CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: I think you may proceed
when you're ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF DONALD C. ROBINSON, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

MR. ROBINSON: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
please the Court:

The events giving rise to this litigation began almost ten years ago in Butte, Montana when a self-employed contractor conceived what he believed to be a better idea for the construction of homes.
However, within a few months after he began his operation of a new modular home plan, his business became the victim of a secondary boycott and jurisdictional dispute picketing conducted by the respondent union.

Because of the exigent circumstances created by that activity, which I will describe in a moment, Summit Valley was forced to make expenditures of money in the form of legal fees and related expenses in order to stop the activity. Thus, the question for decision is whether the victim of an illegal secondary boycott is entitled to its attorneys' fees and related expenses of litigation which were incurred by it to successfully effect a cessation of the boycott and the resumption of

1 the enterprise in order to mitigate the harm caused by 2 that activity as compensatory damages under Section 303
3 of the Labor Management Relations Act.

4 The question presented here is crucial for the 5 small employer in the Ninth Circuit who is faced with 6 the dilemma of either absorbing the losses caused by the 7 boycott or absorbing the losses caused by the 8 expenditure of his legal fees incurred to stop the 9 boycott.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Robinson, did you suffer any 11 work stoppage at all?

12 MR. ROBINSON: Yes. The work stoppages
13 occurred at the homes of Summit Valley's customers when 14 the union went to those homes and threatened the 15 employees of contractors who were employed by the -- 16 Summit Valley's customers to build foundations and 17 garages and ancillary structures. And that work
18 stoppage did occur at that point, Your Honor.

19 In either case, either absorbing the loss of 20 the boycott or the legal fees, the financial resources 21 of a new business are eaten up and the business thus 22 becomes jeopardized. And the only alternative, at least 23 in the Ninth Circuit, for an employer in that situation 24 is to capitulate to the illegal union demands. Our 25 position is that Section 303 was designed to obviate

1 that kind of a dilemma.

2 The facts relative to the dispute are,
3 briefly, Summit Valley had a labor agreement with Butte 4 Teamsters Local 2 which governed the terms and 5 conditions of employment of its employees, and those 6 employees engaged in an assembly line type of 7 homebuilding operation. Retail customers were required
8 to contract with local contractors to have the necessary 9 on site footings and other ancillary structures built in 10 order to make the homes habitable.

11 The Carpenters Union objected to this 12 enterprise and boycotted, as I have just indicated, 13 Summit Valley's customers by forcing its members to 14 cease performing work at those homes by threatening to 15 fine the union members, and in some cases did fine them.

16 Shortly thereafter, the union erected picket 17 lines at Summit Valley's plant site itself, and as 18 consequence, retail customers refused to cross the 19 picket lines.

20 Summit Valley employed private attorneys to 21 take necessary action to remedy that conduct that was,
22 first, precluding customers from completing homes
23 already sold to them, and precluding Summit Valley's 24 acquisition of potential new customers because of the 25 refusal of customers in the Butte, Montana area to cross

1 these picket lines.

2 Consequently, we filed an unfair labor
3 practice charge -- charges with the NLRB, and we have 4 detailed in our brief the outline of those protracted 5 proceedings. Suffice it to say that we prevailed at 6 every level of the proceedings, including the Section 7 10K proceeding in which the NLRB awarded the work in 8 question to the Teamsters. The Carpenters refused to 9 disclaim any further attempts to assert jurisdiction 10 over that work. And, in fact, even after the NLRB had 11 made its initial determinations, continued again to 12 threaten -- continued its threats to picket.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Robinson, would you concede 14 that the American rule normally precludes recovery of 15 attorneys' fees as damages?

16 MR. ROBINSON: Yes. That is the traditional --

17 QUESTION: So, all right. Then what we have 18 to do, of course, I suppose is look at the use of the 19 word "damages" in Section 303(b), right?

20 MR. ROBINSON: That's correct.

21 QUESTION: And determine whether Congress
22 intended to use the term in the normal way that it is 23 used or whether it had some other intention in mind, 24 right?

25 MR. ROBINSON: That's correct.

1 QUESTION: Okay. Now, what is there in the 2 legislative history that would lead us to the conclusion
3 that Congress intended something other than the normal 4 rule?

5 MR. ROBINSON: In Note 16 in Teamsters v.
6 Morton, the only other case I believe that this Court
7 has had before involving Section 303, the Court noted
8 that Senator Taft stated that one of the primary 9 purposes for his proposing the amendment, Section 303, 10 was to restore to people the monies they have lost as a 11 result of such jurisdictional and secondary boycott 12 activity.

13 QUESTION: Well, did he not also say that 14 under the Sherman Act the same question of boycott
15 damage is subject to a suit for damages and attorneys'
16 fees, but in this case we simply provide for the amount 17 of actual damages.

18 MR. ROBINSON: That's true, Justice O'Connor.
19 However, Senator Taft was speaking in that context to 20 whether Congress intended to award attorneys' fees in 21 the 303 action itself. We are not claiming or 22 contending that such attorneys' fees were awarded in our 23 303 suit.

24 The Ninth Circuit in the Mead case, which is 25 the only circuit that has ruled contrary to our

1 position, even recognized that distinction and indicated 2 in its decision that certainly that colloquy between 3 Senator Taft and Senator Morris did not really address 4 the issue of whether attorneys' fees in the context that 5 we have them here may or may not be considered as 6 damages, or whether they would be considered as the 7 damages or attorneys' fees. And essentially all of the 8 circuits and even Mead recognized that that colloquy
9 simply did not address the question presented.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Robinson, you didn't ask for 11 fees in the board proceeding, did you -- the unfair 12 labor practices proceeding?

13 MR. ROBINSON: No, we did not.

14 QUESTION: Was there a reason for that?

15 MR. ROBINSON: We simply felt that under 16 Section 303 of the Act that's where our remedy lie and 17 that we do not contend that the -- or would submit that 18 the board has any authority to award damages to the 19 victim of a secondary boycott either -- for any kinds of 20 business losses; that that claim should be and properly 21 be made in the 303 suit itself.

22 QUESTION: What about attorneys' fees in the 23 proceeding itself that Justice -- before the board? You 24 say the board has no authority to award attorneys' fees?

25 MR. ROBINSON: The board takes the position

1 that it has the authority to award attorneys' fees, and 2 under its authority under Section 10 of the Act to 3 effectuate violations of the Act. However, here we're 4 dealing with a separate statute, Section 303. And the 5 board, as this Court noted in the Juneau Spruce case --

6 QUESTION: Well, but to get the injunction you 7 have to go to the board.

8 MR. ROBINSON: To obtain the cessation order, 9 yes, you have to --

10 QUESTION: You know, you have to go to the 11 board.

12 MR. ROBINSON: Yes.

13 QUESTION: And what about the attorneys' fees
14 in that proceeding?

15 MR. ROBINSON: The --

16 QUESTION: Certainly the board's got authority
17 to award them.

18 MR. ROBINSON: I think that that is still -- 19 that question is still up in the air as to whether the 20 Board has the authority to award attorneys' fees. It 21 does, but there are some circuits --

22 QUESTION: Well, anyway, you didn't ask for 23 them.

24 MR. ROBINSON: No, I didn't. No, we did not.

25 QUESTION: Do you -- do you think you could

1 have -- do you have a position on whether you would have 2 satisfied the board's criteria for the award of 3 attorneys' fees?

4 MR. ROBINSON: No. We are not contending that 5 a victim of a secondary boycott should have to have 6 superimposed upon itself an additional burden of proving 7 that the secondary boycott was in bad faith or that it 8 was obstinately motivated or things of that nature.

9 As this Court indicated I think just last week
10 in a footnote in the Longshoremen's case --

11 QUESTION: I take it then you're saying if you 12 had asked for attorneys' fees, you probably wouldn't 13 have gotten them under the board's criteria.

14 MR. ROBINSON: It might have been a close case 15 because --

16 QUESTION: Okay.

17 MR. ROBINSON: -- There are some elements in 18 this case of bad faith, but we are not making the 19 contention --

20 QUESTION: But, counselor, if you take that 21 position, then you don't want me to believe you gave it 22 up out of the goodness of your heart, do you? You don't 23 want me to believe that, do you?

24 MR. ROBINSON: I'm sorry.

25 QUESTION: I said if you say that you could

1 have gotten it but you didn't ask for it, does that mean
2 you gave it up out of the goodness of your heart?

3 MR. ROBINSON: No.

4 QUESTION: I didn't think so.

5 MR. ROBINSON: We did not feel that that was 6 the appropriate place --

7 QUESTION: That's right.

8 MR. ROBINSON: -- Justice Marshall --

9 QUESTION: That's what I thought.

10 MR. ROBINSON: -- To make that claim.

11 QUESTION: That's what I thought.

12 MR. ROBINSON: At the trial the union
13 stipulated that $13,604 was the amount that Summit
14 Valley had incurred in legal expenses and related costs 15 in the prosecution of the NLRB proceedings. The 16 district court made two significant findings that are 17 pertinent to note here.

18 First, it was necessary to the survival of 19 Summit Valley as a business to prevent the union from 20 engaging in these activities. And, secondly, that by 21 reason of the continued threats on the part of the 22 union, it was necessary to employ attorneys from the 23 time of commencement of the picketing until the NLRB and 24 related proceedings were concluded. And that Summit
25 Valley had in fact incurred, reasonably incurred $13,604

1 in such expenses to stop the union's violations of the 2 Act. However, the Court felt constrained to follow the 3 Ninth Circuit decision in Mead v. Retail Clerks, which 4 was decided in 1975 and which is essentially the only -- 5 which is the case that is actually for review by this 6 Court and which creates the conflict between it and five 7 other circuits which hold to the contrary.

8 The rule prevailing in five of the six circuit
9 Courts of Appeals does allow a recovery of attorneys' 10 fees and expenses in this context because they're 11 incurred in a prior NLRB proceedings to obtain and 12 secure a cessation of the illegal activity and to 13 mitigate the continuing accrual of injuries caused by 14 those activities.

15 Now, we describe these expenses in a shorthand 16 way in our brief and may refer to them here as 17 preemptive legal expenses. They're described as 18 preemptive because they are damages directly following 19 from the wrong itself. They are not incurred to 20 adjudicate the legality or illegality of a prior wrong
21 or injury no longer occurring but to obtain a remedy 22 against ongoing injury that is not only illegal but 23 which is intentionally designed and calculated solely 24 for the purpose of causing injury.

25 The Eighth Circuit has reasoned that they are

1 preemptive legal expenses because they, in effect, take 2 the place of other compensable damages which would 3 continue to be suffered and which would be assessed but 4 for the attorneys' successful efforts in obtaining a 5 cessation of the illegal conduct. Thus, they are viewed 6 for what they really are, and that is nothing more than a 7 very necessary business expense incurred in the 8 exigencies of circumstances, and directly and 9 foreseeably imposed upon an employer by the union in 10 order to alleviate its illegal conduct.

11 QUESTION: Well, are there analogs of that 12 situation in the area of general law? What about 13 someone who goes to court to get an injunction to stop 14 illegal conduct, say in the field of torts or 15 contracts. Do you think in a state which follows the 16 American rule that person could get an award of 17 attorneys' fees because he was trying to stop illegal 18 conduct?

19 MR. ROBINSON: Justice Rehnquist, the general
20 concept that we are talking about here, as expressed by 21 the prevailing rule of the circuits in 303 actions, has 22 had an historical application to a limited class of 23 cases arising under state common law such as false
24 arrest cases, malicious prosecution cases, indemnity
25 cases and like kinds of cases.

1 These cases are considered to be historically
2 consistent with the American rule, but at the same time 3 they have a limited application to cases where the 4 illegal activity creates a uniquely compelling need to 5 employ the attorneys, and where there's a direct 6 connection between the injury and the attorneys' fees.

7 In that connection, it's worthy to note, I 8 think, that the application of this Section 303 kind of 9 a rule has not found any application beyond it to the 10 injunction kinds of cases that you're talking about.
11 The numbers of cases decided by five of these circuit
12 Courts of Appeals, we cannot find any cases that apply 13 that in a nonlabor law context, and that may be --

14 QUESTION: Well, why should it be peculiar to 15 labor law if it's in the context of this general rule in 16 America that you don't recover attorneys' fees as an 17 incident of your damages in the action itself? Surely 18 there are torts outside the field of labor law that one 19 could argue are just as uniquely compelling, I think was 20 your language, as a secondary boycott.

21 MR. ROBINSON: Well --

22 QUESTION: Well, are you limiting your 23 argument because you have a secondary boycott in a labor 24 case and not an ordinary civil action?

25 MR. ROBINSON: The rule that we are urging for

1 adoption by this Court is, of course, limited to the 2 unique circumstance of the federal labor law. And 3 perhaps it is limited because we have I think here some 4 unique mechanisms which trigger cease and desist
5 remedies, and the nature of the conduct with which we're 6 dealing and the injury with which we're dealing, the 7 fact that it is inherently injurious -- in fact, that's 8 it's only purpose is to cause injury, unlike other torts 9 which even though it may be intentional, may not 10 necessarily be intended solely to cause injury.

11 QUESTION: Well, what about building a spite 12 fence in the common law of torts? That's the same 13 thing, isn't it? The only purpose for doing it is to 14 cause injury.

15 MR. ROBINSON: I'm not certain. It would, of 16 course, depend on the common law of the state. I do 17 know that historically for -- going back to treatises in 18 the early part of this century, commentators have noted 19 that, yes, that in certain kinds of cases involving 20 maliciousness or involving intentional injury and where 21 the act is designed solely to injure, then perhaps this 22 kind of concept, considering attorneys' fees not qua
23 attorneys' fees but as damages, has been legitimately 24 recognized.

25 We believe that the adoption of the prevailing

1 rule would enhance the purposes and goals of the federal 2 labor law. And as Justice O'Connor noted, the question
3 here is to decide where the analysis must begin. We 4 submit that it begins with the statute and the policies 5 and purposes of the statute itself and not with the 6 concept of the American rule.

7 In addition to the restoration and make whole
8 remedy of which I spoke, referencing Senator Taft's 9 comments, also Senator Taft, as we noted extensively in 10 our briefs, repeatedly and pointedly referred to the 11 deterrent effect that Section 303 was designed to 12 achieve.

13 And Congress did something unique when it --
14 in trying to foster and promote these two goals when it
15 created the damage remedy itself, because that damage 16 remedy applies only to a secondary boycott and 17 jurisdictional dispute violation. Congress did not see 18 fit to provide private parties with damage remedies in 19 any other violation of the law.

20 We submit that that bespeaks a compelling 21 congressional urgency to insure that these goals were in 22 fact achieved. And awarding these preemptive legal 23 expenses as an item of compensatory damages satisfies 24 both of these objectives. It provides a deterrent to 25 the union that might be motivated to boycott a new

1 employer when the union suspects that the employer might 2 succumb to the illegal demands because of pragmatic 3 financial considerations. It obviously enhances the 4 ability of the employer to take the dispute out of the 5 streets and place it in the legal forum. And by raising 6 the stakes of the outcome of the NLRB litigation it
7 promotes settlements and thus fosters an overriding 8 policy of achieving industrial peace. And it will --

9 QUESTION: Mr. Robinson.

10 MR. ROBINSON: Yes.

11 QUESTION: Do you know whether there have been 12 any proposals in the Congress to specifically provide 13 for this?

14 MR. ROBINSON: For --

15 QUESTION: Does this expressly include
16 attorneys' fees as damages since the enactment of 303?

17 MR. ROBINSON: To provide -- in the 303 action
18 or in our context?

19 QUESTION: In your context. Have there been 20 any proposals in the Congress?

21 MR. ROBINSON: Not that I know of. Of course, 22 if Congress was reviewing the case law, they would 23 probably decide that -- in five of the six circuits
24 those damages are awardable in this context, so Congress
25 might be very well satisfied that they are being awarded

1 in most circuits.

2 This Court has viewed the considerations of 3 what remedies are available under Section 303 by 4 reference to the Act itself and consistent with its 5 policies and purposes. And in the punitive damages
6 cases both in Section 303 and 301 this Court has said 7 that even though common law or state law remedies such 8 as punitive damages are clearly available, those 9 remedies where over and above the make whole principle 10 and policies expressed in the Act. Consequently, or 11 conversely, the common law principles from which the 12 American rule are derived should not be imposed to 13 preclude remedies that would satisfy the total 14 restoration of losses principle which underlies the 15 congressional purpose.

16 The amicus AFL-CIO and the respondent union 17 make no demonstration or attempt to demonstrate how the 18 balance of the union/employer interests would be 19 significantly altered or affected if this rule were 20 adopted. Indeed, they cannot make such a showing 21 because the attorneys' fees that we're talking about 22 here by their very nature precluded the assessment of 23 far greater damages to which the union would have been 24 liable had attorneys' fees not been incurred. So, thus, 25 the benefit inures to the union as well as it does to

1 the employer if this rule is adopted.

2 However, we do find some common ground with 3 the AFL-CIO in its amicus brief when it notes that the 4 First Circuit's approach is persuasive. The First 5 Circuit has closely attempted to distinguish between 6 attorney's fees incurred to obtain a cessation of 7 ongoing injury as distinguished from attorneys' fees 8 incurred to adjudicate liability after the fact. And 9 that distinction we have not hesitated to embrace.

10 And since the AFL-CIO characterizes this 11 approach as persuasive, we believe that that distinction
12 accommodates both the Section 303 and the American rule
13 because it allows recovery when legal expenses flow 14 directly and foreseeably from ongoing wrong, but at the 15 same time recognizes that legal expenses incurred after 16 the injury has ceased are incurred as a result of the 17 litigant's decision to litigate and not as a result of 18 the need to obtain a cessation of the conduct.

19 The operation of the Ninth Circuit rule
20 produces some anomalous results. The cost of security
21 guards to protect the property during illegal picketing
22 apparently is compensable, but the fees of the attorneys 23 to remove the pickets and eliminate the need for 24 security guards and their costs and additional overhead 25 are not compensable.

1 QUESTION: Well, that's no more anomalous than 2 being able to recover your medical expenses in a court
3 action but not being able to recover your attorneys' 4 fees, is it? I mean the American rule does produce some 5 anomalous results.

6 MR. ROBINSON: Well, I think the distinction,
7 though, is that the doctor's bill was incurred directly 8 as a result of the wrong, but the attorneys' fees, at 9 least as the rationale of the American rule goes, flow 10 from the decision of the litigant to litigate his 11 injury, and that is the distinction made with the 12 American rule rationale. But here --

13 QUESTION: Well, can't you say just as surely 14 that your client's incurring of attorneys' fees flowed 15 from his decision to contest the secondary boycott?

16 MR. ROBINSON: He really did not have the 17 luxury of making or attempting to decide whether he 18 should incur attorneys' fees or not. He really had no 19 choice.

20 QUESTION: Are you analogizing that to 21 self-defense, that you're entitled to use whatever means 22 are at your disposal reasonably to protect yourself?

23 MR. ROBINSON: I had not thought of that 24 analogy in that sort of terms but --

25 QUESTION: You wouldn't reject it, though.

1 MR. ROBINSON: Pardon me?

2 QUESTION: You wouldn't reject it, though.

3 MR. ROBINSON: No. The attorneys' fees were 4 compelling in that the victim did not have the luxury -- 5 well, first let me go back and say that some 6 commentators say that the American rule has derived from 7 the fact that the litigant and the attorneys sit down 8 and make a contract to decide how the fees are going to 9 be established and paid; and that the rationale, or one 10 commentator says the rationale of the American rule is 11 that it is not proper to then have the other litigant 12 come in and superimpose upon that contract.

13 The point I'm making is that in this context
14 our client does not have the opportunity or the luxury
15 to sit down and make that kind of a calculated 16 decision. The need for attorneys' fees and to obtain 17 the efforts of attorneys was absolutely imminent.

18 We contend that the rule prevailing not only 19 is consistent with the federal labor law policy but 20 enhances and facilitates it by vindicating the victim's 21 rights and restoring him truly to a status quo and made 22 whole position. The rule prevailing does not offend the 23 American rule because preemptive legal expenses are in 24 this context truly damages. The mere fact that these 25 expenses are labeled attorneys' fees should not obscure

1 the issue.

2 We therefore urge this Court to reverse the 3 Ninth Circuit and hold that preemptive legal expenses
4 are in fact compensable damages under Section 303 of the 5 Act when they do obtain a cessation of illegal secondary 6 boycotts.

7 I'll reserve five minutes.

8 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Paull.

9 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID S. PAULL, ESQ.,

10 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

11 MR. PAULL: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
12 please the Court:

13 Let me begin by emphasizing that this case in 14 a truly fundamental sense is first and foremost a pure
15 matter of statutory construction. The basic issue here 16 is what did Congress mean when it utilized the legal 17 term "damages" in the enactment of Section 303.

18 As this Court has stated so often, the 19 starting point in the construing of a statute must be 20 with the very language of the statute itself. And in, 21 of course, Section 303 the operative language, the 22 language that we need to construe is that phrase
23 "damages by him sustained."

24 Now, the lessons learned from this Court 25 indicates that when Congress employs a term, a legal

1 term of art such as "damages," the use of that term 2 evokes an entire tradition of meaning as expressed by 3 the decisional law applicable to that term. And absent 4 clear indications to the contrary, we know from the 5 cases of this Court that Congress intends for that 6 language to be construed in the context of that 7 tradition.

8 Now, Judge Browning of the Ninth Circuit Court
9 of Appeals demonstrated his understanding of that legal 10 tradition surrounding the term "damages" when he ruled 11 in Mead's Market v. Retail Clerks that attorneys' fees 12 incurred in a prior litigation may not be recovered in a 13 subsequent suit between the same parties; and 14 specifically in Mead's market that a Section 303 15 plaintiff cannot recover his attorneys' fees incurred in 16 prior related proceedings.

17 Judge Brown cited with approval the Illinois 18 case of Ritter v. Ritter which is directly on point and 19 which I think describes better than any other case the 20 legal tradition that we are looking for in attempting to 21 construe the term "damages."

22 Now, Ritter really made three main points.
23 First of all it said that the amount of cost, not the 24 damages flowing from the wrong but the amount of costs
25 in pursuing a suit and the nature of those costs are set

1 by the legislature, in this particular case Congress.
2 It established that the wrongful acts or the alleged 3 wrongful acts of the defendant create no separate 4 liability, no independent tort for the responsibility of 5 attorneys' fees, unless, of course, the wrongful act
6 forced the plaintiff into litigation with some third 7 party, which of course is not the case here.

8 Finally, the Ritter court explained very well 9 the rationale which is behind the American rule, and 10 cited over 20 cases which was in accord with its view.
11 And as of 1943 when the Ritter court made its decision 12 it had found no law, no law to the contrary; and one of 13 those cases it cited was that Flanders v. Tweed case, a 14 very old 1872 case which also involved attorneys' fees
15 for a prior proceeding.

16 And since it stated its rationale so clearly 17 and since that rationale is so important to this 18 argument, I would just briefly like to read from page 13
19 of the amicus brief where part of this is set forth.

20 "Under our jurisprudence the defendant may 21 present any defense to such an action that he may have 22 or that he may deem expedient, and in so doing he will 23 not be subjecting himself to a second suit by plaintiff 24 based on the wrongful conduct of the defendant in 25 causing the plaintiff to sue him or in defending the

1 action. The rule is the same even though the wrongful 2 conduct of the defendant is willful, intentional,
3 malicious or fraudulent."

4 Now, of course, there are exceptions to that 5 rationale, and they are in fact the exceptions to the 6 rule. When the defense proffered not the conduct
7 involved, not the wrongful conduct, but when the defense 8 itself is in bad faith or vexatious, that is an 9 exception to the rule. The common benefit theory, which 10 we mention in our brief, and the collateral litigation 11 theory, these are exceptions to the rule. But the 12 rationale in every other case has been deemed to be 13 applicable, and it is submitted on the authorities 14 listed in our brief, and specifically in Ritter and 15 Mead, that the ordinary, common meaning of the word 16 "damages" as it appeared to Congress in 1947 when the 17 legislation was enacted, the legal tradition which 18 Congress intended us to draw on when it employed the 19 term "damages" does not include attorneys' fees incurred 20 in a prior proceeding before or involving the National 21 Labor Relations Board in a case arising under Section 22 8(b)(4).

23 QUESTION: Mr. Paull, I guess there are four 24 other circuits that disagree, however.

25 MR. PAULL: That's true, Your Honor. And of

1 course I hasten to point out that this Court has often 2 ignored the majority of circuits, and especially in 3 Alyeska when the private attorneys general theory was 4 subscribed to by so many circuits and this Court 5 overruled the theory.

6 But I think the point is that we have to look 7 to the rationale provided by those cases and match it
8 against the rationale for the American rule. The only 9 theory offered really is that of the Eighth Circuit
10 which says that the damages are like compensatory 11 damages in that they stop further harm and that they are 12 more like a business expense than attorneys' fees, and 13 that provides the basis for granting.

14 But there are all kinds of policy reasons 15 against that. Before I get to them I would like to 16 point out that first we must look to the statutory 17 language; and I don't think that any of those courts
18 have done so. Certainly Senator Taft, then Senator 19 Taft, was aware of 10L and 10K and the right of the 20 charging party to participate in an unfair labor 21 practice proceeding.

22 There's no language to support the type of 23 award requested here. There's no kind of legislative 24 history that can be cited to support what really is in 25 terms of the American rule a novel theory of damages

1 which the petitioner now urges upon this Court. And I
2 say novel because it departs so drastically from this 3 long tradition of law that we have.

4 We've examined the policy arguments made by 5 the petitioner with respect to his argument, and we have 6 met those arguments in our brief. We say only first -- 7 first of all, I think the policy arguments which he made 8 are easily met. All these objectives are met whether or 9 not attorneys' fees is part of Section 303.

10 But our first position is and must be that 11 before this matter can be examined in the light of any 12 kind of national labor policy, this Court first must 13 determine whether or not the question is even open or 14 even lends itself to such an analysis. And it is our 15 firm viewpoint that in view of the language of the 16 statute and the legislative history and the rules of 17 statutory construction that the question of federal 18 labor policy as it relates to petitioner's claim is just 19 clearly foreclosed as a method of resolving this case.

20 And I think to some degree the petitioner
21 would want this Court to place labor law on another 22 planet than earth, and I don't think that that can be 23 done. I think that these rules of statutory 24 construction must be observed and that the rationale 25 which underlies the American rule is important enough to 1 be preserved in all cases.

2 And in two of this Court's recent cases the 3 Court has forced the very legal tradition of which I was 4 speaking surrounding the term of "damages," and I'm 5 speaking now of F.D. Rich and Fleishman which is cited 6 in our briefs.

7 In F.D. Rich and Fleishman this Court
8 emphasized that the make whole argument, which is really 9 the argument the petitioner is making, when grounded on 10 policy of something else other than the express
11 statutory language must yield to the countervailing 12 considerations that are set forth in F.D. Rich and also 13 referred to in Ritter.

14 Both the Eight Circuit and the petitioner take 15 the position that attorneys' fees in obtaining a 16 cessation of picketing are analogous to these elements
17 of compensatory damages and therefore recoverable.

18 And this I think, Justice O'Connor,
19 specifically answers -- more specifically answers your 20 question -- but first of all, that this argument is 21 specifically rejected in Rich and Fleishman which teach 22 that of the two considerations, the rationale for the 23 American rule must win out, except, of course, when 24 Congress expressly states otherwise. And when it has 25 intended attorneys' fees to be covered for a certain

1 situation, it has in the past had no difficulty in 2 phrasing that in its statutes.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Paull, if the American rule is 4 that strict, do you think there's some problem with the 5 board's authority to award attorneys' fee under the 6 Tiidee doctrine?

7 MR. PAULL: I think there may be. I think 8 there may well be a problem under those circumstances.
9 Of course, that's not involved in this case.

10 I think the rationale for the rule, the 11 protection of the right of the plaintiff to sue without 12 incurring attorney's fees from the other side, the 13 protection of the defendant's right to assert a defense
14 without incurring attorneys' fees on the other side, I
15 don't know, of course, but I feel that that may present 16 a problem.

17 I think the facts of Fleishman are 18 particularly compelling in this instance. Petitioner
19 seeks to distinguish Fleishman because the fees sought 20 in that case were at a prior stage of the same 21 proceeding. First of all, I think there is an 22 irresistable analogy between the injunctive proceeding 23 in Fleishman and the 10L type of proceeding which we 24 have in this case in the ULP proceeding, the unfair 25 labor practice proceeding.

1 It's especially true in this case when the ULP
2 decision, the unfair labor practice decision, was used 3 as collaterally estopping the issue of liability in the 4 Section 303 action. What could be indicative of a 5 closer relationship between the two proceedings?

6 Certainly if the union had prevailed in the 7 unfair labor practice, which it certainly could have, or 8 in the injunction proceeding, it could not under any 9 theory, under any stretch of the imagination recovered 10 its attorneys' fees against the employer. It would be 11 particularly pernicious in this instance, I think, to 12 allow such an item of damage to the employer under these 13 circumstances.

14 Petitioner seeks to distinguish Fleishman and 15 the rational of the American rule on the grounds that 16 the union's conduct was deliberate, that it was 17 extrajudicial; it did not invoke the court process.
18 This cannot affect the applicability of the rationale of 19 the American rule. The question of wrongful conduct 20 after all is not decided until after a case is 21 determined, not beforehand. And if that would be true, 22 the plaintiff's right to sue in any given case would be 23 elevated or be superior to the defendant's right to 24 assert a defense, which just isn't the American rule, 25 unless, of course, that defense is in bad faith. But

1 there is certainly a well-established exception for that.

2 QUESTION: Well, I'm not sure I follow your 3 track there, why this affects the plaintiff, as you put 4 it.

5 MR. PAULL: Well --

6 QUESTION: I should think -- perhaps I'm just 7 misconstruing what you said -- that if we were trying to 8 move toward the English rule -- I'm not suggesting we -- 9 what the Court's going to do -- but if we were trying to 10 move toward the English rule and away from the old 11 American rule, we'd say that putting costs on -- more 12 costs on the plaintiff who loses, if he loses, will tend 13 to discourage irresponsible litigation.

14 Would you agree with that as a general
15 proposition?

16 MR. PAULL: Yes. Of course that's true. But 17 what I'm saying in this case, if you reverse the 18 American rule, I imagine it would certainly apply to the 19 plaintiffs, too.

20 QUESTION: And on the contrary, when a
21 plaintiff brings a suit and is vindicated in his right, 22 the English rule would suggest that he isn't made whole 23 unless he gets his legal expenses back.

24 MR. PAULL: Yes, that's true. So I guess in 25 that sense it doesn't -- it doesn't -- the two rights

1 aren't elevated as long as they were treated equally 2 because -- as long as the attorneys' fees were given to 3 the prevailing party, but that would have to be done.

4 I guess my basic point is that the defendants 5 in this case had a right to assert a defense. The 6 defense, that they are picketing, their wrongful 7 activity, as it turned out to be wrongful, was for a 8 lawful object, for a lawful work preservation clause, 9 and not for an object which violates 8(b)(4). And under 10 the rule it had every right to assert that, and I think 11 really that this is what the American rule is all about.

12 Finally, the petitioner claims that the 13 American rule has no application to those attorneys'
14 fees which he deems truly compensatory. And I'm not 15 exactly sure what this means except -- if it means what 16 I think it does, this type of an analysis would totally 17 swallow the American rule.

18 I think petitioner is trying to make a 19 distinction here between attorneys' fees in the action
20 itself on hand and attorneys' fees in some preliminary 21 prior action, saying that attorneys' fees incurred in 22 the preliminary actions to stop the wrongful conduct is 23 truly compensatory and that attorneys' fees incurred in 24 the later action would be those covered by statute.

25 And what I need to say to that is that the

1 distinction cannot rest on that type of a theory. There
2 would be nothing left of the rule. It's as important
3 for the American rule to apply in prior proceedings,
4 prior related proceedings between the two parties, as it
5 is in the main action itself, because in those prior 6 proceedings it's as important to assert those defenses 7 or to promote the assertion of those defenses as it is 8 in any other action. And the right to defend is chilled 9 regardless of the stage of the litigation. I think in 10 the final analysis it's not the stage of the litigation 11 that can determine whether or not attorneys' fees are 12 truly compensatory. In the final analysis it must be 13 what Congress said it should be, what Congress said it 14 should be in terms of being truly compensatory.

15 We believe that Congress has made such a 16 statement here when it employed the use of the term 17 "damages" in its ordinary and common meaning in the 18 enactment of Section 303.

19 Thank you.

20 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

21 Do you have anything further, Mr. Robinson?

22 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DONALD C. ROBINSON, ESQ.,

23 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER -- Rebuttal

24 MR. ROBINSON: Very briefly.

25 If the rule that we urge for adoption here and

1 which has been followed by five of the circuits for 21
2 years would swallow the American rule, I think we would 3 see substantial evidence of that in the case law in the 4 federal and state courts using these 303 actions to 5 invite distinctions and further exception to the 6 American rule.

7 I think the courts have properly recognized
8 that it is not an exception to the American rule at all 9 and that it does not offend the American rule; but the 10 American rule simply doesn't come into play because 11 we're talking about attorneys' fees as damages, not as 12 attorneys' fees.

13 The rationale of the American rule which the 14 respondent union argues so heavily should be applied to 15 this context, as Mr. Chief Justice Burger has indicated, 16 the rationale most often stated and stated by this Court
17 in Alyeska and other decisions is that it would chill 18 the accessibility of poor individuals, chill the 19 accessibility to bring otherwise meritorious claims to 20 court, and that's the rationale for the rule.

21 But I would offer that here it was the victim 22 of the activity that needed to have its ability to have 23 accessibility to the courts enhanced and encouraged.
24 And indeed, it was the respondent union against whom 25 these damages are to be assessed and should be assessed

1 that resorted to conduct extrajudicial and clearly 2 demonstrated its rejection of the legal process.

3 The union in its argument this morning again
4 invites this Court, as it does in its brief, to avoid an 5 analysis of the purposes and goals of the federal labor
6 law. We would invite this Court's attention, as we did 7 in our briefs, to Hall v. Cole where the Court said that 8 in vindication of a federal -- important federal labor 9 law rights this Court must look to the policies and 10 purposes of the Act, and did allow a union member to 11 obtain his attorneys' fees, not in the limited context
12 that we're talking about but all of his attorneys' fees, 13 to vindicate his rights under the Act.

14 QUESTION: Wasn't that a common fund?

15 MR. ROBINSON: That was --

16 QUESTION: He had succeeded in obtaining an 17 award of damages or a monetary award of some sort for 18 the benefit of the union, and he was entitled to take 19 his fees out of that award.

20 MR. ROBINSON: That's true, Justice
21 Rehnquist. That was the ultimate rationale. But this 22 Court early involving the statutory construction itself,
23 Section 102 of the Bill of Rights provided a statute 24 remedy that was very analogous to the one we have in 25 303, a very general one. And this Court -- the union in

1 Hall v. Cole urged this Court to follow the rational of 2 Fleishman which counsel argues here today, and this 3 Court in its statutory construction of Fleishman
4 distinguished it from the general kind of remedy
5 available under 102 and the kind that would be analogous 6 under Section 303.

7 The union acknowledges to this Court in 8 response to the question that the board's authority
9 under the Tildee Products doctrine to award attorneys'
10 fees is questionable, but yet wants and urges this Court 11 to send victims of secondary boycotts to the board to 12 obtain the remedy that the board may not clearly have of 13 the authority to give.

14 We believe that the common law and the basic 15 principles of damages truly recognizes with a common 16 sense and fair approach that attorneys' fees in this 17 kind of a context should be considered as compensatory
18 damages, are properly viewed as compensatory damages
19 because they are simply like any other business expense 20 incurred as a result of the illegal activity.

21 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

22 The case is submitted.

23 (Whereupon, at 11:45 a.m., the case in the 24 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
