MRS. HIRSHMAN: I don't have it with me at 2 this moment, Your Honor, but I am sure it is.

3 QUESTION: And is -- would the suit that would 4 be brought be brought to enforce that agreement 5 technically?

6 MRS. HIRSHMAN: This lawsuit happens to 7 enforce both agreements because in this case the transit 8 grant recipient both abrogated our collective bargaining 9 agreement and abrogated the 13(c) agreement which 10 required them to bargain with us and make and maintain 11 enforceable collective bargaining agreements. So the 12 grant recipient violated both.

13 This case really presents the --

14 QUESTION: Well the National Labor Relations 15 Act doesn't even require people to enter into an 16 agreement.

17 MRS. HIRSHMAN: No, the National Labor
18 Relations Act operates by its own terms, to generate a 19 process of collective bargaining --

20 QUESTION: Well, you have to bargain. You 21 don't have to enter into any agreement.

22 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Right, right.

23 QUESTION: Let alone an enforceable one.

24 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, but once you enter into 25 it, Your Honor, you're bound by it.

1 QUESTION: Mm-hmm.

2 MRS. HIRSHMAN: And I think that that is the 3 critical collective bargaining right which we are 4 seeking to enforce here. Once the agreement is entered 5 into, it must be enforceable by the parties thereto.

6 QUESTION: Well, it isn't an unfair labor
7 practice to break the agreement, is it?

8 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well --

9 QUESTION: That is just a 301 case, is it?

10 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, it would depend on the 11 circumstances, Your Honor, and first you would obviously 12 have an arbitration question, a preliminary arbitration 13 question. But the --

14 QUESTION: This has an arbitration clause.

15 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Right.

16 So the fact that Tennessee law may or may not 17 be hostile to our collective bargaining rights in this 18 instance has no bearing on what Congress was trying to 19 do. Congress didn't write a law that said you will have 20 13(c) rights but only in those states where the law is 21 hostile to collective bargaining. They said you will 22 have 13(c) rights. If a transit authority wants the 23 federal money, they have to commit themselves, not to 24 create federal labor rights for you, but to preserve the 25 rights that you had before the federal funding.

1 QUESTION: Mrs. Hirshman, supposing that 2 before the federal funding the transit authority had 3 been operated -- was a public authority and had been 4 acting, had been operating the system and just got the 5 funds to improve it. Now, there it wouldn't have been 6 subject to the National Labor Relations Act.

7 MRS. HIRSHMAN: That's correct, Your Honor,
8 and we do not contend that the same relationship
9 pertains. There is a -- what Congress, to some degree 10 faced that in considering Section 13(c), and they said 11 we will look at the law of the particular state that 12 applies at the time that we're thinking about giving the 13 federal funding, and the employees get no greater rights 14 than they had already.

15 QUESTION: What if they weren't organized
16 before?

17 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, they had, in that 18 case -- we don't have that case here, Your Honor. It's 19 an inchoate right, in a sense, to organize, but that 20 certainly is very far from what we have here, where our 21 binding collective bargaining agreement was torn up on 22 the grounds that it was personal to the personnel 23 director.

24 If in fact Tennessee law is not hostile to 25 collective bargaining, then theoretically that conduct

1 should be a violation of state law as well. But that's 2 not what we're saying.

3 The Congress did not create a need system 4 whereby federal -- the employees would have federal 5 rights some of the time and state law rights others of 6 the time. It created a system which was mandatory in 7 its terms, not encouragement of collective bargaining 8 but continued collective bargaining rights, and does not 9 subordinate itself to the doctrine of state law.

10 The -- because the concept of collective 11 bargaining rights includes the concept of enforceable
12 collective bargaining agreements as they were understood 13 in 1964, our action arises under federal law and 14 jurisdiction in this Court would be proper under 28
15 U.S.C. 1331 and 1337.

16 Moreover, the 13(c) agreement which is also at 17 issue here is a contract mandated by federal law, and 18 it's --

19 QUESTION: Are you suggesting that 13(c)
20 requires that there be a binding collective bargaining
21 agreement?

22 MRS. HIRSHMAN: I think that 13(c) requires
23 that if collective bargaining agreements are concluded 24 between the parties, that the parties abide by them, the 25 same core meaning of collective bargaining rights that

1 Congress explicitly adverted to in passing 13(c).

2 If you make an agreement, you have to abide by 3 it. I think that at the very least that's what Congress 4 had in mind. That's what the Dade County abrogated in 5 the Dade County scenario which Congress was considering 6 at the time, and that is what Senator Morse referred to 7 explicitly on the Senate floor.

8 QUESTION: But no agreement, if there's no
9 agreement reached, then where does this stand?

10 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, this case does not 11 present that situation. The Congress had in mind a 12 scheme whereby the parties would attempt to negotiate 13 fair and equitable labor arrangements between them that 14 they could live with, in a fashion -- the model for 15 which is the Interstate Commerce Act labor protective 16 arrangements. So they thought that to deal with 17 particular problems the parties would try to negotiate a 18 fair and equitable labor arrangement and the Secretary
19 of Labor would supervise the terms of the 13(c) 20 agreement to be sure that the federal statutory interest 21 was effectuated by it.

22 So the 13(c) agreement is not only required by 23 federal law, its contents, its federal contents are -- 24 there are statutory minimums, and remaining questions
25 are to be dealt with through the agency of negotiation

1 and the supervision of the Secretary.

2 QUESTION: Well, I'm not sure you've answered
3 my question.

4 What if no agreement is ever reached?

5 MRS. HIRSHMAN: The most -- many Section 13(c) 6 agreements in which the employees are transferred from 7 private to public and lose their right to strike because 8 Congress was clear that that was one thing they were not 9 preserving in Section 13(c), provide for arbitration of 10 the terms of a new collective bargaining agreement.
11 That is the fair and equitable arrangement that the 12 parties have arrived at as a substitution for economic 13 weapons which --

14 QUESTION: But the 13(c) doesn't require 15 that.

16 MRS. HIRSHMAN: 13(c) requires such fair and 17 equitable labor protective arrangements as the 18 Secretary of Labor determines.

19 QUESTION: Well, he hasn't determined that 20 arbitration is necessary on the terms of the contract.

21 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well the 13(c) agreements, 22 where there's a loss of strike rights, 13(c) agreements 23 almost invariably provide for --

24 QUESTION: But we know that the law doesn't 25 require it.

1 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, the law requires what 2 the parties negotiate and the Secretary of Labor 3 certifies as a fair and equitable arrangement, and from 4 the beginning he certified such arrangements as fair and 5 equitable as the statute requires.

6 QUESTION: Well, if this agreement that was 7 entered into between the union and the authority 8 pursuant to 13(c) expired and that you were negotiating 9 a new contract and you just didn't -- there was an 10 impasse, and they just never -- there was never a 11 contract, are you suggesting that the transit authority 12 would be required to submit the terms to arbitration?

13 MRS. HIRSHMAN: If the particular 13(c) 14 agreement which was a condition of the result of federal 15 funding contained a provision for interest arbitration, 16 then the transit authority would be bound.

17 QUESTION: Well, did it in this case?

18 MRS. HIRSHMAN: That is not in this case.

19 QUESTION: Well, so it didn't in this case.

20 MRS. HIRSHMAN: It did not in this case. All 21 we want is that our collective bargaining agreement 22 should be abided by here.

23 QUESTION: And what was the term of the 24 collective bargaining contract that you are suing on?

25 MRS. HIRSHMAN: It was -- I believe it was

1 1975 to 1978.

2 QUESTION: And it's long since expired.

3 MRS. HIRSHMAN: It has, Your Honor.

4 QUESTION: And so what if you win?

5 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, there would be damages 6 because the terms and conditions of employment were were 7 unilaterally --

8 QUESTION: But only damages, only damages.

9 MRS. HIRSHMAN: And, and -- well, in this, on 10 the complaint as it existed in 19 -- as it was filed in 11 1976, that's where we are.

12 QUESTION: Well, so it's a damages case.

13 MRS. HIRSHMAN: But the transit authority 14 here -- in case I misspoke myself, Justice White, the 15 transit authority here in another case is party to a 16 13(c) agreement which provides for interest
17 arbitration. That is just not this case.

18 QUESTION: Yes. So? Again I say, what's left 19 of this case if you win? Damages.

20 MRS. HIRSHMAN: It would be damages, Your 21 Honor, and the -- and that's just by virtue of the fact 22 that collective bargaining agreements have terms 23 and --

24 QUESTION: And it's expired.

25 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Right.

1 QUESTION: What are the measures? What are 2 the measure of damages?

3 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, it would be the 4 difference between the wages and benefits that we were 5 paid under the unilateral terms imposed by the employer 6 and the collectively bargained terms that were a part of 7 our contract.

8 QUESTION: Well, that might not get you very 9 far, assuming you prevailed, isn't that so?

10 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, it's not so wide as a 11 church nor so deep as a well, but 'tis enough; 'twill
12 serve. I think we would be happy to have the damages, 13 the difference between our agreement that we negotiated 14 for with cost-of-living adjustments and so forth, and 15 what the employer chose to give us as a matter of his --

16 QUESTION: Well, you're going over that rather 17 fast, with cost-of-living adjustments. Where did they 18 come from?

19 MRS. HIRSHMAN: It was in the collective 20 bargaining agreement.

21 QUESTION: Well, but that's the agreement
22 that's expired.

23 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Right, and that would be the 24 measure of our damages.

25 QUESTION: Up until -- from '75 to '78?

1 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Right, right.

2 Your Honors --

3 QUESTION: Mrs. Hirshman, the fact that the 4 agreement is required by federal law, which you have 5 stressed, is not conclusive, is it? In Miree v. Dekalb, 6 which is cited several times in your opponents' brief, 7 the agreement there was required by federal law, too,
8 and yet we held that state law would govern.

9 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, you had a particular 10 question there. That agreement was an agreement between 11 the grant recipient and the United States, not between 12 the grant recipient and a third party. Congress did 13 not -- this, 13(c) is rather unusual. It is far from a 14 garden variety federal funding statute. It is modeled 15 on the Interstate Commerce Act which operates by virtue 16 of mandating agreements between in that case a regulated 17 industry, in this case a federal grant recipient, and 18 their employees, and those agreements Congress 19 anticipated would be enforced by the parties to them in 20 the traditional way that labor agreements are usually 21 enforced. So that this is not the same contract 22 relationship as was at issue.

23 QUESTION: When you say the traditional way 24 that labor agreements usually are enforced, now, if 25 there is a collective bargaining agreement between a

1 school board and its teachers, that agreement is usually 2 enforced in state court.

3 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Right. And what Congress
4 sought to do was to preserve for the employees here the 5 other structure of relationships because they saw what 6 happened when the transit employees in Dade County were 7 transferred to that system, and they knew that the 8 federal funding which did in fact fuel the wholesale 9 transfer out of the private sector and into the public 10 sector of transit --

11 QUESTION: But you are saying it should govern 12 even if there is no transfer, in other words, if the 13 public transit company had been in the public sector
14 before.

15 MRS. HIRSHMAN: No. All that 13(c) would do 16 in that case is preserve whatever rights the employees 17 had under state law prior to the federal funding.

18 QUESTION: Would that sort of a 13(c) 19 agreement then be suable in the state courts and not the 20 federal?

21 MRS. HIRSHMAN: The 13(c) agreement preserves 22 the status quo for the employees. That is a federal 23 right. The substance of the status quo was -- is 24 derived from the state of the law at the time of the 25 federal funding. That is not this case. This is the 1 classic --

2 QUESTION: I know it's not this case, but I'd 3 be interested in your answer to it.

4 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, the -- what I'm saying 5 is that the role that Congress -- Congress was rather 6 explicit. It said all we're going to do for you is 7 maintain the status quo so that we will guarantee that 8 things can't get worse for you, but we're not going to 9 make it any better, so that if, for example, there were 10 a state whose collective bargaining law were totally 11 unacceptable to the federal government, they could just 12 refuse to fund. But the -- in the case where it stays 13 public, which I gather is your question, the 13(c) 14 agreements as a matter of federal law merely maintain 15 the status quo as it existed prior to the federal 16 funding.

17 Should Your Honors choose to ignore the 18 existence in this case of a traditional collective 19 bargaining agreement and 13(c) agreements whose making 20 is mandated by federal law, and treat this case as one 21 merely for enforcement of the statute, an additional 22 basis for our claim here is provided by Section 1983.
23 We think this case parallels this Court's decision in 24 Maine v. Thiboutot. There, as here, the federal law 25 required grant recipients to make arrangements whose

1 contents was dictated by the federal statute. It was, 2 there as here, it was a condition of the receipt of 3 federal funds and not a direct mandate like the Railway 4 Labor Act.

5 QUESTION: Well, if you're right about 1983, 6 you would have to say that the action under this 7 agreement arises under federal law, wouldn't you?

8 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Yes, and I do say that.

9 QUESTION: And there, if it arises under 10 federal law, you can get in on 1331.

11 MRS. HIRSHMAN: We -- right, we get to the 12 same place. The question that --

13 QUESTION: So it isn't really an alternate 14 basis at all.

15 MRS. HIRSHMAN: Well, actually, it actually 16 is, because should this Court determine that the statute 17 is not the right source of our 13(c) agreement rights, 18 we would still have rights under the statute directly.
19 There's been some discussion in the briefings and the 20 Eleventh Circuit adverted to the point that somehow our 21 rights only derived from the 13(c) agreement and not 22 from the statute itself, and should this Court determine 23 to consider only the statute, you would not have to 24 imply a private right of action for us there because the 25 public body here made a commitment to the federal

1 government, just like in Maine v. Thiboutot, and that -- 2 the violation of that commitment violates the federal 3 statute mandating the commitment to be made.

4 This Court has never held to my knowledge that 5 the mere making of the commitment is sufficient to 6 satisfy the federal statutory mandate, The ink still 7 being wet on the paper and thereafter all of the rights 8 contained in the commitment are, if you're just 9 fortunate enough to have a state with good law. In 10 Maine v. Thiboutot the state executed a plan, just like 11 the federal statute required, containing the particular 12 payment of welfare provisions that the statute required, 13 and thereafter when the beneficiaries of that 14 arrangement came to enforce it, this Court held that 15 1983 created a claim for them.

16 In sum, the United States Court of Appeals for 17 the Sixth Circuit ruled correctly in this case, and we 18 believe that their decision should be affirmed.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: You have about three 20 minutes, Mr. Kaufman.

21 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOSEPH S. KAUFMAN, ESQ.

22 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS -- REBUTTAL

23 MR. KAUFMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
24 please the Court:

25 I think the Court understands what this case

1 is about now. It's a case to collect the difference 2 between the amount that the union claims was due under 3 the 1975 collective bargaining agreement and what they 4 say they have been paid. It's a claim for damages to 5 enforce nothing more than a garden variety collective 6 bargaining agreement. There is no federal right. There 7 is no federal law to be vindicated here. And it does 8 not hinge on the interpretation of any federal statute.

9 Picking up where I left off before, we would 10 have the most anomalous system where the large cities 11 such as New York, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Chicago and 12 Boston would be, having 13(c) arrangements, would be 13 under one system and smaller communities such as Jackson 14 would be under another system merely because of the 15 events that caused the transition from the private 16 sector to the public sector. I don't think Congress 17 ever envisioned any such situation as that is now 18 proposed.

19 Many states, including New York, for example,
20 have long had the Taylor law on their books which handle 21 situations with their local transit workers, and handled 22 them well, and handled the situation that has been 23 talked about in unfair labor practice. These have 24 always been in the state court and state law well, and 25 just as Jackson should be.

1 My colleague would have this Court import, or 2 insert, municipal labor relations insofar as only 3 transit workers are concerned silently by the 4 incorporation of Section 301 of the Labor Management
5 Relations Act into Section 13(c). Not one Congressman, 6 not one Senator, and not one word in the debates would 7 ever lead you to that conclusion. No one urged that.
8 And I might point out that has never been urged in any 9 lower court in this proceeding, and for the first time
10 has been urged in this Court.

11 Now, collective bargaining agreements are 12 enforceable, but if, as has been pointed out, the 13 teachers have a violation of their collective bargaining 14 agreement, it's solved under state law pursuant to the 15 exemption of the Wagner and Taft-Hartley Acts, and so it 16 should be for transit workers.

17 QUESTION: What if you were suing to enforce 18 the agreement between -- what if the Secretary were 19 suing on the agreement between the authority and the 20 United States?

21 MR. KAUFMAN: I think there's express federal 22 jurisdiction under 1345, Your Honor.

23 QUESTION: And that would be governed by 24 federal law, wouldn't you say?

25 MR. KAUFMAN: I would think that that would be

1 governed by probably a hybrid of federal and state law
2 in that case, sir.

3 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Counsel.

4 The case is submitted.

5 MR. KAUFMAN: Thank you, Your Honor.

6 (Whereupon, at 3:07 p.m., the case in the 7 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
